the conduct of Xenophon, made safe retreat home in despight of 200000 men which followed at their heels. This Xenophon was an Agent in, and the Historian of this Expedition; by whose example the Spartans first, and after them the Macedonians, were encouraged to attempt the Conquest of Persia. But to return to these Pisidians; they fell, with others of their neighbours, under the power of the Macedonians, and were made part of the Dominion of Seleucus. Abandoned by Antiochus to the will of the Romans, and settled in obedience by the Military progress of Manlius, spoken of before; they were in Ptolomie's time annexed to Pamphylia, as a part thereof. Afterwards made a distinct Province of it self, and so continued till those parts of the Eastern Empire were subdued by the Turks: first part of the Selzuecian and Aladinian Kingdoms, after of the Kingdom of Caramania; whereof more anon.

16 PAMPHYLIA.

PAMPHYLIA is bounded on the East, with Isauria and Cilicia; on the West, with Lycia, from which parted by a branch of the Taurus; on the North, with Pisidia, separated from it by the main body of that Mountain; and on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea, which in those parts which lie next to it, is called Mare Pamphylium. The reason of the name I finde not, unless we think with Metaphrastes, that it was so named, quod ex omnibus gentibus conflata esset, because inhabited by a mixture of many Nations; for so Pamphylia in the Greek Tongue doth expressly signifie. And probable enough it is, that lying near unto the Sea, with an open Shore, opposite to Africk, near Syria, and not far from Greece, several Nations from those Parts might repair unto it; and from thence the Name.

The Country for the most part is very Mountainous, over-run with the branches of Mount Taurus; but these branches feed great store of Goats, of whose hair are made abundance of Chamlets and Grograins, not inferiour unto Silks for fineness. Towards the Sea, which for the space of an hundred and fifty miles coasts along this shore, more pleasant, populous, and fruitful; well watered, and as well planted. The principal Rivers hereof, being 1 Cataractius. 2 Cestrus. and 3 Eurimedon; nigh to which last, Cimon the son of Miltiades, Captain General of the Athenian Army, overthrew in one day both the Sea and Land Forces of the Persians. The manner thus; Having by plain force broke their Navy, of which he took and sunk no fewer than forty Ships, and three thousand Gallies, he stowed the Persian Vessels with his best men, attired in the Habit, and wearing the Colours of the Persians in the tops of their Ships. In their approach the Camp was opened, and all prepared to entertain their victorious Countrymen; but the Greeks once in, suddenly put them to the Sword, and took twenty thousand of them Prisoners.

Principal Cities of it, 1 Attalia, founded by Ptolomy Philadelphus King of Ægypt, and for long time the greatest and most flourishing City of all this Province; well fenced, and seated very commodiously for Trade, on a very fair Bay, now called Golfo di Sattalia, by the name of the Town, but little altered. And though the Romans did confer the honour of the Metropolitan City upon Aspendus, yet still Attalia had the start in point of Riches, and is to this day a wealthy and well-traded Empory, the wealthier for the fair Tapestries which are herein made. Of this Town there is mention Acts 14. v. 25. 2 Perga, famous in old times for a Temple of Diana, and the yearly Festivals there held in honour of her, from hence called Diana Pergea; more famous in the fulness of time, for St. Paul's Preaching in it, mentioned Acts 14. v. 25. 3 Syde, renowned in times of Gentilism, for a Temple of Pallas. 4 Magydis, on the Sea-side, not far from Syde. 5 Aspendus, an in-land Town, but strongly situate; made the Metropolis of the Province in the time of the Romans: remarkable for the Fidlers or Musicians of it, who with one hand both held their Harps and plaid upon them, keeping the other free for more gainful uses; whence the Proverb of Aspendus Citharista, an Aspendian Harper, by which they signified a Thief. The Town first founded by the Argives, the Colony sent thither being led by Mopsus, from whom the Country hereabouts had the name of Mopsia. 6 Olbia, not far from Attalia. 7 Caravensium, and 8 Colobrassus, two of the Towns of that part hereof which had the name of Cilicia aspera; as 9 Cretopolis, and 10 Monedemium, of that part which was called Carbalia.

Of these Pamphylians there is little to be said in point of story, but that they were for the most part on the suffering hand; subject from time to time to those mightier Princes, who would not let their neighbours rest in quiet by them. Being on the same side of Taurus, and of easie access, they became first Vassals to the Syrian, and after to the Persian Kings. When Alexander passed that way, in his March towards Persia, he took all the Sea-Towns of it: The whole brought under with the rest of the Asian Provinces, by Antigonus first, after by Seleucus the great King of Syria. In the expiration of whose Line, this people and their neighbours of Cilicia, being left to themselves, and tempted by Mithridates to his Faction, began to be troublesome on the Seas, and proved notable Pirates, and were the first Authors or Inventors of those Gallies of an hundred and forty, or an hundred and sixty Oars apiece; which the Italians call from hence by the name of Pamphyli. But forced to leave this Trade at last, being warred upon by the Romans with great Forces both by Sea and Land (a fuller narrative whereof we shall have in Cilicia) in the conclusion of that War, they lost that liberty which so small a time they had enjoyed, and were made Vassals unto Rome. Afterwards made a Province of the Asian Diocese, they ran the same fortune with the rest, till subdued by the Turks: and at the death of Aladine, were seized on by Caraman, and so became a part of his Kingdom; of which we shall hear more when we come to Cilicia. And so much for the Provinces of the Asian Diocese (the Provinces of the Isles excepted, whereof more anon) converted to the Christian Faith by three great Apostles; but most especially by Saint Paul, of whose Travels through most Cities and Regions of it, there is such pregnant evidence in the Book of Acts. And that Saint Peter and Saint John had also their parts herein, appears by the Revelation of the one, and the first Epistle of the other: Paul planting, John and Peter watering, but God himself giving the increase. Pass we on next unto ISAURIA and CILICIA, which though Provinces of the Diocese of the Orient, were parts of the Caramanian Kingdom: of which having taken a Survey, and so cleared our selves of this Peninsula, we will then sail about such Islands as make up the remainder of the Asian Diocese.

17 ISAURIA. 18 CILICIA.

THese two, though distinct Provinces, I have joyned together, because the first was only a part of the last; Cilicia anciently comprehending both: The fortunes of both being the same also in point of Story, which makes the conjunction the more natural.

ISAURIA, a mountainous and hilly Province, ſeated on both ſides of Taurus, hath on the East and South, the reſt of Cilicia, whereof anciently it was a part; on the North, Piſidia; on the Weſt, Pamphylia. So called from Iſaurus, the chief City of it, when firſt made known unto the Romans; which being taken by Servilius the Proconſul, imployed by Pompey in that Service, reduced the conquered Country under the command of Rome; and gave unto the Conquerour the ſirname of Iſauricus.

The quality of the Soil, and whole Eſtate of this ſmall Province, take thus from Ammianus Marcellinus, who had ſeen theſe Countries. Ciliciæ lateri dextro adnexa Iſauria, uberi palmite viret, & frugibus multis; quam mediam, flumen navigabile Calicadnus interſcindit, &c.. i. e. "On the right hand of Cilicia lieth Iſauria, a Province of a wealthy Soil, plentiful of Vines, "and much other Fruits, which the River Calicadnus "parteth in the very midſt. Beautified, beſides many Towns, with two principal Cities. 1 Seleucia, founded by Seleucus, and 2 Claudiopolis, into which Claudius the Emperour brought a Roman Colony. For as touching 3 Iſaurus, heretofore a walled City, and of moſt eſteem, it hath been long ago deſtroyed, as yielding too ſecure a Refuge to the neighbouring Rebels; inſomuch that now there are ſcarce any viſible Tracts of its former greatneſs. And not much after, Hæ duæ Provinciæ bello quondam Piratico catervis mixtæ Prædonum, à Servilio Proconſule miſſæ ſub jugum, factæ ſunt vectigales. i. e. "Theſe Provinces (Cilicia and this) heretofore in the Pi"ratical War joyning with thoſe Robbers, were brought "under by Servilius the Proconſul, and made ſubject to "the State of Rome. And here we have in brief the nature of the Country, the names of the chief Rivers, and the principal Cities, with ſo much of the Story as relates to the firſt ſubjugation of it. What further doth concern it we ſhall hear in Cilicia, upon the which it did depend.

2 CILICIA is bounded on the East with Syria, or rather that part thereof which is called Comagena, ſeparated from which part by a branch of the Mountain Taurus, called Amanus; on the Weſt, with Pamphylia; on the North, with Iſauria, and Armenia Minor; on the South, with the Mediterranean, and Syria, ſpecially ſo called. It was thus named, as the old tradition was, from Cilice the Brother of Cadmus the Phœnician, a near neighbour to it: but as Bochartus (of whoſe humour I have told you often) from Callukim, a Phœnician word ſignifying Stones, quia lapidoſa & Regio, becauſe in ſome parts, eſpecially in that which is called Cilicia Trachæa, or Cilicia Aſpera, it was very ſtony. It is now called Caramania, as the laſt Province of the Caramanian Kingdom, which held out for thoſe falling Princes, when the reſt was conquered by the Turks of the Ottoman Race.

The Country ſaid by Marcellinus to be terra dives omnibus bonis, wealthy and fruitful of all neceſſaries. Which Character holdeth good, chiefly in the Eaſtern parts, which heretofore had the name of Cilicia Campeſtris: the Weſtern parts lying towards Pamphylia, formerly called Cilicia Aſpera, being rough, and ſtony. But generally where the Lands lie in ſeveral, and are duly cultivated, it anſwereth to the former Character; being alſo very well watered, and having a fair and large Sea-coaſt for the ſpace of three hundred miles and upwards. Which notwithſtanding, it is not much traded, and but meanly inhabited; a great part of the Country lying in large and common Fields, to which none can lay any proper claim, and therefore planted only with Goats and Sheep; out of which the Commoners on all ſides raiſe good profit by Cheeſe and Butter, by their Fleeces chiefly. Here is alſo a good breed of Horſes, of which ſix hundred yearly are culled out for the ſpecial Service of the Grand Signeur. But as they have ſome profitable and uſeful Creatures, ſo they have others as dangerous and hurtful to them; eſpecially thoſe which the vulgar Grecians call the Sqnilachi, of a mixt making betwixt a Dog and a Wolf; which go in troops, and are ſo bold, and theeviſh withal, as they uſe to ſet upon a man as he is aſleep, and leave him neither Hat, Cloak, nor Fardel, nor any thing they can conveniently get from him.

Chief Rivers hereof are, 1 Pyramus, now called Malmiſtra, which riſing on the North ſide of the Taurus, and forcing his paſſage through that Mountain, makes ſuch a noiſe in falling down the precipices and rocks thereof, as reſemblanceth at a great diſtance a clap of Thunder. 2 Orymagdus. 3 Calicadnus, ſpoken of before. 4 Cidnus, which riſeth in the Anti-Taurus; a River of a violent courſe, and ſo cold a water, that as Pliny writes, it cureth the Gout: the waters of which proved very dangerous to Alexander the Great, the coldneſs of them ſtriking violently into his ſtomach; and deadly to Frederick the firſt Emperour of the Germans, as he here bathed himſelf, the violence of the ſtream tripping up his heels, and he not able to recover, was preſently drowned.

Of their chief Hills I need add nothing, having already ſaid that the Country is parted by Amanus from Syria, and by Taurus it ſelf from Piſidia and Armenia Minor; not eaſie of entrance by the firſt, but very difficult by the laſt: The Streights thereof called Pylæ Ciliciæ, or the Ports of Cilicia, being indeed ſo ſtreight, and almoſt impaſſable, that had they been guarded or regarded by the Perſians, as they ſhould have been, the Progreſs of Alexanders Victories might have ended there. But Arſenes, who had the charge of them, durſt not ſtand his ground, and ſo left them open to the Enemy, whom by thoſe Ports he put into the poſſeſſion of the Kingdom of Perſia. With better faith, though no better fortune, did the Souldiers of Peſcennius Niger make good theſe Streights againſt the Emperor Severus; the Monarchy of the World lying the ſecond time at the ſtake, and to be tried for in this Cock-pit. For the Nigrians poſſeſſed of theſe Streights and Entrances, couragiouſly withſtood the Severian party; till at laſt a ſudden Tempeſt of Rain and Thunder continually darting in their faces (as if the very Heavens had been armed againſt them) they were fain to leave the Paſſage, and therewith the Victory to the adverſe Faction: having ſold that at the loſs of 20000 of their own lives, which Alexander had the happineſs or the hap to buy for nothing.

In the borders of this Country towards Pamphylia, lived a Tribe or Nation called the Soli, originally of Attica: But in long tract of time diſuſed from converſe and communication with their Countrymen, they ſpake that Language ſo corruptly, that from their barbarous manner of pronunciation, and as rude expreſſion, came the word Solœciſmus. Yet amongſt theſe were born three men of eminent note, that is to ſay, Chryſippus the Philoſopher, Philemon and Aratus the Poets; out of the Writings of which laſt, St. Paul vouchſafed to uſe this Paſſage, τ γὰς γένος ἐσμέν, i. e. for we are alſo his off-ſpring, Acts 17. v. 28. That bleſſed Apoſtle thought himſelf never the worſe Preacher, for being brought up in humane Learning at the feet of Gamaliel; nor held it any diſparagement to the Influences of the Holy Ghoſt, to make uſe of it in his Sermons and divine Diſcourſes: and therefore to prevent thoſe Cavils which ignorance or miſpriſion might chance to make in times ſucceeding, he hath hath thrice vouchsafed the words and testimony of the Heathen Writers; viz. of Epimenides, Tit. 1 v. 12. of Menander, 1 Cor. 15. v. 33. and that of Aratus before mentioned. So lawful is it in this kind, for those of the spiritual Israel to rob the Ægyptians; and to make this Hagar serviceable to her Mistris Sarah.

Principal Cities of this Province, 1 Solæ, the habitation of the Soli, before remembred; by some said to be built by Solon the Athenian: but generally affirmed to have been planted by those of Rhodes and Attica: mistakingly called Heliopolis, by Qu. Curtius, which is as much in Latine as Solis Civitas, or the City of the Sun. On the site hereof then decayed and ruinous (the Town having been destroyed by Tigranes the Armenian King in his late Wars against the Romans) did Pompey build his City of Pompeiopolis after his victory over the Pirates; who not only Lorded it over the Seas, and consequently obstructed Trade and Merchandize, but wasted and spoyled the Villages of Italy it self. Pompey being Victor, and having inflicted exemplary punishment on the Ring-leaders, with the rest, peopled this new Town, and the Country adjoyning, allowing them competent possessions, lest want and necessity should again enforce them to the like courses. An action truly commendable, and worthy so great a Captain, rather to take an occasion of offending from the people, than after offence done, to punish them. Hythlodæus in the Utopia, somewhat bitterly, though perhaps not unjustly, inveigheth against the Laws of England, for ordaining death to be the punishment of theft, Cùm multò potius providendum fuerit, uti aliquis esset proventus vitæ; ne cuipiam sit tam dira furandi primùm, deinde pereundi necessitas. Whereas (saith he) the Laws ought to make provision for putting men into some orderly course of life, and not let them run upon the necessity of stealing first, and then being hanged for it. 2 Tarsus, the birth-place of St. Paul the Apostle; for that sufficiently famous, were there nothing else to commend it to consideration: But it was a Town withal of great note and consequence, the Metropolis first, of all Cilicia, and after the division, of Cilicia Prima. The Inhabitants whereof had the priviledge of Roman Citizens. Situate in a goodly Plain on the banks of the Cydnus, and by some said to be the work of Sardanapalus the last King of Assyria; it being engraven on a Monument erected to him, that in one day he had built this Tarsus. And 3 Anchiala, another City of this Country, near the Sea-side, and not far from the Promontory Zephyrium. Of the same date (if the said Monument speak truth,) but neither of the same fortune nor continuance, that being utterly decayed, but Tarsus still remaining of great wealth and strength. Much spoken of in the Wars of the Holy Land, and in the stories of the Caramanian and Ottoman Kings. And though the Tarsians to ingratiate themselves with Julius Cæsar, would needs have their Country called Juliopolis; yet the old name survived the new, and it is to this day called Tersia or Terassa by the vulgar Greeians: but Hamsa by the Turks, as Bellonius telleth us. 4 Adena, the Adana of Ptolomy, a large Town, but unwalled, instead whereof defended by a very strong Castle. Situate in a fruitful soil, both for Wine and Corn, wherewith the Town is always furnished for the use of those that are to travel over the Taurus, who commonly take in here three days provision. 5 Epiphania, the birth-place of George the Arian Bishop of Alexandria; thrust on the world of late by some learned men (but of more industry than judgment) for George the Cappadocian Martyr. 6 Mopsuestia, as famous, or infamous rather, for giving title to Theodorus Mopsuestenus, Bishop hereof, and a great Patron of the Nestorian heresies, in the time of S. Chrysostome. The City otherwise of good note, and of great consequence, in the course of the Roman Wars, described at large by Ammianus Marcellinus. 7 Issus, upon a spacious Bay, called hence Sinus Issicus, near the borders of Syria: memorable for the great battel here fought betwixt Alexander and an handful (in comparison) of his Macedonians, and that vast Army of Darius, (himself there in person) consisting of 600000 undisciplined Asians; whereof so many lost their lives, that the dead bodies seemed to have buried the ground; For partly by the unskilfulness of the Commanders, who chose so ill a place to fight in, that they could make no use of their mighty numbers: and partly by the effeminateness of the Asian Souldiers, unable to endure the charge, there fell that day no fewer than 200000 of the Persians, 40000 of them being taken Prisoners, amongst them the Wives and Daughters of Darius, and not above 100 of the Alexandrians, if Qu. Curtius be not partial in relating the Story. A victory which assured Alexander of his former purchases, and opened a way unto the rest: the Persians not being able to make head again, till he had pierced into the bowels of their Empire, and added Syria, and Ægypt to his former Conquests. Of so great consequence is one full Victory to the losing and getting of a Kingdom. This Town it self now called Aiazzo, and the great Bay on which it standeth Golfo di Aiazzo. 8 Alexandria, built by command of the Conquerour near the place of battel, commodiously for Trade, as upon the Sea; but otherwise in a Fenny and Boggy soil, which make the air there to be very unwholsom to men not used to it: little now remaining, but a few houses on the Sea-shore built of straw and mud, hardly affording it the reputation of a sorry Village, and would not long continue such, but that it is the nearest Haven to the Town of Aleppo (whereof more in Syria) which draweth unto it the resort of some Christian Factors, whose houses are of Clay and Timber; but of them not many. The Town at first called Alexandria, as before was said, diminished first to Alexandretta, now called Scanderone. 9 Nicopolis, another of Alexanders foundations, so named in memory of his great Victory before mentioned. 10 Amavarza, a City of great Antiquity in the time of Strabo, and the Metropolis, of the Province of Cilicia Secunda. 11 Heracleæ, mentioned by Bellonius, and by him placed in a fruitful and well-cultivated Plain, at the foot of Mount Taurus; a fair and large Town, as he reporteth it, and distant from Adana towards the Northwest about three days journey. But I find no such Town in Strabo, or Ptolomy, or any other of the Ancients. 12 Scandeloro, a City of Cilicia Aspera, or that part of Cilicia, which lieth towards Pamphylia, heretofore with the adjoyning Territory governed as a State distinct, when all the rest of this Country was under the Kings of Caramania: against whom the Prince hereof, being a Mahometan, had preserved his liberties, by the assistance of the Knights of Rhodes, and the Kings of Cyprus. And when the Caramanian Kingdom was subdued by Bajazet, he made so good conditions for himself, that he had other lands and estates in the Lesser Asia assigned to him in exchange for this, and so surrendred this to the will of the Conquerour.

The first Inhabitants of this Country were of the Progeny of Tarshish, the son of Javan, by whom, or some of his posterity, to preserve his memory, the City of Tarsus was first built. Increased in tract of time by some new Colonies out of the Neighbouring parts of Syria, it followed for the most part the fortunes of it; successively together subject to the Assyrians, Persians, and Macedonians. In the declining fortunes of the house of Seleucus they began to stand upon their own legs, and might have continued longer in so good a posture, had they not hearkened to ill Councels. Tempted by Mithridates to joyn with him against the Romans, of whose greatness all the Eastern States were grown very jealous; and being naturally good Sea-faring men, they began together with the Pamphylians, to infest the Seas. At first they ventured no further than the shores adjoyning. But after emboldened with success, and finding that the Romans were sufficiently embroyled in domestick troubles, and a sharp war with Mithridates, fell upon the Coasts of Greece, and in fine of Italy it self; Publius Servilius the Proconsul first employed against them, gave them an overthrow at Sea; and following his good fortune, set upon them in their Harbours and retiring places. In which pursuit he not only took from them Phaselis, a strong Town in Lycia, one of their Retreats, and others of their best and strongest Receptacles; but wasting the whole Country of Cilicia, fell upon Isaurus, the most defensible Town thereof, which he took and ransacked. No sooner was Servilius departed home, but they broke out more violently than before; filling all the Creeks and Ports of the Eastern Seas with their Frigots, Brigantines and other light Piratical Vessels, insomuch that Pompey himself thought it to be an action not unbecoming his greatness, to undertake the War against them. And he pursued it to such purpose, that having armed 500 sail of all sorts, and stored his ships with 130000 men, he set upon them all at once; and in the space of one sole moneth made an end of the War. An action not sufficiently to be wondred at, if we consider either the speedines of it, done in so little time as a moneth; or the cheapness of the Victory, purchased without the loss of one Roman Vessel; or finally, the importance and consequence of it, the Pirates from that time not daring to infest the Seas: and all Cilicia subjected to the State of Rome. How they were afterwards disposed of, hath been shewn already. After this they did very good service unto Pompey in his War against Cæsar; of whom thus Lucan, reckoning up his Allies and Aids;

Atque Cilix justa, nunc non Pirata, carinâ.
And the reformed Cilician now
No Pirate, in his fleet did row.

Nor were they pliant unto him only, as unto their Conquerour; but generally so tame and tractable in the time of Cicero, one of the first Proconsuls or Lord Deputies which were sent to govern them; that he writ merrily to Rome, that he found all quiet in his Province: save that the Panthers (some of which, one of his Friends had prayed him to send to Rome, for the adorning of his triumph) were for fear of him fled into Pamphylia. At the first conquest by the Romans, it was divided only into Campestrem and Trachæam, as was said before; of which Campestris was reduced immediately to the form of a Province. Aspera or Trachæa was a while continued under the Government of Kings, till the time of Vespacian, and then made a Province as the other. By the succeeding Emperours, on some reasons of State (if not those intimated in Lycaonia) the number of Provinces being encreased (though the bounds of the Empire were no larger than they had been formerly) the whole was divided into three: that is to say, Cilicia prima, taking up all Campestris wholly; Cilicia secunda, containing the Maritime parts of Cilicia, Aspera; and Isauria, taking up the Mountainous part of this last division. Laid by the Emperour Constantine to the Diocese of the Orient; and consequently subject in spiritual matters to the Patriarch of Antioch, where the Prefectus Prætorio Orientis had his usual residence. In the falling of the Eastern Empire, it was conquered by the Saracens in the time of Mubaveas or Muavi, the sixth Caliph. Continuing under their command till their declination, it was recovered by the Greek or Eastern Emperours, and from them conquered by the Turks in the course of their victories. But the first race of Turkish Kings being worn out by the Tartars, and the Aladinian Kings ending in Aladine the second, it was part of the new Kingdom of Caramanians, continuing theirs till the destruction of that line by Bajazet the second, Anno 1486. by whom incorporated with the rest of the Ottoman Empire.

Thus having made our progress over all the Provinces of the Lesser Asia, and shewn how every one of them was made subject to the Turkish Tyranny: we must next draw down the succession of such Turkish Kings as have raigned herein, till it was wholly conquered by the Princes of the house of Ottoman. Concerning which we are to know in the way of Preamble, that the Turks having made themselves Masters of the Kingdom of Persia, and following their successes into Syria also, fell to a breach amongst themselves. For making up whereof it was condescended unto by Axan, the then Persian Sultan, that Meloch and Ducat, two of his discontented Kinsmen, should be infeoffed in the Cities of Aleppo and Damascus, and their several Territories, with whatsoever they could conquer from the Caliph of Ægypt, possessed at that time of most part of Syria, Cilicia, and some of the adjoyning Provinces. It was also then agreed upon, that a third, but nearer Kinsman, called Cutlu Moses, another of the Leaders of the opposite faction, should have leave to conquer for himself, whatsoever he could win from the Christian Princes: And he accordingly being furnished with a competent Army, subdued the Provinces of Media and Armenia in the Greater Asia, with Cappadocia, Pontus, and Bithynia in Asia Minor. Which and the rest of their affairs take here in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Turkish Kings in Asia Minor of the Selzuccian Family.

1075 1 Cutlu Moses, Nephew to Tangrolipix, the first Persian Sultan of the Turks, won Media, part of Armenia Major, Cappadocia, Pontus and Bithynia.

2 Solyman, son of Cutlu Moses, for a while dispossessed of most of his estates by the Western Christians, in their first passage towards the Holy Land; the Northern parts of which by those Christians were restored to the Grecian Empire, never recovered afterwards by the Kings of this house.

3 Mahomet, the son of Solyman, recovered some part of his estates in the Lesser Asia; but outed of them, and subdued by 4 Musat, Sultan, or Lord Deputy of Iconium for the Kings of Damascus; but of the same Selzuccian Family, who was thereby possessed of all the Turkish Provinces in the Lesser Asia.

5 Calisastlan, the son of Musat (to whom his Father left Iconium, with the adjacent Provinces) wrested Amasia, and Ancyra, from his brother Jagupasan; Sebastia, and Cæsaria, from his brother Dodune: which with their several Territories were bequeathed unto them, by the will of their Father. He overthrew the Emperour Emanuel Comnenus, and united Phrygia to his Kingdom.

6 Reucratine, the third son of Calisastlan, having dispossest his three brethren, Musat, Cappatine, Caicosrhoes, of the estates left them by their Father, became sole Monarch of all the Turkish Provinces in the Lesser Asia. In the latter end of whose reign, Occata the Tartarian

Tartarian Cham having driven the Turks out of Persia, many of them under the conduct of Aladine, a Prince of the same Selzuccian Family, joyned themselves to their Countrymen here, with whose help they won Cilicia from the Grecian Emperours, who in the reign of Calo-Johannes, (the Turks being then embroyled by the Western Christians) had not long before regained it; and after the decease of Reucratine, advanced him to the whole estate

The Turkish Kings in Asia Minor, of the race of Aladine.

7 Aladine, descended in a direct line from Cussanes, the last Turkish Sultan in Persia, having with many of his Nation seated himself in Cilicia, first made Sebastia, one of the Cities thereof, his chief seat or residence: which after the death of Reucratine, he removed to Iconium, as the ancient Regal City of the former Kings.

8 Azalide, by some called Azadine, eldest son of Aladine, wasted the most part of his reign in wars with his brother Jathatine, whom at last he forced into exile.

9 Jathatine, on the death of his brother possesseth the Kingdom, slain afterwards in single combate by Theodorus Lascaris, Emperour of the Greeks, at Nice.

10 Jathatine II. Son of the former, driven out of his Kingdom by the Tartars, and died in exile: the Turks becoming Tributaries and Vassals unto the Tartarian.

11 Masut, and Cei-cubades, of the same Selzuccian Family (but whether the sons of the second Jathatine, I am not able to say) substituted in his place; as Tributaries to the conquering Tartars.

12 Aladine II son of Cei-cubades, succeeded his Father in the Kingdom, but as Vassal and Leigeman to the Tartars. After whose death, leaving no issue of his body, the great Princes of his Family, divided amongst them his Dominions. To Saracban fell Æolis, Ionia, and part of Lydia, from him named Sarchan, Saracban, or Saracha-Illi; to Aidin the rest of Lydia, Phrygia major, and the greatest part of the Greater Mysia, from him called Aidinia, or Aidin-Illi; to Carasus, the Lesser Phrygia, with the rest of Mysia, from him denominated Carasan, or Caraса-Illi; to the Family of the Isfendiars, the Cities of Heraclea, Sinope, and that part of Pontus which lieth next to Bithynia. There were also lesser Toparchies or subdivisions, from whence we find a Prince of Smyrna, a second of Amasia, a third of Amisus, a fourth of Scandeloro, besides many others. But the main body of the Estate was seized by Caraman, who for his share had the whole Provinces of Lycia, Lycaonia, Pisidia, Pamphylia, Isauria, Cilicia, with the Regal City of Iconium, the greatest part of Caria, (the rest of it appertaining to the Prince of Mentesia,) with part of Cappadocia, and Armenia Minor, and some Towns in Phrygia, continuing in his Family for as many descents (as either of the former had held before) in great power and lustre, under

The Turkish Kings in Asia minor, of the house of Caraman.

13 Caraman, the first raiser of this Family, Contemporary with Ottoman the first King of that race.

14 Aladine, sone of Caraman, and Son-in-law of Amurath, the first of the house of Ottoman, by whom subdued, but pardoned and restored unto his Estate, on the humble entreaties of his wife.

15 Aladine II. son of the former, subdued by Bajazet the first, and hanged by Tertumases, one of Bajazets great Commanders.

16 Mahomet, son of Aladine the second, recovered his Kingdom on the death of Bajazet, vanquished and led captive by the mighty Tamerlane. Afterwards warred upon and vanquished by Mahomet the son of Bajazet, redeemed his peace, by yielding up unto him many of his principal Towns; and was finally slain at the siege of Attalia.

17 Ibrahim, the son of Mahomet, and son-in-law of Amurath the second, against whom unadvisedly raising War, he was forced to submit and become his Tributary: after whose death, rebelling against Mahomet the Great, he was then also vanquished, and a reconciliation made betwixt them.

18 Ibrahim II. by some called Pyramus, the son of Ibrahim the first, supported Zemes, brother of Bajazet the second in his War against him; for which Bajazet having settled his affairs, invaded and subdued the Kingdom of Caramania, killed the unfortunate King in battel, and so united that Estate unto the rest of the Dominions of the house of Ottoman. The strange successes of which house, from the first rising of it to these present times, shall be deferred till we come unto Turcomania; from whence this Nation first attempted and atchieved the conquest of Persia, and which only of all their large possessions doth retain any thing of their name. In the mean time we will survey the Islands of this Lesser Asia, and so proceed to their possessions in the Greater, as they lye before us.

19 The Province of the ASIAN ISLES.

The Province of the ASIAN ISLES comprehendeth all the Islands in Asia Minor, from the mouth of the Hellespont to the Rhodes, reckoning that for one: united first into a Province by the Emperour Vespasian, next reckoned as a part of the Asian Diocese; and afterwards, together with the Province of the Hellespont, and that of Asia properly and specially so called, making up the peculiar or exempt jurisdiction of the Proconsul of Asia. Those of most consideration are, 1 Tenedos. 2 Lesbos. 3 Chios. 4 Samos. 5 Coos. 6 Icaria. 7 Patmos. 8 Claros. 9 Carpathos. 10 Rhodes. Others of less note, having nothing memorable but their names, are scarce worth the naming.

1 TENEDOS, is situate at the mouth of the Hellespont, over against the noted Promontory called of old Sigeum (but now Cape Janizarie) a Promontory of Troas, or the Lesser Phrygia, from which distant not above five miles. The Isle it self in circuit no more than ten; swelling with a round Mountain towards the North, in other parts level; in both producing as good Wines as the best of Greece. It took name, as the general Tradition was, from Tenes the son of Cycnus, King of a little City in the Lesser Phrygia, who being falsly accused by his Stepdame for soliciting her to that incestuous mixture which she had violently importuned, and he as piously refused, was by the command of his Father put into a chest, exposed to the mercy of the Sea, and here miraculously preserved. Here for a time he is said to raign, with great commendation for his justice; and afterwards going to the aid of the Trojans, to have been slain by the hand of Achilles: of whom therefore it was not lawful to make make mention in any of the Sacrifices offered in the Temples thereof. But Bochartus casting off all this as an old Wives Fable, will have it so called from Tin-edum a Phœnician word, signifying Red-clay, which the Potters made use of in their Earthen Vessels. A Town it had of the same name with the Island, in which a Temple sacred to Apollo Smintheus; and another called Asterion situate near a little River well stored with Crab-fish, whose shells were made in the form of an Ax or Hatchet. From which Town as the Islanders have in some Authors the name of Asterii; so from the other circumstance, they are said to have the stamp of an Hatchet on their Coin or Money. Memorable for an old Custom observed amongst them which was, That at the back of the Judge their always stood a man with an Ax advanced; as well to terrifie the Witnesses from giving false Evidence to the Judge, as the Judge from pronouncing a false Sentence upon the Evidence: Whence the Proverb, Tenedia securis. More memorable for the final destruction of Troy, which was plotted here; the Grecians withdrawing their Forces hither as if gone in earnest: but from hence setting sail again to surprise the Town, when they saw their plot had took effect. And so I leave it with that Character which the Poet gives it:

Est in conspectu Tenedos, notissima famâ
Insula, dives opum Priami dum Regna manebant:
Nunc tantùm sinus, & statio male-fida carinis.

In English thus;

In sight of Troy an Island stands, well known,
Call'd Tenedos: rich, and of great renown,
Whilst Priam's Kingdom flouriſh'd; now (they say) Grown a poor Road, for Ships an unsafe Bay.

2 LESBOS, the largest of these Asian Isles, is distant from the main Land of Troas about seven miles, 168 in compass: reckoned the seventh in bigness of the Mediterranean, which Aristotle in his Book de Mundo ranketh in this order following, Τῶν δὲ περὶ τὴν Ἰταλίαν νήσων, Σικελία, καὶ Σαρδὼ, καὶ Κύρνος, καὶ Κρήτη, καὶ Εὐβοία, καὶ Κύπρος, καὶ Λέσβος. That is to say, The most considerable of these, are Sicilie, Sardinia, Corsica, Crete, Euboea, Cyprus, and Lesbos. And though both Scylax in his Periplus, a nameless Poet in Eustathius, Diodorus Siculus, Strabo, and others of the Ancients, vary in ordering of the rest, according as their information or phancies led them; yet Lesbos comes in the seventh place constantly, without change at all. Upon which ground Bochartus will have it called Lesbos from Esbuith, a Phœnician word signifying seven: contracted first to Esbu, by leaving out the last syllable of it; and then by changing bu to bos, and prefixing L to the beginning. Far enough fetch'd, and were it but as dearly bought, would be good for Ladies: this Island being reckoned in the seventh place for no other reason, but because it lay furthest off, and most North from Sicilie, from whence they ordered their account, and not any mystery in the name thereof.

It had then the name from Lesbos the chief City of it, as that from Lesbus the son of Lapythus, who married Methymna the daughter of Macarius, Prince hereof: from which Macarius, it had sometimes the name of Macaria; as that of Mitylene, by which it is now commonly called, from Mitylene another of the Daughters of the said Macarius. And that the memory of the whole Family might be preserved in this Island, Methymna also had a City called by her name, one of the principal of the Country.

The Country towards the West and South, reported to be mountainous and somewhat barren; the rest level and fruitful. Plentiful of excelent Corn, and abounding in delicious Wines, compared by Athenæus to Ambrosia, the Liquor of the Gods, as the Poets fable; affording also plenty of Sheep, and store of Horse, these last courageous and strong, though but low of stature. More memorable for the eminent Persons which it hath produced, as 1 Sappho, an Heroick Woman, whose invention was the Sapphick Verse; and therefore called the tenth Muse. 2 Pittacus, one of the seven Wisemen of Greece. 3 Theophrastus, that notable Physician and Philosopher. 4 Alcæus, the successor of Orpheus in the excellency of Lyrical Poesie; and 5 Arion, the Musician, who was so perfect on his Harp, that being cast into the Sea playing on that Instrument, a Dolphin took him on his back, and wafted him safe as far as Corinth, where he related the whole Story unto Periander, attested by the Mariners who had thrown him overboard. And though this be by some rejected as a Poetical Fiction; yet past all doubt, the man was not only an excellent Musician, but an eminent Poet, the first Inventer of Tragedies, a chief Lyrick; and the Author of the Verse called Dithyrambick.

Principal Towns herein, 1 Lesbos, ἀφ' ἧς ἡ ὅλη νῆσος Λέσβος ἐκλήθη. from whom (saith Stephanus) the whole Island had the name of Lesbos. 2 Methymna, so named from Methymna one of the daughters of Macarius, spoken of before. 3 Mitylene, so named from the other daughter, and wife of Lesbus, now the chief City of the Island; seated on a Peninsula, looking towards the main Land, strong by Nature, and fortified by Art: enjoying on either side a commodious Haven, that on the South most fit for Gallies, the other capable of Ships of burden. Beautified heretofore with magnificent Buildings, and sweetned with variety of delights and pleasures. Little now left of it since subdued by the Turks, but a strong Castle manned with an able Garrison, and a well-stored Arsenal for Gallies, kept here in readiness to preserve those seas from Pirates, with which much infested. But the two first long since decayed and grown out of knowledge, those of most note next Mitylene are. 4 Vasilica. 5 Theodori. 6 Castel-Gera: all of late days, and therefore of no observation in point of Story.

The Island was first inhabited by the Pelasgians, conducted hither by Zanthus the son of Triopus, whence named Pelasgia: afterwards by some Ionians, and people of sundry Nations, planted here by Macarius (the father of Mitylene and Methymna) who by his prudence, and the reputation of his Justice, obtained a kind of Sovereignty over the neighbouring Islands. Lesbus the son of Lapythus arriving here with his Family, married Methymna, and had the Island for her Dower; though Mitylene had the hap to have the predominant City, and the Island consequently called by her name. Made subject to the State of Athens, in the time of the Peloponnesian War (when almost all Greece banded against that City) they revolted from it, and were so straighly besieged by Paches, an Athenian Captain, that they submitted unto mercy. The General sends to Athens to know what should be done with the Mitylenians: Answer was sent, That he should put them to the Sword. But the Senate on the morrow after, repenting of that cruel Decree, sent a countermand. These latter Messengers made no stay; but eating with one hand, and rowing with the other, came to Mitylene just as Paches was reading the former Order, by this speed prevented. So near were these miserable people to a fatal destruction. Subdued by the Romans with the rest of Greece, they fell together with it to the Constantinopolitan Emperours: from whom taken, with Chios, Samos, Andros, and some other of these Isles, Anno 1124. by the State of Venice, upon a quarrel betwixt them and the Grecian Emperour. Confirmed unto that Signeury by the Emperour Baldwin, and all the rest of the Ægean added to their portion; those above-named were again recovered by the valour and good fortune of John Ducas, the Greek Emperour then residing at Nice. Afterwards in the year 1335. the Emperour Calo Johannes gave it to Franciscus Catalusius, a Noble Gentleman of Genoa, with one of his Sisters, for her Dower. By whose Posterity enjoyed, till the year 1462. when Mahomet the Great incensed against Dominicus Catalusius the then Lord hereof, for the murder of his elder Brother, a Vassal and Tributary of his Empire, (those Princes paying to the Turk an annual Tribute of 4000 Ducats) but more for harbouring the Pirats of Spain and Italy, besieges him in Mitylene his principal City, which in 27 days (for so long it held) he constrained to submit unto him, and therewith all the Island also. Some of the chief Families being removed unto Constantinople upon some reasons of State, the main body of the People were permitted to remain here to till the Land, and so continue to this day, with some few Turks, inconsiderable for their strength or numbers, intermixed among them.

3 CHIOS, the next to Lesbos both in site and bigness, lieth opposite to the Shore of Ionia, from which distant not above four Leagues, is in compass about 126 Miles. So called, as some say, from Chione a fair Nymph hereof, much sought after by many Suters: as others say, from χίων a Greek word signifying Snow, wherewith the Mountains of it are sometimes covered. And some again will have it take name from Chios the chief City of it, which being built in the form of the Greek Letter χ, first got that name unto it self, and afterwards did communicate it to the whole Island. Isidore in his Origines gives another reason, and will have it called so from a Siryack word signifying Mastick, whereof there is plenty in this Isle. Chios Insula (saith he) Syrâ linguâ appellatur, eo quod ibi Mastyx gignitur; Syri enim Masticben Chion vocant. And were it so, that Chios in the Syriack did signifie Mastick, there could no better reason be assigned for the name; this Island being more furnished with that Commodity, than any place in the World besides. A Gum it is, growing out of the Lentisk Tree, which in the Months of July and August the Inhabitants force out of those Trees, by making with sharp Instruments a deep incision into the Barks of them; out of which the Juice dropping, is afterwards hardned like a Gum, and in the September following gathered. A Commodity which yieldeth yearly to the Inhabitants 18000 Sultanies, every Sultanie being valued at the rate of a Zechine of Venice: and therefore the felling of the Lentisk Tree, at the time of the distilling of this precious Juice, interdicted, on the penalty of losing the right hand of him that doth it.

Other Commodities of this Island are Corn and Oyl in indifferent plenty, some Quarries of most excellent Marble, a certain green Earth like the rust of Brass; some Silks and Cotton-wooll, but short in worth to those of Smyrna, and other places; Honey as good as any the World affordeth; and a vein of most delicious Vines, those specially which grow on the Mountain Arvis, now called Amista. Of which Pliny gives this commendation, In summa gloria fuere Thasium, Chiumque ex Chio, quod Arvisium vocant. Of all Wines (saith he) those of Thassus, and Chios, are of best esteem; and of those of Chios, the Arvisian. Strabo extolleth them in the superlative degree, and calleth the Wine hereof, οἶνον ἀριστον τῶν Ἑλλήνων, incomparably the best of Greece. And Plutarch, speaking of an Epicurean, or voluptuous Liver, affirms, that he conceived it the Supreme felicity, Λαΐδος συγγενέσθαι, καὶ πιεῖν ὁ τι ὁ Λεσβιος, to lie with Lais, and drink these Arvisian Wines. Here are also infinite store of Partridges, of a red colour, kept tame, and fed in flocks like Geese, in the Streets and Greenswarths of their Villages; some little Boy or Girl driving them to field, and calling them home again with a Whistle, when the night comes on.

The Island divided commonly into two parts, the higher, called Apanomera, lying towards the North and West; hilly and rough, but intermixt with fruitful Vales and pleasant Rivers: the lower, opposite unto it, called Catamorea, swelled here and there with gentle Hillocks, on which groweth the Lentisk. The whole inhabited by Greeks intermixt with Genoese, and (since their Conquest by that People) some few Turks amongst them. Which mixture with the Genoese, tempereth the levity of the Greeks with Italian gravity; the better sort of People both in Apparel and Manners coming near the Genoese, once the Lords of this Island; the common sort continuing their old Greek humour of mirth and jollity (not sensible of the Turkish Thraldom under which they suffer) with as much licentiousness as ever. And though this intermixture hath so corrupted their Language, that neither the Greek nor the Italian be here rightly spoken, but a compound Tongue made up of both; yet keep they their Religions still distinct and separate, as if they had never known another.

Here are reckoned in it six and thirty Towns and Villages, the principal whereof are, 1 S. Elier, in the North. 2 Pigrine, in the midst hereof; and 3 Chios it self, now called Sio (as is all the Island) one of the seven Cities contending for the Birth of Homer, whose Sepulchre they pretend to shew in an old Castle near the Mount and Town of S. Elier, (which were it his, would be a better argument for his Burial here, than it is for his Birth.) The Town situate in the most pleasant and fruitful part of the Country, to which both Industry and Art have given great Advantage; there being few Houses with Orchards of excellent Fruits, as Oranges, Lemmons, Pomegranats, Citrons, and a kind of Fig, much praised for their quickness of taste by the ancient Romans. It standeth on the East-side, opposite to the Shores of Asia, stretched along the bottom of the Haven, and on the West-side backed with a rocky Mountain, upon which it formerly did stand. The Buildings ordinary, the Streets narrow, and the Haven every day decaying; though otherwise secure, once entred: and for directing of the entrance, a Lantern advanced by the Genoese (when Lords hereof) to give Light by night, anb serve for a Land-mark in the day. Fortified on the North-side by a large and strong Castle, environed with deep Ditches, well furnished with Munition, and a Turkish Garrison. And because the Island is on all parts accessible, not naturally fortified with Rocks and dangerous Precipices, as many others; besides this Castle, they have all along the Coast small Watch-Towers, which with smoak by day, and fire by night, give notice unto one another of such Vessels as they see approaching: the Guards about the Castle being so intent also about their Charge, that every minute of the night there goeth a word about the Walls, to declare their vigilancy.

The Chians were at first a Free People, governing themselves as a Common-wealth; and by reason of their many Harbours, able to furnish out a Navy of 80 Sail, which gave them the Lordship of those Seas, till eclipsed by the Rhodians. Besieged by Philip the Father of Perseus, with his utmost Power; who when he could not get it by force, proclaimed freedom to the Slaves (of whic here were many) and liberty to marry with their Masters Wives, if they would rebell against their Masters. And when this policy would not do it, the Town being held out with greater heat of indignation, he gave over the Siege. At last they became subject to the Romans with the rest of Greece, and followed punctually the same change of fortunes, as did those of Lesbos, which we have spoken of before; till given by Andronicus Palæologus, one of the last Greek Emperours, to the Justinians, a noble Genoesian Family, assistant to him in his wars. Under them it continued as Tributaries to the Turks (after the Turks had made themselves Masters of Constantinople) to whom they annually paid eighteen thousand Ducats, till the year 1566. When Solyman the Magnificent picking a quarrel with them for some suspected correspondency with the Knights of Malta, commanded Pial, one of his greatest Bassa's, to seize the Island. And he accordingly presenting himself before the City, with a strong Fleet of eighty Gallies, did so astonish and amaze the Inhabitants of it, that without any other summons than the sight of his Navy, they surrendered themselves unto his disposing, upon Easter-day being the same day he came before it. Since that time it hath continued Turkish, all save their Religion, enjoyed by them with like liberty, as in former times.

4 SAMOS, is on the South-east of Chios, distant above five miles from the shores of Ionia, about eighty, or eighty seven in compass; environed for the most part, especially on the North-west, with inaccessible rocks, but beautified with a fair and capacious Haven; of little use by reason of Pirates which infested those Seas. The soyl sufficiently enriched with most kind of fruits, abundantly plentiful of Oyl and Olives, but of Vines altogether unfurnished; which is the more to be admired, in regard all the Islands and shores about it, produce them in so great a plenty. It stretcheth from the East to the West: and on the South part of it stood the City of Samia, near unto the Haven before spoken of. In former times populous, and well inhabited, as was the rest of the Island, now wholly desolate in a manner, because of the Pirates, and in most places very much over-grown with woods: becoming thereby very useful to those publick enemies, who find here Timber enough for Shipping, and can upon the sudden put a ship to Sea, for pursuit of their Robberies. The chief commodity it affordeth besides those above, is a medicinal Earth, useful for Chirurgery and Physick: of which in former times were those Vessels made, called Vasa Samia, in great request amongst the Romans.

Anciently it had the names of Dryusa, Anathemusa, Melamphylus, and Cyparissa; outworn by that of Samos, which it still retaineth. Memorable in old times for the birth of Juno, of one of the Sibyls, hence called Samia; and finally of the wise-man Pythagoras (a wiser than any of the seven wise Masters so renowned amongst them) who first brought Philosophy into Greece, and from thence into Italy. Once a free Commonwealth of no small esteem, the institutes whereof are mentioned by Heraclides, in his Books of the several Commonwealths then being: afterwards made subject to the Tyrant Polycrates, a man so fortunate, that for a long time he never fell into any mischance. Fearing lest such a long calm would bring on a tempest, he let fall into the Sea a most precious Ring, by him deservedly esteemed, that so it might be said he had some mis-fortunes. Which after he had found again in the belly of a fish, brought accidentally to his Table, he was overcome by Orantes a Persian, and brought to a miserable death. Leaving a notable example, that fortune is certain in nothing but uncertainties; and like a Bee with a sharp sting, hath alwaies some misery following in the train of a long concatenation of felicity. From this time forwards it ran the same fortune with the rest of these Islands; subject successively to the great Monarchies in former times, as of late times to the Venetians, Greeks, and Turks, who do now enjoy it.

5 ICARIA, (now called Niceria) lyeth not far from Samos, to the West-ward of it, narrow, but extended out in length; the whole compass seven and thirty miles: neigboured by two great Rocks, or little Islands, of old called Melanthii, now the Fernaces; formidable at all times to Mariners, in the night especially. Meanly inhabited at the present, though abounding in pasturage, and yielding sufficiency of corn; Havenless, and therefore the less frequented, yet that defect supplyed by commodious Roads. In former times called Doliche, then Macris, after Ischsiesa: which name it held till the flight of Dædalus out of Crete, who justly fearing the anger of Minos, for being Pandar to his wife in her loves with Taurus, secretly with Icarus his son, fled out of that Island. And because he would be sure to out-strip the Rowers who pursued him, he added sails unto his Boat, which it is said, he first invented. But Icarus, coming after in another Bark, delighted with the new device, clapped on too much Canvass, and bearing too great a sail, was here cast away. Hence the new name both to this Island, and the Seas adjoyning to it, and the occasion of the Fable of Dædalus putting wings upon his shoulders, when he fled from Crete; and of his flying too high, whereby the wax melted which his wings were fastned with, and so he perished in the water. Of which thus Ovid.

Dum petit infirmis nimium sublimia pennis
Icarus, Icariis nomina fecit aquis.

In English thus,

Whilst Icarus weak wings too high did soar
He fell, and gave name to the Icarian shore.

6 PATMOS, now called Palmosa, is situate on the South of the other two; A little Island, not above 30 miles in compass. Mountainous, but indifferently fruitful, especially of wheat and pulse; of other commodities, and fruits, not so well provided. On one of these Mountains stands a Town of the same name with the Island; having on the top thereof a Monastery of Greek Caloires; and on the bottom a fair haven (I mean in reference to the Island.) Forty sail of Ships are said to belong unto it; by the trading whereof they bring in those provisions which the soil affordeth not: the soil about the Town being so incomparably barren, that nothing groweth on or near it, but on such earth as is brought thither from other places. Unto this Island (as to others in other parts of the world) did the Roman Emperours use to confine offenders. A punishment laid by Domitian on St. John the Divine, who in this place writ his Revelation to the Churches of Asia. So much the Text affirms for certain, as to the writing of it in this Island. And the Inhabitants by tradition point unto an house on the North-side of the Town, in which it was written, and not far off the Cave where it was revealed. Both places equally honoured by the Greeks and Latines. They also shew a dead mans hand, which they affirm to be his, the nails whereof grow again as oft as cut. But the Turks (saith Magnus) claim it for the hand of one of their Prophets. Let them dispute the controversie, whilst we haste to

7 CLAROS, another Island not far off, containing about 40 miles in compass. Well stored with commodious Harbours, but very mountainous; some of those hills of such an height, that from the tops thereof, the City of Ephesus in Ionia, (though distant at least eighty miles) may be easily seen. It is now called Calamo. Neighboured by Lero (of old called Ileron) a little Island not above eighteen miles in circuit, but very populous, inhabited both by Greeks and Turks, and furnishing the neighbouring Countries

Countries with some store of Aloes. Sacred in former times was Claros to Apollo; reckoned by him amongst his honours, in his brags to Daphne: where he declares,

——— Mihi Delphica tellus, Et Claros, & Tenedos, Patarææque Regia servit.

That is to say,

The folk of Delphos, Tenedos, and Clare,
And Royal Patara, my Vassals are.

8 COOS, COS, or COUS, for by all these names it was called of old, is situate over against Caria, in the very bottom of the Ægæan, that is to say, in that part thereof which is called Mare Myrtoum, the Myrtoan Sea. A Sea so called, as some say, from one Myrtilus, Coachman or Charioter of OEnomaus, who having betrayed his race with Pelops, and importunate for his reward, was by Pelops precipitated into this Sea. Pliny less probably conceiveth that it took name from Myrtos, a little Island not far from Eubœa, a little too far off to extend its name to the shores of Caria. And therefore considering that Lydia anciently was called Myrtus, and that in those times Æolis, and Ionia, lying on this Sea, were accompted but as parts thereof, I think we may resolve with more probability, that it derived this name from that Lydian Myrtus.

In this Sea stands the Isle of Coos, now called Lange, affording Saylers as they pass by a most beautiful prospect, lying for the most part flat and level, but swelling towards the East with some graceful Mountains, out of which issue many sweet and pleasant springs to refresh the Island which maketh it more than ordinary fruitful. Productive of Cypress trees, Turpentine, and sundry other, both delightful and medicinal; but most especially celebrated for those rich wines, which the Good fellows of Rome so much loved to quaff, called Vinum Cos. It is in compass 70 miles, having a Town of the same name, in the suburbs whereof stood anciently the Temple of Æsculapius, famous and rich with the offerings of those, who having by his assistance (as they supposed) recovered health, came hither to make payment of their vows, and express their gratitude. It is now fortified with a strong Castle, held by a Garrison of Turks: and besides this, two Villages only in the Island, and both inhabited by Greeks.

In elder times it had the name of Merope, Caria, and Nymphæa, and at last Coos. Memorable in being the Country of many famous men who were here born; viz, of Hippocrates, the Reviver of Physick, then almost decayed, who is heuce called Hippocrates Cous. 2 Sinius, a Physician also. 3 Ariston, a Peripatetick Philosopher. 4 Philetas, as good an Oratour, as a Poet. 5 Nicias, who for a time oppressed the liberty of this people. And 6 of Apelles, the famous Painter; who to express his Art in the Picture of Venus, (rising naked out of the Sea) assembled together all the most beautiful women of this Island; uniting in that piece their divided perfections. Which famous piece being afterwards hanged up in the Temple of Stomalimne, one of the principal of this Island, was thence conveyed to Rome by Augustus, and their dedicated to Cæsar, as the mother of the Julian family: the Coans in regard hereof, being eased of a great part of their annual tributes. Not much less memorable for that fine thin stuff (such as now called Taffanies) so much in use amongst the chief Ladies of Rome; which at once shewed them cloathed and naked. Perlucidâ utuntur veste, ita, ut nudæ conspici possint, as my Author hath it. These they called Vestimenta Coa, and Vestes Coas, so often mentioned by the Poets, especially in their Amatoria; as Coa puellis Vestis, in Tibullus; Induc me Coi, in Propertius; Sive erit in Coïs, saith the Poet Ovid. So in others also, too many, and too long to be added here. I pass to 9 CARPATHOS, situate on the South of Caria, in the Mediterranean, from this Island, called hereabouts the Carpathian Sea. A rugged and unpleasing soil, full of difficult Mountains, but those Mountaines stored with quarries of most excellent Marble. In circuit about 60 miles, extending more in length than breadth. Heretofore beautified with four Cities, and thence named Tetrapolis. But three of the four Cities are long since perished, that of Carpathos being still remaining, and still the principal of the Island; both now called Scarpanto. Some other Towns it hath all along the shore, and every one of them furnished with some Port or Haven; but small, and for the most part very unsafe. Situate in the middle as it were betwixt Crete and Rhodes. It hath continued hitherto in the possession of the State of Venice (if not taken from them very lately:) to whom being given with other of the Islands of these Grecian Seas, at the taking of Constantinople by the Western forces, it had the fortune or felicity to continue theirs, when almost all the residue were subdued by the Turks. The people Greek, of the communion of that Church, notwithstanding their subjection to a state of Italy.

10 RHODES, situate in the Rhodian or Carpathian Sea, lyeth over-against the coast of Lycia in Asia Minor, from which distant about 20 miles. Formerly called Ophiusa, Asteria, Ethræa, Trinacbia, Pæessa, Corymbia, Atabyria, and at last Macaria; it settled finally and fortunately in the name of Rhodes. So named by the Grecians from the abundance of Roses, which the soil produceth, Rhodes in that language signifying a Rose, the Isle of Roses, as it were: but as the Poets say, of Rhoda, a Nymph of these Seas, here defloured by Apollo; or rather of Rhoda, one of the daughters of Apollo begot on Venus. For so one of them thus declareth;

Insula Dicta Rhodos, de Sole & Cypride nata est
Rhoda, from whom this Isle took name,
Of Venus and Apollo came.

The Island 140 miles in compass, enriched with a most temperate air, and a fertil soil, producing fruits in very great plenty, full of excellent pastures, adorned with trees which alwaies do continue green: and in a word, so blest with the gifts of nature, that it gave occasion to the Fable of those Golden Showers, which were once said to have fallen upon it. The wines hereof so excellent, and so rich of taste, that by the Romans they were used in their second courses, or reserved for the sacrifices of the Gods, as too good for mortals, as affirmed by Virgil in the Georgicks. The cause of which perpetual flourishing, and continual spring, is to be ascribed to the powerful influences of the Sun, so dearly cherishing this Island, or so much in love with it, that it is constantly affirmed, that no day passeth wherein he shineth not clarly on it, be the air in all other places never so much over-cast with clouds, or obscured by mists. Feigned for that cause to have been naturally a meer Marish, altogether inhabitable, if not covered with waters; till loved by Phœbus, and erected above the waves by his vigorus influences.

Of the People we shall speak anon. Look we in the mean time on the places of most observation. 1 Lindus, (now Lindo, a petty town but formerly of more esteem:) of note in those times for the Temple consecrated to Minerva, by Danaus King of Ægypt, landing here when he fled out of that Kingdom. As also for the birth of Charet, the Architect of the huge Colossus, whereof more presently; but specially for the nativity of Cleobulus, one of the seven wise-men of Greece: the other six being Solon of Athens, Periander of Corinth, Chilon of Sparta, Bias of Priene, Thales of Miletum, and Pittacus of Mitilene; Seven men of whom the Grecians most immensely bragged, as if the World could neither afford them equals, or an equal number: for which derided handsomly by Lactantius, an old Christian Writer, who scoffs their paucity, and calleth it a miserable and calamitous age, In quo septem soli fuerunt qui hominum vocabula meterentur; in which there were no more than seven who deserved to be accompted men. 2 Rhodes, anciently, as now the chief City of it, the Island from hence taking name, and formerly, as well as in latter times, depending on the fortunes and strength hereof. No place in elder times held superiour to it, for the conveniency of the Haven, magnificent buildings, delightful Orchards, and other excellencies. Situate on the East part of the Isle, on the declining of an hill, and near the Sea, where it enjoyeth a safe and common Haven: treble walled, fortified with thirteen Turrets, and five strong Bulwarks, besides divers Sconces, and other out-works; this Town, and Famagusta in the Isle of Cyprus, being conceived to be the two strongest holds in the Turkish Empire. In former times, one of the principal Universities of the Roman Empire; this Rhodes, Marseilles, Tarsus, Athens, and Alexandria, being reckoned the old Academies of that Monarchy. And to this Town, as a most noted place of Study, Tiberius (afterwards Emperour) did withdraw himself, when Augustus had declared his two Nephews Lucius and Caius, for his Heirs: pretending only a desire to improve himself in the ways of Literature; whereas the true cause was his envy at their preferment. Honoured in those times with that huge Colossus, one of the seven Wonders of the World, made by Chares of Lindum, before mentioned. Composed of Brass, in height seventy Cubits, every finger of it being as great as an ordinary man; and consecrated to the Sun, as the proper Deity of the Island. Twelve years in making, and having stood but 66 years was pulled down in an instant by an Earthquake, which terribly shook the whole Island. The Rhodians being forbid by an Oracle to erect it again (or possibly pretending such an Oracle to save that charge) yet held the brass and other materials of it (in a manner) sacred. Not medled with, nor sacrilegiously purloined till Mnavias, the General of Osman, the Mahometan Caliph, finding in himself no such scruple of conscience, (after he had subdued this Island) made a prey hereof, loading nine hundred Camels with the very brass of it. From this Colossus was the Island sometimes called Colossa, and the people Colossians: not those Colossians (as some have very vainly thought) to whom St. Paul writ his Epistle, those being of Colosse, a Town of the Greater Phrygia, as hath there been noted. Here was also in this City anciently a Temple of Bacchus, enriched with many presents both of Greeks and Romans; or both which People the Rhodians were then held in a fair esteem; but the God and the good Wines in greater. Towns of less note, are 3 Villanova, 4 Rassicare, and sometimes others, but as little memorable.

This Island was first peopled by Dodanim the son of Javan, and the Grand-child of Japhet, whom the Greeks call commonly, but corruptly, Rhodanim; mistaking the Hebrew Letter Daleth for that of Resh, letters so like as easily it might draw them to that mistake. Finding this Island too narrow for him, he left here a Colony, and with the main of his people passed into Greece; where he planted the Country of Epirus, as hath there been said. Those which staid here being mistakingly called Rhodians (or called so by the Grecians, not looking with too curious eyes into their Antiquities, from the abundance of Roses here growing) making the best use of their Haven, and other the advantages of their situation, became so expert in maritime affairs, that by Florus they are styled Populus nauticus, and that not only in the way of Trade and Merchandize, but of power and government: holding for many years the command of these Seas, and prescribing Laws for the Reiglement of Navigation. Which being called the Rhodian Laws, became the general Rule for deciding marine causes, and ordering the affairs of Sea, in all the parts and Provinces of the Roman Empire: and so continued till supplanted in these Western parts by the Laws of Oleron. Fearful of falling under the Macedonians, they applied themselves unto the Romans; whom first they aided in their wars against Philip, the Father of Perseus; and afterwards in that also against Antiochus. Rewarded for this last service with Lycia and Caria, two of the Asian Provinces, which Antiochus was to leave on his composition; they became so faithfully affected to the State of Rome, that when all the other Islands of the Mediterranean and Ægean Seas revolted to Mithridates King of Pontus, this only adhered unto the Romans. Proud either of their strength at Sea, or of those good offices, they began to take upon them as Mediators, and thought themselves fit men to advise their Masters. Grown troublesome by their frequent interpositions, and losing much of their esteem by such impertinencies, they began to grow jealous of the Romans, and incline to Perseus King of Macedon; whose Father they before opposed with their utmost power. A change which Paterculus expressed with some admiration. Rhodii ipsi fidelissimi antea Romanis, dubiâ jam fide proniores in Regis partes visi sunt, as his words there are. But yet they held for them against Mithridates, as before was said, and served their turn on all occasions, until insensibly they betrayed their libertie to the power of their friends; and of Confederates and Allies, became their Vassals. Made by Vespasian into a Province with the rest of the Isles, the Governour or President of that Province fixing here his residence, as the chief of those Islands; which gave the title of Metropolitan to the Bishop of Rhodes. Under that Empire it continued (or under that of Constantinople after the division) till the year 1124. when taken from the Grecians by the State of Venice; again recovered by the Greeks, in the time of their Emperour John Ducas, then residing at Nice. Won from the Grecians by the Turks, the Knights of St. John of Hierusalem, being utterly driven out of Asia, possessed themselves of it, by the favour of Emanuel the then Emperour, who aided them in the conquest, Anno 1308. Afterwards proving bad neighbours to the Turkish Tyrants, whom they ceased not to infest upon all occasions, they were many times in vain invaded; Mahomet the Great, famous for taking Constantinople, and the Empire of Trabezond, spending some time before their City, with both loss and shame. At the last Anno 1522. it was again besieged by Solyman the Magnificent, Lilladamus Villerius being then great Master, who did as much in defence hereof as policy and puissance could extend unto. But multitude in the end prevailed, and upon Christmas day, the Turk entred Rhodes as Conquerour; though possibly he might have said (as Pyrrhus once said of a like victory against the Romans) that such another Victory would have quite undone him. Since that a Province of the Turks, by whom, and by some Jews banished out of Spain, the City of Rhodes is wholly inhabited: the Christians which are licenced to dwell in the Country, and have leave to trade there in the day time, not suffered upon pain of death to stay there all night. And so we pass from the Islands of the Asian Diocese, to the Isle of Cyprus, a near neighbour unto Anatolia; but no member of it: the rest of that Diocese, and those Seas, as 11 Possidium. 12 Arcesine. 13 Engiales. 14 Minyus. 15 Sirne, 16 Cesi, and the rest, yielding but little matter of observation besides their names.

CYPRUS is situate in the the Syrian and Cilician Seas, extended in length from East to West two hundred miles, in breadth sixty; the whole compass reckoned five hundred and fifty. Distant about sixty miles from the rocky Shores of Cilicia in Asia Minor, and about an hundred from the main Land of Syria; towards which it shooteth it self out with a long sharp Promontory, extending heretofore to the main Land, from which rent in former time by a violent Earthquake, as is said by Pliny, and worn unto this narrowness by the continual working of the Sea upon it.

No place hath oftner changed his name, or at least had more names on the By than this. Called at first Cethin, or Cethinia, from Ketim the son of Javan, who first planted it. 2 Cerastis, from the abundance of Promontories, thrusting like Horns into the Sea, (as the word intimates in the Greek,) 3 Amathusia. 4 Paphia. 5 Salaminia: These three last from the principal Towns in those parts hereof. 6 Macaria, from the fruitfulness and felicities of it. Besides these, it hath in some times had these By-names also; as, 7 Asperia, from the roughness of the Soil. 8 Collinia, from the frequency of Hills and Mountains. 9 Æroſa, from the Mines of Brass, which abound therein. 10 And finally, all those forgotten and laid by, it settled at last in the name of Cyprus. So called, say some, from the abundance of Cypress Trees, with which most plentifully provided; as others, from Cryptos a Greek word, signifying Concealed, or hidden, because sometimes concealed by the Surges from the eye of Sailers; but most improbably said by others to take name from Cyrus, who founded here the City of Aphrodisia; whereas indeed six hundred years before Cyrus his Birth, we find it by this name in Homer. More rightly Stephanus, who deriveth it, ἀπὸ Κύπρου τῆς θυγατρὸς Κινύρου, from Cyprus daughter of Cinyras, one of the Kings hereof, living before the Trojan Wars: though in my mind the first comes neareſt to the truth, the Cypress Tree not only growing here in so great abundance, but being anciently peculiar in a manner to this Island only.

But on what ground soever it was called Cyprus, certain I am it had the name of Cerastis upon very good reason; no Island or Region that I know of (for the bigness of it) thrusting out so many sharp Promontories. For on the West there is, 1 The Promontory called Acamas, now Capo S. Pisano. 2 Drepanum, now Trepano and Melechia. 3 Zephyrum, or Caput Calidoni, now Punta Malota. On the South, 4 Phrurium, now Capo Bianco. 5 Curias, or Cape della Catte. 6 Gades, or Capo Chiti. 7 Throni, or Capo Pilæ. On the East, 8 Pendalium, now Capo diGriego. 9 Clides, now Capo S. Andræa. And on the North, 10 Coronyon, now Capo Cornochiette; besides some others of less note. Some of the Poets give another reason of this name, as that Venus offended with the People of Amathus for sacrificing their Guests, should turn them into horned Cattel, Unde etiam nomen traxere Ceraſtæ, as it is in Ovid, But that meerly fabulous; somewhat of kin unto the Legend of Thomas Becket, and the Kentish Long-tails. Yet so far we may joyn with Ovid, that the Island was not only called Cerastis, but that the People were also called Ceraſtæ, of which there wants not proof from some other Authors; with which we need not trouble our selves, that name being altogether worn out of use, and no other but that of Cyprus given it in common Speech. Nor is it a matter of more strangeness, that Cyprus should be called so by the Grecians, from its abundance of Cypress Trees, anciently and originally peculiar to this Island, as before was noted: than that the same Grecians should give unto the neighbouring Island the name of Rhodes, from its great plenty of Roses; or to the neighbouring Continent the name of Phœnicia, from its great plenty of Palm-trees; the word so signifying in that Language.

It is situate under the fourth Climate, so that the longest day in Summer is no more than fourteen hours and a half; and for that cause the Air in Summer time exceeding hot and soultry: The Soil moistned with some few Brooks, meriting rather the name of Torrents than Rivers, which being generated for the most part by rain-water, are not seldom dried up by the heat of the Sun; insomuch that in the Reign of Constantine the Great, this Island was for 36 years together almost utterly forsaken, no rain falling all that time. These inconveniences notwithstanding, it is stored with such plenty of all things, that without the help of any Forreign Nation, it is of it self able to build and rig a tall Ship from the Keel to the Top-sail, and so put it to Sea furnished with all things needful for a Voyage, or a Sea-fight. It also aboundeth in Wine, Oyl, Corn, Sugar, Cotton, Honey, Wooll, Turpentine, and Allom, Verdegreece, all sorts of Metals, store of Salt, Grograins, and other Commodities, whereupon this Island was once called Macaria (i. e. Happy.) By reason of which wonderful affluence of all necessaries, and that variety of Pleasures (even to sensuality) which the place afforded, it was anciently consecrated unto Venus, who is hence called Venus Cypria. and Dea Cypri: Sic te diva potens Cypri, in Horace; and in Ovid,

Festa dies Veneris, totâ celeberrima Cypro,
Venerat; ipsa suis aderat Venus aurea festis.
Venus Feasts hallowed through all Cyprus came,
And Venus with her presence grac'd the same.

The People hereof are war-like, strong, and nimble; of great civility and hospitality to their Neighbours, and love to Strangers of all Nations, Jews only excepted. For in the Empire of Trajan, the Jews inhabiting Ægypt and the adjoining Countries, drew themselves together, and chose one Alexander for their Captain; under whose conduct they entred into this Iſland, and laid it deſolate, killing in it 240000 Perſons of all Sexes and Ages; not without much blood ſhed vanquiſhed and ſlain by Lucius the Emperours Lieutenant. Since which time the Cypriots permit no Jew to enter into the Iſland; but come he hither voluntarily, or by force of Tempeſt, they lay hands on him, and lead him preſently to Execution. A hated Nation, that neither innocence can protect, or equity reprieve from that cruel cuſtom.

The Women in former times much noted for their Unchaſtity, to which their worſhipping of Venus was no ſmall incentive; it being the cuſtom of theſe Women to proſtitute themſelves on the Shores, to the paſſers by: their very Virgins not refuſing to be handſelled there, before their Marriage; either to raiſe their Portions by the ſale of their Bodies, or elſe to pleaſe their Goddeſs with ſuch beaſtly Sacrifices. And if Volaterranus may be credited (as I think he may) the Ladies which attended on Queen Carlotte, when ſhe came to Rome, to ſeek for aid againſt James the Baſtard, who had diſpoſſeſſed her of this Kingdom, ſhewed themſelves little chaſter than thoſe ancient Cypriots. Somewhat more fortunate in the Men; Æſclepiades, the Author of the Verſe ſo named; 2 Xenophon, an old Poet; 3 Zeno, and 4 Apollonius, the Philoſophers; 5 Epiphanius, the learned Biſhop of Salamis; and 6 above all, Saint Barnabas, the dear Aſſociate of Saint Paul, being all Natives of this Country.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt here planted by Saint Paul and Barnabas, as the very firſt fruits of their Apoſtleſhip, after they had been ſeparated to the Work of the Miniſtry by the Impoſition of hands, as appeareth Acts 13. v. 4. &c. The Church hereof, by reaſon of the Antiquity of it, and the honour of this joint Foundation, ſo priviledged in the beſt Ages of Chriſtianity, that the Archbiſhop of this Iſland had all Prerogatives of a Primate; conſecrated by his own Suffragan Biſhops and acting in all Sacred and Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, without dependence on, or relation to the See of Antioch, whereunto all other Biſhops in the Eaſtern Dioceſe were either ſubordinate or ſubject. Which Priviledge being queſtioned in the Council of Epheſus, was by the Fathers there aſſembled, on a full hearing of the Cauſe, approved and ratified; confirmed by the Civil Sanction of the Emperour Juſtinian, whoſe Wife was a Native of this Iſland; and by the name of Jus Ciprium, the Priviledge or Exemption of the Cyprian Church, tranſmitted to the Prelates of ſucceeding times. Which notwithſtanding, they continued in good correſpondence with the Eaſtern Churches of the Greek Communion, and officiated all Divine Acts after the Rites and Forms thereof, till the Venetians became Lords of it, who brought in the Latin Service into ſome of their Churches, and appointed Biſhops and other Miniſters of the Papal party, for execution of the ſame. And for the Government of theſe Churches, they had at firſt fourteen Biſhops and Archbiſhops; to gratifie Queen Alice, (who had a mind to enrich her friends with ſome of the Spoils of them) reduced by Innocent the third to four only, that is to ſay, the Archbiſhoprick of Nicoſia, the Biſhopricks of Famaguſta, Paphos, and Amathus; but each See furniſhed with two Prelates, the one for the Greeks, the other for the Latins: of which the Biſhops for the Latins have all the Lands, and Annual Revenues which of right belong to thoſe Cathedrals; the Greek Biſhops living upon Stipends, levied on the Prieſts and Deacons of their Juriſdiction.

Rivers, as formerly was ſaid, here are very few; and of thoſe few, the principal are called Lycus and Lapithus; the firſt running towards the South, the laſt towards the North; both not ſeldom ſo dried up, that they leave their empty Channels without any water. Both alſo have their Source from the Hill Olympus (the higheſt Mountain of the Iſland) garniſhed with Trees and Fruits of all ſorts; in compaſs about eighteen Leagues (which make four and fifty Italian miles) and at the end of every League a Monaſtery of Greek Monks, or Caloires, and a Fountain of freſh water for the uſe of the Houſe. Here are alſo two other little Rivers, the one called 3 Bodeus, the other 4 Tolius; but of the ſame nature as the former.

By Ptolomy, or in his time, divided into four parts or Provinces; but ſince it fell into the hands of the Luſignian Family, diſtributed into twelve Counties or Cantredes; moſt of them called by the names of their principal Towns: viz. 1 Nicoſia. 2 Famaguſta. 3 Paphia. 4 Audima. 5 Limiſſa. 6 Maſorum. 7 Salines. 8 Meſſoria. 9 Cruſocus. 10 Pentalia. 11 Carpaſſus. 12 Cerines. The whole containing, beſides theſe Cities and great Towns, 805 Villages or thereabouts, which they called Caſales, whereof the one half anciently belonged unto the Crown, the other half divided betwixt the Lay-Nobility, and the Eccleſiaſticks; the Patrimony of theſe laſt being computed at 80000 Crowns of Annual Rents, beſides Caſualties, and the Vails of the Altar. But becauſe the tracing out of theſe Cantredes will be very difficult (as a way which none have gone before me) I will adhere to the diviſion made hereof in the time of Ptolomy, into the Provinces of 1 Paphia, 2 Amathyſia, 3 Lapethia, and 4 Salamine.

1 PAPHIA ſo called of Paphos the chief Town thereof, taketh up the Weſt part of the Iſland; in which the Towns of moſt importance and obſervation are, 1 Paphos, on the Sea-ſide, by Pliny called Palæpaphos, or old Paphus, Built, as ſome ſay, by Cyniras, the Father of Myrrha, and ſo named in memory of Paphus his Father; but, as others ſay, by Paphos, the ſon of Pygmalion, King of Phœnicia and Cyprus: to which laſt Ovid doth agree, who ſpeaking of Pygmalions's Statue, turned into a Woman by the power of Venus (or rather of his beautiful Wife, fabled, for the ſurpaſſing whiteneſs of her skin, to be made of Ivory) he adds this of her,

Illa Paphium genuit de quo tenet inſula nomen.
She Paphus bare, from whom the name
Of Paphia to the Iſland came.

Here Venus had her ſo much celebrated Temple, hence the name of Paphia; and here her Votaries of both Sexes in their natural nakedneſs, did perform her Sacrifices. Both Town and Temple ruined by a fearful Earthquake; or as the Legends have it, by the prayers of St. Barnabas; the ruines of it ſtill remaining. 2 Paphos Nova, or New Paphos, now called Baffo, five miles from the old, built by Agapenor, one of the Nephews of Lycurgus the Spartan Law-giver, after the Sack of Troy forced hither by a violent Tempeſt; conſecrate to the ſame impure Goddeſs, and much frequented, but without injury to the other; thoſe which here offered not thinking they had done her ſufficient ſervice, unleſs they went in a ſolemn manner of Proceſſion, and paid their Vows alſo at the other. 3 Arſinoe, ſituate betwixt both; built by, or called ſo in honour of Arſinoe, daughter of Ptolomy the firſt King of Ægypt, and Lord of Cyprus, of that Houſe. 4 Drepanum, now called Trepano, under the Promontory ſo named, a well-traded Port, but miſerably defaced by the Turks, when they took this Iſland. 5 Connelia, one of the richeſt of the Iſland, by reaſon of the plenty of Sugar and Cotton-wooll, growing thereabout. Built in the place of 6 Citbera, dedicated to Venus alſo, but differing from the Iſland of that name in the Ægean Sea, rather in pronunpronunciation than the purity of her oblations; the laſt ſyllable ſave one, in the name of that Iſland, being ſhort in verſe, but this of Cyprus ſounding long, as in this of Virgil, Eſt Amathus, eſt celſa mihi Paphos, atque Cithera.

Cithera, Amathus divine,
And lofty Paphos are all mine.

2 On the South-Eaſt of Paphia lieth the Province or Diſtrict of AMATHYSIA, taking up the South-parts of the Iſland which look towards Ægypt. Chief Towns hereof, 1 Amathus, giving name unto this diviſion, then of moſt note, and much frequented for the annual ſacrifices made unto Adonis the darling of Venus, who had here another of her Temples: the ruines of both hardly now diſcerned. Built, as ſome ſay, by Amaſis, King of Ægypt, when he conquered this Iſland; but as others ſay by ſome of the Anathites, deſcended from Anath one of the ſons of Canaan. 2 Cetium, or Citium, (for I find it called by both names) the birth-place of Zeno the Stoick, hence called Κιτιεὺς, or Citienſis; and memorable for the death of Simon the Athenian General. A Town whereing the memory of Cittim, the ſon of Javan, is moſt anciently preſerved. 3 Epiſcopio, one of the chief of all the Iſland, built on the place, or out of the decay of 4 Curias, not far from the Promontory of the ſame name, founded by the Argives, where Apollo had both a Grove and a Temple, by the name of Apollo Hylates: his Altars in thoſe times held ſo ſacred, that whoſoever preſumed to touch them, was thrown into the Sea from the Promontory or rocks adjoyning. 5 Salines, or Salinæ, ſo called from the rich Saltpits; one of the chief Towns of this part, and giving name to one of thoſe twelve Cantredes, into which the whole is now divided.

3 LAPETHIA, the third part of the Iſland, lyeth on the North thereof, oppoſite to Cilicia in Aſia Minor. Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Nicoſia, the Regal City of the Kings, the See of the Archbiſhop, and the chief of the Iſland: anciently called Ledronſis, and Lentainis; but thoſe names long ago laid by. Situate in the middeſt of the Iſle, and in a plain and champain Country abundantly fertile and delightful. Environed with a fair wall, ſo exactly round as if it had been drawn with a pair of Compaſſes; in circuit about five miles, and both for ſituation, numbers of people, and magnificent buildings of all ſorts both publick and private, compared by ſome to the moſt beautiful City of Florence. Fortified by the Venetians, when in their poſſeſſion, with new walls, deep diches, and eleven ſtrong Bulwarks, with three great Out-works, all of them built according to the Art of modern Fortification. But notwithſtanding all theſe works, and the help of 250 pieces of Cannon planted on the walls, and about the City, it was by the Turks taken at the ſecond or third aſſault, Septemb. 9. Anno 1570. So evident a truth it is, that Fortifications are more ſtrengthened by the gallantry and courage of the Defendants, than the Defendants are by their Fortifications. 2 Cerines, ſituate near the Sea, ſtrong by Art and Nature, and furniſhed with all things neceſſary to endure a Siege; but yielded to the Turks by Alphonſus Palacius the unwarlike Governour, terrified with the great ſlaughter made at the ſack of Nicoſia, before the Enemy came near it. At firſt called Ceurania, and ſaid to have been built by Cyrus the great Perſian King, when he firſt ſubdued the nine Kings hereof, and united the Iſland to that Crown; bleſt with a more temperate and wholeſome air, than any other in the Country. 3 Tremitus, the birth-place of Spiridion, a Biſhop of the Primitive times, renowned for miracles; many of which reported by Sozomen, lib. 1. chap. 10. and other Eccleſiatical Writers. Wholly decayed, the ruine of it much contributing to the riſe of Nicoſia. 4 Lapithus (by Pliny called Lapeto) on the banks of a ſmall Riveret of that name, of ſo great note in former times, that it gave to this Diviſion the name of Lapethia, in that part ſtandeth the hill Olympus; (now the Mountain of the holy Croſs) deſcribed before.

4 SALAMINE, the fourth and laſt Province of this Iſland, taketh up the whole Eaſt-parts hereof: So named from 1 Salamis, once the chief City of the Iſle, and the See of the Primate, or Metropolitan hereof in the Primitive times. Deſtroyed by the Jews in the reign of Trajan, and re-built again; but being after that taken, ſacked, and razed unto the ground by the Saracens, in the time of Heraclius, it never could again recover: the Metropolitan See after that ſubverſion, being removed to Nicoſia. It was ſometimes, and by ſome Writers, called Conſtantia alſo; but that name could give it no more perpetuity than the other of Salamis. Memorable whilſt it ſtood for the founder of it, being Teucer the ſon of Telamon King of Salamis, an Iſle of the Ægean Sea; baniſhed his Country by his Father, and ſettled in this Iſland by the power of Belus, King of Phœnicia: as alſo for a famous Temple ſacred unto Jupiter, hence called Salaminius. Out of the ruines hereof aroſe, 2 Famaguſta, now the prime City of theſe parts; built as is ſaid by Coſta, the Father of St. Catharine; but that uncertain. Situate at the Eaſt end of the Iſland, in a plain and low ground betwixt two Promontories, the one called the Cape of St. Andrew, and the other Capo di Griego, or the head of Græcia. In compaſs not above two miles, in form four-ſquare, but that the ſide towards the Eaſt ſtretcheth out more in length than the other three. On two parts beaten on with the Sea, the other parts towards the Land defended with a Ditch not above fifteen foot in breadth, an old ſtone wall, and certain Bulwarks. The Haven (oppoſite to Tripolis, a Town of Syria) openeth towards the South-eaſt, defended from the injury of the Sea by two great Rocks, betwixt which the Sea commeth in at a narrow paſſage not above forty paces broad, but after opening wider and wider; maketh a convenient Harbour, rather ſafe than large, aſſured both by the difficult entrance, and a chain croſſed over it. The whole Town, when the Turks appeared before it, but meanly fortified; the works of it of the old faſhion, generally decayed except one Bulwark, which was but according to the modern Arts of Fortification, with Paliſadoes, Curtains, Caſemates, and all other Additaments: moſt gallantly defended by Bragadine the noble General, to the wonder and envy of the Turks, who ſpent no leſs than 118000 great ſhot upon it; and at laſt yielded upon honourable terms, had they been as punctually performed. 3 Aphrodiſium, ſo named of Venus, whom the Greeks called Aphrodite, who had here another of her Temples. 4 Arſione, built alſo by one of the Arſiones Queens of Ægypt there being two others of this name, and the ſame foundation, now called Leſcare, and anciently renowned for the Groves of Jupiter, 5 Tamaſſus, of good note in the time of Strabo for rich mines of Braſs, as afterwards for abundance of Verdegreece and Vitriol found plentifully in the fields adjoyning. 6 Idalium, near a Mount of the ſame name, ſo called by accident. For Chalcenor the founder of it being told by the Oracle, that he ſhould ſeat himſelf, and build a City, where he firſt ſaw the riſing Sun: one of his followers, ſeeing the Sun begin to riſe, cried out Ἴδε ἥλιον, that is to ſay, Behold the Sun. Which Omen taken by Chalcenor, he here built this City. But whether this were ſo or not (as for my part I build not very much upon it) certain it is, that Venus had here another Temple, neighboured by the Idalian Groves, ſo memorized and chanted by the Ancient Poets. So ſtrong an influence had luſt and ſenſuality on this wretched People, that every corner of the Iſland was defiled with thoſe brutiſh Sacrifices, which day by day were offered to that impure deitie: though to ſay truth, it was no marvel if having made their Belly their God, they made in the next place their glory their ſhame.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Iſland were the poſterity of Cittim the ſon of Javan, and grand-ſon of Japhet: who having ſeen his brother Tarſhiſh ſettled in Cilicia, (where his memory is ſtill preſerved in the City of Tarſus) planted himſelf and his retinue in this oppoſite Iſland. The City of Cetium, as Ptolomy, or Citium, as Pliny calleth it, one of the ancienteſt of the Iſland; taking name from him: which with the authority of Joſephus, and others of the ancient Writers, put it out of queſtion. But being this Iſland was too narrow to contain his numbers, and willing to ſeek further off for a larger dwelling, he left here ſo many of his followers as might ſerve in time to plant the Country; and with the reſt paſſed into Macedon, where we have already ſpoken of him. Made tributary firſt to Amaſis King of Ægypt, from which diſtant about three or four daies ſayling. Subjected afterwards to the Phœnicians, a near neighbour to them, who being a Sea-faring people, made themſelves Maſters of the Sea-coaſts and maritime places. Cinyras the Father of Myrrha, (by whom both Father and Grand-Father to Adonis) is ſaid to have been King of both. The like affirmed of Belus one of his Succeſſors, who is ſaid to have been the founder of the City of Citium, named ſo (if not rather repaired than new built by him,) with reference no doubt to Cittim, the firſt Progenitor of this People. By the power and favour of this Belus, Teucer, the ſon of Telamon, baniſhed his Country, accompanied with many followers from Salamis, Athens, and Arcadia, was ſettled in the Eaſt parts hereof; where the City of Salamis, by him built, was his firſt Plantation. Yet ſo that the Phœnicians kept their former hold: it being evident in Story that Elulæus one of the Succeſſors of this Belus, (but a King of Tyre,) and a Co-temporary with Salmanaſſar King of Aſſyria, paſſed over into Cyprus with a puiſſant Navy to reduce the Citiæans to obedience, who had then rebelled. The Iſland at firſt coming of Teucer hither ſo infinitely overgrown with woods, that the people were not able to till the Iſland. Inſomuch, that notwithſtanding the great waſte made of them, both in building ſhips, and caſting metals, a Law was made that every one which would ſhould fell them, and take as much ground in ſeveralty for his own inheritance, as he could overcome and make fit for tillage. Encouraged herewith, the natural Cypriots, together with the Colonies of Grecians, Phœnicians, Ægyptians, ſo beſtirred themſelves, that at laſt they brought it unto Champagn: parcelled out in ſucceeding times, amongſt nine Kings, for ſo many Cyrus the great Perſian Monarch found at his coming hither. But Cyrus, though he did ſubdue all thoſe petit Princes, yet he took not from them their Eſtates or Titles: contented with the conqueſt of it, and an annual tribute. For after this, in the time of Artaxerxes Mnemon, we find Evagoras, and Nicocles, to whom Iſocrates inſcribed two of his Orations, to be Kings hereof. And in the time of Alexander the Great, Citium it ſelf (ſuch was the honour born unto the Mother-City) had a King apart, not ſubject unto any other. The King whereof to indear himſelf with the Conquerour, gave to him a ſword, μαχαίραν δαυμασὴν, ſaith Plutarch, an admirable ſword, both for colour and lightneſs, which he after uſed in all his fights. And after the death of Alexander, his great Commanders cantoning his eſtates amongſt them, the Princes and People of this Iſland were in great diſtractions, not knowing to whom they might ſubmit for their beſt advantage. But Ptolomy, who had ſeized on Ægypt for his part of the ſpoil, being ſtrong in ſhipping, ſettled them by a perſonal viſit; and fortifying ſome of the beſt pieces in it, aſſured the Country to himſelf. To him and his poſterity it continued ſubject till the time of Ptolomy Auletes, the ninth King of this Line in our Accompt, who gave it for a portion to one of his Brethren: in whoſe time, the Romans, without any colour or pretence of quarrel, but only to enrich themſelves with the ſpoil of the Iſland, ſent Portius Cato to ſubdue it. Aud he at firſt aſſayed to get it with the Kings concent, offering him in the name of the Roman Senate, the Prieſt-hood of the Temple of Paphos, being a rich and gainful Office, and of high eſteem among that people. But when Ptolomy for fear of worſe miſchief had made away himſelf by poyſon, Cato without more ceremonie takes poſſeſſion of it. And becauſe Ammianus Marcellinus the Hiſtorian, hath ſo ſignificantly expreſſed this buſineſs, and withal deſcribed ſo punctually the Eſtate of this Iſland; we will add this diſcourſe from him, though ſomewhat be repeated which was ſaid before. Cyprum inſulam procul à Continente diſtantem, & portuoſam, &c. "The Iſle of Cyprus, far diſtant from "the Continent, and well ſtored with Harbours, is fa- "mous, beſides many Municipal Towns, for two princi- "pal Cities, that is to ſay, Salamis, and Paphos; the one "ſacred to Jupiter, and the other to Venus. An Iſle ſo "admirably fruitful, and with all things furniſhed, that "without the help of any forein Nation, it is able of it "ſelf to build and rig forth a ſhip, from the very keel un- "to the top-ſail, and trim it with all tackle neceſſary for "a preſent voyage. Nor do I ſhame to ſay, that with "greater Avarice than Juſtice, the Romans did invade "this Iſland, King Ptolomy, our old Confederate and "Ally, being unworthily proſcribed, for no other reaſon, "but that our Treaſury was bare, our Exchequer empty. "And he no ſooner had prevented this diſhonour by a "quick and voluntary death, making away himſelf by "poyſon, but the Iſland was forthwith made tributary, "and the riches of it, Velut hoſtiles exuviæ claſſi impoſitæ & in urbem adductæ per Catonem, as the ſpoils of "ſome conquered enemy, were brought on Ship-board, "and conveyed by Cato unto Rome. So far, and to this purpoſe he.

I know there is another cauſe alledged for the ſending of Cato on this Errand, viz. that Clodius who was then Tribune, and ſped the Edict, might have opportunity by his abſence to revenge himſelf on Cicero, and ſome others of the oppoſite faction: but the main buſineſs was the money, as before was ſaid; the prey amounting to 7000 Talents, which comes to two Millions, and one hundred thouſand Crowns of Coin now currant, Which mony and movables, amounting unto ſo vaſt a ſum, he fearing to loſe by Sea, divided it into many ſmall portions, which he put into ſeveral boxes, viz. in every Box two Talents and fifty Drachms. At the end of every Box he faſtned a long rope with a piece of Cork; by which, floating above the water, the money, if by Shipwrack loſt, might be eſpied again: which was not much unlike the buoys which Mariners faſten by long ropes to their Anchors, that they may be ſooner found. We ſee by this, that the pretence of the Romans to this Country was very weak: Avariùs magis quàm juſtiùs ſumus aſſecuti, are the words of Sextus Rufus alſo. But being made a Roman Province, it was in the diviſion of the Empire aſſigned to the Conſtantinopolitan Emperours; under whom it ſuffered, as all other parts of the Empire did by the violent invaſion of the Saracens, who ſpoiled and ranſacked it in the time of Conſtance the ſecond, deſtroying then the City of Salamis or Conſtantia. But that tempeſt being being overblown, they returned again unto that Empire, governed by a succession of Dukes, till the year 1184. At which time Andronicus Comnenus usurping the Greek Empire, compelled Isaacius Comnenus, one of the bloud Royal, to shift for himself: who seizing on this Island made himself King thereof, and ruling till the year 1191. when Richard the first of England, being denied the common courtesie of taking in fresh water, and seeing his Souldiers abused by the Cypriots, not only took the King Prisoner, but subdued the whole Island. And as Paterculus telleth us, that when Marcus Antonius had captivated Artamasdes King of Armenia, Catenis, sed ne quid honori deesset, aureis vinxit; So did our Richard keep a Decorum towards this Prisoner, binding him not in bonds of Iron, but Silver. King Richard having thus possessed himself of this Country, sold it for ready money, (which for the managing of his intended wars against the Turks, he most needed) unto the Templers: and taking it, upon I know not what discontent, again from them, he bestowed it on Guy of Lusignan, the titular and miserable King of Hierusalem; receiving in way of exchange, the title of that lost and shipwracked Kingdom; with which title he and some of his Successors for a time were honoured.

In the posterity of this Guy, this Island continued free and absolute, till the year one thousand four hundred twenty three; when Melechella (or Melechnasar) Sultan of Ægypt, invaded this Country, took John King hereof Prisoner, ransomed him for 150000 Sultanies, restored him to his Kingdom, and imposed on him and his Successors, the yearly tribute of 40000 Crowns. This John was father to another John, whose two children were Carlotte a legitimate Daughter, and James a bastard Son. James after the death of his father, dispossessed his sister Carlotte of the Crown, by the consent and help of the Sultan of Ægypt; and the better to strengthen himself against all opposition, he took to wife Catharine Cornari, daughter by adoption to the Venetian Senat: whom at his death he made his heir, if the child she went withal (having then none by her) should dye without issue, as it did, not long after it was born; and she seeing the factious Nobility too head-strong to be bridled by a female authority, like a good child resigned her Crown and Scepter to the Venetian State, Anno 1473. These defended it against all claims, (paying only as tribute to the Ægyptian, and after to the Turkish Sultans, the 40000 Crowns before mentioned) till the year 1570. when Mustapha, General of the Turks, wrested it from the Venetians, to the use of his Master Selimus the second, who pretended title to it as Lord of Ægypt. The Governour of the Venetian Forces at the time of this unfortunate loss was Signior Bragadino, who as long as hope of succours, means of resistance, or possibility of prevailing continued, with incredible valour made good the Town of Famagusta, in whose defence consisted the welfare of the whole Island. At last he yielded it on honourable conditions, had they been as faithfully kept, as punctually agreed on. But Mustapha the Turkish General inviting to his Tent the principal men of worth in the Town, caused them all to be murdered: and as for Bragadin himself, he commanded his ears to be cut off, his body to be flead alive, and his skin stuffed with straw, to be hanged at the main-yard of his Gally. The chief of the prisoners and spoils were in two tall ships, and one Gallion sent unto Selimus; but he never saw them. For a Noble Cyprian Lady, destinated to the lust of the Grand Seigneur, fired certain barrels of powder; by the violence whereof both the vessels and the booty in them, were in part burned, in part drowned. A famous and heroick act; inferiour unto none of the Roman Dames, so much commended in their Stories, though more to be commended in a Roman than a Christian Lady.

Thus having summed up the affairs of this Island from the first plantation of it, till this last said conquest, I will lay down the succession of the Cyprian Kings of the Noble Lusignan Family, in this ensuing Catalogue of

The KINGS of CYPRUS.

1 Guy of Lusignan, the titular King of Hierusalem, estated in the Kingdom of Cyprus, by Richard the first of England.
2 Almericus, the brother of Guy.
3 Hugh, the son of Almericus.
4 Henry, the son of Hugh.
5 Hugh II. son of Henry.
6 Hugh III. son of Hugh the second.
7 John, son of Hugh the third.
8 Henry II. the brother of John.
9 Hugh IV. son of Guido, the younger brother of John, and Henry the second.
10 Peter, the son of Hugh the fourth.
11 Petrinus, the son of Peter.
12 James, younger brother of Peter, and Uncle to Petrinus.
13 Janus, the son of James, made Tributary by Melechnaser, to the Kingdom of Ægypt.
14 John II. the son of Janus.
15 Carlotte, sole daughter and heir of John the second, first married to John the Prince of Portugal, and after to Lewis Prince of Savoy; outed of her Estate and Kingdom, by 16 James II. the bastard son of John the second, who by a strong hand seized upon it, and by help of the Venetians kept it during life.
17 James III. born after the decease of his father, whom he survived not very long. After whose death, being the last of this Family, the Venetians possessed themselves of Cyprus: which they invaded with no better title, than the Romans had done in former times; not likely to be blest with a long fruition, of that which they had so unjustly got into their hands. But of that already.

And here is to be observed, that these Cyprian Kings retaining the title of Hierusalem (towards which they sometimes cast an eye) bestowed upon their greatest Subjects, and deserving Servitors, both titles of honour and Offices of State, belonging anciently to that Kingdom. So that we find amongst them a Prince of Antioch, a Prince of Galilee, a Count of Tripoli, a Lord of Cæsarea, and a Lord of Mount Tabor; a Seneschal of Hierusalem, a Constable, Marshal, and High-Chamberlain of that Kingdom also. With better reason, though no doubt with as little profit, as the Pope gives Bishopricks and Archbishopricks in Greece, or Ægypt. But those titular Offices are now quite extinct, though possibly some of the Titles of honour which were took from thence, may be still remaining.

But to return unto the Turks, having thus taken Famagusta and Nicosia, on which the whole Island did depend, all other Cities of it, and the whole by consequence, were forced to submit to the Turkish Tyranny. The Noblemen, and Citizens of principal quality, either most cruelly massacred in the Sack of those Towns, or banished for ever their Native Country, as men whose living there might possibly endanger their new Conquest. But the Country people, Artificers, and Perso[ns] ſons of inferiour rank, permited to enjoy both their Lives and Livelihoods, together with their ſeveral and reſpective Religions, in the ſame manner as before: paying ſuch ordinary Taxes as were laid upon them And ſo this goodly Iſland came into the hands of the Turks, who have hitherto enjoyed the poſſeſſion of it: For notwiſtanding that the Venetians in the year next following, with the help of the Pope and King of Spain, gave the Turks that great and memorable overthrow, at the famous Battel of Lepanto; yet did they nothing, in purſuit of ſo great a Victory, for the recovery of this Iſland: and indeed they could not, the Confederates returning home, and diſſolving their Fleet, as ſoon as they had ſecured their own Eſtates by the overthrow of the Turkiſh Navy. And though the Venetians, to put the beſt face they could on ſo great a loſs, ſo highly pleaſed themſelves with the following Victory, that they put the ſame in ballance with the loſs of Cyprus; yet an ingenious Turk, to let them ſee the folly of ſo vain a boaſting, compared the loſing of Cyprus to the loſs of an Arm, which could not without a Miracle be recovered; and the loſs at Lepanto, to the ſhaving off of ones beard, which grows the thicker for the cutting, as indeed it proved. For the next year the Turks armed out another Navy, no leſs formidable than the other had been before; braving therewith the whole Chriſtian Forces, either not then disbanded, or reaſſembled.

What the Revenues of it were to the Kings hereof, I cannot certainly determine. The profits of Salt only, and that of the Cuſtom-houſe, yielded yearly to the Seigneury of Venice, when it was in their hands, a million of Crowns. For the Cuſtoms and Profits of the Salt were farmed for 500000 Crowns per Annum, which being turned into the chief Cyprian Commodities, were counted double worth that money, when unladed at Venice. To which if we ſhould add the Lands of the former Kings, and other ways of raiſing Money on the Subject, I cannot ſee, but the Intrado of the Crown muſt needs amount conſtantly to a Million and a half yearly, if it were not more.

The Arms hereof were quarterly, firſt Argent, a Croſs Potent between four Croſſes Or; ſecondly Barre-wiſe of eight pieces, Arg. and Azure, ſupporting a Lion Paſſant Azure, Crowned Or; thirdly, a Lion Gules; and fourthly, Argent, a Lion Gules; as Bara a French Herald hath given the Blazon.

On the Eaſt of Cyprus towards Syria lie four ſmall Iſlands, which Ptolomy calleth by the name of Clides, not far from the Promontory of that name; both Promontory and Iſland now called St. Andrews: and towards the Weſt another little knot of Iſlets, which he calls Carpaſiæ; but nothing memorable in either. So I paſs them over.

There are in Cyprus,

Archbiſhops 2. Biſhops 6.

And ſo much for CYPRUS.

OF SYRIA.

SYRIA is bounded on the Eaſt with the River Euphrates, by which parted from Meſopotamia; on the Weſt, with the Mediterranean Sea; on the North, with Cilicia and Armenia Minor, from the laſt parted by Mount Taurus; and on the South, with Paleſtine, and ſome parts of Arabia. The length hereof, from Mount Taurus to the edge of Arabia, is ſaid to be five hundred twenty and five miles; the breadth, from the Mediterranean to the River Euphrates, computed at four hundred and ſeventy, drawing ſomewhat near unto a ſquare.

In the Scripture it is called Aram, and the People Aramites, becauſe firſt peopled and poſſeſſed by Aram the Son of Sem; though Hamath, Arphad, and Sidon, the Sons of Canaan, did alſo put in for a ſhare; and yet not called thus by the Scriptures only, but by ſome of the Heathen Writers alſo: For Strabo doth not only acknowledge, that the Syrians in his time were called Ἀραμαῖοι, but citeth Poſſidonius, a more ancient Writer, for proof that the Σύριοι, which Homer ſpeaketh of, muſt be thoſe Syrians: further averring, that the Syrians called themſelves by the name of Aramæi, or plainly Aramites. But by the Greeks they are called Syrians, Surians, from the City Tyre, called anciently by the name of Sur, or Tſur (of which more hereafter:) either becauſe the Tyrians or Tſurians, had in thoſe times the command of the Sea-coaſts of this Country; or elſe that Tyre or Tſer being the chief Mart-Town of all thoſe parts, was the place where they traded with theſe Aramites. Conforming to which ancient Appellations, the City of Tyre is again called Sur, and this Country Soria. Others conceive, that being when the Greeks firſt knew it, a part of the Aſſyrian Empire, the Seat of which was then at Ninive, it was called Syria for Aſſyria; as afterwards Aſſyria had the name of Syria (of which more anon) when the Seat of that great Empire was removed to Antioch. And this may very well be ſo, conſidering that by the like decurtation we have turned Hiſpania into Spain, as the Greeks before us did into Spania, by which name it occurs, Rom. 15. 28.

But here we are to underſtand, that though the Syria of the Romans, as it was a member of that Empire, was limited within the bounds before laid down, yet anciently as well the Aram of the Hebrews, as the Syria of the Greeks and Romans, was of greater Latitude: of which, becauſe it may be uſeful to the underſtanding of holy Scriptures, and of ſome Claſſick Authors alſo, I ſhall enlarge a little further. For Aram, taken in the largeſt acceptation of it, extendeth from the coaſt of Cilicia, North,

North, to Idumæa towards the South; from the River Tygris in the East, to the Mediterranean Sea upon the West; containing besides the Syria of the Greeks and Romans (in which Palestine also was included) Arabia the Deserti, and Petræa, Chaldæa, Babylonia, and all those Provinces to which the name Aram is either prefixed or subjoyned in the Book of God, as Aram-Naharaim, Aram-Sobah, Padan-Aram, Aram-Maachah, Sede-Aram, Aram-Beth-Rehob, all mentioned in the Holy Scriptures. Some do extend it further yet, and do not only bring Armenia within the Latitude of this name, which they derive from Aram-minni, whose neighbourhood to Syria may give some colour to the errour; but even those People of Cappadocia bordering on the Euxine Sea, the Inhabitants of which were anciently called Leuco-Syri, or White Syrians. But this not having any good warrant or authority wherewithal to back it, shall not come under the compass of this consideration. But for the rest, I find it generally agreed upon amongst the Learned, that Aram-Naharaiim, is the same with the whole Country of Mesopotamia, so named both by the Jews and Græcians, because it is environed with the two famous Rivers of Tygris and Euphrates, which Priscian by a meer Latin name, would have to be called Medamna (but Inter-Amna by his leave would express it better.) And as for Padan-Aram wherein Laban dwelt, which is called Sede-Aram by the Prophet Hosea, ch. 12. ver. 13. that is a part only of the other; the whole Country of Aram-Naharaiim, or Mesopotamia, being divided into two parts, whereof the more fruitful lying Northward, is called Padan-Aram, or Sede-Aram, to whose Inhabitants Xenophon gives the name of Syrians; the barren and most desart lying towards the South, which by the same Author is called Arabia. For Aram-Maachah, mentioned 1 Chron. 19. 6. it is conceived to be that part of Syria which was after named Comagena, whereof Samosata was the Metropolis, or Mother-City. And as for Aram-Sobah, of which, and of Adadezar the King thereof, there is so frequent mention in the Books of the Kings and Chronicles, it was the Province lying on the North-East of Damascus, and so extending to the Banks of the River Euphrates, and is the same with that which afterwards was called Palmyrena, from the City of Palmyra. South-West of which, amongst the petty Kingdoms on the North of Gessur in the Land of Palestine, lay the Kingdom of Aram-Beth-Rehob, confederate with Ammon in the War which they had with David, 2 Sam. 10. 6. Nor did the Greeks less extend the name of Syria, than the Hebrews did the name of Aram, if they stretched it not further. Certain I am, that Strabo comprehendeth the Assyrians in the name of Syria, where he affirmeth, that the Medes over-ruled all Asia καλανσασα τλω τῶν Συρων ἀρχλω. the Empire of the Syrians (he meaneth the Assyrians) being overthrown. And in Herodotus it is said, that those whom the Barbarians call Assyrians, ὑπὸ μὲν Ἑλλήνων ἐκαλέοντο Σύριοι, were called Syrians by the Greeks. And to that purpose Justine also, Imperium Assyrii, qui postea Syri dicti sunt, Annos 1300 tenuere. But these all writ after the time that Seleucus and his Race had the possession of the Eastern Empire; who living for the most part in Syria, from whence they might more easily furnish themselves with Souldiers out of Greece (as they did most commonly for all their Military Expeditions) caused all the other parts of their large Dominions to be called, in tract of time, by the name of Syria. But on the other side, as the Syria of the Romans extended not so far to the East and South, as the Aram of the Hebrews did; so it contained some other Regions, that is to say, those of Phœnicia and Palestine, which were not comprehended in the name of Aram, as being planted by a People of another Race, and of different Fortunes, till brought together under the command of the Babylonians. In which regard we will treat severally of the natures of the Soil and People, their Originals, Government, and Successes, till we have brought them into one hand, and then continue their Affairs as one joint Estate. But first we will survey the ancient and present Fortunes of Christianity, and other Religions herein embraced or tolerated, wherein the whole, according to the bounds and limits before laid down, is alike concerned.

And for Religions in this Country, here is choice enough; those namely of the Mahometan, Christian, Pagan, and one compounded out of all, which is that of the Drusians. The Mahometan embraced by the generality of the People throughout the whole, and by all that be in any Office or Authority, is only countenanced and approved of, though all the rest be tolerated. The Pagan entertained only in the mountainous Countries bordering on Armenia, inhabited by a People whom they called Curdi, or the Curdenes, supposed to be descended from the ancient Parthians, as being very expert in Bows and Arrows, their most usual Arms. A Race of People who are said to worship alike both God and the Devil; the one, that they may receive benefits from him; the other, that he may not hurt them. Se alios deos colere ut prosint, alios ne noceant, as Lactantius doth affirm of the ancient Græcians. But their principal Devotions are addressed to the Devil only, and that upon good reasons, as themselves conceive. For God, they say, is a good man, and will do no body no harm; but the Devil is a mischievous fellow, and must be pleased with Sacrifices, that he hurt them not. And for the Drusians, they are conceived to be the remainder of those Franks (by which name the Turks call all Western Christians) who driven unto the Mountains (when they lost the Sovereignty and Possession of the Holy Land) and defending themselves by the advantage of the place, could never be wholly rooted out by the Turks, contented at the length to afford them both peace, and liberty of their Religion. But they have so forgot the Principles of that Religion, that they retain nothing of it but Baptism, and not that generally neither; accounting it lawful most unlawfully to marry their own Daughters, Sisters, or Mothers: and yet conform unto the Turks in their Habit only, wearing the white Turbant, as the Turks do; but abhorring Circumcision, and indulging to themselves the liberty of Wine, by Law forbidden to the Turks. A people otherwise very warlike, stout, and resolute; with great both constancy and courage, relisting hitherto the attempts of the Turkish Sultans. The Country they possess environed with the Confines of Joppa, about Cæsarea Palestinæ, betwixt the Rivers of Jordan and Orontes, extending Eastwards as far as the Plains of Damascus; so that here is no part of Syria, except Comagena, unto which their Habitations reach not.

But for the Christian Faith, it was first preached here by some of the dispersed Brethren (which fled from the rage of persecution) in Phœnice, and the City of Antiochia; amongst whom St. Peter, as he passed through all quarters, Acts 9. 31. is by the Fathers said to have been the chief. The Church more fully planted in it by Barnabas first, after by Paul and Barnabas jointly; who spending there a whole year together, inlarged the Borders of the Church, and gained much People, as is said Acts 11. 19. &c. insomuch that here the Disciples were first called Christians, v. 26. Not called so accidentally, as a thing of chance, but on a serious consultation had amongſt themſelvs, and a devout invocation on the name of God, to direct them in it. The word χρηματίσαι uſed in the Original, importeth ſomewhat of Oracular and Divine direction. And certainly it ſtandeth with reaſon that it ſhould be ſo. For if upon the giving of a name to John Baptiſt, there was not only a conſultation had of the Friends and Mother, but the dumb Father called to adviſe about it; and if we uſe not to admit the pooreſt child of the Pariſh into the Congregation of Chriſts Church by the door of Baptiſm, but by the joint invocation of the name of God for his bleſſings on it: with how much more regard of Ceremony and Solemnity, muſt we conceive that the whole body of Chriſts people were baptiz'd into the name of Chriſtians? And there is ſome proof of it too, beſides probability and conjectures. For Suidas, and before him Johannes Antiochenus, an old Coſmographer, do expreſly ſay, that in the days of Claudius Cæſar, ten years after the Aſcenſion of our Lord and Saviour, Euodius received Epiſcopal conſecration, and was made Patriarch of Antioch the Great in Syria, ſucceeding immediately to St. Peter: then addeth, that at that time the Diſciples were firſt called Chriſtians. Τῷ αὐτῷ Ἐπισκόπῳ Εὐοδίῳ προσομιλήσαντῳ αὐτοῖς, ἐπιθήσαντῳ αὐτοῖς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦτο, &c. i.e. Euodius their Biſhop calling them to a Solemn Aſſembly, and impoſing this new name upon them, whereas before they were called Nazarites and Galilæans. A people ſo hated by the Heathen, that they ceaſed not to ſlander them from the firſt beginning. For as concerning this Sect, we know that it is every where ſpoken againſt, ſaid the Jews of Rome to the Apoſtle, Act. 28. 22. Tacitus, a Roman, but a Gentile, goes yet further with them, calling them Homines per flagitia inviſos, & noviſſima meritos exempla: the calumny in his time being ſtrong and general, that at their private meetings they devoured Infants, and had carnal company with their Mothers and Siſters. Which defamations notwithſtanding, they grew in few years to ſo great numbers, that they were a terrour to their Enemies; though grievouſly afflicted, tortured, and put to ſeveral kinds of death, under the ten Famous Perſecutions, raiſed againſt them, by Nero, Anno 67. 2 Domitian, Anno 96. 3 Trajanus, Anno 110. 4 Marcus Antoninus, Anno 167. 5 Severus, Anno 195. 6 Maximinus, Anno 237. 7 Decius, Anno 250. 8 Valerianus, Anno 259. 9 Aurelianus, Anno 278. 10 By Dioclesianus, Anno 293. All, but this laſt eſpecially, ſo extreamly raging, that (as St. Hierom writeth in one of his Epiſtles) there were martyred 5000 for each day in the year, except the firſt of January, on which they uſed not to ſhed blood. But Sanguis Martyrum, ſemen Eccleſiæ. This little grain of Muſtard-ſeed, ſowed by God's own hand, and watered by the blood of ſo many holy men, grew ſo great a tree, that the branches of it ſpread themſelves over all the world; and got ſuch footing, even in the Roman Army it ſelf, (Men commonly not of the ſtricteſt kind of Religion) that when Julian the Apoſtate had vomited out his ſoul, with Vicisti tandem Galilæe, they elected Jovinian, though a Chriſtian, for his Succeſſor, with this acclamation, Chriſtiani omnes ſumus, We are alſo Chriſtians. But ſee how the baptizing of God's people by the name of Chriſtians, in the City of Antioch, hath drawn me out of my way. I return again, both to the place, and to the Author. In whoſe evidence, beſides what doth concern the impoſition of the name of Chriſtian upon the body of the faithful, we have a teſtimony for St. Peters being Biſhop of Antioch, the firſt Biſhop thereof (of the Church of the Jews therein at leaſt) as is ſaid poſitively by Euſebius in his Chronology, St. Hierom in his Catalogue of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, St. Chryſoſtom in his Homilie de tranſlatione Ignatii, Theodoret Dialog. 1. St. Gregory Epiſt. lib. 6. cap. 37. and before any of them by Origen, in his ſixth Homily on St. Luke. With reference whereunto, and in reſpect that Antioch was accompted always the principal City of the Eaſt-parts of the Roman Empire (the Prefect of the Eaſt for the moſt part reſiding in it) the Biſhop hereof in the firſt Ages of Chriſtianity, had juriſdiction over all the Churches in the Eaſt, as far as the bounds of that Empire did extend that way. To which by Conſtantine the Great the Provinces of Cilicia and Iſauria, with thoſe of Meſopotamia and Oſroene were after added, containing 15 Roman Provinces, or the whole Dioceſe of the Orient. And though by the ſubſtracting of the Churches of Paleſtine, and the decay of Chriſtianity in theſe parts by the conqueſts of the Turks and Saracens, the juriſdiction of this Patriarch hath been very much leſſened; yet William of Tyre, who flouriſhed in the year 1130. reciteth the names of 13 Archiepiſcopal, 21 Metropolitical, and 127 Epiſcopal Sees, yielding obedience in his time to the See of Antioch. Since which that number is much diminiſhed, Mahometiſm more and more increaſing, and Chriſtianity divided into Sects and Factions: inſomuch as of three ſorts of Chriſtians living in theſe Countries, viz. The Maronites, Jacobites, and the Melchites, only the Melchites are ſubordinate to the Church of Antioch, the others having Patriarchs of their own Religion.

And firſt for the Melchites, who are indeed the true and proper members of the Church of Antioch, and the greateſt body of Chriſtians in all the Eaſt; they are ſo named in way of ſcorn, by the Jacobite and Maronite Schiſmaticks, ſeparating without juſt cauſe from their Communion. The name derived from Melchi, ſignifying in the Syriack Language a King, or Emperour; becauſe adhering to their Primate, they followed the Canons and Deciſions of preceding Councils, ratified by authority of the Emperour Leo, by whom ſubſcription was required to the Acts thereof: and were in that reſpect (as we uſe to ſay) of the Kings Religion. Conform in points of Doctrine to the Church of Greece, but that they celebrate divine Service as ſolemnly on the Saturday, as upon the Sunday: ſubject to the true and Original Patriarch, who ſince the deſtruction of Antioch doth reſide in Damaſcus; and on no terms acknowledging the authority of the Popes of Rome.

Next for the Maronites, they derive that name either from Marona, one of the principal Villages where they firſt inhabited; or from the Monaſtery of St. Maron, mentioned in the firſt Act of the Council of Conſtantinople holden under Menuas, the Monks of which called Maronites, were the head of their Sect. Some points they hold, in which they differ from all Orthodox Chriſtians; other in which they differ only from the Church of Rome. Of the firſt ſort, 1 That the Holy Ghoſt procedeth from the Father only, without relation to the Son. 2 That the Souls of men were created all together at the firſt beginning. 3 That male Children are not to be baptized together, but at ſeveral times by one and one, 4 That *Heretick*s returning to the Church are to be re-baptized. 5 That the Child is made unclean by the touch of his Mother till her Purification; and therefore not baptizing Children till that time be paſt, which after the birth of a Male-child muſt be forty days, of a Female eighty. 6 That the Euchariſt is to be given to Children preſently after Baptiſm. 7 That the fourth Marriage is utterly unlawful. 8 That the Father may diſſolve the Marriage of his Son or Daughter. 9 That young men are not to be ordained Prieſts or Deacons, except they be married. 10 That nothing ſtrangled, or of blood may be eaten by Chriſtians. 11 That Women in their Monthly courſes are not to be admitted to the Euchariſt, or to come into the Church. 12 And finally (which was indeed their firſt discrimination from the Orthodox Christians) that there was but one will and action in Christ; the Fautors of which opinion had the name of Monothelites. Of the last kind, 1 That the Sacrament of the Lords Supper was to be administred in both kinds. 2 And in Leavened bread. 3 That bread to be broken to the Communicants (and not each man to have his Wafer to himself) according to the first institution. 4 Not reserving that Sacrament. 5 Nor carrying any part of the consecrated Elements to sick persons in danger of death. 6 That Marriage is nothing inferiour to the single life. 7 That no man entreth the Kingdom of Heaven till the General Judgment. 8 That the Saturday, or old Sabbath is not to be fasted. 9 Nor the Sacrament upon days of fasting to be administred till the Evening. They withdrew themselves from the See of Antioch, and set up a Patriarch of their own, many ages since (but the certain time thereof I find not) conferring on him for the greater credit of their Schism, the honourable title of the Patriarch of Antioch. His name perpetually to be Peter, as the undoubted Successor of that Apostle in the See thereof. Dispersed about the spurs and branches of Mount Libanus, where they have many Townships & scattered Villages, of which four are reported to retain in their common speech the true ancient Syriack: that is to say, 1 Eden, a small Village, but a Bishops See, by the Turks called Æchera. 2 Harchesh. 3 Sherry. 4 Bolosa, or Blousa, little superiour to the rest in bigness or beauty, but made the seat of their Patriarch, when he comes amongst them. At such time as the Western Christians were possessed of these parts, they submitted to the Church of Rome; but upon their expulsion by the Turks and Saracens, they returned again to the obedience of their own Patriarch, on whom they have ever since depended. His residence for the most part at Tripolis, a chief Town of Syria; but when he came to visit his Churches, and take an accompt of his suffragan Bishops (who are nine in number) then at Blousa, as is said before. Won to the Papacy again by John Baptist a Jesuite, in the time of Pope Gregory the thirteenth, who sent them a Catechism from Rome Printed in the Arabian Language (which is generally spoken by them) for their instruction in the Rudiments of that Religion: yet so that their Patriarch still retains his former power, and the Priests still officiate by the old Liturgies of those Churches, in the Syriack tongue. So that this reconciliation, upon the matter, is but a matter of complement on the one side, and ostentation on the other; without any increase of Power or Patrimony to the Pope at all. And for the Jacobites, though dispersed in many places of this Country; yet since they are more intirely setled in Mesopotamia, where their Patriarch also hath his abode or residence, we shall there speak of them.

The Language vulgarly here spoken is the Arabick Tongue, continued here ever since the subjugation of these Countries by the Saracens. But anciently they spake the Syrian and Phœnician Languages. Of which, the first (for of the other we shall speak when we come to Phœnicia) was the very same with the Chaldæan, (as the learned Brerewood hath observed) either originally so, or else received by them when first conquered by the Babylonians. In which respect the Jews, when they returned home from their long Captivity, gave to the Language which they brought with them, the name of Syriack, being a compound of the Hebrew and Chaldean tongues; Chaldæan for a great part of it, as to the substance of the words: but Hebrew as to the notation of Ponts, Conjugations, Affixes, and other properties of their former and original speech. And of this more hereafter also, when we come to Palestine. But whatsoever their language was in former time, it is now so overtopped by the Arabick, that it is spoken in four Villages of the Maronites only in all these Countries; the Arabick being generally used in all the rest, as was said before.

Principal Rivers of these parts, are, 1 Chorsius, called Chison by the Hebrews, which hath its fountain in Palestine, but his fall in Phœnicia, not far from Mount Carmel. 2 Orontes, now called Saldino, and by some Writers Jordan the less, ariseth out of the hills called Pieria, not far from Mount Libanus; and after a while running under the ground, breaketh forth again about Apamia and passing by the great City of Antioch, falleth into the Sea not far from it, It was first called Typhon, and took this name from one Orontes, who built first the Bridg over it, as we find in Strabo. 3 Eleutherus, which riseth out of some part of Libanus, and glided with a speedy course thorow a strangely-intricate Chanel, into the Mediterranean Sea: guilty of the death of the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa, who falling from his horse as he pursued the Infidels, and oppressed with the weight of his Armour, was here drowned, and lyeth buried at Tyre. It is now called Casmer. 4 Singas, by whom said to be called Marsias also, which arising in the mountainous parts of Comagena, and passing by the City of Aleppo, falleth into Euphrates. 5 Euphrates, the most famous River of the East; of which more hereafter.

Chief Mountains of it, 1 Carmel, which being properly of Phœnicia, we shall there speak of it. 2 Pieria, out of which the River Orontes hath its first Original. 3 Casius, not far from Antioch, said to be four miles high perpendicularly. 4 Libanus, famous for its multitude of Cedars growing thereupon; affording materials unto Solomon for the holy Temple. Besides which it affordeth such store of Frankincense, that some derived the name from Λίβανος, signifying Frankincense in the Greek: and so replenished with Honey falling from the Heavens, and hanging on the Boughs of the Trees that the Husbandmen used to sing (as Galen telleth us) that God rained honey; and yearly filled their Pots and Vessels with the sweets thereof. This the most famous and greatest Hill of all these parts, extending in length 150 miles, that is to say, from Sidon, a City of Phœnicia, to Smyrna, one of the Cities of Cœlo-Syria: and taking seven hundred miles in compass. Inhabited wholly in a manner by the Maronite Christians, who to keep that dwelling to themselves without the intermixture of Mahometans, do yearly pay to the Great Turk seventeen Sultanies a man, for every one above twelve years of Age; each Sultany being reckoned at seven shillings & six pence of our mony. And yet those Maronites, though intire, without intermixture, are held to be the smallest Sect, for numbers, in all the East; not estimated to exceed twelve thousand households, by reason of the indisposition of this Mountain, in most places unfit for habitation. For besides the craggines and steepness of it, which makes many parts hereof to be inaccessible; the higher Ridges of it are in a manner perpetually covered with snow, not melted in so hot a Climate at the neerest approaches of the Sun. And thence no doubt it took this name; the word Leban, in the Hebrew and Phœnician Language, signifying White, or Whiteness; even as from the like whiteness of snow, the highest part of the Pyrenean hills had the name of Canus; and that perpetual Ridg of Mountains, which parts Italy from France and Germany, had the name of Alpes. 5 Anti-Libanus, opposite to the former; and from that so called, a rich, but little Valley only being interposed; out of which Valley the Orontes hath its Spring or Fountain, the hill Pieria there beginning to advance it self. Some make but one Mountain of them both, divided into two great Ledges or Chains of Hills. Of which the main body lying towards the North, hath the name of Libanus; that on the South, being but a branch or excursion of it, called Anti-Libanus. And to this the Scripture gives some hint, in which both pass for one, by the name of Lebanon.

The whole Country was anciently divided into these six parts, viz. 1 Phœnicia. 2 Palestine. 3 Syria specially so called. 4 Comagena. 5 Palmyrene. And 6 Cælo-Syria, or Syria Cava. But Palestine, coming under a more distinct consideration, we shall now speak only of the rest.

1 PHOENICIA.

PHOENICIA is bounded on the East and South, with Palestine; on the North, with Syria, properly and specially so called; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea. So called by the Græcians, from the abundance of Palm-trees therein growing, the word φοινιξ in that language signifying a Palm. And for a further proof hereof, (for I know there are other Etymons and Originations pretended for it) the Palm was anciently the special Cognisance or Enlign of this Country; as the Olive-branch and Cony of Spain, the Elephant of Africk, the Camel of Arabia, and the Crocodile of Ægypt, being peculiar to those Countries. And in an old Coyn of the Emperor Vespasian's, stamped for a memorial of his conquest of Judæa, the Impress is a Woman sitting in a sad and melancholick posture, at the back of Palm-trees, with these two words, Judæa Capta inscribed thereon; in which, no question may be made, but that the desolate Woman signifieth the Land of Judæa, and the Palm Phœnicia; Phœnicia being seated immediately on the North, at the back of Jewry.

But it was thus first called by the Græcians only, the Latins and other People after them taking up that name. For by themselves, and the people of Israel their next Neighbours, they are called Canaanites, or the Posterity of Canaan, five of whose sons, viz. Zidon, Harki, Arvadi, Senari, and Chamathi, were planted here: the other six inhabiting more towards the South and East, in the Land of Palestine. For further evidence hereof we may add these reasons; first, that the same Woman which in St. Matthews Gospel, *Chap.*15.22. is named a Canaanite, is by St. Mark, *Chap.*7.26. called a Syro-Phœnician. Secondly, where mention is made in the Book of Joshuah, of the Kings of Canaan; the Septuagint (who very well understood the History and Language of their Country) call them βασιλεις της φοινικης, or the Kings of Phœnicia. Thirdly, the Pœni, or Carthaginians, being beyond all dispute a Tyrian or Phœnician Colony, when they were asked any thing of their Original, would answer that they were Chanaei; meaning (as St. Augustine that Countryman doth expound their words) that they were Originally Canaanites, of the stock of Canaan. And lastly, from the language of it, which anciently was the old Hebrew, Canaanitish, or the Language of Canaan; spoken both here and in Palestine also, before that Country was possessed by the House of Jacob; as appears plainly by those names, by which the places and Cities of Canaan were called, when and before the Israelites came first to dwell amongst them, which are meerly Hebrew. And so much, as unto the Language is acknowledged by Bochartus also, who in the entrance of his Book inscribed Chanaan, declares what profit may ensue from that undertaking to the Hebrew Tongue; Cujus Phœnicia lingua dialectus fuit, of which the Phœnician language was a dialect only.

The Country of it self not great, extended in a good length, from the further side of Mount Carmel, where it joyns with Palestine, to the River Volanus on the North, by which parted from Syria: but withal so narrow, that it is little more than a bare Sea-coast, and therefore very rightly called Terrarum angustissima by a modern Writer. Rich rather by the benefit and increase of trade (to which no Nation under Heaven hath been more addicted) than by the natural commodities which the land afforded: yet for the quantity thereof, no place could be more plentifully furnished with Oyl, Wheat, and the best sort of Balm, and most excellent Honey; the lower part hereof being designed for the seat of Asher, of whom Moses propheſied, *Deut.*33.24. that he should dip his foot in Oyl. So that the Country generally, was well-conditioned, lovely to look upon, populous, and adorned with more beautiful Cities, than such a span of earth could be thought to hold. Of which thus writeth Ammianus, Acclivis monti Libano Phœnicia Regio, plena gratiarum & venustatis urbibus decorata magnis & pulchris, &c. i.e. Falling from Mount Libanus, lyeth the Country of Phœnicia, full of all graces and elegancies, adorned with great and beautiful Cities, of which the most renowned for the fertility of their soil, and the fame of their atchievements, are Tyre, Sidon, Berytus, &c.

The People anciently, by reason of their Maritime situation, were great Adventurers at Sea, trading in almost all the Ports of the then known World, and sending more Colonies abroad upon forein Plantations than any Nations in the Earth. An active and ingenuous people, said to have been the first Navigators, the first builders of Ships, the first inventers of Letters, (of which hereafter more on some other occasion) and the first Authors of Arithmetick, the first that brought Astronomy to an Art or Method, and the first makers of Glass. Defamed in holy Scripture for their gross Idolatries, by which they laid a stumbling-block at the feet of the Israelites; Astaroth (or Astarte) the goddess of the Sidonians (but whether Juno, Venus, or some other, I dispute not here) being so highly prized amongst them, that Solomon himself, when he fell from God, made this one of his Idols. Once yearly, as Eusebius telleth us, they sacrificed some of their Sons to Saturn, whom in their Language they called Moloch; And in the inmost retreats of Libanus had a Temple to Venus, defiled with the practice of most filthy lusts, intemperately using the natural Sex, and most unnaturally abusing their own. Nor could the purity and piety of the Christian faith prevail so far, as to extinguish these ungodly rites, till Constantine finally destroyed both the Temples and Idols, and left not any thing remaining of them, but the shame and infamy. St. Austin addeth, that they did prostitute their Daughters unto Venus, before they married them: and it is most likely to be true. For the Phœnicians and Cyprians being so near neighbours, and subject for a time to the same Princes also, could not but impart their impure Rites and Ceremonies unto one another.

Rivers of note there can be none in so narrow a Region but what are common unto others, and shall there be spoken of. Most proper unto this is the River of Adonis, (now called Canis,) so named most probably from Adonis the Darling of Venus, whose Rites are here performed with as much solemnity, as they be in Cyprus. His Obsequies celebrated yearly in the month of June, with great houlings and lamentations, Lucian fabling that the River usually streameth blood upon that Solemnity; (as if Adonis were newly wounded in the Mountains of Libanus,) to give the better colour to their Superstitions. But the truth is, that this redness of the water ariseth only from the Winds; which at that time of the year blowing very vehemently, do thereby carry down the stream a great quantity of Minium or red Earth, from the sides of those hills, wherewith the waters are discoloured.

discoloured. Such use can Satan make of a natural Accident, to blind the eyes and captivate the understandings of besotted People.

Chief Mountains of this Country are, 1 Libanus, spoken of before, which hath here its first advance or rising. 2 Carmel, which Ptolomy placeth in this Country, of which it is the utmost part upon the South, where it joyneth with Palestine. Washed on the North side with the Brook Chison, on the West with the Mediterranean Sea; steep of ascent, and of indifferent altitude; abounding with several sorts of Fruits, Olives, and Vines in good plenty, and stored with Herbs both medicinable and sweet of smell. The Retreat sometimes of Elias, when he fled from Jezabel; whose Habitation here, after his decease, was converted to a Jewish Synagogue. To this place (being then in the possession of the Kings of Israel) did that Prophet assemble the Priests of Baal; and having by a miraculous Experiment confuted their Idolatrous follies, caused them to be cut in pieces on the Banks of the River Chison near adjoyning to it. Upon this visible declaring of the Power and Presence of the Almighty, the Gentiles grew perswaded that Oracles were there given by God; by Suetonius called the God Carmelus. Where speaking of Vespasian, who had then newly took upon him the Imperial Dignity, he addeth, Apud Judeam Carmeli Dei Oracula consulentem ita confirmavere sortes, &c. That consulting in Judæa with the Oracle of the God Carmelus, he was assured that whatsoever he undertook should succeed well with him. In after-times the Order of the Friars Carmelites, as Successors unto the Children of the Prophets left here by Elijah, had their names from hence: the Ruins of whose Monastery are still to be seen, with a Temple dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; and under that a Cave or Chappel, said to have been the lurking-place of that Holy Prophet, in the time of his troubles.

Places of most importance in it, 1 Ptolomais, now nothing but a ruin of what it hath been, but formerly of great strength and consequence. Named Ace at the first, a Refuge for the Persian Kings in their Wars against Ægypt: Enlarged, or rather new built by Ptolomy, the first of that Race, by whom called Ptolomais, which name still continued, though Claudius Cæsar planting there a Roman Colony, would fain have had it called Colonia Claudia. After the Conquest of it by the Saracens, in the time of Omer the great Caliph, it returned towards its first name, and was called Acon, or Acre: both names still remaining in vulgar speech, as that of Ptolomais amongst Latin Writers. Situate in the flourish of it on a flat or level, in form of a triangular Shield; on two sides neighboured by the Sea, which comes up close to it; on the third looking towards the Champaign: environed with a double Wall, to each Wall a Ditch, fortified on the outside with Towers and Bulwarks; within the Walls so strongly housed, as if the whole Town had been a Conjunction of Fortresses, and not ordained for private dwellings. In the midst of the City was one Tower of great strength and beauty, which had sometimes been the Temple of Belzebub, and was therefore called the Castle of Flies; on the top whereof was maintain'd a perpetual Light, like the Pharos of Ægypt, to give comfort and direction in the night to such Mariners as made towards this Port, Took from the Christians by the Saracens in the time of Omer, and from them wrested by the Turks with the rest of Syria. It became Christian again Anno 1004. in the Reign of Baldwin the first, Brother of the famous Godfrey of Bouillon, and second King of Hierusalem, by the help of the Genoese; who for their pains had the third part of the City assigned unto them. Recovered by Saladine to the Turks, and from him taken again by the Western Christians, under the conduct of Philip of France, and Richard the first of England, Anno 1191. it continued in the possession of the Kings of Hierusalem, notably defended by the Hospitalers (now Knights of Malta) till the year 1291. When besieged by an Army of an hundred and fifty thousand Turks, it was forced to yield, though lost by inches; and the Turks fearing lest the Christians would again attempt it, razed it to the ground, demolishing the large Walls and Arches of it, which lie like massy Rocks on their old Foundations. Memorable in those times for the brave service here done by the Christians of the Western parts, of which none more renowned than those of our Richard the first, and Edward the first. This latter here treacherously wounded by an Infidel, with a poysoned Knife, the venom whereof could by no means be asswaged, till his most virtuous Wife (herein proposing a most rare Example of conjugal affection) sucked it out with her mouth. And for the former, he became so terrible and redoubted among the Turks, that when their Children began to cry, they would say, Peace, King Richard is coming: and when their Horses started, they would spur them, saying, What you Jades, do you think that King Richard is here? By the Mammalucks, when Lords of Syria, it was patched together, and made fit for habitation rather than defence: not peopled by above 300 Inhabitants, nor would it have so many, but for the Haven adjoyning; which though a small Bay, and of very ill Anchorage, is much frequented by the Merchants of our Western World, trading here for their Cotton Wools, with which the neighbouring Country is abundantly furnished. I have staid the longer in this place, by reason of the great fame and importance of it, as being the last Hold which the Christians had of all their Conquests; with the loss whereof, they laid aside all thoughts of those Holy Wars. 2. Tyre, seated in a rocky Island, about seventy paces from the main Land; well built, and circular of form, as well by Art as Nature impregnably fortified. A Colony of the Sidonians, and therefore by the Prophet Isa. ch. 23. v. 12. called the Daughter of Sidon; but by them built upon an high Hill, the Ruins whereof, by the name of Palætyrus, or old Tyre, are remaining still. Removed unto the Islands by Agenor King of the Phœnicians, and by him named Sor, or Tzor, from the rocky situation of it (as that word importeth.) Mollified by the Greeks to Tyrus, and from them taken by the Latins, though known to them also by the name of Sarra (the Tyrian Purple being by Virgil, and some others of the ancient Poets, called Sarrarum Ostrum:) and now at last returned to its first original name, vulgarly at this day called Sur. A City in elder times of great Trade and Wealth; the Prophet Isa. ch. 27. v. 8. calling the Merchants hereof Princes, and her Chapmen the Nobles of the World. Excelling all others of those times both for Learning, and Manufactures, specially for the dying of Purple, first here invented; and that as Julius Pollux said, by a very accident; the Dog of Hercules or if not his, some Dog or other) whose lips by eating of the Fish called Conchylis, or Purpura, had been made of that colour. Grown to great pride, by reason of the Wealth and Pleasures, her destruction was foresignified by the holy Prophets, accomplished in God's own time by Nebuchadnezzar, who with great industry and toil joyned it to the Continent. But his Works being demolished by the fury of the Sea, and the labour of the Tyrians, it was after seventy years again re-edified; and having flourished after that for two hundred years, by Alexander the Great was again demolished, to whose indefatigable perseverance nothing was impossible. For having filled the Chanel with the

Stones

Stones and Rubbish of old Tyre, and rammed them in with huge Beams brought from Libanus, he made a passage for his Army; and having once approached the Walls, so over-topped them with Towers and Frames of Timber, that at last he made himself Master of it, putting to the Sword all such as resisted, and causing two thousand of them to be hanged in cold blood, all along the shore, for a terror to others. This Rendition of the Town was divined by the Sooth-sayers, who followed the Camp of Alexander, upon a dream which he had not long before; For dreaming that he had disported himself with Satyrs, the Diviners only making of one word two, found that Σὰ Τύρος was no more than Σὰ Τύρος, that is, Tua Tyrus; and it happened accordingly. Recovering once again both her Riches and Beauties, she became a Confederate of the Romans in the growth of their Fortunes; endowed by them with the Priviledges of their City, for her great fidelity. Made in the best times of Christianity the Metropolitan See for the Province of Phœnicia, the Bishop hereof having under him fourteen Suffragan Bishops. Subjected to the Saracens in the year six hundred thirty and six, and having groaned under that yoak for the space of four hundred eighty and eight years, was at the last regained by Guarimund Patriarch of Hierusalem, in the Reign of the second Baldwin, the Venetians contributing their assistance to it, Anno 1124. In vain attempted afterwards by victorious Saladine; but finally brought under the Turkish thraldom, Anno 1289, as it still continueth. Now nothing but an heap of Ruins; but the very Ruins of it of so fair a prospect, as striketh both pity and amazement into the beholders, shewing them an exemplary pattern of our humane frailty. Subject at the present to the Emir or Prince of Sidon, and beautified with a goodly and capacious Haven, one of the best of the Levant, but of no great trading. 3 Sarepta, by the Hebrews called Sarphath, situate on the Sea-coast betwixt Tyre and Sidon. Memorable in Holy Writ for the Miracle here performed by the Prophet Elijah, in raising the poor Widows Son; in Heathen Writers for the purest Wines, little inferiour unto those of Falernum in Italy, or Chios in Greece: Of which thus the Poet;

Vina mihi non sunt Gazetica, Chia, Falerna, Quæque Sareptano palmite missa bibas.

In English thus,

I have no Chian or Falernian Wines,
Nor those of Gazus or Sareptas Vines.

4 Sidon, the ancientest City of all Phœnicia, and the most Northern of all those which were assigned for the Portion of the Sons of Asser; beyond which the Country of Phœnicia having been hitherto nothing but a bare Sea-coast, beginneth to open towards the East in a fine rich Valley, having Libanus upon the North, and the Anti-Libanus on the South; once closed up from the rest of Syria with a very strong Wall, long since demolished. It was so called from Zidon, one of the Sons of Canaan, who first planted here; not (as some say) from Sida the Daughter of Belus, once a King hereof; this City being mentioned in the Book of Joshua, when no such Belus was in being. Situate in a fertile and delightful Soil, defended with the Sea on one side, and on the other by the Mountains lying betwixt it and Libanus, from whence descended those many Springs with which they watered and enriched their most pleasant Orchards. The Inhabitants hereof are said to be the first makers of Chrystal Glass, the Materials of the Work brought hither from the Sands of a River running not far from Ptolemais, and only made fusible in this City. And from hence Solomon and Zorobabel had their principal Work-men, both for Stone and Timber, in their several Buildings of the Temple. The People hereof so flourishing in Arts and Trades, that the Prophet Zachariah, chap.9. v.2. calleth them the wise Sidonians. A City which at several times was both the Mother and Daughter of Tyre; the Mother of it in the times of Heathenism, Tyre being a Colony of this People; and the Daughter of it when instructed in the Christian Faith, acknowledging the Church of Tyre for its Mother-Church. The City in those times very strong both by Art and Nature, having on the North-side a Fort or Citadel mounted on an inaccessible Rock, and environed on all sides by the Sea; which when it was brought under the command of the Western Christians, was held by the Order of the Dutch Knights; and another on the South-side of the Port, which the Templars guarded. Won by the Turks, with the rest of this Country, from the Christians, and ruined by those often interchanges of Fortune, it only sheweth now some marks of the ancient greatness; the present Sidon standing somewhat West of the old, and having little worth a particular Description, in respect of what it was in her ancient Glories. The Haven at this time decayed, or serving at the best for Gallies; with a poor Blockhouse, rather for shew than service: The Walls of no greater strength, and as little beauty, and the Buildings ordinary; but that the Mosque, the Bannia of Bathes, and the Cane for Merchants, are somewhat fairer than the rest: yet gives a Title at this time to the Emir of Sidon, one of the greatest Princes of all this Country, of whom more hereafter. 5 Berytus, originally called Geris, from Gergeshi the fifth Son of Canaan, took this new name from Berith, a Phœnician Idol herein worshipped; and now called Barutti. Destroyed by Tryphon in the Wars of the Syrians against the Jews, it was re-edified by the Romans, by whom made a Colony, and honoured with the name of Julia Felix, Augustus giving it the Priviledges of the City of Rome. By Herod and Agrippa Kings of the Jews, much adorned and beautified; and of no mean esteem in the time of the Christians, when made an Episcopal See under the Metropolitan of Tyre. Being a place of no great strength, nor aimed at by every new Invader, it hath sped better than the rest of these Cities (though stronger than this) retaining still her being, though not all her beauties; well stored with Merchandise, and well frequented by the Merchant. Nigh to this Town is a fair and fruitful Valley, which they call St. Georges, in which there is a Castle, and in that an Oratory of the same name also: All sacred to St. George the Martyr, who hereabouts is fabled to have killed the Dragon, and thereby delivered a Kings Daughter; but what Kings I know not, nor they neither. 6 Biblis, sometimes the Habitation of Hevi, the fourth Son of Canaan, and then called Hevæa. Afterwards made the Regal Seat of Cinyras, Father and Grandfather of Adonis by his Daughter Myrrha; whereof we have already spoken when we were in Cyprus. Of such esteem in the Primitive Times of Christianity, that it was made a Bishops See; desolate and of no repute since it lost that honour, and became thrall unto the Turks. 7 Orthosia, called also Antaradus, because opposite to Aradus, another old City of this Tract; but in after-Ages called Tortosa, and by that name well known in the Histories of the Holy Wars, undertaken by the Western Christians: To whom it made such stout and notable resistance, that though besieged on all sides with united Forces (the whole Army formerly divided, sitting down before it) yet after three Months hard siege, they were fain to leave the Town behind them, and content themselves with spoiling the adjoyning Country. 8 Tripolis, seated in a rich and delightful Plain, more fruitful than can be imagined; one of which Fruits they called by the name of Amazza Franchi, i.e. Kill Frank, becauſe the Weſtern Chriſtians, whom they call by the name of Franks, died in great numbers by the intemperate eating of them. A Valley which is ſaid to have yielded yearly to the Counts of Tripolis no leſs than 200000 Crowns. As for the Town, it ſtandeth about two miles from the Sea, at the foot of Mount Libanus; ſo called becauſe built by the joint Purſes of three Cities, that is to ſay, Tyrus, Sidon, and Aradus. Of no great note among the Romans, for ought I can find, till made one of the Epiſcopal Sees, belonging to the Archbiſhop of Tyre in the Primitive times. But thriving by degrees, it grew to principal Accompt by the time that the Weſtern Chriſtians warred in the Holy Land: When conquered by them, it was made one of the Tetrarchies, or Capital Cities for the four Quarters of their Empire, which were Jeruſalem for Paleſtine, Edeſſa for Comagena or Meſopotamia, Antioch for Syria, and this for Phœnicia. Committed at the firſt taking of it, to the cuſtody of Raymend Earl of Thoulouſe in France; whoſe Poſterity, whilſt it laſted, had from hence the Title of Earls of Tripolis. A City, which I know not by what good hap, hath ſped better than any of thoſe parts, retaining ſtill as much in ſtrength and beauty as ever it had, if not grown greater by the ruin of all the reſt. Situate two miles from the Sea, as before is ſaid; but not above half a mile from the Haven, which lieth upon the weſt ſide of it: Compaſſed with a Wall, and fortified with ſeven Towers, of which the fourth is commonly called the Tower of Love, becauſe built by an Italian Merchant, who was found in Bed with a Turkiſh Woman, for which he had forfeited his life, if not thus redeemed it. Before the Haven is an ill-neighbouring bank of Sand, which every day groweth greater and nearer to it; by which in time there is a Propheſie which ſaith it ſhall quite be choaked: On both ſides of it many Storehouſes for the Merchant to ſtow his Goods in, and Shops to ſell them: the way from thence unto the City, having on both ſides very pleaſant Gardens, more curiouſly kept, than uſually amongſt the Turks. The Town it ſelf ſtretched out in length from South to North, is ſituate, as before was ſaid, at the foot of Libanus, conveying a Brook into the Streets, and many pleaſant ſprings into the Chief of their Gardens: in which, and in thoſe towards the Haven, and on other ſides of the Town, the Inhabitants keep great ſtore of Silk-worms, ſelling their Silks raw unto the Italians, and buying them again of them in the Stuff or Manufacture. Their Buildings generally low, and the Streets but narrow, except that leading towards Aleppo, which is fair and open. Over the Brook, at the Eaſt-ſide of the City, are built two Bridges; and on the South-ſide a ſtrong Caſtle mounted on an Hill, built by the French when they had the Cuſtody hereof: now Garriſonned for the Grand Seignieur with two hundred Janizaries. At this time it is looked on as the Metropolis or chief City of Phœnicia, honoured with the Reſidence of the Patriarch of the Maronites, for the moſt part dwelling in this Town; and enriched with a great part of the Trade of Scanderone, or Alexandretta, removed hither ſome forty years ago by the Turks appointment; that Haven lying unfenced, and more open to Pirates.

That the Phœnicians were deſcended of the Sons of Canaan, hath been proved already. And being deſcendants of that Stock, they were at the firſt governed like them, by the Chiefs of their Families, whom they honoured (as moſt Nations did) with the Title of Kings. But moſt of the Canaanitiſh Kings being overcome and ſlain by Joſhuah, Agenor a ſtout and prudent man, one of thoſe many Kings which commanded in thoſe parts of the Country, ſeeing how impoſſible it was to reſiſt that Enemy, borrowed ſome Aid from Ægypt, where he had his Breeding, to make good the Sea-coaſts of his Country: in which the Philiſtims, who interpoſed upon thoſe Coaſts betwixt him and Ægypt, concurred alſo with him. By which aſſiſtance, and by the fortifying of Sidon, Tyre, and Ace (or Ptolemais) which were all the Cities of this Country that were then in being, he did not only preſerve his own Eſtate from the preſent danger, but left it ſo aſſured to the Kings ſucceeding, that neither Solomon, nor David, nor any of the Kings of Iſrael, durſt attempt upon them. To Agenor ſucceeded his Son Phœnix, (Cadmus, his elder Brother, going into Greece in ſearch of his Siſter Europa, raviſhed by Jupiter, where he built Thebes, and therein reigned till his death) from whom, as ſome conceive, this Country had the name of Phœnicia. And though I have declared my ſelf for another reaſon of this name, which I like much better; yet I ſhall rather yield to this, or to any other, than to that of Bochartus, who will have it derived from Ben-Anak, or the Sons of Anak, (as if the old Phœnicians were ſuch Giantly men) which muſt firſt be contracted in Beanack, then by the Græcians turned into Pheanae, and at laſt into Phœnix. Such farfetched and extorted Originations never pleaſe my fancy, who had much rather hearken to the old received opinions touching the firſt Originals of Names and Nations, where there is not very pregnant Reaſon to perſwade me otherwiſe; than ſtrain my ſelf ſo far for a new Invention, or hearken unto thoſe that do. But for what cauſe ſoever they were named Phœnicians, certain it is, they were a very active and induſtrious People, trading in the moſt parts of the Mediterranean, and planting Colonies in many. Thebes and Sephyra in Bœotia, Nola in Italy, Gades in Spain; Utica, Leptis, Carthage in Affrick, were of their foundation. Nay, if we may believe Bochartus, there was no Iſland or Sea-coaſt in the Mediterranean, or on the Cantabrian, Gallick, or Britiſh Ocean, wherein they did not keep ſome Factory, or erect ſome Colony. What Kings ſucceeded Phœnix in a conſtant and continued courſe, I can no where find. Moſt like it is, they were not under the command of any one Prince; and that beſides the Kings of Sidon, where Agenor reigned, there were ſome others who called themſelves Kings of Phœnicia alſo, as well as they. Of which ſort were Cyniras, Paphus, and Pigmalion, who had their Regal Seat at Biblis, and Lorded it over a good part of Cyprus, as did alſo Belus, who gave ſome part of that Iſle to Teucer, as is ſaid before. There is alſo found mention of one Phaſis, a Phœnician King, at ſuch time as the Græcians conquered Troy. After him none, till the ſubjugation of this Country by the Babylonians; Tetramneſtus, Tennes, and Strato, mentioned in ſucceeding times, being Tributaries to the Perſian, and no abſolute Princes. Whether it were that the Phœnicians were made ſubject to the Kings of Tyre, or that the Kings thereof did nothing to preſerve their memory, I am not able to determine. Certain it is, that the Kings of Tyre came in ſhort time to be of very great repute, and to poſſeſs themſelves of the Coaſts of Syria and Phœnicia, and a great part of Cyprus; whereby, and by the benefit of their Trade and Shipping, they grew rich and powerful, and of great conſideration in Affairs of the World. The Names and Hiſtory of whom I ſhall here ſubjoyn, in this enſuing Catalogue of

The KINGS of TYRE.

A. M.

1 Abibalus, as Joſephus; Abemalus, as Theophilus

philus Antiochenus calleth him, Co-temporary with Samuel; ſuppoſed to be the ſame which the Son of Syrach mentioneth, Eccl. 46. 18.

2 Saron, the Son of Abibalus, whom David, as Euſebius ſaith, compelled to pay tribute; complained of by that Prophet, Pſal. 83. 7.

2931 3 Hiram, the Son of Saron, confederate with David, to whom he ſent Cedars, with Carpenters and Maſons, towards his buildings in Jeruſalem, after he had beaten thence the Jebuſites; as he did afterwards to Solomon when he built the Temple. Much mentioned in the Books of Kings, and Chronicles. 53.

2955 4 Baleaſtartus, or Bazorus, ſucceeded Hiram. 7.

2983 6 Aſtartus, brother of Abdaſtartus, recovered the Kingdom to his houſe, out of the hands of the Uſurpers. 12.

2995 7 Aſtorinus, or Athorinus, as Theophilus calleth him, the younger brother of Aſtartus. 9.

3004 8 Phelles, the Brother of theſe three Kings, and youngeſt ſon of Baleaſtartus, reigned eight months only.

9 Ithobalus, called Ethbaal, 1 King. 16. 13. Son of Aſtorinus, ſlew his Uncle Phelles, and ſo regained his Fathers Throne; before which he was the High-Prieſt of the Goddeſs Aſtaroth, or Aſtarta, (a dignity next to that of the King.) He was the Father of Jezebel, the Wife of Ahab, ſo often mentioned in the Scripture. 32.

3037 10 Badezar, or Bazar, Son of Ethbaal. 6.

3043 11 Mettinus, by ſome called Matginus, Son of Badezar, and father of Eliſa, whom Virgil celebrateth by the name of Dido.

3052 12 Pygmalion, the Son of Mettinus, who ſlew Sicheus the Husband of his Siſter Eliſa to get his riches; but yet was couſened of his prey: his Siſter Eliſa accompanied with her brother Barca (the founder of the Noble Barcine Family, of which Annibal was) and her Siſter Anna, flying into Africk; where ſhe built the renowned City of Carthage. The names of his Succeſſors we find not, till we come to 13 Elulæus, deſcended from a Son of Pygmalion, who overthrew the Fleet of Salmanaſſer, the Aſſyrian, in the Port of Tyre.

14 Ethobales, or Ethbaal II. who vaunted himſelf to be as wiſe as Daniel, and to know all ſecrets, as ſaith the Prophet Ezekiel, chap. 28. v. 1, 2. And yet not wiſe enough to preſerve his Kingdom from Nabuchadonoſor; who after a ſiege of 13 years took the City of Tyre, and ſubjected it unto his Empire.

15 Baal, the ſon and ſucceſſor of Ethbaal the ſecond, but a Tributary to the Babylonians.

After whoſe death the Tyrians had no more Kings, but were governed by Judges, or by ſuch titular Kings only as were ſent from Babylon. And though Tyre and Sidon did recover breath in the fall of the Babylonian Empire, and the unſetledneſs of the Perſian: yet being of the Perſian faction, and having dependence on that Crown, they were by Alexander held unworthy to continue. Who therefore depoſed Strato the King of Sidon, and overthrew the City of Tyre; in the taking whereof he had ſpent more time, than in forcing all the Cities of Aſia.

After this time Phœnicia, being reckoned as a part of Syria, followed the fortune of the whole, ſubject unto the Syrian Kings of the houſe of Seleucus, till made a Province of the Romans; ſubject to the Conſtantinopolitans, till the fatal year 636. when ſubdued by the Saracens. Succeſſively conquered by the Turks, Chriſtians, and after their expulſion by the Turks again, then by the Mamalucks of Egypt, and finally with the reſt of Syria, by Selimus the firſt united to the Turkiſh Empire. Subject at this time, or of late, to the Emir of the Druſians, (commonly called the Emir of Sidon) of which people we have ſpoken before. A people who in the time of Amurath the third, were governed by five Emirs or Princes; one of which was Man-Ogli, who ſo reſolutely reſiſted Ibrahim Baſſa, Anno 1585. This Man-Ogli then kept his Court or reſidence at Andirene, a ſtrong place ſituate on a hill, and was of that wealth, that he ſent to make his peace unto the above-named Ibrahim, 320 Arcubuſes, 20 packs of Andirene Silks, and 50000 Ducats. At a ſecond time he preſented him with 50000 Ducats more, 480 Arcubuſes, 1000 Goats, 150 Camels, 150 Buffes, 1000 Oxen, and 200 Weathers. By theſe rich gifts we may not a little conjecture of the Revenue of the preſent Emir of Sidon; who ſince the year 1600. hath reduced almoſt all the Countries belonging once to five Princes, under his own Empire; containing the Towns and Territories of Gaza, Barut, Sidon, Tyre, Acre, Saffet, (or Tiberias) his ſeat of reſidence, Nazareth, Cana, Mount Tabor, Elkiffe, &c. This preſent Emir, by name Faccardine, was not long ſince driven out of his Country by the Turk, and forced to flie to Florence: but he again recovered his own, laid ſiege to Damaſcus, and cauſed a notable Rebellion in Aſia; not quenched in a long time after. And finally, having poſſeſſed himſelf of the City and Caſtle of Damaſcus, prepared for the taking of Hieruſalem alſo; threatning to make the Chriſtians once more Maſters of it. This was in the year 1623. How he ſped afterward, and whether his Son, as ſtout and valiant as himſelf, hath ſince his death ſucceeded him in his Eſtates, I am not able to ſay: having of late heard nothing of them.

SYRIA PROPRIA.

SYRIA PROPRIA, or Syria eſpecially ſo called, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Palmyrene; on the Weſt, with the Mediterranean; on the North, with Cilicia; on the South, with Phœnicia, and ſome part of Cœlo-Syria.

This part of Syria I take to be the Land of Hamath, ſo often mentioned in the Scriptures, the Kingdom of Toi or Tou, next neighbour, and ſworn Enemy to Adadezer King of Aram-Sobah: who hearing of the great diſcomfiture which David had given unto that King, ſent his Son Joram, or Adoram, (for the Scripture calls him by both names) with Preſents to him, as well to congratulate his ſucceſs, as to be aſſured for times to come of his love and amity. So called from Hamath one of the Sons of Canaan, who fixed his dwelling in theſe parts, and left many Cities of that name in Syria and Paleſtine (which we ſhall meet with all in the courſe of this work) either built by him or his Poſterity. Now that the Land of Hamath was this part of Syria, I am perſwaded to believe by theſe following reaſons, viz. 1 From the neighbourhood hereof to Arpad or Arphad, conjoyned together, as in Iſa. 10. 9. and Jer. 49. 23. So in other places, viz. Where are the gods of Hamath and Arphad? 2 King. 18. 34. The Kings of Hamath, and the King of Arphad, Iſa. 37. 13.

*Isa.*37.13. And we know well that Arvad was the name of an Island over-against the mouth of the River Eleutherus, one of the Rivers of this Country: so called from Arvad, one of the Sons of Canaan, alluded to by the Greeks and Romans in the name of Aradus; by which this Isle was known unto them. 2*ly*. By the vicinity which it hath to Palmyrene, the Aram-Sobah of the Scriptures, to which it joyneth on the East, with the King whereof (as bordering Princes use to be) the Kings of Hamath for the most part were in open War. Of which see 2 *Sam.*8.9.10. and 1 *Chro.*8.9,10. 3*ly*. From the authority of St.Hierom, who finding mention in the Prophet Amos, Chap. 6. 2. of a City named Hamath the Great, determineth it to be that City which afterwards was called Antiochia (the principal City of this part, and indeed of Syria:) the title of Great being added to it, to difference it from some other Cities of this name of inferiour note. And 4*ly*. from comparing the places in Scripture, with the like passage in Josephus the Historiographer. The Scripture telleth us, that Hierusalem being forced by the Babylonians, Zedekias the King was brought Prisoner to Nebuchadnezzar, being then at Riblath, 2 *King.*2.6. to Riblath in the Land of Hamath, *ver.*21. where the poor Prince first saw his Children slain before his face; and then miserably deprived of sight, that he might not see his great misfortunes, was led away to Babylon. Ask of Josephus where this sad tragedy was acted, and he will tell us that it was at Reblatha (or Riblah) a City of Syria, Antiq. l. 10. *c.*10. And if we ask Saint Hierom what he thinks of Reblatha, he will tell us that it was Urbs ea quam nunc Antiochiam vocant, the City which in following times was called Antioch. On these grounds I conceive this part of Syria to be the land of Hamath intended in the Texts of Scripture above-cited; though there were other Towns and Territories of the same name also.

The Country is naturally fertile; the hedges on the high-way sides affording very good fruits, and the adjoyning fields affording to the Passenger the shade of Figtrees. Were it not naturally so, it would not be much helped by Art or Industry; as being very meanly peopled and those few people without any encouragement either to plant fruits, or manure the Land. Their Sheep are commonly fair and fat, but so overladed in the tail, both with flesh and fleece, that they hang in long wreaths unto the ground, dragged after them with no small difficulty. Pliny observes it in his time, that the tails of the Syrian Sheep were a Cubit long, and had good store of wool upon them, Natur. Hist. l. 8. *c.*48. and modern Travellers report, that the tails of these sheep do frequently weigh 25 pound weight, and sometimes 30 pounds and upwards. The like hath also been affirmed of the sheep of Palestine comprehended in old times in the name of Syria. And that may probably be the reason why the rumps and tails of Sheep (and of no beast else) were ordained to be offered up in sacrifice, of which Lev. 3.9. But besides the store of Wool which they have from the sheep, they have also great plenty of Cotton Wool, which groweth there abundantly; with the seeds whereof they sow their fields, as we ours with Corn. The stalk no bigger than that of Wheat, but as tough, as a Bean; the head round and bearded, in the size and shape of a Medlar. and as hard as a stone: which ripening breaketh, and is delivered of a white soft Bombast, intermixed with seeds; which parted with an instrument, they keep the seeds for another sowing, and sell the Wool unto the Merchant: a greater quantity thereof issuing from that little shell, than can be imagined by those who have not seen it.

The people heretofore were very industrious, especially about their Gardens; the fruitful effects whereof they found in the increase of their Herbs, and Plants. Whence the Proverb, Multa Syrorum Olera. But withall they were observed to be very gluttonous, spending whole days and nights in feasting; great scoffers, and much given to laughter. Crafty and subtle in their dealings, not easily to be trusted but on good security: and so were the Phœnicians, their next neighbours also. Hence came the Greek Adage which Suidas speaketh of, Σύρος πρὸς Φοίνικα, Syri contra Phœnices, used by them when two crafty Knaves endeavored to deceive each other. They were noted also to be superstitious, great Worshippers of the Goddess Fortune, but greater of their Syrian Goddess, whatsoever she was. Affirmed by Plutarch to be a Womanish and effeminate Nation, prone unto tears, and such as on the death of their friends would hide themselves in caves from the sight of the Sun. Herodian addeth, that they were wavering and unconstant, lovers of Plays and publick Pastims, and easily stirred up unto Innovations. But at this time, they are almost beaten out of all these humours, having been so often cowed and conquered, that they are now grown servilely officious to them that govern them: not without cause, defective in that part of industry which before enriched them.

Where by the way we must observe, that this Character of the people, and that of the Country belong not to this part alone, exclusively of those which follow; but to all Syria, and every part and Province of it, except Phœnicia, which being planted by a people of another Stock, hath had its character by it self. The whole by Ptolomy divided, besides Comagena, Palmyrene, and Cœlo-Syria, into many petit Regions, and Subdivisions, as 1 Pieria. 2 Casiotis, from the hills adjoyning. 3 Seleucis. 4 Apamene, 5 Laodicene. 6 Cyrrhestica. 7 Chalcidice. And 8 Chalybanotis, from their principal Cities. Of which in all he musters up the names of an hundred and upwards, then of some note, most of them now grown out of knowledg, and many of them of no mark or observation in the course of business. So that omitting his method, we will follow our own, and take notice only of such places as ancient were, or at this present are, of most observation and importance in the course of Story: with reference notwithstanding to the subdivisions made by Ptolomy, as they come in my way, reckoning Cyrrhestica, Chalybanotis, Casiotis, and the Territories of Seleucus, Laodicea, and Apamea, into Syria Propria; and Pieria into Comagena.

First then to begin with those Cities which lye most towards the East, we have in Cyrrhestica, 1 Zeugma, on the banks of the River Euphrates, memorable for the passage of Alexander the Great, who there passed over his Army on a Bridg of Boats. 2 Berræa, supposed by some both ancient and modern Writers, to be that which is now called Aleppo, but the position of the place agreeth not with that supposition; Aleppo being placed by our modern Cosmographers, in the 72 degree of Longitude, and the 38 of Latitude: whereas Berræa is assigned by Ptolomy, to the 36 degree of Latitude, and the 71 of Longitude. Besides that, the River Singas, on which Aleppo is situate, keepeth it self almost on an even course in the Latitude of 37. between 20 and 30 minutes over: which is more by a degree and a half than the site assigned unto Berræa. 3 Cybros, as in the Latin Copies of Ptolomy mistook for Cyrrhus, once the chief City of this part, from hence called Cyrrhestica. 4 Heraclea, near which Minerva had a Temple; in which, as in that sacred to her in Laodicea, they used once yearly to offer a Virgin for a Sacrifice, but afterwards on the sight of that gross impiety, changed it to an Hart. 5 Ragia, now Rugia, two days journey from Antioch, took by the Christians in the beginning of the Wars for the Holy Land. 6 Hierapolis, of great renown in thoſe dark times of Ignorance and Idolatry for the Syrian Goddeſs therein worſhipped; from whence it had the name of Hierapolis, or the Holy City: being formerly by the Græcians called Callinice; by the Syrians, Magog; one of the firſt ſeats of Magog the Son of Japhet, and from him denominated. The Goddeſs ſo eſteemed of in thoſe wretched times, that from all parts, Aſſyria, Babylonia, Arabia, Cilicia, Cappadocia, and indeed what not, they brought her many rich gifts and coſtly offerings. Nero himſelf, who ſcoffed at all Religions elſe, being for a while a great Votary of this Syrian Idol, though afterwards he grew weary of her, and defiled her with urine. The Temple built by Stratonice, the wife of Seleucus, in the midſt of the City, compaſſed with a double wall, about the heighth of 300 fathom: the roof thereof inlaid with God, and made of ſuch a fragrant and ſweet-ſmelling wood, that the cloaths of them which came thither retained the ſent thereof for a long time after. Without the Temple there were places incloſed for Oxen, and Beaſts of ſacrifice; and not far off a Lake of 200 fathom in depth, wherein they kept their ſacred fiſhes: the Prieſts attending here for their ſeveral Offices, amounting in number to three hundred, beſides many more ſubſervient Miniſters. The tricks and jugglings of theſe Prieſts to deceive the people, he that liſt to ſee may find them copiouſly deſcribed in the Metamorphoſis of Apuleius: which, changing but the names and times, may ſerve for a relation of thoſe gulleries and Arts of Leger-de-main which the Friers and Pardoners have practiced in the Church of Rome. 7 Chalyban, whence the parts adjoyning were called Chalybanotis; conceived by Poſtellus, and ſome others to be Chalepium, or Aleppo, but on no good ground; this City having one degree leſs of Northern Latitude, than Berræa had. 8 Barbariſſus, in the ſame ſubdiviſion, near the banks of Euphrates. 9 Chalcis, the principal of that part of Syria Propria, which is called Chalcidice, but not otherwiſe memorable. 10 Telmediſſa, another Town of the ſame diviſion, and as little famous. 11 Seleucia, ſo named from the Founder of it, the firſt Eaſtern Monarch of that Race, and the greateſt Builder of the World, founding nine Cities of this name, ſixteen in memory of his Father Antiochus, ſix by the name of Laodice his Mother, and three in honour of Apamia his firſt Wife; beſides many others of great note in Greece and Aſia, either new built, or beautified and repaired by him. From this, the Country hereabouts had the name of Seleucis. 12 Laodicea, one of the Cities founded by Seleucus, in honour of Laodice his Mother, from which the Region adjoyning is called Laodicene: Built by him in the place where formerly ſtood the City Rhamantus, ſo called from a certain Shepherd, who being ſtrook with a flaſh of lightning, cryed out amazedly Rhamantus, that is to ſay, Deus ab excelſo; before which time it had been named Leuca Acte, from the whiteneſs of the Sea-cliffs near to which it is ſituate: the Country round about commended anciently for the beſt Wines, and choice of very excellent Fruits. 13 Apamea, ſo named in honour of Apamia, the Wife of Seleucus; which together with Laodicea and Seleucia before mentioned, having the ſame Founder, and maintaining a ſtrict League of amity with one another, were commonly called the Three Siſters. From this the Country near is called Apamene. 14 Emeſa, (now Hamſe) the Epiſcopal See of Euſebius, hence called Emeſenus, who flouriſhed in the time of Conſtantius, the Son of Conſtantine: in whoſe name are extant certain Homilies, juſtly conceived to be of a later date. The City ſeated in a ſpacious and fruitful Plain of Apamene, watered with many pleaſant and cheerful Riverets: once of great note, as may eaſily be conjectured from the walls hereof, which are ſtill perfect and entire, built of poliſhed ſtone, and of very large circuit; but the dwelling-houſes ſo decayed, that it affordeth nothing worthy obſervation. 15 Epiphania, in the cantred or ſubdiviſion of Caſiotis; called at firſt Hamath, from Hamath a Son of Canaan, the founder of it; and upon that account miſtaken by St. Hierome for another Town of the ſame name, in the Tribe of Naphthali; ſo different from this place both in Longitude and Latitude (as we ſhall ſhew hereafter when we come to Paleſtine) that they can by no means be the ſame. But that old Town being gone to ruin, it was repaired, if not re-edified by Antiochus Epiphanes King of Syria, who thereupon commanded it to be called Epiphania; obeyed therein as Joſephus telleth us, by the Macedonians, though the Syrians ſtill called it Amatha, as in former times, Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. 16 Lariſſa, which ſtill preſerveth its old name, being now called Laris; much mentioned in the Wars of the Holy Land, eſpecially for the death of Baldwin the firſt, Brother of Godfrey of Bouillon, and ſecond King of Hieruſalem, Anno 1118. 17 Gebal, the Gabala of Ptolomy, and others of the ancient Writers, ſituate on the South of Laodicea, from which twelve miles diſtant; mentioned Pſal. 83. as a confederate with Tyre, and other uncircumciſed Nations, in their hatred and deſigns againſt the Iſraelites: at this day called Gabella (with little difference from the old name of it) and by that name remembred in the Stories of the Holy Wars. 18 Albaria, diſtant two days march from Antioch, remembred alſo in the Wars of the Holy Land. 19 Aradus, one of the Co-founders of Tripolis, ſituate in a rocky Iſland of a mile in compaſs, directly oppoſite to the mouth or influx of the River Eleutherus, and diſtant from the Continent about twenty furlongs. So called from Arvad, one of the Sons of Canaan, and mentioned by that name in the Prophet Ezek. 27. 8, 11. This once a Kingdom of it ſelf, containing not this Iſland only, but ſome part of the Continent; eſpecially about Antaradus (ſo called becauſe built over againſt it) ſituate on the Northern banks of the River Eleutherus, of which we have ſpoken in Phœnicia. 20 Daphne, about five miles from Antioch; but afterwards by the continual enlargements of that City, accounted as the Suburb to it; ſo named of Daphne, one of the Miſtreſſes of Apollo, who was here worſhipped by the name of Apollo Daphnæus, and had here his Oracle and his Groves, with other the Additaments appertaining unto thoſe Idolatries: as much eſteemed of, but more ſumptuous than thoſe of Delphos. The Grove about ten miles in circuit, environed round with Cypreſſes, and other trees, ſo tall and cloſe to one another, that they ſuffered not the Sun to enter in his greateſt heats: the ground perpetually covered with the choiceſt Tapeſtry of Nature, watered with many a pleaſant ſtream, derived from the Caſtalian Fountains as it was given out; and yielding the moſt excellent Fruits both for taſte and tincture, to which the wind and air participating the ſweetneſs of the place, did add a moſt delightful influence.

A place deviſed for pleaſure, but abuſed to luſt; he being held unworthy of the name of a man, who tranſformed not himſelf unto a Beaſt, or trod on this unholy ground without his Curtezan, inſomuch as they which had a care of their good names, did forbear to haunt it. A fuller deſcription of it he that liſts to ſee, may find in the firſt Book and eighteenth Chapter of Sozomen's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, who is copious in it. The Temple ſaid to have been built by Seleucus alſo, renowned for the Oracle there given, by which Adrian was foretold of his being Emperour; and therefore much reſorted to by Julian the Apoſtata, for that purpoſe alſo. But the body of Babylas the Martyr and Bishop of Antioch, being removed thither by the command of his Brother Gallus, then created Cæsar by Constantius, the Devil and his Oracles were both frighted away, as the Devil did himself confess to Julian; who being desirous to learn here the success of his intended Expedition into Persia, received this Answer, That no Oracle could be given so long as those Divine Bones were so near the Shrine. Nor was it long after, before the Idol and the Temple were consumed by a fire from Heaven, as was avowed by those who observed the fall of it; though Julian did impute it to the innocent Christians, and in revenge caused many of their Churches to be burned to ashes. 21 Antioch, situate in that part hereof which is called Casiotis, first built, or began rather by Antigonus, when Lord of Asia, by whom named Antigonia, but finished and enlarged by Seleucus, after he had overthrown and slain him at the Battel of Issus. Built near the place, and partly out of the Ruins of an ancient City, in the second Book of Kings called Riblah in the Land of Hamath; Hamath the Great, in the sixth of Amos; by Josephus and the Syrians, Reblata. Memorable in those days for the Tragedies of Jehoahas and Zedechias, Kings of Judah; the first of which was here deprived of his Crown and Liberty, by Pharaoh Necho King of Ægypt, 2 King. 23. 33. the other of his Eyes and Children, by the command of Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, as was said before. In following times it was by some Greek Writers called Epidaphne, from the nearness of it to that Grove: as afterwards in the times of Christianity, by the name of Theopolis, or the City of God; either from the many Miracles there done in the Primitive time, or from the great improvement which the Christian Faith did here receive, where the Disciples first obtained the name of Christians. The Royal Seat for many Ages of the Kings of Syria; and in the flouriſh and best fortune of the Roman Empire, the ordinary Residence of the Præfect or Governour of the Eastern Provinces; next, of the Præfectus Prætorii Orientis, who had not only the superintendency over the Dioceſe of the Orient, though that large enough; but also of the Dioceses of Ægypt, Asia, Pontus, Thrace, extending so his Jurisdiction into all the parts of the then known World. Honoured also with the Residence of many of the Roman Emperours, especially of Verus and Valens, who spent here the greatest part of their times; and from the first dawning of the Gospel, with the seat of the Patriarch. A Title of such eminency in all times of the Church, the second in accompt to the See of Rome (till Constantinople being made the Imperial City, got precedence of it) that there are at this time no less than four great Prelates which pretend unto it; that is to say, the true Patriarch, governing the Christians of those parts, whom they call Syrians or Melchites; the Pseudo-Patriarchs of the Jacobite and Maronite Sectaries, both which, for the greater credit to their Schism, do assume this Title; and finally, a titular Patriarch nominated by the Pope, who since the time that the Western Christians were possessed of these Eastern Countries, hath assumed a power unto himself of nominating Patriarchs for Alexandria, Hierusalem, and this City of Antioch.

The City seated on both sides of the River Orontes, about twelve miles distant from the Shores of the Mediterranean; the River Pharfar passing on the South-side of it. By Art and Nature fortified even to admiration; compassed with a double Wall, the outermost of which was of Stone, the other of Brick, with four hundred and sixty Towers in the Walls, and an impregnable Castle at the East-end thereof; and on the other side defended with big broken Mountains, whereunto was adjoyning a deep Lake, coming out of the River Pharfar, before-mentioned. Adorned in former times with many sumptuous Palaces, and magnificent Temples, answerable to the Reputation of so great a City; till taken by the Saracens, and after by the Turks and Mamalucks, men careless of all State and Beauty in their fairest Cities, it began to grow unto decay. Recovered by the Western Christians from the power of the Turks, after a Siege of seven Months, June 3. Anno 1098. confirmed in their possession by a great and memorable Victory, got in the very sight hereof within few days after (June 28.) obtained against Corbanas, Lieutenant to the Persian Sultan; in which, with the loss of four thousand and two hundred of their own, they slew a hundred thousand of the Enemy. The Town and Territory given by the Conquerors to Bohemund a Noble Norman, and Prince of Tarentum; who by practising with one Pyrrhus, who had the command of one of the chief Towers thereof, afterwards called St. Georges Tower, was secretly let into the City, and so made way for all the rest. Bohemund thus made the Prince, or as some say, King of Antioch, left it to Bohemund his Son about ten years after; succeeded in this Principate by Tancred and Roger, Princes of great Renown in those Holy Wars; which last unfortunately slain by the Turks, not far from Aleppo, in the year 1120. Baldwin the second having revenged his death by a signal Victory, joyned this Estate to the Kingdom of Hierusalem. Betrayed above sixty years after this, that is to say, in the year 1188. it came into the Power of Saladine, the victorious King of Ægypt and Damascus, and therewithal no fewer than five and twenty Cities which depended on the fortunes of it: the glories of this famous City so declining after this last Tragedy (but whether laid desolate of set purpose, or destroyed by the injury of the time, I am not able to declare) that it is grown the Sepulchre of what once it was, and lieth buried in its own sad Ruins, hardly preserving the repute of a sorry Village. Such is the instability of all worldly Glories. Some other Towns there are in this part of Syria, but not to be remembred the same day with Antioch.

As for the Story of this Province, as a State distinct, we find it had a King of its own, called the King of Hamath (the Kingdom of Toi or Tou before remembred) who together with the King of Arphad, commanded in this part of Syria, and the Isles adjoyning. Vassals in time succeeding to the Kings of Tyre, who lorded it over all the Sea-coasts hereof, and consequently had great influence on the Inlands also. And it continued in this State till the Assyrian Kings began to turn their Forces Westward; when added to that Empire by Tiglath Pileser, after the subversion of the Kingdom of Damascus; or by Salmanasser, after the destruction of that of Israel. The proud but dreadful vant which Sennacherib, the Successor of those mighty Monarchs, made to Hezekiah, viz. Where are the Gods of Hamath and Arphad? shews clearly, that those Kingdoms had been conquered not long before; and therefore needs by Salmanasser, or Tiglath Pileser. Afterwards, in the struglings betwixt the Babylonians and Ægyptians, for the chief Command, it was a while at the devotions of the King of Ægypt, it being at Reblatha in this Province, that Jehoahaz King of Judah was put into Bonds, by the command of Pharaoh Necho, as was said before. But Necho being not long after vanquished by Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, it returned again to that Crown, and after followed the same fortunes with the rest of Syria.

3 COMAGENA.

COMAGENA is bounded on the East with the River Euphrates, by which parted from Mesopotamia; on the West, with the Mountains called Amanus, which divide it from Cilicia; on the North, with Taurus, by which separated from Armenia Minor; on the South, with Palmyrene. Called also Euphratensis and Euphratesia, when a Roman Province, by reason of its situation bordering on that River.

The reason of the name I find not amongst my Authors: but find that many Learned men conceive it to be that part of Syria, which the Scriptures call Syria Maacah, mention whereof is made 1 Chron. chap. 19. ver.6. gain-sayed by others, because they find a place called Maacha in the Tribe of Manasses; but with no great reason, as I take it. For being it is joyned (in 1 Chron. 19. v.6. above-mentioned) in the same action with Mesopotamia, and Syria Sobah; and not so only, but placed between them in the Method of that holy Penman, I dare not think but that they were all very near neighbours, and ranked according to the natural situation of them. Which agreeth very well with the site of Comagena, having Mesopotamia on the East, and Aram-Sobah on the South. Nor is it any stronger proof unto the contrary, that Maacha is a Town of the Tribe of Manasses; than if a man should say, that there is no such Province as Mansfield in High Germany, because there is a Town of that name in England; or no such place as Savoy amongst the Alpes, because there is a House of that name in London.

As for the People hereof, besides what they have common with the rest of the Syrians, they were of old much given unto Divination, and for that cause derided thus in the sixth Satyr of Juvenal.

Thus Englished by my honoured Friend Sir Robert Stapylton.

A childless rich mans Legacy, or young Love,
Are found i'th' Lights of a warm trembling Dove,
By Comagene Sooth-sayers; they look into
A dead Chicks breast, the same the Armenians do.
They view the Entrails of a Dog, and reach
A Child perhaps: They do it, and then preach.

Chief places of this part, 1 Samosata, the Metropolis or head City of it, when a Roman Province, situate neer the Banks of Euphrates, over which it had a Bridg for passage into Mesopotamia. Unfortunate for being the birth-place of Lucian, that profane Scoffer of Christianity, though otherwise a man of a quick Wit, and of great Abilities: as also of Paulus Samosatenus, Patriarch of Antioch, condemned of Heresie in a Council holden in his own City, Anno 273. (by the great and most learned Bishops of that Age, there assembled together) for teaching, That our Saviour was no other than a natural man; but neither God, nor the Son of God, as the Scriptures testifie. 2 Germanicia (by some called Germanicopolis) on the other side of the Country, near the Mountain Amanus; no less unfortunate than the former, in being the birth-place of Nestorius, Patriarch of Constantinople, who troubling the Peace of the Church with Heterodoxie, and impertinent nicities about the blessed Mother of Christ, as also about the Nature and Person of Christ himself, was thereupon condemned of Heresie in the Council of Ephesus, Anno 435. In former times called Adata, as some write Adapa; but took this new name from Germanicus Cæsar, in honour of whom it was made a Roman Colony by Augustus, testified by this Inscription extant in Onuphrius, viz. COLONIA JULIA GERMANICIA, SACRA, AUGUSTA, FOELIX. 3 Singa, so called from the River upon which it is situate. 4 Antiochiæ penes Taurum, so called because seated at the foot of that Mountain, to difference it from the other of this name in Syria. 5 Pinara, one of the chief Cities of that part which is called Pieria. 6 Doliche, a small Town, but made an Episcopal See in the best times of the Churth, as appeareth by the Acts of the Councils of Antioch and Constantinople, in which there is some mention of the Bishops of it. 7 Aleppo, now the principal of all the Country, supposed by some to be the Sepharvaim, mentioned 2 King. 17. 24. It was thus called as some say from Halep, which in the Language of those parts signifieth Milk, afforded liberally by the rich Pastures round about it: as others more improbably from Aleph, the first Letter of the Hebrew Alphabet, because the first in estimation of the Cities of Syria: Most probably from Alepius, Lieutenant here in the time of Julian the Apostata, who did here many notable Exploits, and amongst others, in or near the Ruins of some old Town of these parts, not yet agreed on (in case it be not Sepharvaim before mentioned) advanced this City. Situate on the banks of the River Singas, which rising out of the Hill Pierius, with many windings and turnings runneth through Comagena, and there falleth into Euphrates. Destroyed by Haalon, King of the Tartars, at such time as the Western Christians were possessed of this Country, and the Holy Land: but being repaired and re-peopled, became by reason of the commodious situation of it, to be much frequented by Merchants from all parts of the World. Situate in the midst betwixt Tripolis, Berytus, and Alexandretta, the three prime Ports of Turkie on the one side; and the Persian Territories on the other: it was made choice of for the Staple of the Eastern Commodities, brought to Euphrates, and then boated to this Town by the River Singas. A City of great Trade at present, the English Merchants (amongst others which frequent the same) having here three Houses for the Stowage and disposing of their Commodities; and a chief Officer or Superintendent over the whole Factory, whom they call the Consul of Aleppo. But greater was the Trade hereof in the former times, before the Portugals found out a way by Sea to those Eastern Countries, since followed by the English, Hollanders, and other Nations. The building of it low, but of one Roof high (as in most Towns of Syria) with a plain top plaistered to walk upon; and with Arches before their doors or Houses, as well to pass dry under them in time of Rain, as to shew their Wares. Pleasantly seated amongst Gardens, with the sweet smells whereof very much refreshed; the ordinary Residence of a Turkish Bassa; safe rather in the remoteness of it from any Enemy, than the strength of the place, as being nothing less than well fortified. Near one of the Gates they shew a Sepulchre, by them affirmed to be Saint Georges (whom of all the Christian Saints they only worship) before which they maintain a Lamp which burns continually. 8 Aman, in the way betwixt Tripoli and Aleppo, supposed by some to be that Hamath, mention whereof is made 2 King. chap. 17. 12. A City of a large circuit, pleasantly seated on two Hills, which give it a fair prospect over six of the neighbouring Villages; a thing not to be boasted of, as the World now goeth, by many of the Syrian Cities. On a third Hill once stood a Castle, now decayed, ruinous; beneath it a fair River which runs gently by it, environed round about with Orchards of Palm-trees, and very good fruits. 9 Chalmodora, ſeated by Ptolomy on Euphrates, of which no ruins now remaining; unleſs the name be changed to 10 Byrrha, as perhaps it may be: that being made by Ptolomy, the moſt Northern Town of Comagena; this the utmoſt Town which the Ægyptian Mamalucks (then Lords of Syria) had upon this River, and the boundary betwixt them and the Sultans of Perſia. Memorable for an old Ceremony here uſed by thoſe Mamalucks, who accounted not themſelves worthy of the name of a Sultan of Ægypt, till in this place in ſolemn pomp in the ſight of their Army, they had forced their Horſe into the River, and made him drink of the waters of it: teſtifying by that Ceremony as well the extent of their Dominions, as their readineſs to defend the ſame againſt all Invaders. A Ceremony performed with great State by Camſon Gaurus, in the War betwixt him and Selimus the firſt. But for all this he loſt the field, and his life to boot in the fight near Aleppo: and therewith did not only leave him Syria, as the fruits of his victory; but opened him a fair way to the conqueſt of Egypt, which ſoon after followed. And hereto I refer the Cities of 11 Hena, and 12 Ivah, with their ſeveral Territories; mentioned together with the City of Sepharvaim, Iſa. 37. 13. and 2 King. 18. 34. it being probable, that if Sepharvaim were the City now called Aleppo, as the Jews that dwell there ſay it was; that then the other two joyned together with it, muſt be hereabouts, though we find no tract of them in the old Geographers.

And if they were (as it ſeems probable to me) we have then more Kings in this Province in the elder times, than the King of Maacha; unleſs perhaps it may be ſaid that the Kingdom of Maacha (or of Aram-Maacah) being broken in pieces, theſe petit States aroſe from the ruins of it. Of little obſervation in the courſe of buſineſs, whether entire or ſubdivided into parcels: but that the King hereof (the King of Maacha) aided the Ammonites againſt David with 1000 men: no very great number I confeſs (as one who lay more out of the danger than the reſt of the Syrian Confederates did) but ſufficient to engage him in the quarrel with them. Nor find we anything after this touching their affairs, but that the Kings of Hena, Ivah and Sepharvaim (who ſhared the greateſt part amongſt them) being ſwallowed up by the Aſſyrians (as the forementioned Texts do expreſly ſay) ſome Colonies of the people hereof were ſent by Salmanaſſer the Aſſyrian Monarch, to plant the deſolate dwellings of the Tribes of Iſrael, as appeareth plainly in 2 King. 17. 24. A courſe in which the Conquerour dealt exceeding wiſely; weakning thereby the great Cities and mightier States of this Country, which otherwiſe might have been apt enough to revolt again; and ſtrengthning therewithal their conqueſts in the Land of Iſrael, which otherwiſe had lain open to the next Invader, and yielded little or no profit to the publick Treaſury. More politick in this than the Babylonians in the like diſſolution & deſtruction of the Kingdom of Judah. After this time it followed the ſame fortune with the reſt of Syria, till Tigranes the laſt King hereof was ſubdued by the Romans: At what time all the reſt of Syria being reduced under the form of a Province, this part being then in the poſſeſſion of Antiochus, ſon of that Antiochus ſirnamed Euſebes, whom Tigranes had ſpoiled of his eſtates, was left unto him by the Conquerours with the title of King. Continuing in his Line till the death of another Antiochus, the laſt King hereof, when made a Province of the Empire by Tiberius Cæſar, as is ſaid by Tacitus; Qu. Servæus being ſent hither as the firſt Roman Prætor for the government of it; though Sueton doth refer it to the times of Veſpaſian.

4. PALMYRENE.

PALMYRENE is bounded on the Eaſt, by the River Euphrates; on the Weſt, by Syria properly and ſpecially ſo called; on the North, with Comagena; and on the South, with Mount Libanus, dividing it from the Province of Cœlo-Syria, and part of Arabia Deſerta.

It took this name from Palmyra the chief City of it. When conquered by the Romans, and made a diſtinct Province of it ſelf, it had the name of Syria Secunda, and Salutaris: Called Syria Secunda, to diſtinguiſh it from Syria ſpecially ſo called, which by them was named Syria Prima; and Salutaris, in regard of the medicinal waters ſpringing in many places of it. But before it had any of theſe names, it was in the Scriptures called Aram-Sobah, whereof Adad-ezar was King in the time of David, as we read 2 Sam. 8. 3. and 1 Chron. 18. 3.

The Country deſtitute of Rivers fit for Navigation, ſave that it bordereth on Euphrates; but liberally furniſhed with thoſe hot Springs good for many Diſeaſes, which gave it the name of Salutaris. Of which thus writeth Marcellinus lib. 14. In his tractibus navigerum, nuſquam viſitur flumen, at in locis plurimis aquæ ſuapte natura calentes emergunt, ad uſum aptæ multiplicium medelarum. So he, The ſenſe whereof we had before.

Places of moſt obſervation, are 1 Palmyra, ſeated in a Deſart and ſandy Plain, one of the Cities built by Solomon in the Wilderneſs, mention of which is made 1 King. 9. 17, 18. this Palmyra being ſuppoſed to be that City which is there called Tadmar, or Tamar in the Vulgar Latin. The cauſe for long time of much contention betwixt the Parthians and the Romans, as ſituate in the borders of either Empire; not fully ſetled in the Roman, till that they had ſubdued Zenobia, then the Queen hereof. By Adrian the Emperour, who repaired it, it was called Hadrianople, but it held not long; the old name in ſhort prevailing above the new. 2 Gezer. 3 Bethhoron the upper. And 4 Bethhoron the neather, ſaid to be fenced Cities with Walls, Gates, and Bars, 2 Chron. 8. 4. And 5 Baalath, four of the other Towns here built by Solomon; but either quite worn out of knowledg, or called by new names in the time of Ptolomy, who ſaith nothing of them. 6 Adada, built as the name doth intimate, by ſome of the Adads, Kings of this Country, or of Damaſcus, to which laſt made ſubject. 7 Sura, more towards the River Euphrates, in the Notitia, called Flavia Firma Sura; which ſheweth that it was either repaired, or made a Colony by the Emperour Veſpaſian, whoſe fore-name was Flavius: honoured with an Epiſcopal See alſo in the times next following, as appeareth by the Acts of the Council of Conſtantinople. 8 Alamath, on the banks of the River Euphrates, which if it were lawful for me to criticize upon my Author, I ſhould conceive to be that Hamath of the Scriptures, which is called Hamath-Sobah, 2 Chro. 8. 3. againſt which Solomon prevailed: the miſtake from Camatha to Alamatha, being not uneaſie in the tranſcripts. Confirmed herein by that paſſage in 2 Chron. 18. 3. where it is ſaid, that David ſmote Hadad-ezar King of Sobah unto Hamath, as he went to eſtabliſh his Dominion by the River Euphrates: By which it ſeemeth that Hamath ſtood upon that River, as the Camatha or Alamatha of Ptolomy is ſaid ſo do. And if it were the ſame, as I think it was, I ſhould conceive it to be the chief ſeat of thoſe Kings, and the principal City of this Kingdom: the word Sobah, being added to it, not only for diſtinctions ſake; but in way of eminency. But if the judicious Reader approve not this criticiſm, I ſhould next think that this Alamatha of Ptolomy were that Ælam, or Helaus, next unto which David discomfited that great Army of the Mesopotamians, mention whereof is made 2 *Sam.*10.16,17. 9 Rasapha, a Town of note in the time of Ptolomy; but of greater in the holy Scripture, where it is represented to us by the name of Reseph, *Isa.*37.20. Reseph Civitas Syriæ, as Saint Hierom hath it: and if a Town of Syria, then most like this. 10 Betah, and 11 Berothai, two other Cities of this Kingdom, taken by David in his War against Hadadezar, 2 *Sam.*8.8. the last supposed to be the Barathene of Ptolomy, though placed by him among the Towns of Arabia the Desart, to which it seems it was alotted in the change of time.

This part of Syria, as the rest, was once a distinct Kingdom of it self, by the name of the Kingdom of Sobah, or of Aram-Sobah. The first King thereof, whose name occurs in holy Scripture, being Rehob, the Co-temporary of Saul King of Israel, by whom discomfited in battel, as is said 1 *Sam.*14.47. But Adad-ezar the Son of Rehob, a Prince of greater power and valour than his Father was, having brought all the neighbouring Kings under his command, (as is said 2 *Sam.*10.19.) conceived himself a fit match for David, and thereupon opposed his passage, as he went to recover his border at the River Euphrates. In which action though he lost a thousand Chariots, and twenty thousand Foot, and seven hundred Horse, yet would he not so end the war; but first with the Syrians of Damascus, and after with the Ammonites and their Confederates, and finally by the aid of the Mesopotamians, renewed the quarrel. But being discomfited also in this last enterprize with the loss of forty thousand and seven hundred men, and his life to boot, the Kingdom of Zobah was brought under by the Kings of Damascus. The story of this war we have in 2 Sam. ch. 8. v. 10. in 1 Chron. ch. 18. and 1 King. 11.23,24. yet were not the Kings of Damascus so well setled in it, but that David had possessed himself of Betah and Berothai, and other pieces of importance: the Regal City of Hamath Sobah being won by Solomon, and many of the best Towns of it built by him to assure his conquest. But the Kingdom of Solomon being rent in pieces in the next Succession, the Kingdom of Zobah fell again unto those of Damascus: and so continued till Damascus it self was conquered by the Kings of Assyria: unless perhaps that Hamath, which Jeroboam the second is said to have subdued (together with Damascus it self) to the Crown of Israel, 2 King. 14.28. were this Hamath-Sobah, as perhaps it was.

After this nothing memorable in the affairs of this Country, till the time of Gallienus the Roman Emperour: during whose reign, amongst the rest who cantoned that Empire betwixt themselves (commonly called the Thirty Tyrants) Odenatus a man of great power and vertue assumed the Imperial habit, and took unto him the command of these parts of Syria, together with Mesopotamia, and some other Provinces, which he had conquered from Sapores the King of Persia; against whom he had so good an hand, that he discomfited him in battel, seized upon his Treasures, and took many of his Nobles, and most of his Concubines. For which great acts admitted partner in the Empire by Gallienus, he was not long after slain by Mœonius his Cosin German. Who by that murder hoped to obtain the Principality of Palmyrene (for by that name it was now called) but in that deceived. For after his death, Zenobia his unfortunate Widow, a most masculine Lady, not only preserved the principality of Palmyrene for the use of her Children; but took upon her both the Purple habit, and the command of his Army: which she managed with great wisdom and gallantry, the rest of the time of Gallienus, and all the reigns of Claudius, and Quintillius, his two next Successors. But vanquished and took Prisoner by Aurelianus (who had the happiness to unite the broken limbs of that Empire into as strong a body as ever formerly) she was led in triumph through Rome. The terrour of her name, and the unusualness of the sight, so heightning the general expectation; Ut ea specie nihil unquam esset pompabilius, saith Trebellius Pollio, That never any shew was esteemed so glorious. A Lady of so strong a vertue, and of such command upon her self, that she is said never to have made use of her husbands company, when she perceived her self with child. After this nothing singular in the story of Palmyrene, but that when all the rest of Syria was subdued by the Christians of the West, this Province and the next only was made good against them by the Turkish Sultans of Damascus.

5. COELO-SYRIA.

COELO-SYRIA is bounded on the East with Palmyrene, and Arabia Deserta; on the West, with Palestine; on the North, with Palmyrene, and some part of Syria Propria, from which divided by the interposition of Mount Libanus; on the South, with Ituræa, and Arabia Deserta also.

This is the Syria so much mentioned in the Books of Kings and Chronicles, called by the Greeks, Cœlo-Syria, i.e. Syria Cava, because partly situate in the hollow Vallies interjected betwixt Libanus and Anti-Libanus; and sometimes also Syro-Phœnicia, from the intermixture of those people; as the Phœnicians which went with Dido into Affrick, were called Libo-Phœnices. By the Romans, when made a distinct Province of that Empire, it had the name of Phœnice Libani, or Phœnicia Libanensis, to difference it from the other Phœnicia, which they call Maritima. But before all this by the Hebrews named Aram-Damasek, Syria-Damascena in the Latin, from Damascus the chief City of it: unless perhaps we should rather say, that Aram-Damasek contained only that which lay between the Mountains of Libanus and Anti-Libanus; the rest being added by the Romans, out of the neighbouring parts of Palestine and Arabia Deserta, as perhaps it was.

Chief Rivers hereof, are 1 Abana, and 2 Pharfar, the Rivers of Damascus, as the Scripture calleth them, 2 *King.*5. The one of which is thought to be the River Adonis, spoken of already; the other that which Ptolomy calleth Chrysorrhoas, or the Golden flood; which rising in the Hills of this Country, passeth by Damascus, and so together with the other into the Mediterranean Sea. Chief Mountains of it, 1 Alsadamus, by the Phœnicians called Syrion, by the Amorites, Samir; a ridge of Hills which beginning at the East-point of Anti-Libanus, bend directly Southwards, shutting up on that side the Land of Israel, whereof more in Palestine. 2 Hippus, a ledge of Mountains in the South parts of this Province, where it bordereth on Arabia Deserta.

Towns of most consideration in it. 1 Heliopolis, so called from an Image of the Sun there worshipped in the time of Paganism; now Bellebec, or (as some say) Balbec. 2 Chalcis, more Eastward toward Damascus, which gave the title of a King to Ptolomy Menæus, and his son Lysanias, the Kingdom then extending over the City of Abila, and the whole Province of Ituræa in Palestine. But that Family being either expired, or grown out of favour, and Abila with Ituræa otherwise disposed of; the title of the King of Chalcis, with the Town and Territory, was given to Herod, brother of Agrippa the first, King of Jewry. Erroneously supposed by some learned men to be that Chalcis, from which the Country called

Chalcidice

Chalcidice takes denomination; that Chalcis being placed by Ptolomy a degree and a half more East than Damascus, and two degrees more towards the North; whereas this Chalcis lieth on the West of that City, in the shades of Libanus, and in the very same degree of Northern Latitude. 3 Abila, seated at the foot of Libanus, betwixt Heliopolis and Chalcis, from whence the Country round about it is called Abilene; given to Lysanias, the Son of the former Lysanias, King of Chalcis, with the Title of Tetrach, Mentioned Luk. 3. 1. with those other Princes which shared Palestine amongst them. Not that he was the Son of Herod, as anciently Beda and Euthymius, and of late times some very industrious men have been of opinion: but partly because the Cities of the Chalcis and Abila of right belonged to those of the Tribe of Napthalim (though never conquered or possessed by them) and so to be accompted a part of Palestine; and partly because the Tetrarchy of Abilene, when Saint Luke wrote that Gospel, was possessed together with the rest by King Agrippa. Restored (as it seemeth) to the former Family, after his decease; for known it was by the name of Abila Lysaniæ in the time of Ptolomy. 4 Adida, memorable for the Victory which Aretas King of Arabia obtained neer unto it, against Alexander King of Jewry, the Kingdom of Syria then lying open as a prey to the next Invaders. 5 Hippus, or Hippone, as Pliny calleth it, not far from the Mountain of that name. 6 Capitolias, now called Suente. 7 Gadara. 8 Scythopolis. 9 Gerasa, and 10 Philadelphia, reckoned by Ptolomy as Cities of Cœlo-Syria; but of right belonging unto Palestine, where we mean to take notice of them. 11 Eden, at the foot of Mount Libanus, now a Town of the Maronites; and anciently of such esteem, that the whole Country of Damascus was called Beth-Eden, Amos 1. 5. 12 Damascus, situate in a large Plain environed with Hills, and watered with the River Chrysorrhoas, which with a great noise descendeth from the Mountains, and so abundantly serveth the City, that not only most of the Houses have their Fountains of it, but their Orchards and Gardens have some Rivulets conveyed into them. The Country round about abundantly enrich'd with plenty of most excellent Wines (the Vines hereof bearing Grapes all the year long) and great store of Wheat; as their Orchards with variety of most delicate Fruits: our Damascens, (or Pruna Damascena, as the Latins call them) coming first from hence; as also our Damask Roses, but infinite short of their natural sweetness, by the transplantation. A place so surfeiting of Delights, so girt about with odoriferous and curious Gardens, that the vile Impostor Mahomet would never be perswaded to come into it, for fear (as himself was used to say) lest being ravished with the ineffable pleasures of it, he should forget the business he was sent about, and make there his Paradise. But Muhavias, one of his Successors, having no such scruple, removed the Regal Seat unto it, where it continued (for the most part) till the building of Bagdat by Bugiafer the twentieth Caliph, about an hundred years after this Removal: the Regal Seat before that time being at Mecca, Cufa, or some other of the best Towns of Arabia Fœlix. The chief Buildings of it, of late times (till destroyed by the Tartars) were a strong Castle, in the opinion of those times held to be impregnable; and not without great difficulty forced by Tamarlane, whom nothing was able to withstand: and as majestical a Church, garnished with forty sumptuous Porches, and no fewer than 9000 Lanterns of Gold and Silver; which with 30000 people in it (who fled thither for Sanctuary) was by the said Tamarlane most cruelly and unmerciful burnt, and pulled down unto the ground. Repaired by the Mamalucks of Ægypt, when Lords of Syria, it hath since flourished in Trade, the People being industrious, and celebrated for most excellent Artizans; the branching of Satins, and fine Linen, which we call by the name of Damasks, being amongst many others, one of their Inventions. Renowned in the Old Testament for the Kings hereof, and the birth of Eliezer, Abraham's Steward (so honourably ancient was this City;) and in the New, for the Conversion of St. Paul, who first preached the Gospel in this place, and here so narrowly escaped the snares of his Enemies, that he was fain to be let down out of the House in which he was, by the help of a Basket.

But ancient and honourable though this City of Damascus was, we find nothing of the Story of it, till the time of David; the Kings thereof until those days, being conceived to have been Homagers and Tributaries to the Kings of Zobah. The first Exploit ascribed unto them in the Holy Scripture, is their coming to the aid of Adad-ezar, upon his first defeat by David: in which action having lost 22000 men, they were so broken, that they did not only suffer David to put Garrisons in the best Cities of Damascus, but patiently became his Servants, and brought Presents to him, 2 Sam. 8. 5, 6. The name of this unfortunate Prince not made known in Scripture, is by Josephus affirmed out of Nicolaus Damascenus, to have been Adad (a name much cherished and assumed by the Kings Successors) who keeping constant to the party of Adad-ezar in his following Wars, was at last slain with him, in that great discomfiture which David gave them, mentioned in 2 Sam. ch. 10. v. 18. In which Text the Scripture telleth us nothing of the death of those Kings, that being supplied to us by Josephus out of their Records; who also added, That Rezin, one of the chief Commanders of Adad-ezar, taking this advantage, not only usurped his Masters Kingdom, but made himself Master of the Kingdom of Damascus also. From this time forward the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Syria. Nor is this the Tradition of Josephus only, but founded plainly on the Scriptures, of which see 1 King. 11. v. 23, 24. the Scriptures after this taking no notice of any other Kings of Syria (by the name of Kings of Syria) but of those that reigned in Damascus; who in short time had swallowed up the petit Kingdoms of Gessur, Ish-tok, Rehob, besides that of Sobah before-mentioned.

The KINGS of SYRIA or DAMASCUS.

1 Adad, the Friend and Confederate of Adad-ezar King of Sobah, in whose quarrel he was vanquished and slain by David.

2 Rezin, of whom the Scripture saith, in the 2. of Chron. that when David slew them of Sobah, he fled from Adad-ezar his Lord, and gathered men unto him, and certain Captains over a Band, and went to Damascus, and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damascus.

3 Adad II. an Idumean, supposed to be of the Family of Adad-ezar, but rather as I think of Adad, for fear of David fled to Ægypt, where he married Taphnes the Queen's Sister; and hearing that both David and Joab were dead, returned again into his Country, and as some write, expelled Rezin out of Damascus, and reigned there as King.

4 Hezion, Successor unto Adad.

5 Tabrimon, the Son of Hezion, as is said 2 King. 15. 18.

6 Ben-hadad, the Son of Tabrimon, hired by Asa King

King of Judah, to aid him in his Wars againſt Baaſha of Iſrael.

7 Ben-hadad II. Son of the former, twice invaded Iſrael in the reign of Achab, but both times notably repulſed: the firſt time by a Sally of 700 men, at the Siege of Samaria; the next at Aphec, where with the like number in effect, he was taken Priſoner, and his Army routed.

8 Hazael, Captain of the Hoſt to Ben-hadad, anointed King of Syria by the Prophet Eliſha, whom God appointed ſo to do, that by his hands he might avenge himſelf on Ben-hadad, whom Hazael ſlew; but he proved as ill a neighbour to the Kings of Iſrael, as thoſe before him. He attempted upon Judah alſo in the time of Joas, but bribed with the Treaſures of the Temple, he withdrew his Forces.

9 Benhadad III. Son of Hazael, diſcomfited in three ſet Battels by Joas King of Iſrael.

10 Ben-hadad IV. Son of Ben-hadad the third.

11 Ben-hadad V. Son of Ben-hadad the fourth.

12 Ben-hadad VI. Son of Ben-hadad the fifth, in the time of one of which three Kings, but which one we find not for a certain, Jeroboam the Son of Joas King of Iſrael ſubdued both Chamath, and Damaſcus; of which ſee 2 King. 14. v. 18.

13 Rezin II. Son of Ben-hadad the ſixth, and the laſt King of Damaſcus, who joyning with Pekah King of Iſrael, againſt Ahaz King of Judah, enforced him to call unto his aid Tiglath Pileſer, King of Aſſyria; by whom Rezin was taken and beheaded, and the City of Damaſcus won; the Kingdom of Syria by that means united to the Aſſyrian Empire.

After this time, the Syrians continued ſubject to the Babylonian and Aſſyrian Monarchs; and in the overthrow of that Empire by the Medes and Perſians, became a part of their Eſtate: remaining ſo till the firſt Battel betwixt Alexander and Darius, fought near Iſſus in Cilicia. The Victory wherein falling to the Macedonians, gave him without more trouble than the Siege of Tyre, the poſſeſſion of Syria and Phœnicia. He dying not long after his Conqueſt of Perſia, this Country lay as it were at ſtake betwixt Ptolomy King of Ægypt, and Antigonus the chief Lord of Aſia: but the poſſeſſion of it, together with the reſt of the Perſian Empire, in both Aſia's, fell in concluſion to the ſhare of Seleucus, for his many great and ſignal Victories ſirnamed Nicanor; a man ſtrangely preferred. For being at the firſt Governour of Chaldæa only, he was forced to leave Babylon, and to forſake his Province for fear of Antigonus, then dreadful to all the Macedonian Captains; and to fly into Ægypt, where he became Ptolomy's Admiral. After which Ptolomy fighting a pitched Field with Demetrius, Son to Antigonus, took Seleucus with him, and having won the Battel, gave him aid and licence to recover his former Government. Seleucus, well beloved of the People, ſoon made himſelf Maſter not of Chaldæa only, but of all the Perſian Provinces beyond Euphrates: and not long after (being ſeconded by his good Friends Ptolomy, Caſſander, and Lyſimachus) he encountred Antigonus at Ipſus in Jonia, where Antigonus himſelf was ſlain, and his whole Army routed. This Victory made Seleucus Lord of all Aſia, from whence paſſing over into Europe, he vanquiſhed and ſlew Lyſimachus: Seven Months after which Victory, he was ſlain by Ptolomy Ceraunus, whoſe Patron and Protector he had formerly been; being yet the laſt Survivor of all Alexander's Princes, and the only Poſſeſſor of all the Dominions which his Maſter had, by the way of Conqueſt, Ægypt excepted. His Succeſſors, although they were Lords of all Aſia, yet ſince in Syria they kept their reſidence, to the end that they might the better furniſh themſelves with Souldiers out of Greece upon all occaſions, as was ſaid before, they were commonly called the Kings of Syria. But long they held not in that greatneſs of Eſtate and Power, which Seleucus left them; though being a full-bodied Tree, and of ſeveral Limbs, it endured the lopping off of many Branches, and many a ſad blow at the very Root of it, before it fell. For in the time of Seleucus Callinicus, the fourth of this Houſe, Arſaces a Noble Parthian recovered from it all the Provinces of the Perſian Empire, lying on that ſide of Euphrates; and erected the ſo much celebrated Parthian Kingdom, whereof more in Perſia. And in the Reign of Antiochus Magnus, ſo called for his Victories in Ægypt, Judæa, and Babylonia, the Romans extorted from it all the Aſian Provinces on this ſide Mount Taurus, not wanting many provocations to incite them to it: for he not only had made War againſt Ptolomy Philopater King of Ægypt, whom the Romans had taken into their Protection; but ſtirred up the Cities and States of Greece againſt them: invaded Lyſimachia, and ſome other parts of Europe, in defiance of them, and had received Annibal the Carthaginian, and Thoas the Ætolian, their moſt mortal Enemies, into his Dominion, governing his Counſels by the influences which they had upon him. Nor may we think but that Ambition and Avarice, to add to their Fame and Empire by the overthrow of ſo great a Prince, did perſwade much with them. So that the point being brought to a ready iſſue, they pleaded it on both ſides in the Battel of Magneſia, a City of Lydia, to which Antiochus brought an Army of 300000 Foot, and as many armed Chariots, beſides ſtore of Elephants, if the Roman Writers be not over-laviſh in their Reports. But rejecting the Advice of Annibal, and committing his Affairs wholly to Evil-Counſellors, he was vanquiſhed by no more than four Legions of Enemies, and for his Peace compelled to quit all his Aſian Provinces on that ſide of Taurus, and to pay 15000 Talents in ready money for the charge of the War. The reſt of his Eſtates they were content he ſhould enjoy for a longer time, Et libentius quod tam facile ceſſiſſet (as Florus handſomely puts it on him) becauſe he had ſo eaſily relinquiſhed that. Afterwards in the civil Broils among themſelves, about the Succeſſion of the Kingdom, Alexander King of the Jews took from them many of their beſt Towns in Paleſtine, as Joppa, Gaza, Anthedon, Azotus, Rhinocorura, almoſt all Samaria, and Gaulonitis, with Scythopolis, Gadara, and many other ſtrong Towns in Cœlo-Syria. Finally, when they had conſumed almoſt all the Royal Race, and changed their Kings no leſs than ten times in forty years (a ſure ſign of a falling and expiring Kingdom) they were fain to caſt themſelves upon Tigranes the King of Armenia, a puiſſant and ſucceſsful Prince, till ingaged in the Quarrel of Mithridates againſt the Romans: by whom ſtripped of all his Eſtates on this ſide Euphrates, he was fain to content himſelf with his own Armenia, leaving Syria to the abſolute diſpoſal of Pompey, who preſently reduced it to the form of a Province. This ſaid, we have not much more to do with the Houſe of Seleucus, but to lay down their Names, and times of their ſeveral Governments, till we draw towards the laſt end of

The MACEDONIAN KINGS of SYRIA.

A.M.

3654 1 Seleucus Nicanor, the firſt King of this Houſe. 31. 3685

3685 2 Antiochus, ſirnamed Soter, or the Saviour; memorable for nothing ſo much, as marrying with Stratonice his Father's Wife, in his Father's life-time.

3704 3 Antiochus II. by his flattering Courtiers ſirnamed Theos, or the God; but being poyſoned by his Wife, he proved a Mortal.

3719 4 Seleucus II. ſirnamed by the like flattery Callinicus, or fair Conquerour, becauſe ſhamefully beaten by the Parthians.

3739 5 Seleucus III. called for the like reaſon Ceraunus, or the Thunderer; the eldeſt Son of Callinicus.

3742 6 Antiochus III. ſirnamed Magnus, the younger Son of Callinicus, a Prince that imbraced many great Actions, and was fortunate in his Succeſſes beyond Euphrates: he plagued the Jews, but loſt all Aſia Minor unto the Romans.

3778 7 Seleucus IV. called Philopator, the Son of Antiochus, who firſt began to caſt his eye upon the Riches of the Temple at Hieruſalem.

3790 8 Antiochus IV. ſirnamed Epiphanes, or the Illuſtrious; but more truly Epimanes, or the Mad. The great Scourge of the Jews; Brother of Seleucus Philopator, with whom beginneth the Story of the firſt Book of the Maccabees.

3802 9 Antiochus V. called by the name of Eupator, the Son of Epiphanes; who by Lyſias his Captain tyrannized over the poor Judeans, for the little time that he reigned; as did alſo 3804 10 Demetrius, ſirnamed Soter, Son of Seleucus Philopator, by the hands of Nicanor: having poſſeſſed himſelf of the Diadem, by the death of Eupator, ſlain in his favour by the Souldiers who revolted from him. He was afterwards depoſed for a time by Alexander Bala, pretending himſelf to be the Son of Eupator, ſupported herein by the Antiochians.

3814 11 Alexander Bala, diſcomfited in his firſt Battel by Demetrius, whom he ſlew and vanquiſhed in the ſecond; married Cleopatra Daughter of Ptolomy Philometor, by whoſe aid he was victorious. But a Quarrel breaking out between them, Ptolomy invaded Syria, and cauſed himſelf to be crowned King of it; Alexander being ſlain by ſome of his Souldiers.

3819 12 Demetrius II. ſirnamed Nicanor, Son of Demetrius the firſt, recovered his Fathers Kingdom, a Friend of the Maccabees, but ſo cruel to his own People, that he was driven out of his Kingdom by Tryphon General of his Armies.

3821 13 Antiochus VI. ſirnamed Entheus, the Son of Alexander and Cleopatra, advanced unto the Throne by Tryphon, and after ſlain by him to make way for himſelf unto the Diadem.

3824 14 Tryphon, called alſo Diodorus, having driven out Demetrius, and ſlain Antiochus, made himſelf King.

3827 15 Antiochus VII. ſirnamed Sedes, Brother of Demetrius, having overcome and ſlain Tryphon, ſucceeded him in the Eſtate; for a while victorious againſt the Parthians, but afterwards overcome and ſlain by them. After whoſe death Demetrius Nicanor (having lived in Parthia ſince the loſs of his Kingdom) was reſtored again unto the Throne; which having held about four years, he was again diſpoſſeſſed and ſlain by

3843 16 Alexander II. ſirnamed Zebenna, an Ægyptian of mean birth, ſet up by Ptolomy Euergetes, and pretending himſelf to be the adopted Son of Antiochus, afterwards vanquiſhed and ſlain by 3845 17 Antiochus VIII. from the crookedneſs of his noſe ſirnamed Gryphus, Son of Demetrius, aided herein by the Ægyptians, with whom reconciled: having reigned about eight years in peace; embroyled him in war with his half brother Antiochus ſirnamed Cyzicenus; which with variable ſucceſſes on both ſides, continued till the time of his death, having reigned 29 years in all.

3874 18 Seleucus V. Son of Antiochus Gryphus, in the beginning of his reign overcame and ſlew his Uncle Cyzicenus: but being vanquiſhed by Antiochus ſirnamed Euſebes or Pius, one of the Sons of Cyzicenus, he fled into Cilicia, and was there burnt in his Palace.

19 Antiochus IX. ſirnamed Euſebes, having firſt vanquiſhed Seleucus, and afterwards Antiochus, another of the Sons of Gryphus, was crowned King of Syria; but ſlain not long after in the Perſian wars.

20 Philip, and Demetrius III. ſirnamed Eucerus, younger Sons of Gryphus, joyntly Kings of Syria; but reigning in their ſeveral parts. Of which Demetrius intending to diſſeize his brother, was himſelf vanquiſhed, and forced to fly into Parthia, leaving the whole Kingdom unto Philip. During which amongſt themſelves Syria was invaded, and in part conquered by Aretas King of the Arabians, and Alexander King of the Jews.

3884 21 Tigranes King of Armenia, during theſe diſſenſions was by the Syrians choſen King, that by his power they might be freed from the Jews and Arabians: the moſt puiſſant Prince that reigned in Syria, ſince the time of Antiochus the Great, as being King of Syria by election, of Armenia by ſucceſſion, of Media by conqueſt. But ingaging himſelf with Mithridates (whoſe daughter he had married) againſt the Romans, was vanquiſhed by Lucullus: who with the loſs of five Romans only, and the wounds of an hundred, is reported to have ſlain of his Enemies above 100000 men. Finally, being again broken and vanquiſhed by Lucullus, he yielded himſelf to Pompey who being appointed Lucullus Succeſſor, deprived him of the honour of ending that War, and retaining to himſelf Armenia only, he left all Syria to the Romans, having reigned eighteen years. And though Antiochus Comagenus, the Son of Euſebes, petitioned Pompey for a reſtitution to the Throne of his Anceſtors, yet it would not be granted: Pompey replying, that he would not truſt the Country into ſuch weak hands as were not able to defend it againſt the Arabians, Parthians, and the like Invaders; and ſo reduced it preſently to the form of a Province. The government of this Country under theſe new Lords, was accompted to be one of the greateſt honours of the Empire: the Præfect hereof having almoſt regal juriſdiction over all the Regions on this ſide Euphrates, with a ſuper-intendency over Ægypt. Niger, the concurrent of Severus was Præfect here; and on the ſtrength hereof preſumed on that competition. So alſo was Caſſius Syrus, who being ing a Native of this Country, and well-beloved by reason of his moderate and plausible demeanour, had almost tumbled M. Antonius out of his Throne. On this occasion it was enacted by the Senate, that no man hereafter should have any military or legal command in the Province where he was born: Lest perhaps supported by the natural propension of the people to one of their own Nation; and heartned by the powerableness of his Friends, he might appropriate that to himself, which was common to the Senate and people of Rome. But this was when it was entire, and passed but for one Province only, Phœnicia being taken also into the accompt; which made the Antiochians so proud and insolent, that Adrian, in his time intended to subduct Phœnicia from it, Ne tot civitatum Metropolis Antiochia diceretur (saith Gallicanus) that Antioch might not be the chief of so many Cities. But what he lived not to accomplish, was performed by Constantine, by whom Phœnicia was not only taken off, but Syria it self divided into four distinct Provinces, as was shewed before, each of them having its Metropolis or Mother City; but all subordinate to the command of the Comes, or Præfect of the East, as he to the command of the Præfectus Prætorii Orientis, the greatest Officer of the Empire, of whom we have often spoke already.

For the defence hereof as well against all Forein invasions, as the insurrections of the Natives (a wavering and inconstant People) the Romans kept here in continual pay four Legions, with their aids, and other additaments. For so many Mutianus had here in the time of Galba; and by the strength and reputation of those Forces, was able to transfer the Empire upon Vespasian. And though the Constantinopolitan Emperors to whose share it fell, in the division of the Empire, rather increased than diminished any part of this strength: yet when the fatal time was come, and that Empire was in the declination, the Saracens, under the conduct of Haumer their third Caliph, Anno 636. possessed themselves of it, Heraclius then reigning in Constantinople. And it continued in their power till Tangolipix the Turk, having conquered Persia, and the Provinces on that side of Euphrates, passed over the River into Syria, and made himself Master of a great part of that also. A quarrel falling out betwixt him and the nearest Kinsmen, and thereby a great stop made in their furthest progress, was thus composed, by the mediation of the Caliph of Babylon in the time of Axon his Successor. To Cutlu Moses was assigned a convenient Army, to be by him imployed against the Christians, with Regal power over the Provinces by him gained, without relation or subordination to the Persian Sultan: of whose successes and affairs hath been spoke elsewhere. To Melech and Ducat, two others of his discontented Kinsmen, but all of the same Selzuccian family, he gave the fair Cities of Aleppo and Damascus, and those parts of Syria, with whatsoever they could conquer from the Caliph of Ægypt, who then held all Phœnicia, and the Sea-coasts of Palestine; to be held in fee and vassalage of the Crown of Persia. To these two brethren then we are to refer the beginning of the Turkish Kingdom in Syria: who, with their Successors, by reason that here they held their residence, caused themselves to be called

The TURKISH KINGS of DAMASCUS.

1075 1 Melech and Ducat, the first Turkish Kings of Damascus, by the gift of Axon, the second Sultan of the Turks in Persia, added to their Dominions all the rest of Syria, together with part of Cilicia, and some neighbouring Provinces in the Lesser-Asia.

2 N. N. Sultan of Damascus, at such times as the Christians of the West won the Holy Land: against whom he notably defended the City and Territories of Damascus; and in a set battel discomfited and slew Roger the Norman, Prince of Antioch.

1146 3 Noradine, (the son of Sanguin) General of the Armies, and Son-in-law to the former King, succeeded him in the estate. A noble Prince, memorable amongst other things for a gallant answer made to his Commanders, when they perswaded him to take the advantage on the death of Baldwin the third, and to invade Hierusalem whilest the Christians were busie in solemnizing his Funerals. Not so, saith he, Compassion and regard is to be had of the just sorrow of those Christians, who have lost such a King, as could not be equalled in the world.

1175 4 Melechsala, Son of Noradine, contemned by reason of his youth, by his Nobles, and Souldiery, who made choice of Saladine for their King; by whom dispossessed first, and after vanquished.

1176 5 Saladine, the Turkish Sultan of Ægypt, having vanquished the Persians, or Parthians, coming under the conduct of Cacobed, Uncle to Melechsala, to restore that Prince to his estate, remained King of Damascus: and by the puissance of his Armies, recovered from the Christians all Syria, and the Holy Land, with the City of Hierusalem also.

1199 6 Eladel, or El-Aphzel the eldest Son of Saladine, succeeded in the Realm of Damascus; which he exchanged for that of Ægypt with his brother Elaziz.

7 Elaziz, the second Son of Saladine, succeeded upon this exchange in the Realm of Damascus, murdered not long after by his Uncle Saphradine.

8 Saphradine, the Brother of Saladine, having barbarously murdered eight of the Sons of Saladine, (the youngest called Saphradine escaping only, who was after Sultan of Aleppo) possessed himself of the Kingdom of Damascus, left at his death to Corradine, his Son or Nephew.

9 Corradine, Son or Nephew to the Tyrant Saphradine, was by him at his death left Sultan of Damascus; to which all Syria and Palestine were then made Provincials. But the treacheries and murders of Saphradine crying loud for vengeance, Haalon the Tartar, in the year 1262. having taken the King of Damascus Prisoner (but whether Corradine, or some other, I am not able to say) brought him before the walls of the City; threatning to kill him in the sight of the people, if they did not deliver it unto him. Which the Citizens refusing to do, the wretched King was torn in pieces, and the City taken by assault: the Kingdom taken by the Conquerours conferred upon Agab the son of Haalon. And so ended the Selzuccian Family of the Kings of Damascus in the person of Corradine, or the son of Corradine, most miserably murdered by the Tartars; as it had done in Ægypt 17 years before, in the person of Melechsela, and Elmutan, the Son of Meledine, as villainously deposed and murdered by the Mamalucks. So slippery is the foundation of those Kingdoms that are laid in blood.

Nor did this Kingdom hold long in the hands of the Tartars, Tartars, recovered from them in short time by the Mamalucks, then Kings of Ægypt; from them once more regained by the furious Tamarlane: who in the year 1400 besieged Damascus with an Army of 1200000 men, (if the number be not mistaken, and one Cypher added more than should) in pursuit whereof he filled up the ditches with his Prisoners, put all the people to the Sword; and with great Art raised three Towers as a Trophy of his victory, built with the heads of those whom he had so slaughtered. A man so strangely made up of vice and vertues, that it is hard to say which had the predominancy. But the violence of this tempest being overblown, the Mamalucks, from whom he had also conquered the Kingdom of Ægypt, recovered Syria by degrees, and repaired Damascus, continuing in their power till the year 1516, when Selimus the first discomfited Campson Gaurus the Ægyptian Sultan in the fields of Aleppo. Upon the news whereof the Citizens of Damascus, fearing the spoil of their rich City, then of very great trading, set open their Gates unto the Victors; as did all the other Cities and Towns of Syria, by their example. By means whereof, without any more blows, the Turks became Lords of this Country; as the next year of Ægypt also, by the vanquishment and death of Tonombeius who succeeded Campson: so rooting out the name and government of the Mamalucks, and adding those rich Kingdoms to the Turkish Empire.

And so much for Syria.

MOUNT HERMON

IN our passage out of Cœlo-Syria into Palestine, we must cross Mount Hermon; a ledg of Hills; which beginning at the East point of the Anti-Libanus, bend directly South: in different places, and by several Nations called by divers names. By Ptolomy called Alsadamus; by the Amorites, Samir; by the Phœnicians, Syrion; and by that name remembred in the Book of Psalms. But Alsadamus they are called only where they border upon Cœlo-Syria. Where they begin to part the Region of Trachonitis from Arabia Deserta, they are called by Moses and the Scriptures Hermon, part of the Kingdom of Og, the King of Basan, as is said, Joshuah, chap. 12. 6. Syrion by the Sidonians, as is affirmed, Deut. 3. 9. Running further after this unto the South, they are called Gilead or Galaad; by Strabo, Trachonitæ, after the name of the Region along which they pass, and are conceived to be the highest part of all Mount Libanus, or rather of that long ridg of Mountains which there take beginning. And so we are to understand the words of the Prophet Jeremy, saying, Galaad tu mihi Caput Libani, as the Vulgar readeth it. That is to say, that as the head is the highest part of a man; so these Hills, or this part of them, was the highest of all the branches, or spurs of Libanus, called Galeed by Jacob, from that heap of stones which was there laid by Laban and Jacob, to be a witness of the Covenant which was made betwixt them, Gen. 31. 27. the word signifying in the Original, An heap of Witnesses. And Laban said, This heap is a Witness betwixt me and thee this day; therefore was the name of it called Galeed, ver. 28. By these Hills, and the main body of the Anti-Libanus lying on the North, and the Mountains of Phœnicia and Idumæa on the West, the Land of Palestine is so shut up on every side, that no Fortress can be stronger by Wit or Art, than that Country by Nature: the passages in some parts so narrow, as hardly to afford passage for a single person. Clauditur undique montibus, hinc abruptis rupibus, & profundis vallibus concursu Torrentium, inde altis & implexis anfractibus sic contractis, ut per angustos colles vix pateat transitus viatori, as my Author hath it. I had almost forgot to add, that that part of these hills, which is commonly known in Scripture by the name of Hermon, is in one place thereof called Sihon, as Deut. 4. 48. where it is said, that the Israelites possessed the Land from Aroer on the bank of the River Arnon, even to Mount Sihon, which is Hermon. As also that one of the highest tops or Summits of it, had the name of Amana, alluded to by Solomon in the fourth of the Canticles; by some mistaken for Amanus, a branch of Taurus, which divides Syria from Cilicia in the Lesser Asia, with which Solomon had but small or no acquaintance. And so having cleared our selves of so much of this Mountain, as lay before us in our way, we pass over to Palestine: where we shall meet with it again, (or rather with the Western parts and branches of it) under the names of Gilead and Trachonitis, as a part of that Country.

OF PALESTINE.

PALESTINE is bounded on the East, with the Hills last mentioned, by which parted from Cœlo-Syria, and Arabia Deserta; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea, and some part of Phœnicia; on the North, with the Anti-Libanus, which divides it from Syria, and the rest of Phœnicia; and on the South, with some part of Arabia Petræa.

It was first called Palestine from the Philistims, the most potent Nation of those parts. A name first found in the History of Herodotus, but generally used in times succeeding, by the Greeks and Romans. And this I look on as the proper and adæquate name of the whole Country, according to the bounds before laid down: the others, by which commonly called, being more restrained, and properly belonging to so much hereof, as was in the possession of the Tribes of Israel. And of this sort, are 1 Canaan, or the Land of Canaan, so called from Canaan the son of Cham, by whom first peopled after the Flood. 2. The Land of Promise, because by God promised to Abraham, and his seed, for an habitation. 3. Israel, from the Israelites, or sons of Jacob, whose sirname was Israel. 4. Judæa, and by us Jewry, from the Jews, or people of the Tribe of Judah, the most prevalent of the Tribes of Israel. And 5. Terra Sancta, or the Holy Land, because the subject of the greatest part of the Holy Scripture; and that the work of our Redemption was herein accomplished by our Lord and Saviour. Which notwithstanding we must know, that though these names do many times by a Synecdoche, express the whole Country of Palestine; yet neither the Canaanites or the Israelites were ever Masters of the whole: except only in the time of David, and of some of the Maccabæan Princes, as also in some part of the reign of Herod the Great; all which had the good fortune to command it totally.

But being the most considerable people of it were the Tribes of Israel; we will first look upon the Country People under that capacity. And for so much hereof as was held by them, it is situate between the 3*d*. and 4*th*. Climats; the longest day being fourteen hours and a quarter. The whole length but 200 miles, and not above 80 in breadth; yet was of such a fruitful soil, that before the coming in of the Israelites, it had 30 Kings: and after the coming in of that people, so extreamly populous, that David numbred a Million and 300000 fighting men, besides those of the Tribes of Levi and Benjamin. But of the fruitfulness hereof more shortly.

As for the People they were by composition of a middle stature, but strong of body: in their best times a murmuring and stiff-necked generation, never well pleased either with God or Man, with their Priests or Princes; seldom conform unto the Commandments of their God, nor very much constant to themselves; So crippled in their goings betwixt Superstitions and Idolatry, that they knew not how to walk uprightly: Idolatrous above measure, and incorrigible in it, till their coming back from the Captivity of Babylon: and after that as superstitious and severe, in the point of their Sabbath, as they had formerly been exorbitant in the worship of Idols. No Medium on either side, but extream in both. Divided anciently into these four ranks, that is to say, 1 Jews, 2 Hellenists, 3 Proselytes, and 4 Samaritans; all of them pretending a right unto this Country, though not all of them dwelling in it.

Of these the first called Jews, from Judah, the predominant Tribe; and Hebrews, from Heber the son of Sela, grand-son of Sem, and one of the Ancestors of Abraham, were such as naturally descended of the Tribes of Israel, and lived for the most part in their own Country; adhering to the Law of Moses, and embracing the whole Canon of the Old Testament, from the Book of Genesis to the Book of the Prophet Malachi. Called also Israelites, because descended from the loyns of their Father Jacob, to whom God gave the name of Israel, for his great honour. But after the ten Tribes were carried away by Salmanasser to an endless captivity: and two Tribes (with the remainder of the rest) returned from that temporary one which they found in Babylon, the name of Israelites was laid by, and that of Jews assumed, as more proper to them. These read the Scriptures, and executed all Divine Offices in their natural Hebrew.

2. The Hellenists, were such as were Jews by parentage, but lived dispersed in most Provinces of the Roman Empire: called by that name (we may English it, the Græcizing Jews) because they read the Scriptures in the Greek or Septuagint's Translation; and performed all publick Offices in that language also. In other things, as superstitious in their Sabbath, as tenacious of their Circumcision, and others of the Rites and Ceremonies of the Law of Moses, as the Jews of Palestine: and for that reason, scorned and derided by the Gentils, amongst whom they lived; Credat Judæus appella, saith one of their Poets, relating to their circumcising; Recutitaque Sabbata palles, saith another of them, with scorn enough unto their Sabbaths. Novi illic ritus & cæteris mortalibus contrarii, saith Tacitus, a graver Author, of the whole body of their Rituals, or Acts of worship.

3. The Proselytes were such, as not being Jews by birth, or descent of Parentage, conformed themselves unto their customs, and desired to be admitted to their Religion. And these were also of two sorts, the one called, Proselyti Portæ; and the other, Proselyti fœderis. The first of these, admitted by the Jews to the worship of God, and instructed in the hopes of the life to come, were only tyed to those Precepts which the Hebrew Doctors call the Precepts of the sons of Noah: but were neither circumcised, nor otherwise conform to the Law of Moses. Which Precepts of the sons of Noah, so called, because supposed to be given by Noah unto his Sons, when he came out of the Ark, were seven in number: that is to say, 1 That they dealt uprightly with every man. 2 That they blessed and magnified the Name of God. 3 That they worshipped not any false Gods, but to abstain from Idolatry. 4 To refrain from all unlawful lusts and copulations. 5 To keep themselves from theft and robbery. 6 And from shedding blood. And 7 Not to eat the Flesh or Member of any Beast, taken from it when it was alive, by which all cruelty was forbidden. These, though they were admitted to the Worship of God, and might repair unto the Temple; yet because of their Uncircumcision, they were not suffered to converse with the Jews, not to come into the same Court of the Temple with them: but were accounted as unclean, and had their Court apart assigned them in the Worship of God, which was called Atrium Gentium, or Immundorum, and was the outermost of all. The other Proselytes, which was called Proselyti fœderis, conformed in all things to the Jews, as in Circumcision, Sabbath-keeping, and all other Ceremonies: and were accounted of as adopted Jews; priviledged as they were, to worship in the Inner Court; bound as they were, from eating or drinking with a Gentile; and in a word, partakers with them in all things both divine and humane, and different in nothing from them but their Race or Parentage. These last in the New Testament called simply Proselytes, without any addition: the former by the name of Σεβόμενοι, or the worshipping Gentiles, of which see Act. 16. v. 14. & ch. 17. v. 4, 17. & ch. 18. v. 4. &c.

4. As for the Samaritans, they possessed a great part of this Country, which the Proselytes did not; yet were not so much Jews as they. But of these more anon, when we come to Samaria, the proper place of their abode.

As for the natural Jews themselves, they are divided also into several Sects; as, viz. 1 Esseni. 2 the Sadduces, 3 the Scribes, 4 the Pharisees, 5 the Herodians, and 6 the Gaulonites, or Galilæans. The Essenes, or Esseni, derive their name, as some conceive, from Asca, which signifieth facere, to do, because they laboured with their hands: as others say, from Asa, which signifieth θεραπεύειν, or to cure diseases, because they were much given to the Study and Practice of Physick. Their beginning is not yet agreed on. The first time they were heard of, was in the time of Jonathan, the Brother of Judas Maccabæus, about 150 years before Christ's Nativity; then mentioned by Josephus, Antiqu. Judaic. lib. 13. cap. 9. A Pythagorean kind of Jew, and not much differing in opinion from those old Philosophers, professing as they did, 1 Community of Goods, 2 Abstaining even from lawful pleasures, 3 Forbidding of Oaths, 4 Forbearing Wine, and drinking Water, 5 Ascribing the conduct of Affairs to fate or destiny, And 6 Using only inanimate or unbloody Sacrifices. Some other Dogmata they had, but these the principal: forbidding Marriage not being common to the Sect, but only to some few amongst them. And though we find no mention of them in the New Testament, the Sect in those times being small and inconsiderable; yet it is thought that St. Paul alludeth to their Tenets: as where he adviseth Timothy to make use of Wine, and glanceth upon those who prohibited Marriage, 1 Tim. 4. 3. or condemned others in the use of Meat and Drink, Coloss. 2. 16. As for the manner of their life, they lived together as it were in Monasteries, or Colledges, and in every one had their Σεμνεῖον, or Oratory: admitting none into their Fellowships or Society, unless he brought all he had into their common Treasury; and not then neither under a three years Probationership. More of them he that listeth to see, may satisfie himself in that Tract of Philo, intituled De Vita contemplativa, where he most copiously describeth their Institutes and course of life: mistakingly applied by Eusebius to the Primitive Christians, as if that Tract had purposely been composed of them, by that learned Jew.

2. The Sadduces either derive their name from Sadoc, who lived about the time of Alexander the Great, and is thought to be the first Founder of them; or from Sadoc an Hebrew word signifying Justice; the men pretending to be so exact and strict Justitiaries, as if they would justifie themselves before God's Tribunal. The occasion of the Sect or Heresie (for both it was) said to arise from a mistake of Antigonus, a right learned man, who teaching, That we ought not to serve God, as Servants do their Masters, for the hope of Reward, occasioned Sadoc and Baitus, two of his Auditors, to conceive that there was no Reward nor Recompence for a Godly Life; and consequently, no Resurrection nor World to come, neither Angels nor Spirits. These were the most capital of their Errors, as appeareth Act. 23. 6, 8. Matth. 22. 3. Luk. 20. 20, 27, &c. But other Dogmata they had, not mentioned in the Holy Scripture; ascribing nothing unto Fate or Predestination, but all things altogether to a mans free-will; 2 Teaching the Soul to be annihilated at the hour of death; 3 Rejecting all Traditions; and 4 Allowing no more Scripture than the five Books of Moses. In most of their opinions contrary to the Scribes and Pharisees, but joyning with them both in opposing Christ: and though like Sampson's Foxes they looked divers ways, and were tyed together by their Tails only; yet in those Tails they carried Firebrands to destroy God's Harvest, and had done it, if they had been able.

3 But indeed the Pharisees were the men, who were the Master-wits in the Arts of Mischief, Homines robustioris impietatis, in the Father's words. Fellows of such a perfect and concocted malice, that they were almost able to possess the Devil. Their name they derive from Pharez, which is to separate. Separatists we may rightly call them: For they were first ἀφορισμένοι εἰς τὸν νόμον, separated to the Study of the Law of God, as Saul was brought up to that purpose at the feet of Gamaliel: And secondly, ἀφορισμένοι εἰς τὸ ἁγιοσύνῳ, separated from the rest of Mankind, by a more strict profession of sanctity; as the Pharisee boasted of himself, that he was not as other men, or as that Publican. And that they might so seem unto simple men, they did thirdly separate themselves from the Society and Conversation of others not so pure as themselvs, whom they called Populum terræ, or the Sons of the Earth, upbraiding Christ that he kept company with Publicans and Sinners: and more than so, used a particular kind of Habit, and had a Garb unto themselves which no others had; using it for a by-word amongst themselves, that Vestes Populi Terræ, sunt conculcatio Pharisæorum. To which end, as their countenances were more clouded and severe than others; so did they wear their Phylacteries of a broader size than others did: which, by the way, were scrolls of Parchment bound about their Heads, and upon their hands, wherein were writ the Ten Commandments of God; foolishly so interpreting the words of Deut. And they shall be as Frontlets between thine Eyes, &c. c. 6. v. 8. They began at the same time with the Sadduces, which was about 300 years before Christ's Nativity. As for their Dogmata, besides those specified above, which were also practicable, they maintained, 1 A Pythagorean Metempsychosis, affirming that the Soul of a Righteous man passed from one into another at the time of his death:

from whence the divers opinions touching Christ our Saviour, Mat. 16. 14. are supposed to spring; as if his body had been animated with the Soul of Elias, John the Baptist, Jeremy, or some other Prophet. 2 They adhered so tenaciously to unwritten Traditions, that in comparison of them they neglected the written Law, as either insufficient or impertinent: And 3 ascribed so much sanctity unto frequent washings, especially when they came from Market, Mark 7. 4. (where possibly they might meet with some unclean persons) and before their sitting down to Meat, Matt. 15. 2. that if they came unto a place where there was not water enough both to drink and wash, the Pharisee would rather chuse to wash than drink, though he died for thirst. More of them he that list to see, may find it copiously set down in the four and twentieth Chapter of Saint Matthew; and thither I refer the Reader. By means of which pretentions to so great a sanctity, and some other Arts they had to abuse the People, they grew so strong, and had such store of followers and dependants on them, that they became formidable in short time to their Kings and Princes. Insomuch that Alexandra durst not enter on the Government in her Childrens nonage, as Josephus telleth us, Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 23. until she had permitted all things unto their disposing; καὶ μηδὲν δίχα τῆς ἐκείνων γνώμης, &c. and promised to do nothing without their advice. And this she did by the direction of King Alexander, her dying Husband: whose Government, as she found by too sad experience had in many things proved unsuccessful, διὰ τέτους ὑβρίζεσθαι παρ' αὐτῆ, because she had put some scorns upon them, and otherwise offended that prevailing Faction. A Faction so predominant amongst the People, saith the same Josephus, Antiq. lib. 19. cap. 18. ὡς καὶ χρῆναι βασιλέως πλέγεσθαι, καὶ κατ' Ἀρχιερέως, &c. that whatsoever they pleased to spread abroad, either of the High Priest, or the King himself, how false or scandalous soever, it was received for truth without more dispute, or any inquiry made into it.

4 But of the Pharisees enough, of the Scribes anon. Proceed we now to the Herodians and the Gaulonites, whom I look not on as either the Authors or Promoters of any Sect of Religion in the Jewish Church; but as the names of two opposite Factions in the Civil State. The first were such who depending upon Herod's Fortune, as he did on the pleasure of the Roman Emperours, solicited the paying of Tribute to the Romans; and earnestly pressed upon that point, that Herod might be thereby the more indeared to his Masters of Rome, and they to him. Upon this ground nick-named Herodians by the People, as men that more endeavoured the greatness and Estate of Herod, than the prosperity and liberty of their Native Country. And possible enough it is, that some amongst them, seeing the Magnificence of Herod's Palace, and experimentally knowing his Frowes, might fancy him to be the Messiah so long looked for, and thereby own this Name with a better Title, than the others did. Opposite unto these, were those called the Gaulonites (we may call the one the Court-Faction, the other the Faction of the Country, or Common people: So named from one Judas a Gaulonite, as Josephus calleth him, from the place of his birth; a Galilæan, as Gamaliel calleth him, Act. 5. 37. from the place of his aboad or habitation. By him the Jews were practised with to deny this Tribute, telling them that it was a manifest token of their servitude, and that they ought to know no Lord, but the Lord of Heaven: drawing them finally on this ground into open Arms, in which Action he and his Adherents perished, and were brought to nothing. Most of his followers were of Galilee, though he had some Disciples in Hierusalem and Samaria also: and of these Galilæans were those poor men, whose blood Pilate is said to mingle with their Sacrifices, Luk. 13. 1.

The Language of this People, by them called the Hebrew, was naturally and originally the same which Abraham found in the Land of Canaan, at his coming thither; as hath been shewn before when we were in Phœnicia. Used by them constantly till their subjugation by the Babylonians, when being led captive to that Country, and conforming themselves to the Speech and Dialect of it; they came at last to speak a kind of broken Language, neither true Chaldæan, nor good Hebrew, but one made of both. Chaldee as to the main body of it; but Hebrew as to the affixes, points, and Conjugation: being the same with that which we now call the Syriack. And at their coming home, after seventy years, had so far lost the knowledg of their Mother-Tongue, that they were not able to understand the words of the Holy Scripture, when Ezra read it in their hearing: insomuch that he was forced to employ some learned in that Tongue to expound it to them. To this the Scribes so often mentioned in the New Testament, must refer their original: there being no such Office heard of till the time of Ezra, though long before that time the Law had ordinarily been read unto them in the Feast of Tabernacles. For this cause they were called Scribes of the Law, Ezra 7. 6. Doctors of the Law, Luk. 5. 17. and simply by the name of Lawyers, Luk. 7. 30. as men whose Office was to expound the Law, and make it intelligible to the People. These we may best resemble to the Canonists in the Church of Rome, or the Divinity-Reader in some School or Colledg: and grew to such great estimation in the Jewish State, that it was hard to say at last whether the Pharisees or they were the better men. For what the Pharisees gained on the common people by pretence of sanctity, these got more justifiably by their zeal to the written Word, which they endeavoured to preserve from the common dangers both of corruption and contempt. And though I look on those men especially, as the name of a Function, not a Sect: yet being they held so close to the Pharisees, and concurred with them in most of their Superstitions, as appeareth Mat. 23. I consider them as a strong and potent Faction, of great authority and influence in affairs of moment.

For matters of Religion, the People of this Land were priviledged above all others, had they had the grace to make good use of it: the Law being given to them by God the Father, the Gospel preached amongst them by God the Son, and that Gospel countenanced and confirmed before their eyes, by the miraculous Operations of the Holy Ghost. The Government of that Church in the time of the Law, by a subordination of Priests and Levites to their several Heads; the Priests divided by King David into twenty four Ranks or Classes, each Classis serving in their turns at the Holy Temple: the Chiefs or Heads of which several Classes, made but that Body of men which are called Principes Sacerdotum, or Chief Priests, so often mentioned in the Writings of the Holy Evangelists. Over all which there was one Supreme, whom they called Summum Sacerdotum, or the High Priest, descended lineally from Aaron, till the Romans out of avarice and reason of State made the Office saleable. And because possibly the High Priest might be under some pollution, and so uncapable by Law to perform his Office, he had his Suffragan (or Sagan) to discharge it for him. Of which sort was Zephaniah, the Sagan or second Priest to Semiah, mentioned Jer. 52. 24. And of this sort is Annas thought by some to have been to Caiaphas; and for that cause the title of High Priest to be given to both, *Luk.*3.2. though others think that Annas was High Priest in right, and the other in fact; the one being deposed by the Romans, and the other super-induced into the place. In time of Christianity they were governed as in other Churches, by a subordination of Priests to Bishops. The first Bishop said to be St. James, the son of Alphæus, commonly called the Lord's Brother; affirmed by Ignatius, Scholar to the Apostles, in his Epistle ad Trallianos; by Egesippus, who lived in the Apostles times, as St. Hierom and Eusebius cite him; as also by Clemens of Alexandria cited by Eusebius, *Hist. l.*7. *c.*14. by Cyril of Hierusalem, Catechism 4. and 14. Epiphanius, *Heref.*78. *n.*7. St. Ambrose in *Gal.*1. St. Chrysost. on the last of St. John's Gospel; St. Hierom in his Catalogue of Ecclesiastical Writers; St. *Augustine cont. Cresc. l.*2. *c.*37. To whom there may be added the joynt consent of 289 Prelates, assembled in the sixth General Council holden at Constantinople, affirming James the Lord's Brother to be the first Bishop of Hierusalem: all of them, with the Fathers before mentioned, taking the word Bishop in that sense, in which it generally passed for the times they lived in. His Successors subject at the first to the Bishop of Cesarea, as their Metropolitan; though priviledged in their own Diocese, with the rights of Patriarchs, as appears evidently by the Acts of the Nicene Council. But afterwards for the greater honour of the Holy City, wherein our Saviour wrought the work of our Redemption, it was ordained at Chalcedon, that the Bishop of Hierusalem should have as well the jurisdiction as the name of a Patriarch; the three Palestines (for Constantine had before divided it into so many Provinces) being subducted from the power of the See of Antioch, to make up his Patriarchate. So stood it in elder times, but now by the incroachment of Mahometanism the Christian faith is obscured, and the beauty of it so eclipsed, that were it not for some Sects of Christians dwelling in Mount Sinai, and about Hierusalem, it might be said without any manifest untruth, to be quite extinguished.

But to look back upon the Country, it cannot be described more fully and significantly, than Moses hath done it to our hands, in *Deut.*8. Where it is said to be a land of Brooks and Waters, of Fountains and Depths, that spring out of the Vallies and Hills; a Land of Wheat and Barley, and Vines, and Fig-trees, and Pomegranates; Of Oyl-Olive, and Honey: a Land, wherein was bread, without scarceness; a Land whose stones were as Iron, and out of whose Hills one may dig brass. An ample commendation; and yet in some sort short of the fertility of this flourishing Country, which did not only consist in the choice and plenty, but the perpetuity of its fruits: it being on record in the Epistles of the Emperour Julian (sirnamed the Apostate) that the Fig-trees, and other fruit-trees herein, were seldom or never without fruits; the old not fully falling off, till the new come on. Which his report, if true, (as certainly he did not love our Saviour so well as to flatter the Country for his sake) we have then an answer to the difficulty, which hath so much perplexed all Commentators of former times; and that is, why our Saviour should curse the Fig-tree for not bearing fruit, when the Text saith, that the time of fruits was not yet come, *Mar.*14.13. For though the time for new fruits was not yet come (it being then but early Spring) yet our Saviour being hungry might expect to find some of the old, and failing of his expectation lay that curse upon it. Nor is this solution of the doubt discountenanced, (rather much confirmed) by the Character and condition of the Country, as it stands at present; naturally adorned with beautiful Mountains, and luxurious Valleys, the Rock affording excellent Waters, and the air never pinched with colds, nor scorched with heats. And though either by the negligence of the Inhabitants, or some curse laid upon the Land, far short of that fertility with which once it flourished; Yet still Figs, Olives, Pomegranates, Palm-trees, are here very frequently to be seen; some store of Wine, with Oranges, and the Apple of Paradise, which they preserve upon the Trees all the year long (which agrees very well with that of Julian spoken of before) as well-furnished with Honey and Sugar-canes; and also with Goats, Swine, Hares, Quails, and Partridges: but pestered so in many places with Rats and Mice, that if it were not for certain Birds which feed upon them, it were not possible for the people to have any Harvest. Balm they had anciently, not now. Nor any Nuts, Pears, Plums or Cherries, but what are brought hither from Damascus.

Principal Rivers of this Country, are 1 Chison, the Chorsæus of Ptolomy, which riseth out of Mount Tabor in Galilee, and falleth into the Mediterranean Sea, not far from Mount Carmel in Phœnicia, 2 Cedron, a Torrent rather than a River, passing betwixt Hierusalem and the Mount of Olives; but more remarkable for many notable actions, than many others of a greater both name and course. For over this Brook did David pass when he fled from Absalom; and over this our Saviour, the Son of David, passed, when he went to his Passion. On the Banks hereof did Asa the King of Judah burn his Mothers Idols, 1 *King.*15. as Josiah did the Vessels which were made for Baal, 2 *King.*23. 3 Zared. And 4 Naphthea, which arising out of the hills of the Tribe of Judah, have their fall into the Mediterranean. 5 Arnon, which hath his spring in the hills so called, and endeth his course in the Mare Mortuum. 6 Jaboc, oft mentioned in the Scriptures; which issuing out of the Mountains of Galaad. And 7 Hermon, which springing from the hills so named, lose themselves in Jordan. 8 Jordan, so called from Jor and Dan, two neighbouring Fountains, out of which he seems to take his source; though they do also fetch their spring from Phiala, a round deep Well at the foot of Anti-Libanus, about twenty four miles from these Fountains, into which he maketh his way like a Mole under ground. A river of more fame, than length, breadth, or depth, running from North to South, almost in a strait line to the Dead Sea, where he endeth his course; not navigably deep, nor above ten yards in breadth, where broadest; shadowed on both sides with Poplars, Tamarisk-trees, and Reeds of many several sorts, of some of which the Arabians make Darts and Javelins, of others Arrows, and some again they fashion into Pens to write with. Passing along it maketh two Lakes, the one in the Upper Galilee, by the Ancients called Samachonitis, dry for the most part in Summer, and then covered with shrubs and sedge; not mentioned in the holy Scriptures: the other in the Lower Galilee, about an 100 furlongs in length, and about forty in breadth; called the Sea of Galilee from the Country, the Lake of Tiberias, from a City of that name on the banks thereof, & for the like cause called also the Lake of Genesareth. And here it is to be observed, that the River passeth thorow this Lake with so swift a course that it preserves it self distinct from the waters of it both in taste and colour, as is affirmed of Nilus for a long space in the Mediterranean, and other great Rivers in their falls. Finally, having run thorow the Plains of Hiericho, it finisheth its course at last in the Mare mortuum, or Dead Sea. Honoured with the name of a Sea, because salt, and large, seventy miles long, and sixteen broad; furnishing with Salt the whole Land of Jewry, but called the Dead Sea, either because it had no visible efflux into the Ocean; nor is it at all encreased with the waters of this River and many many other Torrents which fall into it; or because no living Creature is nourished in it, suffocated with the Bituminous savour which it sendeth forth, from the abundance of which matter it is also called Lacus Asphaltites. Nigh hereunto stood the once famous Cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, with three others more, whence the Valley had the name of Pentapolis, destroyed for their abominations by a fire from heaven: now fruitful in shew only, but not in substance; the fruits here growing, being very fair unto the eye, Sed levi tactu pressa in vagum fatiscunt pulverem, but if touched, moulder into ashes, as Solinus hath it.

Chief Hills and Mountains of it, besides Anti-Libanus, and Mount Hermon, spoken of already, which be only borderers, are 1 Mount Sion, memorable for the Tower of David, which was built upon it, called frequently the Holy Hill of Sion. 2 Mount Moriah, famous for the intended Sacrifice of Isaac, and the Temple of Solomon. 3 Mount Calvary, on which CHRIST suffered, supposed to be the burial-place of our Father Adam. 4 Mount Tabor, on which our Saviour was transfigured. 5 Mount Olivet, from which he ascended into Heaven. 6 Mount Garizim, whereon stood the Samaritans Temple, their ordinary place of Worship, mentioned *Joh.*4.20. 7 The Mountains of Saron, stretching with intermixed Valleys from the Sea of Galilee to the Mediterranean, not far from Tyre, there ending in a white cliff, and for that cause called Capo Bianco by the Sailer. The whole Mountain pleasantly enriched with the fragrant smells of Rosemary, Sweet Marjoram, Hyssop, Bayes, and other Odoriferous Plants which do grow there naturally; but for all that, destitute of any other Inhabitants than Leopards, Boars, Jaccals, and such savage Creatures. 8 The Mountains of Gilboa, the highest on the West of Jordan, as 9 those of Basan, celebrated for their height in the Book of Psalms. And 10 those of Abarim, on the East-side of it: from one of the Summits of which last called Nebo, by some Writers Pisgah, the Lord gave Moses a Survey of the Land of Promise.

As for this whole Country comprehended in the name of Palestine, it hath had divers divisions, according to the quality of the people, or the will of those who have been formerly Masters of it. Divided first betwixt the Philistines, Perezites, Hittites, Jebusites, and others of the Sons of Canaan, on this side Jordan; the Moabites, Ammonites, Midianites, and Amorites, dwelling on the other. When conquered by the Sons of Jacob, it was divided into the twelve Tribes, of 1 Judah, 2 Benjamin. 3 Simeon, 4 Dan, 5 Aser, 6 Nephthali, 7 Zabulon, 8 Issachar, 9 Gad, 10 Reuben, 11 Ephraim, and 12 Manasseth. When that great breach was made by Jeroboam, in the Kingdom of David, it was broken into the two Kingdoms of Judah and Israel; of which the first contained only the two Tribes of Judah and Benjamin, the latter comprehending the other Ten. When the Israelites were led Captive into Assyria, and a new set of People planted in their rooms, those new-commers from Samaria, their Capital City, had the name of Samaritans: and when the men of Judah were released of their long captivity, and came back from Babylon, they took to themselves the name of Jews. After which time, the whole Country of Palestine anciently possessed or subdued by the seed of Abraham, was divided into 1 Peræa, 2 Iturea, 3 Galilee, 4 Samaria, 5 Judæa, and 6 Idumæa. When conquered by the Romans, all these were joyned into one Province, which for a time was reckoned as a part of Syria, or at least subordinate. But Constantine not liking of the one or the other, went a way by himself, and cast it into three Provinces, viz. 1 Palestina Prima, 2 Palestina Secunda, and 3 Palestina Salutaris; the Metropolis of the first being Cæsarea Palestinæ; of the second, Samaria; of the third, Hierusalem. But this division of Constantines growing out of use, we will adhere unto the former: Beginning first with those parts hereof which lay on the other side of Jordan, because first conquered and possessed by the house of Israel; who at that Gate found entrance into all the rest; and coming round to Idumæa, which last of all these Provinces was added to the State of Jewry. In the Chorography whereof I must confess my self a Debter to Sir Walter Rawleigh, whose industry herein hath saved me a great deal of search, though sometimes I make bold to differ from him, and add to him, as I see occasion.

1 PERÆA.

PERÆA, is that part of Palestine, which lyeth betwixt the River Jordan, and the Mountains of Arnon, (which divide Palestine from Syria and Arabia) East and West; and reacheth from Pella in the North, to Petra the chief Town of Arabia Petræa, in the South. By Pliny it is made to bend more towards Ægypt, who describes it thus: Perea Judæa pars est ulterior, Arabiæ, & Ægypto proxima, asperis dispersa montibus, & à cæteris Judæis, Jordane amne discreta. Peræa (saith he) is the furthest part of Judæa, neighbouring Arabia and Ægypt, interspersed with rough and craggy Mountains, and parted from the rest of the Jews by the River Jordan. So called from the Greek word Περὰν in regard of the situation of it on the other side of that River; and not improperly might be rendred by Transf-Jordana. Blessed with a rich soil, and large fields beset with divers Trees, especially of Olives, Vines, and Palms. The habitation in times past of the Midianites, Moabites, and Ammonites, as also of the two Tribes of Gad and Reuben. Of all which I shall speak in order, beginning with the Midianites, and the Children of Lot, as the first occupants hereof; upon the knowledg of whose affairs, the State and Story of the Israelites hath so much dependance.

And first the MADIANITES inhabited on the South-East of the Dead Sea, at the very entrance of the Country; descended from one or more of the five sons of Madian, the son of Abraham by Keturah, mentioned Gen. 25.4. who leaving the rest of their brethren to seek themselves new habitations, more towards the Banks of the Red Sea, and the Desarts of Arabia Petræa, continued near unto the place of Abraham's dwelling: and mingling with the Moabites and Canaanites in blood and marriages, came in short time to lose all the knowledg of the true God, and to worship Idols, as the rest of their neighbours did.

Their chief Cities were 1 Recome, built by one of the five Kings of the Midianites, which was slain by Joshuah, afterwards called Selah, 2 King. 14.7. accounted at that time a City of the Edomites; next of the Ismaelites or Arabians, and by them called Hagar. Best known unto the Greeks and Romans, by the name of Petra, and by that name we shall take further notice of it when we come to Arabia. 2 Midian, on the Banks of the Dead Sea, the ordinary residence of their Princes, absolute of themselves at first, as in other places; but at the time when Moses and Joshuah led the people into their possessions, subjected unto Sibon King of the Amorites; whose Dukes their five Kings and Princes are said to be, Josh. 13. 21. A people whom the Israelites had neither Commission or intent to make War upon, if they had not causlesly provoked them, at the request of the Moabites, by sending amongst them (as Balaam the false Prophet had advised) the most beautiful of all their women, not only to entice them to prohibited mixtures, but to allure them to the worſhip of their Idols alſo. A miſchievous and ſucceſsful plot, but alike dangerous to both parties: God ſending a fierce Plague amongſt the Iſraelites, which coſt them the lives of 24000 perſons, beſides ſuch as periſhed by the Sword; and giving a command to Moſes, to avenge him of the Midianites, who had ſo provoked him. On which Commiſſion, Moſes culled out 12000 men, and ſent them under Phineas againſt the Midianites: by whom all their Princes were ſlain, their Cities and goodly Caſtles burnt with fire, their men, women, and male-children put unto the ſword, as is related in the one and thirtieth Chapter of the Book of Numb. Yet notwithſtanding this great ſlaughter, they recovered their former power, if not a greater; and after the death of Barak the Judg of Iſrael, did for the ſpace of four years ſo afflict that people, that they were fain to hide themſelves in the Caves and ſtrong holds of the Mountains, as is ſaid Judg. 6.2. their enemies having left them neither Sheep, Oxen, nor Aſs, or any ſuſtenance at all, v. 4. But Gideon being raiſed up by God for their deliverance, encountred with their four Kings, and put them to flight: of which four, Oreb and Zeeb were taken and ſlain by the Ephraimites at the paſſage of Jordan; Zeba and Zalmunna taken by Gideon himſelf, and executed by his own hand, as the Story telleth us. In this War there are ſaid to have periſhed of this people and their Confederates, no fewer than 120000 perſons, by which ſo weakened that we hear no more of them from this time forwards, in any action of importance: their name and Country being firſt incorporated into that of the Edomites, and after into that of the Iſmaelites, and other the Inhabitants of Arabia Petræa.

2 The MOABITES poſſeſſed all the Country, from the Midianites in the South, as far as to Eſebon in the North, on both ſides of the River Arnon: having Jordan on the Weſt, and the Hills of Abarin on the Eaſt. Poſſeſſed at the firſt by the Emmins, a race of Giants, whoſe chief City was Sheneth Kiriathaim. But theſe being vanquiſhed and broken by Chedorlaomer and his Aſſociates, of which ſee Gen. 14.5. their forlorn ſeats were taken up by the Moabites, deſcended from Moab, one of the ſons of Lot; who lived here in great proſperity till the time of Vaheb, Grand-father unto Balac, the ſon of Zippor; from whom Sehon King of the Amorites had taken all the parts of Moab on the North of the River Arnon, and made that River, which before was the middle of Moab, to be the North bound or border of it. In which eſtate it ſtood in the time of Moſes.

Chief Cities of it at that time, were 1 Rabbat, the Regal ſeat of Balac the King of Moab, the Rhalmathum of Ptolomy. 2 Diblatham, deſtroyed with the reſt of Moab by Nebuchadnezzar, as is ſaid, Jer. 48.22. 3 Gallim, the Principality of Phalti the ſon of Laiſh, to whom Saul gave his Daughter Michal, formerly married unto David, 1 Sam. 25.44. 4 Muthana, and 5 Nathaliel, thorow which the Iſraelites paſſed, after they had left the Well called Beer. 6 Bamath, where Moſes was encamped when he ſent to Sehon to demand a paſſage through his Country, Numb. 21.19, &c. 7 Mizpah, the City of Refuge to the Father and Mother of David, in the time of his troubles under Saul. 8 Hor, the chief City of Moab, not meddled with by Moſes in his march this way, the Lord himſelf forbidding him to touch upon it, or diſtreſs it, becauſe it had been given by him for an inheritance to the children of Lot, Deut. 2.9. Which prohibition was not only for this place particularly; (though this particularly there mentioned) but for all the Lands and Territories then in their poſſeſſion. 9 Kir-haſareth, of chief note for the barbarous and inhumane fact of Meſha the Moabitiſh King, who being beſieged herein by the Kings of Judah, Iſrael, and Edom, without hope of eſcape, ſacrificed his own eldeſt Son on the wall thereof; which ſo moved the Kings of Judah, and Edom, that they forſook the King of Iſrael whoſe the quarrel was. So the ſiege was raiſed, 2 King. 3.17.

Now as Moſes did not at the preſent diſobey God's Order, in leaving the Moabites in quiet; ſo neither did the Moabites on their parts provoke him to any hoſtile act; giving him a free and open paſſage in his march for Canaan; out of an hope that when the Amorites were ſubdued, they ſhould be put into poſſeſſion of their loſt Eſtates. And though they were deceived of that expectation, the Iſraelites looking on that Country which they had conquered, as the ſpoils of the Amorites, and giving it for a poſſeſſion to the Tribe of Reuben: yet durſt they not do any thing in the way of Arms; but ſent for Balaam the falſe Prophet, to caſt them by his Curſes and Incantations into ſome Diſeaſes, whereby their ſtrength and courage might be taken from them. Balac the Son of Zippor was at this time King. After whom we find not the name of any other, till we come to Eglon, who with the help of Aminon and Amalek, over-maſtered Iſrael, and for the ſpace of 18 years tyrannized amongſt them: when ſlain in his own Houſe, and afterwards 10000 of his People, by the hand of Ehud. But this indignity was in the times ſucceeding revenged by Saul in ſome part, who made War upon them; but more by David, who ſubdued them, and made them Tributaries: and not ſo only, but ſubjected them to the vileſt Offices, as is intimated in that form of Speech, Moab is my waſh-pot, Pſal. 60.8. Taking their opportunity, they withdrew themſelves from the Houſe of David, and put themſelves under the command of the Kings of Iſrael, to whom they paid for Tribute in the time of Ahab, 100000 Lambs, and 200000 Rams, with their Fleeces on: but quickly weary of thoſe payments, and revolting from the Houſe of Ahab alſo, they were invaded by Jehoram, aided herein by the Kings of Judah and Idumæa; by whom being vanquiſhed, Meſha their King was fain to ſhut himſelf up in Kir-haſareth, as was ſaid before. After this joyning with the Ammonites, and the Idumeans or ſons of Edom, they invaded Jehoſaphat King of Judah, to whom God gave a memorable and ſignal Victory, without blow or Battel: the Ammonites firſt ſetting upon the Edomites, and after upon one another, till they were almoſt all deſtroyed, 2 Chron. 20.23. From this time we hear nothing of them; but probably they recovered ſome part of their former Dwellings, when that two Tribes and a half on the Eaſt of Jordan, were carried away captive by Tiglath Pileſer. Poſſeſſed hereof, and of other their habitations, till the reign of Zedekias King of Judah; when vanquiſhed, with the reſt of theſe Nations, by the Babylonians and Aſſyrians under Nebuchadnezzar. Nor find we any mention of them in the Ages following; the name of Moab being forgotten, or grown out of uſe: the South parts of their Country laid to Arabia Petræa, as the Eaſt parts were to that of Arabia Deſerta; and all the reſt, as well as that which had been conquered by the Jews, ſwallowed up in the general name of Paleſtinians.

3 The AMMONITES inhabited on the North-Eaſt of the River Arnon, and poſſeſſed all that Tract from Arnon, on the Head of the River, to the City of Rabbah; and on both ſides of the River Jaboc, as well within the Mountains of Galaad as without the ſame. The Seat in elder times of the Rephaims, and Zanzummims, a Giant-like Race of men, as the Emmins were; but vanquiſhed alſo, as the others, by Chedorlaomer; Aſhtaroth, and Heth, being then the principal of their Habitations. Succeeded too in their deſolate and forſaken dwellings, by the Children of Ammon, the other Son of Lot, and the Brother of Moab; both Houſes running the ſame fortune; theſe Ammonites being conquered, and deprived of the beſt part of their Country on the South-ſide of Jaboc, by Og King of Baſan; as the Moabites, at the ſame time, of theirs by Sehon. A Monument of which ſubjection was the Bed of Og, found in the City of Rabba, the chief City of Ammon, there to be ſeen when Moſes had ſubdued the Kings of the Amorites, as appeareth Deut. 3.

Chief Cities at ſuch time as the Iſraelites firſt conquered the Land of Canaan, were 1 Rabbah, the Regal City of their Kings; taken by Og of Baſan, as is ſaid before; but again quitted as it ſeemeth on the coming of Moſes, that he might be better able to keep the Field. Memorable in ſucceeding times for the death of Uriah, ſlain here by a deſign of David's when beſieged by Joab. Who having brought it to terms of yielding, ſent for the King to come before it, that he might have the honour of taking a place ſo defenſible: environed in a manner with the River Jaboc, and therefore called the City of Waters, 2 Sam. 12. 27. Afterwards repaired and beautified by Ptolomy Philadelphus, King of Ægypt, who having made himſelf Maſter of thoſe parts of Arabia, which lie near unto it, and liking the conveniency of the ſituation, honoured it with the name of Philadelphia. 2 Dathema, ſuppoſed to be Rithma by the Learned Junius, mentioned Numb. 33. 18. (the Hebrew Letters D and A being much alike) a place of great ſtrength amongſt the Ammonites. 3 Minneth, in the South Border, and 4 Abel vinearum in the Eaſt Border of Ammon; both mentioned in the purſuit of that People when ſubdued by Jephthe. 4 Mitſpa, ſometimes one of the Cities of the half Tribe of Manaſſes, and at that time honoured with the reſidence of Jephthe; but afterwards recovered by the Children of Ammon: in whoſe hands it was, when utterly deſtroyed and burnt by Judas Macchabeus, 1 Mac. 5. 35. 6 Magod, and 7 Boſor, two other ſtrong places of the Ammonites, there alſo mentioned; but ſaid to be in the Region of Galaad, by which name, or by that of Gileadites, all the Country of the Ammonites lying on this ſide of the Mountains, was at that time called.

As for thoſe Ammonites, they had nothing at all to do with Iſrael as they paſſed towards Canaan; neither provoking them, nor being provoked by them, to any acts of hoſtility. Afterwards not well pleaſed that they were not reſtored to the poſſeſſion of thoſe Lands which had been taken from them by Og of Baſan, (conferred by the Decree of Moſes on the Tribe of Gad) they joyned with the Midianites in their Expedition. But worſted by the puiſſance and good fortune of Gideon, they lay ſtill a while, till ſtirred up by ſome ſecret motion from Almighty God, to avenge him on that ſinful and idolatrous People, who by worſhipping the Gods of the Heathen, had provoked him to anger, Proſperous in it for a time, till his wrath was pacified; who having made uſe of them to chaſtiſe his people, delivered up his Rod to be burnt by Jephthe, vanquiſhed and driven home by him with a very great ſlaughter. Not ſo much cruſhed by the unſucceſsfulneſs of this attempt, but that in the time of Saul they brake out again and beſieged Jabeſh Gilead; Nahaſh, a cruel Tyrant, being then their King; who having brought the City into great extremity, would give them no other conditions than the loſs of every mans right eye: to the end that uſing to carry a great Target on their left Arms, wherewith the eye on that ſide was wholly ſhadowed, they might by this means be diſabled from all future Service. But Saul came time enough to ſave them from that ſhame and loſs; from that cauſe ſo offenſive to Nahaſh, that to deſpight him, he ſhewed friendſhip to David in the time of his trouble. A courteſie which David was ſo mindful of, that he ſent Embaſſadours to Hanun the Son of Nahaſh, to make acknowledgment of it, and to confirm the amity which he had with his Father: but found ſo ill requital from him, that inſtead of thanks and kind acceptance, his Meſſengers were deſpightfully handled, their Beards half ſhaven, and their Garments cut off by the knee. Incenſed therewith he ſent Joab againſt them, by whom the Country was laid waſte, and Rabbah their chief City taken; their Kings Crown, weighing a Talent of Gold, ſet on David's Head, and all the Priſoners executed with great ſeverity, ſome of them being caſt into Lime-kilns, and the reſt torn in pieces with Saws and Harrows. Quiet a long while after this, we hear no great news of them till the reign of Jehoſaphat, againſt whom confederated with the Edomites and Moabites, they made open War; but fell by one anothers Swords, as was ſaid before. Not well recovered of this blow, they were ſubdued and made Tributaries by Ozias King of Judah, and ſo continued in the time of Joatham his Son; who ſo increaſed the Tribute laid upon them by his Father, that it amounted to an hundred Talents of Silver, ten thouſand meaſures of Wheat, and as many of Barley. Taught by this Leſſon how to value the Kings of Judah, they continued either quiet Neighbours, or obedient Subjects, though much improved in power and reputation, by regaining the greateſt part of their ancient Dwellings, on the removal of the two Tribes and an half, on the Eaſt of Jordan, to the Land of Aſſyria, by Tiglath Pileſer. For after this (with reference to the common danger) Baulis their King was ſo ſtrict a Confederate with Zedechias, that when Nebuchadnezzar had taken Zedechias with him unto Babylon, and left Gedaliah as his Deputy to command the Country, Iſmael, one of the Blood of the Kings of Judah, was ſent by Baulis to ſlay him. But he paid dear for his attempt; his Country being ſhortly conquered by the Babylonians, and the name of Ammonite forgotten: changed by the Græcians when they came to Lord it over them, to thoſe of Geleaditis and Philadelphia; according to the new name of their Principal City, and the old one of the Mountains and Hills adjoyning.

4 The REUBENITES took name from Reuben, the eldeſt of Jacob's Sons by Leah; of whom, in the firſt Muſter which was made of them at Mount Sinai, there were found 46000 fighting men; and 43700 at the ſecond Muſter, when they paſſed over Jordan. Their dwelling was on the Eaſt of that famous River, having the Gadites on the North, the Deſart Arabia on the Eaſt, and the Land of Moab on the South, from which parted by the River Arnon.

Places of moſt obſervation here, 1 Abel-Sittim, ſeated in that part of the Country which was called the Plains of Moab; the laſt incamping place of Moſes: afterwards by the Jews called ſimply Sittim: Memorable for the Wood ſo often mentioned in the Scriptures, of which the Ark of the Lord was made. In after-times by the Greeks and Romans it was called Abila, miſtook by ſome for that Abila or Abilene whereof Lyſanias was Tetrarch: that Town and Territory, as Joſephus doth affirm expreſly, being ſituate amongſt the ſpurs and branches of Libanus, far enough from hence. 2 Bethabarah, or Beth-Bara, where John baptized, and Moſes made his laſt and moſt divine Exhortations to the Tribes of Iſrael, contained in Deuteronomy. 3 Machærus, the ſtrongeſt in-land City and Caſtle in thoſe parts of the World, ſtanding aloft upon a Mountain every way unacceſſible: firſt fortified by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews, as a frontire Town againſt the Arabians; and afterwards demoliſhed by Gabinius, one of Pompey's Lieutenants, in the War againſt Ariſtobulus. Unfortunately remarkable for the death of John Baptiſt, where murdered by the command of Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee, and Lord of this Country of Peræa. 4 Laſa, or Leſhah, of which Gen. 10. 19. by the Greeks called Callirrhoe, by reaſon of the fair Fountains riſing from the Hills adjoyning, out of which iſſue Springs both of hot and cold Waters, as alſo bitter and ſweet; all which ſoon after joyned into one ſtream, make a wholeſome Bath, eſpecially for Convulſions and contraction of Sinews. 5 Medeba, famous for the defeat given to the Syrians and Ammonites by the conduct of Joab, 1 Chron. 19. 7. In the time of the Greeks laid with ſome other Towns of this Tract unto Cœlo-Syria; but in the declining times of the Seleucian Family, regained unto the Crown of Jewry by Alexander, the ſecond King of the Race of the Maccabees; and finally, with eleven others in thoſe parts, delivered by Antipater the Father of Herod into the hands of Aretas King of the Arabians, hoping thereby to gain him to the ſide of Hyrcanus the Son of Alexander, whoſe cauſe Antipater moſt favoured. 6 Boſor, or Bozra, a City of Refuge, and one of thoſe that were aſſigned unto the Levites on that ſide of the Water. 7 Livias, a Town new built by Herod, in honour of Livia, the Mother of Tiberius Cæſar: different from that which the Geographers call 8 Libias (though by ſome confounded) the ſame with Laban, mentioned Deut. 1. 1. 9 Kedemoth, another City of the Levites, giving name unto the adjoyning Deſart, from whence Moſes ſent his Ambaſſage to Sehon King of the Amorites. 10 Bamath-Baal, the chief City of the worſhippers of Baal, to which Balaam was brought by Balac to curſe the Iſraelites. 11 Heſhbon, the Regal City of Sehon King of the Amorites. 12 Adam, or the City Adam (Joſ. 3. 17.) where the Tribes paſſed dry-foot over Jordan, oppoſite unto Gilgal in the Tribe of Benjamin. Within this Tribe is the Mountain Nebo, from which Moſes took a view of the Land of Canaan: an Hill as it ſeemeth of two tops, whereof that which looketh towards Jerico, is called Piſgah: that which looketh toward Moab being called Hur. Here is alſo a high Hill named Peor, where the filthy Idol Baal was worſhipped alſo, who hath hence the addition of Baal-Peor.

5 The GADITES were ſo called from Gad the ſeventh Son of Jacob, begot on Zilpah the Hand-maid of Leah; of whom were found at the firſt Muſter when they came out of Ægypt, forty five thouſand, five hundred and fifty fighting men; and at the ſecond, when they entred the Land of Canaan, forty five thouſand bearing Arms. Their ſituation was betwixt the Reubenites on the South, and the half Tribe of Manaſſes upon the North; the River Jordan on the Weſt, and the Mountains of Arnon on the Eaſt; by which laſt parted from the dwellings of the Children of Ammon.

Cities of moſt obſervation, 1 Aroer, on the Banks of the River Arnon, the principal City of the Gadites. 2 Dibon, more towards Jordan; of great note in the time of Joſhua, and of no ſmall account in the time of Saint Hierom. 3 Beth-nimrah, of which Eſay propheſied that the Waters thereof ſhould be dried up; ſeated upon the Arnon alſo. 4 Nattoroth, more in the body of the Tribe. 5 Beth-haram, mentioned by Joſhuah, chap. 13. v. 27. by Joſephus called Betaramptha; new built by Herod Antipas, and called Livias, in honour of Livia the Wife of Auguſtus Cæſar, tranſlated into the Julian Family; who alſo laid unto it fourteen Villages, to make it of the greater Power and Juriſdiction. 6 Beth-ezob, by Joſephus called Vetezabra, the habitation of Miriam, who in the Siege of Hieruſalem, when deſtroyed by Titus, was compelled by Famine to eat her own Son. 7 Succoth, not far from the River Jordan, ſo called from the Tents or Booths which Jacob ſet up there, in his paſſage from Meſopotamia to the Land of Canaan: the People of which Town having denied relief to Gideon, as he followed the chaſe of Zebah and Zalmunna, were by him miſerably tortured at his return, under a Tribulum or Threſhing-Car, wherewith he tore their fleſh, and bruiſed their bodies. 8 Jabzor, another of the Regal Seats of Sehon King of the Amorites; firſt taken by Moſes, after recovered by the Moabites (as appeareth Iſa. 16. 8.) then poſſeſſed by the Ammonites; and finally from them regained by Judas Macchabeus, 1 Mac. 5. 8. 9 Mahanaim, ſo called from the Army of Angels which appeared to Jacob (Gen. 32. 2.) as ready to defend him againſt all his Enemies, the word in the Original importing a double Army. A place of very great ſtrength and ſafety, and therefore made by Abner the Seat Royal of Iſhboſheth, the Son of Saul, during the War he had with David; as afterwards the retiring place of David, during the Rebellion of his Son Abſalom. 10 Rogelim, the City of Barzillai the Gileadite, ſo faithful to David in that War. 11 Ramoth, or Ramoth Gilead ſo called from the ſituation of it near the Mountains of Gilead; a Town of ſpecial note in the Book of God: particularly, for the Pacification here made betwixt Jacob and Laban; for the death of Ahab King of Iſrael, who loſt his life in the recovery of it from the hands of the Syrians; and finally, for the Election of Jehu to the Crown of Iſrael, Anointed at the Siege hereof, by a Son of the Prophets. 12 Penuel, ſo called from the interview which the Lord pleaſed to beſtow there on his Servant Jacob, at his return out of Meſopotamia, mentioned Gen. 32. 32. the word ſignifying the place of the face or viſion of God: defaced by Gideon for their churliſh uſage of him, when he craved relief of them againſt the Midianites; to whom, together with the Moabites and Ammonites, the whole Territory appertaining to theſe two Tribes, did once belong. But being from them taken by Og King of Baſan, and Sehon King of the Amorites, it came by the overthrow of thoſe Kings to the hands of Moſes; by whom aſſigned unto the Tribes of Gad and Reuben, for their habitation. Continuing theirs till the fatal period of the Kingdom of Iſrael began to approach; at what time theſe two Tribes, with the half Tribe of Manaſſes lying on the Eaſt of Jordan, being carried captive into Aſſyria, by Tiglath Pileſer, the Moabites and Ammonites recovered a great part of their ancient dwellings. Of which poſſeſſed, till their ſubverſion by the Babylonians. Afterwards this whole Country coming into the hands of the Kings of Syria, had the name of Perea, for the reaſon formerly delivered. And being won piece-meal by the Maccabeans, came with the reſt of the Kingdom of Judah, to the poſſeſſion of Herod the Great; by whom bequeathed at his death unto Herod Antipas, one of his Sons, who held it, together with both Galilee's, under the name of Tetrarch of Galilee and Perea, as Joſephus; or of Galilee only, as Saint Luke; who being dead, it was beſtowed on Agrippa King of the Jews, of whom more hereafter.

2 ITURÆA.

ITURÆA hath on the East and North, Cœlo-Syria; on the West, the River Jordan; and on the South, Peræa. So called from Ietur one of the sons of Ismael, seated in this Tract; though lost by his Posterity to the Amorites, one of the most powerful Tribes amongst the Canaanites; and by them made the Patrimony of the Kings of Basan. The Race of which King ending in Og, the wealthiest and best parts hereof, were given by Moses to the half Tribe of Manasses; such parts of it as lay towards Damascus being seized on by the neighbouring Aramites, and made a Kingdom of it self, called the Kingdom of Gessur; and the more mountainous and unpleasant left to the first Inhabitants, as not worth the conquering. But both the Kingdom of Gessur, and those of the half Tribe of Manasses, shifting from one Lord to another, till they came into the hands of the Græcians; the name of Iturea revived again and grew into very good esteem: the Ituræans being reputed for good Soldiers, especially at the Bow and Arrows; of which thus the Poet in his Georgicks, lib. 2.

——Ituræas taxi torquentur in Arcus.
Of the best Ewe that can be had
The Ituræan Bows are made.

The whole Country in the times of the Greeks and Romans, divided into Trachonitis, and Ituræa specially so called: this last again being subdivided into Batanea, Gaulonitis, Auranitis, and Paneas. For whereas it is said in St. Luke's Gospel, that Philip the Brother of Herod was Tetrarch of Ituræa, and the Region of Trachonitis; and by Josephus, that for his Tetrarchy he had the Provinces of Trachonitis, Batanea, Gaulonitis, Auranitis, and Paneas: it must needs be that the four last mentioned Provinces make up that one, which by St. Luke is comprehended in the name of Ituræa; distinct from that of Trachonitis, though a part thereof. Inhabited in the time of Josephus, as in those of Joshuah and David, both by Jews and Syrians; the Syrians dwelling in the mountainous and more barren parts, the Jews in that which was assigned them in the time of Moses; the whole not yielding unto Galilee for extent of ground, but far inferiour to it for wealth and fruitfulness; not well inhabited where best, and in some places which are desart and very barren, hardly inhabited at all, or bearing any thing but wild fruits. Such was it in the time of Josephus, and not bettered since.

1 TRACHONITIS is that mountainous and hilly Country, which beginning at the borders of the Ammonites, where the Hills are called the Mountains of Gilead, extendeth it self Northwards as far as Libanus: the Hills in those parts being by the Jews called Galeed, Syrion, and Hermon; but by the Græcians, for the craggedness and roughness of them, by the name of Trachones. The people mischievously bent and much given to Witchcraft, as we find in Strabo. Montanam regionem incolunt Ituræi & Arabes, malefici omnes. So he, or his Translator rather, for I have not the original by me. Where by Arabians he meaneth those of Trachonitis, which every where he maketh to be the same with Ituræa, though differing from it as the Cotswold Countries do from the rest of Gloucestershire, or as a part doth from the whole, because united by that name into one Estate, at the time he lived in. Solet & Trachonitis Ituræa nomine appellari, saith the learned Grotius, according to the general consent of the ancient Writers. A people generally addicted to spoil and robbery, living especially on the spoil of those Merchants which traded to and from Damascus: till with some difficulty restrained to a more orderly life by Herod, on whom Augustus Cæsar had bestowed the Country, to the end that by strong hand he might hold them in.

The People and the Country by Josephus are thus described. "The Trachonites (saith he) have neither Towns, "nor Lands, nor Heritage, nor any other possessions, but "only certain Retreats and Caves under the ground, "where they lived like Beasts: and having made abun- "dant provision of water and victuals, were able to hold "out a long time against any Assailant. For the doors of "their Caves were made so narrow, that they could be "entred but by one at once; and the way to them not "direct, but full of turnings and windings, not possibly "to be found out but by the help of a Guide: The "whole Country naturally consisting of craggy Rocks. "the passages of the Caves once entred, they were found "to be very large and spacious; sufficient to contain great "multitudes of those Thievish people, who when they "had not opportunity to spoil their Neighbours, would "rob one another, and omitted no kind of wickedness; "being so accustomed to theft, that they could not live "otherwise. So he. But I conceive this is not meant generally of all the people, but only of some body of Theeves or Out-laws, which possessed themselves of the streights of the Mountains; and from thence issued to assault and spoil the Passengers. For it is afterwards expressed, that revolting upon the news of Herod's death, and committing new outrages; they no sooner heard of his recovery but they fled the Country, and betook themselves unto a strong Castle in Arabia, where they increased to the number of 1000 persons. So that there is no question to be made at all, but they had Villages & Lands, and Heritages, in the more civil parts hereof, though not amongst those Mountainers which Josephus speaks of. And amongst those, I reckon, 1 Gerra, 2 Elere, 3 Nelaza, 4 Adrama; all named by Ptolomy, and all placed by him in the Longitude of 70 degrees or upwards: more towards the East than well agreeth with the position of this Country, or with any part of Batanea, lying more towards the West than Trachonitis, though to that part of Ituræa, by him ascribed. Hither also I refer the City of 5 Tishbe, the Country of old Tobit, and of the Prophet Elias. 6 Tob, where Jephthe lived in exile, when oppressed by his brethren, till the necessities of his Country called him to the publick Government. 7 Hippus, at the foot of those Mountains, reckoned amongst the Cities of Cœlo-Syria, differing in soil as well as Etymology from another of the same name in Batanea: this being so named from the Mountain Hippus, under which it standeth; that from a Garrison of Horse there placed, as shall there be shewn. 8 Bathira, on the borders of this Country towards Batanea, built there by Herod, and planted with a Colony of the Jews which came thither from Babylon; the better to suppress the insolencies, and prevent the Robberies of this theevish people, accustomed (as before is said) unto spoil and rapine.

2 BATANEA is that part of Ituræa which anciently made up the best and greatest part of the Kingdom of Basan, whence it had this name: the changing of S. to T. as Assyria into Attyria, and the like, being usual among the Greeks. But that Kingdom being brought to an end by Moses, it was given to the half Tribe of Manasses, so called of Manasses the son of Joseph; of whom there were found at the first muster near Mount Sinai, 32200 men able to bear arms; which though consumed in the Desarts, yet were they of such a swift increase, that there were found 52700 fighting men of them, when they passed over Jordan. Their Territory on that side of the River, stretching from Jaboc on the South, to the Realm of Gessur on the North; and from the Mountains unto unto Jordan, East and West, was exceeding fertile: repleniſhed with all ſorts of Cattel, and adorned with the goodlieſt woods in that part of the world; the Oaks of Baſan being celebrated in the holy Scriptures.

It had in it ſixty fenced Cities when firſt conquered by thoſe of this Tribe. The principal of which, 1 Pella, formerly called Butis, but being rebuilt by Seleucus, the great King of Syria, was by him called Pella; with reference to a City of that name in Macedon, the birth-place of Alexander, to whom Seleucus owed his greatneſs and whole eſtate. Deſtroyed by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews, becauſe not willing to admit of the Law of Moſes, it was afterwards reſtored by Pompey to its former luſtre. Memorable in Church ſtory for the Admonition or premoniſhment, given by a voice from Heaven, to the Chriſtians dwelling at Hieruſalem, to remove thence and dwell at Pella, that ſo they might eſcape that deſtruction, which the Roman Army under Titus was to bring upon it. 2 Edrey, the Seat-royal of the Kings of Baſan. 3 Carnaim, on the banks of Jaboc, taken by Judas Maccabæus, who ſet fire on the Temple of the Idols there, and burnt therein all ſuch as fled thither for Sanctuary. 4 Ephron, a ſtrong City upon Jordan, taken and burnt by the ſame Judas Maccabæus, for refuſing to give a paſſage to his Army. 5 Jabeſh-Gilead, more near unto the Mountains, whence it had that Adjunct; memorable in the Scriptures, for the ſiege of Nahaſh King of the Ammonites, the raiſing of that ſiege by Saul, and the gratitude of the people towards him again, in taking down, embalming, and the entombing the bodies of him and his ſons, which the Philiſtines had moſt deſpightfully hanged on the walls of Bethſan. 6 Aſtaroth, a City of great note in the elder times: the ſeat of the Rephaims, a Giant-like Race of men, of whom deſcended Og of Baſan; from whence the Country adjoyning had the name of the Land of Giants. Aſtaroth, the Goddeſs of the Sidonians, had here her Worſhippers. 7 Gaulon, ſometimes poſſeſſed by Og of Baſan, and afterwards made one of the Cities of Refuge; of ſuch eſteem in the times of the Greeks and Romans, that the North part of Baſanitis or Batanea was called Gaulonitis; divided into Superiour and Inferiour, ſo often mentioned by Joſephus. And of this City or Country was that Judas of Galilee, ſpoken of in the fifth of the Acts, the Founder of the Gaulonites, or Anti-Herodians. 8 Gamala in the lower Gaulonitis, ſo called becauſe the Hill upon which it ſtood was faſhioned like the back of a Camel: invincibly ſituate, ſtrengthened both by Art and Nature; and at the laſt with ſo great difficulty and hazard of Veſpaſian's perſon, ſtormed by Titus, that the Romans in the heat of the execution, ſpared neither Women nor Children; Inſomuch that all the Inhabitants periſhed, except ſome few women which had hid themſelves. 9 Gadara, after ten months ſiege, taken and deſtroyed by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews; repaired by Pompey, and by Gabinius made one of the five ſeats of Juſtice for the whole Country of Paleſtine: the other four being Hieruſalem, Jericho, Hamath, and Sepphorah. 10 Geraſa, or Gergeſa, the chief City of the Gergeſites, the people whereof on the loſs of their Swine intreated our Saviour to depart out of their Coaſt, as St. Matthew hath it. St. Luke, and St. Marke aſcribe it to the people of Gadara. Not that the Cities were both one, or the Evangeliſts at odds in their Relation; but becauſe they were two neighbouring Cities, and their fields lay in common pour cauſe de vicinage, as our Lawyers phraſe it; and ſo the ſtory might be common to both alike. 11 Hippus, not far from the River Jordan, ſo called from a Garriſon of Horſe there placed by Herod: not far from the Mountain Hippus, as ſome ſuppoſe, which is too far off to have any influence upon it. 12 Julias, built by Philip the Tetrarch of Iturea, in the Southern border of his eſtate, in imitation of the like work of Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee and Perea; to ingratiate himſelf with Julia, the Wife of Tiberius Cæſar. 13 Abel, by Joſephus called Abel Maacha, for diſtinctions ſake: where Sheba that grand Rebel beſieged by Joab, and the City brought into ſome danger, had his head cut off, and thrown over the Wall, at the perſwaſion of a wiſe Woman of the Town. So the rebellion ended, and the City was ſaved.

North of Baſanitis, or Batanea, lyeth the Kingdom of GESSUR, by a latter name called AURANITIS, from Hauran, a chief City of it, mentioned by the Prophet Ezechiel, Chap. 16. 18. A Kingdom ſpoken of by Moſes as the Northern bound of the half Tribe of Manaſſes on that ſide of Jordan, Deut. 4. 14. by Joſhuah as the Northern border of the Kingdom of Baſan, Chap. 12. 5. but reckoned as a part of Syria becauſe held by the Aramites, 2 Sam. 15. 8. A Kingdom, though of no great Territory, yet of ſome conſideration in the eye of the World: David eſteeming the alliance of the Kings hereof of ſome uſe unto him; and therefore marrying Maacha the daughter of Tolmai King of Geſſur, by whom he had Abſalom and Tamar. And to this King it was that Abſalom fled on the killing of Ammon, abiding here three years, as the ſtory telleth us.

Conterminous to this, or at leaſt not very much diſtant from it was the petit Kingdom of Iſh-tob, which ſent 12000 men to the aid of the Ammonites againſt David: and not far of, but more towards Palmyrene, or Aram-Zobah, that of Beth-Rehob, Confederate in the ſame War alſo with the other Syrians, mention whereof is made in the ſecond Book of Samuel, Chap. 10. 6. Which whether they belonged to Syria, or to thoſe North parts of Iturea, is of no great certainty, and as little conſequence. For after this their greateſt and laſt exploit we hear no more news of them; ſwallowed up not long after (as it ſeems) by the Kings of Damaſcus.

To return therefore into Geſſur, as more certainly within the limits of Paleſtine, the places of moſt obſervation in it, were 1 Geſſur, then the chief City of it, and giving name unto the whole. 2 Mahacath, or Macuti, as ſome call it: conceived to be that Maacha mentioned 1 Chro. 19. 6. But of this we have already ſpoken in Comagena. 3 Chauran, or Hauran, mentioned by the Prophet Ezekiel, Chap. 47. whence theſe Northern parts of Paleſtine were called Auranitis. 4 Chatſar-Hevan, there mentioned by that Prophet alſo. 5 Uz, near the borders of Damaſcus, the firſt habitation of Uz the ſon of Aram, and Grandchild of Sem, by whoſe name ſo called: ſuppoſed to be the Founder of Damaſcus alſo, and that more probably, than that the Country thereabouts ſhould be the Land of Hus enobled by the dwelling and ſtory of Job. 6 Sueta, mentioned by Bochartus, and by ſome conceived to be the habitation of Bildad, ſirnamed the Shuchite, one of Job's three Friends, mentioned in that ſtory: but both of him, and Job himſelf, and the Land of Hus, we ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Arabia. More certainly remarkable for a Fort of great ſtrength and uſe, for the commanding of the Country; recovered from the Turks in the time of Baldwin the ſecond, by digging with incredible labour through the very Rock upon which it was ſeated.

As for the fortunes of this part, after the Tribes on that ſide of Jordan were led captive into Aſſyria, and the Kingdom of Damaſcus ſubverted by Tiglath-Pileſer; it followed the fortune of the Babylonian and Perſian Empires, together with which it came to the Macedonian Kings of the Race of Seleucus. In the declining of which Houſe it was conquered (or at leaſt the greateſt part thereof) by Alexander the ſecond, King of the Jews of the Race Race of the Maccabees; but loſt again for the moſt part in the time of Hircanus the ſon of Alexander; yet afterwards made up the greateſt part of the Kingdom of Chalcis; poſſeſſed by Ptolomy the ſon of Mennæus, in the beginning of Herod's greatneſs: who dying left it to Lyſanias his eldeſt ſon, murdered about ſeven years after by Marc. Antonie, on the ſuggeſtions of Cleopatra, who preſently ſeized on his Eſtates. But Antony and Cleopatra, having left the Stage, Lyſanias a ſon of the murdered Prince entereth next upon it, by the permiſſion of Auguſtus. During whoſe time Zenodorus, Lord of the Town and Territory of Paneas, farming his Demeſnes, and paying a very great rent for them; not only ſuffered the Trachonites to play the Robbers, and infeſt the Merchants of Damaſcus: but received part of the booty with them. Auguſtus, on complaint hereof, giveth the whole Country of Trachonitis, Batanea, Gaulonitis, and Auranitis, to Herod the Aſcalonite, before created King of Jewry; that by his puiſſance and power he might quell thoſe Robbers, and reduce the Country into order: Leaving unto Lyſanias nothing but the City of Abila, (of which he was the natural Lord) whereof and of the adjoyning Territory, he was afterwards created Tetrarch, by the name of the Tetrarch of Abilene, mentioned Luke 3. Nor did Herod's good fortune end in this. For preſently on the death of Zenodorus, not long after following, Auguſtus gave him alſo the Diſtrict of Paneas (of which we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Galilee) which with the Countries formerly taken from Lyſanias, made up the Tetrarchy of Philip his youngeſt Son; affording him the yearly Revenue of 100 Talents, which make 37500 l. of Engliſh Money. On Philip's death, his Tetrarchy was by Caius Caligula conferred on Agrippa the Nephew of Herod by his ſon Ariſtobulus; whom he had alſo dignified with the title of King: after whoſe death, and the death of Agrippa Minor, who next ſucceeded, his eſtates eſcheated to the Romans, and have ſince had the ſame fortune with the reſt of Paleſtine.

3 GALILEE.

GALILEE is bounded on the Eaſt, with Batanea, and part of the half Tribe of Manaſſes on that ſide of Jordan; on the Weſt, with the Sea-coaſt of Phœnicia, on the Mediterranean; on the North, with Anti-Libanus; on the South, with Samaria. So called, as ſome ſay, from Geliloth, a Phœnician word ſignifying as much as borders; becauſe the bordering Country betwixt them and the Jews,

The Country not ſo large as that on the other ſide of the River, but far more fertile; naturally fertile of it ſelf, every where producing excellent fruits without much pains to the Husbandman, and ſo well cultivated in old times, that there was hardly any waſte ground to be found in it. Thick ſet with Cities, Towns, and Villages in the time of Joſephus, and thoſe ſo populous and rich, that the ſmalleſt Village in it is affirmed by that Author, to comprehend no fewer than 15000 Inhabitants. A number beyond all parallel, if reported rightly, and not miſtaken in the tranſcripts. The people from their childhood very ſtout and warlike, not daunted for fear of want, or dread of penury: which ſeconded by their vaſt and almoſt incredible numbers, made them experimentally known for a tough piece of imployment when ſubdued by Titus. And this, together with their zeal to the Jewiſh Religion, makes it more than probable, that there was ſomething in them of the ancient Iſraelite; and that they were not meerly of an Aſſyrian, either ſtock or ſpirit; but intermixt with ſuch remainders of the Tribes as had ſaved themſelves, either by flying to the Mountains, or hiding themſelves in Caves and Deſarts, or otherwiſe were inconſiderable for ſtrength and numbers; in the great tranſplantation of them made by Salmanaſſer. And in this I am the more confirmed by their ſpeech or language, which was the ſame with that of the natural Jews, differing no otherwiſe from it than in tone, and dialect; as our Northern Engliſh doth from that which is ſpoke in London: as appeareth by the communication which the Damoſel had with St. Peter, in the High Prieſts Hall; in which ſhe plainly underſtood him, but ſo, that ſhe pronounced him for a Galilean. For had the Tranſplantation been ſo univerſal, as ſome think it was, and that both ſick and ſound, old and young had been carried away, and none but Colonies of the Aſſyrians to fill up their places; it muſt needs be that thoſe Newcomers would have planted their own language there, as the Saxons did on the extirpation of the Britains, on this ſide of the Severn. The like may be affirmed of the other Tribes on this ſide of Jordan, eſpecially Simeon and Dan, which either bordering upon Judah, or having their Lands and Cities intermingled with it, continued in great numbers in their former dwellings, under the Patronage or ſubjection of the Kings thereof.

Divided it was anciently into the Higher and Lower. The Higher ſo called from its ſituation more amongſt the Mountains, had alſo the name of Galilea Gentium, or Galilee of the Gentiles; and that either becauſe it lay betwixt the Gentiles and the reſt of the Jews; or becauſe a great part of it had been given by Solomon to the Kings of Tyre. But for what cauſe ſoever it was called ſo firſt, certain it is, it held this name unto the laſt; known by it in the time of the Apoſtles, as appeareth by St. Matthew's Goſpel, Chap. 4. 15. The Lower Galilee is ſituate on the South of the other, memorable for the Birth and Education of our bleſſed Saviour, whom Julian the Apoſtate called for this cauſe, in ſcorn, the Galilean: as for the ſame, the Diſciples generally had the name of Galileans impoſed upon them, till that of Chriſtian, (being a name of their own chooſing) did in fine prevail. Both, or the greateſt part of both, known in the New Teſtament by the name of Decapolis, or Regio Decapolitana, mentioned Mat. 4. 25. Mark 7. 31. So called from the ten principal Cities of it, that is to ſay, 1 Cæſarea Philippi. 2 Aſer. 3 Cedes-Nephthalim. 4 Sephet. 5 Chorazim. 6 Capernaum. 7 Bethſaida. 8 Jotopata. 9 Tiberias. And 10 Scythopolis. By which accompt it ſtretched from the Mediterranean to the head of Jordan, Eaſt and Weſt; and from Libanus to the hills of Gilboa, North and South; which might make up a ſquare of forty miles. With reference to the Tribes of Iſrael, the whole Galilee was ſo diſpoſed of, that Aſer, Nephthali, and a part of the Tribe of Dan, had their habitation in the Higher; Zabulun, and Iſſachar in the Lower: according to which diſtribution we will now deſcribe them.

1 The Tribe of NAPHTHALI, was ſo called from NAPHTHALI the ſixth Son of Jacob, begotten on Bilhah the hand-maid of Rachel; of whom at their firſt muſter were found 53400 fighting men, and at the ſecond 44540 able to bear arms. The Land allotted to them lay on the Weſt ſide of the River Jordan, oppoſite unto the Northern parts of Iturea; where before we left: having on the Weſt, the Tribe of Aſer, and that of Zabulun on the South. Within which Tract were certain Cities which they never conquered; and one which appertained to the Tribe of Dan: the chief of thoſe which were with-holden by the Gentiles, being Chalcis, Abila, Heliopolis, Cities accompted of as belonging to Cœlo-Syria; where they have been ſpoken of already.

That which did appertain to the Tribe of DAN, lay on the North-eaſt part hereof, confronting the moſt Northern Northern parts of Iturea, as before was said; where the the Danites held one Town of moment, besides many other of less note. And it seemed destined to this Tribe by some old Presage; the Eastern fountain of Jordan (which hath its original in this Tract, being called Dan, at the time of the defeat which Abraham gave to Chedorlaomer and his Associates, hundreds of years before this Tribe had ever a possession in it. Of which see Gen. 14.14. The Town of moment first called Leshem, by some Writers Laish; afterwards subject or allied to the Kings of Sidon, and upon strength thereof made good against those of Naphthali; but taken by some adventurers of the Tribe of Dan. Of whom it is said, Josh. 19. 47. That finding their own Country too little for them, they went up and fought against Leshem, which they took, and called DAN. Accompted after this exploit, the utmost bound Northward of the Land of Canaan, the length thereof being measured from Dan in the North, unto Beersheba in the South: remarkable for one of the Golden Calves which was placed here by Jeroboam, and for the two spring-heads of Jordan, rising near unto it. When conquered by the Romans, it was called Paneas, from a fountain adjoyning of that name: which with the Territory about it, after the death of Zenodorus, who held it of the Roman Empire, as before is said, was given by Augustus Cæsar, unto Herod the Great: and by him at his decease to Philip his youngest Son, with the Tetrarchy of Iturea and Trachonitis. By him repaired and beautified, it was called Cæsarea Philippi, partly to curry favour with Tiberius Cæsar; partly to preserve the memory of his own name: and partly to distinguish it from another Cæsarea, situate on the shore of the Mediterranean, and called Cæsarea Palestine: and being so repaired by him, it was made the Metropolis of that Tetrarchy. Mentioned by that name, Mat. 16.13. when St. Peter made that confession or acknowledgment of his Lord and Master, That he was CHRIST the Son of the living God. By King Agrippa, who succeeded him in his Estates, in honour of the Emperour Nero, it was called Neronia. But that, and the Adjunct of Philippi, were of no continuance: the Town being called Cæsarea Paneæ in the time of Ptolomy; and simply Paneas, as before, in the time of St. Hierom. Of this Cæsarea was that woman whom our Savior cured of the bloody Flux, by touching but the Hem of his Garment: who in a pious gratitude of so great a mercy, erected two Statues in this place, representing CHRIST, and her self kneeling at his feet; remaining here entire till the time of Julian the Apostate, by whose command it was cast down, and a Statue of his own set up in the place thereof, miraculously destroyed by a fire from Heaven. The City being at that time, and long before, an Episcopal See. Of less note there were, 1 Haleb, and 2 Reccath, both situate in the confines of it. And not far off the strong Town and Castle of 3 Magdala, (the habitation as some say of Mary Magdalen) where the Pharisees desired a sign of our Saviour CHRIST, as is said Mat. 15.39. & 16.1. the same, or some place near unto it, being by St. Mark (reporting the same part of the Story) called Dalmanutha, Chap. 8. 10, 11. But whether this Castle did anciently belong to these Danites, or to those of Naphthali, or to the Half Tribe of Manasses beyond the River, I am not able to determine.

Of those which were in the possession of the Tribe of NAPHTHALI, the Cities of most eminent observation were, 1 Hazor, or Azor, by Junius and Tremelius called Chatzar, the Regal City and Metropolis of all the Canaanites: memorable for the Rendezvous of 24 Canaanitish Kings in the War with Josuah; by whom it was taken notwithstanding, and burnt to ashes. But being afterwards re-built, it became the Regal Seat of Jabin the King of the Canaanites, who so grievously for the space of 20 years, afflicted Israel; till vanquished by Deborah and Barak. Destroyed in that War, and repaired by Solomon, it continued in so good estate in our Saviours time, that it was then one of the ten Cities of Decapolis; it being so still, but known by the name of Antiopia. 2 Capernaum, seated on the River Jordan, where it falleth into the Sea of Galilee; of which Country it was accompted the Metropolis, in the time of our Saviour, with whose presence and preaching often honoured, and one of the principal of the Decapolitans. Some marks of its former greatness it retained when St. Hierom lived, who confesseth it to be a Town of some good capacity; but so decayed in the time of Breidenbach and Brochardus that it consisted but of six poor Fishermens Houses. 3 Hamath, so called from Hamathi the son of Canaan, planted in these parts; a Town of such esteem in the elder times, that it was reckoned one of the Gates of the Land of Canaan; and therefore called in Scripture, Introitum Hamath, or the entrance of Hamath; as Num. 34.8. Josh. 13.5. Judg. 3.3, &c. Mistaken by St. Hierom for another of the same name in Syria, by the Greeks and Romans after them, called Epiphania. And in this I say he is mistaken; Epiphania being placed by Ptolomy two degrees more Eastward than Cæsarea Philippi, the most Eastern City of all Galilee; and two degrees more North than that, though the most Northern City of all Palestine. The ground of this mistake we have seen before. Won by the Syrians of Damascus, it was again recovered to the Crown of Israel, by Jeroboam the second Son of Joas: and after added by the Romans (as were Scythopolis, Pella, Gadara, and some others of this tract) unto Cœlo-Syria. 4 Kadesh, to difference it from others of the same name, called Kadesh-Naphthalim, high seated on the top of an Hill, as is said, Jos. 20.7. the King whereof being taken and slain by Josuah, it was made one of the Cities of Refuge, and given to the Levites. Most memorable for the Birth of Barak, who discomfited Sisera, Lieutenant of the Host of Jabin before mentioned, in the infancy of the Jewish State; one of the ten Cities of Decapolis, in the time of the Romans; and an Episcopal See in the first ages of Christianity. 5 Riblah, watered with the fountain of Daphnis, a little Riveret, which hereabouts falleth into Jordan: to which City, as some say (but I think erroneously) Zedechias the unfortunate King of the Jews was brought Prisoner unto Nebuchadnezzar, who caused his Children to be slain before his face, and then put out his eyes. But this I look on as an Error in them that say it, the Scene of this sad Tragedy being by Josephus laid in Riblatha (or Riblah) a City of Syria; the same which in succeeding times had the name of Antioch. And certainly Josephus, who for so long was Governour of both the Galilees, cannot be conceived to be so ignorant of the State of this Province, as to transfer that bloody execution to a City of Syria, if it had been acted in this Country. Nor can I think that this Riblah, none of the greatest Towns in the Tribe of Naphthali, should be capable of the Court and Train of that mighty Monarch; especially for so long a time, as he is said to have attended in that place, the success of his Forces then before Hierusalem, and the disposal of the State when the Town was taken. 6 Saphet, another of the Decapolitan Cities, strongly if not impregnably seated; one of the strongest Fortresses of the Western Christians, as it was after their expulsion of the Turks and Saracens; who from hence wasted and subdued all the neighbouring Country, as far as to the very Sea. The only place, not of this Country only, but of all the East, in which the Jews (who possessed a third part of this Town) have any shew or shadow of a Common-

Common-wealth. 7 Bethſhemeſh, mentioned Joſ. 19. 38. made tributary unto thoſe of this Tribe; though otherwiſe poſſeſſed by the Canaanites who held out againſt them. 8 Carthan, or Kiriathaim, ſituate near the Mountain which in following times was called Mons Chriſti, becauſe much frequented by our Saviour; who here made choice of his Apoſtles, as is ſaid Mark 3. 13. and where he made alſo that divine Sermon, recited in the 5. 6. and 7. Chapters of Saint Matthew's Goſpel. 9 Maſcoloth, a place of great ſtrength, but forced by Bacchides General of the Armies of the Kings of Syria, in the time of the Maccabees. 10 Cinnereth, a ſtrong City, after called Genneſareth; whence the Lake or Sea of Tiberias, neighbouring near unto it, is ſometimes called the Lake of Genneſareth, as Luke 5. 1. &c.

2 The Tribe of A S E R, was ſo called from Aſer, the eighth Son of Jacob, begotten on Zilpah the handmaid of Leah; of whom at their firſt Muſter when they came out of Ægypt, were found 41500 perſons able to bear Arms, all above twenty years of age; and at the ſecond Muſter when they entred the Land of Canaan, 53400 fighting men of the new increaſe. The portion of the Land allotted for their habitation was plentiful in Wine, Oyl, and Wheat, with great ſtore of Balſam; extending from the Coaſt of Sidon to Ptolemais, thirty miles in length; and from the Mediterranean Eaſtward, to the Tribe of Naphthali, ſome twelve miles in breadth. And though they never were of power to reduce the maritime Cities of Ptolemais, Tyre, Sarepta, and Sidon, under their command; yet had they in this narrow compaſs many beautiful Cities, and Towns of note; which they were quietly poſſeſſed of, till their ſubjugation by the King of Aſſyria.

The principal of thoſe, and others which have ſince been founded, 1 Aphek, memorable for the great ſlaughter there made of the Syrians, when beſieged by Ben-hadad; of whom 100000 were ſlain by the Iſraelites under the leading of Ahab, and 27000 killed by the fall of a Wall. 2 Gabala, mentioned by Ptolomy amongſt the mid-land Cities of Phœnicia; but belonging properly to this Tribe: one of thoſe twenty which were offered by Solomon unto Hiram, and upon his refuſal peopled by the Iſraelites. Fallen to decay, it was afterwards rebuilt and ſtrongly fortified by Herod the Great. 3 Giſcala, a Town of great ſtrength and conſequence; the birth-place of John or Jehocanan, one of the three ſeditious in Hieruſalem when beſieged by Titus, where he did more miſchief than the Enemy. Attempting to betray this City to the Power of the Romans, he gave the Tyrians an opportunity to be Maſters of it, by whom it was burnt unto the ground. But being rebuilt by the Authority of Joſephus, then Governour of Galilee for the Jews, it was afterwards yielded to Titus upon compoſition. 4 Cana, for diſtinction ſake called Cana-Major, to difference it from another of that name in the Lower Galilee, affirmed for the dwelling of that Woman, whoſe Daughter Chriſt delivered of an evil Spirit; called by Saint Matthew a Woman of Canaan, chap. 15. a Syro-Phœnician by Saint Mark, chap. 7. the Syro-Phœnicians of this Tract, being originally of the Race of Canaan, as was ſaid before. 5 Hethlan, or Cethlan, the furtheſt City of the North; as 6 Meſſal, or Maſheal, to the South, of the Tribe of Aſer. Of later date there are 7 Thoron, a ſtrong piece built by the Chriſtians on the Hills near Tyre, to hinder the excurſions of the Turks, when they held that City. Situate in a pleaſant and fruitful Soil, of great importance in the Wars of the Holy-Land, and giving name to the Noble Family of the Lords of Thoron; one of which being Conſtable to King Baldwin the third, lieth buried in the Chappel adjoyning to it; a curious piece of workmanſhip, and Dedicated by the name of the Bleſſed Virgin. 8 Belfort, ſo named from the ſtrength and beauty of it; ſeated on the high grounds near the River Naar, and memorable for the great Repulſe which Saladine the Victorious King of the Turks received before it; being forced to raiſe his Siege with diſhonour and loſs, on the coming of the Chriſtians Armies. Some other Forts here are of the ſame erection, as 9 Montfort, and 10 Mount-Royal (or Caſtrum Regium) belonging to the Dutch Knights (of whom more hereafter) and by them valiantly defended againſt the Infidels.

3 The Tribe of Z A B U L O N, was ſo called from Zabulon the tenth Son of Jacob, by his Wife Leah; of whom there muſtered near Mount Sinai 57400 able men; and 65000 at their ſecond Muſter, when they came into Canaan. Their Territory lay on the South of Aſer and Naphthalim, and the North of Zabulon, extending from the Lake of Tiberias, to the Mediterranean.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Jokneham, the King whereof was ſlain by Joſhuah, and the City given unto the Levites. 2 Zabulon, or the City of Men; a ſtately and magnificent City, till burnt to the ground by Ceſtius a Roman Preſident. 3 Cana-Minor, ſo called to difference it from the other in the Tribe of Aſer, the birth-place of Nathanael, and as ſome ſay of Simon Zelotes: memorable for the Marriage at which our Saviour wrought his firſt Miracle, of turning Water into Wine: Called in Saint John's Goſpel Cana of Galilee. 4 Berſabe, ſtanding in the Border betwixt both Galilees, and therefore ſtrongly fortified by Joſephus againſt the Romans. 5 Dothan, where Joſeph found his Brethren as they fed their Flocks; and where the Prophet Eliſha ſtrook blind the Syrians, who beſieged him in it. 6 Bethſaida, ſituate on the Sea of Galilee, one of the ten Cities of Decapolis, the birth-place of Peter, Andrew, and Philip; but moſt renowned for the Miracles and Preaching of our Lord and Saviour. 7 Nazareth, now a ſmall Village, ſeated in a Vale betwixt two Hills, not far from Ptolemais or Acon; upon one of which two Hills it was formerly built, where ſtill are to be ſeen the Ruins of many Churches here founded by the Chriſtians; it being in the flouriſhing times of Chriſtianity an Archbiſhops See. Of great eſteem for being, if not the birth-place, yet the habitation of the Virgin Mary; who was here ſaluted with thoſe joyful Tydings by an Angel, as ſhe ſate in her Chamber. Of which Chamber it is ſaid in the Popiſh Legends, That it was after the Virgin's death had in great reverence by the Chriſtians, and remained in this Town, till the Holy Land was ſubdued by the Turks and Saracens, Anno 1291. Then moſt miraculouſly tranſported into Sclavonia; but that place being unworthy of the Virgin's Divine Preſence, it was by the Angels carried over into the Sea-coaſt of Italy, Anno 1294. That place alſo being infeſted with Thieves and Pirates, the Angels removed it to the little Village of Loretto, where her Miracles were quickly divulged; inſomuch that Paul the ſecond built a moſt ſtately Church over this Chamber, and Xiſtus the fifth made the Village a City. And thus we have the beginning of our famous Lady of Loretto. Here did our Bleſſed Saviour ſpend a great part of his Life before his Baptiſm; from whence both he and his Diſciples had for many years the name of Nazarites. 8 Jotopata, ſtrongly ſeated on the top of a Mountain, near the Lake of Genneſareth, fortified by Joſephus in the War with the Romans, but after a long Siege taken by Veſpaſian, and in it Joſephus the Hiſtorian, chief Governour of the City, and of both the Galilees. 9 Tiberias, raiſed out of the

the ground by Herod the Tetrarch, and named thus in honour of Tiberius Cæsar. Situate in a fruitful Soil, on the edge of the Lake, which afterwards took the name of the Lake or Sea of Tiberias: this City being held to be the greatest of the Lower Galilee, and the Metropolis of the Decapolitan Region. In this City it was that our Saviour CHRIST called Saint Matthew from the Receipts of the Custom-house; and near unto it, that he raised the Daughter of Jairus. 10 Bethulia, more within the Land, seated on an high Hill, and of very great strength, as appears by the story of Judith and Holofernes. 11 Japha, a place of like strength, but forced by Titus; who in the fury of the Storm slew in it above 15000 persons, and carried away with him 2000 Prisoners. 12 Sephoris, or Sippora, the habitation of Joachim and Anna, the Parents of the Blessed Virgin; fortified with strong Walls by Herod the Tetrarch, who made it his Regal seat for the Lower Galilee. Before that time, it had been made by Gabinius, one of the five Juridical Resorts for the Palestinians: after that not without great difficulty forced by Vespasian; and is nothing now but a Castle known by the name of Zaphet, or Saffet. The ordinary Residence, for the most part, of the Turkish Zanziak, who hath the Government of this Province; and lately, if not still, of the Emirs of Sidon; Faccardine the late Emir having been made the Sanziak of it, before his falling off from the Turks. Not far off is Mount Tabor, famous for the transfiguration of our Saviour; for a sumptuous Chappel built on the top of the Hill in memory of it, by the Empress Helen, Mother of Constantine the Great: and for the Fountain of the Brook Chison, which presently divided into two Streams, runneth Eastward with the one to the Sea of Tiberias; and Westward with the other to the Mediterranean.

4 The Tribe of ISSACHAR is so called from Issachar the ninth Son of Jacob, by his Wife Leah, of whom were found at the first Muster 54400 fighting men, and 64300 at the second Muster. Their Lot, in the partition of the Land amongst the Tribes, fell betwixt Zabulon, and the half Tribe of Manasses on this side Jordan, North and South; extending from that River, to the Mid-land Sea. A Territory not so well repleniſhed with strong and eminent Cities, as was that before; nor yielding so much matter of observation in the course of business.

Those of most note in it, 1 Tarichæa, on the side of the Lake, about eight miles from Tiberias, of great strength both by Art and Nature; as witnessed the notable resistance which Vespasian found when he besieged it, by whom taken with great difficulty and incredible slaughter. 2 Cishion, a City of the Levites. 3 Remeth, called also Jarmuth, another City of the Levites; where the Hills of Gilboa take beginning, and thence range as far as the Mediterranean Westward, and the City of Jezreel towards the East. 4 En-hadda, near which Saul being discomfited by the Philistims, slew himself for grief; or else for fear of falling into the hands of those mercileſs Enemies, against whom he had so often returned victorious. 5 Naim, on the Banks of the River Chison, where CHRIST raised to life the Widow's Son. 6 Hapharaim, or Aphraim, on the Banks of the same River also. 7 Endor, of chief note for the Witch with whom Saul consulted; and the discomfiture of the Midianites by Gideon, who perished at Endor, and became as the dung of the earth, saith the Royal Psalmist. 8 Dabarath, one of the Cities of Refuge. 9 Arbela, not far from the Cave of the two Thieves, which so greatly infested Galilee in the time of Herod. And 10 of a later date the Castle of Pilgrims (Castrum Peregrinorum in Latine Writers) built by Raymund Earl of Tholouse, and after fortified by the Templars, for the security of such as travelled to the Holy Land; and for long time the Magazine or Store-house of the Western Christians: now called Tortora. Situate on the Shores of the Mediterranean, near a spacious Bay; on the North-side whereof Mount Carmel, described already.

As for those Galileans which succeed in the place of these Tribes, they were for the most part originally such as were sent hither by Salmanassar to inhabit there, when the Israelites were led away into endless thraldom; but intermixed with some Remainders of the ten Tribes, as was said before. And yet as if they had been wholly of the same extraction, with the rest of the Samaritan Nations, they were as much despised by the Jews (as witnesseth that scornful by-word, Can there any good come out of Galilee?) as the others were: though these as Orthodox in Religion as the Jews themselves. In which so zealously affected, that neither threats nor force could make them offer Sacrifice for the health of the Roman Emperours, whom they looked on as the Enemies of their Law and Liberty. Brought under the command of the King of Jewry by the Maccabæans, and with the rest of that Kingdom bestowed on Herod by the Romans. Left by him at his death to Herod sirnamed Antipas, the second of his Sons then living, with the Title of Tetrarch, which he enjoyed till the death of our Saviour: and on his deprivation (being banished to Lyons in France by the Emperour Caligula) bestowed upon Agrippa his Brothers Son, the first King of the Jews so named. Under him, and his Son Agrippa the second, it continued till the general Revolt of the Jewish Nation. Subjected by the Sword of Titus to the Power of the Romans, it hath since followed the same fortune with the rest of Palestine.

4 SAMARIA.

SAMARIA is bounded on the East with the River Jordan; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea; on the North, with Galilee; and on the South, with Judæa. So called from Samaria, the chief City of it, of which more hereafter.

The Country interchangably composed of Fields and Mountains, excellent good for Tillage, and full of Trees, yielding variety of Fruits; watered both with the Dew of Heaven, and many fresh Springs which the Earth affordeth it; occasioning thereby abundance of Grass, and consequently of Milch-beasts exceeding plenty. Heretofore very wealthy, and no less populous; but now famed for neither.

The People for the most part were originally the descendents of those Assyrians whom Salmanassar sent hither to possess the dwellings of the captive Israelites. Gentiles at first, till better instructed by the Lyons whom God sent amongst them, and after by the Priests sent hither by the Kings of Assyria; they entertained the five Books of Moses, and out of them learned the manner of the God of the Land, 2 Kings 17. Further than this they would not go, rejecting all the rest of the Sacred Canon; and no strict observers of this neither. And though at first they so embraced the Worship of God, as that they still adhered to the gods of the Nations where before they dwelt, as Nergal, Ashimach, Nibhas, Tartak, and the rest of that rabble, mentioned 2 Kings 17. yet they were soon taken off from those impieties, and became zealous in the worship of one only God; erroneous chiefly in the place which was destined to it. The wicked policy of Jeroboam the Son of Nebat, was as natural to them, as if they could not have poſſeſſed his Eſtates without it; and therefore would not ſuffer their people to go up to Hieruſalem to worſhip, as the Law required. More pious in this than their Predeceſſors, that they erected no Golden Calves in Dan and Bethel, or any other parts of their Dominions: though to divert the People from the Temple of God, they would have a Temple of their own. Mount Garizim, and the Temple there (of which more anon) as ſacred unto them, as that of Solomon to the Jews. Schiſmatical enough in this, but not Idolatrous and Schiſmatical too, as the others were; yet ſo conceited of themſelves, and their own perfections, that they imagined themſelves defiled by any company but their own. If therefore they had viſited any of their neighbour Nations, at their return they uſed to ſprinkle themſelves with Urine: but if by negligence, or the neceſſity of buſineſs, they had touched any not of their own Sect, they drenched themſelves, cloaths and all, in the next Fountain. But in this the Jews cried quittance with them, not ſo much as eating or drinking with them, nor having with them any kind of commerce or dealing, as appeareth John 4.9. but loading them, on the other ſide, with all the bitterneſs of reproach and hatred. There are two manner of people (ſaith the Son of Sirach) which mine heart abhorreth, and the third is no people: they that ſit on the Mountains of Samaria, the Philiſtims, and the fooliſh People that dwell at Sichem Eccluſ. 50. And this continued to the times of our Bleſſed Saviour, whom when the Jews endeavoured to reproach with their heavieſt calumnies, they could find out none ſo great, as to ſay that he was a Samaritan, and (which they thought came all to one) a man that had converſe with Devils and familiar Spirits.

Of theſe there were ſome Sects alſo, as amongſt the Jews, 1 The Doſitheans, ſo called from Doſitheus or Doſthai, ſuppoſed to be the firſt Prieſt who was ſent thither by the King of Aſſyria: agreeing with the Jews in Circumciſion, and the Sabbath, and the Doctrine of the Reſurrection, (in which laſt they differed from the common Samaritan, who was a Sadducee in that point) but differing from them in ſome points of as ſignal conſequence. For they rejected the Writings of all the Prophets, as not θεοπνευστοι, inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt; they ate of nothing that had life, like the Pythagoreans; abſtained from Marriage, like the Eſſenes; and in the point of Sabbath-keeping out-went the Phariſees; it being reſolved upon amongſt them, That in what poſture ſoever a man was found on the Sabbath-day morning, in the ſame he was to continue without alteration the whole day after. 2 The Selvians, ſo called from Sebva, or Sebviah, one of the Companions of that Doſthai; who though they kept all the publick Feſtivals, as the Jews and the other Samaritans did, yet they kept them not at the ſame time: transferring the Paſſeover to Auguſt, the Pentecoſt to Autumn, and the Feaſt of Tabernacles to the time of the Paſſeover; not ſuffered for that cauſe to worſhip in the Temple of Garizim. 3. The Gortheni, who kept the ſame Feſtivals, and obſerved the ſame times of thoſe Solemnities, as the Law required; but kept only one of the ſeven days of thoſe great Feſtivals, and laid by the reſt, as days of ordinary labour. In other points not differing from the other Samaritans, who though at firſt poſſeſſed of all the Land belonging to the Ten Tribes of Iſrael, were yet reduced at laſt to a narrower compaſs: ſhut up betwixt Galilee and Judæa, within the ancient Territories of the Tribe of Ephraim, and the other half Tribe of Manaſſes, on this ſide of the Water.

1 The half Tribe of MANASSES on this ſide of Jordan, was ſituate betwixt Iſſachar on the North, and the Tribe of Ephraim on the South; extending from the Mediterranean, to the Banks of that River. In which the places of moſt conſequence and conſideration, 1 Beth-ſan, environed almoſt with the Land of Iſſachar, ſituate near the Banks of Jordan, where it begin-neth again to ſtreighten and be like it ſelf, having been almoſt loſt in the Sea of Galilee; firſt called Niſa, and ſo called by Bacchus, or Liber Pater, the Founder of it, in memory of his Nurſe there buried; but the Children of Manaſſes not being able to expell the Natives out of it, as in other places, gave it the name of Beth-ſan, or the Houſe of an Enemy. Afterwards when the Scythians invaded thoſe parts of Aſia, and compelled ſome of the Jews to ſerve them againſt the reſt (whom notwithſtanding their good Service they put all to the Sword) they new-built this City: called therefore by the Græcians, Scythopolis, or the City of Scythians; and by them reckoned as a City of Cœlo-Syria. Memorable in the Old Teſtament for the hanging of the dead bodies of Saul and his Sons on the Walls hereof, by the barbarous Philiſtims; in the time of our Saviour, for being the greateſt of all the Decapolitan Region; as afterwards in the flouriſhing times of Chriſtianity, for being the See of an Archbiſhop: now nothing but a deſolate Village, and an heap of Rubbiſh, out of which many goodly Pillars, and other pieces of excellent Marble, are often digged. 2 Terzah, uſed by the Kings of Iſrael for their Regal Seat, till the building of Samaria, and the removal of it thither. 3 Acrabata, the Territory whereof called Acrabatena, was afterwards made one of the ten Toparchies of Judæa. 4 Thebes, not far from Samaria, where the Baſtard Abimelech was wounded with a Stone which a Woman threw at him from the Wall; and perceiving his death to be drawing on, commanded his Page to ſlay him, that it might not be ſaid he periſhed by the hands of a Woman. 5 Ephra, or Hophra, in which Gideon dwelt: near whereunto there ſtood an Altar conſecrated to Baal, defaced by Gideon: and not far off, the fatal Stone on which Abimelech ſlew 70 of his Brethren. An heatheniſh cruelty, and at this day practiſed amongſt the Turks. 6 Aſophon, an ignoble Village, made famous only for the great and notable defeat which Ptolomy Lathurus here gave to Alexander the King of the Jews: which Victory he uſed with ſo great barbarity, that he ſlew all the Women as he paſſed along, and cauſed young Children to be ſod in Caldrons. 7 Bezek, the City of the bloody Tyrant Adoni-Bezek, whoſe Story (touched upon before) ſee at large in Judges, chap. 1. By Joſephus it is called Bala, and ſeemeth to be the place in which Saul aſſembled the chief ſtrength of Iſrael and Judah, to the number of 33000 men, for the relief of Jabeſh-Gilead, then diſtreſſed by the Ammonites. 8 Jezreel, the Royal City of Ahab, and the Kings of his Race, ſituate on the foot of the Mountains of Gilboa: So near unto the Borders of Iſſachar, that ſome have placed it in that Tribe. Memorable in ſacred Story for the ſtoning of Naboth by the procurement of Jezebel, and the breaking of Jezebel's neck, by command of Jehu. A City which gave name to the Plains adjoyning, called the Valley or Plains of Jezreel (but by the name of Campus Magnus in the Book of Macchabees, lib. 1. cap. 10.) extending from Scythopolis to the Mediterranean: famous for the great and many Battels which have been fought in it; as namely, of Gideon againſt the Midianites, of Saul againſt the Philiſtims, of Ahab againſt the Syrians, of Jehu againſt Jehoram; and finally, of the Chriſtians againſt the Saracens. 9 Megiddo, unfortunately obſervable for the death of the good King Joſiah, ſlain hereabouts in a Battel againſt againſt Pharaoh Necho King of Ægypt; and before that, of Ahaziah King of Judah, who received his death-wound at Gaber, a Town adjoyning, when purſued by Jehu. 10 Dora, or Dor as the Scripture calls it, on the Mediterranean, not far from the Caſtle of Pilgrims in the Tribe of Iſſachar. A very ſtrong and powerful City, and therefore choſe by Tryphon for his City of Refuge, who having firſt treacherouſly taken, and barbarouſly murdered Jonathan the Maccabæan, after he had received 200 Talents for his Ranſom; and no leſs vilanouſly ſlain Antiochus the ſixth of Syria, his Lord and Maſter whom he ſucceeded in his Throne, was by Antiochus the ſeventh, with an Army of 120000 Foot, and 8000 Horſe, beſieged in this City, and moſt deſervedly put to death. 11 Cæſarea, anciently called the Tower of Straton, from Straton a King of the Zidonians; new-built by Herod, and by him not only beautified with a large Theatre and Amphitheatre, both of poliſhed Marble, with a fair and capacious Haven, which with incredible charge and pains he forced out of the Sea. And having in twelve years brought it to perfection, in honour of Druſus Cæſar, Son-in-law of Auguſtus, he cauſed one of the chief Towers thereof to be called Druſus, the City it ſelf to be called Cæſarea Paleſtinæ. The ſtatelineſs and magnificence of which City (when firſt built by Herod) he that liſts to ſee, may find the ſame deſcribed at large by Joſephus the Jew, in the 15*th*. Book of Antiq. cap. 13. In this City was Cornelius baptized by Saint Peter: Here did Saint Paul plead in defence of Chriſtianity, before Feſtus then the Roman Preſident: and finally, Here Herod Agrippa was ſmitten by an Angel, and devoured by Worms, after his Rhetorical Oration, which his Paraſites called the voice of God, and not of man. The Metropolis of all Paleſtine, when one Province only; as afterwards of Paleſtina Prima, when by Conſtantine, or ſome of his Succeſſors, Cantoned into three: the firſt Biſhop hereof being ſaid to be that Cornelius, whom Saint Peter here initiated in the Faith of CHRIST. 12 Antipatris, another City of Herod's building, in the place where Kapharſalama, mentioned 1 Maccab. 7. 31. had ſometimes ſtood; who in honour of his Father Antipater, gave it this new name. Near hereunto did Judas Maccabæus overthrow a part of Nicanor's Army: and not far off, the Mountain where Obadiah the Steward of Ahab hid the hundred Prophets, whom he preſerved againſt the fury of Jezebel: Finally, To this City it was that Saint Paul was conveyed by the command of Lyſias to ſave him from the Jews, who lay in wait to deſtroy him.

2 The Tribe of EPHRAIM was ſo called from Ephraim, the ſecond and youngeſt Son of Joſeph; of whom were muſtered in the Deſarts 45000 fighting men, and 32500 in the Land of Canaan; where their Lot fell betwixt this half Tribe of Manaſſes, on the North; and the Tribes of Dan and Benjamin, upon the South; extending from the River Jordan, to the Mediterranean.

Places of moſt conſideration, 1 Saron, on the Mediterranean, to the South of Antipatris, mentioned Acts 9. 35. and giving name unto that fruitful Valley which reacheth from Cæſarea Paleſtinæ, as far as Joppa. 2 Lydda, upon the ſame Shores, where Saint Peter (virtute Chriſti, non ſua) cured Æneas of the Palſey. By the Gentiles it was called Dioſpolis, or the City of Jupiter; but by the Chriſtians, in the time of the holy Wars, it had the name of Saint George's; partly from a magnificent Temple which the Emperor Juſtinian there erected to the honour of that bleſſed Martyr; but principally from an opinion which they had amongſt them, that he ſuffered Martyrdom in that place. An opinion founded on miſtakes, firſt of a Cænotaphium, or an empty Monument erected in this City to preſerve his memory, for the Grave, in which he was interred: the other, in taking the word Paſſio, uſed in the Martyrologies, for the place of his ſuffering, which is meant only of the Story or Celebration. But howſoever they entituled it by the name of Saint George's, as was ſaid before, and made it on that account alſo an Epiſcopal See. 3 Ramatha, or Arimathea, a City of the Levites, ſuppoſed to be the dwelling of Joſeph, who begged of Pilate the Body of CHRIST. 4 Helon, or Ajalon, a City of the Levites alſo; by ſome placed, and perhaps more fitly, in the Tribe of Dan, and there we ſhall hear further of it. 5 Themnath-Cares, given by the Iſraelites to Joſhuah, who enlarged the ſame, and made it a ſtrong and goodly City; honoured with the Sepulchre of that brave Commander, one of the Nine Worthies of the World; and afterwards made one of the Prefectures of Judæa, by the name of Thamnitica. 6 Adaſa, or Adarſa, where Judas Maccabæus with 3000 Jews overthrew the Army of Nicanor. 7 Jefleti, called otherwiſe Pelethi, which gave name and birth unto the Pelethites, part of David's Guard, under the governance of Benaiah. 8 Silo, ſituate on the top of a lofty Mountain; the Receptacle of the Ark, till taken and carried thence by the Philiſtims. 9 Michmaſh, the habitation of Jonathan, one of the Maccabean Brethren, ſituate in the middle way from Samaria to Hieruſalem, now called Byra. 10 Naioth, where Saul propheſied. 11 Bethoron, a City of the Levites, beautified by Solomon, but made more famous by the great and notable overthrow which Judas Maccabæus here gave to Lyſias. 12 Pirhathon, on the Mountain Amelec, the City of Abdon the Judg of Iſrael. 13 Sichem, called alſo Sichor, the habitation in the old times of Sichem the Father of that Hamor, who deflowred Dinah the Daughter of Jacob; the City for that cauſe deſtroyed by Simeon and Levi; repaired again, and afterwards by Abimelech levelled with the ground; a third time re-edified by Jeroboam the Son of Nebat, and a third time ruined by the Kings of Damaſcus: yet notwithſtanding theſe blows, it was of good eſteem in the time of our Saviour, who abode in it two days, and converted many. Memorable for Jacob's Well, which was very near it; more for its neighbourhood to Mount Garizim, where the Bleſſings were to be read to the People (of which ſee Deut. 11. 27. and Joſ. 8. 23.) and where afterwards was built a magnificent Temple for the uſe of the Samaritan Nation, at the coſt and charge of Sanballat, a great Prince amongſt them. Who having married his Daughter to Manaſſes, Brother of Jaddus the High Prieſt of the Jews, and fearing he would put her away, to avoid the Sentence of Excommunication, which he was involved in for that Match, promiſed him, that if he would retain her, he would build a Temple anſwerable unto that of Hieruſalem, and make him the High Prieſt thereof, which was done accordingly. But this Temple had not ſtood above two hundred years, when deſtroyed by Hyrcanus the Maccabæan; the place remaining notwithſtanding a place of worſhip, as appeareth John 4. 20. As for the City of Sichem, or Sichor, it was by the Grecians called Nicopolis, afterwards made a Colony by the Emperour Veſpaſian, who cauſed it to be called Flavia Cæſarea: of which Colony was that renowned Juſtin Martyr. 14 Samaria, the Metropolis of the Kingdom of Iſrael, founded by Omri one of the Kings thereof, on the top of the Mountain Samron (which overlooketh all the bottom as far as the Sea-coaſt) whence it had the name. A ſtately and magnificent City, conjectured by Brochardus, who had traced the ancient Ruins of it, to be bigger than Hieruſalem, Deſtroyed by the Aſſyrians when they carried away the Ten Tribes; but afterwards repaired again, and again beaten to the ground by the Sons of Hyrcanus above-mentioned. But Herod the Great, who was pleaſed with the ſituation of it, did again re-edifie it, in more ſtately manner than before; as appeareth by the great ſtore of goodly Marble Pillars, and other carved Stones, in great abundance found amongſt the Rubbiſh: and having rebuilt it to his mind, incloſed it with a ſtrong wall, and beautified it with a goodly Temple; in honour of Auguſtus Cæſar, whom the Greeks call Sebaſtos, he cauſed it to be called Sebaſte. Memorable after this new erection from the Sepulcre of John Baptiſt, and being made the Metropolis of Paleſtina Secunda, (by conſequence an Archbiſhops See) now nothing but a few cottages filled with Grecian Monks.

Nor were the Samaritans themſelves (ſo called from this their principal City) leſs ſubject to the viciſſitudes and change of fortune, than the City was. Deſcended for the moſt part from the Aſſyrians, and ſuch other Nations, as were ſent thither to fill up the empty places of the Captive Tribes: but called Cutheans by the Jews, either becauſe moſt of them were of Cuth, a Region of Perſia, as Joſephus telleth us, which is now called Chuzeſtan; or elſe by way of ſcorn, for Chuſites, as being of the Poſterity of the accurſed Cham, by Chus his ſon. Having imbraced the Law of Moſes, they began to think better of the Jews than the other Nations, but fitted their affections to the change of times: it being the obſervation of the ſaid Joſephus, that as often as the Jews were in any proſperity, then they called them Cozins, and would be of the ſame Nation with them; but when their fortunes were on the declining hand, then they were ſtrangers which came thither out of forrein Nations, and no kin at all. Nor doth he wrong them in that Character. For when Alexander the Great had granted the Jews a releaſe of the ſeventh years tribute, the Samaritans deſiring the like exemption, pleaded for themſelves Ἐβραῖοι μὲν ἐσμεν, &c. that they indeed were very Hebrews, though it pleaſed the Sidonians to call them Sichemites. But when Antiochus raged againſt them with fire and ſword, the Samaritans ſent Letters to him, diſclaiming all relation to thoſe of Judah, and challenging their deſcent from the Medes and Perſians. Nor were they content only to diſclaim all kindred with the Jews, in the times of trouble, when any perſecution roſe againſt them for the Law of God; but did them alſo all ill Offices, and joyned with their Enemies to their deſtruction: eſpecially after the Jews had refuſed to admit of their aſſiſtance, in the re-building of the Temple; which after that they hindred with great malice, and no leſs perverſeneſs. But the fortune of the Jews did at laſt prevail, the whole Nation being ſubdued by Hyrcanus the Maccabæan, who deſtroyed their Schiſmatical Temple alſo, and levelled Samaria it ſelf to the very ground. After this, ſubject to the Jews, who poſſeſſed themſelves of moſt of their Cities, and contracted them into a narrower compaſs than they were in formerly: but ſtill ſo hated and contemned, that nothing was able to appeaſe that inveterate malice, which they had conceived; till both Nations were extirpated in the time of Adrian, and made to ſeek their dwellings in other Countries. Made afterwards a Province of the Roman Empire, by the name of Paleſtina Secunda; ſucceſſively ſubject with the reſt, to the Perſians, Saracens, and Turks, who do now poſſeſs it.

5 JUDÆA.

JUDÆA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Dead Sea, and the River Jordan; on the Weſt, with the Mediterranean; on the North, with Samaria; and on the South with Idumæa. So called from the Jews, or people of the Tribe of Judah, who after their return from the Captivity of Babylon, communicated the name of Iew unto all the Nation, as they did that of Iudæa to this part of the Country.

The Soil of the ſame nature with that of Samaria, before deſcribed; but that it is more ſwelled with Hills, and more ſtored with Rivers, though of no great fame. And therefore we ſhall ſay no more, as to the general character and deſcription of it; but look on the particular parts as it ſtood divided betwixt the Philiſtims, the Tribes of Dan, Simeon, Judah, and Benjamin.

And firſt, the PHILISTIMS commanded all the Sea-coaſts from the South of Phœnicia, to the North of Idumæa; or from the Caſtle of Pilgrims, to the City of Gaza, taking both into the accompt. But Joppa, and all the Towns on the North of that, being taken in by the Iſraelites, they held no more than ſix Towns of any importance, with the Countries and Territories adjoyning to them: but thoſe ſo populous and ſtrong, that by their own power, and the aſſiſtance of the Edomites, and the reſt of their neighbours, not well affected to the Tribes, they kept them under terms, and lay more heavy on them than all the Canaanites together; as will appear when we ſum up the ſtory and ſucceſſes of their affairs.

In the mean time let us ſurvey the Country which was holden by them, notwithſtanding all that could be done againſt them by the Kings of Iſrael: and therein we ſhall find worth our obſervation, 1 Geth, or Gath, the birth-place of the huge Giant Goliah, ſlain by David; as alſo of many others of the like Gigantine proportion, ſlain by David's Worthies. Deſtroyed by David, or rather ſlighted and diſmantled, it was re-built by Rehoboam the ſon of Solomon; but again razed by Ozias King of Judah, who found the Philiſtims there garriſoned but ill neighbours to him, and finally laid waſte by Hazael the King of Syria. Not much regarded after that, though it kept the name of Gath in St. Hierom's time; till in theſe laſt Ages Fulk the King of Hieruſalem erected there a new Caſtle, from the ancient ruins. From hence, as I conceive, the Idol-Dagon, ſo much worſhipped by theſe Philiſtims, was by the Syrians and Phœnicians called Ater-Gatis; and not from Gatis a Syrian Queen, as is ſaid by many. 2 Accaron, on the South of Gath, of great wealth and power, and one that held out notably againſt the Danites and Judæans. Much ſpoken of in the holy Scriptures, but for nothing more than their Idolatrous worſhip of Belzebub, that is to ſay, the Lord of Flies: ſo called by the Jews, either in contempt of the Idolatries committed to him, or becauſe of that great multitude of Flies which attended his Sacrifices, whereof ſome ſay, the Temple of Hieruſalem was wholy free. But whatſoever he was, or for what cauſe ſo named, certain it is that he was here had in eſpecial honour, and therefore called in Scripture the God of Accaron: and hither Ahaziah the King of Iſrael ſent his Meſſenger, to enquire of this Idol, concerning his health. 3 Aſhdod, (by the Græcians called Azotus) memorable in Holy Writ for the Temple of Dagon, into which the Ark of the Lord was brought; that Idol falling down before it, as not able to ſtand upright when the Ark ſo near. Near to this Town was Judas Maccabæus overcome and ſlain by Bacchides, Lieutenant to Demetrius the King of Syria; and not long after, the Town it ſelf was taken by Jonathan the brother of Judas, who put the Citizens to the ſword, and burnt all ſuch as fled into the Temple of Dagon, together with the very Idol, conſumed in the ſame fire with the Idolaters. Re-built by Gabinius a Roman General, in the times of Chriſtianity it was was made an Episcopal See; and continued a fair Village till the days of St. Hierom. 4 Ascalon, on the Sea-side also, said to be built by Ascalus a noble Lydian, employed by his King in a War against the Syrians; but this very uncertain. One of the chief and strongest Cities of the Philistims, of great note amongst the Gentiles for a Temple dedicated to Dirceto, the Mother of Semiramis, here worshipped in the form of a Mermaid: and for another of Apollo, wherein Herod the Father of Antipater, and Grandfather of Herod the Great (from his birth in this City called Herod the Ascalonite) is said to have served as the Priest. It had in the first times of Christianity, an Episcopal See; and in the course of the holy Wars, was beautified with a new wall, and many fair buildings by King Richard the first. 5 Gaza, more within the Land, on the River Besor; a fair and strong Town, formerly called Assa, from whence perhaps the name of Gaza was derived by the Heathens; or else it was so called by the Persians, in regard that Cambyses here laid up the Treasure which he had provided for the War of Ægypt, the word Gaza, in the Persian Language, signifying treasures. Of which Cambyses it is said by Pomponius Mela, Cum armis Ægyptum peteret, huc belli opes & pecuniam invehi curavit. After which it was made the Receipt of Treasury, in which the Persians laid the Tributes of the Western Provinces, whence all riches had in time the name of Gaze. Once Caleb took it, but not able to hold it against the Philistims, he again deserted it. Destroyed by Alexander the Great, and re-built again, it made notable resistance against the Maccabees; till at last forced by Simon, the brother of Judas, who liked the place so well, tha he intended to have made it his place of residence: not so decayed in length of time, but that it was a goodly City in the days of Brochardus. And it is still the best of all this Coast, built on an hill encompassed with rich and pleasant Vallies; the buildings low and mean, as in other places: but some of them adorned with Pillars of fair Parian Marble, digged out of the remaining ruins. 6 Maioma, the Port Town of Gaza, but made a City of it self by Constantine, by whom called Constantia: but restored again by Julian unto those of Gaza, and by him commanded to be called Gaza Maritima.

These were the chief places holden by the Philistims, a strong and Giantlike race of men, such as the Scripture calls by the name of Anak, or the Sons of Anak. Originally descended from Casluhim, and Copthorim, of the Race of Mizraim the son of Cham: as appeareth both by the common consent of ancient Writers, and plain Texts of Scripture, Jer. 47. 4. and Amos 9. 7. These being setled first in the borders of Ægypt and Idumæa, where the Casluhim gave name unto the Province of Casiotis, and the Mountain Casius; proceeded Northwards and subdued the Avim, a Canaanitish people, planting themselves in their habitations, as is said expressly Deut. 2. 23. Here Abraham found them in his time, and here they were when Isaac went down to Gerar. Governed at first by one King whom they called always by the name of Abimelech, as the Ægyptians theirs by the name of Pharaoh; sometimes by five, according to the number of their principal Cities; but still united in the times of approaching dangers. Too strong to be subdued by the Tribes of Israel, they made head against them, and mastered them at several times, for above 150 years, Tyrannizing over them, till broken by Sampson, and for a time kept off by Samuel. Recovering again, they vanquished the Israelites in the time of Saul, whom they discomfited, and hanged his dead body barbarously on the Walls of Bethsan. But David, a more fortunate Prince, overthrew them in many set battels, and at length took the Town of Gath, one of the strongest Towns they had; and by that means so weakned them, that they durst not stir all the time of David, nor a long while after. Beginning to be troublesome in the days of Ozias King of Judah, they were warred on by him, their Army overthrown, Ita and Amcia, two of their strong Forts, took and razed; and the Town of Gath again dismantled. In the time of the Idolatrous Achaz associating with the Edomites, (who evermore attended the destruction of Judah) they brake out again; took Bethsemes, Ajalon, Timnah, and some other Towns; carried away many Prisoners, and slew much People: But the good King Ezekiah made them pay dear for it, taking from them the greatest part of their Country, betwixt Gath and Gaza. Which notwithstanding, they recovered to so great esteem, that the whole Country had from them the name of Palestine. But broken by degrees by the Maccabæans, they lost both their power and reputation, passing in common estimate as a part of Jewry; the fortunes of which it followed for the times succeeding.

2 The Tribe of DAN is so called from Dan the fifth son of Jacob, by Bilhah the hand-maid of Rachel, of whom were mustered at Mount Sinai 62700 fighting men; and 66400 at the second muster, in the Land of Canaan: where their lot fell betwixt Ephraim, on the North; Simeon, on the South, the Tribe of Benjamin, on the East; and the Mediterranean on the West.

Places of most note in it, 1 Joppa (now called Jaffa) once a famous Mart-Town, and the only Haven to Judæa in foregoing times: the Town where Jonah took ship to fly unto Tarshish; where Peter raised Dorcas from death to life; and where he lying in the house of one Simon a Tanner, was in a Vision taught the conversion of the Gentiles. This City they report to have been built before the flood. And here they say reigned Cepheus, whose Daughter Andromeda was by Perseus delivered from a Sea-monster; some of whose bones the people used to shew to strangers, even to the flourishing of the Romans. Just as our Citizens of Coventry and Warwick, shew the bones of the Dun-Cow of Dunsmeur heath, and the bones of I know not what Giant, slain by Guy Earl of Warwick. In the time of the Maccabees it was garrisoned by the Syrians; who having in the Port a Fleet of good power and strength, invited 200 of the chief Citizens to go aboard with them, and there drowned them all: for which their Fleet was fired by Judas, and such as did escape the Fire, fell upon the Sword. Twice taken by the Romans, and the second time burnt unto the ground: new walled, and fortified with Towers, by King Lewis of France, in the year 1250. the Holy Wars then drawing to their finall end. Now nothing standing of it but two little Turrets where are certain Harquebusses for defence of the Haven, none of the best; defended from the South and West winds with eminent Rocks, but exposed to the fury of the North; which makes it more unsafe than the open Seas, when enraged by Tempests. Not much frequented by the Merchants, who trade here but for Cottons only; and hold their Factory not far off in a Town called 2 Rama, by the Moors called Ramula, situate in a sandy plain, on the rising of a little Hill; built of Free-stone, but the Streets thereof narrow, and the Houses contemptible. More beautiful in the ruins of some Christian Churches, and a Monastery built by Philip the Good of Burgundy, where the house of Nicodemus stood, than in any of the remaining Edifices. 3 Jamnia, near Joppa, where Judas burnt the rest of the Syrian Fleet, the flame whereof was seen to Hierusalem, 240 Furlongs off: mentioned by Ptolomy, and in the times of Christianity an Episcopal See; now not discernable in the ruins. 4 Cedar or Cedron, fortified against the Jews by Cendebæus one of the Lieutenants of Antiochus, who hereabouts was overthrown thrown by the Maccabees. 5 Modin, a ſmall Town, but honoured with the birth and ſepulchre of thoſe Maccabæans; the Sepulchre being ſeven Marble Pillars of ſo great an height, that they ſerved as a mark for Sea-men. 6 Gibbethon, in the Country called Makats, a City of the Levites, but afterwards poſſeſſed by the Philiſtims, at the ſiege whereof Nadab, the ſon of Jeroboam King of Iſrael, was ſlain by Baaſha, who ſucceeded; and Omri choſen King on the death of Zimri. 7 Cariathiarim, where the Ark of the Lord was kept for 20 years, in the houſe of Aminadab; that is to ſay, from the ſending it home by the Philiſtims, till brought to Hieruſalem by David. 8 Beth-ſemes, to which the Ark was brought by a yoke of Kine, turned looſe by the Philiſtims: for irreverent looking into which there were ſlain by the immediate hand of God, no fewer than 50070 perſons of this City. 9 Iſarab, near which is a fountain, called the fountain of Ethiopia, becauſe Philip there baptized the Ethiopian Eunuch. 10 Caſpin, taken with great ſlaughter by Judas Maccabæus. 11 Lachis, remarkable for the death of Amaziah King of Judah. 12 Ajalon, a City of the Levites alſo, touched upon before in the tribe of Ephraim, in the borders whereof we find it ſituated; and therefore by ſome Authors reckoned to the ſame Tribe, and by ſome to the other, in the Valley whereof the Moon is ſaid to have ſtood ſtill at the prayers of Joſhuah, as the Sun did over the City of Gibeon: the motion of the Heavens being ſtaid, that he might have the more time for execution on the Kings of the Canaanites. To this Tribe alſo belonged the Town and Territory of Dan, or Leſhem, afterwards called Cæſarea Philippi, in the Tribe of NEPHTHALIM; whereof we have there ſpoke already.

3. The Tribe of SIMEON was ſo called from Simeon the ſecond Son of Jacob, by his firſt Wife Leah: of whom were found at the firſt Muſter 59300 able men; and but 22200 at the ſecond Muſter, when they came into Canaan. Where they enjoyed but a ſmall Territory to themſelves, their lot falling amongſt the Philiſtims, whom they were not able to expell: and therefore they were taken into the Tribe of Judah, where they were permitted to enjoy ſome Towns and Villages, intermixed with that more potent Tribe. Afterwards, in the reign of King Hezekiah, ſome of them poſſeſſed themſelves of Gedar, belonging to the Children of Ham; and others paſſing Southwards into Idumæa, ſmote the Amalekites which inhabited in the mountains thereof, and dwelt in the places by them conquered. But for all this, wanting room for themſelves and their Children, many of them undertook the Office of Scribes or Scriveners, and diſperſed themſelves amongſt the reſt of the Tribes, teaching their Children to write, and giving themſelves to the employment of Publick Notaries: God herein verifying the Curſe which Jacob had denounced on Simeon, that he ſhould be divided and ſcattered in Iſrael. But for their fixed habitation which fell to them by Lot, it lay betwixt Dan upon the North, and Idumæa on the South; the Tribe of Judah on the Eaſt, and the Philiſtims upon the Weſt.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Gerar, the Royal ſeat of the two Abimelechs, Kings of the Philiſtims, with whom Abraham and Iſaac had to do; and probably of ſome other of their Kings and Princes, till ſubdued by the Iſraelites. Situate in the South border of Canaan, not far from the wilderneſs of Beerſheba, but in a very healthful air; called therefore Regio Salutaris in the times ſucceeding. 2 Siceleg, or Ziglag, belonging to the Philiſtims till the time of David, to whom given by Achiſh King of Gath, for his place of retreat, when perſecuted by Saul; from whom flying he lodged here all his goods and carriages; ſacked by the Amalekites, but the booty recovered from them ſpeedily by the diligence and good fortune of David. 3 Haim, a City of the Levites. 4 Cariath-Sepher, that is to ſay, the City of Books, ſeated within the bounds of Simeon, but belonging to Judah: which ſome hold to be the Univerſity or Academy of old Paleſtine. A City of the Levites alſo, and at firſt poſſeſſed by the Sons of Anak, or men of a Gigantine ſtature, but taken by Othniel, the ſon of Kenan, on the promiſe and encouragement which was given by Caleb, that whoſoever took it ſhould have his Daughter Achſah to Wife. Afterwards it was called Debir, Judg. 1. 11. known in the time of St. Hierom by the name of Daema. 5 Chorma, conceived by ſome to be that place mentioned Num. 14. 45. to which the Canaanites and Amalekites purſued thoſe of Iſrael. 6 Beerſheba, or Puteus juramenti; ſo called of the Well of waters, and the Oath which was there ſworn betwixt Abraham and Abimelech, Gen. 21. 31. Memorable in the Scripture for the Grove which Abraham there planted, the wandring of Hagar thereabouts, when ſhe was caſt out of Abraham's houſe with her young Son Iſmael; and the dwelling of Iſaac, for which cauſe called the City of Iſaac. Situate in the extreme South border of the Land of Canaan, the length whereof is often meaſured in the Scripture from this Town to Dan; and for that cauſe well fortified by the Weſtern Chriſtians, when they were poſſeſſed of this Country; as ſtanding on the borders of Idumæa, and the Deſarts of Arabia, in the way from Ægypt.

4. The Tribe of JUDAH was ſo called from Judah the fourth ſon of Jacob, by his Wife Leah: of whom there were numbred at the firſt general Muſter taken near Mount Sinai, 76600 fighting men; and no fewer than 76500 at their entrance into the Land of Canaan. The greateſt Tribe, and therefore anſwerably fitted with the largeſt Territory, bordering on the Dead Sea, Eaſt; upon Simeon Weſt; the Tribe of Benjamin on the North; and the Idumæans on the South. Comparatively large, with reference to the other Tribes; but otherwiſe unable to contain or feed thoſe infinite multitudes, without the extraordinary providence of Almighty God, which are recorded to be in it: King David muſtering 470000 fighting men of this Tribe alone; which was more than half the number found in the reſt of the Tribes. A Tribe which had a native Soveraignty over all the others; the Scepter, the Legiſlative power, and the Worlds Meſſiah being all promiſed unto this.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Arad, ſituate in the entrance of Judæa, in the way from the Wilderneſs of Edom. 2 Hebron, one of the ancienteſt Cities of Canaan; the ſeat of the Giants, called Anakim, or the Sons of Anak. This word Anak ſignifieth a Chain worn for Ornament; and it ſeemeth that this Anak enriched with the ſpoils of his enemies, wore a Chain of Gold, leaving both the cuſtom and name to his poſterity. We read the like of Manlius Torquatus in the Roman Hiſtories. This Town did Abraham buy for a burial-place for his dead; in which his Wife Sarah was firſt buried, and after her, four of the Patriarchs. Adjoyning to this Town is the Plain of Mamre, where Abraham, the Father of the Faithful, ſitting in his Tent, was viſited from Heaven by God in the ſhape of a man. Here David kept his Court before the winning of Hieruſalem; to this place came the Tribes to anoint him King over Iſrael; and hither came Abſalon, under the pretence of paying his vows, to uſurp the Kingdom of his Father. 3 Tecoa, the City of Amos the Prophet; and alſo of that woman, who by the words which Joab put into her mouth, perſwaded the King to call Abſalon from exile. In the Wilderneſs of this Tecoa, there aſſembled the Inhabitants of Moab, Ammon, and Mount Seir, to overthrow Judah. But the Lord being appeased by the publick Fast proclaimed and kept by Jehoshaphat and the people, sowed dissensions amongst them: So that the children of Ammon and Moab stood up against the Inhabitants of Mount Seir, utterly to slay and destroy them; and when they had made an end of the Inhabitants of Mount Seir, every one helped to destroy one another. 4 Cerioth, or Carioth, the birth-place of Judas, hence sirnamed Iscariot (or the man of Carioth) who betrayed our Saviour. 5 Jether, or Jatter, in the North border of this Tribe, towards Eleutheropolis, a City anciently of the Levites, and called in St. Jerom's time Jethira, and then altogether repleniſhed with Christians, now nothing but the name remaining. 6 Maresa, the native Soil of the Prophet Micah, near whereunto first Asa King of Judah discomfited the vast Army of Terah the Arabian or Ethiopian, consisting of above a Million of men; and afterwards Gorgias was overthrown by Judas Maccabæus. 7 Emaus (after called Nicopolis) memorable for the third overthrow which Judas gave to the said Gorgias, for our Redeemers shewing himself after his Resurrection to Cleophas and another of his Disciples; and for the hot Bathes hereabouts, which gave the name of Salutaris to this part of Palestine. The Sovereign vertue of which waters Sozomen, a Christian, attributes to the washing of Christs feet in them, as he passed by at that time; but Josephus a Jew, ascribes (as it is most likely) unto natural causes. 8 Hasor, or Chatsor, one of the frontier Towns towards Idumæa. 9 Odalla, or Hadullan, an ancient and magnificent City, taken and destroyed by Joshua, and long after much enlarged and beautified by Jonathan, one of the Maccabees. 10 Ceila, or Keila, where David sometimes hid himself when he fled from Saul; by him delivered afterwards from the assaults of the Philistims. 11 Eleutheropolis, or the Free City, not far from Hebron; a City of later date than any of Judah, mentioned by Ptolomy, and much remembred by St. Hierom. 12 Azecha, not far from Emaus, to which Joshuah followed Dabir the King of Eglon, and his four Associates, whom he discomfited in the cause and quarrel of the Gibeonites; molested by them for submitting to their common Enemy. Seated in the Valley of Terebinth, and of very great strength; presuming upon which, it revolted from Joram King of Judah, at the same time that Libna and the Edomites had revolted from him. 13 Beth-Sur, or (Beth-Sora) that is to say, the house on the Rock, so called from the situation on a rocky hill, one of the strongest places of Judah: Fortified first by Rehoboam the Son of Solomon, after by Judas Maccabæus; and finally made impregnable by his brother Simeon. 14 Adoram, bordering on the Dead Sea, beautified also by Rehoboam. 15 Zoar, in former times called Bela, but took its name from the words of Lot, alledging that it was but a little one, Gen. 19.20. as the word Tsohor doth import, in whose escape it was preserved, being otherwise one of the five Cities of the Region called Pentapolis, doomed unto destruction; the other four, Sodom, Gomorrah, Adama, and Seboim, being at the same time destroyed by fire and brimstone. 16 Missida, frequently mentioned by Josephus, as a place of great strength both by Art and Nature, and as it is by him described (in the seventh Book de Bello Jud. cap. 28.) to be thought impregnable; and therefore made by Herod (in the time of his troubles) the place of refuge, in which he disposed of Mariamne his betroathed Wife, her Mother Alexandra, with divers honourable Ladies; and where they were preserved in safety against all his Enemies, till he came armed with power from Rome, to dislodg their Forces, which was done accordingly. First built by Jonathan the brother of Judas Maccabæus, as a sure place of Refuge against the Syrians; and afterwards so esteemed by Herod for the reason above mentioned, that he not only much enlarged it, with all the requisite additions of strength and beauty, but built within the verge thereof, a magnificent Palace. The whole environed with a wall of 7 furlongs compass, 12 cubits high, and 8 cubits broad, built of white stone, and situate on an high Mountain called Collis Achillæ, washed on the East-side by the Dead Sea, or Lacus Asphaltites, and by that secured; on the other sides fenced with such deep ditches, that it was a terror to any man to look down into them: besides which natural situation, it was fortified by Herod with 27 Turrets, who left therein, as in a place impregnable and inaccessible, a Magazine of Arms and all warlike furniture, for an Army of 10000 men, all sorts of Victuals to sustain them, and ground enough within the Walls to yield corn sufficient, when time and a long siege should consume those Victuals. A place of such strength and so great concernment, that it held out against the Romans (when Vespasian and his Son Titus managed that great War) after all the rest of Judæa had been conquered by them. 17 Libna, a strong City seated in a Corner of Judah, running between the Tribes of Dan and Benjamin. This City revolted from Joram King of Judah, at the same time the Edomites did, and continued a Free State, even as long as Judah continued a Kingdom. 18 Ziph, in the Wilderness, wherein David hid himself from the fury of Saul. Hither, when Saul pursued him, David came into his Camp (the Watch being all asleep) and took thence his Spear, and a Cruse of oyl, and departed. Abishai indeed would fain have killed him: but David, though he knew that Samuel had by God's command abdicated Saul from the Kingdom, and that himself was appointed in his stead, would not touch him; but left him to the judgment of the Lord, whose anointed he was. 19 Bethlehem, or (to distinguish it from another of this name of Zabulon so called) Bethlehem-Judah, where Christ was born; and the Innocents suffered for him, before he had suffered for them. In this general Massacre of young Children, a son of Herod's, which was at nurse, was also slain; which being told unto Augustus, he replied, He had rather be Herod's Swine than his Son, His Swine being safe in regard the Jews were forbidden hog-meat; but his Sons frequently made away, upon fears and jealousies. A Town for this cause had in great respect by the Primitive Christians, beautified by Helen with a stately Temple, which yet standeth entire; by the Lady Paula (much extolled by St. Hierom) with some goodly Monasteries, in one of which the body of that father lieth; and by the Western Christians, with a See Episcopal. 20 On the frontier of this Country towards the Philistims, was that strong Castle which Herod repairing, called Herodium; seated on a hill, the ascent unto which was made with 200 steps of Marble, exceeding fair and large. In this Country also are the hills of Engaddi, in a Cave of which David cut off the Lap of Saul's Garment; and all along the bottoms whereof were the Gardens of Balsamum or Opobalsamum, the trees of which, were by Cleopatra (at such time as she governed M. Antony, and the East) sent for to be replanted in Heliopolis of Ægypt; and Herod, who durst not deny them, plucked them up by the roots, and sent them to her.

5. The Tribe of BENJAMIN took name from the twelfth and yongest Son of Jacob, by Rachel his best beloved Wife, who died in that Child-birth: of which at the first muster near unto Mount Sinai, were numbred 35000 able men; and at the second muster, when they entred the Promised Land, there were found of them fit for Arms, 45600 persons. A Tribe in great danger to have been utterly cut off, by the folly of the men of Gibeah, Gibeah, all Iſrael arming againſt it as one man. For beſides thoſe that periſhed in the former Battels, there fell in one day 25000 men that drew the Sword: the fury of the Conquerours after that great Victory ſparing neither Man nor Beaſt, nor any thing that came to hand, and burning down all their Cities alſo which they came unto. So great an havock was there made even of innocent Maidens, that when the edge of this diſpleaſure was taken off, there were not Wives enough found for thoſe young men which had eſcaped; The other Tribes having bound themſelves by a ſolemn Oath, not to beſtow their Daughters on them: inſomuch that they were fain to provide themſelves of Wives of the Daughters of Jabeſh-Gilead, a Town of the Manaſſites beyond Jordan, whom they took by aſſault; and of the Daughters of Shilo, whom they took by ſtratagem. The whole Story ſee at large in the Book of Judges, c.19,20,21.

The Territories of this Tribe lay betwixt thoſe of Ephraim on the North and Judah on the South; having the Dead-Sea to the Eaſt, and the Tribe of Dan to the Weſtward of them. The chief of their Towns and Cities were, 1 Michmas, the incamping place of Saul, 1 Sam. 13. 2. and the abiding place of Jonathan, one of the Maccabæan Brethren, 1 Maccab. 9. 73. 2 Miſpah, famous in being the ordinary place of aſſembly for the whole Body of the People, in matters of War or Peace: as alſo in that ſtanding in the midſt of Canaan, it was (together with Gilgal) made the Seat of Juſtice, to which Samuel went yearly to give Judgment to the People. 3 Gebah, the North Border of the Kingdom of Judah toward Iſrael. 4 Gibeah, the Country of Saul, the firſt King; where the abuſing of the Levite's Wife by the young men of this Town, had almoſt rooted the Tribe of Benjamin out of the Garden of Iſrael. 5 Ai, a great and ſtrong City, in the Siege of which the Iſraelites were firſt diſcomfited: but when by the death of Achan, who had ſtollen the accurſed thing, the Camp was purged, Joſhuah by a war-like Stratagem ſurpriſed it. 6 Gibeon, the mother-City of the Gibeonites, who preſaging the unreſiſtable Victories of the Iſraelites, came to the Camp of Joſhuah, and by a wile obtained peace of him and the People: Employed by them in hewing Wood, and drawing Water for the uſe of the Tabernacle, after the fraud was made known unto them; called Nethinims, Ezra 4. 3. from Nathan, which ſignifies to give, becauſe they were given to the Service of the Tabernacle firſt, of the Temple after. Saul about four hundred years after, ſlew ſome of them, for which fact the Lord cauſed a Famine on the Land; which could not be taken away till ſeven of Saul's Sons were by David delivered unto the Gibeonites, and by them hanged. This Famine did God ſend, becauſe in killing thoſe poor Gibeonites, the Oath was broken which Joſhua and the Princes ſwore concerning them. In defence of thoſe Gibeonites it was that Joſhuah waged War againſt the Kings of the Canaanites, and ſtayed the motion of the Sun by his fervent Prayers. 7 Jericho, deſtroyed by the ſound of Rams-Horns, was not only levelled by Joſhuah to the ground, but a Curſe inflicted on him that ſhould attempt the re-building of it. This Curſe notwithſtanding, at the time when Ahab reigned in Iſrael (which was about five hundred years after the ruin of it) Hiel a Bethelite, delighted with the pleaſantneſs of the place, re-edified it. But (as it was foretold by Joſhuah) as he laid the Foundation of the Walls, he loſt his eldeſt Son; and when he had finiſhed it, and was ſetting up the Gates thereof, he loſt alſo the younger. It may be Hiel when he began this Work, minded not the Propheſie; it may be he believed it not: peradventure he thought the words of Joſhuah not ſo much to proceed from the ſpirit of Propheſie, as from an angry and vexed heart; they being ſpoken in way of wiſh, or execration. And it is poſſible, it may be, he choſe rather to build the eternity of his name on ſo pleaſant and beautiful a City, than on the uncertain lives and iſſues of two young men. 8 Anathoth, the birth-place of the Prophet Jeremy, and the Patrimony of Abiathar the High-Prieſt, ſent hither by the command of Solomon, as to a place of his own, when depoſed from his Office by that King. 9 Nob, called 1 Sam. 22. 19. the City of the Prieſts, deſtroyed by Saul, for the relief which Abimelech the High Prieſt had given to David; the Ark of the Lord then reſiding there. 14 Gilgal, upon the bank of Jordan, where Joſhuah did firſt eat of the Fruits of the Land, and kept his firſt Paſſeover; where he circumciſed ſuch of the People as were born during their wandring in the Wilderneſs; and nigh to which he ſet up twelve Stones, for a Memorial to Poſterity, that the Waters of Jordan did there divide themſelves, to give paſſage to the twelve Tribes of Iſrael. Here Agag, King of the Amalekites, was hewn in pieces by Samuel; and here Samuel once every year adminiſtred Juſtice to the People. For being ſeated in the midſt of the Land of Iſrael, betwixt North and South, and on the Eaſt-ſide of the Country near the Banks of Jordan, it ſerved very fitly for that purpoſe: as Miſpah alſo did, which ſtood in the ſame diſtance, in regard of the length of the Land of Canaan, but ſituate towards the Weſt-Sea, near the Land of the Philiſtims: uſed therefore interchangeably for the eaſe of the People. 11 Bethel, at the firſt called Luz, but took this new name in remembrance of the Viſion which Jacob ſaw here, at going towards Meſopotamia, as is ſaid Gen. 28. 19. It ſignified the Houſe of God, and was therefore choſen by Jeroboam, for the ſetting up of one of his Golden Calves; though thereby (as the Prophet ſaid) he made it to be Beth-aven, the Houſe of Vanity, Hoſ. 4. 15. & 10. 5. For then it was a part of the Kingdom of the ten Tribes, and the Southern border of that Kingdom on the Coaſt of Ephraim: but taken from it by Abijah the King of Judah, and after that accounted as a member of his Kingdom, till the deſtruction of it by the Chaldæans. Called with the reſt of thoſe parts, in the time of the Maccabees, by the name of Aphærema, which ſignifieth a thing taken away; becauſe taken away from the ten Tribes, to which once it belonged, 1 Macc. 11. 34. where it is ſaid, to have been taken from the Country of Samaria, and added unto the Borders of Judæa. 12 Ramath, another place there mentioned, and ſaid to have been added to the Realm of Judah, having been formerly the South Border of the Kingdom of Iſrael; and therefore ſtrongly fortified by Baaſha, in the time of Aſa King of Judah. 13 Chadid, or Hadid, one of the three Cities (the other two being 14 Lod, and 15 Ono) which were inhabited by the Benjamites after the Captivity. Deſtroyed in the Wars with the Kings of Syria, and afterwards re-built by Simon the Maccabæan.

But the chief Glory of this Tribe, and of all the reſt, and not ſo only, but of all the whole World beſides, was the famous City of Hieruſalem; ſeated upon a rocky Mountain, every way to be aſcended with ſteep and difficult Aſcents (except towards the North) environed on all other ſides alſo with ſome neighbouring Mountains, as if placed in the midſt of an Amphitheatre. It conſiſted in the time of its greateſt flouriſh of four parts, ſeparated by their ſeveral Walls, as if ſeveral Cities; we may call them, the Upper City, the Lower City, the New City, and the City of Herod: all of them but the Lower City, ſeated upon their ſeveral Hills. Of theſe, that which we call the City of Herod, had formerly been beautified with the Houſes of many of the Prophets, as in our Saviours time with that of Mary the Mother of John Mark, mentioned Acts 15. 37. converted to a Church by the Primitive Christians: the Western part whereof was wholly taken up by the Palace of Herod, (a wicked but magnificent Prince) for cost excessive, and for strength invincible; containing Gardens, Groves, Fishponds, places devised for pleasures, besides those for exercise. Fortified with three Towers at the corners of it; that on the South-East of the Wall, fifty Cubits high, of excellent workmanship, called Mariamne's Tower, in memory of his beloved but insolent Wife, rashly murdered by him. Opposite to which, on the South-West corner, stood the Tower of Phaseolus, so called by the name of his Brother, seventy Cubits high, and in form resembling that so much celebrated Ægyptian Pharos: and on the North Wall, on an high Hill, the Tower of Hippick, exceeding both the rest in height by fourteen Cubits, and having on the top two Spires; in memory of the two Hippici, his very dear friends, slain in his Service in the Wars.

2 On the South side stood that part which was called the Old City, possessed if not built by the Jebusites, and therein both the Mountain and Fort of Sion: but after called the City of David, because taken by him; who thereon built a strong and magnificent Castle, the Royal Court and Mansion of the Kings succeeding. In the West part hereof stood the Tower of David; a double Palace built by Herod,, the one part whereof he named Agrippa, and the other Cæsar, composed of Marble; and everywhere enterlaid with Gold; and not far off, the House of Annas and Caiphas, to which the Conspirators led our Saviour to receive his Tryal.

3 That which was called the Lower City, because it had more in it of the Valley, was also called the Daughter of Sion, because built after it, and did in Majesty and greatness exceed the Mother. For therein upon Mount Moriah, stood the Temple of Solomon (whereof more anon) and betwixt it and Mount Sion, on another Hill, the Palace which he built for his Wife the Daughter of Ægypt; and that which he founded for himself, from which by an high Bridge he had a way unto the Temple. West hereof, on a lofty Rock over-looking the City, stood the Royal Palace of the Princes of the Maccabæans, re-edified and dwelt in by King Agrippa (though of Herod's Race) and not far off the Theatre of Herod's building, adorned with admirable Pictures, expressing the many Victories and Triumphs of Augustus Cæsar. In this part also stood Mount Acra, and on that once a Citadel built by Antiochus King of Syria; but razed by Simon one of the Maccabæan Brothers, because it over-topped the Temple; the House of Helena Queen of Adiabene, who converted from Paganism to Judaism, had here her dwelling, and here died: and finally, Herod's Amphitheatre, capacious enough to contain 80000 people, whom he entertained sometimes with such Shews and Spectacles, as were in use amongst the Romans. And in this part also, on a high and craggy Rock, not far from the Temple, stood the Tower of Baris, whereon the same Herod built a strong and impregnable Citadel, in honour of Mark Antony, whose Creature he first was, called by the name of Antonius, having a fair and large Tower at every corner, two of them fifty Cubits high, and the other seventy; afterwards garisoned by the Romans, for fear the Jews presuming on the strength of the Temple, might take occasion to rebel.

4 As for the New City, which lay North to the City of Herod, it was once a Suburb only unto all the rest; inhabited by none but mechanical persons, and the meanest Tradesmen; but after incompassed by Agrippa with a Wall of 25 Cubits high, and fortified with ninety Turrets. The whole City fenced with a wonderful circumvallation on all parts thereof; having a Ditch cut out of the same Rock, as Josephus an eye-witness writeth, sixty foot deep, and no less than two hundred and fifty foot in breadth. First built, say some, by Melchisedeck the King of Salem; by the Jebusites themselves say others: by whomsoever built, called at first Jebusalem, afterwards Jerusalem, with the change of one Letter only: inlarged in time, when made the Royal Seat of the House of David, to the magnificence and greatness before described, til it attained unto the compass of sixty furlongs, or seven miles and an half. Unconquered for the first four hundred years after the entrance of the Children of Israel; and when David attempted it, the people presumed so much on the strength of the place, that they told him in the way of scorn, that the Blind and the Lame which they had amongst them (as the Text is generally expounded) should defend it against him. But as I think, the late learned Mr. Gregory of Christ-Church in Oxon, hath found out a more likely meaning of the Text than this, who telleth us, That the Jebusites by the Blind and Lame (as they knew well what the Israelites called Blind and Lame) did understand those Tutelar Idols, on whose protection they relied (as the Trojans did on their Palladium) for defence thereof: and then the meaning must be this, Those gods whom you of Israel call blind and lame, shall defend our Walls. Why else should David say (had they meant it literally) that his soul hated the lame and the blind? 2 Sam. 5. 8. or why should the People of Israel be so uncharitable as to say, That the blind and lame should not come into the House (or the Temple of God) were it meant no otherwise? But notwithstanding these vain hopes, the Town was carried under the conduct of Joab, that fortunate and couragious Leader; and made the Royal Seat of the Kings of Judah.

Proceed we now unto the Temple built by Solomon, in providing the materials whereof there were in Lebanon 30000 Workmen, which wrought by 10000 every Month; 70000 Labourers, which carried Burdens; 80000 Quarry-men, that hewed Stones in the Mountains; and of Officers and Overseers of the Work, no less than 3300 men. The Description of this stately Fabrick, we have in the first of Kings, cap. 6. 7. In the year of the World 2350. it was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar at the taking of Hierusalem: re-built again after the return from the Captivity; but with such opposition of the Samaritans, that the Workmen were fain to hold their Tools in one hand, and their Swords in the other, to repulse, if need were, those malicious Enemies. But yet this Temple was not answerable to the magnificence of the former; so that the Prophet Haggai had good occasion to say to the People, cap. 1. ver. 3. Who is left amongst you that saw this House in her first glory? is it not in your eyes as nothing in comparison of it? Nor fell it short thereof only in the outward Structure, but some inward Additaments: For it wanted, 1 The Pot of Manna, which the Lord commanded Moses to lay up before the Testimony for a Memorial, Exod. 16. 32, &c. 2 The Rod of Aaron, which only budded of all the Rods of the Princes of Israel, and was commanded to be kept before the Ark of the Testimony, for a token against Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, Numb. 17. 10. 3 The Ark of the Covenant, the making whereof we have Exod. 25. 10. and the placing of it in the Oracle, or Sanctum Sanctorum, 1 Kings 6. 19. 4 The two Tables of the Law, writ by God's own finger, and by Moses laid up in the Ark of the Covenant, Exod. 40. 20. and Deut. 10. 5. And 5 The fire of Sacrifice, which came down from Heaven, mentioned Lev. 9. 24. 2 Chron. 17. 1.

which by the Priest was to be kept continually burning never to go out. This second Temple, partly because it was grown ruinous, partly because it seemed not magnificent enough, but principally to curry favour with the Jews, Herod the Ascalonite pulled down, and set up another in the place; making it not much inferiour (if at all) unto that of Solomon, but far superiour to the other Immensæ opulentiæ Templum, as Tacitus most truly called it. And this was it to which our Saviour did sometimes vouchsafe his presence.

But here we are to understand, that by the Temple it is not meant the Fabrick only, or the house it self; but also all those several Courts with which encompassed, being four in number. That is to say, Atrium Sacerdotum, or the Priests Court, which was next unto the Temple; wherein stood the Brazen Altar for the daily Sacrifice, and the Laver for the washing of the Priests and the Sacrifice also: into which Court might none enter but the Priests alone. 2 Then there was Atrium populi, or the Peoples Court, separated from the other by a Wall of three Cubits height; to which the people did repair to perform their Sacrifices, to say their prayers, and to make payment of their vows. In the middle of this Court, did Solomon make a brazen Scaffold for the Kings his Successors, 2 *Chron.*6.13. and afterwards in imitation of his Porch built before the Temple, were many Porches built about it, for the people to repair into in rainy weather; which gave to this whole Court the name of Solomon's Porch, whereof see John 10.23. Acts 3.11. Without that stood 3 Atrium Fœminarum, or the Womens Court, divided from the other, as is collected out of 2 Chron. 20.5. in the time of Jehosaphat King of Judah; in which stood the Treasury, or poor mans Box, mentioned in the one and twentieth Chapter of St. Lukes Gospel: from whence this whole Court had sometimes the name of Treasury, as appeareth John 8. 20. where it is said, that these words spake JESUS in the Treasury, that is to say, in the Womens Court, where the Treasury or Alms-box stood. Betwixt these last was an ascent of 15 steps, on which the Levites used to sing those 15 Psalms, which do immediately follow the hundred nineteenth Psalm; upon each step one: from whence they had the name of Psalmi Graduales, or Cantica Graduum, i.e. the Psalm or Songs of degrees. And so far all was counted Holy Ground, upon which none might tread but either natural Jews, or circumcised Proselytes, whom they called Proselyti fœderis, as before was said; or such of the other Sex (not natural Jewesses) who having received all outward initiations, had bound themselves unto the observation of the Law of Moses. 4 So was it not with the fourth and last Court called Artium Gentium, or the Court of the Gentiles; designed for the use of those Gentiles, whom they called Proselytæ Portæ, bound only unto the keeping of the Precepts given the Sons of Noah. For in that, as unsanctified ground (though counted part of the Temple also) did they permit a Market of Sheep and Oxen, the sale of Doves and Pigeons, and the Tables of money-changers, for the Oblations of the people: stabling the poor Gentiles amongst their Cattle, and ranking them with the worst of them. And out of this Temple, or Court of the Temple, did CHRIST our Saviour cast the buyers and sellers, and overthrew the Tables of the money-changers; asserting it to its primitive and original use, which was to be an house of prayer for all the Nations. This last Court separate the other by a wall of three Cubits height, adorned with certain pillars of equal distance, bearing this Inscription, Μὴ δεῖν ἀλλόφυλον ἐντὸς τοῦ Ἁγίου παρεῖναι, i, e. Let no Alien (or one that is no Jew) enter into the holy place: And to this wall it is that the Apostle alludeth, saying, He hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us (i. e. between the Jews and Gentiles) making one of twain, Eph. 2.14,15. inferring hereupon, that the Gentiles are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-Citizens with the Saints, and of the houshold of God, v. 19.

But to go forwards with the Temple, having continued in the glories to which Herod brought it, not above 85 years, it was finally destroyed by Titus the son of Vespasian, in the 69 year after Christ's Nativity. At what time the Temple of Delphos was utterly overthrow by Earthquakes, and Thunderbolts from Heaven; neither of them ever since repaired, though much endeavoured. The concurrence of which two miracles evidently sheweth, that the time was then come in which God would put an end both to the Jewish Ceremonies, and Heathen-Idolatries, that so the Kingdom of his Son might be all in all. For this destruction of the Temple of Hierusalem I may call a miracle, in regard it was done against the command of Titus; who was not only careful to preserve it, before his Souldiers had put fire to it, but did all that possibly might be to quench it. His reason was, Ῥωμαίων γὰρ ἔσεσθαι τὴν βλάβην, as Josephus hath it, because thereof would redound so highly to the prejudice of the Roman Empire, in being deprived of such a glorious and magnificent structure. But do he what he could with his utmost industry, there was no quenching of it till it was consumed. And it adds somewhat to the marvel, that this should happen on the tenth day of August, on which day the first Temple had been burnt by Nebuchadnezzar. And certainly it is worth the noting (I hope shall not be accounted superstitious for this observation) to see how happy or unfortunate, one or the same day hath been found unto divers persons. In the Wars betwixt the French and Spaniards for the Realm of Naples, Friday was observed to be very lucky to that great Captain Gonsalvo; he having on that day given the French many notable overthrows. Wednesday is said to have been fortunate to Pope Sixtus the Fifth, for on that day he was born; on the same made a Monk; on that day created General of his Order; on the same day made a Cardinal, then chosen to be Pope; and finally on the same inaugurated. To Henry the seventh of England, Saturday was observed to be very fortunate in all his actions; as was the 24 of February unto Charles the Fifth, on what day soever: for on that he came into the world, and in that he took King Francis Prisoner at the Battel of Pavie, and on the same received the imperial Crown. But to return unto the Temple, we find that on the Sabbath, or Saturday, it was taken by Pompey, on the same by Herod, and on that also by Titus.

But go we forwards to Hierusalem as now it standeth, it lay in rubbish and unbuilt (after the destruction of it by Titus) till repaired by Adrian: and then the Temple not so much as thought of, till out of an ungodly policy, in the Reign of Julian that Politick Enemy of the Church; who to diminish the infinite number of Christians by the increase of the Jews, began again to build this Temple. But no sooner were the foundations laid, but a terrible Earthquake cast them up again, and fire from Heaven consumed the Tools of the Workmen, together with the Stones, Timber, and other materials. As for the City it self, after the desolation in it which was made by Titus, it was re-edified by the Emperour Ælius Adrianus, who named it Ælia, drave thence the Jews, and gave it to the Christians. But this new City was not built in the place of the old. For within this, Mount Calvary is comprehended which was not in the old before. As on the other side, a great part of Mount Sion, part of the City of Herod, and the soyl were the New City stood, are left out of this: the ruins of the other still remaining

ing visible, to shew the ancient greatness and magnificence of it. To look upon it then as it stands at present, it is now only famous for the Temple of the Sepulchre, built by Helena (whom most report to have been daughter to Coylus a British King) Mother to Constantine the Great. Much adò had the good Lady to find the place where the Lords body had been laid; for the Jews and Heathens had raised great hillocks on the place and built there a Temple of Venus. This Temple being plucked down, and the earth digged away, she found the three Crosses, whereon our blessed Saviour, and the two Thieves had suffered. To know which of these was the right Cross, they were all carried to a woman, who had been long visited with sickness, and now lay at the point of death. The Crosses of the two Thieves did the weak woman no good, but as soon as they laid her on the Cross on which the Lord died, she leaped up and was restored to her former health: the occasion of the Festival on the third of May, by the Latines called Inventio sanctæ Crucis. This Temple of the Sepulchre, even at the first building, was highly reverenced and esteemed by the Christians of these parts. And even until our dayes, it is much resorted to, both by Pilgrims from all the parts of the Romish Church, who fondly and superstitiously hope to to merit by their journey: and also by divers Gentlemen of the Reformed Churches, who travel hitherwards, partly for curiosity, partly for love to the antiquity of the place, and partly because their generous spirits imitate the Heaven, and delight in motion. Whosoever is aided to the sight of this Sepulchre, payeth nine Crowns to the Turkish Officers, so that this tribute only is worth to the Grand Seigneur, eighty thousand Ducats yearly. The other building generally very mean and poor, if not contemptible. Built of flint stones, low, and but one roof high; flat on the top for men to walk on, and fenced with Battlements of a yard in height to preserve them from falling: the under-rooms no better than vaults, where they repose themselves in the heat of the day. Some houses near the Temple of Solomon, and the Palace of Herod, adorned with Arches towards the Street; where Passengers may walk dry in a shower of rain; but not many such; nor any thing but the ruines left of the ancient buildings. The whole circuit of it reduced to two or three miles; and yet to those that take a survey thereof from some Hills adjoyning, where the ruins are not well discerned from the standing edifices, it affordeth to the eye no unpleasing prospect. And as the place is, such is the people, inhabited for the most part by Artizans of the meanest quality, gathered together of the scum of divers Nations: the greatest part consisting of Moors, and Arabians; a few poor Christians, of all the Oriental Sects, which dwell there for devotion; and some Turks, who for the profit which they make of Christians, are content to stay in it. Insomuch that when Robert Duke of Normandy, being then not cured of his wounds, was carried into this City on the backs of some of this rascal people, he called to a Gentleman of his, who was going for England, and bad him say, that he saw Duke Robert carried into Heaven on the backs of Devils.

Come we now to the Tribe of LEVI, though indeed not reckoned for a Tribe, because not planted close together as the other were; nor had whole Provinces to themselves, but mingled and dispersed amongst the rest of the people; having forty eight Cities assigned them for their habitation, proportionably taken out of the other Tribes. So was it ordered by the Lord, partly that they being set apart for his service, might be at hand in every place to instruct the People; and partly to fulfil the Prophesie which he had spoken by Jacob, who had foresignified to Levi at the time of his death, that he should be divided in Jacob, and scattered in Israel. The like fortune he had Prophesied of Simeon also of the accomplishment whereof, so far as it referred to him, and the dispersion of his Tribe, we have spoke before. Now to make up the number of the twelve Tribes, Joseph was divided into Ephraim and Manasses; and the Levites were reckoned to belong unto that Tribe, within whose Territory, that City which they dwelt in, stood. Their maintenance was from the Tenths or Tithes, the first Fruits, Offerings, and Sacrifices of the people: and as it is in Josh. 11. 17. The Priesthood of the Lord was their Inheritance. There were of then four kinds: 1 Punies or Tyrones, which from their childhood, till the five and twentieth year of their age, learned the duty of their Offices. 2 Graduates which having spent four years in the study of the Law, were able to answer and oppose in it. 3 Licentiates, who did actually exercise the Priestly Function. And 4 Doctors (Rabines they use to call them) who were the highest in degree. For maintenance of whom, they had (as before is said) the Tithes, first Fruits, and Offerings of all the rest of the People besides the 48 Cities assigned for their Habitation: which last, with the several Territories appertaining to them, extending every way for the space of two thousand Cubits, seem to have been a greater proportion of it self, than any of the other Tribes (with reference to the small number of Levites) had in their possessions. Then for the Tithes, there was not only a full tenth set out of all kinds of increase; but such an imposition laid upon all sorts of grain, as came to more than a sixth part of the Crop it self. For first, out of six thousand bushels (and so accordingly in all after that proportion) a sixtieth part at least, (and that they termed the Therumah of the evil eye, or the niggards first fruits) was to be set forth as the first fruits of the threshing floor; which was an hundred in the total. Out of the residue being five thousand and nine hundred bushels; the first tithe paid unto the Levites, came to five hundred and ninety Bushels; and of the residue, being five thousand three hundred and thirty Bushels, five hundred thirty and one were paid for the second tithe, unto the Priest, which ministred in the holy Temple; yet so, that such as would decline the trouble of carrying it in kind unto Hierusalem, must pay the price thereof at the Priests own Estimate. Laying which several sums together, it appears demonstrably, that of six thousand Bushels (& sic de cæteris) there will accrew one thousand two hundred seventy and one Bushels to the Priests and Levites; and but four thousand seven hundred seventy and nine to the Lord or Tenant; which is not fully a sixth part, as was said before. Then had they the first born of mankind and all unclean beasts, redeemed at a certain rate; the first fruits of Wine, Oyl, and Wool; the first fruits of the dough, and of the firstlings of clean Beasts (their blood being sprinkled on the Altar, and the fat offered for a burnt offering, the Flesh remained unto the Priest. They had also the meat-offerings, the sin-offerings, the trespass-offerings, the shake offerings, the heave-offerings, and the Shew-bread: as also of all Eucharistical Sacrifices the breast and the shoulder; of others the shoulder; the two cheeks, and the maw; and of the whole burnt-offering they received the Skin, besides the free gifts of the people, appearing thrice yearly before the Lord: and all this brought in unto them without charge or trouble. Which makes it evident, that they were far more liberally provided for, than the rest of the Tribes, though they had no whole Country alotted to them, as the others had. And so much for such parts of the Land of Palestine as were possessed in part, or wholly by the Sons of Jacob; proceed we now to the Inheritance of the Sons of Esau.

6 IDUMÆA.

IDUMÆA, or the Land of EDOM, is bounded on the East and South, with Arabia Petræa; on the North with Judæa; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea. So called from the Edomites, or Children of Esau, whose name is Edom, Gen. 36. 1. the Father of the Edomites, ver. 43. by whom it was planted and possessed; or as others say, from the Idumæi, a people of Arabia; who in a mutiny being forced for to forsake their Country, came and setled here. The first the more certain of the two, and therefore I adhere to that.

The Country towards the Sea side very fat and fruitful; but where it bendeth towards Arabia, exceeding mountainous and barren. Heretofore it afforded Balm, not now: but still it hath some store of Palmtrees, for which much celebrated by some Writers of ancient times as Arbusto Palmarum dives Idume, in the Poet Lucan. Sandy, and full of vast desarts, for which, and for the want of water, it is thought unconquerable. For though they have many wells there for the use of the Natives, yet to them only are they known, and not obvious at all to the eyes of strangers, no not upon the strictest search that can be imagined. But all places are not so well furnished, as appeareth by the sad condition which the Kings of Judah, Israel, and Edom were fallen into, when they led their Armies through the Desarts of this Country, against the Moabites, finding herein no water for man or beast: insomuch that the King of Israel said, Alas, that the Lord hath called these three Kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab, 2 Kings 3. 10. Not otherwise delivered out of this perplexity, but by a miracle from Heaven: God sending them the next day an abundance of water, without wind or rain, or any other visible means, ver. 17. 20.

The people anciently rude and barbarous; greedy of change in government, easily stirred to insurrections, and in love with tumults. Professed enemies to the Jews, till conquered by them: and when compelled by Hyrcanus to the Jewish Religion, they were at the best but false friends; and in the siege of Hierusalem by Titus, did them more mischief than the Romans. At this time subject to the Turk, and differ not much in life and custom from the wild Arabians.

Rivers of note there can be none, where so little waters. One Lake it hath, though possibly it had been better, had they been without it, now small, and every day growing less; the passage being long since barred, which it had to the Sea. Anciently, though then narrow, it was two hundred furlongs, or five and twenty miles long: bordered on each side by hills of sand, which born by the winds into the water did so thicken the same, that it was not easie to be discerned from the dry Land; insomuch as whole Armies have been swallowed up in it. Thence called Barathrum by the Latines; The true name of it formerly was the Lake of Syrbon. By the Italians it is now called Lago di Teveso, by the Natives Bayrema; the utmost bound of Palestine, where it joyneth on Ægypt.

The chief Mountains of it, are, 1 Mount Seir, the first habitation of Esau, after he left his dwelling in the Land of Canaan, to make room for Jacob, as is said Gen. 36. 7, 8. Not called so, unless by Anticipation (a thing not unusual in the Scriptures) till the coming of Esau thither; the word Seir signifying hairy, or brisled, such as Esau is described to be, Gen. 27. 11. To this St. Hierom doth accord, deriving the name of Seir from Esau, Sumpta ab Autore nomine. His reason is, Seir quippe interpretatur hispidus & pilosus qualis Esau fuit. So he in his Comment on Isaiah, Chap. 21. For the same cause, is the whole Country of Edom, sometimes called Mount Seir in Scripture, by the name of this Mountain, as 2 Chron. 20 10. 23. The second hill of note is that called Cassius, not far from the Lake of Syrbon, now nothing but an huge heap of sand; formerly famous for a temple of Jupiter, and the Sepulchre of Pompey the Great; Who being basely murdered here (after his defeat near Pharsalia by Julius Cæsar) by the command of Ptolomy the younger, King of Ægypt, unto whom he fled (or rather by the command of Achillus who then governed his Counsels) by the piety of a private Souldier was here interred in an obscure and homely, but honest Sepulchre. The Sepulchre afterwards re-edified, and made more sutable to the man, by the Emperour Adrian. The piety of the Souldier not a whit the less for the cost of the Emperour; in whose name Lucan had bestowed this Epitaph, on that first Monument.

Hic situs Est Magnus, placet hoc, Fortuna Sepulchrum Dicere Pompeii; quo condi maluit illum,
Quam terra caruisse Socer.

Which may be Englished to this purpose.

Here Magnus lies, Such, Fortune, is thy doom
That this vile earth should be great Pompey's Tomb.
In which even Cæsar's self would rather have His Son-in-Law interr'd, than want a Grave.

Places of most consideration in it, 1 Dinhabath, the City of Bela, the first King of Edom. 2 Anith, the City of Hadad. And 3 Pan, the City of Hadar, two others of the Kings hereof: which three are mentioned Gen. 36. 32, 35, 39, 4 Berzamna, placed here by Ptolomy, supposed to be the same with Beersheba in the tribe of Simeon the utmost border Southwards of the Land of Canaan, of which more there. 5 Caparorsa. 6 Gammararis. And 7 Elasa, all of them mentioned by Ptolomy; which sheweth them to be of some consideration in those times, though now forgotten with the former. 8 Anthedon, on the South side of the River Besor, opposite to Gaza in the tribe of Simeon, which is situate on the Northern bank. A Port Town, once of good repute, till defaced by Alexander King of the Jews, re-edified afterwards by Herod the Great, and named Agrippias, in honour of Agrippa the Favourite and Son-in-law to Augustus Cæsar. 9 Rossa a Fort of consequence, not far from Massada, before mentioned, when we were in Judæa; taken by Herod in his way to relieve that Castle. 10 Raphia, memorable for the great defeat which Ptolomy Philopater there gave unto Antiochus sirnamed Magnus. 11 Rhinocurura, so called from a mishap which befel the Inhabitants hereof, by mangling and defacing their noses. By Pliny and Strabo called Rhinocurula; and at this time Pharamica. Memorable for an old but ill-grounded tradition, that here the World was divided by Lots, betwixt the Posterity of Noah: and so considerable in the Wars of the Holy Land, that it was strongly fortified by Baldwin the first, to obstruct the passage of such Forces as usually came out of Ægypt, to aid the Turks. 12 Ostracine, now Stagioni, on the Sea-side beneath Anthedon, and that part of the country which from Mount Casius hath the name of Casiotis, ascribed by Ptolomy to Ægypt: but being they are both on the North of the Lake of Syrbon, more properly belonging to Palestina. But most of these being now buried in their ruins, there are left none but a few Castles and scattered Villages: the Villages inhabited for the most part by Arabians, the Castles Garrisoned by Turks. The chief of which lying on the Sea, in the Road to Ægypt, are 13 Hamones, a small Castle not far from Gaza, used chiefly for a Toll-booth, to receive custom of such Merchants as pass that way. 14 Harisa, a small Castle also, serving specially for the same ſame uſe; but ſtronger, and of more importance, becauſe near the Sea, from which not above two miles diſtant; and for that cauſe Garriſoned with an hundred Souldiers: Environed with a few Houſes, by reaſon of the commodity of the water, which is ſweet and wholeſom; elſe little better than a Deſart. 15 Catio, another Caſtle or rather Toll-booth, with a Garriſon of about ſixty Souldiers in it, ſeated in a place ſo deſart and unfruitful, that nothing vegetable groweth in it, but a few ſtarved Palm-trees. The water which they have there, ſo bad and brackiſh, though eſteem'd good enough for the Common-Souldiers; that all which the Captain drinketh is brought from 16 Tina, a Town upon the Sea-ſhore, about twelve miles diſtant, and the laſt upon this Coaſt towards Ægypt.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Country were the Horites, the Horites which dwelt in Mount Seir, as we read in Geneſis 14. 6. that is to ſay, which dwelt in that hilly Country which afterwards was called Mount Seir. But whether it was ſo called from Eſau's dwelling here, as is ſaid before, or from Seir the Horite, mentioned Gen. 36. 20. as perhaps may probably be ſuppoſed, need not now come into diſpute. Broken by Chedorlaomer, and his Aſſociates, they were the more eaſily ſubdued by Eſau. Who leaving the land of Canaan to his Brother Jacob, Gen. 6. 7, 8. becauſe thoſe parts in which they dwelt did not afford them room enough for their ſeveral Cattel, came into this Country; and having deſtroyed the Horites from before them, ſucceeded in their Habitations, and dwelt there in their ſtead even unto this day, Deut. 2. 22. 'Tis true, we find Eſau in Mount Seir, before this remove: for it is ſaid, that Jacob at his firſt coming out of Meſopotamia, ſent Meſſengers before him to Eſau his Brother, unto the Land of Seir, the Country of Edom, Gen. 32. 3. And hence a Queſtion hath been moved, How Eſau dwelling there before Jacobs coming, can be ſaid to remove thither to make room for him. To this Sir Walter Raleigh and ſome others anſwer, That at the time when Jacob came out of Padan-Aram, Eſau dwelt in thoſe parts of the Mountains which lye on the Eaſt of Jordan, called afterwards Galaad and Mount Hermon, by which Jacob muſt needs paſs in his way to Canaan; which Mountains then were called by the name of Seir, and from thence Syrion by the Zidonians, or Phœnicians in the Ages following: from whence driven by the Amorites, at ſuch time as they vanquiſhed thoſe of Moab and Ammon, they were forced to ſeat themſelves on the South of Canaan, where Moſes found them. But with this I am by no means ſatisfied. For beſides that it maketh Eſau to carry a Mount Seir with him whitherſoever he went; it doth expreſly differ from the plain words of Scripture, both in occaſion, and the time of his ſetling there: the Victories which the Amorites had over the Ammonites and Moabites, being then freſh and newly gotten, when Moſes with the Children of Iſrael came into theſe parts; which was at the leaſt 200 years after Eſau did withdraw himſelf, to the Land of Edom. And therefore I ſhould rather think, that Eſau finding himſelf diſtaſted by his Father and Mother, in regard of his Canaanitiſh Marriages, and the hatred which he bare to Jacob, departed from thence, and ſojourned in the South parts amongſt the Horites of Mount Seir; That thither Jacob ſent his Meſſengers, to make Peace between them; That the Reconciliation being made, Eſau returned unto the place where before he ſojourned; and having brought thence his Children, Cattel, and the reſt of his Subſtance, fixed himſelf again near the Houſe of his Fathers: and finally, That on Iſaac's death, finding his Family increaſed, his Heards and Flocks augmented, and the reſt of his Subſtance alſo doubled by the da th of his Father, he thought it fit alſo to enlarge his dwelling, and ſo removed once more to Edom. A thing not needful to be done, had he dwelt in Galaad, Hermon, or any other part of that Mountainous Tract, conſidering the great diſtance betwixt thoſe Mountains and the City of Hebron, in which Iſaac dwelt; nigh to which Jacob alſo had ſet up his dwelling.

But on what ground ſoever Eſau left the poſſeſſion of the Land of Canaan to his Brother Jacob, certain it is, he did it not without ſome ſtrong impulſions from the Spirit of God, by whom the poſſeſſion of that Land was deſigned for Jacob, to whom the Bleſſing and the Birth-right had been both preferred. And though Eſau over-ruled by Almighty God, ſeemed to have forgotten all Diſpleaſure againſt his Brother; yet the quarrel begun by them in the womb of Rebecca, brake out more violently in the time of their Poſterity. Inſomuch that Moſes could by no means obtain a paſſage through Edom into the Promiſed Land, though he ſought it by fair addreſſes, and preſſed it by all thoſe motives and inducements, which a wiſe and an underſtanding man could have ſet before them. For though the King of Edom then being, ſeemed to pretend nothing but the ſafety of himſelf and his People; both which he might have hazarded (in all humane reaſon) by opening the cloſures of his Mountains, and letting in a Nation mightier than his own: yet it is poſſible there might be as much of ſtomach, as worldly Policy; and that as well the buying of the Birth-right for ſo ſleight a trifle, as the getting of the Bleſſing by ſuch fraudulent means, might not be forgotten. For he not only denied them paſſage, and ſent word expreſly they ſhould not go thorow; but came againſt them with much people and a ſtrong band, as is ſaid Numb. 20. 20. But the Edomites could not for all this prevent their Deſtiny, or make the Word of God to be ineffectual; by which it had been ſignified, when they were yet in their Mothers womb, that the elder ſhould ſerve the younger. Nor verified in Eſau's perſon; for Jacob called him his Lord Eſau, profeſſed himſelf to be his Servant, and willingly ſubmitted to his Superiority, but in the Iſſues of them both: then ſpecially when David had ſubdued the Edomites, and made them Homagers and Vaſſals to the Crown of Judah, 2 Sam. 8. 14. Nor is leſs intimated in thoſe words of the 60 Pſalm, where it is ſaid, Over Edom will I caſt my ſhooe; it being a cuſtom of old times to fling their ſhooes upon a Country conquered, or deſigned for Conqueſt, Projectio calceamenti ſuper Regionem aliquam, denotat ſubjicere, as my Author hath it. And in alluſion unto this, there is a Story in the Chronicles of the Kings of Man, how Magnus King of the Iſles ſent his Embaſſadours to Murchard a King in Ireland, commanding him on the next Chriſtmas day, to carry openly the Shoos of King Magnus upon his ſhoulders; in teſtimony, ſaith the Story, that he was his Vaſſal. The caſting of the Shooe on a Conquered Country, or the treading of it under feet, another Ceremony of this nature, mentioned Deut. 33. 29. do come both to one, and ſignifie that Vaſſalage or bondage, which ſuch a captivated Country was reduced unto.

But on the other ſide, there was another part of the Heavenly Oracle, which made for Edom. Iſaac had ſignified to Eſau, that though the Bleſſing given to Jacob could not be revoked, and that he muſt content himſelf with being a ſervant to his Brother for a certain ſeaſon: yet there ſhould one day come a time, in which he ſhould not only break that yoak from off his neck, but obtain the Dominion over him, Gen. 27. 40. The firſt part verified, when the Edomites revolted from the Kings of Judah, in the time of Joram, or Jehoram, the Son of Jeho- Jehoſaphat: and in ſtead of a Vice-Roy ſent unto them from the Court of Hieruſalem, ſet up a King of their own Nation; never returning after that to the Houſe of David. For though Joram made War preſently upon them, and got the Victory; yet he did not proſecute it unto any effect, nor beat them out of any of their ſtrong Holds, nor reduce any of their Cities unto his obedience: as if he had got honor enough in the Eye of the World, by being Maſter of the Field; or ſhewing his Abilities in command of a greater Army, than the Edomites could bring againſt him. The like errour was committed by Amaziah, who by a vaſt Army of 300000 fighting men, did no greater wonders than the killing of 10000, and the taking of as many Edomites; but neither left Garriſons in any of their defenſible places, nor reduced any part of their Country under his obedience. And for the latter part there of, it was as punctually fulfilled in the time of Antipater an Idumæan, Herod the Aſcalonite his Son, and their Succeſſors; who in the decrepit age of the Houſe of Jacob, became King of the Jews, and Lorded over them with inſolence and contempt enough.

Mean time to look upon the intermediate paſſage of their State and Story. It ſeemeth that at firſt they were governed by Dukes, each having the command of thoſe ſeveral Families, of which they were the Heads or Princes. But as Ambition and Power did prevail among them, the more potent having vanquiſhed or awed the reſt, took to himſelf the name of King: which by the names of their Fathers, and their ſeveral Cities in which they reigned, ſeem to have been choſen by Election; or otherwiſe to come in by ſtrong hand, as the Sword could carry it. The Names of which are thus ſet down in the Book of Geneſis.

The KINGS of EDOM.

1 Bela the Son of Beor.
2 Jobab, the Son of Zerah.
3 Haſham, of the Land of Temani.
4 Hadad, the Son of Bedad, who warred againſt the Midianites, and vanquiſhed them in the Fields of Moab, Gen. 36. 35.
5 Samlah, of Maſrekah.
6 Saul, of Rehoboth, by the River Euphrates.
7 Baal-Hanan, the Son of Achbor.
8 Hadar, the Son perhaps of Baal-Hanan, for I find no mention of his Father. After whoſe death, the Heads of the ſeveral Families reſumed the Government again; ruling over their own Tribes, without any one Sovereign or Supreme. And all theſe Kings they had, before there reigned any King in Iſrael, Gen. 36. 31. that is to ſay, before any form of Supreme Government was eſtabliſhed amongſt them in the Perſon of Moſes, called by the name of a King in the Book of Deuteronomy, ch. 35. v. 5. But this diſtracted Government did not long continue, the Edomites being under a King again, at ſuch a time as the Children of Iſrael came out of Ægypt: for it was unto the King of Edom that Moſes ſent Meſſengers from Kadeſh, to deſire a paſſage thorow his Country. Which being denied, and the Edomites in Arms to defend their Paſſes, Moſes forbore to force his way, though the neareſt for him: partly becauſe he had no mind to ſpend thoſe Forces in fighting with Hills and Deſarts, which were deſigned for the conqueſt of another Country; but principally, becauſe God commanded him not to meddle with them, or to take ſo much as a foot of their Country from them, Deut. 2. 5. But David, upon whom lay no ſuch obligation, having vanquiſhed the Syrians, and other Nations round about him, followed his fortunes unto Edom, whom he overcame, and put Garriſons into all their Cities, and the Edomites became his Servants. Governed from thenceforth by a Deputy or Vice-Roy (as is ſaid before) till the time of Joram the Son of Jehoſaphat King of Judah; in whoſe Reign they revolted, as before was ſaid. Never regained to that Crown, and but twice endeavoured; that ſo the Word of God might be all in all. Only the Simeonites in the Reign of Hezekiah, wanting Paſture for their Cattel, and room for themſelves, ſeized on the parts that lay neareſt to them, deſtroyed the Inhabitants thereof, and dwelt in their Habitations, becauſe there was paſture for their Flocks, 1 Chron. 4. 39. Provoked wherewith, and with the natural Antipathy which was between them, no People were more miſchievouſly bent againſt Judah, than theſe Edomites were: no men ſo forward of themſelves, to aſſiſt Nebuchadonezer againſt Hieruſalem; none that ſo vehemently cried Down with it, down unto the ground; none half ſo ready to ſet fire on the Holy Temple. But they got little by this Service to the Babylonians, their own thraldom following cloſe upon that of Judah, with whom made fellow-Subjects to the Chaldæans; as afterwards to the Perſians, and Kings of Syria of the Race of Seleucus. In the declining of that Houſe, ſubdued by Hyrcanus the Son of Simon, the fourth of the Maccabæan Princes; by whom they were compelled to be circumciſed, and to receive the Law of Moſes: not only reckoned after that, as a Province of the Jewiſh Kingdom, but as natural Jews. Which notwithſtanding, and that the ſetting of that Crown on the Head of Herod and his Houſe, being originally Idumæans, might in all reaſon have extinguiſhed their inveterate malice: yet was their hatred of that Nation as great as ever. Forgetting therefore how they had been rewarded by the Babylonians, they would needs aid the Romans againſt them alſo: putting themſelves into Hieruſalem, when beſieged by Titus, only of purpoſe to betray it; joyning with the ſeditious there, doing more miſchief in the City than the Enemy had done without: and finally, ſetting fire to the Second Temple, as they had done unto the firſt. Subjected afterwards by the Romans, they followed the ſame fortune with the reſt of Paleſtine.

Having thus gone thorow with the ſtory of thoſe neighbouring Nations which encompaſſed Canaan, it will be ſeaſonable to look on the Affairs of the Canaanites firſt, and after on the Houſe of Jacob, who poſſeſſed their Country. Firſt for the Canaanites, they deſcended from Canaan the Son of Cham, who with his eleven Sons were here ſettled immediately after the Confuſion at Babel. Of thoſe twelve (taking in the Father) five planted in Phœnicia, and the Coaſts of Syria; that is to ſay, Sidon, Harki, Arvadi, Semari, and Hamathi: the other ſeven in thoſe parts which we now call Paleſtine, though not all of that; the Edomites, Moabites, Midianites, Ammonites, and Ituræans; being Occupants or Tenants with them. And of thoſe ſeven came thoſe ſeven Nations, which by Gods appointment were totally to be rooted out, viz. the Canaanites, the Amorites, the Hittites, the Jebuſites, the Hivites, the Gergeſhites, and the Perizzites. But from which of the Sons of Canaan theſe laſt deſcended, is not yet agreed on; unleſs perhaps they were deſcended of the Sinites (not otherwiſe reckoned in this Muſter) and got the name of Perizzites on ſome new occaſion. Governed at firſt by the Chiefeſt of their ſeveral Families, with the Names of Kings; the number of which increaſed, as their Families were ſubdivided into ſmaller Branches: inſomuch as Joſhuah found 31 Kings of the Canaanites only, beſides what might deſcend from thoſe who were ſettled in Phœnicia, and the Borders ders of Syria. The moſt potent of theſe Nations were the Amorites, the Jebuſites, and the Canaanites properly ſo called. Of which the Amorites had not only enlarged their Borders beyond Jordan, but in the Reigns of Og and Sihon, ruling at the ſame time in their ſeveral parts, had thruſt the Ituræans, Ammonites, and Moabites, out of moſt of their Countries; and ſo reſtored the ſame again to the Race of the Emmims and Zanzummims (of which Line Og and the Kings of Baſan were) who had been diſpoſſeſſed thereof by the Sons of Lot. Theſe vanquiſhed in the time of Moſes, and their Habitations aſſigned over to the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the one half Tribe of Manaſſes. The Canaanites properly ſo called, as they were the firſt which fought with the Houſe of Jacob; ſo they were the laſt of all theſe People that contended with them. The firſt fought with them under the Conduct of Arad their King, who thinking it more ſafe and prudent to encounter the Enemy in another mans Country, than to expect them in his own, gave Battel unto Moſes in the Deſarts of Moab; and having cut off ſome of the outparts of his Army, and taken a few Priſoners, he went home again. But Jabin, under whom they make their ſecond on-ſet, went to work more reſolutely; and taking a time when the Iniquities of that People cried aloud for vengeance, ſo prevailed againſt them, that he tyrannized over them for the ſpace of twenty years. After which time, his Army being diſcomfited by Barak, in the time of Debora, Siſera, his great Captain, ſlain by Jael the Wife of Heber the Kenite, and moſt of his Cities taken and poſſeſſed by the Iſraelites, he periſhed himſelf in the cloſe of that War; for it is ſaid, That they prevailed againſt Jabin the King of Canaan, till they had deſtroyed him, Judg. 4. 24. As for the Jebuſites, they were grown ſo formidable (at the time of the coming of the Hebrews) to the reſt of their Neighbours, that their King Adonibezek bragged, that he had cut off the Thumbs and great Toes of 70 Kings, and made them eat the crums which fell under his Table. But being vanquiſhed by Judah, he was ſerved in the ſame kind himſelf by Judah and Simeon, and carried to Hieruſalem, where he died: the whole Country of the Jebuſites, and the City of Hieruſalem it ſelf, the Fortreſs of Mount Zion excepted only, being made a prey unto the Victor. And though the Jebuſites held that Fortreſs till the time of David; yet being they were only on the defenſive ſide, and made no open War againſt thoſe of Iſrael, I reckon the Canaanites as the laſt which did contend with them for the chief Command.

The Canaanites thus conquered, and for the moſt part worn out of the Country, the Iſraelites ſucceeded in their Poſſeſſions; according to the promiſe of God made to Abraham, renewed to Iſaac, and confirmed to Jacob. Governed after the death of Moſes and Joſhuah, by the Congregation of the Elders, as appears by many paſſages in the Book of Judges; the Judges (as the Scripture calleth them) not being the ordinary Magiſtrates, but raiſed up occaſionally by God for ſome ſpecial purpoſe, according to the exigence of their Affairs; Carrying in this a likeneſs unto the Dictators in the State of Rome, So that the Government at the firſt was an Ariſtocracy; though, to ſay truth, it rather was a Theocracy, as the Fathers call it; that is to ſay, a Government wherein G O D preſided more immediately, than in other Nations. And thereupon when the the People cried out to Samuel to have a King, God ſaid unto him, Hearken unto the voice of the people, for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me that I ſhould not reign over them, 1 Sam. 8. 7. God was their King, and he had mightily reigned over them ſince they came out of Ægypt; but they deſired to have a King like other Nations, to go in and out before them, and to fight their Battels; a King whom they might ſee with their bodily eyes, and converſe with him in ſuch manner as the People did, which dwelt round about them. And ſo came in the Monarchy or Kingly Government, begun in Saul, but confirmed in David; the firſt a Benjamite, the ſecond of the Tribe of Judah; of which Jacob had foretold at the time of his death, that the Kingdom of his People ſhould be veſted in it. But there were only three in all, reckoning Saul for one, who had Dominion over the whole Houſe of Iſrael; the Kingdom after Solomon's death, being rent in twain: ten of the twelve Tribes revolting unto Jeroboam the Son of Nebat; and only Benjamin and Judah, and ſo much of the Tribes of Dan and Simeon as lay intermingled with and in the Tribe of Judah, remaining firm to Rehoboam the Son of Solomon, who miſguided by ſome evil Counſellors which were about him, had given occaſion to the breach. A breach that could never be ſoldered or made up again, notwithſtanding the fair opportunities which were after offered, of uniting Judah unto Iſrael (for ſo the two Kingdoms were diſtinguiſhed in the time of Joas; and rejoyning Iſrael to Judah, in the time of Aſa. The opportunity offered to Aſa King of Judah, for regaining the revolted Tribes, was the confuſions which in his time had fallen out amongſt them, by ſeveral Factions; each challenging the priviledge of making a King unto it ſelf: Nadab the Son of Jeroboam being ſlain by Baaſha, Ela the Son of Baaſha murdered by Zimri, Zimri depoſed by Omri the Father of Ahab, and Tibni a Competitor againſt Omri alſo. During which time, as the People muſt needs ſuffer many great Oppreſſions, which might make them think of their Allegiance to the Houſe of David: ſo could not Aſa have wanted many fair advantages (had he made his beſt uſe of them) of working on that divided Kingdom, and reducing it back unto this Houſe. But there were two Reaſons which prevailed more againſt this re-union, than any that could be preſented to invite them to it. Firſt, the imperiouſneſs and arbitrary Government of the Kings of Judah, putting to death, without formality of Law, thoſe that had diſpleaſed them, as in the caſe of Shimei, Joab, and Adonijah, in the days of Solomon: and raiſing on the Subject what Sums they pleaſed, though more for oſtentation of their own magnificence, than the neceſſities of the State. Of which Exactions Rehoboam the Son of Solomon was ſo far from promiſing a releaſe, or ſome mitigation at leaſt, that he threatened to make them more than double what they had been formerly: And how knew they, but that Aſa, and all ſuch as deſcended from him, might be of the ſame temper alſo, and act according to thoſe Principles which their Fathers left them. Whereas the Kings of Iſrael holding by no other Title than the Love of their People, and the moderate and regular form of their Government over them, had put their mouths into ſuch a taſte of the ſweets of Liberty, and made them ſo much Maſters of their own both Lives and Fortunes, that Naboth durſt deny his Vineyard to Ahab, though offering full compenſation for it; and Ahab durſt not queſtion the life of Naboth, but by ſuborning Witneſſes to accuſe him of Blaſphemy. So that the preſent confuſions under which they ſuffered, by the change and violent death of ſo many Kings one after another, being only temporary, and not likely to continue long, were no perſwaſions unto them to accept of Aſa, and much leſs to offer themſelves unto him; who conceiv'd all adverſity to be far more tolerable, than the weighty Scepter of that Houſe. And there was ſomething alſo of preceding profit, which ſwayed the

buſineſs. The people were obliged by the Law of Moſes to make three chargeable Journeys yearly to Hieruſalem, to worſhip there in the Holy Temple; and to pay a double Tenth yearly out of their Eſtates (beſide Offerings and other Caſualties) to the Prieſts and Levites. Jeroboam out of an ungodly policy, fearing theſe frequent Journeys unto Hieruſalem might be an occaſion of reducing them to the Houſe of David, releaſed them of that charge and trouble, by ſetting up a new form of Worſhip; erecting golden Calves for them in Dan and Bethel; and leaving every man unto the liberty of his own opinion, ſo it ended not to the Eſtabliſhment of the old Religion. And on the other ſide, the Levites which dwelt amongſt them, and received their Tithes, not willing to conform to theſe new impieties, and finding that their Miniſtry was no longer uſeful, withdrew themſelves into the Kingdom of Judah, and left the ancient places of their Habitations: by means whereof, the people were releaſed of thoſe payments alſo. If they returned again to their old obedience, and accepted Aſa for their King, they muſt return again alſo to their old Religion; the golden Calves of their own Imaginations and Inventions, muſt no more be worſhipped: and (which no doubt prevailed moſt on the common people, who like that Religion beſt which coſts them nothing) the ancient payments to the Prieſts and Levites muſt come up again. Rather than ſo, they were reſolved to ſuffer yet a little longer, to pleaſe themſelves in expectation of more ſetled times: and ſo no falling off to Aſa, though as moderate and religious a Prince as they could have wiſhed for, had they had power of faſhioning a King to their own deſires. Now as this opportunity of rejoyning Iſrael unto Judah, proved unſucceſsful unto Aſa; ſo did the like of uniting Judah unto Iſrael, prove as unprofitable unto Joas the Son of Jehoaaz, and Grand-child of Jehu King of Iſrael, who being provoked by Amaziah King of Judah, made War upon him; and not only diſcomfited him without Battel, and took him Priſoner without blows, but led him captive to the very Walls of Hieruſalem; and by his Authority, got the Gates thereof to be opened to him. But not contented with this Honour (greater than ever had befallen to the Kings of Iſrael) he cauſed 400 Cubits of the Wall to be broken down; through which breach he entred triumphantly in his Chariot, carrying the unhappy Prince before him: and being entred, ſacked both the Royal Palace and the Holy Temple. This was the opportunity which was given to Joas, of uniting Judah unto Iſrael; and this the loſs of it. For the People, otherwiſe like enough to have accepted him for their King, as a Prince of whoſe noble acts they had heard much ſpeech, were ſo exaſperated by theſe raſh and unſeaſonable outrages, that they looked upon him as a Sacrilegious Church-Robber, whom the Holy Altars were not ſafe from; and as a covetous and ungoverned Tyrant, not able to concoct the fulneſs of his own proſperities. If he were thus unſatiable in his covetouſneſs, and inſupportable in his pride, when he was a Candidate for their Kingdom; when in all common prudence he would have ſought their love, and inſinuated into their good opinions, by eaſing them of former Taxes, and ſhewing them fair hopes of his moderate Government: what muſt they look for when their Towns were filled with Garriſons, Hieruſalem ſtuffed with armed Troops, and all the Princes of the Houſe of David, from whom they might expect Redemption from cruel Bondage, deſtroyed or baniſhed, or otherwiſe made unable to afford them ſuccours? Rather than ſo, they were reſolved to riſe as one man againſt him, and let him ſee, that neither their Army was ſo ſcattered, nor themſelves ſo cowed, but that they durſt adventure it to a further tryal. The fear of which made Joas ſenſible of the loſs of his opportunity: and ſo content with Hoſtages for his ſafe retreat, he returned home again without other benefit of his Victory than the Spoil and Honour. And that this poſſibly might be the motive of his going back, without putting the ſucceſs of the Affair to a further hazard, may be made probable by the like occurrence in the Story of Guicciardine, which in brief is this. Peter de Medicis had very weakly opened the Gates of Florence to Charles the Eighth, then in his paſſage towards Naples. Charles entreth it triumphantly as a conquered City, armed in compleat manner, and his Lance on his Thigh; his whole Army with him. Many inſolencies being committed by the French, the Citizens prepare to fight in defence of their Liberties. Charles willing to go forwards on his March towards Naples, propounds Conditions in writing: but ſo intolerable, that Peter Capponi, one of the chief Citizens, catching the Papers out of the King's Secretaries hands, and tearing them before his face, Do you (ſaith he) ſound your Trumpets, we will ring our Bells, and ſee what will follow. Which ſtout and peremptory dealing did ſo daunt the French, that they condeſcended upon very eaſie terms to abandon the City, and reſtore all the places appertaining unto their Eſtate, which were then in his power. The like conſideration probably might prevail with Joas, as did then with Charles; and prompt him not to fight with an inraged Multitude in the Streets of a City, where he could make no uſe of his Horſe; and where he might be more galled with Women and Children, throwing Stones or Darts out of their Windows, and from the tops of their Houſes; than with an armed Enemy in the open Field. Nor wanted Joas an example of this kind, in the times before him; even that of Abimelech, in the Book of Judges: who having taken the Town of Thebet, and forced all the Men and Women into the Caſtle, was ſlain there by a piece of a Mill-ſtone, thrown at his head from one of the Turrets of it by the hands of a Woman.

To proceed further in the Story of theſe ſeveral Kings, or recapitulate the ſum of their principal Actions (as in other places we have done) may be thought unneceſſary: the Scripture being in the hands of all ſorts of Perſons, in which their Actions and Succeſſions are at large contained. So that I only ſhall ſubjoyn their Names, with the time of their Reigns, and the year of the World in which they did begin their Empire: leaving the reſt unto induſtry and ſearch of the Chriſtian Reader, of whoſe acquaintance with the Scriptures I dare make no queſtion. This only I premiſe as concerning the Judges, That the time of their continuance in that Authority, is not to be meaſured from the time of their coming to it, till the entrance of the next Succeſſor, as in that of the Kings: theſe being occaſionally raiſed by Almighty God, for ſome preſent Service, and no ſtanding or eſtabliſhed Magiſtrates; except Moſes and Joſhuah only, who held the Government during life, and managed it as abſolute Princes.

he was slain by a Conspiracy of his Servants, when he had reigned but two years only.

3310 16 Josiah, the Son of Amon, a right godly King; unfortunately slain by Pharaoh Necho King of Ægypt, at the Battel of Megiddo. 31.

3341 17 Jehoahaz, the Son of Josiah, a King of three months only; deposed and sent Prisoner by Pharaoh Necho, to Riblah in the Land of Hamath, since called Antiochia.

18 Jehoiakim, the Son of Josiah, and half Brother of Jehoahaz, advanced unto the Throne by Necho, who changed his name from Eliakim, by which he formerly was called, into that of Jehoiakim. 11.

3351 19 Jehoiachim, or Jechoniah, the Son of Jehoiakim, at the end of three Months led captive unto Babylon, with his Wives and Mother, and the Great Officers of the Realm, by Nebuchadnezzar.

20 Zedekiah, another of the Sons of Josiah, and Brother by the whole blood of Jehoahaz, made King by Nebuchadnezzar in the place of Jehoiachin, or Jechoniah; his name being changed from Mattaniah, by which called before. But rebelling against his Benefactor, contrary to the counsel of the Prophet Jeremy, he was taken Prisoner in the eleventh year of his Reign, Hierusalem destroyed, the Temple ruinated, and the People carried captive to the Land of Babylon, A.M. 3362. where they lived in exile 70 years. Which time expired, Cyrus the King of the Persians gave them leave to return to their Country, and to re-edifie their City and Temple. Which work being finished, by the encouragement of Ezra, Nehemiah and Zorobabel; and the Nation again setled in some part of their old Possessions, they were after governed by their High-Priests, and the Council of their Elders, which they called the Sanhedrim, the High-Priest bearing the chief stroke, and being looked on as a man of the greatest Power. And therefore I will here subjoyn the Catalogue of so many of them as governed the Affairs of this Country, from the Return of the People from the Captivity of Babylon, till the time of the Maccabees; who managed the Estate hereof both as Priests and Princes, till their Subjection by the Romans.

The High-Priests of the JEWS after the Captivity.

A.M.

3427 1 Joshuah, the High-Priest at the time of the Return, assistant to Zorobabel in rebuilding the Temple, which he lived not to finish; though continuing (as some say) in the Government 100 years. But I believe rather, that the Names of his Successors being lost, the whole time is ascribed to him.

3530 2 Jehoiakim, said to be the Son of Joshuah, in whose time, by the diligence of Ezra and Nehemiah, the Temple was finished, and the Worship of God restored.

3580 3 Jonathan, or Johanan. 30.

3610 4 Jaddus, who entertained Alexander the Great coming to Hierusalem, (of whom more anon) the Brother of that Manasses, for whose sake, and on whose occasion, the Temple on Mount Gerizim was built by Sanballat, with the leave of Alexander. 20.

3630 5 Onias succeded Jaddus, as Jaddus had done Jonathan; not by Birth (as formerly) but by Election of the People.

3651 6 Simon, sirnamed Justus. 9.

3660 7 Eleazer, the Brother of Simon. 32.

3692 8 Menelaus, the Brother of Eleazer and Simon.

3718 9 Onias II. 14.

3732 10 Simon II. 10.

3742 11 Onias III. the Son of Simon the 2d.

3787 12 Jason, the Brother of Onias the 3d.

3789 13 Menelaus II. the Brother of Jason, in whose time the Temple was prophaned by the Syrians, at the Command of Antiochus Epiphanes.

3794 14 Alcimus, under whose Government the Maccabees began to appear in defence of their Country and Religion, by whom succeeded in the Office of High-Priest, after his decease. Among these none of greater note than Jaddus, High-Priest at such time as Alexander the Great having conquered Syria, marched towards Hierusalem, and was encountred by this Jaddus in his Priestly Vestments; assuring him in the Name of the most High God, and making it demonstrable from the Propheste of Daniel, That he should prosper in his Enterprize against the Persians. An hope which Alexander did embrace with the greater confidence, because (as he affirmed to Parmenio his chief Commander) he had once at Diu, a City of Macedon, seen in a Dream or Vision such a Person as Jaddus was, so habited, and professing the same one God; by whom he was encouraged to pursue the Action which he had in hand, with assurance of Victory. And upon this the Jews were so much favoured by him, that he gave them leave to live according to their own Laws, and to enjoy with Freedom their own Religion. But it held only for his own time: For shortly after his decease, they were on both sides plagued by the Kings of Ægypt and Syria, who ransacked their Cities, slaughtered their People, made havock of their Goods, and compelled many of them both to eat of forbidden Meats and offer Sacrifice unto Idols. At the last God raised up Mattathias (descended from Asmoneus a Priest of the rank of Joarib) and his five Sons, to resist these Insolencies; who in the Reign of Antiochus Epiphanes King of Syria, undertook the Protection of the People, and gave unto the Syrians many notable overthrows; insomuch that the Jews made choice of Judas sirnamed Maccabæus (the eldest of the five Brethren) for their Prince or Governour.

The ASMONEAN Princes of JEWRY.

A.M.

3799 1 Judas Maccabæus, the third Son of Mattathias above-mentioned, one of the nine Worthies, vanquished three great and puissant Armies of the Syrians, conducted by Apollonius, Gorgias, and Lysias, men of great renown, being Commanders of the Forces of Antiochus Epiphanes, before mentioned.

3805 2 Jonathan, the Brother of Judas, vanquished the Forces of Bacchides and Alcimus, Captains of Demetrius King of Syria; and after many notable exploits and deeds of Arms, was treacherously murdered by Tryphon aspiring at that time to the Syrian Diadem.

3823 3 Simon the elder, brother of Judas and Jonathan, subdued the Cities of Gaza, Joppe, and Jamnia, and cleared Judea of the Syrians; perfidiously slain in the course of his fortune, by his Son-in-law Ptolomy. 8.

3831 4 Johannes Hyrcanus, the third Son of Simon his two two other Brethren being in the power of Ptolomy) ſucceeded in the Government. He deſtroyed the Temple on Mount Garizim, conquered Alſamaria, and ſubdued the Idumæans, compelling them to be Circumciſed; transferred the War into Syria; and dying, left the Soveraignty to his eldeſt Son Ariſtobulus.

The ASMONÆAN Kings of JUDAH.

3862 1 Ariſtobulus, cauſed himſelf to be Crowned, and was the firſt King of Judah after the Babylonian Captivity; he ſtarved his Mother, and ſlew Antigonus his Brother.

3863 2 Alexander, the Brother of Ariſtobulus, exceedingly inlarged the Kingdom of Jury by the conqueſt of Ituræa, and ſome parts of Syria; but was withal ſo great a Tyrant, that he cauſeleſly ſlew of his own Subjects fifty thouſand in battel; and commanded 800 of his principal enemies to be hanged before his face. He left behind him two ſons, Hyrcanus who was at laſt ſlain by Herod after all his troubles, leaving no iſſue Male behind him; and Ariſtobulus the father of Alexander, and of Antigonus, of whom more anon: of which two Alexander was the Father of another Ariſtobulus, the moſt beautiful Prince of all his time, and of Mariamne the wife of Herod, by whoſe command they were moſt villanouſly murdered.

3890 3 Alexandra, by ſome called Salome, the wife of Alexander, and following the counſel of her husband at the time of his death, committed her ſelf and her Children into the hands of the Phariſees, then in great power and credit amongſt the people; by means whereof ſhe procured an honourable burial for her husband, obtained the Kingdom for her ſelf, and finally left it to her Children, whoſe diſagreements cauſed the ruine of this famous Family.

3899 4 Ariſtobulus II. the younger Son of Alexander, an active Prince, and beloved of the Military Men, having preſently after the death of his Mother poſſeſt himſelf of the greateſt part of the Forts and Caſtles by the forced conſent of Hircanus his elder Brother, ſucceeded in the Kingdom and High-Prieſthood alſo; both which he held with great trouble and oppoſition both from his brother and the Romans, whom moſt imprudently they called in to decide the Controverſie. By Pompey ſent Priſoner unto Rome (with Alexander and Antigonus his two Sons) he eſcaped thence and raiſed a new Army for the recovery of his Kingdom; but being forced to yield himſelf to Gabinius one of Pompey's Lieutenants, he was ſent back again to Rome, where he died in Priſon, having reigned three years and ſix months.

3903 5 Hircanus II. a Prince of weak parts, and not fit for Government, was made High-Prieſt in the firſt year of his Mothers reign, but diſpoſſeſt of that dignity by Ariſtobulus his younger brother. Reſtored again by the favour of Pompey, he was again diſturb'd in his poſſeſſion by Alexander the eldeſt Son of Ariſtobulus; who eſcaping out of Rome, had raiſed ſome Forces, and began to diſpute the Title with him: but was ſoon after diſcomfited by Gabinius afore-mentioned, and ſlain by Scipio, another of Pompey's Captains. After the death of Ariſtobulus, which hapned in the year 3903. Hircanus was lookt on by the People, not only as their High-Prieſt, but as their Prince and King, commonly called ſo by Joſephus in the courſe of his Hiſtory. His affairs managed for the moſt part by Antipater (an Idumæan born, and the Father of Herod) his conſtant and moſt faithful friend in all his troubles, who governed the Eſtate with great care and prudence. But he being made away by Poyſon, Antigonus the younger Son of Ariſtobulus, ſet on foot his Title to the Kingdom, and drew in an Army of the Parthians to make it good; by whoſe aid, having treacherouſly inſnared Hircanus, he cut off his ears (to make him uncapable of the Prieſthood for the time to come) and ſent him Priſoner to Babylon; taking upon himſelf the Title of King, though never acknowledged for ſuch by the Jewiſh Nation. But long he did not pleaſe himſelf with that Title neither, for being beſieged in Jeruſalem by Herod, then newly created King of the Jews by the Roman Senate, and by him taken Priſoner in the ſack of that City, he was ſent in bonds to Mark Anthony, and by him beheaded. As for Hircanus the rightful Prince of this Country, he remained Priſoner for a time amongſt the Parthians till hearing of the death of Antigonus, he returned into Jewry and lived contentedly under the Government of Herod, of whoſe greatneſs he had laid the firſt foundation, and was by him in fine wickedly murdered.

The Idumæan Kings and Princes of Jewry.

3940 1 Herod the Aſcalonite, ſirnamed the Great, ſon to Antipater the Idumæan, was by the power of Mark Antony created, and by Auguſtus confirmed King of Jewry; under whom that Kingdom was more enlarged, and in greater ſplendor than ever it had been in ſince the time of David. A Prince of great Magnificence, but of greater Vices. During his Reign, the Scepter being now departed from Judah, the Lord CHRIST was born.

A. Chriſti.

6 2 Archelaus, eldeſt ſon of Herod at the time of his death, ſucceeded with the Title of King; but in truth and reality poſſeſſed only a Tetrarchy, or fourth part of the Kingdom, though the beſt and largeſt of the four, containing Judea, Samaria, and Idumea. The reſt of Herods Kingdom was divided into three other Tetrarchies, i. e. the Tetrarchy of Galilee and Petræa, given Herod Antipas; Secondly, that of Ituræa, given to Philip, another of the Sons of Herod; And thirdly, That of Abilene, conferred on Lyſanias. Baniſhed into France, his Tetrarchy was made a Province of the Roman Empire; governed by Pontius Pilate, at our Saviours Paſſion.

16 3 Herod II. ſirnamed Antipas, Tetrarch of Galilee and Petræa, on the baniſhment of Archelaus, ſucceeded him, as chief of the Herodian Family, but not in his Tetrarchy; and at laſt followed him in his baniſhment alſo. This is he who murdered John Baptiſt, and in whoſe time CHRIST ſuffered.

40 4 Herod III. ſirnamed Agrippa, in honour of Agrippa the Son-in-law, and moſt truſty Favorite of Auguſtus Cæſar, Nephew to Herod rod the Great, by his Son Ariſtobulus begotten on Mariamne of the Race of the Aſmonees, was by Caligula firſt inveſted in the Tetrarchy of his Uncle Philip, with the Title of King; and next, in that of Antipas alſo; and finally by Claudius, in that alſo of Lyſanias, ſome part of the Tetrarchy of Archelaus being added unto his Dominions. This was the man that murdered James, and impriſoned Peter; and in the end was ſtricken by an Angel, and devoured by Worms.

47 5 Agrippa Minor, ſon of Herod Agrippa, was he before whom St. Paul pleaded in defence of the Goſpel; and the laſt which had the Title of King of the Jews: for in his time the City of Hieruſalem was deſtroyed by Titus, and the whole Kingdom made a Province of the Roman Empire, Anno 73.

And here it is to be obſerved, that when Salmanaſſar had ſubdued and captivated the ten Tribes of Iſrael, he ſent new Colonies of his own to plant this Country; that ſo fruitful and well-ſituate a part of his Empire might yield its juſt tribute, and not lye open to the fury of the next Invader. But the Romans not having (it ſeemeth) ſo much policy or providence, as thoſe whom they counted barbarous; having laid the Country deſolate, leſt it unfurniſhed of new Colonies: whereby the Perſians, next the Saracens, and after them the Turks, entring the Roman Empire at this door, have ſucceſſively driven the Romans out of the whole houſe. Now that we may the better perceive how the Romans had weakened, and almoſt utterly rooted out the Jewiſh Nation, we will relate ſome of their particular Maſſacres, which were not more cruelly inflicted on them by the Enemy, than juſtly deſerved by themſelves; they wiſhing, though (I ſuppoſe) not deſiring, that the innocent Blood of our Saviour ſhould be on them and their Children. Firſt then the Inhabitants of Cæſarea ſlew of the Jews in one day, about 20000, and ſuch as fled were took and impriſoned by Florus the Roman Lieutenant of Judæa. To revenge this ſlaughter, the Jews ſet upon the Syrians; in which skirmiſh 13000 of them were ſlain. The people of Alexandria put 50000 of them to the ſword; they of Damaſcus, 10000; Antonius, a Roman Captain, ſlew in Aſcalon 10000 of them; and Ceſtius another Captain, 8040 perſons. Now to come to the wars here managed by Veſpaſian; This Veſpaſian in the ſiege of Aphaca, ſlew and took priſoner, 17130 perſons; In Samaria, 11600 perſons; In Jotopata, 42200 perſons; In Joppa ſo many killed and drowned themſelves, that the Sea threw up again 4200 dead bodies; and the reſt ſo totally periſhed, that there remained none to carry tidings unto Hieruſalem of the loſs of the Town. In the City of Tarichea, were ſlain, and made captives, 45000 perſons, beſides thoſe which were given to the King Agrippa. In Gamala there periſhed 90000, and none left alive but only two women; In Gaſcala 5000 men dyed by the Sword; in the City of Gadera there were ſlain 32200, beſides an infinite number which had drowned themſelves. In Hieruſalem it ſelf, there died 1100000 of them, partly by the Sword, and partly by the Famine; the worſer Enemy of the two; there were found 2000 in Privies and Sinks; and 9700 taken priſoners, inſomuch that 30 Jews were ſold for a Penny. So punctual was the Divine Juſtice in retaliating to this wretched people, according to the meaſure of their Iniquities, that they who bought their Saviour for 30 pence, ſhould be ſold at thirty for a penny in the open Market.

Now that Jeruſalem was able to contain ſuch a number of people, is evident, in that when Ceſtius was Lieutenant of Jewry, the High-Prieſt did at his requeſt, number the people which came thither to eat the Paſchal Lamb; and found them to be two millions and ſeven hundred thouſand living ſouls, all ſound and purified: For to Lepers, or men having a flux of Seed, or women in their monthly terms, or to ſtrangers, it was not lawful to eat of it. And when Titus laid Siege to the City, it was in the Feaſt of the Paſſeover, when moſt of the people were there aſſembled; God (as it were) having thus impriſoned them. All theſe Maſſacres, beſides divers others which I have omitted, and infinite numbers which were ſlain in the Fields and Villages, which drowned themſelves, & which were privately made away, amounting all to almoſt 2000000 of people, hapned in the compaſs of four years; beginning at the 12th of Nero, and ending at the 2d of Veſpaſian; yet was not the whole Nation rooted out, till the year 136. For then this miſerable people, having ſtirred two notable rebellions; the one under Trajan, and the laſt under Adrian the Emperours, were generally baniſhed their native Country, and never again permitted to inhabit it, otherwiſe than as ſtrangers. After this diſſolution, the Jews were diſperſed all over the World, and eſpecially in Spain, where Adrian commanded many of them to dwel; yet they found everywhere ſo little favour, that having divers times been put to grievous mulcts and ranſoms, they were at laſt thruſt out of moſt of the Kingdoms of Europe alſo. They were baniſhed out of England by Edward the firſt, Anno 1290. Out of France by Philip the Fair, 1307. Out of Spain by Ferdinand the Catholique, 1492. Out of Portugal by Emmanuel, 1497. Out of Naples, and Sicily, by Charles the Fifth, 1539, Yet are they found in great numbers in the Romiſh parts of Germany and Poland; in moſt Cities of Italy, eſpecially Rome it ſelf, where are no leſs than 15000 or 20000 of them; and alſo in the Popes Country of Avignon. The reaſon why they are permitted to live thus under the Popes noſe, is pretended to be an expectation of their Converſion, which is a meer pretence indeed; the true reaſon being the benefit hence ariſing to his Holineſs Coffers; the hopes of their Converſion being very ſmall, and the means leſs. For beſides the ſcandal, Datum & acceptum, by the Papiſts fond worſhipping of Images, ſo peremptorily contrary to the firſt Table of the Law: they are not permitted to ſee any Book of Chriſtian Religion, no not ſo much as the New Teſtament. And (which worketh much upon men of their metal) becauſe at their Converſion they muſt quit all their goods unto the Church, as being ill gotten, and by conſequence the works of the Devil, which in their Baptiſm they promiſe to renounce. They have alſo a Synagogue at Amſterdam, and are pretty thick ſpred over the Dominions of the Turks: who, notwithſtanding ſo hate them for crucifying of CHRIST, that they uſed to ſay in the deteſtation of a thing, I would I might dye a Jew. Neither will they permit a Jew to turn Turk, unleſs he be firſt baptized. And though their multitudes be ſo great both in Theſſalonica & Conſtantinople, that it is conceiv'd they do amount to the number of 160000 perſons; yet they are not only contemned but hated: but there, and in all other places of their habitation, upon every tumultuous aſſembly of the Common people, and conſtantly every Eaſter, whereſoever they be, in danger of death. Inſomuch that if a Jew do but ſtir out of doors betwixt Maundy Thurſday at noon, and Eaſter Eve at night, the Chriſtians of the Eaſt, amongſt whom they dwell (though far fewer in number) will be ſure to ſtone them; becauſe at that time, they buffetted, derided, and in fine crucified their Saviour. Hated in all the parts of the Turks Dominions, becauſe employed as Publicans in gathering and enhauncing enhauncing the publick tributes, which they exact with all severity that may be, and improve unto the most. And no less hated in all parts of the Christian world, as Enemies to the Cross of CHRIST: so unreclaimably addicted to their ancient Judaism, and so abhorring from the conversation of other men; that it is not possible they should reap any other harvest, than contempt and scorn from those amongst whom they dwell.

To give you their Character in brief; They are a people which know how to comply with the times, and the condition which they live in; especially if their profit be concerned in it: reviled like Dogs, and used like Slaves, yet never shew so much as an Angry countenance. A Nation which will thrive wheresoever they come, but most by Usury and Brokage; not lending any thing but on pawns, and those once forfeited, never more redeemable. The best of both Sexes said to have an unsavory rankness, not incident (if not caused by sluttishness) to other people: from whom as different in their habit, as in their Religion. And as for that, they retain still Circumcision, as the badge and cognizance of their Nation; but mingled with many Ceremonies not prescribed by the Law, nor observed by the Ancients: placing a void Chair for the Prophet Elias, whom they believe to be present, though unseen at the Solemnity. And upon this they are so besotted, that they conceive the Female Sex uncapable of eternal life, because not capable of Circumcision; and therefore use to name them with no other Ceremony than at six weeks end to have some young Wenches lift up the Cradle with the Child in it; which she that standeth at the head, giveth the name unto. Of their Sabbath so extremely doating, that they have added to the Superstitions left them by the Pharisees: And herein they are so precise, that if a Jew travel on the Friday, and in the Evening fall so short of his Journeys end, that it amounts to more than to 2000 Cubits, or six Furlongs, which they account a Sabbath-days journey, there must he sit him down and keep his Sabbath, though in a wood, or field, or the high-way side, without fear of wind or weather, of Thieves or Robbers, and without taking order for meat or drink: Periculo latronum prædonumque omni, penuriâ item omni cibi potûsque neglectis, as Buxtorfius hath it. And so far have they gone in despight of Christ, as to declare it unlawful to lift the Ox or Ass out of a ditch; permitted in the strictest times of Pharisaical rigour. So pertinacious in retaining the difference of meats and drinks, that they will by no means sit at the Table with other men, and so precise in the dressing of it, that they will eat of no flesh but of their own killing only; and that too with such cautions and reservations that if any of the entrails be corrupt or dislocated, they will sell the whole beast to the Christians for a very trifle. Beneficial in that only to the neighbouring Christians. Wine they forbear except it be of their own planting, not so much out of dislike of that Liquor, for they are generally good fellows, and love their bellies, as for fear the Wine should be baptized: a Ceremony much used in the Eastern parts. Of the coming of their Messiah so full of hopes, that there is no great Warrier stirring, but they look upon him as the man; till some sad Tragedy or other, which they suffer under that perswasion, makes them see their error: promising to themselves whensoever he cometh, a restitution of their Kingdom: and such felicities therein, in the literal sence of some Texts of Scripture, which carry in them a more mystical and sacred meaning, That in good time (but Gods, not theirs) they shall be made partakers of the several blessings which those Texts do speak of, is both the hope and wish of all pious men; who cannot chuse but grieve to behold the natural branches, so long dismembred and cut off from the tree of life. And this they neither hope nor wish for but on some fair grounds, presented to them by St. Paul: who said expresly, that when the fulness of the Gentiles is once come in, that then all Israel shall be saved, Rom. 11.25,26 The words are so plainly positive that they need no Commentary. Or if they did, we have the general consent of the Ancients, besides the constant current of most modern Writers; who cherish the glad hopes of their conversion to the Gospel, which the Apostle doth there aim at. Origen, Athanasius, Hierom, Augustine, Chrysostome, for the primitive times; Beda and Hugo Cardinalis, in the times succeeding; Gorran, and Thomas Aquinas, for those of Rome; Calvin, Beza, Bullinger, and Peter Martyr for the Reformed Churches; besides divers others of great note, so expound that Text. Nor want there other Texts of Scripture to affirm as much; which he that doth desire to see, may find with the Expositions of most Christian Writers, in a Book writ by Doctor Willet, Entituled, De generali & novissima Judæorum vocatione; and thither I refer the more curious Reader. Out of all I shall take these words of Peter Martyr, written on that passage of St. Paul to the Romans, viz. Non ita Judæi perierunt ut nulla de illorum salute spes superfit; The Jews (saith he) are not so wholly fallen from the favour of God, but that there still remains some hopes of their salvation. Of their Salvation then by the Gospel of Christ, when the fulness of the Gentiles is once come in, we conceive good hopes: but whether there be any of their restitution to their temporal Kingdom, is a further question; and not so clearly evidenced in the Book of God, though there be somewhat in that Book which may seem to imitate it. That the opinion of being restored to the Messiah to that Temporal power which was taken from them by the Romans, was prevalent as well amongst Christ's Disciples, as the rest of the Jews, is, I take it, clear enough in the holy Gospel. In such a Kingdom, and no other, did the two Sons of Zebedee desire to sit on both hands of their Master; and the same was it, and no other, which all of them expected, as appeared by the words of Cleophas, Luke 25.21. that Christ should have restored unto them. We thought, said he, that this would have proved the man, that should have redeemed Israel. Redeemed Israel? From what? From sin and Satan, or the curse and bondage of the Law? Not so, Ἀλλ' ἀπὸ τῦ ζύγυ τῆς δελείας; but from the yoke of Vassallage, which the Romans had so lately imposed on them, say the Fathers rightly. Touching the same it was that they moved him saying; Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the Kingdom of Israel, Acts 1.6. In answer whereunto, our Saviour makes them no denial, as unto the thing, nor tells them that they never must expect such a restauration; but only puts them off as unto the time, and bids them rest themselves on the pleasure of God the Father, in whose hands the disposing of all Kingdoms was: It is not for you (saith he) to know the times and seasons, which the Father hath in his own power, ver. 7. By which answer (as it seems to me) there is a possibility of restoring them to their Kingdom also; though not in the τὸ νῦν, at that very instant when they were most desirous to have it done, or at any other time fit for them to know; that being a secret, which the Father hath reserved to himself alone.

But leaving these Speculations of a Restitution of the Throne of Israel, and the great Power and Priviledges it may then enjoy, let us look back on the Estate in which it flourished in the former times, when the Forces and Revenue of it were at the highest. And first for the Revenues, they amounted in the time of Solomon (as is said 2 Chron. 9.13.) to 666 Talents of Gold, besides the benefits of his Customs and Impositions, which cometh to 2997000 pounds of yearly income. A vast Sum for such a little Kingdom. Nor can we reckon them at less, if they were not greater in the time of David; of whom it is affirmed, 1 Chron. 22. 14. That he left to Solomon 100000 Talents of Gold, and 1000000 Talents of Silver towards the building of the Temple, besides 3000 Talents of Gold, and 7000 Talents of Silver, formerly deposited for that purpose, as is said 1 Chron. 29. 4. Which if it be computed at the ordinary rate of a Jews Talent, reckoning a Talent of Gold at 4500 pound, and a Talent of Silver at 375 pound, will amount in our money to 840125000 pounds. So vast a Sum, that it had been sufficient to have built a Temple of pure Gold and Silver, far greater than the Temple of Solomon, without other Materials. I conceive therefore with our learned and industrious Brerewood, that by the Talent in those places we are to understand a far lesser sum than the ordinary Hebrew Talents: which whether it doth there signifie a Sicle only, which is half a Crown of English money, as Eupolemus, cited by Eusebius, was of opinion; or that every Talent of Gold came to three Golden Crowns of Athens, which maketh forty five shillings of English money, as Julius Pollux hath it in his Onomasticon, I am not able to determine. But measuring it by the last estimate, which I more approve of, it will amount to two millions and two hundred ninety and five thousand pounds: a vast sum for a King to leave in ready money, which was always exercised in war. And though I do not find expresly what the Revenues of Judah might amount unto, after the division: yet by one circumstance I find them to be very great. For it is written, 2 Kings 18. 14. that the yearly tribute imposed upon Hezekiah, by the King of Assyria, was three hundred Talents of Silver, and thirty Talents of Gold; amounting (according to the ordinary Hebrew Talent, which questionless is there intended) to two hundred forty seven thousand and five hundred pounds of English money: and therefore probably his ordinary Revenue must be thrice as much, above that tribute; Else the Assyrian had not left him a subsistence for a King to live on. Nor can I think that the Revenues of this Crown were less to Herod, than formerly to Solomon, or David; considering his vast expences, the many and magnificent Structures which he brought to perfection, the immeasurable donatives bestowed upon Augustus, Livia, and the Court of Rome, together with the large Legacies he gave at the time of his death: not paralell'd by any King before or since, though of a more large and more ample Territority than he stood possessed of.

What forces the Kings of the Hebrews, were able to bring into the field, may best be estimated by the Muster which David made, when he numbred the People; the enrolment of such as were able to bear arms, and fit for service coming in all to five hundred thousand fighting men, in Judah only, and eight hundred thousand men in the Tribes of Israel. 'Tis true, that David never brought into the field so vast a multitude; but when the Kingdoms were divided, and war denounced betwixt Jeroboam and Abijah, we find almost the whole number brought into the field: that is to say, 800 thousand on the side of Jeroboam, the King of Israel and four hundred thousand by Abijah, the King of Judah. After this, out of that small Kingdom, Asa the Son of Abijah, being invaded by Zarah the Arabian or Ethiopian, advanced an Army of five hundred and eighty thousand men, which was more than the enrolment made in the time of David. An infinite proportion for so small a Kingdom; and were it not avouched in the holy Scriptures, far above belief, had not that God who said to Abraham, that his Seed should be as the Stars of Heaven for multitude, been able to have made it good.

As for the story and affairs of this Country since the time of Adrian, the Jews being all expelled their native Soyl, and Christianity in fine prevailing over all those parts; it was inhabited as the rest of the Empire was, by men of that Religion only: in this Country so advanced and countenanced, that Helena the Mother of Constantine, is reported to have built in it no less than two hundred Temples and Monasteries, in places of most note for the Miracles of Christ our Saviour, or the dwelling of some of his Disciples. In the year 615. the Persians, under the Conduct of Chosroes their King, became Masters of it; and possessed themselves of Hierusalem also: expelled thence by the valour and good fortune of the Emperour Heraclius, who recovering the Cross on which Christ suffered, out of the hands of the Pagans, carried it with as great a triumph into Constantinople, as David once did the Ark into Hierusalem; occasioning thereby the annual Festival on the fourth of September, called Holy-Cross-day, or Exaltatio Sanctæ Crucis. But this glory and rejoycing did not long continue; For within twenty years after the recovery of this City from the power of the Persians, it was again conquerred and subdued by Homar, or Aumar, Caliph of the Saracens, Anno 637. Under this yoke the captivated Christians had long suffered, when they changed the Tyrant, but not the tyranny, the Turks about the year 1079. overcoming the Saracens, and domineering in their stead. Twenty years did the Christians languish under this oppression, when one Peter an Hermite, travelling for devotion to the holy Land, and being an eye-witness of the miseries under which they groaned; at his return, made his addresses to Pope Urban, the second, acquainting him with the sad conditions of the poor Christians in those Countries. A Council thereupon is called at Clermont in France, where the Pope (willing to imploy the Christian Princes farther off, that he might the better play his game at home,) did so effectually advance and endear the business, that no fewer than three hundred thousand fighting men, under several Leaders, undertook the service. And it prospered so well with them in the first beginning, that having beaten the Turks out of Asia Minor, taken the great City of Antioch, and most of the strong Towns of Syria, they incamped before Hierusalem, and in short time took it, Anno 1099 after it had been four hundred years and upwards in the power of the Infidels. The City being thus gained, was offered with the title of King, to Robert Duke of Normandy, Son of William the Conqueror: but he upon the hopes of the Kingdom of England, refused that honour; never prospering, as it was observed, after that refusal. Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorrain, had the next offer of it, which with a religious joy he accepted of; though on the day of his inauguration he refused the Crown: affirming that it was not fit for a Christian Prince to wear in that City a Crown of Gold, where the Redeemer of the World wore a Crown of Thorns.

The Kings of Hierusalem

1099 1 Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorrain.
1100 2 Baldwin of Lorrain, brother of Godfrey, won Ptolemais, and many other Cities of Syria.
1118 3 Baldwin II. sirnamed of Bruges, Cousin of Godfrey, and Baldwin, the Former Kings, overcame the Sultan of Damascus; and inlarged his Kingdom by the addition of Tyre.
1131 4 Fulk, Earl of Anjou, having married Millisent, the daughter of Baldwin the second, succeeded succeeded after his decease; unfortunately killed with a fall from his Horse.

1142 5 Baldwin III. Son of Fulk and Millescent, fortified Gaza against the Caliph of Ægypt; and recovered Paneade from the King of Damascus.

1164 6 Almericus, the Brother of Baldwin the third, so distressed the Great Caliph of Ægypt, that he was forced to call in the Turks to aid him; by whom slain, and his Kingdom transferred on Saracon the Turkish General.

1174 7 Baldwin IV. Son of Almericus, overthrew Saladine the victorious King of the Turks in a Fight near Ascalon, and valiantly defended his Dominions.

1185 8 Baldwin V Son of Sybil the Sister of Baldwin the fourth, by William Marques of Montferrat; unnaturally poysoned by his own Mother, having reigned only five Months to make way for her second Husband, called 1185 9 Guy of Lusignan, the last King of Hierusalem, that had the possession of the City: during whose time Saladine the Sultan of Ægypt won that Kingdom, Anno 1187, which his successors defended against all invasions, till the year 1517. in which Selimus the first, Emperour of the Turks, added the Holy Land, together with Ægypt, to his Empire. When Hierusalem was taken by the Christians, it is said that the German Emperours name was Fredericus; the Pope's, Urbanus; the Hierosolymitan Patriarch, Heraclius; and that so also were they called, when the Christians again lost it. This is the conceit of Roger Hoveden, in the Life of Henry the Second; but how it can agree with Chronology, I do not see.

After the taking of Hierusalem by Sultan Saladine, the Christians retired their Forces into some of the other Towns of the Holy-Land; which they made good against the Enemy, and defended them under the Government of these three Kings following, viz.

10 Conrade Marques of Montferrat, Husband of Isabel the Daughter of Almericus King of Hierusalem.

11 Henry Earl of Compagne, second Husband of Isabel.

12 John di Brenne, Husband of Mary, or Yoland as some call her, Daughter of Conrade and Isabel, the last Christian King that ever had possession in Syria or Palestine: inhabited ever since by Moors and Arabians; few Christians, and not many Turks but such as be in Garrisons only. Yoland the Daughter of this John di Brenne, was Wife to Frederick King of Naples, who in her right intituled himself King of Hierusalem: and so now do the Kings of Spain, as Heirs unto and Possessors of the Kingdom of Naples. Concerning which Title, it would not be amiss to insert this Story. When the Wars in Queen Elizabeth's time were hot between England and Spain, there were Commissioners of both sides appointed to Treat of Peace. They met at a Town of the French Kings, and first it was debated in what Tongue the Negotiations should be handled. A Spaniard thinking to give the English Commissioners a shrewd gird, proposed the French Tongue as most fit; it being a Language which the Spaniards were well skilled in: and for these Gentlemen of England, I suppose (saith he) that they cannot be ignorant of the Language of their fellow-Subjects; their Queen is Queen of France, as well as of England. Nay in faith my Masters, replied Doctor Dale (a Civil Lawyer, and one of the Masters of Requests) the French Tongue is too vulgar for a business of this secresy and importance, especially in a French Town: We will therefore rather treat in Hebrew, the Language of Hierusalem, whereof your Master is King; and I suppose you are therein as well skilled, as we in the French. And thus much for this Title.

The Arms of the Christian Kings in Hierusalem was Luna, a Cross Crosset crossed, Sol; which was commonly called the Hierusalem Cross. But for their Forces and Revenues, I cannot see how any estimate may be made hereof, in regard they subsisted not by their own proper strength, but by the Purses and the Forces of the Western Christians; more or less active in that Service, as zeal, or emulation, or desire of glory, were predominant in them.

Chief Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, after the Recovery thereof from the power of the Turks, were,

1. Of the Sepulchre, said to be instituted originally by Queen Helena. The Mother of Constantine the Great, by whom the Temple of the Sepulchre was indeed first built: but more truly, by Philip King of France, Anno 1099. at such time as that temple was regained from the Turks. Their Arms the same with that of the Kings before blazoned, representing the five Wounds of our Saviour CHRIST. At the first conferred on none but Gentlemen of Blood and Fortune; now saleable to any that will buy it of the Pater-Guardian, who with a Convent of Franciscans doth reside near that Temple.

2. Of Saint John of Hierusalem, begun by one Gerard, Anno 1114. and confirmed by Pope Paschalis the second. Their Badge or Cognizance is a White Cross of eight points. Their duty, to defend the Holy-Land, relieve Pilgrims, and succour Christian Princes against the Infidels. They were to be of noble Parentage and Extraction; and grew in time to such infinite Riches, especially after the suppression of the Templars (most of whose Lands were after given unto this Order) that they had at one time in the several parts of Christendom, no fewer than 20000 Manours; and of such reputation in all Christian Kingdoms, that in England the Lord Prior of this Order, was accompted the Prince Baron in the Realm. But now their Revenue is not a little diminished, by the withdrawing of the Kings of England, and other Protestant Princes, from the Church of Rome: who on that change, seized on all the Lands of this Order in their several Countries; and either kept them to themselves, or disposed them to others as they pleased. Of these we shall speak more when we are in Malta where they now reside: advertising only at the present, that their first Great Master, was that Gerrard by whom they were founded; the last that had his residence in the Holy-Land, one John de Villiers, in whose time being driven out of Palestine, they removed unto Cyprus, and in the time of Fulk de Villaret. Anno 1309, to the Isle of Rhodes; Out of which expelled by Solyman the Magnificent; Anno 1522. they removed from one place to another, till at last by the magnificence of Charles the fifth Anno 1530. they were setled in Malta: and there we shall speak further of them.

3. Of the Templars, instituted by Hugh of Payennes: Anno 1113. and confirmed by Pope Eugenius. Their Ensign was a Red Cross, in token that they should shed their blood to defend Christ's Temple. They were buried cross-legged, and wore on their backs the figure of the Cross; for which they were by the common people called Cross backs, or Crouch-backs, and by corruption Crook-backs. Edmund Earl of Lancaster, second Son to our Henry the third, being of this Order, was vulgarly called Edmund Crook-back; Which gave Henry the fourth a foolish occasion to feign, that this Edmund (from whom he he was deſcended) was indeed the eldeſt Son of King Henry the third; but for his crookedneſs and deformity, his younger Brother was preferred to the Crown before him. Theſe Knights had in all Provinces of Europe their ſubordinate Governours, in which they poſſeſſed no leſs than 16000 Lordſhips: the greatneſs of which Revenue was not the leaſt cauſe of diſſolving the Order. For Philip the Fair, King of France, had a plot to inveſt one of his Sons with the title of King of Hieruſalem, and hoped to procure of the Pope the Revenue of this Order, to be laid unto that Kingdom, for ſupport of the Title: which he thought he might the better do, becauſe Clement the fifth then Pope, for the love he bare to France, had transferred his Seat from Rome to Avignion. But herein his hopes deceived him; for this Order being diſſolved, the Lands thereto belonging were given to the Knights Hoſpitallers, or of St. John. The Crimes objected againſt this Order were, Firſt, Their Revolt from their profeſſed Obedience unto the Patriarch of Jeruſalem, who was their Viſitor: Secondly, Their unſpeakable Pride: and Thirdly, Their ſins againſt Nature. The Houſe of our Law-Students in London, called the Temple, was the chief Houſe of the Knights of this Order in England; and was by the Knights of St. John, whoſe principal Manſion was in Smithfield, ſold unto the Students of the Law, for the yearly Rent of 10 l. about the middle of the Reign of Edward the third.

Theſe three Orders Mr. Selden (and deſervedly) putteth not in his Titles of Honour, in that they were prohibited to kiſs a Woman; honourary Knight-hood, and the Love of Ladies, going together like Vertue and Reward.

Thus much for Paleſtine.

OF ARABIA.

ARABIA hath on the Eaſt Chaldæa, and the Bay or Gulff of Perſia; on the Weſt, Paleſtine, ſome part of Ægypt, and the whole courſe of the Red-Sea; on the North the River Euphrates, with ſome parts of Syria and Paleſtine; and on the South, the main Southern Ocean. But at ſome times the name extended ſome what further. Pliny enlargeth it as far as Comagena, the North part of Syria; in regard that many Arabian Colonies had been there planted by Tygranes: and Xenophon comprehended in it the greateſt part alſo of Meſopotamia; becauſe ſituate on the Weſt of the River Tigris, and conſequently the Weſtern part of the Aſſyrian Empire, as the word Ereb doth import, from whence ſome derive the Etymon, and name hereof. Which notwithſtanding, in the general eſteem of Authors, it is bounded only as before.

As for the Name, there be ſome that derive it from Arabus, a ſuppoſed Son of Apollo and Babylonia; others from three ſuppoſititious Sons of Janus Pater, one of the pretended Grandſons of Cham, who is fabled to have ſent his Son Arabus into Arabia Deſerta; Petreius, into Arabia Petræa; and Sabus, into Arabia Fœlix, the dwelling place of the Sabæans. And for this trim conceit, we are beholden to the Beroſus of Friar Annius. More probable is their conjecture, who derive the name from the Hebrew, Arab, ſignifying black; by reaſon of the ſwarth or tawny complexion of the Inhabitants who are inter nigrum & fulvum, as Vertomannus an eye-witneſs hath informed us of them; on the ſame reaſon as one of the Provinces of Africa, is commonly entituled the Land of Negroes. But the moſt likely origination of it, as I conceive, is from Harabi, which ſignifieth in the Hebrew a Thief or Robber, ſuch as the Arabians in all Ages have been known to be. According unto that of the Prophet Jeremy: In the ways thou haſt ſate for them, as an Arabian in the wilderneſs, as our Engliſh reads it: Tanquam Latro inſidians in ſolitudine, ſaith the Vulgar Latin, Jer. 32. St. Hierom, though he render it quaſi Latro, as the Vulgar doth, yet in his Commentary he informs us, that the word doth alſo ſignifie an Arabian quæ gens latrociniis dedita uſque hodie incurſat Paleſtinæ fines, &c. which being addicted to Theft and Robbery do to this day (ſaith he) infeſt the Coaſts of Paleſtine, which border near them, and lay in wait for thoſe which had any occaſion to travel thither. Agreeable hereunto is the obſervation of Martin del Rio, Adeo latrociniis infames ſunt, ut Hebræis Arabs latronem denotat, ſicut Chananæus Mercatorem, Chaldæus Mathematicum; i. e. So infamous were they for their Theft and frequent Robberies, that it was familiar with the Jews to call a Thief by the name Arabian, as by Chanaanite to ſignifie a Merchant, or to uſe the word Chaldæan for a Mathematician. In the ſame ſenſe they came in the ſucceeding times to be called Saracens, from Sarak, or Saraka, an Arabian word, which ſignifieth to ſteal; whereof more anon: No otherwiſe than one of the American Iſlands had the name of Ladrones, or Inſula Latronum, given by Magellanus, from the thieviſhneſs of the Inhabitants, who had ſtoln his Cock-boat.

I have ſtaid the longer on the Name, becauſe it doth expreſs ſo much of the Character of the People alſo; living for the moſt part upon Spoil and Robbery, as all that travel that way know by ſad experience. Of mean ſtatures, raw-boned, tawny or ſwarth complexioned, having feminine voices; of ſwift but noiſeleſs gate, and upon you ere you are aware. Of no ſet-dwellings (except only in Arabia Fœlix) living in Tents, which they remove like walking Cities, for the benefit of Paſturage, and hope of Booty: for this laſt cauſe hanging about the skirts of more habitable Countries, and having robbed, retire with a marvellous ſpeed; Mounted on Dromedaries for that purpoſe, a Beaſt of moſt incredible ſwiftneſs, ſatisfied with little Food, though without Water to it, and will eaſily carry a man an hundred miles a day, without any refreſhing. Nor are ſuch Horſes as they have, though but poor and lean, of leſs ſpeed, or leſs patient of travel; whom they feed twice a day with the Milk of Camels, and think them not worth keeping, if not able to out-go an Oſtrich. As now, ſo formerly, all Horſemen, and but ill-appointed; fitter to rob and ſpoil, than to deal with Souldiers; as riding ſtark naked, and truſting rather to the ſwiftneſs of their Horſes, than any other reſiſtance, where they were oppoſed.

Their Language is the Arabick, ſo called from this Country, but not proper to this Country only; Spoken in all places where Mahometaniſm hath got any footing: The Alcoran being written in it, the publick Offices of their Religion performed in it, and the Tongue taught in Schools as generally, as with us the Latin: but made the natural Language in Meſopotamia, Syria, Paleſtine, the three Arabia's, Ægypt, and all Barbary, except the Kingdom of Morocco. A great extent, but ſhort of that which ſome give to it, who will have it ſpoken in two parts of the whole habitable World.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt here planted by S. Paul, of whoſe being in Arabia, after his Converſion, he telleth us, Gal. 1. 17. to which the coming in of the Saracens gave a great increaſe, in the time of Mavia their Queen; during the Empire of Valentinian the firſt, Moſes, a man of exemplary piety, and famed for many Miracles, being created their firſt Biſhop; after more generally propagated over all the Country, by the King Alamandarus, Anaſtaſius then reigning in the Eaſt. But long it had not been received, when ſupplanted by Mahometaniſm, which had its firſt beginning here; and hath ſo univerſally overſpread the whole face hereof, that now there are no Chriſtians left in all the Country, except only in Eltor, a Port Town in the Bay of Arabia Felix; in Arabia Petræa, the chief City of Arabia Petræa, and in two ſmall Monaſteries about Mount Sinai.

It is in circuit about 4000 miles; but of ſo unequal and heterogeneous compoſition, that no general Character, can be given of it: and therefore we muſt look upon it, as it ſtands divided into Arabia Deſerta, 2 Arabia Petræa, 3 Arabia Felix, and 4 The Arabick Iſlands.

1 ARABIA DESERTA.

ARABIA DESERTA (called Beriara by the Turks) is bounded on the Eaſt with Babylonia; on the Weſt, with parts of Paleſtine, and Arabia Petræa; on the North, with Palmyrene and Meſopotamia, from which laſt it is parted by Euphrates; and on the South, by ſome parts of Petræa, and Arabia Felix.

It hath the name of Deſerta, from the vaſt Deſarts which are in it, and the inhabitedneſs thereof; called alſo by Ariſtides, Aſpera, from the roughneſs; by Servius, Inferior, or the lower, in regard of the ſituation of it more towards the River; by Lucian, from the frequent bottoms and Vallies in it, Arabia Cava; and finally, by the Jews it was called Kedar, from the blackneſs or ſwarthineſs of the People, the word in Hebrew ſignifying as much as Sun-burnt; whence the People are by ſome Writers called Kedareni, and by Pliny, Cedræi.

But the common and moſt uſual name of it, is Arabia Deſerta, agreeable to the nature of it, being generally a ſandy Country, full of vaſt Deſarts; in which all ſuch as travel, uſe to carry their Proviſions with them, and to guide themſelves in their Journey by the courſe of the Stars, though in ſome parts which lie near Euphrates, and the Mountains of Arabia Felix, it hath ſome few Towns, and thoſe reſorted to by Merchants. But this is only in thoſe parts, the reſidue of he Country being ſo deſolate and waſte, that one who had travelled in it, doth deſcribe it to be ſo wild a place, Ut nec homines nec beſtiæ videantur, nec aves; imo, nec arbores, nec germen aliquod, ſed non niſi montes ſaxoſi, altiſſimi, aſperrimi: A Country, ſaith Guilandinus Melchior, where are found neither Men nor Beaſts, no not ſo much as Birds or Trees, nor Graſs, nor Paſture, but only ſtony, high, and moſt craggy Mountains.

The People for the moſt part uſed to dwell in Tents, alluded to by David, Pſal. 120. v. 5. which they removed from place to place, as the Paſture for their Cattel failed them: taking no other care for Houſes, than the Boughs of Palm-trees, to keep them from the heat of the Sun, and other extremities of Weather. Hence by the Ancients called Scænitæ, or men dwelling in Tents (in which reſpect the Jews call the Kartarians Kedarim, from the like courſe of life which theſe Ledareni or Arabians lived:) but the name reaching into the other parts of Arabia alſo, where they uſe the ſame kind of living: of whom more anon.

Yet notwithſtanding, moſt memorable is this Country in Sacred Story, both for the dwelling place of Job, and the Habitation of thoſe Wiſe-men, who came out of the Eaſt unto Hieruſalem, to worſhip Chriſt, the new-born King of the Jews. That Job was an Inhabitant here, appeareth by the ſituation of his dwelling, being in the Eaſt, as is ſaid in the Story of him, chap. 1. v. 3. that is to ſay, the Country lying Eaſt to the Land of Canaan, as this part of it doth; and therefore called ſimply by the name of the Eaſt, as Judg. 6. 3. where by the Children of the Eaſt, are meant expreſly the Inhabitants of Arabia the Deſart, who together with the Midianites and Amalekites oppreſſed thoſe of Iſrael. Secondly, by the ill-neighbourhood which he found from the Sabæans, who inhabited in this part alſo; and of the Chaldæans, mentioned v. 17. the next Borderers to it: and thirdly, by the inconſequences which needs muſt follow, if we place him, as ſome do, in the Land of Vs, near unto Damaſcus. For how improbable muſt it be for the Sabæans of the Red Sea, or the Perſian Gulf, or the Chaldæans dwelling on the Banks of the River Euphrates, to fall upon Job's Cattel grazing near Damaſcus, the Countries being disjoyned by ſuch vaſt Deſarts, and huge Mountains, that it is impoſſible for any Strangers to paſs them, eſpecially with any numbers of Cattel, in reſpect of thoſe large Mountains, deep Sands, and the extreme want of Water in all that paſſage? And how impoſſible muſt we think it, that the Pen-man of the Story of Job, who certainly was guided in it by the Holy Ghoſt, ſhould be ſo miſtaken, as to place Job's dwelling in the Eaſt, if the Land of Vs, wherein he dwelt, bordered on Damaſcus, which lay not on the Eaſt, but the North of Canaan? A City called Vs, or Vz, there was, ſituate near Damaſcus, ſo called from Vs, the Son of Aram, Gen. 10. 23. A Land of Vs alſo amongſt the Edomites, ſpoken of in the Lamentations of the Prophet Jeremy, c. 4. v. 21. ſo called from Vz, one of the Poſterity of Eſau, mentioned Gen. 36. 28. And finally, a Land of Vs or Vz, ſo called from Huz the Son of Nachor, the Brother of Abraham, mentioned Gen. 22. 21. which is that ſituate in this Tract, the Habitation and Poſſeſſion of that Righteous man: the Country hereabouts being called Auſitis, and the People Auſitæ; though by miſtaking in the tranſcripts, we find them named Aeſlat or Æſitæ, in the fifth of Ptolomy. The like I ſay alſo of the Wiſe-men, or Magi, who came to Hieruſalem from the Eaſt, That they dwelt in this Country, where the ſaid Ptolomy placeth the City of Saba; according unto that fore-ſignified by the Royal Pſalmiſt, That the Kings of Arabia and Saba ſhould bring their gifts, Pſal. 72. 10. Confirmed herein by the ſituation of the Country, lying Eaſt of Canaan; the Authority of thoſe Fathers who lived neareſt to the time of our Saviour's Birth, Juſtin Martyr, Tertullian, Cyprian; and by the teſtimony of Guilandinus landinus Melchior above-mentioned, affirming on the credible report of the People hereof, that they came neither out of Mesopotamia, or Arabia Felix, as many wisemen do believe, but out of Saba in Arabia the Desart, which City (saith he) when my self was there, was, as I judged, called Semiscasac.

Cities of note, in a Country so desart and uninhabited, we must look for few; yet some there are, inhabited by a more civil sort of People, whom they call by the name of Moors, giving that of Arabian to those only, who living roming and robbing up and down. Ptolomy gives the names of forty Cities and Villages in it (Civitates & vicos, saith the Latine) the memory of most of which is now utterly perished. Those of most observation, 1 Sabe, or Saba, the habitation of those Sabeans who pillaged Job; so called from Sheba, the Grand-son of Abraham by Keturah, mentioned Gen. 25. 3. of whom, and of the rest of that Line, it is said, in the sixth verse of that chapter, that Abraham gave them gifts, and sent them away from Isaac Eastward, unto the East Country: now called Semiscasac, as is thought by Melchior. 2 Theman, which possibly may be the Country of Eliphaz the Themanite, one of the Visitants of Job. As 3 Shuah, on the North hereof, was probably of Bildad, another of them, hence sirnamed the Shuite. 4 Tharsacas, by Pliny called Aphipolis. 5 Zagmais, near the Persian Gulf, in the Country of the Raubeni, supposed to be descended from Mishma, the fourth Son of Ismael. 6 Phunton, the 36th. 7 Oboth, the 37th. Mansion of the Children of Israel. 8 Rheganna, another of those named by Ptolomy, in the Greek Copies called Beganna. Of any Town of note now being, more than Semiscasac, beforenamed, I find nothing certain.

The first Inhabitants of this Country, of whom there is any certain Constat, where the Posterity of Huz, the Son of Nachor, and the Sons of Abraham by Keturah; of whose being setled in these parts, we had before good testimony from the Book of God: and intermix'd with them lived some of the Descendents of Ismael also. For if the Adubeni, whom Ptolomy calleth the Agubeni, fetch their original from Adheel the third, and the Raubeni from Mishmai the fifth Son of Ismael, as some say they do, I see no reason but the whole Country might be called Kedar, from Kedar the second Son, as well as from the tawny complexions of the People of it. From them descended the Tribes or Nations spoken of by Ptolomy, that is to say, the Orcheni, Chaucabeni, Ausitæ, Masceni, Materni, and Agræi, besides the Adubeni, and Raubeni, already specified. But being a dis-joynted People, not under any setled form of Government, not possessed of any thing worth looking after, they were either held not worth the conquering, in regard of their penury; or else unconquerable, in respect of their Country, impassable for great Armies, by reason of the rolling Sands, and want of all things. Yet I conceive, that lying so near to the Chaldæans, they followed the Fortunes of that mighty Monarchy: Subjects unto it whilst it stood, and after Tributaries unto those who successively possessed themselves of the Supreme Power. Not looked at by the Romans, or regarded by them, who aimed at Wealth as well as Honour in their Expedition: nor otherwise subject to the Turk at this present time, than as they make use of him and his protection in their frequent Robberies: but counted of as a part of the Turkish Empire, because the more civil Arabians are indeed his Subjects.

2 ARABIA PETRÆA.

ARABIA PETRÆA (now called Baraab, and Barthalaba) hath on the East Arabia Deserta, and part of Sinus Persicus, or the Bay of Persia; on the West, the Isthmus which joyneth Africa to Asia, and part of the Red Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; on the North, Palestine; and on the South a long Ridge of Mountains, which divide it from Arabia Felix.

It had this name either from the rockiness of the Soil hereof, or more properly from Petra, the chief City of it, called also by Æthicus, Sicaria, but I know not why: by the Hebrews, Chus, generally translated Æthiopia; by William of Tyre, Arabia secunda, Felix being reckoned for the first. By Strabo, Ptolomy, and Pliny, it is called Nabathæa, which name it had from Nabiaoth, the eldest of the twelve Sons of Ismael; though properly that name belonged only to those parts of it which lay next Judæa: fruitful, though joyning to the Desarts: and thus remembred by the Poet, as an Eastern Country.

Eurus ad Auroram, Nabathæaque regna recessit.
Eurus unto the East did flie,
Where fruitful Nabathe doth lie.

The Country much of the same nature with the other, but in some parts thereof more fertile, if well manured: and in the time of Marcellinus, affirmed to be a rich Land, flourishing with variety of Trade and Traffick. But for the most part full of untravellable Desarts, except to those which carry their provisions with them for fear of starving, and go in great Companies, or Caravans, for fear of robbing: and yet much travelled by Merchants who traffick into Ægypt and Babylonia; the Commodities whereof they lay on Camels, which are the Ships of Arabia, as their Seas, the Desarts. For upon one of these Camels, they will lay ordinarily 600 and sometimes 1000 pound weight: yet not afford him water above once in four days, not oftner in fourteen, if there be occasion. So that the Camel carrying so great a burden, and seldom fewer than 500 going in one Voyage, the Merchant, if he scapeth robbing, makes a rich Return. Of these Desarts, the most memorable are those of Sin and Pharan, in which the Israelites so long wandred: not beautified with Grass, nor adorned with Trees, the Palm only excepted; nor furnished with Water, but by Rain or Miracle.

The People of it, for the most part, descended of the Sons of Chus and Ismael, intermixed with the Madianites, descending from Abraham by Keturah, and the Amalekites, descended probably from Amaleck, the Grand-son of Esau, mentioned Gen. 3. 6. but all united at the last in the name of Saracens. This name derived, as some think, from Sarra signifying a Desart, and saken which signifieth to inhabit, because they live for the most part in these desart places: as others say, from Sarak, signifying a Thief or Robber, agreeable to that of Arabia, before delivered. This last most sutable to their nature, and best likeed by Scaliger. Saraceni à vicinis dicuntur ab Elsarak; i. e. λησρικοὶ ληιαδικοὶ, quod rapinis victitent. So he, in his second Book de Emend. Temp. A People not reckoned in the former times, till made remarkable by their Conquest of a great part of the World; but always counted warlike and Martial men. Of whom take this Character out of Marcellinus. "The "Saracens (saith he) whom we are neither to wish for "our Friends nor Enemies, are a Martial People, half "naked, clad as far as the groin with painted Cassocks, "ranging up and down on Camels, and swift Horses, as "well in peace as troublesome times. Not used unto the "Plough, to plant Trees, or get their living by Tillage; "they wander from one place to another, without house "or home, or any constant dwelling place, or the use "of Laws; nor can they long endure the same either "Air or Soil, the manner of their Lives being always "flitting, "flitting, like ravenous Kites; which if they chance to "spy a prey, snatch it up in their flight: or if they chance "to fasten on it as it lieth on the ground, they make no "long stay. Their food is chiefly upon Venison, and "store of Milk, herbs which they gather from the "ground, and birds which they get by fowling; but "altogether ignorant of Corn and Wine. Their Wives "they only hire for a time, though for a shew of Matri-"mony they present their Husbands with a Spear and a "Tent, as in way of Dowry; but they part with them "when they please. Both Sexes most extremely given "to carnal lusts, the women as rambling as the men, "married in one place, and brought to bed in another; "leaving their Children where they fall, without more care of them. So far, and to this purpose he.

Rivers of note here are not many. The principal are, 1 That called Trajanus amnis, or the River of Trajan, which passing through this Country endeth his course in the Red Sea. 2 Rhinocorura, called in Scripture the torrent of Ægypt, which rising in this Country, and passing by the borders of Idumæa, hath its fall in the Lake of Sirbon; and together with the waters thereof loseth it self at last in the Mediterranean.

With Mountains it is better stored, and those of eminent observation, as 1 Mount Sinai, famous in all Ages for the promulgation of the Law; and of late times, for a Monastery of Maronites on the top thereof. The hill so high, that both shores of the Red Sea may be thence seen; but easie of ascent, by reason of steps cut out of the rock: which notwithstanding, he that beginneth to go up it at the break of day, will hardly overcome the top of it till the afternoon. The Monastery made an Episcopal See, and formerly very well endowed, as appeareth by the Letters of Eugenius Bishop thereof to the Arch-Duke Charls, Anno 1569. complaining that the Turk had sold all their Lands, and that himself and the Monks were fain to pawn their holy Vessels, and take up money on Usury. Here is also a Mesque, or Mesquit of Turks, who resort in pilgrimage to this hill, as well as the Christian. 2 Mount Horeb, where the Israelites worshipped the Molten Calf, about a mile and a half distant from Mount Sinai, but not so high: on the top of which is a Church also; and a Monastery of Coloires, or Greek Monks, at the bottom, exceeding hospitable to strangers, whom they entertain of free cost, and cheerfully shew them all the places worth observation, which the Scripture mentioneth in that tract. Both hills by Ptolomy called Melani, or the Black Mountains; the last now called Orel. 3 Mount Hor, bordering on Idumæa; and memorable for the death of Aaron.

Places of most observation, 1 Petra, the name given to this part, at first called Recem, and at that time belonging to Midian: afterwards called Sela, when pertaining to the Idumæans. But falling under the power of the Arabians, it is now called Crat. Best known in holy Scriptures by the name of Selah, beforementioned, which signifies the same with the Latine Petra. A City of great note and strength in all times foregoing, taken by Amaziah the King of Judah, 2 Kings 14. 7. and by him called Jock-heel; but in vain besieged by Scaurus, a Roman General, who finding the place to be impregnable, was content by the perswasion of Antipater, to take a sum of money and raise his siege. Nor did the Emperour Trajan speed much better at it, his Souldiers being still beat off in all their assaults, the very next man to him slain with a Dart, and himself forced to cast away his Imperial habit, and flie for his life; the heavens themselves, if Dion (who is never sparing of the like prodigies) may be believed, fighting against the Romans with thunder, lightning, whirlwinds, and tempests, as often as they made any approaches to it: But in the end subdued with the rest of the Country. In such esteem, by reason of the strength of it, by the Soldans of Ægypt, that they kept here their choicest treasures; and in the course of the Holy Wars, much aimed at by the Turks and Christians, as the Key that opened the Gates of Palestine; on the South border whereof, not far from Mount Hor, beforementioned, the Town is situate. The Metropolis of the Province when first under the Romans; and made the Seat of a Latine Bishop, when the Christians of the West were the Lords thereof. 2 Bosra, said to have been built by Augustus Cæsar, because by him repaired, when decayed and ruined; afterwards by Alexander Severus made a Colony of the Romans. This last most certain, and for such testified by this ancient inscription, in an ancient Coyn, COL. BOSTRAIN. T. R. ALEXANDRIANÆ. Memorable also for the birth of Philip the Emperour, one of that Alexander's next Successours; by whom it was caused for a time to be called Philippus; for the Metropolitan dignity removed hither from Petra, somewhat before the time of Justinian, but by whom I find not; and for being the Episcopal See of Titus (hence sirnamed) Bostrenus, a reverend Father of the Church in the time of Julian the Apostate. A City of as great antiquity as the most that be, mentioned, Gen. 36. 33. though there accounted of as a City of Edom, to which at that time it did belong, and is still remaining, and well known by the name of Bussereth. 3 Elama, on a bay of the Red Sea, called hence Sinus Elamiticus. 4 Phara, reckoned by Ptolomy for a chief Town of this Tract, from whence the Wilderness of Paran seems to take its name. 5 Berenice, so called from some of the Queens of Ægypt, but better known by the name of Ezion-geber, one of the Stations or Incampings of the Children of Israel; and made by Solomon the ordinary harbour for his Ships, which sailed to Ophir in the East-Indies. 6 Sur, the chief City of the Amalekites, giving name to the Wilderness or Desart of Sur, coming close up to it: remarkable for the first incamping of the Tribes of Israel after their miraculous passage over the Red Sea; and the defeat which Saul gave to the Amalekites, whom he smote from Havilah, to this place. 7 Havilah, so called from Havilah the son of Chus, being the furthest border of these Amalekites and Ismaelites, on the Gulf of Persia, as Sur was on the Red Sea or Gulf of Arabia. 1 Madian, so called of Madian, the son of Abraham by Ketura, situate towards the Red Sea also; the City of Jethro, whose Daughter Zipporah was the Wife of Moses: who flying from the Court of Pharaoh King of Ægypt, was by Gods secret providence directed hither: that keeping the Flocks of Jethro in the Desarts adjoyning, he might acquaint himself with the ways and passages, through which he was after to lead the house of Israel. 9 Rephaim, the encamping place of Moses, where he discomfited the Amalekites; and to which the said Jethro came to him with his Wife and Children, advising him to ease himself of some part of that burden, which the Government of so great a People would else bring upon him. 10 Kadesh-barnea, the station of the Tribes, when the Spies which were sent to discover the Land of Canaan, returned back unto them; memorable for the death of Miriam the Prophetess. And 11 Thara, no less memorable for the mutiny and punishment of Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, the place remembred Numb. 33. 27. But others will have 12 Mahbelah, mentioned v. 25. of that Chapter, to be the stage of that action, the Scriptures being silent in this particular. The rest of their encamping places, being most of them in this part of Arabia, I omit of purpose, as obvious in the Scripture unto every Reader: as I do also some of the Cities of Moab and Ammon, accounted of by Ptolomy, lomy, as Cities of this Province; but ſpoken of already in our Deſcription of Paleſtine, to which more properly belonging.

The old Inhabitants of this Country, were the Midianites, the Iſmaelites, the Amalekites, and the Children of Chus; who dwelling promiſcuouſly together, are ſometimes uſed for one another: the Merchants which bought Joſeph of his Brethren, being indifferently called Midianites, and Iſmaelites, *Gen.*37.28. and Zipporah the wife of Moſes, who queſtionleſs was a Daughter of Madian, being by Miriam, and Aaron, called an Ethiopian or Chuſite, as in way of reproach, *Numb.*12.1. But being they were different Nations, and ſuch as had ſome ſpecial engagement with or againſt the Children of Iſrael, we will conſider them by themſelves, till we have brought them into one body, by the name of Chuſites, Ethiopians, or Arabians, which are all the ſame.

And firſt, the MADIANITES were ſuch of the poſterity of Madian, the ſon of Abraham by Ketura, who preſerving the knowledg of the true God, withdrew themſelves from all communion with the Idolatrous Canaanites, at ſuch time as the reſt of their brethren did aſſociate with them; and ſetled themſelves more towards the banks of the Red Sea, where they did all good offices to the Children of Iſrael, as they paſſed through their Country. Of theſe the Kenites were a branch, as appeareth *Judg.*1.16. where Jethro the Prince or Prieſt of Madian, is called a Kenite: ſome of which turned Proſelytes, and dwelt with the Iſraelites in Canaan; of which Race Heber the Kenite, the husband of Jael, who ſlew Siſera, was undoubtedly one. The reſt, continuing mingled with the Amalekites, till the time of Saul, were by him warned (in memory of former courteſies) to withdraw themſelves from them, leſt they ſhould periſh with them in the ſame deſtruction. Afterwards we hear little of either people, loſing their name in the greater Nation of the Iſmaelites, with whom intermingled, or paſſing with them in the ſame common notion of Arabians, Chuſites, or Ethiopians.

Secondly, Nor were the AMALEKITES, though a greater and more powerful Nation, of much more continuance; deſcended, as it is conceived, from Amalek, the Grand-ſon of Eſau (though I deny not but there are ſome reaſons to be urged againſt that opinion) and planted on the back of the Edomites, as their Guard or Out-work. A people miſchievouſly bent againſt thoſe of Iſrael, as if they had inherited the hatred which Eſau their fore-father did bear to Jacob, whom they violently ſet on at Rephidim, when they ſuppoſed them ſpent and wearied with their flight from Ægypt. And though diſcomfited in that battel, yet they continued in their malice againſt the Tribes, joyning firſt with the Canaanites againſt them when they were in their March; and after with the Midianites, when not well ſetled in their new poſſeſſion. A provocation ſo ill taken by the Lord of Hoſts, becauſe unnatural, and ill grounded, that he declared his reſolution from the time of the Battel of Rephidim, to put out the remembrance of Amalek from under Heaven, *Exod.*17.14. Accordingly, when the Children of Iſrael were provided for it, he commanded Saul to ſet upon them, and to ſlay both man and woman, infant and ſuckling, yea, their ſheep and cattel. But ſome of them eſcaped this ſlaughter, and fell not long after upon Ziglag, the retiring place of David, which they took and ranſacked; but being by him followed on the firſt intelligence, they were eaſily overthrown, and the prey recovered. Their malice yet ſurvived their power; and what they could not do by their Forces, they endeavoured to effect by joyning with the Ammonites, Moabites, and other Enemies of David, in their Wars againſt him. And this was ultimum conamen, one of the laſt flaſhes of their dying light: nothing done by them worth remembrance of the times ſucceeding, moſt of the Nation being worn out, and thoſe few which were left, retiring to the Mountains of Edom, but thereof alſo diſpoſſeſſed by the Simeonites, during the reign of Hezekiah.

Thirdly, The ISMAELITES, deſcending from Iſmael, the ſon of Abraham by Hagar, branched into twelve great Nations, and grown wondrous populous, ſpred themſelves over a great part of theſe three Arabia's: all of them either Thieves or Merchants; trading to Ægypt in Spicery, and Balm, and Myrrhe, or robbing thoſe which traded in the like commodities. Called alſo Hagarens in the Scripture, as *1 Chron.*5.10. *Pſal.*83.6, &c. and by that name well known to many of the ancient Writers. A people for the moſt part of a vagabond and roguiſh life, more given to ſpoil, than any honeſt courſe of living, which made every Traveller and Merchant to be armed againſt them; ſo verifying the prediction which was given to Iſmael, that he ſhould be a wild man, having his hand againſt every man, and every mans hand againſt him. St. Hierom ſo conceives that Prophecy to have been accompliſhed. More fitly verifyed perhaps, when in and under the name of Saracens, (by which, and by the name of Scenites, they were moſt generally known to the Greeks and Romans) they made ſuch foul havock in the world, and were eſteemed the common Enemies of all Civil Nations. Never ſo governable in their beſt and moſt orderly times, as to acknowledge King or Law, till made one body with the Chuſites, and the reſt of thoſe Nations: and then no further, than it ſtood with their luſt or liking.

Fourthly, As for the Chuſites, though they permitted the Nations above ſpecified, to inhabit in thoſe Deſarts and waſte places, which themſelves either could not people, or cared not for; yet were they always of moſt power, and gave name to that whole tract of ground, containing now all Petræa, the South part of Deſerta, and the Mountains which divide Petræa from Arabia Felix; which from them was called Chus, or the Land of Chus. Rendred in all places of the Old Teſtament, by the name of Ethiopia, firſt by the Septuagint, and afterwards by all the Fathers Greek and Latine, the Vulgar Tranſlation of the Bible, and almoſt all the other Tranſlations at this day extant. And rendred right enough at firſt, as in all times ſince, though by ſome miſtaken: who having never heard of any other Ethiopia than that in Affrick, have transferred thither all thoſe actions and Texts of Scripture, which are meant of this. The Septuagint, no doubt, were not ſo ignorant of the affairs of their next neighbouring Nation, as not to know by what name they were called by the Greeks, their then Lords and Maſters. And he that looks into the Hiſtory of Herodotus, who lived 150 years before that Tranſlation, will find, that by the Grecians they were called Ethiopians; and called ſo queſtionleſs from the ſelf ſame reaſon; that is to ſay, the ſwarthineſs, or Sun-burntneſs of their complexion, as the Ethiops of Affrick were, that name being framed of the Greek word Αἴθω, ſignifying to burn; and Ὤψ, a countenance, by reaſon of their tawny and Sun-burnt Countenances. For ſpeaking of the huge Army of Xerxes againſt the Greeks, he doth thus proceed, Ἀραβίων δὲ καὶ Αἰθιόπων τῶν ὑπὸ Αἴγυπτον ἐστρατήγεε Ἀρσάμης, &c. "Arſames, (ſaith he) was Captain of the "Arabians, (he meaneth the Troglodites) and Ethiopians, "which are beyond Ægypt: but the Eaſtern Ethiopians "were ranked with the Indians, nothing differing from "the other in the ſtructure of their bodies, but their "hair and voice only; the Eaſtern Ethiopians wearing "their hair ſmooth, thoſe of Lybia curled. The Ethiops

" of Asia were armed like the Indians, but the Ethiops of " Africa were arayed with the skins of beasts. Here then we have an Asian Ethiopia in the time of Herodotus; the same acknowledged by Pausanias an old Greek Writer, and by Philostratus after him, though they look for it in the wrong place: the first among the Seres, in the North of Asia; the other on the River Ganges, too much in the East. Nor doth Æthicus, one of the old Cosmographers, published by Simlerus, shoot more near the mark, who speaking of the River Tigris, saith that it burieth it self, and runneth under the ground in Ethiopia. Which though Simler doth interpret of these parts of Arabia; yet questionless that Author meaneth it of the Country about Mount Taurus, where that River doth indeed run under ground, and having passed under those vast Mountains, riseth up again.

But what need further search be made to find out the situation of this Ethiopia, when it is bounded out so plainly in the holy Scriptures? For when it is said of Zipporah the Wife of Moses, that she was an Ethiopian woman, Numb. 12. 1. who is well known to have been a Native of this Country; and when it is said in 2 Chron. 21. 16. that the Lord stirred up against Jehoram the spirit of the Philistims, and of the Arabians that were near the Ethiopians, it must needs be that the Ethiopia there spoken, must be conterminous to the rest of Arabia, and be intended of that Country wherein Madian was. So where God threatneth by the mouth of the Prophet Ezekiel, that he would lay waste the Land of Ægypt, from the Tower of Syene, even unto the borders of Ethiopia, Chap. 29. 10. that is to say, from one end thereof unto the other, it followeth necessarily, that Ethiopia there meant, must be this part of Arabia, or the Land of Chus, as the bound of Ægypt most remote from the Tower of Syene, which all Geographers acknowledg to be in the extreme South parts thereof, towards the Cataracts of Nilus. For to expound it, as some do, of Ethiopia in Affrick, on the borders whereof Syene stood; and stood so indifferently betwixt it and Ægypt, that Stephanus, an ancient Writer, makes it very doubtful to which of the two it did belong, were to make the Scripture speak plain non-sense: as plain as if a man should say, that the French conquered all the Netherlands from Graveling to Flanders; or that the Sword hath ranged over all England, from Berwick to Scotland. As then we have found this Ethiopia of the Old Testament to be near the Philistims on the one side, and the Land of Ægypt on the other; so may we find it to be bounded also on the East, with Babylonia or Chaldea: the River Gihon, which is said to compass the whole Land of Ethiopia, (or the Land of Chus) Gen. 2. 13. being no other than a branch of the River Euphrates, which falleth into the Lakes of Chaldea. So that the Translation of the Septuagint in reading Chusites, or the Land of Chus, by Ethiopia, needs no such alteration or emendation as some men suppose. The mistakes (whereof there have been many) which arise from hence, not being to be charged on them, or on their Translation, but on the Ignorance of the Reader, or Error of such Expositors, who dreaming of no other Ethiopia than of that in Affrick, have made the Scriptures speak such things as it never meant, and carried these Chusites into the African Ethiopia, where they never were. And yet perhaps it may be said, that the Posterity of Chus, being straitened in their own possessions, or willing to seek new adventures, might have crossed over the Red Sea, or Gulf of Arabia (being but seven miles broad where narrowest) and mingling with the Sons of Ludim on the other side, might either give the name of Ethiopians to them, or receive it from them.

Now to go forwards with the story, the first great action attributed to these Chusites, or Arabian Ethiops, incorporated with the rest of those mingled Nations, is the expedition of Zerah, the King hereof, against Asa King of Judah, drawing after him an Army of a Million, and three hundred Chariots of War (the greatest Army ever read of in unquestioned story) but for all that, discomfited by the Lord of Hosts, on the prayers of Asa; and all the spoyl of that huge Army carried to Hierusalem. After this Tirhakah, another of these Ethiopian Kings, finding how dangerous the great growth of the Assyrian Kingdom might prove unto him, prepared a puissant Army against Sennacherib, then besieging Libna, threatning the conquest of all Judah, and invading Ægypt: upon the news of whose approach, Sennacheribs forces, which were even upon the gaining of Pelusium, the Gate of Ægypt, were fain to dislodge and provide for their safety. For though Herodotus call Sennacherib King of Arabia, and Assyria, yet was he Master only of those parts of Arabia, which had been formerly possessed by the Kings of Israel, being no more than some few Cities of Petræa, bordering next unto them: or perhaps called so only in respect of those parts of Syria and Mesopotamia, which were sometimes comprehended under the name of Arabia, as before is said. What part they after took in the great War betwixt Nebuchadnezzar, and Pharaoh Necho King of Ægypt, is not hard to say. For besides that the same Reasons of State, obliging them to side with the Ægyptian, were stil in force; their giving Necho leave to pass through their Country with his Army, to invade the Babylonians on the banks of Euphrates, make that plain enough. Now that both Tirhakah and Zera were Kings of this Asian, and not of the African Ethiopia, is most clear and evident; partly in regard the Kings of Ægypt would never suffer such huge Armies to pass thorough the whole length of their Dominions: but principally because it is said in the holy Scriptures, that Asa having overthrown that vast Army of Zerah, smote all the Cities about Gerar, which formerly had belonged unto the Philistims, but were then possessed by these Chusites and their Associates. After this, either as Confederates or Subjects, we find them aiding unto Xerxes, in his war on Greece: and like enough it was, that in Alexander's March from Ægypt towards Persia, they submitted to him, as did all the other Countries thorow which he passed. He being dead, Antigonus, one of his great Commanders, sent Athenæus with an Army to bring them in, who being trained into an ambush was discomfited by them; Demetrius the son of Antigonus, thinking that he had done enough in revenge of that overthrow, by compelling them to sue for peace. In the time of the Seleucian Race in Syria, we find them governed by Kings of their own, most of them called by the name of Aretas; of which one was of special note in the declining fortunes of the Seleucidans, for bidding very fair for the Crown of that Country; and being a stickler in the Wars of Jewry, in the time of Hircanus the fourth King of the Race of the Maccabees, to whom, at the request of Antipater, the Father of Herod, he gave hopes of aid; and on those hopes was possessed of Medaba, and other Towns of good importance, which Alexander the Father of Hircanus had regained from the Syrians, and laid unto the Crown of Jewry, to which as parts of Iturea, and anciently possessed by the Tribes of Israel, he might make some claim. Another there was of the same name, and of no less power, whom we find to have been warred upon by Herod, about the time of the battel of Actium, and for the most part vanquished by him; and finally a third of more power than either, mentioned by St. Paul, 2 Cor. 11. 32. as Lord of Damascus. In the flourishing of the Roman fortunes, the King hereof having first aided aided Mithridates and Tigranes, in the War againſt them, ſubmitted themſelves unto Lucullus, being then no nearer to them than Armenia Major. The like they did to Pompey alſo, being then in Judæa. Firſt vanquiſhed by Ælius Gallus in the time of Auguſtus; but the victory not improved to an abſolute conqueſt, till the time of Trajan, when partly by his perſonal preſence, and partly by the valour and good fortune of Palma, his Lieutenant, they were fully vanquiſhed, and brought into the form of a Roman Province: but ſo, that they had Kings of their own (Vaſſals and Feudataries, of the Empire) as in former times; continuing in that condition till the riſe of Mahomet. Of which more hereafter.

3 ARABIA FELIX.

ARABIA FELIX, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Perſian; on the Weſt, with the Arabian Gulf; on the North, with a long ridge of Mountains, which part it from Deſerta and Petræa; and on the South, with the boundleſs Ocean. Environed on three parts with the Sea, on the fourth with rough, impaſſable Mountains; in ſituation and figure much reſembling Italy.

It had the name of Arabia Felix from the fertility and happy condition of it, being eſteemed the moſt fruitful & pleaſant Country in all Aſia, abounding with Myrrhe, Balſamum, Frankincenſe, Gold, and Precious Stones: by Curtius called Odorum fertilitate nobilis Regio, from the abundance of Frankincenſe, wherewith enriched beyond all others. Concerning which there goeth a ſtory, that when Alexander in his Adolecency or Voyage, was ſacrificing to the gods, and caſt into the fire with both hands great ſtore of Frankincenſe and Myrrhe, Leonidas his Governour, bid him be more ſparing of thoſe precious and dear Commodities, till he was Maſter of the Country in which they grew. Which Alexander remembring, when he had brought almoſt all the Eaſt under his obedience, he ſent unto Leonidas a Ship-laden with Frankincenſe, bidding him from thenceforth ſerve the gods more liberally. But as well for the reaſon of this adjunct, as a more perfect character and deſcription of it, take along this of Ammianus Marcellinus, who deſcribes it thus: "On the Eaſt and South hereof (ſaith he) "are the Happy Arabians: ſo called becauſe ſo rich in "Corn; as well as plenteous in Cattel, Vines, and Odo- "riferous Spices of all kinds; ſhut up betwixt the Red "Sea, and the Perſian Gulf, and ſo acquainted with all "bleſſings which either Element can afford: well furni- "ſhed with Roads, and quiet Harbours for Shipping, the "Towns of Trade and Merchandize ſtanding very "thick; the retiring Houſes of the Kings, paſſing neat "and ſumptuous. Beſides moſt wholſom fountains of "medicinal waters, they enjoy divers Brooks and Rivers "very clear and pure, and a temperature of Air exceed- "ding healthy; ſo that whoſoever conſidereth all things "aright, may well conclude, that there is nothing want- "ing to the accompliſhment of its felicity in the higheſt "degree. So Ammianus Marcelinus. To which we need add nothing more to ſet forth its happineſs, than that Danæus in his Comment on St. Auguſtin's Enchiridion ad Laurentium, is perſwaded that it was the local place of Paradiſe. Dicitur (ſaith he) Paradiſi terreſtris Regio pars quædam eſſe Arabiæ, quæ nunc dicitur Fœlix. But it hath other names beſides this of Felix. By the Arabians themſelves called Jeman, and Al-jeman (Ayaman corruptly by the Turks) which in that tongue ſignifieth the South, or Southern Region. By Virgil it is named Panchaia, quaſi tota debiſcens, becauſe of the many chops and chinks which the ardour of the Sun makes in the Sands thereof, though by him much extolled alſo for its plenty of Frankincenſe.

Totaque thuriferis Panchaia pingis arenis.
Famed are the whole Panchaian Lands,
For rich and Incenſe-bearing ſands.

The People anciently, though more civil than the reſt of the Arabians, had yet many ſtrange and barbarous cuſtoms. Adultery amongſt them was puniſhed with death, as in other places; but only he was held an Adulterer, which enjoyed any that was not his own kinſwoman, be ſhe his Siſter or his Mother; and ſo they kept themſelves in their own Families; Community of wives or women was eſteemed no crime. And of this there is a Tale in Strabo, that the King of this Country had fifteen Sons, and but one Daughter, who according to the Cuſtoms hereof, was the common Wife of all her Brethren; every of which had a Staff of like making, which when he went in unto his Siſter he did leave at the door; and by ſo doing did bid entrance unto the reſt, till it were removed. The young Lady, wearied with a continual exceſs of dalliance, ſecretly procured a Staff like unto the reſt, which when ſhe was deſirous to prohibit their acceſſes to her, ſhe left at her Chamber door; and by that means did many times enjoy her deſired privacy. At laſt it hapned that all the Brothers being together, one of them departed towards his Siſters Lodging, where finding a Staff before the door, and knowing that he had his Brethren in one place together, he accuſed her of Adultery: but the truth being made known, the Lady was quitted, and their viſits afterwards reſtrained. Of dead bodies they took no care, not ſo much as of their Chiefs or Princes; but left them to the cuſtody of the next dung-hill. They bragged much of their deſcent from Jupiter; and neglected all Sciences and Arts, as diſparagements to ſo great Nobility. Commendable only in the keeping of their faith and promiſes, and in that moſt punctual. Much of the ſame condition are the preſent Inhabitants, ſave that leſs faithful in their Contracts; and by their Law reſtrained from medling with the wives of others, permitted many of their own. Some there are of them which apply themſelves to the grazing of Cattel, and the reſt to Merchandize, wherein very cautious and cunning; but hating to this day all Mechanical Arts. A Nation from the beginning unmixed with others, till the coming of the Turks amongſt them, of which but few, and thoſe diſpoſed of in Garriſons: boaſting of their Nobility, and glorying in nothing more than their greateſt ſhame, namely that the falſe Prophet Mahomet was their Country-man; whole impieties are here generally embraced, and followed.

Amongſt the rarities of this Country, ſome account the Phœnix, which growing old burneth her ſelf in a neſt of Spices, and from thence a young one ingendered; one of them only at a time, which after a life of five or ſix hundred years, thus reneweth her kind. But this tradition, queſtioned in former times by Pliny & ſome others, is now proved a Fiction, contrary both unto divinity and natural reaſon: though ſome of the Fathers made uſe of it as an argument to prove the Reſurrection againſt the Gentiles, by whom the tradition was believed. More common, but of no leſs obſervation, is the Oſtrich, a Bird which ſwalloweth all it findeth, be it Stones or Iron. They delight chiefly in the Deſarts, in the ſands whereof they lay their Eggs, and then forgetting where they left them, ſit on thoſe they meet next. In that reſpect acounted for a ſimple Fowl, though otherwiſe of wit enough to preſerve themſelves; keeping in flocks, and oftentimes with their fearful ſhreeches affrighting Paſſengers, to whom they do appear afar off like a Troop of Horſmen. Their wings, too little for their bodies, ſerve them not or flight, but to run more ſpeedily; and by that means not eaſily caught, though much laid in wait for, for their Skins, which the People ſell unto the Merchant with their Feathers on them. Nor of leſs note is the Frankincenſe, though of common uſe; almoſt peculiar to this Country, and here but to thoſe parts thereof which we formerly poſſeſſed by the Sabæi: the Wood out of which the Gum proceedeth, being about 100 miles long, and 50 broad; gathered only in Spring and Autumn. More of this anon.

for

The Country is much commended by Ammianus for plenty of Rivers, the principal whereof are ſaid by Ptolomy to be, 1 Betius, 2 Prion, 3 Harman, 4 Lar; but the modern names thereof I find not. Many fair Lakes, and ſtore of large capacious Bays on each coaſt of the Sea, 1 Sinus Elaniticus. 2 Sachalites. 3 Leanites. 4 Sinus Magorum. 5 Sinus Jebthyphagorum. 6 Meſſanites. 7 Sacer Sinus, or the Holy Bay; and 8 The Road or Naval Station called Neogilla. Mountains of moſt note, 1 Thoſe which are called Melanes, at the entrance of the Perſian Gulf. 2 Cabubuthra, at the entrance of the Red Sea or Gulf of Arabia. 3 Hippus. 4 Prionotus, not far from the River Prion, from whence ſo denominated. 5 Climax. 6 The Mountains called Didymi, &c.

Towns of good note in ancient times it had very many, no Region affording unto Ptolomy the names of more; and amongſt thoſe, many commodious Ports for Traffick, the Sea begirting it for the ſpace of 3000 miles and upwards. Of moſt importance and obſervation in thoſe times, were, 1 Zebrum, 2 Badeo, 3 Rhabana, 4 Carman, 5 Manambis, 6 Sabe, 7 Are; The Royal Seats of ſo many ſeveral Kingdoms, and therefore honoured by Ptolomy with the Title of Regiæ. Then there are, 1 Maocoſmos, 2 Meara, 3 Negara, 4 Sabbatha, 5 Mapha, and 6 Saphar, which he called Metropoles; as being the head Cities of ſome ſeveral Nations. Amongſt the Ports he reckoneth, 1 Soſippus, 2 Trulla, 3 Treſtos, 4 Cryptus, 5 Iſamos, and 6 Moſcha: amongſt the moſt noted Empories or Towns of Traffick, 1 Muſa, 2 Oceanus, 3 Arabia, 4 Cane. Beſides which, there are ſome which do preſerve the memory of their firſt Plantations, as 1 Saphta, upon the Perſian Gulf; ſo called from Sabta, the third Son of Chus. 2 Rhegama, or Regma (as the Greek Copies of Ptolomy have it) ſo named from Regma or Raama the ſixth Son; on the ſame Gulf alſo. 3. Sabe, on the Shores of the Red Sea. And 4 Sabe Regia, more within the Land, ſo named from Sheba the eldeſt Son of the ſame Chus, from whom the rich and potent Nation of the Sabæans are to be derived. Out of all which, and many others by him named, we ſhall take more particular notice of ſome that follow. 1 Muſa, a noted Port on the entrance of the Red Sea, frequented anciently by the Ethiopian and Ægyptian Merchants: who there laded their Ships with Frankincenſe, Myrrhe, Spices, and other Commodities of this Country, bringing in, in exchange thereof, Saffron, Corn, Wine, Ointments, Purple Dies, &c. 2 Sabe, the Regal Seat of the Kings of the Sabæans, particularly of that Queen ſo memorized in holy Scripture; called in the Old Teſtament the Queen of Sheba, from her Country and place of dwelling; in the New Teſtament the Queen of the South, becauſe of the Southern ſituation of it in reſpect of Judæa: ſaid there to come from the furtheſt parts of the World, becauſe there was no part of the World which lay South to the Country of the Sabæans, over which ſhe reigned. Situate on a little Mountain, affirmed by Agatharcides to be πολὺ κάλλιστον τῶν κατὰ τὴν Ἀραβίαν, the moſt beautiful by far in all Arabia, and the Metropolis of the rich and potent Nation of the Sabæans: rich in all the excellencies of Nature, eſpecially in Frankincenſe, a Gum peculiar to them only, and growing here in a Wood of about 100 miles long, and 50 broad; not gathered but in the Spring and Autumn, nor then without great care, and many ceremonies. The Country hereabouts from hence called Thurifera, and this ſweet Gum appropriated ſolely to it. Sabæi Arabum propter thura clariſſimi, as we find in Pliny; Solis eſt thurea virga Sabæis, as it is in Virgil: and finally, ---- Thuriferos, fœlicia regna, Sabæos, in the Argonauticks of Valerius Flaccus. It was called alſo Mariaba, and by that name occurreth in ſome ancient Writers. 3 Saphar, more towards the Perſian Gulf, on the South ſide of the Mountain Climax, the chief City of the Homeritæ; adorned in times of Chriſtianity with a beautiful Temple. 4 Sabatha, or Sabota, as Pliny calleth it, ſeated about the midſt of the Country, on the top of an high and lofty Hill, from whence it had a gallant proſpect on the Fields adjoyning: anciently large and populous, and ſtrongly fortified, having no fewer than 60 Temples within the Walls; the principal conſecrated unto Sabis, the god of their Nation, to whom they offered the Tithe of their Frankincenſe, ubi decimas Deo quem Sabin vocant, menſura non pondere capiunt Sacerdotes, as we read in Pliny.

But theſe and almoſt all the reſt being grown out of knowledg, there have riſen in their rooms, 1 Egra, on the Shore of the Red Sea, near the Bay called Sinus Elaniticus; by Ptolomy called Arga, by the Arabians themſelves Algiar: the Port-Town to Medina, from which about three days Journey diſtant. 2 Jathrib, or Jatrib, in the way betwixt Algiar and Medina, the birth-place of Mahomet; by whom fortified with a mud-wall, as his place of retreat in the firſt beginnings of his Fortunes. 3 Medina, commonly called Medina Talmabi, corruptly for Medinathalnabi, that is to ſay, the City of the Prophet; ſo called from the Sepulchre of Mahomet, that vile Impoſtor, which is there to be ſeen; although not in ſuch an Iron Coffin, or drawn up to the roof of the Temple by vertue of an Adamant there placed, as ſome deliver. The Town ſituate in a deſolate and barren place, bordering on Arabia Petræa; but of great Trade, rich, and well inhabited: the Sepulchre of that falſe Prophet drawing thither a continual reſort of Pilgrims. The Temple gorgeous, having 3000 Lamps in it, which burn continually. The Sepulchre or Tomb encloſed with an Iron Grate, but of no magnificence or beauty: covered with a Carpet of Green Velvet, which is ſent hither yearly by the Grand Signeur; the old one being taken off, and cut into innumerable ſhreds or pieces, and ſold for Relicks by the Prieſts (to ſuch as come in Pilgrimage thither) to their great enriching. 4 Cufa, the ordinary Reſidence of the firſt Caliphs, till the removing of the Imperial Seat to Damaſcus in Syria; and after that, the uſual place of meeting for conſultation in Affairs of State, relating to the peace of this Country, and the Common Intereſt of this People: as memorable for the Sepulchre of Mortis Hali, the Progenitor of the Perſian Sophies, as Medina is for that of Mahomet. 5 Mecca, ſuppoſed to be the Mechara of Ptolomy, ſituate in the like barren Soil, not far from Medina, but of far greater reſort and traffick: the whole wealth in a manner of this Country, together with the Commodities of Perſia and India, being firſt brought hither; and from hence on Camels backs tranſported into Ægypt, Syria, Paleſtine, and other parts of the Turkiſh Empire. Unwalled, and either for that cauſe, or for concealment of their ſopperies from the eyes of Chriſtians, it is made death for any Chriſtian to come within five miles of it. Utterly deſtitute of Water, but what they keep in Ciſterns, from one ſhowr of rain to another, or else brought thither with great charge; otherwise pleasantly seated, rich, and containing about 6000 Families: Every year visited with three Caravans, or Troops of Merchants and Pilgrims, from India, Damascus, and Grand Caire; who having done their business and devotions there, go afterwards in Pilgrimage to Medina also, to the great enriching of both places. 6 Ziden, the Haven-Town to Meccha, from which distant about 40 miles, situate on the Red Sea, in a sandy soil, unwalled, and much exposed to wind and weather; but wealthy, well-built, and of great resort. 7 Zebit, now the Metropolis of the Country, situate about half a days Journey from the Red Sea, in a large Plain, between two Mountains; a Riveret of the same name passing by it: well-traded for Sugars, Spice and Fruits: the ordinary Residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg, by whom taken not long after Eden. 8 Eltor, a Port Town of this Country, and the only Town where the Christians are suffered to inhabit. 9 Aden, on the very entrance of the Red Sea, near the Streights called Babel-Mandel; supposed by some to be the Madoce of Ptolomy, but more agreeing in situation with the famous Empory by him called Arabia. The faireſt Town of the whole Peninsula, of great strength, both by Art and Nature: well-traded, and well-fortified, having a large capacious Haven, seldom without good store of Shipping, and containing to the number of six thousand persons. Once a distinct Kingdom of it self, but treacherously surprised by the Turks, Anno 1538. and therewith all the rest of the Country: made afterwards the Seat of a Turkish Beglerbeg, under whom, and him of Zebit, are supposed to be no fewer than 3000 Timariots. 10 Oran, the Lock and Key of the Southern Ocean. 11 Thema, or Theman, the same, I take it, which our later Travellers call Zeman, situate more within the Land: affirmed by Benjamin the Jew, surnamed Teudelensis, to be a Town of 15 miles square, but to have within the Walls thereof great quantity of Ground for Tillage. 12 Zarval, a retiring place of the Caliphs, when they lived in this Country. 13 Hor, on the point or Promontory called Chorodemus, a Garrison not long since of the Kings of Ormus. 14 Muskahat, on the Persian Gulf near the point of Land called Cape Roxel gate: opposite to Surrat in the East India, and possessed by the Portugals, who have fortified it with a well-built Castle, for defence of their Ships and Frigots which frequent those Seas. Of no great note till the taking of Ormus by the Persians, many of the Inhabitants whereof were since settled here. Of the Affairs of this Country we shall speak anon; having first took a brief view of the Islands which belong unto it.

4 The ARABICK ISLANDS.

THe ISLANDS which lie round about the Shores of Arabia Felix, and have been anciently accounted as parts thereof, are dispersed either in the 1 Red Sea, 2 Southern Sea, or, 3 The Gulf of Persia.

I. The RED-SEA (called also by the Ancients Sinus Arabicus, and now Golfo di Mecca) is that part or branch of the Southern Ocean, which interposeth it self betwixt Ægypt on the West; Arabia Felix, and some parts of Petræa, on the East; the North-East bound of it touching upon Idumea, or the Coast of Edom. Extended in length from the Town of Suez, anciently called Arsinoe, in the bottom of it, to the Streights of Babel-Mandel, where it openeth into the Southern Ocean, for the space of one thousand and four hundred miles: in breadth, for the most part, but one hundred, but in some places almost two; the Streights themselves not being above a mile and an half, anciently chained by the Kings of Ægypt, as is said by Strabo; but now left open by the Turk, who is Lord hereof. A violent and inquiet Sea, full of Sands and Shelves; insomuch as they who pass in and out, are fain to make use of Pilots which dwell thereabouts, and are experienced in the chanel. Sufficiently famous in all times and Stories, for the miraculous passage of the Children of Israel, and the drowning Pharaoh King of Ægypt.

It took the name of the Red-Sea, as some conceived, from the redness of the Sands; as others have delivered, from the redness of the Waters: but latter Observations have discovered the weakness and absurdity of these Etymologies; the Sea and Sands being coloured here, as in other places. By the Grecians it was called Erythræum, which in that Tongue signifieth Red also, not from the colour either of the Sands or Waters, but from one Erythras, supposed to be the Son of Perseus and Andromeda, who commanded the Eastern Shores hereof. And these come nearer to the mark than the others did. For the truth is, it was originally called the Sea of Edom, because it took beginning on the Coasts of that Country: which word in the Hebrew signifying Red, as appeareth *Gen.*25.30. first given as a nick-name to Esau, and from him afterwards to Mount Seir, or the Land of Edom, Gen. 36.31. was by the Greeks rendred Erythræum, and Mare Rubrum by the Latins. Whence the name of the Red Sea became known to all, but the reason of the name to few.

Of the great traffique which was anciently driven up this Sea, we shall speak hereafter, when we are in Ægypt, on the other side of it. Look we now on the Islands which belong to Arabia, as they all generally do. Known in the times of Ptolomy by the names of 1 Adani, 2 Æni, 3 Are, 4 Cardamine, 5 Combusta, 6 Damanum, 7 Hieracum, or the Isle of Hawks, 8 Maliaci, 9 Polybii, 10 Socratis, 11 Timagenis, and 12 Zygana. But by what names now called, and of what note then, is a thing so doubtful, that I dare not offer a conjecture. Late Travellers report almost all of them to be small, desolate, or but meanly inhabited, described by them under other names. One there is of indifferent largeness, said to be an hundred twenty and five miles long, though but twelve broad, called Dalaqua; with a City in it of that name, where they gather Pearls. 2 Then there is Camaran, most extremely hot, of most note for the many Spoils there made by the Portugals. 3 Xamoa, the Earth whereof is said to be Red (perhaps to countenance the vulgar Tradition, of calling this the Red Sea from the colour of the Sands or Shores) and the King a Moor. 4 The Samaritan Island, spoken of by Scaliger, inhabited by a remainder of that People; who as soon as they saw any Stranger land upon their Coasts, would most religiously desire him not to touch them. Such other Islands as lie upon the opposite Shores, and seem to appertain unto Æthiopia, shall find their place in our Description of the African Islands.

II. The SOUTHERN OCEAN, comprehendeth that vast body of Waters, which from the Eastern Banks of both Æthiopia's, coast along on the South of Arabia Felix, and so directly Eastward, to the furthest India: in this regard called by some Writers Oceanus Indicus, by others Mare Australe, from the situation; and by some also Mare Rubrum, or the Red Sea, from Erythras a great King (as they suppose) reigning hereabouts, and giving name not only to the Red-Sea (or Gulf of Arabia) strictly and specially so called, but to all the Sea-coasts also, from the opening of the Bay of Arabia, to the Coasts of India, by them called Mare Erythræum.

In

In this vaſt Ocean Ptolomy placeth many Iſlands which belong to Arabia, but of little note, viz. two Iſlands by the name of Inſulæ Agathoclis. 2 Three more by the name of Cocconati. 3 Dioſcoris, by Pliny called Dioſcurias, with a City of the ſame name in it. 4 Seven others in the Bay called Sinus Sachalites, by the name of Zenobii. 5 Organa, by Strabo called Tyrrina, memorable for the Sepulchre of Erythras before-mentioned, being a great Hill planted with Trees. 6 Serapias, by Ammianus Marcellinus called Turgana, famed for a Temple of Serapis, the Ægyptian Idol. None of them now of any credit, nor formerly of any great note, the two laſt excepted.

III. On the Eaſt ſide of Arabia Felix, betwixt it and Perſia, lieth another large Arm of the Southern Ocean, anciently called Sinus Perſicus, or the Bay of Perſia, now Golfo di Elkatiffe. A turbulent and unruly Sea, the Southern Ocean breaking in at the one end, and the River Euphrates at the other: the continual combating or claſhing of which two great Waters, make it ſo unquiet. Ptolomy placeth in this Bay (but as parts or members of Arabia) 1 Tylus, which Arianus ſets at the mouth of Euphrates, Solinus in the Indian Seas, affirming it to be well ſtored with Vines and Olives: another of this name being placed by Theophraſtus in the Bay of Arabia (but probably the place miſtaken) affording good Materials for Shipping. 2 Apphana. 3 Tharo. 4 Ichara; of which nothing memorable. To theſe ſome late Travellers have adjoyned two others, if not ſome of the former under theſe new names, that is to ſay, 5 Bayren, and 6 Gonfiar, where they take the beſt Pearls in the World, in beds of Oyſters. Other Iſlands of this Bay (if any) belong to Perſia; where, if occaſion ſo require, we ſhall ſpeak more of them.

To return therefore to the main Land of Arabia Felix the firſt Inhabitants thereof were the Sons of Chus, and the Families which they brought with them. Their memories preſerved in the names of ſome of the chief Tows and Nations, till the days of Pliny, Ptolomy, and ſome other of the ancient Writers. Divided afterwards into the ſeveral Tribes or Septs of the Caſſanitæ, Cinædocolpitæ, Homeritæ, Adramitæ, Eleſari, Sachalitæ, Anaritæ, Gerræi, Ægei, Sabæi, Mineï, Leanitæ, Cattabani, Abiſeni, and divers others: each governed ſeparately and apart by their ſeveral Chiefs; whom they honoured, as in other places, with the name of Kings. One of which ſpoken of by Juſtine, named Hierotimus, is ſaid to be the Father of 500 Children. Eaſie to have been overcome, becauſe ſo divided, if any potent Neighbour had attempted the Conqueſt of them: as it is wondrous ſtrange they did not, conſidering the richneſs of the Country, and the many temptations which they had to invite them to it. More worthily deſerving the name of Felix, in that never conquered, than in all the other Rarities and Delights thereof. By Alexander once deſigned for the Seat of his Empire, who probably had endeavoured the Conqueſt of it, having finiſhed his War againſt the Perſians, had he not died in Babylon at his coming back. Nor did the Romans ever extend their Empire beyond Petræa, though once Auguſtus did attempt it; employing in that action Largus, his Lieutenant in Ægypt: one Sames being then King of thoſe parts which lay neareſt to him. The Romans at their firſt entry found no reſiſtance: But when by the extraordinary heat of the air, and drinking ſalt Waters, they began to grow diſeaſed and ſickly, the Arabians fell luſtily upon them, and made them return back both with loſs and ſhame. After this nothing done by the Romans, to diſturb their quiet; nor much done by the Chriſtians, to advance their glories: the whole divided into almoſt as many Religions, as Principalities and Eſtates. Moſt of them Gentiles, but circumſed, as the Iſmaelites and other Arabians had been of old; many Jews intermingled with them, and ſome ſtore of Chriſtians, but thoſe divided alſo into Sects and Factions. And in this ſtate it ſtood, when Mahomet firſt began to broach his blaſphemous dotage. By birth of Jathrip, an obſcure Village then not far from Medina: his Father called Abdalla, an Idolatrous Pagan; his Mother named Hemina, as perverſe a Jeweſs. Deprived of both his Parents when but two years old, he was left unto the care of an Uncle: who not able to give him education nor willing to be at the charge to keep him longer, ſold him at ſixteen years of age to the Iſmaelites; by whom expoſed to ſale in the open Markets, he was bought by one Abdalmutalif, a wealthy Merchant. By him employed at firſt in drudgery, and ſervile Offices, till noting his great wit, and fitneſs for better Services, he at laſt uſed him as his Factor: ſending him with his Camels and Loads of Merchandiſe into Syria, Perſia, Ægypt, and other places wherein he did behave himſelf with ſuch dexterity, that he much encreaſed his Maſter's wealth, and his own eſtimation. Of perſon he is ſaid to be low, and withal ſcald-headed; but otherwiſe comely to the eye, and of good aſpect. Much troubled with the Falling ſickneſs, which infirmity he made good uſe of afterwards; affirming that thoſe Fits were nothing but heavenly Raptures, in which he did converſe with the Angel Gabriel. He is ſaid to have been alſo well skilled in Magick, by which he taught a white Pidgeon to feed at his ear, which he gave out to be the Holy Ghoſt, by whom he was inſtructed in the Law which he was to publiſh: but this not till afterwards. By Sorceries, comelineſs of Perſon, and the great knowledg which he had in his Maſter's Buſineſs, he gained ſo far on the Affections of his Miſtreſs, that on the death of Abdalmutalif, ſhe made him her Husband. Poſſeſſed of all his Maſter's Wealth, he affected eaſe: and being till then of no Religion, or at beſt a Pagan; he began to hearken unto Sergius, a Neſtorian Monk: who flying out of Syria for fear of puniſhment (the Hereſies of Neſtorius being newly both revived and cenſured) came into Arabia; where he found entertainment in the Houſe of Abdalmutalif, the Maſter of Mahomet. By his perſwaſions, who found him a fit Inſtrument for the Devil to work on, he began to entertain the thoughts of hammering out a New Religion, which might unite all Parties in ſome common Principles, and bring the Chriſtians, Jews, and Gentiles (into which the World was then divided) under one Profeſſion. Reſolved on this, he retired himſelf unto a Cave not far from Meccha, as if he there attended nothing but Meditations: Sergius in the mean time ſounding in the ears of the People, both his Parts and Piety. The People being thus prepared to behold the Pageant, out comes the principal Actor with ſome parts of his Alcoran (pleaſing enough to ſenſual minds) which he profeſſed to have received from the Angel Gabriel. And finding that this edified to his expectation, he next proclaimed Liberty to all Slaves and Servants, as a thing commanded him by God, by whom the Natural Liberty of Mankind was moſt dearly tendred: which drew unto him ſuch a rabble of unruly People, that without fear or oppoſition, he diſperſed his Doctrines, reducing them at laſt to a Book or Method.

The Book of this Religion he calleth the Alcoran, that is to ſay, the Collection of Precepts: the Original whereof they feign to be written on a Table which is kept in Heaven, and the Copy of it brought to Mahomet by the Angel Gabriel. A Book ſo highly reverenced by the Mahometans, that they write upon the Cover of it, Let none touch this but he that is clean. The body of it (as it now ſtandeth) was compoſed by Oſman the fourth Caliph, who ſeeing the Saracens daily enclining to divers Hereſies, by reaſon of ſome falſe Copies of Mahomet's Laws; and that the Empire by the ſame means was likely to fall into civil diſſention; by the help of his Wife, who was Mahomet's Daughter, he got a ſight of all Mahomet's Papers, which he reduced into four Volumes, and divided into one hundred twenty and four Chapters; commanding expreſly upon pain of death, That that Book, and that only, ſhould be received as Canonical through his Dominion. The whole body of it is but an Expoſition and Gloſs on theſe eight Commandments.

1 Every one ought to believe that God is a great God, and one only God, and Mahomet is his Prophet. They hold Abraham to be the Friend of God; Moſes, the Meſſenger of God; and Chriſt, the Breath of God: whom they deny to be conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, affirming that the Virgin Mary grew with child of him by ſmelling to a Roſe, and was delivered of him at her Breaſts. They deny the Myſtery of the Trinity; but puniſh ſuch as ſpeak againſt Chriſt, whoſe Religion was not (ſay they) taken away, but mended by Mahomet. And he who in his Pilgrimage to Mecca, doth not, coming or going, viſit the Sepulchre of Chriſt, is reputed not to have merited, or bettered himſelf any thing by his Journey.

2 Every man muſt marry, to encreaſe the Sectaries of Mahomet. Four Wives he alloweth to every man, and as many Concubines as he will; between whom the Husband ſetteth no difference, either in Affection or Apparel; but that his Wives only can enjoy his Sabbaths Benevolence. The Women are not admitted in the time of their lives to come into their Churches; nor after death, to Paradiſe: And whereas in moſt or all other Countries, Fathers give ſome Portions with their Daughters, the Mahometans give money for their Wives, which being once paid, the Contract is regiſtred in the Cadie's Book, and this is all their formality of Marriage. More of this Theme we ſhall ſpeak hereafter, when we are in TURCOMANIA, and among the Turks.

3 Every one muſt give of his wealth to the poor. Hence you ſhall have ſome buy Slaves, and then manumit them; Buy Birds, and then let them fly. They uſe commonly to free Priſoners, releaſe Bond-ſlaves, build Caves or Lodgings in the ways for the relief of Paſſengers, repair Bridges, and mend High-ways. But their moſt ordinary Alms conſiſt in Sacrifices of Sheep or Oxen, which, when the Solemnity is performed, they diſtribute among the poor; to whom alſo, on the firſt day of every year, they are bound to give the Tithe or tenth part of their Gettings in the year foregoing: inſomuch that you ſhall hardly find any Beggars amongſt them.

4 Every one muſt make his Prayers five times a day. When they pray, they turn their bodies towards Mecca, but their faces ſometimes one way, ſometimes another way, believing that Mahomet ſhall come behind them, being at their devotions. The firſt time is an hour before Sun-riſing; the ſecond, at noon-day; the third at three of the clock after-noon; the fourth at Sun-ſetting; the fifth and laſt, before they go to ſleep. At all theſe times the Cryers kept a bauling in the Steeples (for the Turks and Saracens have no Bells) for the People to come to Church. And ſuch as cannot come, muſt when they hear the voice of the Criers, fall down in the place where they are, do their devotions, and kiſs the ground thrice.

5 Every one muſt keep a Lent one month in a year. This Lent is called Ramazan, in which they ſuppoſe the Alcoran was given unto Mahomet by the Angel Gabriel. This Faſt is only intended in the day time, the Law giving leave to frollick it in the night as they beſt pleaſe, ſo they abſtain from Wine, and Swines fleſh; prohibited in their Law at all times, but never ſo punctually abſtained from, as in the time of their Lent.

6 Be obedient to thy Parents. Which Law is the moſt neglected of any in all the Alcoran, never any Children being ſo unnatural as the Turkiſh.

7 Thou ſhalt not kill. And this they keep inviolated among themſelves; but the poor Chriſtians are ſure to feel the ſmart of their fury. And as if by this Law, the actual ſhedding of blood only were prohibited, they have invented puniſhments for their Offenders, worſe than death it ſelf. As firſt, the Strappado, which is hanging of them by the Arms drawn backwards: when they are ſo bound, they are drawn up on high, and let down again with a violent ſwing, which unjoynteth all their back and Arms. Secondly, They uſe to hoiſe up their heels, and with a great Cudgel to give them three or four hundred blows on the ſoles of their feet. Thirdly, It is ordinary to draw them naked up to the top of a Gibbet or Tower, full of hooks, and cutting the Rope, to let them fall down again; and by the way they are caught by ſome of the hooks, where they commonly hang till they die for hunger.

8 Do unto others as thou wouldſt be done unto thy ſelf. To thoſe that keep theſe Laws he promiſeth Paradiſe, a place of all Delights, adorned with flowry Fields, watered with Chryſtaline Rivers, beautified with Trees of Gold, under whoſe cool ſhade they ſhall ſpend their time with amorous Virgins, whoſe Manſion ſhall not be far diſtant. The men ſhall never exceed the age of thirty, nor the women of fifteen; and thoſe to have their Virginities renewed, as faſt as loſt.

Friday he ordained to be the Sabbath day, partly to diſtinguiſh his Followers from the Jews and Chriſtians, who ſolemnize the days enſuing; but principally, becauſe he was on that day proclaimed King or Emperour, and ſolemnly ſo created. Wine and Swines-fleſh are the principal things forbidden by the Alcoran: from the laſt whereof they all unanimouſly refrain; but on the firſt they are ſo ſotted, that when they come at it, they ſeldom go home again unled; inſomuch that all the Wines in Conſtantinople have been thrown about the Streets, and death made the penalty for any that will preſume to bring any more into the City. Mahomet taught them, That every one ſhould be ſaved by his own Religion; him only excepted, that revolted from the Alcoran unto another Law: but ſo, that under the notion of Religion, he means only ſuch as worſhip the one and only God, excluding by that means the old Idolaters of the Gentiles from the hopes of Salvation. And he taught too, That at the end of the World, all men that profeſſed any ſuch Religion, ſhould go into Paradiſe; the Jews under the Banner of Moſes, the Chriſtians under the Banner of Chriſt, and the Saracens under the Banner of Mahomet. They compel no man therefore to abjure the Faith in which he was born, but commend and approve ſecretly ſuch as they find zealous and conſtant in their own Religion; yet holding it an eſpecial honour to have daily new Proſelytes, they incite them by hope of Freedom and Preferment, which with many are motives too much prevailing. Hence I have heard many ſay, That it is better for a man that would enjoy Liberty of Conſcience, to live in the Countries profeſſing Mahometaniſm, than Papiſtry: for in the one he ſhall never be free from the bloody Inquiſition; in the other he is never moleſted, if he meddle not with their Law, their Women, or their Slaves.

The Opinions which they hold concerning the end of the World, are very ridiculous; as that at the winding of a Horn, not all flesh only, but the Angels themselves shall die; that the Earth with an Earthquake shall be kneaded together like a lump of dough; that a second blast of the same Horn, shall after forty days restore all again; that Cain shall be the Captain or Ringleader of the damned, who shall have the countenance of dogs and swine; that they shall pass over the bridge of Justice, laden with their sins in satchels; that the great sinners shall fall into hell, the lesser into Purgatory only; with a thousand the like fopperies: which it is needless to add here, considering that the Alcoran it self is now extant in English, and every one that lists may read it. A thing so full of Tautologies, inchohærencies, and such gross absurdities, of so impure and carnal mixture, that he must lay aside the use of his natural reason, who is taken by it, if force, ambition, or the want of Christian education do not lead him on. For if we seriously look into the causes of the deplorable increase and long continuance of this Religion, we shall find them to be chiefly these, 1 The greatness of the Victories gotten by the Saracens, who easily compelled the conquered Nations to receive their Law. 2 The great zeal and diligence of the Arabians themselves, who being a numerous people, and much given to Merchandize, have possessed themselves of all the Sea-Coasts of Africk, from the streights of Babel Mandel, almost as far as to the Cape of Good Hope; of all the Islands in those Seas, and many Factories and good Towns on the Coasts of India: in all which they have setled their Religion also, as a thing inseparable from their Nation. 3 A peremptory restraint of all disputation in any point of Religion whatsoever it be. 4 The suppressing of Philosophy, and the study of Humane Sciences; the light whereof might easily detect the grossness of their Superstitions. 5 The sensual liberty allowed of having variety of Wives, and as many Concubines as they are able to keep. 6 The promise of the like sensual pleasures in the other world, with which a sense not illuminated with the Spirit of God, doth for the most part use to be more affected, than with the speculative hope of spiritul happiness. 7 The forbidding of Printing and printed Books, by which the people might come to see the verity and purity of the Christian Faith; the falshood and impurity of the Law of Mahomet. These last not useful, or at least not able to induce belief, if the first had not opened and prepared the way.

For indeed force of Arms was the strongest Argument by which Mahomet himself confirmed, and his Successors in their times have since propagated and dispersed his Doctrine. Strengthened by the resort of that rascal Rabble, which repaired to him, he assaults Medina, pretending a quarrel to the Jews, who had there a Synagogue. Repulsed at first with loss of men, and a wound in his face, by which some of his fore-teeth were beaten out; there likely to have made an end of his new Religion, if not recovered by his Souldiers for a further mischief. At the next onset he prevailed, the Battel being fought near a place called Bedez, situate betwixt Mecca and Medina, frequently mentioned in the Alcoran. After which fight he took the City, converting the Synagogue to a Temple for his own impieties: the news whereof so startled the Phylarchæ, or Nobility of Mecca, that they armed all their Powers against him, and sped so well in the beginning of the War, that they drove him forcibly from their Territories; which not long after he subdued, and set his chief seat at Mecca. From that his flight, the Saracens began their Computation of years (as we from CHRIST'S Nativity) which they call the Hegira; which beginneth about the year of our Redemption 617. Concerning which time, I cannot but observe, that Mahomet compelled his devilish Doctrine, beginning his Empire; and Bonifface the third assumed his Antichristian title, beginning his unlimited Supremacy nigh about the same year. It was called the Hegira, from the Arabick Hegirathi, which by the Learned in that Tongue, is rendred by διωγμὸς ὑπὲρ τῆς θρησκείας, i. e. the persecution raised about Religion. Joseph Scaliger in the first Edition of his most glorious work De emendatione temporum, casteth off this Etymology with purum putum mendacium. He will not have it called Æra fugæ or persecutionis, but Æra Hagarenæ; because forsooth the Arabians were by some called Hagarens. I believe it would have puzled Joseph, with all his reading, to shew unto us any Epoche or Æra, which is taken from the name of a Nation. And therefore other reason he giveth us none but this; Nos autem scimus vocem illam primogeniâ significatione ab Hagarenis, non à fuga duci. But time and opposition, at the last reclaimed him from this Errour: and in the second Edition of his Work, he is content to follow the common opinion of those men, whom in the first he whistled off with the infamous appellation of mendaces.

But to proceed, It hapned much about this time, that the Saracens revolting from Heraclius the Eastern Emperour, joyned themselves unto him. They had long been displeased with their condition, and now hoped to mend it. Exasperated by Julian the Apostate, when they served in his Wars against the Persian, for telling them when they demanded their pay, that he had more store of Steel than Gold: but then they wanted a fit head to resort unto. Now serving Heraclius in the same War, they were used by his Officers in the same ill manner. Asking their pay, the Treasurer of the Army made them this churlish answer, that there was scarce money enough to pay the Roman and Grecian Souldiers; and must those Dogs be so importunate for their Wages? Provoked herewith, and hearing the fame of Mahomet, they betook themselves to him: who strengthned by their Forces, and the coming in of the rest of their Country-men soon brought the three Arabias under his subjection. To which, having defeated the Emperours Forces sent against him, he added some parts of Syria and Ægypt; and returning to Mecca, there died frantick and distempered, in the seventieth year of his Age, and three and twentieth of his Impostures: of which he had spent thirteen at Medina, and the rest at Mecca. His dead body being kept four days in expectation of a Resurrection, which he promised to perform at the end of three; grown full of stench and putrefaction, was carried to Medina, and there interred: his Successors out of wicked and worldly policy, keeping up the reputation of that Religion after his decease, which they derided in his life; and calling themselves Caliphs, and Vicars General, to him, their Prophet, to the Catalogue of which we hasten; made intricate, not more by their own confusions, than by the difference of those names by which they are presented to us by several Writers; according to the times and Languages in which they writ.

The Caliphs or Emperours of the Saracens.

632	15	2	Ebubezer, or Uquebar, Mahomet's Father in-law, and one of his Great Captains, supplanted Ali, to whom the Empire was designed by the will of Mahomet; and took unto himself the name of Caliph. 2.
634	17	3	Haumar, the second of Mahomet's Great Captains, having the Command of the Army under Ebubezer, succeeded him in the Estate; and added to it Persia, Ægypt, Paleſtine, with great part of Syria and Meſopotamia. 12.

947 30 4 Oſman, the third of Mahomet's Great Captains, Husband of Zeineb, his ſecond Daughter; ſucceeded under that pretence, and added all Barbary to his Empire. Diſtreſſed by the faction of Hali, and beſieged in his own houſe, he ſlew himſelf in the eighty ſeventh year of his Age, and the tenth of his Reign.

657 40 5 Hali, the Kinſman and next heir of Mahomet, and the husband of Fatime his eldeſt Daughter, ſucceeded on the death of Oſman: murdered by the procurement of Muhavias, near Cufa, in Arabia Felix.

660 43 6 Muhavias, having murdered Hali, his Son Haſem, or Oſſan, and eleven of the Sons of that Haſem, the twelfth only eſcaping with life (from whom deſcended the Family of the Alaveci, and the Perſian Sophies) aſſumed the Government as rightful Succeſſor to Oſman, whoſe Widow, the daughter of Mahomet, he had took to wife. He conquered Rhodes, Cyprus, and a great part of Aſia Minor, and was the Founder of the Family of Aben Humeya.

681 64 7 Gizid, the Son of Muhavias, morke skilled in Poetry than in Arms.

8 Habdalla and Marvan, Competitors for the Supreme Dignity; but carried at laſt by Marvan.

685 68 9 Abimelech, the Son of Marvan, eſtabliſhed the begun Conqueſts of Armenia, and Meſopotamia. 22

707 90 10 Vlidor Vlit, under whom the Saracens or Moors firſt conquered Spain. 9

716 99 11 Zulcimin, Brother to Vlit, whoſe Captain Mulſamas beſieged Conſtantinople, till his Ships were burnt, and his men conſumed with the Plague. 3

719 102 12 Homar, or Haumar II. Son of Vlidor Vlit. 2

721 104 13 Izid, or Gizid II. the brother of Haumar with whom during his life he was joynt Caliph, and after dis deceaſe enjoyed it wholly to himſelf.

725 107 14 Evelid, by ſome called Iſcham, in whoſe time Charls Martel made ſuch havock of the Moors in France, Anno 734. their General then named Abderamen. 18

743 125 15 Gizid III. the ſon of Gizid the ſecond.

744 126 16 Hyces, by ſomd called Ibrahim, the brother of Gizid the third, ſlain by Marvan.

745 127 17 Marvan II. the laſt of the houſe of Benhumeya, ſlain by Abdalla, of the houſe of Fatime and Hali.

752 134 18 Abdalla, of the houſe of Alaveci, or Alabeci, deſcended from Hali and Fatime, the eldeſt daughter of Mahomet; called alſo the Family of Abas, becauſe of their deſcent from Abas the Uncle of Mahomet, and perhaps Father unto Hali.

756 138 1 Abdalla II.

20 Mahomet II. ſirnamed Bugiafer, or Abugefer, who built the City of Bagdet, made from that time the conſtant ſeat of his Succeſſors till their fatal period.

777 156 21 Mahadi. 9

786 168 22 Muſa, or Moyſes. 1

787 169 23 Aron, or Arachid, who compelled Irene Empreſs of Conſtantinople, to pay him tribute. 23

810 193 24 Mahamad, or Mahomet III.

825 198 25 Abdalla III. who took and ſpoyled Crete, and overthrew the Greeks; he alſo ſpoyled Sicilia, Sardinia, and Corſica. 17

832 215 26 Mahomet IV. waſted Italy, burnt the Suburbs of Rome, and haraſſed the forenamed Iſlands. 40

Others reckon theſe Caliphs to have ſucceeded Mahomet the ſecond.

815 198 25 Mamon. 12

827 210 26 Mutetzam. 8

835 218 27 Wacek. 4

839 222 28 Methucal. 12

851 234 29 Montacer. 1

852 352 30 Abul Hamet. 6

858 241 31 Almatez. 4

863 245 39 Motadi Bila. 7. After whoſe death, the Ægyptians withdrew themſelves from their obedience due to the Babylonian Caliph, and choſe one of their own, to whom all the Arabians, and thoſe of the Mahumetan Religion, in Africa and Europe, ſubmitted themſelves. Of the Ægyptian Caliphs, when we come into that Country. Take now with you the names only of the Syrian and Babylonian Caliphs; for ſtory of them I find little or none, the power being totally in the hands of the Sultans of the ſeveral Provinces, and nothing left unto the Caliphs but an airy title, the ſhadow of that mighty Tree, which formerly had ſpread it ſelf over moſt part of the World.

		20	Muſtenatzar.
1255	638	21	Muſtatzem, the laſt Caliph, or High Prieſt of the Sarcens of Bagdet, or Babylon, living in the account of a Prince or Emperour; or looked on as the Supreme Lord of the Saracen Empire: ſtarved in his Caſtle of Bagdet, and his whole poſterity rooted out by Allan, or Haallon the Tartar, in the firſt year of his reign. Yet there is ſtill remaining a carcaſs of the old body, one whom they call Caliph, at whoſe hands the neighbour Princes uſe to receive their Diadems and Regalities; for ſo we find that Solyman the magnificent, after his conqueſt of Chaldea, Meſopotamia, and Aſſyria, to have been by one of these poor titular Caliphs, Crowned King of Babylon, Anno 1513.

This unweildy body of the Saracen Empire, having thus two heads, began apparently to decline: losing to the Kings of Oviedo and Navarre, a great part of Spain; to the Genoese, Sardinia, and Coasica; to the Norman, Naples, and Sicily; and finally most of their Empire, with their very names, to the Turks and Tartars. For Allan, or Haalon, a Tartarian Captain, starved Mustatzem the Babylonian Caliph, in his Tower of Bagdet, and rooted out all his Posterity, (as before was said:) and Sarracon the first Turkish King of Ægypt, brained the last Ægyptian Caliph with his Horsemans Mace; leaving not one of Issue or Kindred surviving. The office of the Caliphs (as to matters which concern their irreligion, and the supreme determination of the doubts and controversies which occur therein) being now executed in the Turks Dominion, by the Mufty, or Chief Priest of the Turkish Mahometans.

As Mars shewed himself a friend unto those Saracens, in their wars and triumphs; so also did Phœbus pour down no less Cœlestial influence, on such as addicted themselves to Scholarship. Bagdet in Chaldæa, Cairoan, Fes, Morocco, in Barbary; and Corduba in Spain, were their Universities: out of which came the Philosophers, Avicene, and Averroes; the Physicians, Rhasis, and Mesue; the Geographers, Leo and Abulfada; and almost all the Textuaries and profound Writers, (as Hali, Algazel, Albumazar, &c.) in Astrology, from whom a great part of our Astronomical and Astrological terms are borrowed.

There is now no Kingdom, Island, or Province which acknowledgeth the Empire of the Saracens, but the Kingdom of Fess and Morocco only: Arabia it self, the very first seat of their power, acknowledging a subjection to the Turkish Empire. For first Petræa, and Deserta, being subdued by the Turks, when they conquered Persia, or otherwise following the fortunes of the present Victor, were afterwards accounted of as subject unto the Mamaluks of Ægypt, who out of that Country and all Syria, had by degrees disseized the Selzuccian Family. And as the Vassals of that Crown, though but Subjects at will, they more molested Selimus in his march towards Ægypt, by falling on his Rear, and terrifying him with their night-Alarms, than all the Forces of the Mamaluks, in the field against him. But Ægypt being subdued, and the Mamaluks utterly destroyed, some of their Chiefs being gained by money, and the rest by promise of preferment; the whole Nation of these wild Arabs swore allegiance to him: continuing in account as subject unto his Successors, but in effect doing what they list; governed as formerly by the Chiefs of their several Clannes, and in their Robberies taking no more notice of the Turk than they do of the Christians. And as for Fœlix, it continued also in a free condition, in respect of any forrein power; till of late times the Turks and Portugals entrenched upon them. For in the year 1538. Solyman Bassa, Admiral of the Turkish Fleet against the Portugals, who had diverted the trade of the Red Sea, and otherwise given offence to Solyman the Magnificent, by aiding the Persians, went with a strong Army to take Diu, a Town and Island of East India, then in their possession. But being unable to effect it, at his coming back he called in at Aden, one of the best traded Ports of Arabia Felix, invited the King thereof aboard, most treacherously hanged him, and surprized the City. The like he also did to the King of Zibet, the Port Town to Mecca: and by that means got possession of all the Coasts of this Country, bordering on the Red Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; of which the Turks still continue Masters. But in the Inland parts, and towards the Persian Gulf, of no power at all; not suffered to travel up and down without a Pass from some of the Arabian Chiefs; or if they do, in danger to be set upon by the Natives, who brook them not. Some parts hereof which lie next unto the Isle of Ormus, made one Kingdom with it; but the Kings originally of this Country, by whom the City of Ormus was first builded: and so continued till the taking of Ormus by the Portugals, Anno 1622. who since the taking of that Isle by the King of Persia, hold Muskahat, and some other pieces upon this Continent. The residue of the Country cantoned amongst a company of petit Princes, as in former times; before ambition taught them to devour one another.

And so much for ARABIA.

CHALDEA.

6 CHALDEA. 7 ASSYRIA. 8 MESOPOTAMIA.

THese Provinces, which properly and originally constituted the Assyrian Empire, I have joyned together in the Title, because united in the Story and Affairs thereof; though severally to be considered in the Description and Chorography of them.

6 CHALDEA.

CHALDEA is bounded on the East, with Susiana, a Province of Persia; on the West, with Arabia Deserta; on the North, with Mesopotamia; and on the South, with the Persian Bay, and the rest of Deserta. Originally called Chasdim from Chesed the fourth Son of Nachor, the brother of Abraham. Chesed quoque quartus est, à quo Chasdim, id est, Chaldæi postea vocati sunt, as St. Hierome hath it. But why the Chaldeans should derive their name from Chesed, being a People long before Chesed's birth, I am not able to determine: unless he taught them the first Principles of the Art of Astronomy; or was the Author of some signal benefit unto them, which we know not of. It was called afterwards Babylonia, from Babylon the chief City of it; and at this day by Bellonius, Azania; by the Arabians, Keldan; by the Turks, Curdistan.

But the name of Chaldea sometimes went beyond those bounds, taking in some part also of Mesopotamia, as appeareth by that passage of St. Stephen, saying, Acts 7. 2, 3, 4. That the God of glory appeared to our Father Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran; and said unto him, Get thee out of this Country, and from thy Kindred, and come into the Land which I shall shew thee. Then came he out of the Land of the Chaldees, and dwelt in Charran, &c. Where clearly that part of Mesopotamia, which lay next unto Assyria, where then Abraham was, is included under the name of Chaldea, or the Land of the Chaldees. Which I desire the Reader to take notice of, because I must make use of this observation in another place.

The Country of Herodotus said to be so fruitful, that it yielded ordinarily two hundred, and in some places three hundred fold; the blades of Wheat and Barley being (as he affirmeth) four fingers broad. By Pliny it is said of the Babylonians, that they mowed their Corn twice, and seeded it a third time, or else it would be nothing but blades: and yet so, that the worst of their Land yielded fifty, and their best an hundred-fold encrease. Nor is the nature of the soyl so altered in long tract of time, but that (as late Travellers have observed) it would in all likelihood attain to its first fertility, if it were ordered with like care and diligence, as in former times. But what need more be said as to the natural fruitfulness and delights of this Country, than that it pleased God Almighty to make choice of some part hereof for the Terrestrial Paradise or Garden of Eden, in which he placed our Father Adam, at his first Creation. For there that Paradise, by men both skilled in Divinity and Geography, is affirmed to have stood. Yet amongst all sorts of Writers we find different opinions. Some make Paradise to be a place of pleasure, and the four Rivers to be the four Cardinal Vertues; but these Allegories on the Scripture are unwarrantable. Others place it in the air, under the Circle of the Moon; and tell us that the four Rivers in the Scriptures mentioned, fall down from thence, and running all under the Ocean, rise up again in those places where they are now found: but this is so vain a foppery, that I will not honour it with a confutation. Such as make Paradise local, are divided also into three ranks (for I omit the rest) whereof some place it under the Æquator; but this agreeth not with the bounds prescribed by the Holy Ghost. Some conceive the four Rivers to be Tigris, Euphrates, Nilus, and Ganges; and that Paradise was the whole world; but this cannot be: for then when Adam was driven out of Paradise, it must also follow that he was driven out of the world, which were most absurd. Those of the soundest judgments place it here, in an Island which is made by the Rivers Tigris and Euphrates, and some branches running from them both: the uppermost of which is called Pison, (falsly rendred Ganges) which watereth the Land of Havilah, or that part of the Land of Havilah, which is now called Chusestan, or Susiana, a Province of Persia; and the lowermost is named Gihon, (improperly by some translated Nilus which compasseth the East parts of Arabia Petræa, by the Septuagint for the reasons above mentioned, rendred Ethiopia. And this agreeth both with the position of this Country, and the course of those Rivers. For that Tigris and Euphrates (which the Hebrew Text called Hiddekel, and Perah) do here joyn their streams, is confessed on all sides. Then as for Pison, it is no other than that River by Ptolomy, called Basilius, or Regius; by Curtius more nearly Piso-Tigris, or Pasi-Tigris, Pervenit ad fluvium, Pasitigrin incolæ vocant, as his own words are. A little stream, which watering the Land of Havilah, or the Country of the Chavelei, or Chaulasei, or Chaulotæi (for by these several names they are called amongst the Ancients, who place them betwixt the Babylonians, and the Nabatheans an Arabian people) poureth it self into the Tigris, and falls together with it into the Gulf of Persia. And finally for Gihon, by Ptolomy called Maarsares, and by others Marsyrus, it is no other than a branch of Euphrates, which watering the Land of Chus, or Ethiopia Asiatica, take which name you will, loseth it self at last in the Lakes of Chaldea.

But though in general the Country was extremely fruitful, yet in some places was it covered with a slimy matter, which the overflowing of the waters, and the nature of the soil together, did bring forth abundantly. Used by them in their buildings, instead of Mortar, than which more durable and binding; and therefore choſen for the Cement of the Tower of Babel, Gen. 11. 3. Some alſo tell of a Cliff, which opening ſendeth out ſuch a ſtink, that it killeth Birds as they fly over it; and others, of a like open place near a Town called Ait, which continually throweth out boyling pitch (named therefore Hell-mouth by the Moors) filling therewith the adjoyning Fields; and that herewith the People uſe to pitch their Boats. But this in ſome places only, the Country generally being both healthy and delightful, as before was ſaid.

The People anciently were much addicted unto Sooth-ſaying and Divinations, and no leſs noted for being Authors of the firſt Idolatry that was ever practiſed in the World. Induced unto the laſt perhaps by the Power of their Kings, who would needs confer Divine Honours upon ſome of their Anceſtors. But to the firſt inclined by their own diſpoſition, and the ſituation of their Country, yielding a fair ſenſible Horizon (for the Rational is alike in all places, both in Hills and Vallies) and conſequently profitable to the obſervation of the riſing and ſetting of the Stars, whether Heliacal, Acronical, Matutine, or Veſpertine, as the Artiſts phraſe it. Whereunto may be added the length of Life in thoſe elder times, furniſhing them with the greater meaſure of experience, concerning the diſtinct Motions of each ſeveral Orb, and the full period of the courſes of each ſeveral Planet. Certain it is, that they grew ſo noted in this Art, that at the laſt every Aſtrologaſter, or Figure-flinger, was called a Chaldæan, Gentis nomine ad eos homines tranſlato, qui Jeſe illius ſapientiæ ſpecie venditabant, as Beza hath obſerved in his Annotations. For giving too much credit to them, the People thus flouted by the Satyriſt,

Chaldæis ſed major erit fiducia, quicquid
Dixerit Aſtrologus, credent à fonte relatum
Ammonis, &c.

That is to ſay,

Joves Oracles no greater credit have,
Than Sooth-ſayings of a Chaldee cozening Knave.

The Language which was ſpoken here, had the name of the Chaldee, or Chaldæan Tongue; of great antiquity, and ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt, ſome Chapters of the Propheſie of Daniel being written in it. So different from the Hebrew in its primitive purity, that the Jews did not underſtand it, as appeareth by the words of the Officers of Hezekiah, 2 Kings 18. 26. deſiring Rabſhekah to ſpeak to them in the Chaldee Tongue, that the common people of the Jews might not hear his Blaſphemies. A further proof may be, That a man may have ſome knowledg in the Hebrew, and yet be ignorant of the Chaldee; as many are, no doubt, at this preſent day. But whatſoever it was in its primitive purity, it altered afterwards when the Jews came to live amongſt them, during the Captivity: out of whoſe long commerce with them, both Nations loſt their proper Languages, and fell upon a third, made out of both, which was called the Syriack. Of this we ſpake before, when we were in Syria and Paleſtine. And this is now the natural Language of this Country, and its neighbour Aſſyria; but with a little mixture of the Greek and Arabick: Not vulgarly ſpoken elſewhere, for ought I can find; but uſed by many others in their Sacred Offices, by whom not commonly underſtood. For in this Language, all the Sects of the Eaſtern Chriſtians do aſſociate their Publick Liturgies; that is to ſay, the Neſtorians, Jacobites, Maronites, (for I reckon not the Melchites, who uſe the Greek Liturgie, amongſt the Sectaries.) The like do alſo the Indians or Chriſtians of Saint Thomas, the Cophties or Chriſtians of Ægypt, and the poor remainder of the Chriſtians in the Iſle of Zocataria, an Iſland on the Coaſt of Africk. Uſed to thoſe Liturgies, when the Language was more underſtood amongſt them; though now worn out of Vulgar knowledg, by the overſpreading of the Arabick, Tartarian, and Turkiſh Conqueſts. In which the Prelates of theſe Churches have fallen into the great errour of the Church of Rome: and without taking notice of the alterations, happning in the Vulgar Tongues of thoſe ſeveral Nations, which are united under them into one opinion, keep up a Language in their Liturgies which they underſtand not; as if the capacities of the People could be ſooner raiſed to the underſtanding of an unknown Language, than the publick Liturgies be fitted unto their capacities. The ancient piety of the Church, and the modern Languages of Gods People, are not inconſiſtent; though out of private ends ſome have taught us otherwiſe. But I fear this errour (as ſome others) will not be ſo eaſily remedied, as apprehended. From the Tongue in which they celebrate the Divine Offices of their Religion, paſs we to the Religion it ſelf, whoſe Sacred Offices are ſo celebrated.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt preached in this Country by Saint Peter, of whoſe being in Babylon (the chief City hereof) himſelf aſſureth us in the laſt words almoſt of his firſt Epiſtle: and other buſineſs he had none here, but to preach the Goſpel. Much perſecuted by the Perſians (who were then poſſeſſed of all theſe parts) it prevailed at laſt; Chriſtianity growing up the faſter for the cutting down. The Patriarchal See, originally planted in Seleucia, ſucceſſor unto Babylon in repute and greatneſs, if not alſo in name; the Biſhop whereof, by order of the Nicene Council, had the Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction of theſe parts, with the name of Catholique; and the next place in Seſſion, at all publick Aſſemblies of the Church, next after the Patriarch of Hieruſalem. And beſides this, the Indians or Chriſtians of Saint Thomas acknowledg him for their Primate or Metropolitan; as they did afterwards in his right the Patriarch of Mazal. At this preſent here are ſome remainders of Chriſtianity, part of them Jacobites, but the moſt Neſtorians; of whom more anon.

Of the chief Rivers hereof we have ſpoken already; and Mountains there are none to hinder us in our paſſage forwards: So that without more delay, we may take a view of their principal places. And in the firſt place we meet with Babel (in the Hebrew ſignifying Confuſion) famous for Confuſion of Languages which here happened. For immediately after the Univerſal Deluge, Nimrod the Son of Chus, the Son of Cham, perſwaded the People to ſecure themſelves from the like after-claps, by building ſome ſtupendious Edifice, which might reſiſt the fury of a ſecond Deluge. This Counſel was generally embraced, Heber only and his Family (as tradition goeth) contradicting ſuch an unlawful attempt. The major part prevailing, the Tower began to rear a head of Majeſty, 5146 paces from the ground; having its baſis and circumference equal to the height. The paſſage to go up, went winding about the outſide, and was of an exceeding great breadth; there being not only room for Horſes, Carts, and the like means of Carriage, to meet and turn: but Lodging for Man and Beaſt, and (as Verſtegan reporteth) Graſs and Corn-fields for their nouriſhment. But God beholding from on high this fond attempt, ſent amongſt them (who before were of one Language) a confuſion of Tongues; which hindred the proceeding of this Building, one being not able to underſtand what his fellow called for.

2 Babylon, on the Bank of Euphrates, the ancienteſt City in the World, on this ſide of the Flood; firſt built by Nimrod, in the place deſtinated to the raiſing of the

Tower

Tower of Babel, and by him made the Seat of his Kingdom: afterwards beautified and enlarged by Semiramis, the Wife of Ninus, one of his Successors; and finally, much encreased both in bulk and beauty by Nebuchadnezzar, who therefore arrogated to himself the whole glory of it, saying in his pride, Is not this the great Babel that I have builded? Dan. 4. 30. A City of great fame and State, accounted one of the Worlds nine wonders, and deservedly too.

The compass of the Walls 365 furlongs (or 46 miles) according to the number of the days in the year; in height fifty Cubits, and of so great breadth, that Carts and Carriages might meet on the top of them; finished in one year, by the hands of 200000 Workmen, employed daily in it. Situate on both sides of Euphrates, over which there was a sumptuous Bridge, and at each end of that Bridge a magnificent Palace: beautified also with the Temple of the Idol Bel, and famous for the Pensile Gardens, made with great charge, and born up with most stately Arches. In a word, so great and vast it was, that Aristotle saith, That it ought rather to be called a Country, than a City: adding withall, That when the Town was taken, it was three days before the furthest parts of the Town could take notice of it. Which taking of the Town must be understood of the surprise hereof by the Medes and Persians; and not of the taking of it by the Macedonians, as Pet. Ramus (as great a Clerk as he was) in his marginal Notes upon the Politicks of that Author, hath most vainly told us. Which, whether it were that there were Gates at the end of every Street, which made it be so long in taking; or that the Babylonians were not wakened from their drunken Feast, in the time whereof it was surprised, I determine not. Revolting in the time of Semiramis, the news came to her as she was ordering her Hair: whereupon leaving her Head half-dress'd, she went and besieged it; never ordering the rest of her Hair, till she had recovered it. How it fell into the hands of Cyrus, we learn out of Xenophon's Cyri-paideia, which was in this manner. The River Euphrates ran quite thorow the Town, round about whose Banks the politick Prince cut many deep Chanels; into which when the Babylonians were securely merry at a general Feast, he suddenly drained and emptied the River, conveyed his own Forces into the Town all along the dry and yielding Chanel, and in a little time made himself Master of it. From the Persians it revolted in the Reign of Darius Hystaspes; and that Sustenance might not be wanting to the Men of War, they strangled the most part of the Women, being thought in Actions of this quality, not so much as necessary evils. When they had for twenty Months so obstinately defended the Town, that the Persians had less hope than ever of prevailing; Zophyrus, one of Darius Captains, mangling his body, and disfiguring his face by cutting off his nose and ears, fled to the Babylonians, complaining of the tyranny of his King. They crediting his words, and knowing his proweſs, committed the charge of the whole Army unto him, as a man to whom such barbarous usage had made the King irreconcileable. But he taking the best opportunity, delivered both the Town and Souldiers into the hands of his Sovereign. which made Darius often say, That he had rather have one Zophyrus, than twenty Babylons. Here died Alexander the Great, after whose death the Grecian Captains, regardful rather of their own ambitions, than the common Loyalty, divided the Empire among themselves; leaving the Body of the King eight days unburied. A wonderful change of fortune, that he who living thought the World too small for his Valour, being dead should find no place big enough for his Body. After this taking of it by the Macedonians, the Glories and Magnificence hereof began to decline; lessened unto a fourth part in the time of Q. Curtius the Historian; in solitudinem redacta, reduced to desolation in the days of Pliny; and being turned into a Park, in which the Kings of Persia did use to hunt, in the time of Saint Hierom. That wondrous change occasioned partly by the injury of the time, partly by the neglect of the Macedonians, who removed the Seat-Royal of their Empire more towards Greece: but principally by Seleucus Nicanor, who offended with the Babylonians, built the City of Seleucia.

3 Seleucia, the second City of note in all this Country, situate in a place more commodious and healthy, near the meeting of Tigris and Euphrates, and about forty miles more North than Babylon; out of which he drew 500000 persons for the peopling of it. Nor did this new City rob the old only of its Power and Greatness, but also of its very Name; being called Babylon in some of the ancient Authors, Βαβύλων περσικὴ πόλις, Μητρόπολις, Σελευκία καλουμένη, as (for one) by Stephanus. In the Primitive times of Christianity, the Bishop of this See was accounted for the Primate of the Chaldeans; with a superintendency over the Christians of India also, as before was said. But this Supplanter was in time brought to ruine also. And

4 Bagdad, a new City raised from the Ruins of it: built near the Foundations of Seleucia by Bugiafer the 20th. Caliph of the Mahometans, at the expence (as some write) of eighteen Millions of Crowns; which, because of the many Gardens contained in it, had the name of Bagdad, the word so signifying in the Arabick Tongue. First built upon the Western Bank of the River Tigris, near to its confluence with Euphrates; but in the year 1095. removed to the other side of the River, by Mustetaher, the 45th. Caliph of the Saracens, because less subject to the Inundations of that furious River. But it was reckoned still for the same City, as if built by Bugiafer: By whom being made the Seat of his Royal Residence (whose Successors were from hence called the Caliphs of Babylon) it flourish'd in great pride and splendor: till taken and sacked by Allan, or Haalon, a Tartarian Captain, who here starved Musteatzem, the last Caliph of it, and rooted out his whole Posterity; as if the Caliphate and the City were to end together. But the Town revived again, though the Caliph could not; continuing to this day a City of great Wealth and Traffick, but nothing comparable unto what it was both for beauty and bigness; being not above seven miles in compass, and having nothing in the Buildings to be justly bragged of. Taken by Solyman the Magnificent with the rest of the Country, it became subject to the Turks; from them recovered by Abas the King of Persia, Anno 1625. and again recovered by the Turks about the year 1640. In which changes it can be no marvel, that she hath lost much of her former splendour. Maintained especially at the present by the Trade of Aleppo, to which, besides such Goods as go up the Water, there pass yearly many Caravans, or Troops of Merchants, each of them having in it some hundreds (if not thousands) of Camels laden with Commodities. For whose safe Lodgings, as they pass (the ways being generally ill-provided for Travellers in these Eastern Countries) there are some Houses of Receipt built at the publick charge, or by some special Benefactor, to preserve his memory: most of them strong, and many very fair and lovely, which in the Dominions of the Persians they call Caravane Rawes; in the Turkish, Canes. And for communicating the success of their business unto the place from whence they came, the make use of Pigeons, which is done in this manner. When the Hen-Pigeon sitteth, or hath any young, they take take the Cock, and ſet him in an open Cage; whom, when they have travelled a days journey, they let go at liberty, and he ſtraight flieth home to his Mate. When they have trained them thus from one place to another, and that there be occaſion to ſend any Advertiſement, they tie a Letter about one of their necks, which at their return home is taken off by ſome of the Houſe, advertiſed thereby of the Eſtate of the Caravan. The like is alſo uſed betwixt Ormus and Balſora. But of this enough.

5 Cteſiphon, on the River Tigris, not far from Seleucia, by whoſe fall it roſe; occaſioning the decay thereof, as that did of Babylon. So Pliny, ſpeaking of the fall of Babylon, by the building of Seleucia ſo near unto it; then adding, invicem ad hanc exhauriendam, Cteſiphontem juxta tertium ab ea Lapidem condidere Parthi. Firſt built, ſaith Marcellinus, by Vardanes; afterwards beautified and walled by Pacorus, a Parthian King; and by him made the Seat-Royal of the Perſian Kingdom. Many times beſieged and aſſaulted by the Roman Emperors; but moſt commonly without ſucceſs: and amongſt others, by Julian the Apoſtate, that bitter enemy of the Goſpel, who here breathed out his Soul to Satan, in theſe dying words, Viciſti tandem Galilæe. But Vardanes (whoſoever he was) cannot of right be called the firſt Founder of it, who raiſed it rather from the rubbiſh of an old Foundation: this City being the ſame with that which Moſes calleth Calne, and Ezekiel, Canneh, Gen. 11. and Ezek. 27. 23. and therefore rightly ſaid by Pliny to be built in Chalanitide, or the Region of Chalne.

6 Sipparum, remarkable for the great Trench made neer it, to receive the overflowings of Euphrates, which otherwiſe might have annoyed the City of Babylon: in compaſs 1280 Furlongs, or 160 miles; in depth 20 fathoms. A vaſt and expenceful work; but that nothing was to be admired, when Babylon it ſelf was up and in full proſperity.

7 Apamia, a City of Seleucus's foundation alſo, ſituate at the fall of Piſon into the River of Tigris.

8 Vologeſia, placed by Ptolomy amongſt the Cities of Chaldæa, but by Marcellinus in Aſſyria: built or repaired by one of the Vologeſes, Kings of Perſia, and from him denominated.

9 Borſippa, by Ptolomy called Barſita, memorable for the great Victory which Cyrus the firſt Perſian Monarch, obtained here againſt Nabonidus the King of Babylon, by Scaliger called Darius Medus, (of which more anon) whom having vanquiſhed, he pardoned him (as he ſaith) his Life, and gave him the Government of Carmania.

10 Balſora, a Port-Town to Babylon, ſituate at the fall of Euphrates into Sinus Perſicus, and conſequently of great wealth and trading: the riches of Arabia, Perſia, and ſome parts of India, being landed here, and ſo carried to BABYLON, and thence up the Water to Aleppo. Supposed to be the City of Theredon, mentioned by Ptolomy; built or repaired by Nebuchadnezzar, and not long ſince taken from the Turk by Abas, the Perſian.

7 ASSYRIA.

ASSYRIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Media, from which parted by the Mountain called Coathras; on the Weſt, with Meſopotamia, from which divided by the River Tigris; on the South, with Suſiana; and on the North, with ſome part of Turcomania: So called from Aſſur the Son of Sem, by whom firſt inhabited. But having long ſince loſt that name, as to vulgar ſpeech, it is by Niger called Adrinſa; by Mercator, Sarh; by the Turks, Arzerum.

The Country very plain and level, exceeding fruitful and abounding in Rivers. For beſides Tigris, which waſheth one whole ſide thereof, Ptolomy aſſigneth to this Country the Rivers of 2 Lycus, 3 Cyprus, and 4 Gorgos; all of good note, and all of them increaſing, with their tributary Streams, the greatneſs of Tigris.

The People were anciently great Warriers, and together with the Babylonians or Chaldeans, commanded a great part of the Eaſt; extending their Dominion from the Mediterranean Sea, to the River Indus: inſomuch that not the People of this Province only, but of all the Provinces almoſt of this ſpacious Empire, had the name of Aſſyrians. The men for all this exceeding formal in their Habit, wearing long Robes which trailed on the very ground, their Hair long, their Hats or Caps Piramidal, like the Perſian Miters; not ſtirring out of doors but perfumed with Musk, Rings on their fingers, and a Scepter in their hands: and very frequent in their waſhings, eſpecially after copulation. As for their Women it was an ancient cuſtom with them, to expoſe the faireſt unto Sale in the open Market; and the Money given for thoſe, to put off ſuch as were deformed, and not ſo amiable. And hence perhaps the Fathers of our times have learnt this Leſſon, of giving leſs Portions with ſuch Daughters as will ſell themſelves; but greaſing the fat Sow (as the ſaying is) with the addition of ſome hundreds: which made the merry fellow ſay, That the money were a good match, if the Wench were away.

The Chriſtian's Faith was firſt here planted by Saint Jude, and took ſuch deep root in that Plantation, that it could never be pulled up; notwithſtanding the cruel perſecutions raiſed againſt it, by the Kings of Perſia: who when they ſaw there was no means to deſtroy it by violence, attempted in the next place to corrupt it with Hereſie. And to that end, as alſo to revenge himſelf upon the Emperour Heraclius, as Great Champion of the Orthodox Belief againſt Neſtorianiſm, Choſroes the great King of Perſia inforced all the Chriſtians of his Empire unto thoſe Opinions, which he knew that Emperour condemned; permitting none who were counted Catholicks, within his Dominions. By means whereof, and afterwards for want of Preachers to inſtruct them otherwiſe (the Saracens having conquered the Perſian Empire) Neſtorianiſm prevailed ſo far, that it extended over all the Countries Eaſt of Tigris, as far as India; and Northwards too amongſt the Tartars, of which more hereafter. Governed by their own Patriarch, who reſideth at Meſul, now the chief City of this Country; and honoured by his People with the Title of Jacelich, miſtaken or pronounced amiſs for Catholique: an attribute given anciently to all Orthodox Prelates.

The Opinions held by them as Neſtorians, were, 1 That there were two Perſons in our Saviour, as well as two Natures; but yet confeſſing that CHRIST from the firſt inſtant of his Conception, was both God and Man. 2 That the Bleſſed Virgin ought not to be called Θεοτόκος, or the Mother of God; but yet acknowledging her to be the Mother of God the Son. 3 That Neſtorius condemned for theſe Opinions in the third and fourth General Councils, was an holy man; for whoſe ſake they condemn Saint Cyril his profeſſed Antagoniſt, and all thoſe Councils wherein any Cenſure was laid upon him. In other points, though differing from the Church of Rome, they are right enough (their rejecting Epiſcopal Confirmation excepted only.) As 1 In celebrating the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper with leavened bread, 2 Communicating in both kinds. 3 Enjoyning no neceſſity of Auricular Confeſſion. 4 Contracting Marriages in the ſecond degree of Conſanguinity. 5 Permitting ſecond and third Marriages unto men in Orders, after the death of their first Wives. 6 Not praying before the Cross, nor giving religious worship to the Crucifix, or other Images. So much for these Nestorian Sectaries, if so named aright, considering the qualifications added unto their opinions; now (but corruptly) called Nostranes: the greatest Sect of Christians in all the East.

The solemnities which these Christians use in contracting marriage, because not very usual, I will here relate. Their wives they never see till the day of their marriage, but hearing a good report of the young Woman, negotiate with her parents for her. Agreed upon the business, they meet in the Chancel of the Church, wherein there is a partition with an hole in it: the Bridegroom and his friends standing on the one side; the Bride and her kindred, on the other. When there, the Cassisse or Churchman biddeth the Bridegroom to put his hand thorow the hole into the Partition, and take his Bride by the hand, which he doth accordingly: the Mother of the Bride, with a sharp-pointed instrument, made of purpose, pricking the Bridegroom's hand all over, with sufficient eagerness. If when he feeleth the smart, he lets go her hand, they take it for a sign that he will not love her; but if he hold her fast, and wring her hand till he cry again, they take it for a very good Omen, and are glad they have so well bestowed her. After the Marriage is consummate, if a Male-child be born unto them, the Father loseth his own name, and is called by the name of his eldest Son: so as if the Fathers name be Moses, and his Sons name Joseph; the Father is no more called Moses, but Abba Joseph, or the Father of Joseph. So highly did they reverence Marriage, and the fruit thereof, Posterity.

It was anciently divided into these six parts, 1 Arraphachitis bordering on Armenia Major; so called for Arphaxaditis, or the plantation of Arphaxad, the Son of Sem. 2 Adiabene, bordering on Mesopotamia, so called, quasi Ἀδιάβατος, or inaccessible, because fenced with such unfordable Rivers, Tigris and Euphrates, that there was no easie coming to it, Διὰ δυσχωρίαν τῶν διάβασιν, as it is in Suidas: or rather for Adiavena, from Diavas, and Adiavas, the chief Rivers of it (the same which Ptolomy called Lycus, and Caprus) as in Marcellinus. 3 Calacine, and Sitacene from Sittace, and Calach, two chief Cities of it; of which more anon. 5 Arbelites, and 6 Apolloniates, from Apollonia and Arbela, two other of the principal Cities.

Here then we have four of the Cities of Assyria brought unto our hand, 1 Calach, one of those four which Nimrod built in the Land of Assur, Gen. 10. 11. and one of them to which the Ten Tribes were transplanted by Salmanassar, 2 Kings 17. 6. and 18. 11. of such esteem in those elder days, that Calacine as Ptolomy, or Calachene as Strabo most rightly calleth it, did take name from hence. 2 Sittace, situate about two miles from the banks of Tigris, in the way from Babylon to Susa. A City, when it gave name to the parts adjoyning, both great and populous; well seated, in a fruitful soyl, and well shaded with trees of several sorts; supposed by the situation of it to be that Accad, (or rather built in or near the place of it) which was one of the first four Cities of Nimrod's Kingdom. 3 Arbela, on the banks of the River Caprus, built as some say by Belus, (or Belochus) Priscus, an Assyrian King, whence it had the name. Near unto which there is a place which Strabo calleth Κυπρήσσον, or Cupressum, conceived by some to be the place where Noah framed the Ark. 4 Apollonia, built after the Macedonian conquest, as appeareth by the name, which is wholly Greek: not otherwise observable, but for giving the name of Appoloniates to the Country adjacent. Add unto these, 5 Gegnamela, situate in the middle space betwixt Lycus, and Caprus memorable for the last and greatest battel betwixt Alexander and Darius the King of Persia; who had he made good the Eastern banks of the River Tigris, might easily have hindred the Macedonians from coming over, the River being so extremely swift and violent, that the Macedonians were not able to pass it, but by linking their hands and arms together, and making one entire body to oppose the Current; and therewithal of so great depth, that the Footmen were fain to hold their Bows & Arrows over their heads, to keep them from being moistned and made unserviceable. But having miserably lost this opportunity by the cowardise of Mazeus, who had the keeping of this Pass, he was inforced to venture all upon a Battel; drawing unto this place an Army of 50000 Horse, 200000 Foot, in their accompt who speak least of it (for Arrianus makes it above a Million) opposed by Alexander with no more than 40000 foot, & 7000 Horse of his Europeans; but those victoriously successful: 40000 of the Persians slain, (but Diodorus Siculus speaks of 90000) with the loss of 300 Macedonians only, as is said by Curtius. In memory of which notable victory, a Mountain near the place of the Battel, was by Alexander called Nicator, known by that name to Strabo, and some other Ancients. 6 Rehoboth, another of the four Cities, which Nimrod is said to have built in Assur; by some supposed to be Birrha, an ancient City upon Tigris, and bordering so near unto Mesopotamia, that by Ptolomy it is placed in it. Of which more anon. 7 Rhesen, another of the Cities of Nimrod's building, seated by Moses between Calach and Nineve, Gen. 10. 12. and there commended for a great City. Which Character with the site thereof, have induced some learned men to think it to be the same, which is by Xenophon called Larissa; seated by him on the River Tigris, much about this place, and said to be a City of such strength and greatness, that it was no less than two Parasangs, or four miles in compass: the Walls in height a hundred foot, twenty five in breadth; so strongly cemented, that Cyrus, who besieged it, could have never taken it, if a casual Eclipse of the Sun had not discouraged the defendants. But whether this conjecture be good or not, we have here Larissa for another of the principal Cities. 8 Nineve, by the Greeks and Latines called Ninus; first built by Nimrod, and called Ninive with relation unto Ninus, his Son or Nephew, after the example of Cain whose steps he followed; of whom it is said, that he built a City, and called it after the name of his Son, Enoch, Gen. 4. 17. I know the building of this City is by some ascribed to Assur, grounding themselves on that of Moses, Gen. 10. 11. Out of that Land went forth Assur, and built Ninive, &c. But I like better of their judgment, who take Assur in this place for the name of the Country, and not of the man; making the Text to speak of Nimrod, aud to say of him, Et egressus est in Assur, &c. that is to say, And he went forth to Assur or the Land of Assyria, and there built Ninive, Rhehoboth, and the rest there named. A City so enlarged by some of the succeeding Kings, that it came at last to be bigger than Babylon, in compass 480 furlongs, or 60 miles; and therefore said in the Book of Jonah, to be a City of three days journey, in circuit, as indeed it was: accompting 20 miles for a days journey, according to the common estimate of those elder times; as also of the Greeks, and Romans, in the times succeeding. Nor was it of less strength than greatness, the walls an hundred foot high, and so broad that three Carts might go abrest on the top thereof: and in those walls 1500 Turrets, each of 200 foot in height: So strong, that it was thought to have been impregnable especially because of an ancient Prophecy, which signified that the Town should never be taken, till the River became an enemy to it. A Prophecy which which induced Sardanapalus to make it the ſeat of his war againſt Belochus, and Arbaces, then in arms againſt him; who having beſieged it three years without hope of ſucceſs, at laſt the River overflowing, carried before it twenty furlongs of the Wall. Which accident ſo terrified the effeminate King, that he burnt himſelf in the midſt of his treaſures, and left the Town to the Beſiegers. Threatned deſtruction by the preaching of the Prophet Jonah, it eſcaped then upon repentance. But the people going on in their wicked courſes, it was deſtroyed by Aſtyages King of the Medes, that it might no longer be an encouragement to the Aſſyrians to rebel againſt him, as formerly againſt ſome of his Predeceſſors: and ſo deſtroyed, that in the time of Saint Cyril of Alexandria, as himſelf affirmeth in his Comment on the Prophet Nahum, ὡς μηδὲ ὅπου ποτὲ γέγονεν ὁρᾶσθαι λοιπὸν, that one could ſcarce diſcern in what place it ſtood. 9 Moſul at this time, and for long ſince, the chief of Aſſyria; ſeated on the Tigris, and raiſed out of the ruins of Ninive: of moſt note for being the ordinary abiding place of the Neſtorian Patriarch, who either in this City it ſelf, or the Monaſtery of St. Hermes near adjoyning to it, hath his conſtant reſidence. The Neſtorians in this City ſo conſiderable, both in power and number, that though it be in the hands of Mahometans, either Turks or Perſians; yet there are numbred in it fifteen Chriſtian Churches, and at leaſt 40000 Souls. A Sect ſo maligned by the Pope, (whom they commonly call the Reprobate Biſhop) for the greatneſs of the juriſdiction which this Patriarch hath: that not contented to withdraw the Indians from him, (whereof more hereafter) Pope Julius the third, ſet up an Anti-Patriarch againſt him, to whom he gave the title of the Catholick of Muſal alſo; to whom the Neſtorians dwelling in the Northern parts of Meſopotamia, (if ſome Writers of the Papal Party may be believed) do ſubmit themſelves. 10 Arzeri, of greater ſtrength than Moſul, though of leſs antiquity than repute; from which the whole Province of Aſſyria, is now called Arzirum. And 11 Scheheruzal, at this time of the greateſt note, as being the ordinary Reſidence of the Turkiſh Beglerbeg or Baſſa; who hath 10000 Timariots, under his command, to defend this Country, and be ready for any ſervice, as occaſion is.

8 MESOPOTAMIA.

MESOPOTAMIA, is bounded on the Eaſt with the River Tigris, by whom parted from Aſſyria; on the Weſt, with Euphrates, which divideth it from Comagena, a Province of Syria; on the North, with Mount Taurus, by which ſeparated from Armenia Major; and on the South, with Chaldæa, and Arabia Deſerta, from which laſt it is parted by the bendings of Euphrates alſo.

In the Scripture it is called moſt commonly by the name of Padan Aram, that is Syria Culta; but that name properly belonging to the North-parts of it; Aram or Syria, becauſe inhabited originally by the Aramites, whom the Greeks call Syri; and Padan, or Culta, from the fruitfulneſs and riches of it, exceeding plentifully ſtored both with corn and wine, and furniſhed with all neceſſaries for the life of man; in that regard by Strabo called Meſopotamia Fœlix. The Southern parts hereof being barren and full of Deſarts, not having any herbage in them, ὑλὴ ἄλλο δένδρον, nor any kind of Tree, as we read in Xenophon; amongſt ſome of the ancient Writers, had the name of Arabia, partly becauſe ſo like in nature to Arabia Deſerta, and partly being planted with Arabian Colonies. The name which comprehends both parts is ſometimes Syria Tranſ-fluvialis, or Syria beyond the River (Euphrates,) of which ſee 2 Sam. 10. 16. But generally in the Hebrew it is called Aram-Naharajim, which the Greeks render properly by Meſopotamia, or the Country in the middle of Rivers: environed by Tigris on the Eaſt, and Euphrates on the Weſt and South; the River Chaboras, or Aloras, paſſing alſo through it. The Latines generally call it by the ſame name which the Greeks had given it; Priſcian only to ſhew his faculty in Grammar, calling it Medamna; By the Turks it is now called Diarbech.

As is the Country, ſuch the People, the moſt Adjective of any we have met with hitherto; able at no time to ſtand by themſelves, but ſtill requiring the addition of ſome neighbour Nation to be joyned unto them. Nothing that they can call their own, their Name, their Language, nor their Country. Beholding for their Name in the North, to Syria; in the South, to Arabia: the Chaldæans alſo putting in for a ſhare, and challenging thoſe parts which lie next Aſſyria, to belong to them. Their Language anciently the Syriack, at this day the Arabick. Their Country ſucceſſively ſubjected to the Babylonians, Aſſyrians, Medes, and Perſians. From them firſt conquered by the Romans, under the conduct of Pompey; reduced into the form of a Province, by the Emperour Trajan; more fully ſettled and confirmed by Aurelianus. But being recovered by the Perſians, they fell together into the power of the Saracens, and are now commanded by the Turks. Never appearing of themſelves on the Stage of action, but when once God ſhewed his mighty power in their many weakneſſes; and raiſed them up to be a Scourge to the houſe of Iſrael, of which ſee Judges 3. 8. Hired afterwards by Adadezer, King of Syria Zobah, in his war againſt David; by whom moſt ſhamefully defeated, 2 Sam. 10. 16, 18. Yet notwithſtanding memorable in the Book of God, for the birth of Abraham and Rebecca; the long abode of Jacob, and the birth of his Children, in that reſpect affording an Original to the Hebrew Nation.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt preached here by St. Thaddæus, one of the 70 Diſciples; Anno 43. upon this occaſion. Abgarus the Toparch, or Prince of Edeſſa, one of the chief Cities of this Country, having been long afflicted with an incurable infirmity, and hearing of the fame of JESUS, beſeeched him by a ſpecial meſſage to come and help him: whereunto our Saviour made this Anſwer, That he could not viſit him in perſon, the things he was to do, whilſt upon the earth, being to be performed only in the Land of Canaan; but that he would take care of his health in convenient time. Accordingly, not long after his Aſcenſion, St. Thomas the Apoſtle, by immediate revelation from our Saviour, ſent Thaddæus thither; by whom the Prince was cured, and the Goſpel preached, and many of the Nation converted to it: the Acts whereof, together with the Copies of the ſeveral Letters from Abgarus to CHRIST, and from CHRIST to him, preſerved in the Archieves of Edeſſa, were by Euſebius tranſlated out of the Syriack, and inſerted into the body of his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, lib. 1. cap. 14. Once planted, it found good increaſe, continuing in the purity of it till about the year 530. at what time one Jacobus Syrus (ſo called from his birth and abode in Syria) took upon him the defence of the Errors of Eutyches, touching the unity of natures in CHRIST our Saviour. Whoſe followers finding the Patriarchs of Antioch too vigilant over them, removed for the moſt part further off, ſettling themſelves in Babylonia, and Meſopotamia, where they continued in great numbers. Governed by their own Patriarch, to whom the Jacobites in Syria are alſo ſubject, who takes unto himſelf the Title of Patriarch of Antioch, and is ſucceſſively called Ignatius, as if the undoubted Succeſſor of that Saint and Martyr; ſuperior in that regard, to the Patriarch of Hieruſalem, who is alſo a Jacobite. The Patriarchal See, fixt in the Monaſtery of Saphran, near the City of Merdin; but the reſidence of the Patriarchs for the moſt part, at Caramit. The number of Chriſtians under his obedience, computed formerly at 160000 Families, reduced ſince unto 50000. That which they hold as Jacobites, diſtinct from all other Chriſtians is, 1 The acknowledgment but of one nature, one will, and one operation (as there is but one perſon) in Chriſt our Saviour. 2 In ſigning their Children before Baptiſm, in the Face or Arm, with the ſign of the Croſs imprinted with a burning Iron. 3 Retaining Circumciſion, and uſing it in both Sexes. 4 Affirming the Angels to conſiſt of two ſubſtances, Fire and Light. And 5 Honouring the memory of Dioſcorus (of Alexandria) and Jacobus Syrus, condemned by the ancient Councils. The points wherein they differ from the Church of Rome.

1 Not enjoyning the People the neceſſity of Confeſſion to a Prieſt, before they admit them to communicate.

2 Not admitting Purgatory, nor Prayers for the Dead.

3 Adminiſtring the Sacrament of the Euchariſt in both kinds.

4 Allowing the marriage of Prieſts; And

5 Teaching that the ſouls of men deceaſed, are not admitted preſently to the Viſion of God, but remain ſomewhere in the Earth, to expect Chriſt's coming. In which laſt, (ſetting aſide the determination of the place) as they have many of the Fathers concurring with them; ſo to the firſt (touching the unity of natures in our Saviour Chriſt) they have of late added ſuch qualifications, as poſſibly may make it capable of an Orthodox ſenſe.

Chief Rivers of this Country (beſides Tigris and Euphrates, of which more hereafter,) 1 Chaboras, which riſing in Mount Maſius, paſſing directly South, falleth into Euphrates; as alſo doth 2 Syngarus, by Pliny, called Maſca, ariſing out of the Mountain Syngarus; which is but the more Weſtern part of the ſaid Mount Maſius. Which names of Maſca, Maſius, and the Maſieni (being the name of a People dwelling thereabouts) ſhew plainly that they go upon very good grounds who place Maſch, or Meſech, one of the Sons of Aram, in theſe parts of the Country.

It was divided anciently into, 1 Anthemaſia. 2 Chalcitis. 3 Caulanitis. 4 Accabene. 5 Ancorabitis. And 6 Ingine: each part containing ſeveral Cities or Towns of note. Theſe ſix when conquered by the Romans, reduced unto two Provinces only, viz. 1 Meſopotamia, lying on the South of Mount Maſius, or the head of Chaboras; and 2 Oſrhoene on the North: this laſt ſo named from one Oſrhoes, the Prince or Governour of theſe parts in the time of the Perſians, as Procopius telleth us.

Chief places of the whole, 1 Edeſſa, the Metropolis of Oſrhoene, ſituate on the River Scirtas, which runneth thorow the middeſt of it, not far from the fall thereof into Euphrates. Memorable for the Story of Abgarus, before related, amongſt Church-Hiſtorians: and in the Roman Hiſtories, for the death of the Emperour Caracalla, ſlain here by the appointment of Macrinus, Captain of his Guard. The occaſion this. The Emperour conſcious to himſelf of his own unworthineſs, employed one Maternianus to enquire amongſt the Magicians in the Empire, who was moſt likely to ſucceed him: by whom accordingly advertiſed that Macrinus was to be the man; The Letters being brought unto Caracalla, as he was in his Chariot, were by him delivered with the reſt of the Packets to the hands of Macrinus, (who by his Office was to be attendant on the Emperours perſon) that he might open them, and ſignifie unto him the contents thereof at his better leiſure. Finding by this the danger in which he ſtood, he reſolved to ſtrike the firſt blow; and to that end entruſted Martialis, one of his Centurions, with the execution; by whom the Emperour was here killed, as he withdrew himſelf, Levandæ veſicæ gratiâ, as my Author hath it. So impoſſible a thing it is to avoid ones Deſtiny; ſo vain a thing for any Prince to think of deſtroying his Succeſſor: and therefore it was very well ſaid to Nero in the times of his tyranny, Omnes licet occideris, Succeſſorem tuum occidere non potes, that though he cauſed all the men of eminence to be forthwith murdered; yet his Succeſſor would ſurvive him, and eſcape the blow. But to return unto Edeſſa, in following times it was made one of the four Tetrachies of the Weſtern Chriſtians, when they firſt conquered Syria, and the Holy Land; the two firſt Governours or Tetrarches, ſucceſſively ſucceeding Godfrey of Bouillon in the Kingdom of Hieruſalem. But in the year 1142. it was again recovered by Sanguin the Turk, Father of Noradine Sultan of Damaſcus; and by the loſs thereof, no fewer than three Archbiſhopricks withdrawn from the obedience of the See of Antioch.

2 Cologenbar, another ſtrong piece adjoyning, beſieged on the taking of Edeſſa, by the ſame Sanguin, who was here ſtabbed in a drunken quarrel by one of his familiar friends; and the Fort ſaved for that time.

3 Niſibis, ſituate ſomewhat to the Eaſt of Mount Maſius, called alſo Antiochia Mygdoniæ, from the River Mygdonius, which runneth thorow it; and afterwards Conſtantia, from Conſtantius the Son of Conſtantine. A City of great note in thoſe elder times, a Roman Colony, and the Metropolis of the Province of Meſopotamia, properly and ſpecially ſo called: which being beſieged by Sapores the King of Perſia, (Conſtantius ruling in the Eaſt) and in no ſmall danger to be loſt, was gallantly defended by James the then Biſhop of it, whom Theodoret calls not only, Epiſcopum Civitatis, ſed Principem & Ducem, not the Biſhop only of the City, but the Prince and Captain of it, lib. 2. cap. 31. So little inconſiſtency was there found in thoſe early days, betwixt the Epiſcopal Function and civil buſineſs, that the biſhops were not interdicted from the Acts of war, when the neceſſities of the State did invite them to it. The City not long after moſt unworthily delivered to the ſaid Sapores, by the Emperor Jovinian; which drew along with it, in ſhort time, the loſs of the Province.

4 Ur, ſeated on the Eaſt of Niſibis, betwixt it and Tigris; and ſo placed by Ammianus who had travelled this Country. Conceived to be the Birth-place of Abraham, and called Ur of the Chaldees, Gen. 11.28. either becauſe the Chaldees were in thoſe days poſſeſſed of the place; or becauſe the name of Chaldea did comprehend alſo thoſe parts of this Country which lay towards Tigris, as was ſhewn before. For that the place from which Terah the Father of Abraham did return to Haran in Meſopotamia, was rather ſituate in this Coaſt where Ur is placed by Ammianus, then betwixt the Lakes of Chaldæa and the Perſian Gulf, where moſt Writers place it, may appear probable for the reaſons which are here ſubjoyned. 1 Becauſe it is ſaid Joſhua, Chap. 24.12. That Terah the Father of Abraham, and the Father of Nachor, dwelt on the other ſide of the Flood; that is to ſay, on the further ſide of the River Euphrates, and that too ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, as the Septuagint; ab initio, as the Vulgar Latine, in the firſt beginning. Which cannot be underſtood of any Ur, placed on or near the Lakes of Chaldæa, thoſe being on this ſide of that River. 2 Becauſe all the reſt of Abraham's ham's Ancestors from Phaleg downward, were seated in the Northern parts of Assyria, and Mesopotamia; and it were strange that Terah should be planted so far from the rest of his kindred. 3 Because from Ur in Mesopotamia, near the banks of Tigris, the way to Canaan (to which Terah did intend to go) was directly by Haran: whereas if he had dwelt (as some say he did) by the Lakes of Chaldæa, his way had been directly West thorow Arabia Deserta, and not to have travelled, with is family, so far North as Haran; and then to have fallen back as much Southward, as he had gone Northward, crossing Euphrates twice with his Herds and Cattel. 5 Haran, the place to which Terah did remove, when he went from Ur; and from which Abraham did remove, when he went towards Canaan, so named in memory of Haran the son of Terah: but called afterwards by the name of Carræ, and by that name well known to the Roman Writers for the death of Crassus that wealthy Roman. Whose estate (besides the tenth which he offered to Hercules, and three months corn distributed amongst the poor) amounted to 7100 Talents, which comes in our money, to one Million, 331250 l. But all his wealth could not preserve him from the slaughter, slain near this City with the routing of his Army also, by Herodes King of Parthia: of which briefly Lucan,

------ miserando funere Crassus
Assyrius Latio maculavit sanguine Carras.
Which may be Englished to this purpose,
By a defeat lamented Crassus stains
With Roman bloud the Assyrian Carras Plains.

Called the Assyrian Carræ by Poetical licence, because the Assyrians formerly had been Lords thereof. And no less memorable was it in the times foregoing, for a famous Temple of the Moon, (worshipped here (but in no place else) under both Sexes: some honouring it as a Female Deity, then called Dea Luna; and others in the shape and dress of a man, and called Deus Lunus. But with this fortune and success, as saith Spartianus, qui Lunam fœmineo nomine putabat nuncupandam, is mulieribus semper inserviat; that they who worshipped it in the form of a Woman, should be always subject to their Wives (I trow there were but few of that Religion) qui verò Marem deum crederet, is uxori dominetur: but he that worshipped it as a Man, should preserve the Mastery. 6 Amida, near the River Tigris, the Metropolis of Mesopotamia, when one Province only, and before it fell into the hands of the Romans; much beautified by Constantius the son of Constantine, by whom named Constantia. But that new name dying with him, the old revived: of great strength, as a frontier Town against the Persians, and by them much aimed at. Honoured of late times with the Residence of the Patriarch of the Jacobite Christians, as the chief City of this Province; for this cause also made the dwelling of the Pseudo-Patriarch of the Nestorians (or Nostranes) of the Popes erection; and the chief Seat also of the Bassa or other Officer, governing this Country for the Turks, by whom called Caramit, or Kara Amidi, that is to say, Amida the black, because it was walled with black stone. 7 Phalga, or Phaliga, at the meeting of Chaborus with Euphrates not far from Carræ, mentioned by Stephanus, and Arianus; and by Ptolomy mistakingly called Phanga: the seat or first plantation of Phaleg, one of Abraham's Ancestors. Serug, another of them giving name to 8 Sarug, about a days journey off from Haran, spoken of by some latter Writers. 9. Syngara, on the River so named, a fortified City in the time of Ammianus, by whom mentioned, lib. 20. 10 Bezabde, mentined by the same Author, by whom said to have been a very strong Fort, seated on a pretty high hill, and bending towards the banks of Tigris, before whose times it had anciently been called Phœnicha. 11 Virta, supposed to have been the work of Alexander the Great, circled with Walls, environed with Half-moons and Bulwarks, and made unaccessible; in vain besieged by Sapores the Persian King, after the taking of Bezabde. The same perhaps with the Birtha of Ptolomy. 12 Merdin, not far from which in the Monastery of Saphran, is the Patriarchal See of the Jacobite Sectaries.

The first Inhabitants of these Countries, though united from the first beginning under the same Princes and form of Government, came from several Families: all the three sons of Noah concurring as it were in this Plantation. From Nimrod, Havilah, and others of the Posterity of Chus the son of Ham, came the Babylonians; with whom Chesed the son of Nachor, of the House of Sem, intermingling families: or being the Author of their Language, or of some other signal benefit, gave to them the name of Casdim, whence came that of Chaldeans. From Assur, Arphaxad, and those of Arphaxad's Posterity, intermingled with the sons of Mash, the son of Aram, came the Mesopotamians and Assyrians. And that Japhet also and his children may put in for a part, the neighbourhood of the Medes, and Albanese, descended from him, makes it somewhat probable.

But whatsoever Parents they descended from, Nimrod, the son of Chus, made so bold with them, as to bring them under his command: planting in Chaldea, the Cities of Babylon, and Calne; in Assyria, Ninive, Rhesem, and Calach; and finally Rehoboth (if that were Birtha, as some think it was) in Mesopotamia. By these strong Forts he curbed the Native, and assured his power; being the first that altered the Paternal form of Government, and drew unto himself the Government of several Nations, not having any dependance upon one another. The foundation thus laid by him, his Successors soon raised the building to a wondrous height; advancing the Assyrian Empire, from the Mediterranean Sea, to the River Indus: and that too in a shorter time than could be imagined, but that the world was then divided into petit States, not cemented together with the ligaments of power and policy. For though there be little found of Belus the Son of Nimrod, but that he spent most part of his time in draining the Marishes, and making firm ground of those vast Fens which lay near to Babylon, which were works of peace: yet by those and the like works of peace, he so settled his affairs at home, that he gave his Son Ninus the better opportunity to look abroad: who mightily improved his Empire, and was the greatest and most powerful of all that Line, extending his dominions from the River Indus, to the Mediterranean; and from the Caspian Sea, to the Southern Ocean. His Successors we shall find in the following Catalogue of

The Assyrian Monarchs.

A. M.
1798	1	Nimrod, called by some Saturnus Babylonius the son of Chus, and Nephew of Cham, was the first who altered the Paternal Government, and usurped dominion over others; making Babylon his Imperial City. 47
1845	2	Belus, or Jupiter Babylonius, the Son of Nimrod, whose Image was worshipped by the old Idolaters under the names of Bel, and Baal. 62
1907	3	Ninus, the Son of Belus, conquered Armenia, Syria, Media, Bactria, and the Persian Provinces; and removed the Imperial Seat to Nineve, by him much beautified and enlarged. 52

1959 4 Semi-

1959 4 Semiramis, the Wife of Ninus ſubdued the Arabians; but invading the Indians alſo, ſhe was vanquiſhed and ſlain by their King Staurobates. Of this great Lady it is ſaid, that ſhe was born in Ascalon, a Town of Syria, and expoſed to the fury of wild beaſts. But being born not to die ſo ingloriouſly, ſhe was brought up by ſhepherds, and at full age preſented to the Syrian Vice-roy, who gave her in marriage to his only Son. Going with him to the wars, ſhe fell in acquaintance with Ninus, who liking her perſon and ſpirit, took her to his bed. This bred in him a greater affection towards her, ſo that he granted her at her requeſt, the command of the Empire for five days; making a Decree, that her will in all things ſhould be punctually performed: which boon being gotten, ſhe put on the Royal Robes, and (as ſome Writers do report) commanded the King to be ſlain. Having thus gotten the Empire, ſhe exceedingly enlarged it, leading with her an Army conſiſting of one hundred thouſand Chariots of war, three millions of Foot, and half a million of Horſe. A woman in whom there was nothing not to be honoured or applauded, but her inſatiable luſt: in which, if the Greek Writers ſay true (as we have no reaſon to believe it of ſo gallant a woman) ſhe was very guilty.

3126 38 Sardanapalus, by Euſebius called Tonoſcoes, the laſt King of this Race. Of which, being 38 in all, there is ſcarce any thing remaining but the very names: regiſtred in this order by Beroſus, or rather by Frier Annius a Monk of Viterbium in Tuſcany, who hath thruſt upon the world, the fancies of his own brain, under the name of that ancient Hiſtorian. The chief Kings of note after Semiramis, were,

1 Ninus, or Zameis her Son; who by his Deputies and Lieutenants ſubdued the Arians, Bactrians, and Caſpians: but was otherwiſe a man of effeminate and unkingly carriage. And therefore is conceived to be the elder Bacchus, ſo much celebrated amongſt the Grecians.

2 Belus the ſecond, who recovered that Country which afterwards was called Judæa, to the Aſſyrian Empire, from which it had revolted in the time of his Predeceſſor, (on the defeat of Amraphel, one of his Lieutenants, by the Sword of Abraham,) and ſubdued many other Nations.

3 Belochus Priſcus, the tenth King, who by ſome Writers is ſaid to be the author of Divination by the flying of Birds, called Auſpicium. For of Sooth-ſaying there were in all four kinds.

1. This Auſpicium, quaſi Aviſpicium, taken from the flight of Birds, either on the right hand, or on the left; (and hence the Proverb cometh, Avi ſiniſtrâ, good luck, becauſe in giving, the right hand is oppoſite to the receivers left) or from the number of Birds, whence Romulus had promiſed to him the Empire before his Brother, becauſe he had ſeen the double number of Vultures: or laſtly, from the nature of them, whence the ſame Romulus, ſeeing the Vultures, was (ſaith Florus) ſpei plenus urbem bellatricem fore, ita illi ſanguini & prædæ aſſuetæ aves pollicebantur.

2. Aruſpicium, ab Aras inſpiciendo, in which the Sooth-ſayers obſerved whether the Beaſt to be ſacrificed came to the Altars willingly, or not: whether the entrails were of natural colour, exulcerate, &c. or whether any part were wanting. All Hiſtories afford variety of examples in this kind; I need give no particular inſtance. A kind of Divination ſaid to be practiſed firſt by the Tuſcans, or Hetrurians; inſtructed in the knowledg thereof by one called Tages, who appearing to certain Plough-men out of a Furrow, taught them this myſtery, and ſo vaniſhed.

3. Tripudium, ſo called quaſi Terripudium, and Terripavium, from the trembling or ſhaking of the Earth, was a conjecture of future ſucceſſes, by the rebounding of crumbs caſt unto Chickens. We have an inſtance of this in the life of Tiberius Gracchus, who being ſeditiouſly buſie in promoting the Law Agraria, was fore-warned by the keeper of his Chickens to deſiſt from that enterprize; becauſe when he had thrown the crumbs to the Coop, there came out but one of the Chickens only, and the ſame without eating went back again; which was taken for a ſign of ill luck, as the greedy devouring of them had been good. But Tiberius ſlighting the advertiſement, and purſuing his deſign, was the ſame day ſlain.

4. Augurium, ſo called ab avium garritu, was a Prediction from the chirping or chattering of birds; as alſo from the ſound & voices heard they knew not whence, nor on what occaſion. In which latter kind the death of Cæſar was divined from the clattering of Armour in his houſe; and the poyſoning of Germanicus by the ſounding of a Trumpet of its own accord. In the former, an Owl ſcreeching in the Senate-houſe, was deemed ominous to Auguſtus; and a company of Crows following Sejanus to his houſe, with great noiſe and clamor, was judged to be fatal to that great favorite: and ſo it proved.

4. Manitus, the thirteenth King; who revived again the ancient Diſcipline, corrupted by the ſloathfulneſs and effeminacy of his Predeceſſors; and by the terror of his name awed the Ægyptians.

5. Aſcades, the eighteenth King, more abſolute in Syria and the Weſtern parts, than any of the Kings before him.

6. Sardana-

6 Sardanapalus, the last King of this Race, who being wondrous effeminate, and utterly unable to govern so great an Empire, gave opportunity to Arbaces, his Lieutenant in Media, to conspire against him. By whom, associated with Belochus Governour of Babylon, he was besieged in his City of Nineve; and there reduced unto such extremities, that gathering his Treasures all together, he burnt himself and them in one funeral Pile, Eo solùm facto virum imitatus, as is said by Justine. The Treasure which he is said to have burnt with him, amounted to one hundred Millions of Talents of Gold, and a thousand Millions of Tallents of Silver: which in our English Money comes to twenty thousand and five hundred Millions of pounds. A mass of Money, which as it must be long in gathering, so probably it had not seen the Sun in many years, and therefore grown rusty, might require a fire to purge it. This Sardanapalus afforded it, it may be, to end his life with that, in which he placed his Summum Bonum. It may be in spight unto his enemies, and it is possible it might be in policy, that so great a treasure not falling to the possession of his Foes, might so much the more disable them from making resistance against, or detaining the Empire from his next rightful Successors. For it is of all things most foolish, both to lose our Treasure, and with it to enrich our Adversaries. On which consideration the Spaniards fired their Indian Fleet at Gades, and the Genoese theirs at Tripolis, that their Lading might not come into the possession of their enemies, the English and Mahometans. After the death of this Sardanapalus, Arbaces took Media, & Persia, with the confining Provinces; Belochus strengthened himself in Assyria, Chaldea, and the adjacent Regions, his Kingdom being called the new Kingdom of Assyria.

The new Kings of Assyria, and Chaldea.

A. M.

3146 1 Phul Belochus, the beginner of this new Monarchy, or Race of Monarchs.

3194 2 Phul Assur, destroyed Galilee, and subdued the Kingdom of Damascus; the same who is called Tiglath Pileser in the holy Scriptures.

3217 3 Salmanassar, who destroyed Samaria, and ruined the Kingdom of Israel, and carried the ten Tribes to perpetual Captivity. This is the Nabonassar of the Chronologers.

3227 4 Sennacherib, whose blasphemous host was vanquished by Angels from Heaven, and he himself murdered by his two sons, Adramelech and Sharezer. 7

3233 5 Assarhaddon, who revenging his Fathers death on his Brothers, was deposed by his Deputy of Chaldea, and the Seat-Royal transferred from Ninive to Babylon. 10

3243 6 Merodach Baladan, Governour of Babylon, succeeded his Master in the Throne, conceived by some, to be the Mardocempades of Ptolomy; by others, to be also the same King, who by his Captain Holofernes did so plague Judæa.

3283 7 Ben Merodach, the Son of Merodach Baladan. 21

3304 8 Nabopullassar, who vanquished Pharaoh Necho King of Ægypt. 25

3339 9 Nabucchadonosor the great, by some called the Hercules of the East, who conquered Ægypt in the life of his Father; with whom he reigned for a time, and mightily enlarged the City of Babylon. He joyned also with Astyages King of Medes, in subverting the proud City of Ninive; and in the eighteenth year of his Reign destroyed Hierusalem, and carried the people captive unto Babylon. But in the last seven years of his Reign he was so distracted, that he lived not much unlike the Beasts of the field; according to the Word of God spoken by Daniel, Chap. 4. during which time his son Evilmerodach, his daughter Nicocris, with Nigliſſat her husband, and Laborasoradach their son, governed his Empire as Protectors; and therefore are by some reckon'd as Kings. Finally, Nebuchadnezzar having recovered his senses, was again restored unto the Throne; and died, when he had reigned in all 44 years.

3383 10 Evilmerodach, the son Nebuchadnezzar, slain by Astyages, King of the Medes. 26

3409 11 Balthassar, son of Evilmerodach (the Nabonidus of Berosus) a Prince of a dissolute and cruel nature, was in the latter end of his reign assailed by Cyaxares the son of Astyages (whom the Scriptures call Darius Medus) and by Cyrus the Persian: by whom he was slain in the seventeenth year of his reign; and the Empire of the Babylonians was transferred to the Medes and Persians.

A. M. 3426.

That this was the end of Belthassar, is the common opinion. But Josephus Scaliger in his learned and industrious work, De emendatione temporum, maketh him to be slain in a tumult by his own people: who elected into the Empire a Nobleman of the Medes, called in prophane stories, Nabonidus; in divine, Darius Medus, who after a 17 years reign was slain by Cyrus King of the Persians. But by the leave of so worthy a man, this cannot hold good. For the Lord by his Prophet Jeremy, had pronounced (Chap. 27.) That all Nations should serve Nebuchadnezzar, and his son, and his sons son; whereas Nabonidus was a Prince of strange bloud, and so the Nations were not to serve him: and in Balthassar, the sons son of Nebuchadnezzar, was this word accomplished. But let us examine his argument, and withal the scoffs, which very prodigally he bestoweth on such as maintain the contrary opinion: Natio Chronologorum, the whole rout of Chronologers; boni & diligentes viri, good simple meaning men; & addunt alia nihil veriora, are his first Complements. Ut igitur, quod Chronologorum est, omnes resipiscant, &c. therefore that they may repent their ever being Chronologers, he bringeth in Berosus, cited by Josephus, in his first Book against Appion. But Berosus there maketh Nabonidus (to whom he saith the Kingdom of Balthassar was by the people delivered) to be a Babylonian, and not as Scaliger would have him say, a Nobleman of the Medes; neither can the authority of Berosus countervail that of Daniel, who in Chap. 6. telleth Balthassar, that his Kingdom should be divided among the Medes and Persians. His second argument is drawn from the nature of the word, ἀναδέξατο ὁ Δαρεῖος ὁ Μῆδος ἀναδέξατο τὴν ἀρχὴν, as it is in the same Chapter, and Darius the Mede took the Empire, by which word took is implied (saith he) not a forcible invasion, but a willing acceptance of the Empire offered. To this we answer that Darius indeed took the Empire quietly and willingly, being offered unto him in Cyrus, and his Army consisting of Medes and Persians, who according to the Word of God, had taken it from Balthassar, Darius being then absent. Quid si probavero (saith he) eum cognominatum fuisse Medum? He hath yet one trick more than all these; and Medus must not be the national name, name, but the ſirname of Darius, which he proveth out of a fragment of Megaſthenes, cited by Euſebius, in his work De Præparatione Evangelica, where he is called Μήδης (συναίτιος ἔτει Μήδης) &c. an argument of all others the moſt ſlight and trivial. For beſides that Μήδης may there as well be the name of his Nation, as of his Family; and beſides that, it thwarteth the places of Jeremy and Daniel, already quoted; it is Diametrally oppoſite to another place of the ſame Daniel, in his ninth Chapter; where he is called Darius, of the ſeed of the Medes. Of this Darius more anon when we come into Media. As for Nabonidus, queſtionleſs he was the ſame with Balthaſſar. For beſides that, Joſephus, and Beroſus, attribute to either of them the reign of 17 years, the ſame Joſephus (who might beſt know the truth in this caſe) telleth us that Balthaſſar was by the Babylonians called Naboandel, a name not ſo great a ſtranger to Nabonidus, as Scaliger's Darius, or Herodotus his Labinitus. But in this we muſt pardon Joſeph. Scorn and contradiction was a part of his eſſence. For had he not been in ſome things ſingular, in all, peremptory, he had neither been a Scaliger, nor the ſon of Julius.

But leaving Joſeph to the ſingularity of his own conceits, we find nothing done by the Aſſyrians or Chaldeans after this ſubjection, which might denote them to have been once the Lords of ſo great an Empire. Succeſſively inſlaved by the Medes, Perſians, and Macedonians; then by the Perſians again, afterwards by the Saracens, next by the Turks, a third time by the Perſians, once again by the Turks of the Ottoman Family, unto whom now ſubject: never endeavouring to aſſert in the way of war, or oppoſition, either their ancient reputation, or their native liberties; but ſuffering themſelves to be won, loſt, fought for, and again recovered by their quarrelſom Maſters, as if they had not title to their own Country, but were born to follow the fortunes of all pretenders. The reaſon of which is principally to be aſcribed to the form of Government uſed among the Perſians, which was ſo Deſpotical and abſolute, if not tyrannical, that they held all the people conquered by them in the nature of ſlaves; not ſuffering any to grow great in a ſtate of inheritance, or to enjoy any place of power and profit under them in the conquered Provinces, but at the pleaſure of the Prince; as it is now uſed amongſt the Turks of the Ottoman Empire. By means whereof, the great men having no alliances amongſt themſelves, and as few dependants amongſt the people, were never able to make head againſt the Conquerour; but in the fall of the preſent Prince fell together with him: it being a good rule of Machiavel, that where the ancient Nobility is in good regard, linked in alliances with themſelves, and well reſpected by the common and inferiour people; there it is difficult for the Invader, though a Conquerour, to win a Country, and harder to keep it being conquered. But on the other ſide, where the Nobility is quite worn out, and the Prince doth hold his Subjects in the nature of ſlaves, there both the Conqueſt will be eaſie, and ſoon aſſured. For to what purpoſe ſhould the Subjects reſiſt the Conquerour, or ſtand any longer to their King, than he ſtands to himſelf, when they are ſure the Conquerour can lay upon them no heavier burdens, than they were accuſtomed to before, and have withal a flatering hope, that their new Maſters may be gentler to them, than their former were? It fares no otherwiſe with them than with Eſops Aß, which refuſed to take the opportunity of an eſcape from the hands of the enemy, by which he was taken, becauſe he knew it was not poſſible they ſhould lay more load upon his back, than his old Maſter made him bear. To which condition the Chaldeans and Aſſyrians being brought by the Perſians, and never accuſtomed to the taſte of a better fortune, have followed the ſame ſucceſſes as the Perſians did, falling together with them from one hand to another; the particular accompt of whoſe eſtate we ſhall find in Perſia, taking this only for the cloſe, that when Solyman, the Magnificent had diſcomfited Tamas King of Perſia, and taken the great City of Bagdat, Caramit, Merdin, and the reſt both in Aſſyria, Chaldea, and Meſopotamia, ſubmitted to him without any reſiſtance, and received his Garriſons. And for a confirmation of his Eſtate, he received at the hand of the Caliph of Babylon (who by an old Prerogative had the nomination or confirmation, at the leaſt, of the Kings of Aſſyria, and the Sultans of Ægypt) the Royal Ornaments and Enſigns, Anno 1534. incorporating by that means thoſe Regions into his Eſtates, and making them Provinces of his Empire; in which he left a Beglerbeg at Bagdat to command in Chief, and divers Sanziacks in their ſeveral and reſpective Provinces. And though the Perſian Kings have ſince taken, and are ſtill poſſeſſed of ſome places of importance in them; yet I account them in regard of the ſaid inveſtiture, and the long poſſeſſion following on it, for Provinces of the Turkiſh Empire: as I do Media of the Perſian, though Tauris and ſome other pieces of it be poſſeſſed by the Turks.

MOUNT TAURUS.

MOUNT-TAURUS is a conſtant and continual ridge of hills, which extend from the Mediterranean to the Indian Seas; running thorow the whole length of Aſia from weſt to Eaſt, and dividing it, as the Æquator doth the Globe, into North and South. It was called Taurus from the word Tur or Taur, which in the Syriac and Chaldean ſignifieth a Mountain; the common name of all high Mountains being made peculiar unto this, by reaſon of its greatneſs and continued length; yet ſo, that it had other names alſo in ſome parts thereof, according to the Regions and Nations by which it paſſed, and on which it bordered. The courſe whereof is thus ſet down by Sir Walter Raleigh: premiſing only, that it beginneth in the Province of Lycia, a Region of Aſia Minor, near the Mediterranean. "Theſe Mountains (ſaith he) which "ſunder Cilicia from the reſt of Aſia the leſs, on the "North thereof are called Taurus; and where they part "it from Comagena a Province of Syria, they are called "Amanus. On the Eaſt ſide of the River Euphrates "(which forceth it ſelf a way thorow it) it ſometimes re-"ſumeth the name of Taurus, as in Ptolomies three firſt "Tables of Aſia, and ſometimes taketh the name of Ni-"phathes, as in the fourth: retaining that uncertain ap-"pellation, ſo long as they bound Armenia from Meſo-"potamia. After the River Tigris hath alſo cut them "aſunder, they continue the name of Niphathes altoge-"ther, until they ſeparate Aſſyria and Media, but then "they call themſelves Coatras: although between the up-"per and lower Media, they appear not alwaies, but are "ſeen diſcontinued, and broke in pieces: ſuch parts of "it as are found in the middle of that Country, being "called Orantes; thoſe which lie more towards the Eaſt "being named Coronus, out of the Southern parts where-"of iſſueth the River of Bagradus, which divideth the an-"cient Perſia from Caramania. Continuing further Eaſt-"ward by the name of Coronus, they give unto the Par-"thians and Hyrcanians, their proper Countries; and "afterwards change themſelves into the Mountains of "Seriphi, out of which riſeth the River Maurgus. And "now beginning to draw towards the end of their courſe, "they firſt make themſelves the South border of Bactria, "and are then known by the name of Parapamiſus; and "after take unto themſelves the name of Caucaſus, where "the famous Rivers Indus, Hydaſpis, and Zaræbrus, have "their firſt beginnings. In this point do they hold their "heads exceeding high, to equal the Mountains of "Imaus; whom they encounter within the 35, 36, and "37 Degrees of Latitude, and the 140 Degree of Lon-"gitude: known by no other name than this, till final-"ly they terminate their courſe in the Indian Seas. So far, and to this purpoſe, that noble Gentleman. It may be added hereunto, that though the ancient Writers could trace the courſe of this Mountain, no further than the meeting of it with Imaus; yet later obſervations follow it to the wall of China: the parts beyond Caucaſus being now known by the names of Delanguer, and Naugrocot. But this is to be underſtood only of the main body of theſe Mountains, which hold on in an even courſe from Weſt to Eaſt; not of thoſe ſpurs and branches of it, which ſhoot either to the North, or South: ſuch as are the Anti-Taurus in ſome parts of the leſſer Aſia; the Gordiæan hills, and the Montes Moſchici, with thoſe which Pliny calleth Pariedri, others Pariardri, in Armenia Major; and that of Caborus, which ſheweth it ſelf on the North-eaſt of Aſſyria, with divers others.

In ſuch a continual courſe of Mountains it muſt needs be that Many fierce Nations did inhabit in former times, not eaſily ſubdued, nor ſo ſoon reduced unto civility, as ſuch who were poſſeſſed of places leſs defenſible, and fitter for commerce and traffick with the reſt of mankind. And they continued in theſe late times, the laſt which were brought under by the Turk and Perſians, the mightieſt Monarchs of thoſe parts; though bordering on, or totally environed with their dominions. Two Kingdoms they afforded of long continuance: one towards the Weſt, where it cloſeth with the Mountains of Anti-Taurus, and divideth Syria Comagena from Armenia Major; the other towards the Eaſt, ſeparating Media from Hyrcania. For want of other names to deſcribe them by, we will call the firſt the Kingdom of Aladeules, and the laſt the Kingdom of Bahaman; according to the names of the two laſt Kings.

1 The Kingdom of ALADEULES contained that part of this Mountainous tract, which beginning in or about Anti-Taurus, extended it ſelf as far towards the Eaſt, as to the banks of the River Tigris, where they part Meſopotamia from Armenia Major. Inhabited by a people naturally very fierce and warlike, more famous for nothing then their want of all things; who as men dwelling in a rough and barren Country, could little profit themſelves by husbandry: and therefore gave themſelves to grazing, breeding on their paſtures ſome ſtore of horſe and Camels, which they ſold to others, but eſpecially maintaining themſelves and their families by hunting and ſtealing. Suppoſed to come originally from the Cappadocians, and Armenians of the leſſer Aſia, which by long and continual wars in the former Ages, were forced to forſake their dwellings, and for ſafety of their lives to fly to theſe unpeopled and deſolate Mountains. Where ſearching every hill and dale, and following the opportunity of Springs and Rivers, but chiefly the mildeſt Temperature of the Air, and moſt chearful aſpect of the Sun, they built in many places poor Villages; and afterwards ſome better Towns. The principal of which is named Maras, ſo called as it is conceived from the River Marſias, which riſing out of the Mountain Cœlen, passeth by the same, and not far off falleth into the River Euphrates.

When it was made a Kingdom first, it is hard to say, the Kings hereof being mean and inconsiderable in the eye of the world, not worth the conquering; and wanting power to conquer others and enlarge their territories: nor indeed worthy any King but one of their own, who could content himself with reigning over Rocks and Mountains. The last was Aladeules, so much spoken of in the Turkish Histories, and by them called the Mountain King. Conceived by some Writers to have been the Author of such a Paradise, as we shall find described when we come to Drangiana, a Province of Persia; and by that means grown formidable to his neighbouring Princes. But that which made him most really and truly known, in the stories of the former times, was the stout opposition which he made against the Turks, in their wars with Persia. He had before given no small check to the proceedings of Bajazet, the second, in his conquest of the Caramanian Kingdom; and no less troubled Selimus the Son of Bajazet, in his Persian wars, impeaching what he could the greatness of the Ottoman Family. Fought with by Selimus, he made good his ground with a great deal of courage, till betrayed by Alis Beg, General of his horse; and seeing his Army terrified by the shot of the Turks, he was fain to flie. But being at last taken, and put to death by the command of Selimus, his Kingdom was converted to a Turkish Province, Anno 1515. and so continueth to this day.

2 The Kingdom of BAHAMAN was situate more towards the East, amongst the Mountains which divide Media from Hyrcania, as before was said. The Mountains in those parts so high, that Travellers at the end of a two daies journey, may discern the middle Region of the Air to be beneath them: exceeding troublesom to ascend, about 50 miles in height when once got to the top; but more dangerous by reason of the Rocks and Precipices, in the going down: full of inhospitable streights, and so cold and barren, that were not Sovereignty a temptation above all resistance, no man would take upon him the command of so poor a Kingdom. And yet in this extremity of height and cold, there is great quantity of Sulphur, which makes it sparkle in the night, like the hill Vesuvius, in Italy, by means whereof here are many Hot-Bathes, three of them walled about, two open; to which resort unsound and decrepit people, in very great multitudes. The chief Town of it Larry-Joon, in the ordinary Road or Pass betwixt Omael, the last Town of Hyrcania, and Damoan the first of Media: But the Kings Seat was in a Village called Reyna, where he had a Castle so built upon the best advantages of Art and Nature, that it seemed invincible: adorned above, with gardens, flowers, and most pleasant fruits; and furnished beneath with a Rivulet of purest water, which pleasantly passing thorow the Castle, fell into the Vallies. A Castle of so large a circuit, that besides the Kings Family or Court, it was able to admit a garrison of 10000 men.

The last King hereof was the foresaid Bahaman, derived from a long descent of Royal Ancestors, comparing for antiquity with the Persian Sophies: who though ill-neighboured on both sides, by the Tartarian on the one, and the Kings of Persia on the other; yet had they with great fortune, policy, and valour, maintained their Royalties against all pretenders. But Abas the late Persian Sophy, having either conquered or reduced Hyrcania, picked a quarrel with Bahaman; pretending that by the opportunity of his situation he might rob his Carwans, hinder his progress towards the Hyrcanian Sea, and turn into other Channels all the Streams or Rivers, which rising from Mount Taurus watered and enriched his Persian Territories. And though Bahaman never had attempted any of the things objected; yet it was cause enough of quarrel that he might so do: and therefore is besieged in his Castle of Reyna, with an Army of 30000 men. Finding no possibility to prevail by force, the General of the Persians proceeds by treachery, invites the old King into his Camp under colour of Parley, and by this means drew his two Sons out of the Castle to the Parley also. Whom having got into his power, he first caused their heads to be cut off; and after making use of their Seals and Signets, obtains a surrender of the place: and with it the possession of this mountainous Kingdom, Anno 1601. or thereabouts, united ever since to the Crown of Persia.

OF TURCOMANIA.

TURCOMANIA is bounded on the East, with Media, and the Caspian Sea; on the West, with the Euxine Sea, Cappadocia, and Armenia Minor; on the North, with Tartary; and on the South, with Mesopotamia, and Assyria. So called from the Turcomans or Turks; who from hence made their first expedition for the conquest of Persia, and after spread themselves over all those parts of Europe, Asia, and Africk, now in their possession. A Country which consisteth of four several Provinces, each Province having to its self its particular story; and therefore we must look upon it, as it is now divided into those four parts, that is to say, 1 Armenia Major, or Turcomania properly and specially so called; 2 Colchis, now called Mengrelia; 3 Iberia, now named Georgia; and 4 Albania, which they now term Zuiria.

1 ARMENIA MAJOR.

ARMENIA MAJOR is bounded on the East, with Media, and some part of the Caspian Sea; on the West, with the River Euphrates, which parteth it from Armenia Minor, in the lesser Asia; on the North, with Colchis, or Mengrelia; and on the South, with Mesopotamia, and some part of Assyria.

It was called Armenia, as some say, quasi Aram-Mini, or the Minni of Syria: but as others say, quasi Har-mini, that is to say, Mons Mini, or Montana Miniadis: the Mini, or Minni, being a Region of this tract, mentioned by Jeremy the Prophet, Chap. 51. 27. and by him placed betwixt Ararat, and Askenaz, which shew the situation of it to be hereabouts. Major was added to it for distinction sake, to difference it from Armenia Minor: and now it is called Turcomania, as the first seat in which the Turcomans or Turks did fix themselves, after their eruption out of Scythia.

The Country in the most part overspread with hills, branches of those huge mountains of Taurus, and Anti-Taurus; but intermixt with fertile and delightful Vallies, liberally furnished with Cattel, and good store of fruits, though much subject to deep snows, which do much annoy it. The Riches of it not to be better estimated than by the frankness of Tigranes, once King hereof. Who being fined by Pompey at 6000 Talents, not only very readily laid down that sum; but added of his own accord to every Roman Souldier 50 Drachmas of Silver, 1000 Drachmas to each Captain, and to every Colonel a Talent. For though Tigranes had added some part of Media, and the whole Kingdom of Syria, unto his Estate: yet those being new Acquests, and not fully settled, were not much likely, for the present, to enrich his Coffers: new conquered Provinces being for the most part more chargeable than beneficial to the Victor.

The people are generally great bodied, of comely personage, and patient of all kind of labour; good Archers, when put to it, But careless of honour got by war; merry, desirous to be at ease, and apt to be soothed. The women tall, but homely, of a manly look, most of them skilful at their Bow, or some other weapon. Their Families for the most part great, the Father, and all his Posterity to the third and fourth generation, living under a roof; after whose death the eldest, whether Son or Brother hath the chiefest Rule. In diet and cloathing all alike; and in most places they are said to be very industrious; painful in tillage, and well seen in Manufactures, especially rich Tapestries, Grograins, and watered Chamlets: with which they traffick into most Cities of the Turks and other Mahometans; priviledged, as they say, by a Charter under Mahomet's own hand, above other Christians, and upon that occasion more dispersed in the Eastern Countries than any Nation in the world, the Jews excepted.

They have a Language of their own, which they call the Armenian, not only used amongst them in common talk, but in sacred offices: the Scriptures being translated into that language also; and that, as the people do affirm, by the hand of St. Chrysostom, at such time as (on the solicitation of the Empress Eudoxia, his most eager enemy) he was confined to the lesser Armenia, by the Emperour Arcadius: to whom also they ascribe the invention of the Armenian Characters, or Letters, still in use amongst them.

They received the Christian Faith by the preaching of St. Bartholomew, and were anciently of the jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople, as a Province of the Pontick Diocese; which together with the Asian Diocese, and that of Thrace, were by the Council of Chalcedon laid unto that Patriarchat. But falling into the opinions of Eutyches, touching one nature only in CHRIST our Saviour, they withdrew themselves long since, from the communion of the Greeks, whom they hold in greater detestation than all other Christians; and chose two Patriarchs of their own, of whom more anon. Other opinions which they hold besides those of Eutyches, (which yet they labour to make capable of an Orthodox sense;) and those wherein they differ from the Church of Rome, as 1 Denying Purgatory, and prayers for the dead. 2 Admitting none to be made Priests, except those that be married. 3 Denying the body of Christ to be really under the species of bread and wine. And 4 Rebaptizing such as come to their Communion from the Latine Churches, Are these that follow, in which they differ also from most Churches else, viz. 1 In receiving Infants to the Lord's Table, immediately after Baptism. 2 In abstaining from unclean beasts. 3 In fasting on Christmas day. And 4 In holding their Children over the fire, as a necessary circumstance in Baptism; because John the Baptist told the people which followed him, that CHRIST would baptize them with the Holy Ghost, and with fire; in which place he meaneth not material fire, but the lively purgation of the Holy Ghost, according to the nature of fire. The Church of this Sect is governed by two Patriarchs; whereof the one hath under his jurisdiction this Turcomania, comprehending 150000 Families, besides very many Monasteries: and the other hath under him the two Provinces of Armenia the Lesser, and Cilicia, comprehending 20000 Families, or thereabouts: The first residing anciently in Sebastia, the Metropolis of the greater Armenia; the second originally at Melitene, the Metropolis of Armenia Minor; but of late at Sis, a small City, not far from Tarsus in Cilicia. Both honoured with the title of Catholiques, and having under them to the number of 30 Bishops.

Chief Rivers of this Country, 1 Araxes, which rising out of Mount Abos, an Armenian Mountain, first runneth Eastward as far as Media, and then bendeth it self towards the North: and after a long course is divided into two Branches; whereof the one falleth into the Caspian Sea, the other into, 2 Cyrus, another great River of this Country. The fountain of this last in Mount Caucasus in the furthest North of Turcomania; and falling into a Lake, there meeteth with 3 Cambyses, another great River of these parts; and so together hasten to the Caspian also. 4 Euphrates, by the Turks called Frat, by the Hebrews, Perah, famous in Scripture for its watering the Garden of Eden, hath its fountain in the hills which they call Niphates, as is said by Strabo. A River of great length and swiftness. For having forced it self a passage through the Mountains of Taurus, it runeth in the West of Mesopotamia, with a stream so violent, that they who go by water from Bir to Birrah, a Town on the North-west of Mesopotamia, to the City of Bagdat, are fain to come back again by land; selling those boats for eight Crowns which they bought for 50. At Apamia, a City of Chaldea it is joyned with Tigris, with which the greatest branch of it passeth thorow the City of Babylon, and so into the Persian Gulf: the rest of it being cut into many Channels, for fear it should overflow and drown the Country, are quite lost in the Lakes of Chaldea. 5 Tigris, a swifter stream than that, whence it had the name; the word in the Median Tongue signifying an Arrow. A River of so strong a course, that it passeth thorow the Lake Thonitis, without mixture of Waters, and affordeth the Armenians an easie passage to Bagdat: who on a few Rafts borne up with Goat-skins blown full of wind, and boards laid upon them, make their voyage thither. It is called Hiddekel in the Scripture, one of the four Rivers which watered the Garden of Paradise; situate in an Island made by the embracement of this River and Euphrates, with their several Branches. Rising originally out of the Lake of Thelpitis, in Armenia Major, where now we are. It is presently almost swallowed by the gaping Earth; and passing under the huge bulk of Taurus, breaketh forth again; and compassing the East parts of Mesopotamia, which it divides from Assyria, meets with Euphrates, as before. Of which its first and second birth, thus the Poet Lucan,

At Tigrin subitò tellus absorbet hiatu,
Occultoque tegit cursus; rursusque renatum
Fonte novo flumen pelagi non abnegat undas.

That is to say,

Tigris, soon swallowed by the thirsty earth,
Finds there a burial where it had its birth:
But breaking out at a new spring, vouchsafes
With the salt Seas to mix its sweeter waves.

Mountains of most note, are, 1 Abos, glorying in the fountains of the great River Araxes. 2 Periardes, or Periarges, as Ptolomy, Pariedri, as Pliny calleth it, a branch or spur of the great Mountain Taurus. 3 Udacespes, another branch of that great Mountain. 4 Some part of Anti-Taurus. 5 The Mountains called Montes Moschici, more towards the North, abutting upon Cappadocia, and the Euxine Sea: which name they took from Mesech, or Mosoch the Son of Japhet, preserving the remembrance of his planting there. 6 Niphates, one of the spurs of Taurus, out of which the famous River Euphrates is said to issue. 7 The Gordiæan Mountains, conceived by many learned men to be the Mountains of Ararat, on one of the tops whereof called Baris, the Ark of Noah is most generally affirmed to rest. Affirmed by many ancient Writers of the Christian Church, and countenanced not only by Josephus and some others of the Elder Historians; but by the Septuagint themselves: who in the 37 Chap. of Isa. v. 38. and 2 Kings 19. 37. have rendred Ararat by Armenia. And be it so, let Ararat be Armenia, and consequently the Mountains of Ararat be Armenian Mountains: yet doth it not follow hereupon, that the Ark rested on the Gordiæan Mountains, or any other of this Country, as they would conclude. We may infer as Logically, for ought I can see, that the Garden of Eden must be looked for in Armenia also; because situate in the circlings of Euphrates, and Tigris, two Armenian Rivers. Those Rivers have indeed their fountains in Armenia Major, but compass not the Garden of Eden, till after a long course they encounter each other in the spacious Plains of Babylonia. And so those mountains, though they have the name of the Mountains of Ararat or Armenia, because there first grown to a discernable and super-eminent height above all the mountains of those parts, became not the resting place of the Ark, till after a further course towards the East, they were grown to their fullest height; which is in those parts of it betwixt Scythia and Persia, which are called Mount Caucasus: not that Mount Caucasus which lieth on the North of Colchis, and Iberia, out of which the River Cyrus is said to rise; but that which lieth on the East-side of the Caspian Sea, where Mount Taurus and Imaus do cross each other. But of this elsewhere.

It was divided heretofore into many Provinces, the principal whereof had (I grant) its name from the Gordiæan Mountains, called in some Writers, Cordiæi; from whence the Province had the name of Gordiena, but most commonly called Corduene, bordering on Assyria. The Kingdom once of Zarbienus, who siding with Lucullus against Tigranes King of Armenia, was by Tigranes murdered with his Wife and Children; but honoured by Lucullus with a stately and magnificent funeral. 2 The second Province of note is called Cotacene, near the Montes Moschici. 3 Tosarene bordering on the River Cyrus. 4 Colthene on the banks of Araxes. 5 Sophene, near the turnings of the River Euphrates; mistook by some industrious and knowing men, to be the Syria Soba of the Holy Scriptures. 6 Basisine, on the Northwest, near the Springs of that River. But what Cities did belong to each, I find no where specified.

Those of most consequence in the whole, 1 Artaxata, by Florus called Caput Gentis: of most esteem in those times, and the Seat-royal of the Kings of Armenia from its first foundation. Built by Artaxes, one of the Progenitors of Tigranes, at the perswasion of Annibal, whilest he abode in this Country: who liking the situation of the place, drew for it the model of a strong and gallant City, according to which Plat-form it was presently built. Taken and sacked by the Romans, as a daughter of Carthage, by Corbulo in the time of Nero, it never could revive again to its former splendour. In the middle ages called Esechia, and at this day Coy, or Coims if not built rather out of the ruins of it. A City memorable for two great battels near unto it; the first between Lucullus on the one side, against Mithridates and Tigranes on the other; wherein the Romans were Victors: the second between Selimus Emperour of the Turks, and Hysmael the Persian Sophy; wherein the Turks were Conquerours, Anno 1514. A Victory which he bought with the loss of 30000 of his best men, and such a terrour to the whole Army, that the Turks to this day call it the only day of doom. The fields adjoyning to the Town wherein this cruel battel was fought, called the Chalderan fields. 2 Sebastia, now Suassia, seated on Euphrates, where it meeteth with the Mountain Taurus; the residence of the Patriarch of the Armenians, at their first separation from the See of Constantinople; the Metropolis at that time of all Armenia: so named in honour of Augustus, whom the Greeks call Sebastos. But of late divested of that dignity, the Patriarchal See, by reason of the fierce wars raging in this Country, betwixt the Persians and the Turks, being removed to the Monastery of Eomeazin, near the City of Ervan in Persia; in the dominions of which King these Armenian Christians live in great abundance, by the name of Jelphelins. 3 Tigranocerta, beautified and enlarged, if not first founded, by Tigranes above mentioned; by whom replenished with people of several Nations, whose Countries he had taken from them and enriched in a manner with the wealth of all his Kingdom: there being no Armenian, either Prince or Peasant, who sent not somewhat towards the adorning of it. But taken by Lucullus without great resistance, those several Nations not agreeing amongst themselves: and therein besides other Treasure, no less than 8000 Talents in ready money. The City situate near a River, which Tacitus calleth Nicephorius. 4 Arsamosata, by Pliny called Arsinote, on the banks of Euphrates. 5 Cholna, so called in memory of Hul, or Chul the Son of Aram, one of the first Planters of this Country. 6 Baraza, by the Emperour Leo much enlarged and beautified; dignified with the new name of Leontopolis, and for a while made the Metropolis of the Province. 7 Arsamata, by Strabo called Arxata, 8 Theodosiopolis, built on the foundation of some of the more ancient Cities, by the Emperour Theodosius, and of him thus named. 9 Colonia, the strongest and most defensible City hereof, when possessed by the Romans. 10 Clamassum, a strong Town on the banks of Euphrates, taken by Selimus the first in his way towards Persia, and therewith Iviry and Selsin of the rest of this Country, since wholly conquered by his Successors. 12 Chars, not far from the same River also, supposed to be the Chorsa of Ptolomy, of which not long since the ruins only; but in three weeks so repaired and fortified by the Turks, Anno 1579. that it is thought to be impregnable. 13 Thespia, giving name of old to the Lake Thespitis, and to the Region called Thespies; but now not in being. 14 Armiathe, now of greatest name, and esteemed the Metropolis of this Country: situate in that part of the Lake of Vastan (the Martiana palus of the ancient Writers) which lieth next to this Country: and by that well fortified: the only City of Armenia possessed by the Persians, who are the Lords of all that Lake, of which more hereafter. 15 Van, both for natural situation, and the works of Art, accompted by the Turks for their strongest Bulwark in these parts against the Persians; and for that cause well garrisoned, and as well munitioned.

This Country was first planted by Hul or Chul the Son of Aram, and by Mesech one of the Sons of Japhet, who with their Families or Colonies possessed the same: the one leaving the remainder of his name, in the Montes Moschici; the other in the Town called Cholna, and the Region called Colchene by Ptolomy, Cholobatene by Stephanus. Advanced to the honour of a Kingdom as soon as any, that of Babel excepted: Ninus the third from Nimrod finding Barzanes King hereof, whom he forced to acknowledge his superiority, and to aid him in his wars against Zoroaster the King of Bactria. Kings of most note in times succeeding, (for we have no constant Catalogue of them) were 1 Araxes, who being warred on by the Persians, was promised victory by the Oracle, on the sacrifice of his two fair Daughters. Willing to satisfie the Gods, and yet spare his Children, he sacrificed two of the daughters of Miesalcus, a Nobleman of this Country: by whom in revenge hereof his own daughters were slain, and himself so solely followed, that swimming the River then called Helmus, he was therein drowned, and thereby gave unto that River the name of Araxes. 2 Artaxa, the founder of the great City Artaxata; spoken of before. 3 Tigranes, the most mighty King that ever reigned in Armenia, to which he added by his prowess, Galatia, and a great part of Cilicia, in Asia Minor, the whole Countries of Media, Syria, and Phœnicia: But siding with Mithridates, whose daughter he had married, against the Romans, he was by Lucullus overthrown in two great battels, and outed of the greatest part of his dominions. Hearing that Pompey had succeeded Lucullus in command of the Army, and trusting more unto his goodness than a wise man would, he put himself into his power: by whom condemned in a great sum of money for the charge of the War, and stripped of all the rest of his Estates, he was suffered to enjoy Armenia Major, Syria being made a Province, Sophene given to Ariobarzanes King of Cappadocia, Media left unto it self, and the lesser Armenia conferred on one of his Sons, who being found guilty of some practice with the King of Parthia, was carried prisoner unto Rome, and his Country brought into the form of a Province. 4 Artavasdes, circumvented by Marc Antony, who led him Prisoner to Rome, but (catenis, ne quid honori ejus decesset, aureis, as the Historian tells us of him) it was in Chains of Gold for his great honour; giving Armenia to one of the Sons of Cleopatra. And though, 5 Artaxias recovered his Fathers Kingdom, yet he and his Successors held it but as Vassals of the Roman Empire: the Senate after that confirming, and sometimes nominating the Armenian Kings. Continuing in this Estate till the time of Trajan, it was by him reduced to the form of a Province (made after that a part of the Pontick Diocese) who adding Mesopotamia also unto his Dominions, made Tigris the Eastern border of his Empire, which Augustus thought fit to limit with the banks of Euphrates. But long it held not in that form, being governed by its own Kings, as it was before Trajan's time, in the reign of Constantius, Julian, and the Emperours following; whom they acknowledged and revered as their Lords in chief, till the time of Justinian the second (he began his Empire, Anno 687.) when subdued by the Saracens. Recovered by that Emperour, but soon lost again, it continued subject to the Saracens till the breaking in of the Turks, Anno 844. of whom more anon. The greatest part of the Turks emptying themselves into Persia, and other Countries which they took from the Eastern Emperours; the Christians of Armenia began to take heart again, and to have Kings of their own, by whom governed, till again subdued by Occadan, or Heccata the Son of Cingis, the first Cham of the Tartars. Nor did the Tartars make so absolute a conquest of it, as to extinguish either Christianity, or the race of the Kings, Haithon, sirnamed Armenius, reigning after this, and going in person to Mongo, the great Cham of Tartary, 1257. And in our own Chronicles, in the Reign of King Richard the Second, we find mention of one Leon an Armenian King, who came hither to sue for aid against the Turks; by whom then

then dispossessed of his Estates. By Ussan-Cassanes, one of the Princes of this Country, (of whom more hereafter) who had the fortune to obtain the Crown of Persia, Anno 1472. it was made a Province of that Kingdom: and so continued till the year 1515. when conquered by Selimus the first, and by him made a part of the Turkish Empire; more fully settled and assured in the Reign of Amurath the third, who by causing many Forts and Garrisons to be planted in it, made the conquest absolute.

The Arms of this Kingdom, when a Kingdom, governed by Princes of its own of the Christian faith, were Gules, three heads of a Buck Argent, Crowned Or.

2. COLCHIS.

COLCHIS is bounded on the East, with Iberia; on the West, with the Euxine Sea, and part of the Tartars Precopenses; on the North, with Tartary, from which parted by those vast hills, which the Romans called Caucasi; and on the South, with Armenia Major, from which separated by the Montes Moschici.

The reason of the name I find not. Nor can yield unto Bochartus, who fetcheth the original of the name and Nation, from Casluhim, one of the Sons of Mizraim, the Son of Cham, the Etymology of the name being too much wrested, and Ægypt too far off to give a being to Colchis in those early daies; though possibly in times succeeding, the Ægyptians hearing by the Greeks, of the wealth of the Country, might send Colonies of their people thither, as to other places. It is now called Mengrelia.

The Country said to be very fruitful, if the care of the husbandman were not wanting. Their Vines they plant at the feet of great trees, which twining about the arms thereof lade them full of Grapes: with which, and other fruits rising from the Earth, they used of late times to furnish the Store-houses of their Kings, for want of ready mony to fill his Coffers, their tributes being paid in such commodities. Formerly of great fame for abundance of Gold, found in the sands of their Rivers issuing from the Caucasian Mountains. The thing affirmed by Appianus in his Mithridatica; χρυσοφορῶν ἢ ὄν τῷ Καυκάσῳ πολλαὶ μὲν ἄλλαι ἀῤῥυγαὶ ἀφορμαὶ, Many of their springs, saith he, which come out of Caucasus, carry veins of Gold. The like saith Strabo also, and some other Antients. With which, and out of their rich Mines both of Gold and Silver, the Kings hereof were so well furnished with those Metals, that the furniture of their Chambers were all of Gold, and the beams of their Lodgings were made of Silver. But now so destitute of both, that the people for want of money to buy and sell with, are inforced to barter their commodities, and change one for another.

The people at the present very rude and barbarous; so inhumane and void of natural affection, that they sell their children to the Turks. The better sort of them much given to belly-chear, dancing, and singing loose Sonnets of love and dalliance; using much wine in their entertainments, which the more their guests drink, the better welcome; inflamed wherewith they offer them for a cooler their Wives or Sisters, with charge to yield them all content, esteeming it no small credit to them if it be accepted. Nor are the women much averse from the entertainment, whether to please themselves, or obey their husbands, let them tell that can.

The Christian Faith was first here planted in the time of the Emperour Justinus, by whose perswasion Tzanes Prince of the Colchi, then at the Court in Constantinople, became a Christian; and being baptized, was returned back into his Country with the title of King. But Cabades, the King of Persia, much offended at it, proclaimed war against him; which hindred the further progress of the Gospel, till the year 860. About which time Methodius and Cyril, two reverend men, were by the Patriarch of Constantinople employed in this service; which they successfully effected. In that regard they hold to the communion of the Church of Greece, and belong to the jurisdiction of that Patriarch, to whom conform in most dogmatical points of their Religion, and in many practical. And though they have a distinct language of their own, which hath no affinity with the Greek, yet do they celebrate Divine Offices in the Greek Tongue, and follow the Rituals of that Church; which few of them understand any better than the Vulgar Papists of France, Spain, or Germany, do the Latine Service. Whether it be that they have no learned men amongst them, either to translate their old Liturgy, or to compose a new; or that they hold all alterations in Religion to be matters of danger; or that ignorance is the best mother of devotion (as is thought by others) I am not able to determine.

The chief Rivers of this Country, are 1 Hippus. 2 Cyaneus, 3 Cherisius, all rising out of the Caucasian Mountains, and falling into the Euxine. 4 Phasis, the principal of all, rising out of the Montes Moschici, or Armenian Mountains, and there called Boas. Navigable with smaller Vessels a great way up into the Country, and with great ships 18 miles from the Sea. Memorable amongst the Ancients for the landing of the Argonauts in the mouth thereof; and those delicate Fowl called from hence Phasides, or Phasiani (Phesants) which they brought with them into Europe.

As for this expedition of the Argonauts, being the most remarkable action in those elder ages of the world, when Piracy and depredations were accounted for Heroical vertues; it was no other than the adventure of some noble Grecians, for the Gold of Colchos. The age wherein it hapned, was about the 11 year of Gideon, the Judge of Israel. The chief Adventurers, Jason, Orpheus the famous Poet, Castor and Pollux the sons of Tindarus, Telamon and Peleus, the sons of Æacus, and Fathers of Ajax and Achilles, Laertes the Father of Ulysses, Amphiarans the South-sayer, Hercules, Theseus, Meleager, with many others of like note. These moved with the great noyse of the wealth of Colchos, and the riches of King Ætes, then therein reigning, resolved upon a voyage thither, embarked in a ship called Argo, (whence the name of Argonauts) whereof one Typhis was chief Pilot. Passing the Hellespont, Propontick and Thracian Bosphorus, they came into the Euxine Sea: and after many difficulties and strange Adventures (which such Knights Errants could not choose but encounter with) they landed in the River Phasis, and came to the Kings Court, and there were kindly entertained. But finding the Kings Treasures to be too well guarded to be took by force (said by the Poets to be kept by a Dragon alwaies waking) they practiced with Medea, the daughter of Ætes, to assist them in robbing her Father. Who being in love with Jason, on promise of marriage with him, assented to it: By whose Artifices (which the Poets call Magical Charms) the Guardians being circumvented, and the treasure gotten, they all, together with Media, imbarked again, and after a long and dangerous voyage returned into Greece. This is the substance of the Story; which being the greatest and most notable voyage which the Grecians in those early days had undertaken, occasioned the Poets to advance it to the highest pitch, and to disguise it with many Fictions, and ingenious fancies: But not without some ground entituled to the Golden Fleece (which they make the end of the design.) For the Rivers, Rivers, as before was said, having Golden sands, which fell down from the Mountains (as in many other parts of the world they are found to have) It was the custome of the people to lay many Fleeces of wooll in the descent of those Rivers, in which the grains of Gold remained; though the water passed through; which Strabo witnesseth to be true.

But leaving these Adventurers to pursue their fortunes, let us go forward to survey the Colchian Cities; the principal whereof, 1 Dioscurias, a Town of great wealth and trade, founded by Amphitus, and Telchius, two Spartans, the Charioters of Castor and Pollux, and so named in honour of their Masters, whom the Greeks call Ἡνίοχοι: which two Spartans passing further East, were afterwards the founders of the Nation from them called Heniochi, or the Chariot-drivers. A Town of such resort by Merchants from most parts of the world, that here were spoken 300 different Languages; insomuch that the Romans (as Pliny saith) were fain to maintain here 130 Interpreters for dispatch of business, and negotiating with those Merchants. 2 Sybaris, the Seat-Royal of the Colchian Kings, about nine miles from which was the Temple of Mars, to which Medea is reported to have brought the Argonauts. 3 Siganum, near the mouth of the River Cyaneus: as is also, 4 Æa, by Ptolomy called Æapolis, an Ægyptian Colony, planted here by Sesostris (in the time of Rehoboam the Son of Solomon) at what time he attempted, but without success, the conquest of Colchis. 5 Neapolis, so called from the newness or foundation of it when that name was given. 6 Phasis, so called from the River upon which it is situate, retaining both the site and name to this very day: the ordinary residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg, by whom called Phassum. 7 Alvati, a well fortified place. More in the Land are placed by Ptolomy. 8 Mechelessus. 9 Sirace. 10 Zadris. 11 Surium, &c. not much observable in old Story, nor now known at all.

The first Inhabitants of this Country, most probably, came out of the neighbouring Armenia, and therefore the Posterity of Hul or Chul, from whence perhaps the name of Colchis; to whom in tract of time, some Colonies out of Ægypt, (a sea-faring people) moved with the great fame of the riches and wealth hereof, did adjoyn themselves: the Colchians on that ground, (or from some part of his Army left there by Sesostris) being said by Ammianus Marcellinus, to be the ancient off-spring of the Ægyptians. The most antient of their Kings was Æetes, spoken of before; who entertaining Phryxus flying out of Greece from the fury of his Stepdame Ino, with great store of treasure, occasioned the Argonauts, as well in way of revenge, as in hope of booty, to make that famous expedition for the Gold of Colchos, disguised under the fiction of the Golden Fleece. Of most note after him, Seleucus, and Esubopes, who first discovered the rich Mines of Gold and Silver; of which Metals they made all their Utensils, even the beams of their Chambers. The fame whereof drew thither Sesostris, the great King of Ægypt, who being vanquished in the field was fain to lay aside all those hopes which he brought with him thither, and return back to Ægypt in worse state than he came; but that he left behind him an Ægyptian Colony in the City of Æa, which after occasioned others of that Country to repaire hither also. Living in peace and unmolested from this time forwards, they were unhappily ingaged by Tigranes of Armenia, to side with him against the Romans; and in his overthrow gave such advantage to the Victor, that Orodes the King of Colchis was fain to submit himself to Pompey, to dismiss his Forces, leave his fastnesses, and finally to redeem his peace, by sending to him a Bedstead of purest Gold, and many other rich presents. After this, the Romans had here their Agents, and received hence some annual profits, but never brought it to the form of a Province. Distressed between the Persians and Constantinopolitans, they had much ado to stand upright; though betwixt both they kept themselves in a kind of liberty: as of late times, betwixt the Persians, Turks, and Tartars, their too potent Neighbours. But at the last, Anno 1579. Amurath the third, to make the safer passage for his Forces into Georgia, sent Uluzales his Admiral, with a great Fleet into the Euxine Sea: who coming up the River Phasis took the City of Fassum, fortified it, and laid so certain a foundation of future conquest; that though the Mengrelians did not long after demolish some of his fortifications: yet they were afterwards repaired, and Fassum made the seat of a Turkish Beglerbeg, as it still continueth.

3. IBERIA.

IBERIA is bounded on the East, with Albania; on the West, with Colchos; on the North, with the Caucasian Mountains; and on the South, with the Montes Moschici; by the first mountains parted from Sarmatia Asiatica, and by the last from Armenia Major.

It was so called from the River Iberus, which running thorow it, falleth at last into the more noted River Cyrus. But is now called Georgia; and that as some say from St. George the Cappadocian Martyr, whom here they have in very great reverence, as their tutelary Saint and Patron; as others say, from George a Cappadocian Bishop, by whose preaching they were brought unto Christianity; and some again will have them called properly Gurdians, and corruptly Georgians, from their near neighbourhood to those mountains: But the most probable opinion is, as I conceive, that they took this name from the Georgi, whom Pliny reckoneth amongst other of the Caspian Nations. Though to say truth, the name of Georgia extendeth somewhat further than that of Iberia, as comprehending also that part of Armenia Major which lies next to Media, and the whole Country of Albania, if I guess aright.

The Country for the greatest part, is covered with Mountains, Woods, and Thickets; and in that regard unconquerable for the difficulty of the mountainous passages: yet notwithstanding it is very fruitful in many places, having many fertile Plains, and wealthy Vallies, well watered, and of greater increase to the husbandman, if he be not wanting to himself in care and industry.

Of the old Iberians it is written, that they were a very warlike Nation, and used to set as many Pillars about the grave of a dead man, as he had slain Enemies in his life: as also that those of the same Tribe or Family had all things common, he being the Ruler, which was eldest: and that some of them did derive themselves from the Children of David begotten on the wife of Uriah, for that cause never marrying out of their own kindred. The present Georgians very warlike, strong of body, and valourous in fight, for a long time defended themselves and Country from the Turks and Persians, with great prudence making use of the one against the other; But overpowred by the vast multitude of Turks breaking in upon them, they have lost many of their best Forts, and much of their liberty.

The Christian Faith was first here planted in the time of Constantine the Great, by means of a Christian captive woman (such extraordinary waies doth God find out to promote his Gospel) Who being of a most devout life, and exemplary piety, had by her Prayers to CHRIST restored a young child to health which was thought past cure: and healed the Queen hereof of a desperate malady, when no help of Physick would prevail. Whereupon the the King sent Embassadours to Constantine, desiring Ministers and Preachers to be sent to Iberia, to instruct the people in the Faith, which was done accordingly. Since that time Christianity hath flourished in this Country without interruption; though by Mahometans, and Pagans, on all sides encompassed: agreeable in doctrinal points to the Church of Greece, whose Rituals also the People do to this day follow. Not subject for all that to the Patriarch of Constantinople, (though of his Communion) but to their own Metropolitan only: who hath under him about 18 Bishops, and resideth for the most part, in St. Katherines Monastery on Mount Sinai By means of which remote dwelling of their principal Pastor, Mahometanism hath got some footing, and Jesuitism began to creep in amongst them. The occasion of which last was this.

About the year 1614. the Persians making an inrode into this Country, took the City of Cremen, and therein Cetaba, the mother of Prince Teimurazes; whom, leading her captive into Persia, and not able to prevail with her to turn Mahometan, they most cruelly murdered. Some of the Jesuites then travelling in those Countries, and willing out of that sad accident to advance the fame of their Society, together with the Catholick cause, cut off the head of a dead man whom they found in the way, anointed it with oyl and odours, brought it into Georgia, and signified unto the Prince, that they had with them the head of the blessed Martyr Cetaba: desiring leave to live in some Monastery, and have the keeping of the holy Relique committed to them. This easily believed, and granted, the head was placed with great honour in the Church of St. George, at Aberdall; much resort to it from all parts by diseased persons: whom if past cure, the Jesuites sent home again, prescribing them in the way of preparation a long time of repentance; if curable by outward means which they applied, the cure was presently ascribed to the holy Relique. Grown famous by this means, they gained many Proselytes to themselves; and had no small hope of prevailing on Prince Teimurazes to submit himself to the Pope, as the Vicar of CHRIST. When in the heat of all their glories, a Letter cometh from Maacla, a Lady attendant on the Princess; (but then living in Persia; as a slave or bondmaid) signifying that her Master by her perswasion, had got into his power the body of his mother Cetaba; which he might ransom if he pleased: two Travellers withal, who came out of Persia with the Jesuites, reporting what they see them do with the dead man's head. By which means the Imposture being discovered, the body of the Queen was sent for, the false Relique was cast out of the Church, and the falser Jesuites into Prison, and next out of the Country.

Rivers of note I find not any, either in Ptolomy, or any of our modern Writers, but what are touched upon before, except only the River of Iberus spoken of already, from which the Country is thus named. The whole in general so destitute of wathers, that Pompey in his march this way against the Albanians, was fain to carry 10000 bladders filled with water, for the use of his Army.

Places of most antiquity and importance in it, 1 Artaxissa, 2 Vasada, 3 Lubium, 4 Armastica, all named by Ptolomy; this last by Pliny called Harmastis. 5 Cremen, the chief City now possessed by the Georgians. 6 Cachete, honoured with a fair Church, the most beautiful of all the Country, dedicated by the name of Saint George. 7 Triala, where are to be seen the ruins of a large City, and many Churches; by what name anciently called, I find not. 8 Altunsala, or the Golden Castle, a strong Fortress, and the ordinary residence of the Georgian Princes, since the time of the wars betwixt the Persians and the Turks. 9 Archichelech, a strong Castle taken by Solyman the Magnificent in his wars against Tamas King of Persia, and ever since holden by the Turks. 10 Teflis, a large and capacious Town, forsaken by the Georgians at the coming of Mustapha, General of Amurath the third against the Persians: who liking the situation of it, caused it to be repaired and fortified, planted thereon an hundred Pieces of Ordnance, and left therein a Garrison of 6000 Souldiers. 11 Lori, distant from Teflis about two daies journey of a Carrier's pace, strengthned with a lofty Castle, environed with deep ditches, and a thick wall, amounting to a mile in compass. Seized on by Ferat Bassa, the Successor of Mustapha, who repaired the Walls, planted thereon 200 small Pieces of Ordnance, and garrisoned it with 7000 Turks for defence thereof. 12 Tomanis, a short daies march from Lori, the Country lying betwixt both, full of rich fields and pastures, abounding with Corn, Fruit, and Cattel. Nigh unto which the said Ferat raised a new Fortress, for the better command of the Streights and Passages, leading from thence to Lori, and so to Teflis (the Key of Media or Sirvan) the Wall whereof being 1700 yards in compass, he caused to be planted with 200 Pieces of Artillery, and with incredible diligence cut down a thick Wood which lay before it, which otherwise would have been a receptacle of Thieves, or Enemies. 13 Glisca, 14 Bascapan, possessed and fortified by the Turks, to make good their footing in this Country. But possibly most of these strong holds now possessed by the Turks may be within the bounds of Armenia Major, and Albania, though within the Country of the Georgians; the name not being limited to Iberia, as was said before.

The first Inhabitants hereof were such who were brought hither by Tubal, the Son of Japhet, from whom this people at the first, as Josephus hath it, had the name of Thobeli. But that name growing out of knowledge, the Nations in it of most note were the Tibareni, Mosynœci, Chalybes; and of less esteem, the Biseries, Sapires, Macrones. &c. united at the last in the name of Iberi, from the River Iberus, of which Pliny speaketh, the principal of all this Country. Too fruitful of increase for so narrow a dwelling, some of them put themselves to seek their fortunes; when after long wandring they fell upon the Coast of Spain next the Pyrenees, where they staid themselves; giving the name of Iberus to the chief River there, and of Iberia to the Country; Of which more before. Such of them as remained behind continued an unconquered people, under the government of their own Kings, till the time of Tigranes King of Armenia. By whom invited to his aid against the Romans, they came in accordingly; and in his fall discomfited by Lucullus in three several battels, were fain to stand upon their guard as well as they could: first holding fair with Pompey, who succeeded Lucullus in his charge; But breaking out again on a new temptation, they were encountred by him. In which battel 9000 of their men being slain, and 10000 taken, they were constrained to sue for peace; not otherwise to be obtained till Artaces, the King of these Iberians, gave his Sons for Pledges. After this Feudataries to the Roman, and Grecian Emperours, till the fatal inundation of the Saracens had so weakned that Empire, that the Kings hereof acknowledged no more subjection to those of Constantinople, till Constantinople it self became the Imperial seat of the Ottoman Family; in whose quarrels with the Persian Sophies, this Country began to suffer a new invasion; some Towns and forts of it being taken by Solyman, in his march or passage against Tamas. Afterwards in the time of Amurath the third, who set his mind most eagerly on the war with Persia, a great part of it was subdued by Mustapha, the Turkish General: who inviting the widow Princess and her two Sons to come to his Tent, sent the young Princes to Constantinople: and by that means had opportunity to assure his purchases. And though the Persians did their best to assist the Georgians; yet proved they but a kind of miserable comforters, as much punishing or plaguing this poor Country with their aids, as the Turks by their Armies. So that now it stands divided betwixt the Grand Seigneur, and its natural Princes, the Georgian Princes holding the greatest part, but the Turks being in possession of the strongest holds; kept by them under colour of securing their way to Persia, for which this Country is indeed but unhappily seated.

Mustapha

4. ALBANIA.

ALBANIA is bounded on the East, with the Caspian Sea; on the West, with Iberia; on the North, with the Caucasian Mountains; on the South, with the Moschici. So named from the Albani, who did once inhabit it; and of late called Suiria, but reckoned in these last ages as a part of Georgia.

The Country of so rich a Soil, that without the least labour of the Husbandman, the Earth doth naturally and liberally afford her store; and where it is but once sown, will yield two or three reapings. But being ill husbands on it in former times, they occasioned Strabo to give them this Note for a remembrance, That they needed not the use of the Sea, who knew no better how to make use of the Land. The people anciently so simple, that they could not reckon above one hundred; ignorant of weights, measures, and the use of money. Old age they had in high esteem, but held it utterly unlawful to make speech of the dead. And of these Pliny doth report, That they were gray-headed from their very youth, and could see as well by night as by day; the verity of which last may be somewhat questionable. But withal they are affirmed to have been a stout and couragious people, strong bodies, patient of toil and labour, as they are at this day. And well the men may be couragious and stout, when the Women are so truly masculine. Of whom it is affirmed by Authors of undoubted credit, that they were exercised in Arms and martial feats, as if descended lineally from the ancient Amazons, whom Plutarch placed in this Tract; reporting some of them to be aiding to these Albanians, in their War with Pompey: which possibly might be no other, than some the more noble Albanian Dames.

Principal Rivers of this Country, 1. Soana giving name to the Soani, one of the Nations of these parts mentioned by Pliny. 2. Cæsius. 3. Gerrus. 4. Albanus, whence perhaps the name of Albani came unto this people. 5. Cyrus, (by Plutarch called Cyrnus) spoken of in Armenia Major, but more properly belonging to this Country; because herein it hath its spring, and the greatest part of its course also. For rising out of the Mountain Caucasus, which shuts up this Province on the North, it passeth thorow the midst of it, till it come to the borders of Armenia, where it beginneth to bend more towards the East; and having received into its Chanel all the former Rivers, besides many others of less note, falleth with twelve mouths into the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. Mountains of note here are not any, but what are common unto them with other Nations: the Montes Moschici on the South, and Caucasus upon the North, being rather common boundaries betwixt several Nations, than peculiar unto any one; though from the last the Iberians, and these Albanians, be in some Writers called Caucasiæ Gentes.

Cities and Towns I find many in it, but little of them more than their very names: 1. Chabata, by Pliny called Cabalaca, and honoured with the Character of Insignior Albaniæ urbs, the most noted City of this Country. 2. Albana, so called from the River Albanus, upon which it was seated. 3. Teleba. 4. Namechia. 5. Thelbis. 6. Getara, near unto the Influx of the River Cyrus. How these are called, or whether any thing be remaining of them, I am not able to say. The chief now being, and worthy to be so accounted, is the City of Derbent, situate near the Caspian Sea; from which to Teflis a City spoken of before, remain the foundations of a high and thick wall: affirmed to have been built by Alexander the Great, to defend these parts, against the irruptions of the Northern unconquered Nations. The Town environed with two walls, and so defended by difficult and narrow passages of the Rocks, that it is not easily accessible: but taken for all that, by Mustapha the Turkish General Anno 1587. and made the ordinary residence of a Turkish Bassa. Conceived to be the Caucasiæ Portæ of the Ancients, which Pliny honoureth with the title of Ingens naturæ miraculum: by Egesippus, for the strength of it called Porta Ferrea; with reference to which by the Turks called Demir-can, the word signifying in their Language, A Gate of Iron. The other places of this Tract are either of no account and estimation, or else are specified before amongst the Cities and good Towns of the Georgians, of whose Country this is now a part: yet we may add 2. Sabran, upon the borders of Media. 3. Sancta Maria, North of Derbent; both of them on, or near the banks of the Caspian Sea.

The first Inhabitants of this Country, seem to have been of the Plantation of Gecher the Son of Aram, and Nephew of Japhet, whose memory was long preserved in the City of Getara before mentioned: So called by him, or some of his Posterity, in remembrance of him. The People living somewhat out of the common road, were little troubled with Invaders from foreign parts; neither the Persians, nor Macedonians, looking so far North. Nor possibly had the Romans taken notice of them, had they not engaged themselves with Tigranes first, and afterwards with Mithridates. Falling on Pompey with an Army of 40000. and well beaten by him, they were content to sue for peace. But finding that the Iberians also had took up Arms, they engaged again; levying an Army of 12000 Horse, and 90000 Foot, in which Oroezes their King, with his Brother Cosis, were in person present. And though they had made good the banks of the River Cyrus; yet being ill armed, and for the most part only with skins of beasts, they made but small resistance against the Romans: notwithstanding the gallant charge of Cosis, who assaulted Pompey, and had the honour to be slain by him in the place. After this overthrow, and their giving pledges unto Pompey for their good behaviour, we find little mention of them in the Stories of the Roman Empire, till the time of Trajan, who having conquered, and reduced Armenia Major to the Form of a Province, resolved to shew his power to these neighbouring Nations; and to that end imposed a King on the Albani, of his own appointment, and made the Kings of Colchis, and Iberia do their homage to him. In times succeeding no news of them; either because remote from the stage of Action, or serving under the command of some greater Nation, where their name occurs not. Conquered by Octaidan, or Hoccata the Cham of Tartary, together with Iberia, and Armenia, they were a while subject to that Empire: and passing in succeeding times by the name of Georgians, did partake of the same fortunes with them. Now at the mercy of the Turk, who by reason of the strong footing which he hath gotten amongst them, is become a dreadful neighbour to them; if not acknowledged by them for their Lord in chief.

Thus having taken a ſurvey of all the Provinces of the Turkiſh Empire, both in Europe and Aſia, and touched upon the means by which they are poſſeſſed of Ægypt, whereunto all the reſt of their hold in Africk, ſerves but for an acceſſory, we will now look upon the ſtory of this people, their firſt original, the great ſucceſs of their affairs, the Princes under whoſe command they have made theſe conqueſts: Which having done, we will proceed to a Deſcription of the Perſons, Manners, and Conditions of the Turks themſelves, their power and policy, with other things conſiderable in ſo great an Empire.

And firſt for the original of the Turkiſh Nation, they were moſt probably the deſcendants of thoſe Turcæ, whom Pliny and Pomponius Mela place about the Fens of Mæotis. Of whom thus Mela, ſpeaking of the Gelani, a Scythian people, Juxtà Thyrſagetæ, Turcæque, vaſtas ſylvas occupant, aluntúrque venando, &c. Next unto them (ſaith he) live the Thyrſagetæ, and the Turcæ, poſſeſſed of vaſt Woods, and maintained by hunting; and then a rough and deſart Country with continual rocks, as far as to the Arympheians. And Pliny muſtering up the barbarous Nations of thoſe parts, joyns the Tuſſagetæ (or Thyrſagetæ) with the Turks, and placeth them next the Arympheians, as Mela doth, uſque ad ſolitudines ſaltuoſis vallibus aſperas, ſpreading themſelves unto the rough deſarts and woody Vallies. Not known by action (though by name) till the time of Tiberius the ſecond, who began his Empire Anno 577. when preſſing hard on the Avares, a neighbouring Nation, they compelled them to forſake their ſeats, and paſs into Europe; where they made themſelves Maſters of Pannonia, now called Hungary. In the time of Heraclius, we find them, with other barbarous Nations, at the Siege of Conſtantinople, but under the command of the Perſians. After which they began to ſet up for themſelves, and in the year 763 made a road into thoſe Countries which we laſt deſcribed; and loading themſelves with prey and booty, returned home again. But liking better of theſe parts than their own poor dwellings, in the year 844. they brake once more thorow the Caſpian Streights; and paſſing through Iberia, ſeized on Armenia Major, and there fixed themſelves, giving it the name of Turcomania. In which wide and ſpacious Country they roamed up and down, without any certain habitation, removing their herds and families from one place to another, as they had formerly been uſed to do in the fens of Mæotis; and as the Tartars and wild Arabs do until this day. And ſo they lived, a poor and contemptible Nation, till Mahomet the Sultan of Perſia, rebelling againſt his Lord and Maſter, the Caliph of Babylon, called in theſe Turks unto his aid; and by their help obtained a ſignal Victory. The Victory obtained, the Turks deſire their Wages, and a fair diſmiſſion; but could ſpeed in neither, the Sultan being loth to part with ſuch a neceſſary miſchief, till his Affairs were better ſettled; and therefore ſhutting up the paſſages of the River Araxes, which he before had opened for them. Provoked wherewith, under the conduct of Tangrolipix, their principal Leader, they began to ſpoil and waſte the Country; a multitude of needy people, and ſome of the diſcontented Souldiers, coming daily to them. Aſſaulted by the Perſians, in the firſt battel they not only got a notable Victory, but ſuch ſtore of Armour, Horſes, and other neceſſaries, as made them able to encounter with the Sultan himſelf: whom having overthrown and ſlain in the ſecond fight, Tangrolipix is by both Armies proclaimed Sultan or King of Perſia, in the year 1030. or thereabouts.

There were at this time amongſt the Turks two moſt noted Tribes; the Selzuccian, and the Oguzian. Of the Selzuccian, Tangrolipix, Cutlu Moſes, Melech, and Ducat were the Heads; of which, Tangrolipix as the chief of that Clan or Family, was ſettled in the Throne of Perſia: Cutlu Moſes furniſhed with an Army againſt the Chriſtians, poſſeſſed himſelf of a great part of Aſia Minor: Melech and Ducat, by the like favour of their Couſin the Perſian Sultan, were veſted into the Cities of Aleppo and Damaſcus, with their ſeveral Territories. But the Line of Tangrolipix and the reſt being all worn out, as hath been ſhewn in our deſcriptions of Syria, and Anatolia, the man of moſt Nobility amongſt the Turks, was Ottoman the chief of the Oguzian Family; Nephew of Solyman Prince of Machan, a ſmall Territory in the Realm of Perſia. Which Solyman, flying the fury of the Tartars when they conquered Perſia, was drowned in croſſing the River Euphrates, as he paſſed with his few Subjects towards Aſia Minor, the beſt place of refuge for his Nation; leaving the chief-ſhip of his Tribe to Ethrogul his Son, who obtained of the laſt Aladine of the Selzuccian Family, the Village of Saguta in Bithynia, for himſelf and his ſmall handful of people. To him ſucceeded his Son Ottoman, in the year 1280. who to revenge ſome injuries done unto his people by the improvident Chriſtians, took from them Caſtle after Caſtle; and in the end poſſeſſed himſelf of the City of Nice, not long before the Imperial Seat of the Grecian Emperours. Emboldened with ſuch great ſucceſſes, and hearing of the death of Aladine the ſecond, whom he acknowledged for his Lord, he took unto himſelf the Title of Sultan, Anno 1300. from which before he had abſtained. To this time, and theſe ſmall beginnings we muſt reduce the firſt foundation of the Ottoman Empire; increaſed unto its preſent greatneſs, by the courage and good fortune of theſe Princes following.

The Kings of the Turks of the Oguzian, or Ottoman Family.

1300 1 Ottoman, or Oſman the Son of Ethrogul, the firſt Turkiſh Sultan of this Line, added to his ſmall Territory the greateſt part of Phrygia, Bithynia, and ſome part of Pontus. 28.

1328 2 Orchanes, took the City Pruſa, and made it his reſidence; and was the firſt that had footing in Europe, where he got Gallipolis, and other pieces.

1350 3 Amurath won the Thracian Cherſoneſe, the ſtrong City of Adrianople, with the Countries of Servia, and Bulgaria; where he was ſlain by a common Souldier in the fields of Coſſova 23.

1373 4 Bajazet, made himſelf Maſter of a great part of Thrace, Macedon, and Achaia. He was taken Priſoner by Tamerlane, and brained himſelf in an Iron Cage, in which the inſolent Conquerour uſed to carry him. 26.

1399 5 Solyman, the eldeſt Son of Bajazet, ſucceeded in the peaceable poſſeſſion of the Turkiſh Provinces in Europe; but paſſing with an Army into Aſia, for the recovery of thoſe parts thereof uſurped by Mahomet his youngeſt Brother, he was forced again into Europe, to make head againſt Muſa Bajazet his third Son (employed by Mahomet in that diverſion) who having there vanquiſhed and ſlain him, Anno 1406. ſucceeded for a time in the Throne at Adrianople.

1404 6 Mahomet, the youngeſt Son of Bajazet, a vigilant and active Prince firſt wreſted from his brother Iſa (Bajazet's ſecond Son then living) living) the City of Prusa with the Dominions thereunto belonging, thereupon taking to himself the Title of King or Sultan, by degrees recovered all which his Father had lost unto the Tartars: Afterwards making use of Musa, for the supplanting of Solyman, he followed him presently into Europe, where he fought with him, vanquished and slew him about the year 1416. Thereby uniting in his own Person the whole Turkish Kingdom, which he inlarged with the more absolute Conquest of Dacia, part of Sclavonia, and the rest of Macedon. 17.

1416 7 Amurath II. subdued from the Constantinopolitan Empire, all Achaia, Thessaly, Epirus; he shaked the State of Hungary, and died before the Walls of Croy. 34.

The Ottoman Emperours.

1450 8 Mahomet II. sirnamed the Great, and first Emperour of the Turks, conquered the Two Empires of Constantinople and Trabezond, Twelve Kingdoms, and Two hundred Cities. 31.

1481 9 Bajazet II. subdued the Caramanian Kingdom, and part of Armenia, and drove the Venetians from Morea, and their part of Dalmatia. 31.

1512 10 Selimus, having poysoned his Father, subverted the Mamalucks of Egypt; bringing it, together with Palestine, Syria, and Arabia, under the yoke of the Turks. 7

1519 11 Solyman II. sirnamed the Magnificent, surprized Rhodes, Belgrade, Buda; with a great part of Hungary, Babylon, Assyria, Mesopotamia. 48.

1567 12 Selimus II. an Idle and Effeminate Emperour, by his Deputies took from the Venetians the Isle of Cyprus; and from the Moors, the Kingdom of Tunis and Algiers. 8.

1575 13 Amurath III. took from the disagreeing Persian, Armenia, Media, and the City Taurus; and the Fort Guarino from the Hungarians. 20.

1575 14 Mahomet III. took Agria in Hungary; which Kingdom in all likelyhood had been lost, if he had pursued his Victory at the Battel of Keresture. Never but then in any Battel, and then so frighted, that he durst never see the face of an Army afterwards.

1603 15 Achmet, who the better to enjoy his pleasures, made peace with the German Emperour, and added nothing to his Empire. 15.

1618 16 Mustapha, Brother to Achmet succeeded, which was a novelty, never before heard of in this Kingdom; it being the Grand Seigniors common policy to strangle all the younger Brothers: howsoever, this Mustapha was preserved, either because Achmet being once a younger Brother took pity on him; or because he had no issue of his own Body, and so was not permitted to kill him.

1618 17 Osman, or Ottoman II. succeeded his Uncle Mustapha; and being unsuccessful in his War against Poland, was by the Janizaries slain in an uproar, and Mustapha again restored: yet long enjoyed he not his Throne; for the same hand that raised him, plucked him down again, and seated young Amurath in the place.

1623 18 Morat (or Amurath the IV.) Brother of Osman, of the age of 13 years, succeeded on the second deposition of his Uncle Mustapha; who proved a stout and Masculine Prince, and bent himself to the reviving of the ancient Discipline. To the great good of Christendom, he spent his stomach on the Persians, from whom he recovered Babylon.

19 Ibrahim, the Brother of Morat, preserved by the Sultanness his Mother in his Brothers Life; and by her power deposed again for interdicting her the Court. He spent a great part of his Reign in the War of Crete, against the Venetians; but without any great success.

1648 20 Mahomet IV. Son of Ibrahim, now reigning: Lord of all this vast Empire, containing all Dacia and Greece, the greatest part of Sclavonia and Hungary, the Isles of the Ægean Sea, and a great part of the Taurican Chersonese in Europe; of all the Isles, and Provinces which we have hitherto described in Asia; and in Africk of all Egypt, the Kingdoms of Tunis and Algiers, with the Ports of Suachem and Erocco. Nor is their stile inferiour to so vast an Empire, Solyman thus styling himself in his Letter to Villerius, Great Master of the Rhodes, at such time as he intended to invade that Island: i. e. Solyman King of Kings, Lord of Lords, most high Emperour of Constantinople and Trabezond, the most mighty King of Persia, Syria, Arabia, and the Holy Land; Lord of Europe, Asia and Africa; Prince of Mecca and Aleppo, Ruler of Jerusalem, and Soveraign Lord of all the Seas and Isles thereof.

As for the persons of the Turks, they are generally well-complexioned, of good stature, proportionably compacted, no idle talkers, nor doers of things superfluous; hot and venereous, servile to their Prince, and zealous in their Religion. They nourish no hair upon their Heads, except it be a Tuft on the top of their Crowns, by which they think that Mahomet will snatch them up into Paradise at the day of Judgment. For which reason they keep on of all sides, though never so poor, accounting it an opprobrious thing to see any men uncover their heads; saying, when they dislike of any thing which they see, or hear, I had as lief thou hadst shewn me thy bare Skull. In their familiar salutation they lay their hands on their bosoms, and a little incline their Bodies; but when they accost a Person of Rank, they bow almost to the Ground, and kiss the hem of his Garment. Walking up and down they never use, and much wonder at the often walking of Christians. Biddulph relateth, that being at his ambulatory Exercise with his Companion, a Turk demanded of them whether they were out of their way, or their wits? If your way (quoth the Turk) lay toward the upper end of the Cloister, why come you downwards? If to the nether end, why go you back again? Shooting is their chief Recreation, which they also follow with much lasiness, sitting on Carpets in the shadow, and sending some of their Slaves to fetch their Arrows. They prefer, as they pass the streets, the left hand before the right, as being thereby made Master of his Sword with whom they walk. As they shave their heads, so they wear their beards long, as a sign of freedom; but their Slaves keep theirs shaven and close cut.

The Women are of small stature, for the most part ruddy, clear, and smooth as the polished Ivory; as neither afflicted with the Weather, and often frequenting the Baths: of a very good Complexion, seldom going abroad, and then masked; lascivious within doors, pleasing in matters of incontinency, and they are accounted most beautiful which have the greatest Eyes, and are of the blackest hue. Every Turk is permitted to have four Wives, and as many Slaves as he is able to keep; yet are they to meddle with none but their own, the offending woman being drowned, and the man dismembred. These Women live in great awe and respect of their Husband, never sitting with him at the Table, but waiting till he hath done, and then withdrawing into some Room. If their Husband hath been abroad, at his coming in they all rise from the stools whereon they sate, kiss his hand, and make an obeysance, and stand as long as he is in presence. The Children which they have, they carry not in their Arms, as we do, but astride on their Shoulders; they live immured from the sight of the World: and permit not their Male Children, no not their own Sons, to come among them, after they are twelve years old. From their Husbands they cannot be divorced, but on special occasion: but the Husbands may put away their Wives, or give them to their Slaves, when and as often as they list. Far better is it with the Sisters or the Daughter of the Sultan; to whom when her Father or Brother bestoweth her on one of the Bassaes, he giveth her a Dagger, saying, I give thee this man to be thy Slave or Bedfellow; if he be not Loving, Obedient, and Dutiful unto thee, I give thee here this Canzharre or Dagger, to cut off his head. When they are married, their Husbands come not to bed unto them, till they are sent for, and then also they creep in at the beds feet. That ever any of their Ladies made use of their Daggers, I could never read. Only I find, that Luizis Bassa, the chief man of the Empire next the Sultan himself, and of him very much beloved, having given his Wife, which was Sister to Solyman the Magnificent, a box on the Ear, was upon complaint by her made, thrust from all his honours, banished into Macedon; and had doubtless been slain, if the Emperours love, and his own merits had not pleaded for him. And this is all the Prerogative of the Sultan's Daughter; her Sons being accounted as meer and ordinary Turks onely, and never being preferred above the rank of a common Captain, for fear they should be apt to harbour some aspiring thoughts.

The better sort of the Turks use the Sclavonian Tongue, the Vulgar speak the Turkish Language; which being originally the Tartarian, borrowed from the Persians their words of State; from the Arabick, their words of Religion; from the Græcians, their words or terms of War; and from the Italians, their terms of Navigation.

They were formerly Idolatrous Pagans, and were first initiated in Mahometanism; when they got the Soveraignty of the Persian Scepter. The degrees in their Religion, are 1 The Saffi or Novices. 2 The Calfi, or Readers. 3 The Hogi, or Writers of Books; for Printing they use not. 4 The Napi, or young Doctors. 5 The Caddi, whereof there is at least one in every City to judge of offences. 6 The Mudrossi, who use to oversee the Caddis. 7 The Medlis, or principal Church-Governour under the Mufti. 8 The Cadeleſcais, whereof there are onely three; one of Greece, the other for Anatolia, the third for Egypt and Syria; and these sit with the Bassaes in the Divano, to determine of temporal suits. 9 The Mufti, whose Sentence in Law and Religion is uncontroulable. He abaseth not himself to sit in the Divano, nor affordeth more Reverence to the Emperour, than he doth to him.

His forces are either for the Sea, or the Land. His Sea-forces are great in regard of his spacious Sea-coasts, vast Woods, and number of Subjects. He never suffered but one memorable defeat, which was that at Lepanto; yet the next year he shewed his Navy whole and entire. Gallies are his onely Vessels, which being unable to cope with Ships of any bigness, were not onely the occasion of that overthrow, but also have heartned the Florentine, with six great Ships of War only, to swagger in the Seas; so that for more safety, the tribute of Egypt is of late sent to Constantinople by Land. The Captain Bassa, or Admiral, notwithstanding, with a Navy of 60 Sail, makes a yearly progress about the Seas and Sea-Towns, to annoy the enemy, suppress Pirates, collect his tributes, and to redress the abuses committed in the maritime Towns, belonging to the Admiralty. Which annual circuit is begun in May, and ended in October.

Their Land-Forces are either Horse or Foot. They which serve on Horse-back, are either the Spahi, or Asapi: these latter serving to weary the Enemies, and dull their Swords with their multitudes; of whose Bodies the Janizaries use to make Mounts, whereon to assault the Wall of a besieged Town; and are by them so contemned, that a Janizary once sold two of them for a sheeps-head. As for the Spahi, they, till they are inrolled into pay, are of the same Original and Education with the Janizaries; and called by the same name, Azamoglans. Their pay is ten Aspers a day. The Turk is able and doth maintain 150000 Horse at little or no cost, which no other Prince can do with 14 Millions of Gold. For whersoever any Parcel of Land is conquered, it is divided into divers parts, and committed to the manuring of divers men; whom they call Timariots. These are to pay unto the Emperour certain Rents; and at their own charges, to send to his Wars so many Horse, excellently appointed for the field: and which is the chief point of their service, to keep in awe the subjects, in all parts of his Empire. For being, as they are, dispersed in all quarters of his Dominions, the people can no sooner stir, but these will be assembled, and fall upon them. These Timariots are in all accounted 719000 fighting men, whereof 257000 have their abode in Europe; and 402000 in Asia and Africa. Were it not for these Timariots, as the Turks saying is, no Grass would grow where the Grand Seignior's Horse hath once set his hoof; for if the care of manuring the ground were committed to the Peasants, and not to Military men, the greatest part of this Empire would grow waste and desolate. These Timariots were instituted by Ottoman, the first Turkish King of this Family; and a curse by him laid on them that should annihilate the Institution. The name is derived from the Turkish word Timay, signifying a stipend.

But the Nerves and Sinews of this warlike Body, are the Janizaries; who by Original being Christians, are chosen by the Turkish Officers, every five years, out of his European Dominions: and so distributed abroad to learn the Language, Customs, and Religion of the Turks; afterward according to their strength, will, or disposition, placed in divers Chambers. They of the first Chamber are preferred, some to be Chiaufies, such as go on Embassies, and execute Judgments; others to Sanziacks, or Governours of Cities; some to be Bassaes, or Commanders of Horsemen; and others to be Beglerbegs, (id est, Lord of Lords) to command the rest in general. They of the other Chambers, are the Janizaries, or Prætorian Souldiers of the Guard; to whose Faith and Trust the care of the Emperours Person is committed. The tithing of these young Springals is, as we have said, every fifth year; and oftner sometimes, as occasions serve. By which means he not only disarmeth his own Subjects, and keepeth them from attempting any stir or innovation in his Empire: but spoileth all the Provinces he most feareth, of the Flower, Sinews, and Strength of their People; choice being made of the strongest Youths only, and fittest for War. These, before they are inrolled in pay, are called Azamoglans, and behave themselves with much submissiveſubmiſſiveneſs towards their Seniors and Governours: but when once they are honoured with the title of Janizaries, they grow by degrees into an intollerable pride and haughtineſs. Till of late they were not permitted to marry, neither now can any of their Sons be accounted any other than a natural Turk, (whom of all the reſt they account the baſeſt) the eldeſt only excepted: to whom this priviledge was granted by Amurath the Third, when he came to the Crown. They are in number 40000, of which 16000 are always reſident in Conſtantinople. In this City they are diverſly imployed, being as Conſtables to ſee the peace kept; as Clerks of the Market, to ſee to the weights and meaſures; as Officers, to arreſt common Offenders; as Warders, to look to the Gates, to guard the Houſes of Embaſſadours, and to travel with Strangers for their more ſafety; in which charge they are very faithful. Their pay is but five Aſpers a day, and two Gowns yearly; neither are their hopes great, the command of 10, 20, or 100 men being their greateſt preferment: yet are they very obſequious to their Captain or Aga, who is in place inferiour to the meaneſt Baſſa, though in power perhaps above the chiefeſt. For the crafty Turks joyn not Power and Authority; and if they obſerve the Janizaries to love and reſpect their Aga, they quickly deprive him of Life and Office. The Founder of this Order was Amurath the firſt, Anno 1365. their greateſt Eſtabliſher, Amurath the ſecond: the name ſignifieth young Souldiers.

Now concerning theſe Janizaries, we will farther conſider, 1. The ſway they bear in deſigning the Succeſſor. 2. Their Inſolency towards the Emperour and his Officers. 3. Their behaviour in the vacancy of the Throne. And 4. Their Puniſhments.

1. Concerning the firſt, I never find any particular ſway the Janizaries carried, in the deſignation of their Emperour, till the death of Mahomet the Great: when the Baſſaes having choſen Corcut the Son of Bajazet, were over-ruled by the Aga and his Janizaries, who more inclined to Bajazet his Father, and Son to Mahomet. Though I am not ignorant that when this Mahomet ſucceeded in the Throne, the joyful acclamations made by the Souldiers, was accounted the chiefeſt ſign of his ſecure and perpetuated Eſtabliſhment. But the chief Inſtance of their power herein, was the inthronizing of Selimus the Firſt, who being but the Seventh Son of this Bajazet, was not onely preferred by them before his Brethren in his Fathers Life-time; bnt by their aids alſo he ſeverally maſtered them, and in the end poyſoned his Father. To omit other Examples, even of late, Anno 1622. they ſlew the young Emperour Oſman, drew his Uncle Muſtapha out of Priſon, and eſtabliſhed him in the Royalty.

2. As for the next, the firſt Example in which I find them peccant toward their Prince, was at the beginning of the Reign of the above-mentioned Bajazet; when hearing of the intended death of Achmet Baſſa whom they loved, they broke open the Court Gates, and told the Emperour, They would teach him, like a Drunkard, a Beaſt, and a Raſcal as he was, to uſe his Great Place and Calling with more Sobriety and Diſcretion. Not long after, conceiving further diſpleaſure againſt the ſaid Bajazet, they ſhook their Weapons againſt him, and refuſed to take him into the midſt amongſt them; and were not, without great and vile ſubmiſſion on his part, appeaſed. Againſt Selimus the Firſt they alſo mutined; when being reſolved to winter in Armenia, for the better purſuit of his Victories againſt the Perſian, he was by them forced to turn home unto Conſtantinople. Againſt Solyman they mutined ſo violently, that they compelled him to diſplace Ruſtan, his chief Baſſa or Favourite. Againſt Amurath the third, for placing over them a new Aga, they ſo ſtrongly oppoſed themſelves, that firſt they ſet fire on Conſtantinople, and burnt therein, beſides Shops and Warehouſes, twenty five great Inns, ſeven Temples, and 15000 Houſes: and in the end conſtrained him to give them money, and to yield alſo into their hands two of his chief Counſellours, by them ſuppoſed to be their Adverſaries, whom they drew about the ſtreets. Finally, (to omit the tumult 1622. above-named) in the year 1600. they grew ſo diſcontented with Mahomet the Third, that they not onely threatned to deſtroy the principal Officers of the Court, and the baniſhment of the Sultanneſs his Mother, but the depoſing of himſelf alſo.

3. Now for the third, I find it to have been the cuſtom of theſe Janizaries, between the Death of an Old Emperour, and the Beginning of a New, to commit divers Inſolencies; as the rifling of the Houſes of the Jews and Chriſtians, among whom they dwell; the murdering of the Baſſaes, and principal men about the Court, whom they ſuſpected not to have favoured them; and a number of the like outragious miſchiefs. Of theſe we find frequent mention, as after the Death of Amurath the Second, and Mahomet the Great: at which laſt time the Merchants of Conſtantinople, being natural Turks, eſcaped not their ravenous hands; neither could Mahomet-Baſſa avoid the fury of their Swords. This ſpoil they took for ſo certain a due, that if they were diſappointed of it, they would preſently raiſe Commotions both in Court, Field and City; unleſs ſome preſent ſatisfaction were made them. To this end, Achmet diſtributed among them two millions and a half of Ducats; Selimus the firſt, two millions; others made an increaſe of their daily pay. But Selimus the ſecond, diſtributing among them 100000 Sultanies onely, was by them prohibited to enter into his Seraglio, till he had enlarged his bounty: and the Great Baſſaes were rapped about the Pate with their Calivers, for perſwading them to quietneſs. Now to prevent the dangerous and factious Liberty, which in the Vacancy of the Empire was uſually committed, the Death of the old Emperour was with all ſecrecy concealed, till the arrival of the New. To omit others, I will inſtance in the deaths of Mahomet the firſt, and Solyman onely. This Solyman died at the ſiege of Sigeth in Hungary, which was ſo cunningly concealed by Mahomet-Baſſa the ſpace of twenty days; that before the Janizaries knew of it, his Son Selimus had poſſeſſed himſelf of Conſtantinople, and came alſo to their Army then in retreat homewards. For this Mahomet privately ſtrangled the Phyſicians and Apothecaries, which knew of his death; commanded the Souldiers to go on in their ſiege; and divers times ſhewed them the Emperour ſitting in his Horſe-litter, as (being troubled with the Gout) he uſed to do: and when the City was taken, marched home with his dead Body, ſitting ſtill in the ſame manner. So after the death of Mahomet the Firſt, the Baſſaes of the Court called their Divanos as formerly they uſed; gave order for the levying of an Army, as if ſome War were intended; and the Kings Phyſicians went up and down with their Potions, as if they had him ſtill in cure. But the Penſioners and Janizaries miſdoubting the matter, with all eagerneſs deſired to ſee him; which when the Baſſaes durſt not deny, they appointed the next day for their viſit. The next day, the body was apparelled in Royal large Robes; placed in a Chair at the end of a long Gallery, and a little Boy cunningly ſet behind him, to move the Kings hand to his head, as if he ſhould ſtroke his beard, as his manner was: which ſigns of life and ſtrength the Soulders ſeeing, held themſelves contented, and ſo was his death concealed the ſpace of 41 days.

4. As for the laſt, Theſe inſolent and unſufferable pranks pranks committed ſo commonly by theſe maſterful ſlaves ſo exceedingly ſtomached Bajazet the ſecond, that he ſecretly purpoſed with himſelf, for curing ſo dangerous a diſeaſe, to uſe a deſperate remedy; which was to kill and deſtroy ſuddenly all the Janizaries. It is like that this Bajazet, being a Scholar, had read how Conſtantine the Great had caſſed the Prætorian Souldiers, and deſtroyed their Camp, as men that were the cauſes of all the ſtirs in his Empire, and whoſe pride was come to an intolerable heighth: and having the ſame cauſe to deſtroy his Janizaries, hoped to have done it with as much eaſe and ſafety as the other did. But they having notice of the Plot, for the time continued ſo united and linked together, that he durſt not then attempt it; and afterward ſiding with his Son Selimus, caſt him out of his Throne into his grave. Since which time the Emperours never durſt puniſh them openly; but when any of them proveth delinquent, he is ſent privately in the night time to Pera over againſt Conſtantinople: where, by the way he is drowned, and a Piece of Ordnance ſhot off, to ſignifie the performing of the Sultans command.

Now for the Emperours themſelves, we will conſider them in matters of pleaſure, in matters of Ceremony, and in matters of State; the laſt being conſiderable in three main points which are the murdering of their bretheren, the removing of their Sons, there revenue, and therein a touch of their Government. To theſe we will add, what apparent ſymptomes may be obſerved to prognoſticate the ſtanding, decreaſing, and increaſing of this puiſſant Monarchy.

1. For the firſt, he hath not ſo few as 500 (ſometimes 1000) choice Virgins kept in a Seraglio by themſelves, all Slaves born of Chriſtian Parents, and indeed the Rareſt Beauties of his Empire. When he is diſpoſed to take his pleaſure with any of them, they are all ranked in a Gallery; and ſhe is by the Aga of the Women prepared for his Bed, to whom he giveth his Handkercher. She that beareth him the firſt Son, is honoured with the title of Sultanneſs (Queen Mother we may call her) neither can he make any of them free, unleſs he marry them. When the Sultan dieth, all his Women are carried into another Seraglio, where they are ſtrictly looked to, and liberally provided for, and not ſeldom times are beſtowed by the ſucceeding Sultan, on his Great Baſſaes, and ſuch as he chiefly favoureth, which is a principal honour. They are attended on by Women and Eunuchs; theſe being not gelded only, but deprived of all their Genitals, and ſupplying the uſes of Nature with a Silver Quill: Which inhumane Cuſtom was brought in among them by Selimus the Second, becauſe he had ſeen a Gelding cover a Mare.

2. Theſe Ceremonies are either performed by them, which is for the moſt part the building of a Moſche onely to help to the Salvation of their Souls; or towards them by others, which are moſt apparent in the entertainment of Embaſſadors. For when ſuch come to his preſence, they are led between two of his Courtiers, and coming before the Throne (on both ſides whereof the Baſſaes ſit with admirable ſilence, reſembling rather Statues than men) they bow themſelves to the ground with all humility: laying their hands on their breſt, but never uncovering their heads, which (as we noted before) is counted an undecency. When they are to depart, they go all backwards; it being accounted very irreverent to turn their back-parts towards a Prince ſo glorious. The reaſon why they are thus brought in between two, is ſaid to be for their greater honour: but is indeed a fear they have, leſt the Grand Seigneur, under the pretence of a Salutation, or the delivery of an Embaſſie, ſhould be ſtabbed. Which warineſs they have uſed, ever ſince the time that Miles Cobelitz, a Servian, ſcrambling from among the ſlain at the battel of Caſſova, and being admitted to the ſpeech of Amurath the firſt, the Author of that overthrow, ſtabbed him into the belly with his Dagger.

3. Amongſt all the Jars and Diſcontents that be, none have been with more Unkindneſs begun, or more Eagerneſs proſecuted, than thoſe of Brothers; and that not only in private Families, but in the ſtems of Princes: the multitude of Pretenders, being the Original of moſt Civil Wars. To prevent theſe publick Emotions, the Emperours of Habaſſia uſe to immure up all their younger Children in the Hill Amara; the Perſians do put out the Eyes of their younger Brothers; and the Turks do murder them. Strange and horrid courſes, whereby to avoid the fear of a War in the State, they ſtir up a War in their own Bowels. The firſt amongſt the Turks that began this barbarous Cruelty, was Bajazet the firſt, on his Brother Jacup; whom immediately after his Fathers death, he ſtrangled with a Bow ſtring: this being the onely inſtrument of their Fratricide, becauſe thereby none of the bloud-royal of Ottoman is ſpilt on the ground. After him, Mahomet the Great cauſed his young brother then at nurſe, to die the death; and was not without much ado perſwaded from being the Executioner himſelf. Amurath the third, cauſed his five brethren to be at once ſtrangled before his face; and Mahomet, his Son, no fewer than nineteen in one day. By this courſe they imagine their own Eſtate to be infinitely ſecured, as knowing that Muſtapha a younger Son, ſtirred a Rebellion againſt Amurath, and Zemes, againſt Bajazet; both the ſecond of thoſe names: that Solyman, Muſa, and Iſa, ſeverally afflicted Mahomet the firſt; and Corcut, Selimus, the firſt of theſe names alſo. But yet they will not know, that nothing ſooner putteth their younger Brothers into theſe acts of Hoſtility, than an inevitable Certainty of a violent and unnatural Death: Whereas were they but ſure of Life, and a Liberal and Princely Maintenance, it is more than probable, they would reſt content, as in other Kingdoms the younger Princes do. And notwithſtanding their barbarous Policy, they are not quite free from fear, as knowing the Counterfeits have heretofore much diſturbed the quiet of their Predeceſſors: for thus we find Amurath the ſecond to have been vexed by one, that took upon him the name of Muſtapha, elder brother to Mahomet, then late deceaſed; who was much furthered and aided by the Greek Princes. This hath been one of the vulgar policies of Princes to kindle flames of ſedition in their neighbours Countreys. In the infancy of the Roman Empire, we find a counterfeit Agrippa; after that a counterfeit Nero; and before them, two counterfeit Alexanders in Syria. But never was Realm ſo often troubled with theſe Mock-Kings, as England: a counterfeit Richard the Second, being made in the time of Henry the Fourth; a counterfeit Mortimer, in the time of Henry the Sixth; a counterfeit Duke of York, a counterfeit Earl of Warwick, under Henry the Seventh; and a counterfeit Edward the Sixth under Queen Mary. To prevent theſe walking Spirits, Mahomet the Third laid out the dead Bodies of his Father and nineteen Brethren, as a common Spectacle for all that paſſed by, or would come to behold them. Of late indeed the Grand Seignior Muſtapha miraculouſly eſcaped the Bow-ſtring twice; 1 When his Brother Achmet, and 2 When Oſman his young Nephew were made Sultans; and was the firſt in this Empire that ever did ſucceed in the collateral Line, as Ibrahim the late Sultan was the Second, on the death of Morat or Amurath the Fourth, his Elder Brother.

4. The removing of the young Princes is done for three Reaſons: 1. To wean them from the pleaſures of the Court. 2. To train them up in Arms, and inure them to hardneſs.

hardneſs. 3. And principally to avoid the danger of a Competitor, whereof old Princes are eſpecially jealous. The common places deſtinated to this Princely exile, are Amaſia, in Cappadocia; Magneſia, in Lydia; and ſuch like Towns of Natolia. Neither do the old Sultans by ſuch a great diſtance think themſelves ſecure altogether; but carry a vigilant eye over their Sons actions, and have intelligence of almoſt every particular thought, the leaſt ſuſpicion being cauſe ſufficient to deſtroy them. So we find Muſtapha, Son to Solyman, the hopefulleſt branch that ever ſprang from the Ottoman tree, to have been ſhamefully ſtrangled by the command of his Father; upon a rumor only of a Marriage, which he was ſaid to have negotiated with the Perſian King's Daughter. When theſe Princes are once ſettled in their Government, it is a crime meriting no leſs puniſhment then death, to depart thence and come unto Conſtantinople, before their Fathers Death; or unleſs they are by their Fathers ſent for. Of this we have a Tragical example in Mahomet, a Prince of great hope, Son to Bajazet the ſecond: who deſiring to ſee the faſhion of his Fathers Court, left Magneſia, to which he was by his Father confined; and attended by two or three Gentlemen, came in the habit of a Seafaring man to Conſtantinople, and having obtained his deſire, he returned to his charge. This ſtrange action being quickly divulged abroad, and by divers variouſly interpreted, ſtirred ſuch jealouſies in the ſuſpicious head of his old Father, that he took order not long after to have him ſecretly poiſoned.

5. As for the ordinary revenue, it conſiſteth either in money received, or in money ſaved. The money ſaved, is firſt by the Tartars, of whom he commands continually 60000 to attend him in his Wars, without any pay but the Spoil of the Enemy. And ſecondly by the Timariots, who nouriſh and bring into the Field more Horſe, than any Prince in Chriſtendom can keep (as we have already ſaid) for 14 millions of Gold. The money received (according to Boterus) is only 15 millions of Sultanies, which is nothing in reſpect of ſo great an Empire. The chief reaſon whereof is the tyrannical government of the Turk, which deters men from tillage, merchandize, and other improvements of their eſtates; as knowing all their gettings to lie at the Grand Seigneur's mercy. His extraordinary revenue is incredible. For beſides that no Embaſſadour cometh before him empty-handed; no man is Maſter of his own wealth, further then it ſtands with the Emperours liking: ſo that his great Baſſaes are but as ſpunges, to ſuck up riches till their Coffers ſwell; and then to be ſqueezed into his Treaſury. Theſe men, as he advanceth without envy, ſo can he deſtroy without danger: no man here hoping for partakers, if he ſhould reſiſt, as not being ignorant that one mans fortune is built on the deſired overthrow of another. Such riches as they gain, if they hap to die naturally, return to the Emperour's Coffers; who giveth only what he pleaſeth to the Children of the deceaſed. Theſe Baſſaes have in their particular Provinces, their Divanoes, or Law-Courts, where juſtice hath been adminiſtred formerly with great integrity, but now not a little corrupted; yet the comfort is, that ſuch as miſcarry in their right, ſhall without delay know what to truſt to: and the Baſſaes upon complaint to the Emperour, are ſure to die for it. Over theſe Baſſaes (the chief of whom is the Vizier Baſſa, or Preſident of the Council) preſide two Beglerbegs, one for Greece, the other for Natolia.

6. Concerning the preſent ſtate of the Empire, many judge it to be rather in the wane, then the increaſe, which judgment they ground upon good reaſons, whereof theſe are the chief.

1. The body is grown too monſtrous for the head, the Sultans ſince the death of Solyman never accompanying their Armies in perſon (except Morat, or Amuraih the fourth) but rioting and waſting their bodies and treaſures at home.

2. The Janizaries, who have been accounted the principal ſtrength of this Empire, are grown more factious in the Court, than valiant in the Camp: corrupted with eaſe and liberty, drowned in prohibited wines, enfeebled with the continual converſe of women, and fallen from their former auſterity of diſcipline.

3. They have of late given no increaſe unto their Dominions; and as in the paths of virtue, Non progredi eſt regredi, ſo in Empires, by violence gotten, when they ceaſe to be augmented, they begin to be diminiſhed.

4. Rebellions have in theſe later times been in this Empire ſtrangely raiſed, and mightily ſupported; which commotions the former Sultans were never acquainted with.

5. The greatneſs of this Empire is ſuch, that it labours with nothing more then the weightineſs of it ſelf; ſo that it muſt in a manner needs decline, Pondere preſſa ſuo, overburdened with its own mightineſs. For as in a natural body, a ſurfeit killeth more then faſting; ſo in the body Politick alſo, too much extent of Empire doth ſooner draw on a ruine, than either too little or a mediocrity.

6. The Sons of the Grand Seignour, whoſe bravery of mind is ever ſuſpected by their Fathers, are nurſed up (contrary ſometimes to their natural inclinations) in all effeminacy; which once rooted in them in their youth, doth always after ſubject them to the ſoftneſs and baſeneſs of libidinous pleaſures.

7. They have loſt much of that fear and terror, which formerly their very name did carry with it: inſomuch that not the Venetians only have by Sea often mated, and once overthrown them; the Hungarians withſtood their greateſt forces, for the ſpace of 200 years, by land; the Polonians forced them to diſhonourable retreat and compoſition: but the poor Prince of Tranſylvania did divers times diſcomfit them, with the death of many of their Baſſaes: the Florentines with ſix ſhips only, intercepteth their trade; and the poor Emir of Sidon held it out againſt them many years together.

8. By the Avarice and corruption reigning in the Court, all Peace and War, all Counſels and Informations, all Injuries and Favours, being now made ſaleable. And

9. It is viſible and apparent, that their Empire was long ſince at the higheſt. Et naturaliter quod procedere non poteſt, recedit, as Vellius hath it, when an Empire can aſcend no higher, by the ordinary courſe of nature it muſt have a fall. All theſe are more than probable Prognoſticks of a ſinking Monarchy: and yet there is a greater then any of theſe, that is to ſay, the preſent ſtate of Affairs. The young Emperour Mahomet the fourth, now reigning, is but a weak ſtaff to ſupport ſo vaſt an Empire; conſidering not only the infinite caſualties, to which children are naturally ſubject: but the dangers which he may juſtly fear from a Rebellious Souldiery, and a Factious Court. Who by the Murder of one Emperour, and the depoſition of two, have made themſelves ſo formidable, but withal ſo odious in the ſight of the Imperial Houſe, that there is no way left to ſave them from a merited vengeance, but to tranſlate the Empire to ſome other Family; though by the rooting out of this. Which whenſoever it ſhall happen, either by the natural death or unnatural deſtruction of the preſent Sultan, it will draw with it an extermination of the Ottoman Race, which I look on as a matter not to be avoided, except by miracle. Suppoſing then the Line of Ottoman to fail, (as it is moſt probable that it will) what will become of this vaſt Empire? Three there will be to offer

at it, viz. the Crim-Tartars, the Janizaries, and the Bassaes. And first the Crim-Tartar may plead a composition, made by his Ancestors, with the Princes of the Ottoman Family; which is, that he supplying them with 60000 men at his own charges, when their occasions so require, should on the failer of the heirs males succeed in this Empire. Besides which, he may hope for no small succours, not only from the rest of the Tartarian Princes, but even from the Great Cham himself, to recover his Estate herein, if withholden from him: thereby to add to the present greatness and renown of the Tartars, the access of such a spacious Empire. 2. The Bassaes may conceive no small possibilities, of dividing this great Empire among themselves, partly by the example of Alexander's Captains, who after their Masters death (there being yet some of the Blood Royal remaining) parted amongst themselves not only the new-gotten Provinces, which they had conquered from the Persians; but even the Kingdom of Macedon, his old Inheritance: partly by an example in their own Histories, by which it appeareth, that after the death of Aladine the second, Caraman, Sarachan, Cridin, Carasus, and the rest of the more powerful Commanders, divided among them the whole Turkish Kingdom in the Lesser Asia: and partly by the opportunity which they have as Governours in their several Provinces, and having so many bands of Souldiers under their command; which may easily invest them as Proprietaries in those Estates, of which they have already such a fair possession. And so we find the Sultans, or Provincial Governours, or the Caliphs of Babylon, to have done before them. 3. The Janizaries may also build their hopes on as fair foundations, as being the Sword and Buckler of the Ottoman Empire; got, and maintained by their valour chiefly. Who to excite them to the enterprize, have the example of the Pretorian Guards of the Roman Empire (a body far more Politick and better compacted than this is;) who out of their own company created the far greater part of the Roman Emperours, neither the Provinces or Senate daring to oppose them in it. But above all examples, that of the Mamalucks of Ægypt doth make fairest for them; who were born of Christian Parents, as these are; appointed for the Guard of the Sultans, as these are: purposely entertained and inured to the Wars, to take from the natural Subjects, the use of Arms, as these are; men of approved Valour, and the chief Bulwark of that Kingdom against the Christians, as these are; and then why may they not be like them in this last attempt, for sitting in their Masters Throne, as these Mamalucks did? Add hereunto, that they are already (in a manner) possessed of Constantinople, the head Town and heart of the Empire; and their hopes are not vain. For my part I hold them to be the men most like to carry it, unless the Princes of Christendom laying aside private malice, joyn all in Arms to strip this proud Peacock of his feathers: and (upon so blessed an advantage) to break in pieces with a rod of Iron, this insolent and burdensom Monarchy. A thing rather to be desired then expected. But this by way of supposition, and as in a dream, I awake again.

The Ensign of this Empire (or Arms of it) is the Croissant, or half Moon; but how blazoned I cannot tell you: nor are the Learned yet resolved on the beginnings of that bearing. Some derive it to them, from the Eastern Gentiles, who worshipped the Moon under both Sexes, as we learn in Spartianus. Some make it common to them with the other Mahumetans; and they derive it from a pretended miracle of Mahomet; who to shew his power, is said to have made the Moon fall into his lap in two pieces, and to have restored her whole again to the heavens. Others are of opinion, that it was taken by the Grand Seigneur at the winning of Constantinople; Ut signum victæ gentis penes quam Orientis imperium esset. And of this mind is Justus Lipsius, induced thereto as it seemeth, by the figure of the Croissant, born in some old Byzantine Coins. A pretty plausible conceit; and therefore till we have a better, may pass as currant as the money.

And thus much I thought convenient to insert in this place, concerning the original, proceeding, and continuance; the natural dispositions, policies, and forces of the Turks: this being as the only Province which retaineth their name; so both the first they were possessed of, and the last which they have fully conquered, of all their Dominions. Which said, we must here take our leave of the Turkish Empire, and once again of the Roman also, of which the River Tigris and the Caspian Sea were the utmost bounds; not meeting again with either of them, unless by accident (or some unprofitable expeditions) till we come to Egypt, and there we shall hear farther of them.

MEDIA and PERSIA.

THese I have joyned together also, because the affairs thereof have been so united, in making up the second of the four great Monarchies, and running the same fortunes ever since; that they are hardly to be parted in course of story, though each must have unto it self a distinct Chorography. First then, we begin with MEDIA.

MEDIA is bounded on the East, with Parthia, and some part of Hyrcania, Provinces of the Persian Empire; on the West, with Armenia Major, and some part of Assyria; on the North, with the Caspian Sea, and those parts of Armenia Major, which now pass in the accompt of Georgia; and on the South, with Persia. So called from Madai the Son of Japhet, by whom first planted and possessed, after that general dispersion made at Babel. Known by this name amongst the ancients, both Greeks and Romans; but at this time Sheirvan by the Turks and Persians: the word signifying in the language of this Country, a Milkie-Plain.

The Country of a large extent, and of so different nature, as one would think it not the same. The North parts lying betwixt Mount Taurus and the Hyrcanian Sea, very cold and comfortless: so barren, that for the most part they make their bread of dried Almonds, and their drink of the juyce of certain herbs. Fruit-trees they have but few, and those but of Apples; nor any droves of tame Cattel, as in other places, their food being generally on Venison, or the flesh of wild beasts took in hunting. But on the South-side of the Taurus, the soyl is very rich, and the Country pleasant, plentiful both of Corn and Wine, and all things necessary; full of fat Pastures, some of them so large in compass, that 50000 Horses do graze upon them.

The people anciently great Warriers, as those who ruined the great Empire of the Babylonians; and laid upon themselves and their own vertue, the foundation of the second Monarchy. But being not long after incorporated into the same Empire with the Persians, have not only ever since followed the same fortunes with them, but participate of their nature also: and therefore we shall hear more of their Character, when we come to Persia. Polygamy anciently amongst them, so far from being esteemed a sin or an inconvenience, that it was a punishment for the common Villager to have less than seven Wives; or the Woman, if of noble birth, fewer than five Husbands. In their Wars they use commonly to envenom their Arrows with an oyl or liquor, made of a bituminous water called Naphta, whereof there is great plenty both here, in Persia, and Assyria. The Oyl called Oleum Mediacum, from this people only, because their invention; and by them most mischievously used. The Arrow which was anointed with it, being shot from a slacker bow (for a swift and strong motion took away its vertue) did burn the flesh wherein it fastned, with so great a violence, that nothing but dust could mitigate the fury of it; water increasing rather than diminishing that malignant flame.

The Christian Religion was first here planted by S. Thomas, but never had the happiness to be so universally embraced, as in other places; alwaies opposed and suppressed, either by Paganism, in the time of the old Persian Kings: or by Mahometanism, since the first conquest of this Country by the power of the Saracens. Some Christians yet there be amongst them either of the Armenian, or Nestorian Sects, (as in all other parts of the Persian Empire) the specialties of whose Religion have been elsewhere spoke of. Here live also very many Jews, indulged the free exercise of their Religion: many of which are Descendants of those Tribes, which were transplanted hither by Salmanasser. But the Religion generally embraced and countenanced, is that of Mahomet, according to the Sophian or Persian Sects; the Language of which Nation they do also speak, though they had a Language of their own, different from that of the Parthian, Elamite, or Persian, as appeareth, Acts 2. 9. where they are reckoned as distinct.

Mountains of chief note, 1 Orontes, 2 Coronus, 3 Chaboras, the boundary betwixt Media and Assyria, 4 Jasonium, 5 Lagoas; all of them (except Chaboras only) the disjoynted branches of Mount Taurus: which is here more broken and divided, than in any part of his course besides.

Out of these flow their principal Rivers, 1 Amandus, 2 Strata, and 3 Carindas; of greatest eminence in this Country, in the time of Ptolomy, but otherwise of no great account or observation. 4 Canae, the Divider of this Province from Armenia Major, but whether any of the former under this new name, I am not able to affirm. Add hereunto the great Lake, now called Argis (by the Persians Vastblan) but by Strabo named Martiana Palus, situate in the Confines of Assyria, Media, and Armenia; of the fish whereof dryed by the Sun and wind, and sold into divers other Countries, the people of these parts raise a great commodity.

In former times it was divided into many Provinces, the principal of which 1 Tropatene, 2 Charomithrene, 3 Darites, 4 Marciane, 5 Amariace, and 6 Syro-Media: these and the rest reduced to two in the latter reckonings, viz. Atropatia, and 2 Media Major.

1. ATROPATIA is that part hereof, which lieth betwixt Mount Taurus and the Caspian Sea. So called from that Atropatus, Governour of these parts in the time of Darius, the last Persian Monarch; who so valiantly held out against the Macedonians. The Tropatene, (as I take it) of the ancient Writers. A barren, cold, and unhospitable Country, as before described; and for that cause allotted for the dwelling of many of the Captive Israelites, brought hither by Salmanassar when he conquered that Kingdom: their numbers being found so great in this Northern Region, that Bejamin the Jew, reckoned no fewer than 50000 of them in one City only, which he calleth by the name of Madai. And that great numbers of them were transplanted hither, appeareth by that passage, 2 Kings 17. 6. where it is said, that they were placed in Halah and Habor by the River of Gozan, and in the Cities of the Medes. Now Halah or Chalah seems most probably to be that Region of Assyria which Ptolomy calleth Chalatene, in the North of that Country, towards Media, Habor, or Chabor, to be that Mount Chaberus, which parteth this Country from Assyria, in which Mountainous tract there was in those times a City of the same name also. Betwixt which City and the banks of the Caspian Sea, I find in Ptolomy the City Gauzania, in the 40th. and 40 minutes of the Northern Latitude: in which there are apparent footsteps of the name of the River Gozan, upon whose banks it was most likely to be seated.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Hamadum by Benjamin the Jew called Madai, repleniſhed in his time with families of the captive Israelites. 2 Gauzania, another dwelling of those Tribes, spoken of before. 3 Mandagarsis, of which nothing extant but the name. 4 Gelan, inhabited by Gelæ of the Ancients, whom the Greeks call Cadusii. 5 Bochu, more towards the Caspian Sea, hence called Mare de Bochu. 6 Eres, a place of great strength, but possessed by the Turks, and made the residence of some of their principal Officers: taken by Mustapha General of the Turkish Forces in the time of Amurath the third, and by him fortified as the Gate and entrance of this Country. 7 Sumachia, or Shamaki, betwixt Eres and Derbent, taken by Osman Bassa, at the same, Anno 1578. and made the residence of a Beglerbeg, Anno 1583. Conceived to be the Cyropolis of Ptolomy, by the Persians called Cyreckbata; bearing the name of Cyrus the great Persian Monarch, by whom built or beautified. Remarkable at the present for a Pillar of flint-stones, inter-woven with the heads of many of the Persian Nobility, most barbarously slain by one of the late Sultans, and this Pillar here erected for a terrour to others.

2. MAJOR MEDIA, or MEDIA specially so called, is that part hereof, which lieth on the South of the Mountain Taurus. Commended by the Ancients, for one of the goodliest Countries in all Asia: the fields (saith Ammianus) yielding abundance of Corn and Wine, for their fatness and fertility very rich, and no less pleasant for fresh Springs and clear veins of water: where one may see plenty of green Meadows; and in them a breed of generous Horses, which they call Nisæi, mounted by as valiant and generous Riders, who with great jollity use to go unto the wars, and charge furiously upon the Enemy. The men commended by Polybius (χ᾽ τὰς ἀρετὰς ἀνδρῶν, &c.) as well as the Country.

Cities of most note in it, 1 Ecbatana of as great antiquity as Babylon; for we find that Semiramis the wife of Ninus in a war made against the Medes, who had then rebelled, taking an affection to the place, caused water-courses to be made to it from the further side of the Mountain Orontes, digging a passage through the hills, with great charge and labour. Destroyed by the injury of time, it was re-edified by Deioces the sixth King of the Medes; and afterwards much beautified and enlarged by Seleucus Nicanor, Successor unto Alexander in his Asian Conquests. For beauty and magnificence little inferiour to Babylon, or Ninive, before described. In compass 180 or 200 Furlongs, which make about 24 Italian miles. The walls thereof affirmed in the Book of Judith, to be 70 Cubits high, 50 Cubits broad, and the Towers upon the Gates 100 Cubits higher; all built of hewn and polished stone, each stone being six Cubits in length, and three in breadth. But this is to be understood only of the innermost wall, there being seven in all about it; each of them higher than the other, and each distinguished by the colour of their several Pinnacles, which gave unto the eye a most gallant Prospect. From which variety of coulours, it is thought to have the name of Agbatha, or Agbathana. In former times, the ordinary residence of the Monarchs of the Medes and Persians, in the heats of the Summer; as Susa (the chief City of Susiana) in the cold of Winter. The Royal Palace being about a mile in compass, was built with all the cost and cunning that a stately Mansion did require: some of the beams thereof of Silver, and the rest of Cedar; but those of Cedar strengthned with Plates of Gold. Said by Josephus to be built by the Prophet Daniel. Which must be understood no otherwise in the truth of Story, than that he oversaw the Workmen, or contrived the Model; appointed to that office by Darius Medus, to whom the building of the same is ascribed by others. Neglected by the Kings of the Parthian Race, it became a ruine. 2 Tauris, situate in or near the place of Ecbatana, out of whose rubbish it was built. Distant 150 miles from the Caspian Sea, under the shadow of Orontes, now called Baronta; but opening Southwards, towards a large and spacious Campagn, in compass about six miles, and beautified on the South-west within a large and pleasant Garden, the work of Sultan Tamas, who resided here often: the buildings for the most part of brick, with flat Roofs (as generally in all the East) well peopled, as containing 200000 persons of all sorts and Sects. Of great trading, till subdued by the Turks, by whom it was thrice taken within very few years, viz. by Selimus the first, Anno 1514. by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1530. and by Osman Bassa, general of Amurath the third, Anno 1585. But this last finding it too chargeable to be alwaies garrisoned, and not otherwise tenable but by force, pulled down the Walls, and built a large and capacious Citadel: both Town and Citadel recovered by Emir-Hamze Mirza, Prince of Persia, and Father of Sultan Sophy, Anno 1614. after it had been for an hundred years a continual prey unto the Turks. 3 Arsatia, so named by Ptolomy, and by the name conjectured to be built by some of the Parthian Race. Ruined long since, but more beautifully revived than ever in the present 4 Casbin, raised from the ruins of that Town. Situate in a fair and open place on the banks of a little River, which serveth it for household uses, but not for traffick. Exceedingly enriched by the removal of the Court from Tauris hither, in the time of Tamas; partly invited thereunto by the richness of the soyl, and the commodiousness of the place; but chiefly that he might without danger attend the Turks, who began to encroach on his Dominions. In compass about seven miles, beautified with a large Market-place, many stately Mosques, and the Sultans Palace: this last adjoyning to the first, convenient enough, but neither of great state nor beauty. 5 Rages, or Raga, mentioned in the book of Tobit, so called from Reu or Ragau the son of Phaleg, the founder of it: situate near the spacious Plain, so memorable for the great breed of Horses spoken of before; and therefore in that Book called the Plain of Rages. Repaired afterwards by the Greeks, it was named Europus, and so stands in Ptolomy. 6 Nassivan, supposed by some to be the Artasata, more probably the Nasuana, of the Ancient Writers: a place much aimed at by the Turks in their Persian Wars. 7 Ardoville, on or near the banks of the great Lake Argis, spoken of before: the birth-place and chief Seat of Guine, and Aider, the first Authors of the Sophian Sect; and the burial place of Sultan Hysmael the first Persian Sultan of that Line. 8 Sultania, tania, about six daies journey from Tauris, environed with high Mountains; the tops of which continually covered with Snow, may be seen far off: founded by Alyaptu, the eighth King of the Sixth or Tartarian Dynasty, and by him made the Royal Seat of the Persian Sultans, whence it had the name. But ruinated by the Tartars, it retaineth nothing now of its former splendour, but the Mosques, or Temples (one of them, the fairest in the East) which the Tartars spared. 9 Troyan, in the Territory of Sultania, situate in a large Plain, but not far from the Mountains; beautified with a fair Market-place many pleasant Gardens of private men; and one belonging to the King, environed with a Wall of greater Circuit than the City. 10 Turcoman, in the middle way betwixt Tauris and Casbin. 11 Damoan, at the foot of Taurus, a Town of 200 houses, not here considerable but for the signification of the name; which is said to signifie a Second Plantation: and being situate at the foot of so high a Mountain, occasioned some of the Jews to think, that the Ark rested not far off, as perhaps it did. 12 Marant, in the Extremity of the Country, but of lesser note.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Posterity of Madai, as before was said; Ragau the Son of Phaleg taking up those parts, which lay next Assyria. Divided in long tract of time into several Tribes, as the Caduſii, Amavia-cli, Margasi, Sagartii, Delryces, Tapyri, and some others. Governed by Kings immediately from the first Plantation; for we find that Pharnus King hereof, was overthrown and slain by Ninus the Grand-son of Nimrod. After this made subject to the Assyrians, there Kings were only Titular, at the best but Homagers, perhaps no better than Provincial Governours, under that great Monarchy. Of most esteem amongst them was that Arseus, who with an Army of 800000 men (if the number be not mistaken) incountred the Caduſii, by whom discomfited and slain. But the Caduſii so broken, that they were fain to put themselves under the power of the Persians; and so continued till the time of Arbaces, the last of these Provincials, and the first Monarch of the Medes. He living in the time of Sardanapalus, had the chance to see his Lord and Master in a womans dress, spinning among his Concubines, and otherwise behaving himself in a brutish manner; which so moved him, that he resolved to be no longer subject to so vile a Monster. Communicating his thoughts unto Belochus, Governour of Babylon, and well seen in Astrology, he was incouraged to proceed; and sped so well, that having made themselves Masters of Ninive, the Imperial City (though Sardanapalus for a time put them shrewdly to it) they divided betwixt them his Estates. To Belochus fell Assyria, and Babylonia, with the Provinces on the West of Tigris: To Arbaces, Media, and the rest, which now make up the Kingdom of Persia. But being a mild Prince, and desirous by fair and gentle means to assure his Empire, he confirmed the Persian Satrapaes in their former Governments; reserving nothing to himself but a titular Soveraignity. Of whom and his Successors more, when we have taken in the rest of the Provinces.

PERSIA.

PERSIA is bounded on the East, with India; on the West, with Media, Assyria, and Chaldea; on the North, with Tartary; on the South, with the main Ocean. So called from Perſis the predominant Province of it, that which gave Law to all the rest: as that is said to do from Perseus, the Son of Jupiter and Danae; affirmed by the Grecians to have conquered these Eastern Countries, and to have left his name to this. Of which thus Isidore, Persæ populi à Perseo Rege sunt vocati, qui à Græcia in Asiam transiens ibi barbaras gentes gravi diuturnoque bello perdomuit, & victor nomen subactæ Genti imposuit. In the Scripture it is constantly called Elam, till the time of Daniel the Prophet, from Elam, the Son of Sem, who was planted there. But after that the Medes and Persians had subdued Babylon, and transferred the supreme Monarchy to themselves, we find this people called by the name of Paras, (whence the name of Persian seems to come) the word Paras, (or Pharas) signifying as much as Horsemen. Given therefore to this Nation, as it is supposed, from an Edict of Cyrus, who not only taught them the art of Horsemanship, but set forth a Law, that it should be a reproach to any man to go on foot, Sive multum sive parum itineris esset conficiendum, whether the journey that he had to go were long or little. Called sometimes also Achæmenides, from Achæmenides the Son of Perses, one of the first known Kings hereof; and by that name, (Non tot Achæmeniis armantur Susa Sagittis) they occur in the second of Propertius. Where by Achæmeniæ Sagittæ, he means Persian Arrows.

It is of very great extent, streched out in length from the 82 degree of Longitude, to the 120. being 38 degrees in all; and in breadth from the 23 degree of Northern Latitude, to the 43. being 20 more. According unto which position, with reference to the heavenly bodies, we shall find it seated under the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth Climates: the longest Summers day in the Southern parts, being thirteen hours almost three quarters; and fifteen hours one quarter in the parts most Northwards.

The Country not alike in all places, as it is impossible it should in so great a compass. But generally it is of a pure and wholesome air, the high hills shading it on the one side from the heat of the Clime under which it lieth; and the warmth of the Sea, wherewith encompassed, cherishing a great part thereof. And so it is affirmed to be by Quintus Curtius; Regio non alia in tota Asia salubrior habetur; temperatum cœlum; hinc perpetuum jugum opacum & umbrosum, quod æstus levat; illinc mare adjunctum, quod modico tepore terras fovet. Then for the Earth, it is, by reason of the great heat of the Sun, very dry and sandy, in many places destitute of water; in the South parts thereof few Rivers, and not many Lakes; by consequence neither well peopled, nor manured, for the greatness of it: men loving to inhabit (and I cannot blame them) where they may have the use of water. Which notwithstanding, it is furnished with all necessaries both for life and pleasure; one part affording that which the other wanteth, as shall be shewed in the description of the several Provinces.

The people anciently were trained up to the Wars, but chiefly unto Archery, from their very childhood. Indulged the liberty of having as many Wives as they pleased; they never saw the children begotten of them, until five years old. At that age sent unto their Fathers, they were taught presently to handle the Bow and Arrows. Upon this ground we find the Bow of Elam mentioned by the Prophet Jeremy, Chap. 4. and the Quiver of Elam by the Prophet Isaiah, Chap. 22. 6. as the Arms peculiar to that Nation, or most used amongst them. They were good horsemen also, and well skilled at their Dart and Slings, till wealth and ease, and the pride of so great an Empire, made them wholly feminine: depriving them of those abilities both of mind and body, wherein they did excel most Nations in their harder times. In all their fortunes very obsequious, if not servile, to their Kings and Princes; in whose presence it was a crime to spit: but to deny obedience unto his Commands an offence so hainous, as was not to be punished with less than the loss of life, and want of burial. In this observance of their Kings followed, if not out-stripped, by the modern Persian. A race of men, affirmed to be cunctorum hominum mitissimi, the most meek or patient of the world, especially compared with those of the same Religion, the Turks and Tartars. Not haters of Learning, as the Turks; but studious, many of them in Physick and Astrology; most of the better sort much delighted in Poetry, which they give their minds to. For the most part addicted to hospitality, magnificent in expence, Lordly in their complements, fantastical in their Apparel, maintainers of Nobility, and desirous of peace. Such as apply themselves to Trades, and Mechanick Arts, prove excellent in the making of Silks, and Cloth of Gold: those which betake themselves to war, proving very good Souldiers, as the Turks have found unto their cost, who by their long Wars against them have got nothing but blows. The women said to be neat and cleanly, truly loving, gorgeous in Attire, and delightful in the sequestrations of pleasure.

Their Religion at the first was Paganism, wherein directed principally by their Priests or Magi, Men of a strict austere life, forbidding outward ornaments, and the use of Gold; making the ground their bed, and the herbs their food; their whole time spent in offering to the Gods the Prayers and Sacrifices of the people, as if they only might be heard; or else in Divinations, and foretelling of things to come, from whence the names of Magick and Magician are derived unto us. Studious in the knowledge of God and Nature, and therefore called by Suidas, not only Philosophi, lovers of Wisdom; but Philotbei, the lovers of God. Of such esteem, that as Cicero telleth us, the Persian Kings were not admitted to the Throne, till they were trained up in the Discipline of the Magi: and of such power and intimacy in the Royal Court, that one of those Magi, on the death of Cambyses, possessed himself of the Persian Monarchy. In a word, such as the Druides were to the Galls and Britains, the Gymnosophists or Brachmans to the ancient Indians, and the Chaldeans in the Empire of Babylon; the same, if not of greater sway in affairs of moment, were the Persian Magi. And Persians they must be if Magi; none but the Natives of that Country being to be admitted of that Society; though by a Metaphor, applyed to the Professors of the same Arts, though of other Countries, as those which came from the East to worship Christ, are by St. Matthew called Magi (Mat. 2. 1.) though they came from Arabia.

The people then were Gentiles as to their Religion; and besides other Gods which the Gentiles worshipped, they were great Idolaters of the Fire; which they offered Sacrifice unto in time of peace, and carried it with them as their Tutelar Deity, in the time of war. At what time (especially if the King were there in person) it was borne in the very front of their Army, attended on by their Priests, and followed by a train of boys all cloathed in Scarlet, to the number of 365. according to the number of the daies of the year. In this equipage, with a great deal of pomp besides, did Darius set forwards to fight with Alexander, at the battel of Issus in Cilicia. A superstition derived from them to the Medes and Assyrians, their next neighbouring Nations, and not extinguished to this day in some parts of this Country; in which many of these Fire-worshippers are still remaining. But from a God, it grew in time to be a Gentleman-Usher, and to attend on Kings and persons of greatest eminence: used to be borne before the Emperours of Rome, as a point of State. Insomuch that Commodus, though fallen out with his Sister Lucilla, permitted her notwithstanding to enjoy her Seat in the publick Theatre, ἐν πύρ φορεμένου αὐτῷ, a fire to be borne before her, as in former times, as we are told by Herodian.

The Christian Faith was first planted in the Provinces of the Persian Kingdom, by St. Thomas the Apostle, and held in all points answerable to those of the Catholick Church; till Sapores to despight the Emperour Heraclius a right Orthodox Prince, commanded that all the Christians in his Dominions should conform themselves to the opinions and tendries of the Nestorian Sect, by that means universally spread over all these Provinces. With whom here live now intermingled some Armenian Christians, who with their Patriarch removed hither, when their own Country was made the seat of a long and miserable war betwixt the Persian and the Turk; but found not here so safe a dwelling as they did expect: 1200 of them being slain by Abas the late Persian Sultan, on a suspicion that they went about to reconcile themselves to the Pope of Rome (whom he held to be more inclinable to the Turk than to him) in the year 1609. Which notwithstanding (so miserable a condition do these Christians live in) he suffered two Convents of Augustine and Carmelite Friers, to be settled at the same time, even in Spawn-hawn it self, and many Jesuites to live peaceably up and down the Country, which serve for little else than to give intelligence. Here are also many Jews dispersed over all the Provinces of this Empire, allowed their Synagogues, and Publick Places of Assembly. But the Religion publickly authorized and countenanced, is that of Mahomet, imposed on this Country by the Saracens, when by them subdued: differing in some points from the Turks, especially about the true Successor of that false Seducer (of whom more anon;) the cause of the long wars betwixt those Nations.

As for the Persian Language, it is very ancient, supposed to be as old as the Confusion at Babel: some words whereof, by Daniel and Ezra which lived in the Persian Court, have been made use of in some parts of the holy Scripture. A Tongue which still hath left some remainders of it, in the Language of the modern Persian (as those of judgment in this tongue have delivered to us) notwithstanding so long tract of time, and the conquest of this Country by the Greeks, Arabians, Turks and Tartars. Not spoken only in this Country, nor limited within the Provinces of the Persian Empire; but used also in the Court and Camp of the Great Mongul, and some parts of Zagathay; and where not vulgar unto all, studied and understood by persons of more eminent sort, as the Latine by the Gentry of these Western parts. Insomuch as he that hath this Language, may travel over all the East without an Interpreter.

Rivers in the South parts there are but few, as before was said, and those few not navigable; by consequence of little note or estimation. The principal of those that be, are 1 Eulæus, the chief River of Susiana, emptying it self into Sinus Persicus: a River of so pure a stream, that the great Persian Kings would drink of no other water. The Northern parts more plentifully stored with that commodity, as having in it the famous Rivers of 2 Oebus in Bactria, a River of the greater note amongst the Ancients, because it was navigable; opening with a fair Channel into the Caspian Sea, to which it hasteneth from Mount Taurus: and so doth also, 3 Oxus in Margiana, a fatal bound to these great neighbours. A River which the Persians have seldom passed to inlarge their Dominions, but they received some notable overthrow at the hand of the Scythians; and when the Tartars made over it under the conduct of Saba the Cham of Zagathay, for the invasion of Persia, they were shamefully beat back again by Hysmael Sophy. Nor is it less memorable in old stories, for the famous passage of Alexander over it, in pursuit purſuit of the murderers of Darius. For having followed Beſſus to the banks of this River, and not knowing how to paſs over his men, there being neither Ships upon it, nor timber near at hand to build them, he cauſed a great number of bags and bladders to be ſtuffed with ſtraw, and ſo in three daies tranſported his Army. So that I may truly ſay with his own Hiſtorian, Unum id Conſilium quod neceſſitas ſuggeſſerat, iniit; Neceſſity is the beſt Author of fine inventions. 4 Zioberis in Hyrcania, which riſing out of the ſame mountainous tract (as the two laſt mentioned) after a long courſe above ground in the open light, hideth himſelf again for the ſpace of 38 miles, and then breaketh out at a new Fountain, and falleth into 5 Rhadaga, another chief River of thoſe parts. And this Alexander the Great found to be true, by caſting two Oxen into the River Zioberis, which by the current of the ſtream were carryed under the ground, and brought to light where the River had its riſe again. 6 Hidero, by what name known unto the Ancients I am not able to ſay, but of great note amongſt modern Travellers, for the fall thereof into the Sea: ſo ſteep and ſtrong, that the people are ſaid to ſacrifice or banket under the fall thereof, the ſtream ſo violently ſhooting over their heads, that it never wetteth them.

Mountains of moſte note, are thoſe which paſs by the name of Taurus; which having left Medi on the Weſt, paſſeth through the Northern Provinces of the Perſian, Empire, dividing Parthia from Hyrcania, and Paropamiſus from Bactria, and Aria from Margiana. Known by the names of Coronus, the Seriphian hills, Paropamiſus, Caucaſus; whereof more as occaſion ſerveth in their proper places.

It is divided into the paticular Provinces of 1 Suſiana. 2 Perſis. 3 Ormuz. 4 Carmania. 5 Gedroſia. 6 Drangiana. 7 Arachoſia. 8 Paropamiſus. 9 Aria. 10 Parthia. 11 Hyrcania. 12 Margiana. 13 Bactria. Which we will ſeverally ſurvey in the Chorography and ſtory, till we have joyned them all together in the Perſian Monarchy; and then purſue the Hiſtory as conjunct and faſhioned into the body of one Empire.

1. SUSIANA.

SUSIANA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Perſis; on the Weſt, with Babylonia, or Chaldæa; on the North, with Aſſyria; on the South, with a branch of the River Tigris, and ſome part of the Gulf of Perſia.

It was ſo called quaſi Cuſiana, or the Land of the Chuſites, from Chus the eldeſt Son of Ham, and the Grandſon of Noah, by whoſe Son Havilah it was firſt peopled; and therefore called in Scripture the Land of Havilah, this being that Land of Havilah, which the River Piſon is ſaid to incompaſs, in the Book of Geneſis. The difference betwixt them is, that that Land of Havilah lay on both ſides of the River Euphrates (which the Country of Suſiana doth not) and was the Eaſtern bound of the Iſmaelites, Amalekites, and other Nations intermingled in thoſe parts of Arabia. For whereas Saul is ſaid in 1 Sam. 15. 7. to have ſmitten the Amalekites from Sur to Havilah, that is to ſay, from the Red Sea to the Gulf of Perſia, it muſt be underſtood of Havilah in the firſt extent; but neither of Havilah in the Eaſt Indies (ſo called from a Son of Joctan) or of that part of Havilah which lay on the Eaſt ſide of Euphrates, and is that Suſiana, in which now we are: it being no where found that Saul was ſo great a Traveller as to ſee the Indies; or of ſuch puiſſance as to force a paſſage through the Countries of the Chaldeans and Babylonians. But the name of Havilah being loſt, that of Cuſiana or Suſiana did ſtill remain; preſerved to this day in that of Chuſiſtan, by which now called.

The Country memorable in the Scriptures for Gold, Bdellium, and the Onyx-ſtone; which doth abundantly ſet forth the richneſs and commodities of it: Bdellium being a Tree (for of the other two nothing need be ſaid) about the bigneſs of an Olive, yielding a certain Gum very ſweet to ſmell to, but bitter of taſte; which in time hardneth to a Pearl, as Engubinus and Beroaldus have dilivered to us.

Divided anciently into many particular Regions, or at leaſt known by ſeveral names in its ſeveral quarters. For where it bordered upon Tigris, it was called Melitene; Gabandene, where it touched upon Perſis, where it confined on the Elymæans, it had the name of Ciſſia; and near the Wall or Dich called Vallum Paſini, it was called Characene. Watered beſides Eulæus, and Tigris before ſpoken of, with the Rivers Orontes and Maſæus; with that branch of the River Tigris which Ptolomy called Baſilæus; Curtius, Paſi-Tigris, and the Scriptures, Piſon.

Chief Cities hereof, 1 Arucca, ſpoken of by Ptolomy, the ſame which the Scriptures call Erech, and one of the four which Nimrod built in the firſt beginning of his Empire, Gen. 11. Remembred by Tibullus for the Fountains of Naphta (of which the Medians made their Oyl ſpoken of before) a bituminous liquor, eaſily taking fire, but not eaſily quenched. Of which thus the Poet;

Ardet Areccæis aut unda perhoſpita Campis.

Where by unda perhoſpita, he meaneth that bituminous liquor called Naphta, iſſuing from the fields of Erech, as the learned Salmaſius hath obſerved in his Notes on Solinus. 2 Suſa, the Shuſan of the Book of Heſter, and Nehemia; honoured with the reſidence of the Perſian Monarchs in Winter, as Ecbatana in Summer. Situate on the River Eulæus, by the Prophet Daniel called Ulai. Built, as ſome ſay, by Memnon the Son of Tithonus, ſlain by the Theſſalians in the Trojan Wars: the Walls whereof, as Caſſiodorus hath reported, cemented with Gold. But howſoever, it was doubtleſs a magnificent City, and of infinite wealth: Alexander finding in it 50000 Talents of Gold uncoined, beſides Silver Wedges, and Jewels of ineſtimable value. Memorable for the great Feaſt here made by Abaſuerus, of 183 days continuance, for his Lords and Princes: imitated by the Perſian Sultans to this very day, who with a Royal Feaſt of the like continuance, do annually entertain their Nobles. Now nothing but a ruine, and perhaps not that. 3 Elymais, the chief City of the Elimai, by Ptolomy (unleſs his Copies be corrupted) miſtakingly called Eldimæi. Situate on the banks of Eulæus alſo, near the border of Perſis (the Nation of the Elamites or Elymei taking part of both Provinces.) Of great Note anciently for a ſumptuous Temple of Diana ſacrilegiouſly ranſacked by Antiochus, of which ſee 1 Mac. 6. 2. and of ſuch wealth, by reaſon of the concourſe of Pilgrims thither, that Severus Sulpitius calleth it Oppidum opulentiſſimum, a moſt opulent City. 4 Sela, on the banks of Eulæus alſo; reckoned by Ammianus amongſt the moſt eminent of this Province: ſo named from Selah, the Son of Arphaxad, who firſt planted there. To whom the building of the City of Suſa is aſcribed by Euſtathius, in his Hexameron, Σελὰ δὲ ὁ Σουσανὶς, are that Authors words; perhaps more truly than to Memnon: and unto whom the Original of the Coſſæi, whom Ptolomy placeth in this Tract, is referred by Euſebius. 5 Tarſiana, another of the Cities mentioned by Ammianus (who takes notice only of the chiefeſt,) the ſame no doubt which Ptolomy calls Tariana, and joyns next to Sela. 6 Agra, upon the banks of Tigris, not far from Erech. But there is little left of theſe, but what is to be found in the ancient Writers; now hardly viſible in their

their Ruins. The Towns of moſt note now remaining, being 7 Jaaroone, inhabited for the moſt part by Jews, of which here are no fewer than a thouſand Families; ſuppoſed to be the deſcendants of thoſe whom Salmanaſſer tranſplanted out of the Kingdom of Iſrael. 8 Saum. 9 Caſa, of which little memorable.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof were the Chuſites of the houſe of Havilah, the Son of Chus; an evident footſtep of whoſe name we have in the Chavilæi, whom Pliny placeth in this Tract, by other Writers called the Chaulotæi & Chaulaſii, as before was noted, with whom were joyned in the firſt plantings of this Country, the Coſſæi and the Suſiani, deſcended from Sala the Son of Arphaxad; and the Elymæi, the poſterity of Elam the Son of Sem. Betwixt the two laſt Nations long and frequent wars, till the Kings of Babylon or Aſſyria compoſed the differences, by making both ſubject to their Empire. After this, nothing memorable in the ſtory of it, till the tranſplanting of the ten Tribes into the Regions of Aſſyria, and the Cities of Media. At which time, as many of the Iſraelites were removed hither; ſo many of this Nation were ſent out (with others) to poſſeſs themſelves of the void places of thoſe Tribes. Called Cutheans by the Jews, becauſe the moſt conſiderable number of them came from this Province, called in the Scriptures Cuſh, by Joſephus Cutha; and by him reckoned for a Region of Perſia, as indeed it was, the time when he lived conſidered; different only in the Dialect or form of ſpeech: that Country which the Hebrews called Chus, being named Cuth by the Chaldeans; by the Perſians, Chuzeſtan: that name continuing to this day.

2. PERSIS.

PERSIS hath on the Eaſt, Carmania; on the Weſt, Suſiana; on the North, Media; and on the South, ſome part of the Perſian Bay, or Sinus Perſicus, which took name from hence. The reaſon of the name we have had before; this being the predominant Province which in fine gave both Name and Law to the reſt of this Empire. It had anciently been called Cephene, but now moſt commonly by the name of Fars, or Pharſiſtan; more near to Pharas, the old name of it, both in the Arabick and Hebrew.

Such parts hereof as lie toward the North are cold and hilly, not apt to bear either Fruit or Corn, in any plenty. Some Emeralds they find there, but not very clear. Thoſe parts which lie towards the Perſian Gulf, of as bad a nature, though of different quality; ſandy, and hot, and beareth little fruit but Dates, and few trees but Palm. But betwixt both there lyeth a rich and pleaſant Country, abounding with Corn, Fruit, and Cattel; great ſtore of Roſes, of Roſe-water conſequently: wherewith, and with thoſe skins which we call commonly by the name of Cordovans from another occaſion, they uſe to furniſh all the adjoyning Provinces. And to make up the Character of a happy Country, to which nothing wanteth, it is well ſtored with Lakes and Rivers; the chief whereof are 1 Bagradas, which divideth this Province from Carmania. 2 Rhogomanes, by ſome called Araxes, now Binaimir, on whoſe banks ſtood the renowned Perſepolis. 3 Orontes, dividing Perſis from Suſiana, where it falls into the Bay. 4 Briſoana, ending its courſe in the ſame Sea alſo.

Mountains of Note I find not any, but thoſe which part this Region from Suſiana. Not known by any ſpecial name (for ought I can find;) but of ſufficient Note for the difficult paſſages out of one Country into the other, called Pylæ Perſidis, defended by Ariobarzanes, a Noble Perſian, againſt Alexander the Great, who was here very handſomely beaten, and forced to ſave himſelf by a cloſe retreat. And though Alexander was ſhewed a By-path afterwards, whereby he fell on Ariobarzanes ere he was aware: yet he was taught by this hard Leſſon, that if thoſe who kept the ſtraits of Cilicia, and the banks of Tigris and Euphrates, had made like reſiſtance, he had not bought the Perſian Monarchy in ſo cheap a Market.

It was divided anciently into Paraticine, bordering on Media. 2 Mardiene, joyning on the Gulf or Bay of Perſia. 3 Miſdia, lying betwixt both. Each of which, with the ſeveral Nations intermingled here as in other places, had their ſeveral Cities. The chief whereof 1 Auſiaza, ſeated on the Bay betwixt the mouths of Bagradas, and Briſoana. 2 Jonacapolis, on the ſame Bay alſo, near the influx of Rhogomanes, or Araxes. 3 Axima, more within the Land, now called Lanſilla. 4 Marraſium, 5 Obroatis, or Orebatis, as ſome Copies have it. 6 Paſarracha, in the Greek Text of Ptolomy called Paſacgada, and Paſagrada by Qu. Curtius. Memorable for the Sepulchre of Cyrus the firſt Perſian Monarch. Which violated by a Souldier of Alexander's, in hope of finding ſome rich booty, he met with nothing but this modeſt Inſcription, Cyrus ego ſum qui Perſicum regnum conſtitui: quicunque ades mortalium, ne mihi tantillum telluris invideas, qua corpus meum obtegitur. The Sacrilegious Souldeir, though a Macedonian, put to death by Alexander. 7 Perſepolis, the chief City of this Province, and of all the Eaſt, called therefore Regia Orientis by Qu. Curtius; ſituate near the banks of the River Araxes, and built for the moſt part of Cypres wood, the walls of the houſes being made of Marble, digged out of an adjoyning Mountain. Affirmed by Diodorus Siculus, who at large deſcribes it, to be the richeſt and goodlieſt City in all the world. And well we may believe him for the richneſs of it, Alexander finding here 120000 Talents in ready money for his own ſhare, after the Souldiers had made what ſpoil they liſted of Coin, Plate, Bullion, Images of Gold and Silver, and Jewels of unſpeakable value. But the chief beauty of it was the Royal Palace, built on an Hill, environed with a treble Wall, the firſt of 16 Cubits height, the ſecond of thirty, and third of ſixty, all of them of black poliſhed Marble, with ſtately Battlements, and in the Circuit of the whole Palace an hundred Turrets; which gave to the beholders far and near a moſt goodly Proſpect. Nor was the inſide of leſs beauty, than the outſide of Majeſty: the Roof thereof ſhining with Ivory, Silver, Gold, and Amber; and the Kings Throne being wholly compoſed of Gold, and the richeſt Pearls. But rich and ſtately though it were, and one of the greateſt Ornaments of the Eaſtern world, it was by Alexander in a drunken fit conſumed with fire, at the inſtigation of Lais that infamous ſtrumpet; as in revenge for ſo many Cities of the Greeks, which the Perſians formerly had burnt in the Grecians wars. And though Alexander in his ſober ſenſe did repent him of it, and gave order that it ſhould be re-edified; yet did it never riſe to its former height, the Conquerour dying ſhortly after, and that purpoſe with him. So ruined in the Age of Qu. Curtius, (who lived in the time of Claudius Cæſar) that he profeſſeth veſtigium ejus non inveniri niſi Araxes amnis oſtenderet, that no footſteps of it had been found, if not ſhewn and pointed out by the River Araxes, on whoſe banks it ſtood. But by the fall thereof roſe 8 Shiras, now the chief City of this Province, ſituate in a fair large Plain hemmed about with Mountains, under one of which it is pleaſantly ſeated; in compaſs about nine miles, well built and beautified with fair Gardens and magnificent Moſques: two of which larger than the reſt, are made more eminent by the addition of two Spires or Steeples Steeples covered with a painting of Gold and Azure; the Fabricks for the most part of Mosaick work, as light also by night as day, by reason of a thousand Lamps burning nightly in them. A City (as is said by a modern Traveller) which for good Wine, pretty Women, pleasant Fruits, and a gallent People, may hold comparison with the best in Persia. 9 Moyown, on the North-east of Shiras, delightfully situate amongst the Woods and fruitful Pastures, and blessed not only with good Wine, but wholesome Waters; of which last, few parts of Persia have much cause to brag. 10 Bannaraw, on the South-west of Shiras towards Carmania, chiefly remarkable for the ruins of an ancient Castle, situate on the top of a lofty Mountain. 11 Goyaam, a Town of a thousand houses. 12 Berry, of no great bigness, but of most esteem, by reason of a fair Mosque, a School for the Arabick Tongue, and the Sepulchre of one of their false Prophets; of which the Persians, besides Mahomet, and Mortis-Ali, do acknowledge many.

The first Inhabitants here were of the posterity of Elam the Son of Sem, and such who under his conduct were settled here; called from hence Elamites in the usual style of holy Scriptures by the Greeks and Latines, Elymæi: who spreading themselves into Susiana, and by degrees also into other Provinces, became so considerable, that the name of Elamite and Elam were of great renown: having a language to themselves distinct from that of the Medes and Parthians, as is apparent Acts 2. and comprehending under that appellation, the adjoyning Regions, as appears plainly in the eighth of the Prophet Daniel, where Susa is said to be in the Province of Elam. How the name was changed into that of Persia, hath been shewn before. Such as continued in this Province, divided into the Tribes of the Mesabatæ, Rapsii, Hippophagi, Suzæi, Megorcs, and Stabæi, were at first under the command of their own Princes only: amongst which Chedorlaomer is of greatest fame, who having the conduct of some Adventurers of this Nation, associated himself with Amraphel the Leader of some Assyrian Troops: and by the name of the Kings of Elam and Assyria invaded Palestine, subdued the City of Sodom, took Lot prisoner, and in the end were overthrown by the Forces of Abraham. Of no Note after this Expedition, till the time of Perses the Father of Achæmenes, who being Provincial Governour of these Countries under Sardanapalus, joyned with Arbaces and Belochus in the War against him: and by the victory, got for himself the dominion over those Estates, which he had formerly ruled for the Assyrians; with reference to the Kings of Media as the Supreme Lords. Whose Successors, till the time of Cyrus, take in order thus:

The KINGS of PERSIS.

1 Persis, from whom perhaps the name of Persis may be more properly derived, than either from Perseus the Son of Danae; or the Son of Perseus by Andromeda.

2 Achæmenes, from whom the Persians had the name of Achæmenii, and the succeeding Kings were called Achæmenides.

3 Cambyses, in some places of Herodotus called also Darius.

4 Cyrus, from whose second son named Teispeus, descended that Darius, the Son of Hystaspis, one of the seven Persian Princes, who got the Kingdom on the expiration of the present Line, and the extirpation of the Magi; of which more hereafter.

5 Cambyses II. the Son of Cyrus.

6 Cyrus II. sirnamed the Great, son of Cambyses, and of Mandane the daughter of Astyages King of Media: who joyning with Cyaxares, or Darius Medus, overthrew the Babylonian Empire; and translated thereby the Supreme power to the Medes and Persians. Of which more hereafter.

3 CARMANIA.

CARMANIA is bounded on the East, with Gedrosia, and some part of Aria; on the West, with part of Persis, and the Gulf of Persia, from hence called also by the name of Sinus Carmanicus; on the North, with Parthia; and on the South, with the main Indian Ocean. So called from the Carmani, a chief people of it: but the reason of that name I find not. It is now generally called Chyrman; those parts of it which lie next to Parthia, which Ptolomy calleth Carmania Deserta, being now named Mingia, and by some Dulcinde.

The Country for the most part barren, and but ill inhabited. That part which Ptolomy calleth Carmania Deserta, being truly such; a Wilderness or very Desart, having in it neither Town nor Village, but some scattered houses, and those but ill provided of food and necessaries, full of unprofitable Sands, destitute of Water, and of a very hot and unhealthy Air. And though the other part hereof which lieth towards the Ocean, hath a Sea-coast of above 200 Leagues in length, and many Rivers emptying themselves into it, yet are they not the richer by it, the shores being full of Rocks, and the Rivers small; so that they neither have good Port, nor safe coming to it. The best Commodities hereof (besides their Manufactures) are Dates, Myrrhe, Arsenic, some few Mines of Silver, more of Brass and Iron, and good store of Alabastar. The Inhabitans hereof were anciently called Ichthyophagi, because they lived wholly upon Fish, the Country yielding little else for the life of man. Carmani sine veste ac fruge, sine pecore ac sedibus, piscium cute se velant, carne vescuntur, præter capita toto corpore hirsuti. The Carmans (saith Pomponius Mela) have neither fruits, nor raiment, nor house, nor cattel; but cloath themselves with the skins, and feed themselves with the flesh of Fishes; hairy, not only on their heads, but over all their bodies also. Where by the way, Ammianus Marcellinus must be out in his informations, who telleth us of these very Carmans, that their Country, though far less than that of Arabia Felix, and far more obscure, was as well replenished with Rivers; and for fertility of soil not inferiour to it. But we must understand the one of the best parts of Carmania; the other of Desarta only.

Amongst the Rivers which he reckoneth of greater name than the rest, he mentioneth, 1 Saganis. 2 Sagareus, and 3 Hydriacus. Of which Saganis only is named by Ptolomy, the other Rivers, or the same under divers names, being 1 Dara. 2 Andanius. 3 Catbrarpis. 4 Achindana. 5 Salarus, (the Sagareus, as I take it of Ammianus.) 6 Caudriaces. 7 Zoramba. And 8 Samidace, most of them falling into the Gulf of Persia, few Navigable, or of any use in the way of Trading.

Mountains of most Note, 1 that called Semiramis, from some exploit of that great Lady. 2 Strongilus, so named from the roundness of it; and 3 a continued ridge of Hills, dividing this Country from Gedrosia.

Places of most observation it it, 1 Cantharis. 2 Agris. 3 Tisa, honoured by Ptolomy with the names of Cities. 4 Cyrza, and 5 Gocharta, two Port-Towns. 6 Alexandria, bearing the name of that great Conquerour, who here or hereabouts kept his Bacchanalia, whereof more anon.

anon. 7 Portoſpana, by Ammianus called Ortoſpana, and by him reckoned amongſt the faireſt and richeſt of all the Country. 8 Armuza, (or Armuzium as Pliny calleth it,) on the ſhore of the Gulf, giving name to a Promontory near adjoyning, and to the noble Iſle of Ormus, of which more anon. 9 Gunbroone, not long ſince a poor Village; but ſince the fall of Ormus (from which not above nine miles diſtant) grown a populous Town, conſiſting at the leaſt of a thouſand houſes. 10 Jaſques, at the opening of the Perſian Gulf into which it looketh, whence the Promontory of it, called Carpella, is of late named Capo di Jaſques. 11 Carmania, the Metropolis or mother City of the Province, in former times of good eſteem; and now of paſſing good repute both for Cloth of Gold, and the making of the beſt Scymitars. A weapon (whereſoever made) of ſuch value amongſt the Mahometans, and ſo eſteemed of by the Turks, that at the overthrow of the Navy at the battel of Corfu, Anno 1574. moſt of them who were taken Priſoners threw their Scymitars into the Sea, for fear the Chriſtians ſhould be maſters of ſuch excellent weapons. It is now called Chyrman, by the name of the Province, as in former times; with very little difference from the ancient name. 12 Lar, more within the Land towards Perſis, ſeated in a barren and inhoſpirable Country, full of huge heaps of ſand, both looſe and dangerous, moved and removed as the wind ſitteth, into Plains and Mountains: without Graſs, Water, Herbs, or any other neceſſary for the uſe of Travellers; the City being ſerved with rain-water only, entertained with great joy when it falleth, and kept in Ciſterns. The City notwithſtanding large, and of good capacity, containing not long ſince to the number of 5000 houſes: of which the greateſt part, in the year 1590. were thrown down by an Earthquake: now moſt remarkable for a fair Market-place of about 180 paces ſquare; a goodly Moſque, adorned with Moſaick work, and a ſtrong Caſtle ſeated on the top of an hill, furniſhed with great plenty of Ordnance brought hither from Ormuz. This once a Kingdom of it ſelf, or the head City of a Kingdom, acknowledging no ſubjection to the Perſian Sophies: till conquered to that Crown by Emangoli Chawn Duke of Shiras, who ſent hence as much treaſure as was ſaid to load 700 Camels; and put to death the poor King with his whole Poſterity, Anno 1604. or thereabouts. 13 Tecoa, or Pea-chow, a Town of the juriſdiction of Lar, not far from which is a huge Wall cut out of the ſolid Rock by incredible labour, which ſerved formerly both for the boundary and defence of that ſandy Kingdom againſt the Perſians.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof, were the Poſterity of Sabta, the Son of Chus, who wanting room on the Coaſt of Arabia Felix, where they were firſt planted, paſſed over into Sophta (from them ſo named) an Iſland of the Perſian Gulf, and afterwards into the main Land of Carmania, where they built and gave name unto the City of Sabis, which we find in Ptolomy. Divided in ſome tract of time into the ſeveral Nations of the Sazotæ, Aræ, Charadræ, Chelonophagi, Cabadinæ, and Paſagardæ.

Neither the People nor the Country memorable in the way of ſtory; but by Accident only: it being here that Alexander being returned out of India, kept his Bacchanalia, in imitation of Bacchus, who firſt conquered that Nation. Night and day he was continually feaſting with his friends, on a Scaffold drawn with eight horſes; his Companions following in their Chariots: ſome adorned with Purple and Silk; others with Flowers and green Boughs; themſelves wearing Garlands on their heads, and carrying their carowſing Cups in their hands. In this Army there was neither Helmet, Sword, Arrow, or Buckler ſeen: all their Armour, was Cups, Barrels, and Flagons; their Skirmiſhing, Eating, Drinking, Laughing, and Singing. Attended they were by Minſtrels, playing on their Flutes; by Women dancing, Boyes ſhouting, all playing the drunken fools moſt naturally. Thus march they through the Country of Carmania, in as great diſſoluteneſs as if BACCHUS himſelf had indeed been there, and led the Mummery; and for ſeven whole days this ſottiſhneſs continued. So that Curtius well obſerveth, Si quid victis ſaltem adverſus comeſſantes animi fuiſſet, mille hercule viri, modò & ſobrii, ſeptem dierum crapulâ graves in ſuo triumpho capere potuerunt: a thouſand Perſians, ſober and well provided, had their hearts been anſwerable to ſo good an opportunity, might have deſtroyed this drunken Army, and redeemed at once the honour of their Country, and their own liberty.

4. ORMUZ.

ORMUZ, not ſo much memorable for the greatneſs, as the wealth, and the conveniency of the ſituation of it, is an Iſland ſituate in the entrance of the Perſian Gulf: commanding not long ſince, over ſome part of the Continent of Carmania, and ſome few Towns of Arabia Felix, and moſt of the Iſlands of the Bay. And therfore before we come to ſpeak of the Iſle it ſelf, we muſt take a brief ſurvey of the Sea or Bay called Sinus Perſicus, according to our method in other places.

SINUS PERSICUS, the Gulf or Bay of Perſia, ſo famous, ſo full of Iſlands, and ſo much frequented (I uſe the words of Ammianus Marcellinus) beginneth at Harmozonta, (the ſame which Ptolomy calls Armuza) a Cape or Promontory of Carmania: from which unto a Cape or Foreland of Arabia Felix, which the Inhabitants call Maces, the paſſage is ſo ſtrait and narrow, that one may very eaſily ſee to the oppoſite ſhore. The Strait once paſſed, the Bay beginneth to open and enlarge it ſelf, as far as the City of Teredon (now called Balſora) where Euphrates after many downfals is loſt in the Sea. The whole Gulf meaſured by the ſhores, of Orbicular form, in compaſs 20000 Furlongs, (or 2500 Italian miles) in all the Coaſts and ſides whereof the Villages and Towns ſtand exceeding thick, affording frequent paſſage to and fro for ſhipping. So far, and to this purpoſe he. To which deſcription of his, ſo exact and punctual, our late Navigations have not added much but the change of names: the whole Bay being now called Mare Elkariffe, and the entrances thereunto the Straits of Balſora; theſe laſt ſo called becauſe they opened the way to the Town of Balſora, the moſt noted Empory of thoſe parts in the times foregoing.

Chief Iſles hereof, beſides thoſe on the Arabian ſhore, of which we have already ſpoken, are 1 Taxiana, on the Coaſt of Suſiana. 2 Tabiana. 3 Sophtha, and 4 Alexandria, or the Iſle of Alexander, on the ſhores of Perſis. Of which that which is called Sophtha, ſeems to take name from Sabta the Son of Chus, planted upon the oppoſite ſhore of Arabia Felix; and therein giving name to the City of Saphta, which we find in Ptolomy: And finally joyning to Carmania, there are the Iſlands called, 5 Sagdana, the chief Town whereof was anciently named Miltus; and 6 Vorochtha, ſituate at the very mouth of the Straits, now called ORMUS, by the name of the Town and Promontory of Armuza, in Carmania, near adjoyning to it, and unto which it did in former times belong.

This Iſland ſituate as is ſaid at the mouth of the Gulf or Bay of Perſia, is in compaſs about 20 miles, ſtony, and full of Rocks, in a manner barren of all neceſſaries except except ſalt, wherewith their very rocks are covered, and of ſalt-ſtones many houſes built. So deſtitute of all things fitting for the life of man, that the Inhabitants had all their victuals, even the very water which they drank, from ſome of the adjoyning Countries. The air ſo hot in time of Summer, that the people reſt themſelves in Caves covered over with wood, where they ſtand or ſit in water up to the chin; and have loop-holes in the tops of their houſes to let in the wind. Which notwithſtanding, in regard of the ſituation, it was of late one of the richeſt Empories in all the world; the wealth of Perſia and Eaſt-India being brought hither, and conveyed hence up by water to the River Euphrates, and ſo by Boats, or on Camels backs to Aleppo, Alexandretta, Tripolis; from whence diſperſed into all the Countries on the Mediterranean, and to ſome beyond.

The people hereof in their perſons, habit, and Religion, participate ſomewhat of the Arabians, but moſt of the Perſians. Mahometans for the moſt part, of the Sophian Sect: the reſt, but few in number, of the Chriſtian; to which converted by the preaching of Father Gaſper, a Portugal Jeſuite, ſince the ſettling of that Nation there.

The chief and only City was of the ſame name with the Iſland, founded ſome ſeven hundred years ago by one Mahomet Dranku, deſcended from the Kings of Saba in Arabia Felix: who with many Families of the Sabæans, paſſed over the Straits into Carmania, and the Iſles adjoyning, and liking the ſituation of this Iſland, built this City in it; which he called Ormus, or Armuzium, according to the name of the Town and Promontory, upon which it lieth. The City ſeated at one end of the Iſle, about two miles in compaſs, well built, and adorned with a fair Market-place, ſome Churches, and a well fortified Caſtle furniſhed with all neceſſaries to maintain a Siege. By reaſon of its wealth and reſort of Merchants, grown to ſuch eſteem, that it gave occaſion to this Diſtich;

Si terrarum Orbis quaqua patet annulus eſſet,
Illius Ormuſium gemma decuſque foret.

That is to ſay,

Were all the World a Ring, this Iſle alone
Might of that Ring be thought to be the Stone.

It was firſt under its own King, whoſe Dominion extended alſo into ſome part of the Continent on either ſide, and over all the reſt of the Iſlands within the Gulf. His Revenue of no great yearly value till the coming of the Portugals hither, by whom it was diſcovered under the conduct of Albukerque, Anno 1506. Who having fortified ſome part of it for their own defence, and made it the Staple of their Trade for the Indian Merchandiſe, ſo enriched the ſame, that the Revenues of thoſe Kings (though Vaſſals and Tributaries to the Portugals) amounted to 140000 Seriffs yearly. In this flouriſhing ſtate it ſtood till the year 1622. when Abas the Sultan of Perſia having received ſome affront at the hands of the Portugueze; or deſirous to remove the trade of Ormuz, to ſome Port of his own, gave order to Emangoli Chawn, the Duke of Shiras, to lay ſiege unto it, with an Army of 15000 men. Who ſeeing no hopes of maſtering it by his Land-forces only, furniſhed himſelf with the Ships ard Cannon of ſome Engliſh Merchants, to whom he promiſed many things which he never performed. For being once Maſter of the City, he deſtroyed it utterly, removing the Ordnance to Lar, the wealth thereof to his own Treaſury of Shiras, the materials of the houſes to Gombroon, ſpoken of before: the Portugueze and Chriſtian Natives paſſing over unto Muskahat, in Arabia Felix. Since which time though the Engliſh Captains that ventured in it, were diſappointed of the ſpoil which they did expect; yet ſo much honour hath been given by the King of Perſia to the Engliſh Nation, that their Agent who reſideth at Gombroon takes Cuſtom of all ſtrangers which do traffick thither.

5. GEDROSIA.

GEDROSIA is bounded on the Weſt, with Carmania; on the Eaſt, with Cambaia or Guzarat, a Province of India; on the South, with the main Indian Ocean, on the North, with Drangiana, and Arachoſia. The reaſon of the name I find not. Now by Mercator, called Geſt; by Caſtaldus, Circan.

The Country deſolate and barren; like the worſt part of Carmania, much deſtitute of freſh water, and covered over with looſe ſands, dangerous to the native and ſtranger both. Some rain they have, but not ſufficient to allay the heat and drought which they ſuffer under; and yet by reaſon of that heat it affordeth in ſome places Nard and Myrrhe, with ſome other Spices. Some Brooks here are, or rather Torrents, which falling from the hills do ſomewhat qualifie the indiſpoſition of the ſoil, and make it habitable; The chief of which was called Arbius anciently; the chief Mountain, Bætius.

Towns of moſt name in it, 1 Rhagiana, honoured by Ptolomy with the name of a City; and 2 a Port or Harbour called Mulierum Portus, or the Haven of Women. 3 Arbis, upon the banks of the River Arbius, preſented to us alſo by the name of a City. 4 Muſarna, the chief of the Muſarnæ, a chief Tribe of this Country. 5 Parſis, or rather Eaſis, as the Greek Text hath it, the Metropolis of the whole Province in the time of Ptolomy. 6 Geſt, the chief City at the preſent; but for nothing memorable.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Maſarnæ, bordering on Arachoſia, the Parſiræ towards Carmania, the Rhamnæ on the borders of India, and the Orbitæ, or Arbiturі, on the ſhores of the Ocean. The Country of no note in preceding times, till made famous by the follies of Alexander: Who finding by the hard bout which he had with Porus, that there was little hopes of the Conqueſt of India, would needs make a fruitleſs voyage to ſee the Ocean. And having ſatisfied himſelf with the ſight of that furious Element (as if his very ſeeing it had ſufficiently ſubdued it to him) landed his Army on this Coaſt. Where in his march, for want of Victuals, water, and other neceſſaries, he loſt more men in the vaſt and uncomfortable Deſarts of this Country, than in all the military ſervices he had put them to; the Army which he carried with him into India, amounting unto 15000 Horſe, and 120000 Foot; whereof hardly the fourth part came back to Babylon. So dearly did he pay for his indiſcretion.

6. DRANGIANA.

DRANGIANA hath on the South, Gedroſia; on the North and Weſt, bounded with Aria; on the Eaſt, with Arachoſia. So called from Drangius, now Ilment, the chief River of it; the modern name thereof being Sigeſtan, from Sige, the now principal City.

The Country very hilly, and ſo cloſed with Mountains, that the River above named is ſcarce able to force its paſſage thorow them. Of no great beauty to invite, or reward a Conquerour, yet with the reſt, brought under the great Perſian Monarchs; the fortunes of which Crown they have alwaies followed. So meanly planted, that Ptolomy findeth in it but ten Towns of name; the chief whereof, 1 Ariaſpe, miſtook perhaps for Agriaſpe; and if ſo, then the Mother-City of the Agriaſpæ, whom Curtius placeth in this Tract. 2 Propthaſia, by ſome of the Ancients called Phradag, the Metropolis of this poor Province: much boaſted of by the old Inhabitants hereof, who had ſeen no better, (as Country-Villagers uſe to brag of the next Market-Town) and ſaid by Ammianus to be rich, and of high renown, the quality of the place conſidered. Still of ſome Note amongſt the Natives, by whom called Siſtan. 3 Arivada. 4 Pharaza, of which nothing memorable. 5 Sige, now of moſt credit in this Country, from hence called Sigeſtan. 6 Timocani. 7 Mulebet, the chief ſeat of the Kingdom of Aladine, or Aleadine, who had here a Fools-Paradiſe of his own, of which more anon.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Batrii, and the Darandæ, from which laſt, the greateſt of the two, the Country might perhaps be called originally Darandiana; abbreviated to Drandiana, and at laſt corrupted eaſily into Drangiana. But I offer this only as a conjectural. They were called alſo by ſome Writers by the name of Arabians; and that as Ammianus thinks, becauſe they deſcended from that people: but I think rather from a branch of the River Arabius, which parteth this Country from Gedroſia. For I conceive the Arabians were too wiſe to forſake their own Country, and go ſo far, to get ſo little by the bargain. Together with the reſt of the Perſian Provinces, ſubdued by Alexander; who being in this Country, hapned on the diſcovery of the treaſon intended againſt him by Philotas the ſon of Parmenio, the moſt renowned of all his Captains. After this little memorable till theſe latter daies, when it grew famous by means of Aladine a ſeditious Perſian, Lord of the valley of Mulebet, ſpoken of before; who there made a terreſtrial Paradiſe, which he promiſed to all his Partizans: but the Company growing too great for the ſafety of the Kingdom, they were quickly diſperſed; and Aladine, with his Fools-Paradiſe, both taken away together, Anno 1262. Some attribute this fiction of Paradiſe to Aladeules, the Mountain King of Taurus, vanquiſhed by Selim the firſt. The whole ſtory is this, out of Paulus Venetus. Aladine inhabited a Valley in this Country, the entrance into which he fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, called Tigado. Hither he brought all the luſty Youths, and beautiful Maidens of the adjoyning Provinces. The women were confined to their Chambers, the men to Priſon; where having endured much ſorrow, they were ſeverally caſt into dead ſleeps, and conveyed to the women: by whom they were entertained with all the pleaſures youth and luſt could deſire, or a ſenſual mind affect. Having enjoyed this happineſs a whole day, they were in a like ſleep conveyed to their Irons. Then would Aladine inform them how they had been in Paradiſe, and that he could ſeat them there eternally, if they durſt hazard themſelves in his quarrels. This when they had ſworn to do, they were deſtinated to the maſſacre of ſuch Princes as were like to prove his bad neighbours; and they accordingly did execution. But neither he, nor Aladeules, were the firſt who trained up their followers in the Arts of murder. One there was before either of them, whom the Writers of thoſe times call the Old man of the Mountains, inhabiting the Mountainous parts of Tyre and Sidon; and from thence ſending his Diſciples on the like Temptations, to make away the Weſtern Princes whom he ſtood in fear of, during the courſe of the Holy Wars. For out of his School came thoſe wretches who murdered the Count of Tripolis, being in the Church at his Devotions; and deſperately ſlew Conrade Marqueſs of Montferrat, walking openly in the Market-place at Tyre; and with like careleſſneſs of their own lives, dangerouſly wounded Prince Edward (after King of England) ſitting in his Tent. Theſe the Italians call Aſſaſſines (whence the word to Aſſaſſinate) intimating thereby a deſperate Cut-throat, but the reaſon of that name is not yet agreed on: miſtakingly by ſome Latine Writers of the darker times, called Arſacidæ, and their commander Rex Arſacidarum; as if deſcended from Arſaces, the founder of the Arſacidan Race of the Kings of Perſia.

7. ARACHOSIA.

ARACHOSIA hath on the Weſt, Drangiana; on the Eaſt, a branch of the great River Indus; on the South, Gedroſia; and Paropamiſus, on the North. So called from Arachoſia the chief City of it; but now beſt known by the name of Cabul, the name of the chief City at this preſent.

Of the Country I find little ſpoken, but that it is watered with a branch of the River Indus, or rather with ſome nameleſs River which falleth into it. By the overflowings whereof is made a Lake, which Ammianus calleth Arachotoſcrene, by Ptolomy called Arachotos; after the name of Arachotos the chief town of it, near to which it is.

Towns here were once thirteen, whoſe names and ſituation we find in Ptolomy; but little or nothing of them in other Writers. The principal 1 Arachotos, on the Lake ſo named, ſaid to be built by Semiramis in her march towards India, and by her to have been named Cephene. 2 Alexandria, or (for diſtinctions ſake) Alexandria Arachoſiæ, the work of Alexander the Great, in his like march againſt the Indians: built at the foot of one of the branches of Mount Taurus ſhooting towards the South, and peopled with a Colony of 7000 old Macedonian Souldiers, foreſpent with age, and with the travel of the Wars, whom he left there to inhabit it, his Army being here recruited with the Forces which had ſerved under Parmenio, conſiſting of 12000 Grecians and Macedonians. It is now called Cabul, accounted the chief City of it, and in that capacity gives the name of Cabul unto all the Province. 3 Arbaca, ſeeming by the name, to be the work of one Arbaces; but whether of Arbaces the great King of the Medes, I am not able to ſay. 4 Choaſpa, near ſome River of that name, as I conjecture; there being beſides Choaſpes the chief River of Media, another of that name alſo in India: and probably another hereabouts to give name ro this Town. 5 Phoclis. 6 Sigara. 7 Dammana, of which I find nothing but the names. 8 Sin, now a Town of name amongſt them, but not much obſervable.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Pargyetæ, called alſo Arimaſpæ, and Euergetæ, a powerful Nation of themſelves, brought under the command of Alexander by means of Ammenides, ſometimes the Secretary of Darius, whom he made their Governour. And beſides them the Syeri, Rophitæ, and the Eoritæ; which three made up the main body of the Arachoſians, committed by Alexander to the Government and command of Menon. Following after this the fortunes of the Perſian Empire, they changed their Maſters as that did, till the coming of the Tartars. Since that time governed for the moſt part, by a King of their own, eſpecially ſince that dividing of the Kingdom of Perſia amongſt Tamerlane's Children. Some of which held it as a diſtinct Eſtate, by the names of the Kings of Cabul; till growing great by the Conqueſt of ſome parts of India, they took unto themſelves the name of the Great Mongul: Now Lords not only of this Country, but of the greateſt part of India on this ſide of Ganges; of whom we ſhall ſpeak more when we are in India, that being the chief Seat of their Power and Empire.

8. PAROPAMISUS.

PAROPAMISUS is bounded on the South, with Arachoſia; on the North, with Bactria, from which parted by the main body of Mount Taurus, which is here called Paropamiſus, by the name of the Country: on the Eaſt, with ſome part of India; on the Weſt, with Aria. So called quaſi Paropaneſus, from the reſemblance which it hath to an Iſland, begirt on all ſides almoſt with Rivers: in which reſpect by Ptolomy called Paropaniſus, and not Paropamiſus; by which laſt name the Latines for the moſt part call it; ſome of them Paropamiſſus, with a double ſſ. But that name being loſt long ſince, it is now by ſome called Dache, by others, Candahor, but moſt commonly Subleſtan.

The Country Mountainous and hilly, here and there intermixt with Valleys: the Mountains of great height, and exceeding barren; the Valleys indifferent fruitful, but ſo over-ſhadowed with thoſe hills, that the cleareſt day in ſome places ſeems but like a twilight. The people as obſcure as their Country, ſcarce known to any of their Neighbours in the time of Alexander; the barbarous Nations neareſt to them eſteeming them unworthy of their acquaintance. Agreſte hominum genus, & inter Barbaros maximè inconditum, as it is in Curtius.

Rivers of moſt Note herein, 1 Oxus, (of which before) which riſing out of Mount Caucaſus, paſſeth Northwards, and after wards divideth Bactria from Sogdiana. 2 Dargamanis. 3 Coacus, both owing their original to ſome of the branches of Mount Taurus. Which chain of hills beginning hereabouts to draw towards their height, are towards the Weſt called Paroetes, where they give being to the River Dargamanis, before named: more Eaſtward they have the name of Paropamiſus; and Caucaſus they are properly called where they are thwarted by Imaus, in the very point, as it were, where Scythia, India, and the Perſian Territories do encounter each other. The hills in that place mounted to ſo great an height, that from the tops thereof, the Stars appear much greater than in other places; the riſing and ſetting of which are from hence eaſily diſcerned. Made memorable by the Fable of Prometheus, who is ſaid to have been bound here by command of Jupiter; on which, Vinctum Promethea fuiſſe antiquitas tradit, ſaith the Hiſtorian. Prometheus is indeed by the Poets feigned to have ſtoln fire from Heaven, and to have made a man of clay: for which preſumptuous fact, Jupiter bound him on the hill Caucaſus, where a Vulture continually fed on his Liver. But according either to the truth of Story, or their gheſs at leaſt, who make ſome Story the ground of every Fable, Prometheus being a very wiſe man, inſtructed the dead and clayie carcaſſes of others in wiſdom; and that being very deſirous to learn the nature of the Stars, (which is the fire he ſtole from Heaven) he made the higheſt part of Mount Caucaſus his ſtudy: where the inward care he had to accompliſh his deſire, might juſtly have been compared to a Vulture gnawing on his entrails; and of this opinion is St. Auguſtine. But far more memorable is it made for being the reſting place of the Ark of Noah, whereof we have already ſpoken in our General Preface.

Places of moſt conſideration in it, 1 Naulibis, and 2 Ortoſpana, both named by Ptolomy, and reckoned by Ammianus for the moſt famous of this Country. But in what their fame conſiſted I cannot find. 3 Parſiana, 4 Gazaca, 5 Doroacana, 6 Bagarda, all named by Ptolomy, but not elſe obſervable. 7 Candahor, now the Metropolis of the Country, a Town of great Trade, by reaſon of the ſituation of it on the borders of India; in that reſpect giving to the whole Country the name of Candahor. By which name reckoned for a Kingdom, and uſed amongſt the many titles in the Style Imperial. Nothing conſiderable of it in the courſe of Story, but that being once brought under by the Perſian Monarchs, it followed the fortune of the reſt till theſe latter times; when the Perſians being over-laid by the Tartars, it became ſubject to ſome Kings of the Race of Tamerlane, raigning in this Province, till brought under by the Kings of Cabul, of the ſame extraction. Finding thoſe Kings intent on the Conqueſt of India, they freed themſelves from all ſubjection to that Crown, and had Kings of their own, till the year 1600. or thereabouts; when the laſt King, unable to defend himſelf againſt Abduxa, King of the Usbeques (a Tartarian People, but ſubject in ſome ſort to the Crown of Perſia) ſurrendred his Kingdom to Echebar the Great Mongul (deſcended from the old Kings of Cabul) whoſe Dominions border cloſe upon it. Recovered to the Perſian Crown by Mirza the Son of Abas, and the Father of Sophy the now Sultan; a Prince of much gallantry, but of more misfortunes: the Perſian Sophies, ſince that Conqueſt, uſing the title of Kings of Candahor in the Regal ſtyle.

9. ARIA.

ARIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Paropamiſus; on the Weſt, with Parthia; on the North, with Margiana; and on the South, with Drangiana, from which laſt parted by the Mountain Bagoas. A name in old times given to the Province of Media, eſpecially by the Grecians; till changed (as they ſay) into Media, on the coming thither of Medea, For ſo Pauſanias, amongſt others, Παρεγγυσθέντι δὲ εἰς τὴν λεγομένην τότε Ἀρείαν, τοῖς ἀνθρώποις ἔδοξε τὸ ὄνομα κεκλῆσθαι Μήδους ἀπ' αὐτῆς, i. e. coming into the Country then called Aria, ſhe cauſed it after her own name to be called Media. But the name of Aria was not loſt though it were removed; remaining proper to this Country till theſe later Ages, now changed with little alteration, into that of Eri.

The Country much ſubject unto heats, environed with Deſarts, Heaths, and Foreſts; yet near the Mountains which defend them from the heat of the Sun, they have ſome fruitful Champagnes, bearing very good fruits; and amongſt others, a ſtrong wine, and of long continuance; keeping both taſte and colour above 80 years. They have alſo here a Drug ſome what like to Myrrhe, and a kind of Saphyr, but not right.

Rivers of Note I meet with none but that which Ptolomy calleth Arias, by the name of the Province, making a Lake of the ſame name. The Fountain of which River he maketh to be in Paropamiſus, and the fall thereof in the ſaid Lake: the waters of it firſt increaſed by a nameleſs Stream, falling from the Mountains called Seriphi, being that part of Taurus which divideth this Country from Margiana.

Anciently it was populous and well-inhabited, containing above 30 Towns of name and note. Thoſe of moſt conſequence, 1 Aria, on the banks of the River Arias, the ſeat of the Arii, whom Pliny ſpeaketh of in this Tract: but whether they received this name from the Province, or beſtowed their own name upon it, I determine not. 2 Bataxa, 3 Sotera, 4 Orbitana, 5 Sarmagana, 6 Artacanda, by Strabo called Artacana, 7 Niſibis, mentioned both by Ptolomy and Ammianus. 8 Alexandria, bearing the name of the Great Conqueror, by whom planted and made a Colony of his Macedonians, for the better awing of the Country, which by ſome former rebellions had been troubleſome to him. But theſe, and moſt of thoſe remembred by Ptolomy, being grown out of knowledge; there remain now of ſpecial Note, 9 Heri, or Eri, ſeated not far from the place of the ancient Aria, but much ſuperiour to it in ſtrength and greatneſs. Said by Maginus to be in compaſs 13 miles, and ſo plentifully ſtored with Roſes, that the inhabitants of the Country call it the City of Roſes. Naturally of a ſtrong ſituation, compaſſed about with a very good Wall, and watered with deep Channels, conveyed unto it by Tamerlane, that moſt puiſſant Tartar, by whom either founded or repaired. 10 Saſuar, a place of good importance, and the ſecond in eſteem next to Heri it ſelf.

The old Inhabitants were the Maſdarami, Niſæi, Aſtareni, the Caſſirotæ, Obares, Drachamæ, Borgi, Paranti, &c. united altogether in the name of Arians, by that name ſubject to the Perſians, and ſubdued by Alexander. Againſt whom when they had rebelled and were worſted by him, they were compelled to betake themſelves to the ſtrength of a Cave, ſeated upon the top of an inacceſſible Rock, and with ſmall force eaſily defended. But to Alexander nothing was impoſſible. For piling up a great maſs of Timber equal unto the mouth of the Cave, when the wind ſerved opportunely, he put fire unto it; and by that means ſo filled the Cave with fire and ſmoak, that ſome of them were ſtifled, ſome half-burnt, and the reſt forced to yield to the Victor's mercy. Nor was this the only action of Note during that Rebellion, though it was the greateſt. The Common-Souldiers alſo had this honour in it. Sarlibarzanes, a Perſian, whom Alexander had truſted with the Command of this Province, had drawn them unto this Revolt, and became their Head. Who to expreſs his courage in the ſight of the Arians, challenged the proudeſt He of the Macedonians, to a ſingle combate. The challenge chearfully accepted by one Eriguis, one of the moſt aged in the Army: and ſaying aloud, Oſtendam quales milites Alexander habet, he valiantly charged upon the Rebel, and at the ſecond venew ſlew him. The Arians after this trial of their diſabilities, remained in quiet, taking the ſame fortunes as the reſt of the Perſians did, in their change of Maſters. Of late, by Mahomet Codubanda, it was aliened for a time from the Crown of Perſia, and given to Sultan Abas, his ſecond Son; who took unto himſelf in his Fathers life-time the Title of the King of Heri. But coming to the Crown by the murder of his elder Brother, and the death of his Father, he united Heri once again to the Regal Diadem; but kept it as a diſtinct Title in the Royal Style.

10. PARTHIA.

PARTHIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Aria; on the Weſt, with Media; on the North, with Hyrcania; and on the South, with that part of Carmania, which by Ptolomy and others of the Ancients, was called Deſerta. The reaſon of the name we ſhall ſee anon. But that name being laid aſide, it is now called Arach.

The Country walled as it were round with Mountains, and in moſt parts overgrown with Woods: by which defended from thoſe heats to which otherwiſe it would be ſubject, it produceth many things of neceſſary uſe for the life of the people; but nothing for riot and exceſs. In other places where the ſhade of the Wood is wanting, the whole Country is in a manner but a Sandy Deſart, dangerous to Travellers, and impaſſable even with the help of Guides; the ſands continually driven from one place to another, taking away all tracts of a beaten way. For which cauſe there be certain Caſiles at each three miles end, built at the Kings charge, as well for the direction as the reception of Paſſengers; and Cauſeys of many miles in length, in ſome other places, for their better travelling; the ſands of each ſide of them ſo looſe and light, that if a man ſhould fall aſide, he were loſt remedileſs.

The people anciently were very couragious and ſtout, as commonly they are in all barren Countries, and were withal of a Scythian extract and original. Exceeding ſpare of diet, and good reaſon for it, the Country not affording any ſuperfluities; but otherwiſe much given to pleaſures, allowing themſelves plurality of Wives and Concubines. Good Horſemen, and to that ſo uſed, that they conſulted of all buſineſs, both private and publick, when they were on horſe-back. Such lovers of the Wars, that they accompted no man happy after his deceaſe, but who died in Battel; eſteeming of all others but as fools or Cowards. Their Souldiers for the moſt part Slaves, whom they trained up unto their weapons, and to manage horſes: inſomuch as of 50000 Horſe which the Parthian King had in the field againſt Marcus Antonius, there were not above 800 Free-men. But their greateſt fame conſiſted in the handling of their Bow and Arrows, eſteemed the beſt Archers in the world, and not undeſervedly; having the Art of ſhooting backwards, and making their Retreat or Flight more terrible than their charge or onſet. Whence that of Seneca;

Terga converſi metuenda Parthi.
The Parthians flight
Doth moſt affright.

Which, with the manner of their fight, more copiouſly deſcribed by Lucan thus:

Pugna levis, bellumque fugax, turmæque fugaces,
Et melior ceſſiſſe loco quàm pellere miles.
Ilita terra dolis, nec Martem comminus unquam
Auſa pati virtus, ſed longè tendere nervos.

Which I find thus Engliſhed to my hand:

Light skirmiſh, fleeing war, and ſcattered bands,
And better Souldiers when they run away,
Than to cut off an Enemy that ſtands.
Their crafty Gall-thraps on the ground they lay,
Nor dares their courage come to down-right blows,
But fight beſt fartheſt off, moſt truſting to their bows.

From hence it was that M. Craſſus, in his expedition againſt them, being told by an Aſtrologer, that his enterpriſe would prove unproſperous, by reaſon of ſome ill aſpect which he had found in Scorpio; Tuſh man (ſaid he) I fear not Scorpio, but Sagittarius. And to theſe warlike exerciſes of Horſe and Archery, the temper of the air and ſoil gave no ſmall advantages; the dry air ſeaſoning their Bow-ſtrings, and their large fields affording them ſufficient room to train their horſes. Cœlum enim quod ſiccum eſt, nervos intentos facit; Regio tota plana eſt, & ob eam rem equis accommodata, as it is in Dion. But this is to be underſtood not of Parthia only, but the whole Country of Perſia; ſubject at that time to the power of the Parthian Kings. Next to theſe Parthians, the Engliſh have been looked on formerly, as the ableſt Bow-men; having gotten by their Bow and Arrows as many notable Victories over the French, as the Parthians, ever did obtain upon the Romans. But at this time Archery both here, and elſewhere, is quite laid aſide, the Gun ſilencing all offenſive weapons; how juſtly I determine not. The point hath been long ſince debated betwixt Sir John Smith and Sir Roger Williams; many great Wits appearing upon either ſide; and the ſum of their ſeveral Arguments drawn up together by Sir Clement Edmunds, in his judicious obſervations upon Cæſar's Commentaries, to which the Reader may repair for his ſatisfaction. All I ſhall ſay is only this, that Victories as great as any in thoſe elder dayes, have been obtained with far leſs blood-ſhed, ſince the Gun came up, than in any of the times before it.

The Religion of this People hath ſuffered under the ſame changes with the reſt of Perſia, but they have a Language of their own, mixt of Mede and Scythian. For which which befides the teſtimony of humane Authors, we have the authority of Scriptures; where the Parthians, Elamites, and Medes, are named as Nations of a ſeveral Language, or a different Dialect at the leaſt, Acts 2.

Rivers of Note I find not any, nor any Mountains proper and peculiar to them: Coronus, part of the great Mountain Taurus, lying in common betwixt them and Hyrcania; as Maſdoramus doth betwixt them and Aria, and the hills called Parchoatras, betwixt them and the Deſarts of Carmania. So that for want of ſuch known Land-marks, the finding out of their ancient Cities would be very difficult, if any learned Antiquary ſhould undertake it.

The Country anciently more populous, the Towns and Villages thicker ſet, than they be at the preſent, many Cities, and 2000 Villages having been overthrown with Earth-quakes. In Ptolomy we find the names of 25 of the Cities, diſtributed into the four Provinces or Tetrarchies of Camiſene towards Hyrcania; Parthiene, bordering on Media; Paracanticene, confining on Aria; Tabiene, neighbouring Carmania. The principal of which, and of thoſe that are now in being, 1 Genonia. 2 Charax. 3 Artacana. 4 Apamia, which by the name ſeems to have been of the foundation of Seleucus. 5 Dardamana. 6 Syndaga. 7 Paſacarta. 8 Hecatompyle, the Royal City, ſo called from the number of an hundred Gates in the walls thereof, by which we may conjecture at the ancient greatneſs: the Parthians, which had ſeen no greater, calling it by the glorious name of Half the World. 9 Hiſpaan, commonly called Saphan, or Spawhawn, raiſed out of the ruins of Hecatompyle; and as that was, the Regal City for theſe parts. In compaſs about nine miles, of figure round, and ſeated in the midſt of a large and capacious Plain, beautified with many pleaſant Gardens, goodly Bathes, and handſome Moſques. But the greateſt glory of it lieth in the Market-place or Median, quadrangular in form, but the ſides unequal; cloiſtered about, and well ſtored with Merchandiſe of all ſorts, but drugs eſpecially: the Court or Quadrangle, ſerving for horſe-races, and other warlike exerciſes which are done on horſe-back. On the Weſt ſide a magnificent Moſque, built of white Marble five yards high, and the reſt above that of Brick; curiouſly interwoven with Arabick Poeſies. In the midſt a fair Conduit, wherewith they purifie themſelves when they go to their prayers. On another ſide the Royal Palace, wrought in the Front with Antique works; the Floors on the inſide covered with rich Perſian Carpets, and the Roofs chargeably emboſſed with Gold and Azure. 10 Jelphea, on the other ſide of the River on which Spawhawn is ſeated, as the Burgh of Southwark is to London; wholly inhabited (at this time) by Armenian Chriſtians, from hence called Jelphelines; who live here in great freedom, both for perſon, and conſcience, but that their Poll-money is taxed at an higher rate. 11 Croom, a right pleaſant and healthy City, well built, of large ſtreets, and ſeated on the banks of a ſmall but delightful River, iſſuing out of the Coronian Mountains, near to which it ſtandeth. Conſiſting at the preſent of 2000 Families, but anciently, as may be gathered from ſome ruins, of far greater compaſs. Much honoured by the Perſians for the Sepulchre of Fatima, the daughter of Mahomet from whom the Sophian Sect and Princes do derive their Pedegree. 12 Caſham, a rich and pleaſant City, about 60 miles from Spawhawn, well-built, and peopled by a number of Artizans; who for the making of Silks, Sattins, and Cloth of Gold, are in great eſteem. Beautified amongſt other things with a ſtately and magnificent Caravans-Raw, built by Sultan Abas, for the reception of ſtrangers, whether Merchants or other Travellers, but fit to entertain any Prince of Aſia. The City of no great age, the work either of Uſſan-Caſſanes, the Armenian, who got the Crown of Perſia, in the year 1470: or at the higheſt of Caſſam, the Son of Axan, and Grandſon of Tangrolipix, the firſt Turk here reigning; from one of which it had this name. 13 Tawgebawt, where the Perſian Kings have a houſe of pleaſure, of no great receipt; but for the coſt and ornaments of it, and the delectableneſs of the Gardens adjoyning to it, not yielding to any in this large Empire: and for Grots, Eccboes, Labyrinths, and the other excellencies of Art, perhaps not followed in the World; eſpecially conſidering that it ſtandeth in the middle of a ſandy Deſart.

The Parthians were originally a Scythian Nation baniſhed their own Country, and glad to plant themſelves in this barren Region; calling themſelves by the name of Parthians, which in their Language ſignifieth as much as Exiles. A people ſo obſcure and poor, either not knowing or not caring for the uſe of Money, that none of Alexander's great Captains would vouchſafe to be their Governour; but let it lie as an Appendix of Media, to the Kings whereof it had originally been ſubject; till one Philip, a man of ſmall regard, took the place upon him. Falling at laſt, with the reſt of Alexander's Aſian purchaſes, into the hands of Seleucus, it was governed by the Lieutenants of the Syrian Kings, till the time of Seleucus Callinicus, the fourth of that Houſe. During whoſe reign, Arſaces a noble Parthian, provoked by ſome indignities, ſlew the Governour, and took the Eſtate upon himſelf; perſwading all the reſt of the Provinces to do the like: and thrived ſo well in his deſign, that he not only gained the Kingdom of Parthia, but united to it all the Provinces lying on the Eaſt of Euphrates. Of whom and his Succeſſors more in the ſtory of Perſia. After this nothing ſingular which concerns this Province, but that as this Arſaces did recover the Perſian liberty from the power of the Greeks; ſo Gempſas, one of the Sultans of this Province alſo, redeemed (though but for a little time) this Parthia and the parts adjoyning, from the yoke of the Tartars; as ſhall be ſhewn in proſecution of the Perſian Hiſtory.

II. HYRCANIA.

HYRCANIA is bounded on the South, with Parthia; on the North, with the Hyrcanian, or Caſpian Sea; on the Eaſt, with Margiana; and on the Weſt, with Atropatia, or Atropatene (as Ammianus calleth it,) the North part of Media. Divided from Parthia by the interpoſition of Coronus, part of the main body of Mount Taurus. The way thorow which, ſaid by the Perſians to be cut out at one blow, by the Scymitar of Mortis Hali, their ſecond Mahomet, is not above forty yards in breadth, in the broadeſt parts of it; the hills on both ſides towring to the very clouds: With ſmall ſtrength eaſily defended againſt mighty Armies, and poſſibly may be the ſame which the Ancients called Portæ Caſpiæ, before deſcribed.

It took the name of Hyrcania, from Hyrcana, a large and ſpacious Foreſt betwixt it and Scythia; ſometimes called Caſpia alſo, from the Caſpii, a chief People of it: of whom it is reported, that when their Parents came to the age of 70 years, they uſed to ſhut them up, and ſtarve them; as being then no longer uſeful to the Commonwealth. But both thoſe names growing out of uſe, it is by Mercator called Diargument; by ſome late Travellers Mezondrum; by ſome others, Corcam.

Thoſe parts hereof which lie towards the South, are ſaid to yield abundance of Wheat, Wines, Figs, and Fruit: thoſe toward the Caſpian Sea, as plentiful of Graſs and Paſture. But betwixt both, nothing in a manner but continual Foreſts; and thoſe ſo intricate and thick, that it is a matter of no ſmall difficulty to find paſſage thorow them. Full, as moſt other Foreſts are in thoſe Eaſtern parts, of Panthers, Leopards, Lions, Tigers: theſe laſt of ſuch an horrible fierceneſs, that it grew into a Common Proverb uſed of cruel men, that they had ſucked an Hyrcanian Tiger, Hyrcanæque admorunt ubera Tigres, as it is in Virgil.

Principal Rivers of this Country, 1 Zioberis, ſpoken of before. 2 Maxera, or Mazeras, mentioned by Pliny, Ptolomy, and Ammianus. And 3 Secanda; all falling into the Caſpian or Hyrcanian Sea. A Sea which had the names of Caſpian and Hyrcanian, from the Caſpii and Hyrcani bordering next unto it; now from the Town of Bachu in Atropatia, called Mare di Bachu. Faſhioned in an Oval form, the length thereof from North to South 700 miles, and 600 miles from Eaſt to Weſt. Stormy and troubleſome, by reaſon of thoſe many great Rivers which fall into it from all the Provinces adjoyning: which notwithſtanding it hath no viſible commerce with the Ocean, nor doth it at any time overflow its banks, finding ſome paſſage under ground to diſcharge it ſelf of thoſe vaſt ſtreams of water which are poured into it. Well traded by the Muſcovite Merchants, who having the command of the River Volga (which with 70 mouths doth open into this Sea) ſail over it, and land at Farabant, or ſome other of the Port-Towns, where they trade for Silks. Some Illands here are in it, but not many, or of any great Fame; but only that they ſerved the Nations which lay near it for a place of retreat, in time of the Tartarian tempeſt under Tamerlane; as the Iſles of Venice did to the Italians, at the coming of Attila.

Places of moſt conſideration, 1 Hyrcania, once the Metropolis of the Province, and ſo called by Ptolomy; ſtill extant, but of leſs eſteem, and ſtill called Hyrcan. 2 Tambrace, in old times of the greateſt ſtrength, and moſt defenſible; but taken by Antiochus Magnus in the War againſt Arſaces the Parthian, for the recovery of thoſe Countries then revolted from him. 3 Adrapſa. 4 Maſaca. 5 Anaroſa. Of which we find the names, amongſt others, in the ancient Writers. 6 Aſharaffe, two miles from the Sea, in a ſpacious Plain, containing about 2000 Houſes; and now of moſt reputation of all this Province, by the long Reſidence therein of Abas, the late Perſian Sultan, who built there a magnificent Palace, and another two miles off at a place called Abaſſebant. The furniture whereof, beſides coſtly Carpets, in Plate and Jewels, at ſuch time as Sir Dodmore Cotton was there Embaſſadour, is ſaid to have been valued by a knowing Merchant, at 20 millions of pounds. But I fear the Merchant had more skill in Silks than Jewels: ſuch a vaſt ſum to be expended on the furniture of one Palace only, being beyond the poſſibility of the Revenue of the Perſian Sophies; hardly amounting towards all charges to five millions of Crowns. 7 Farabant, on a navigable Arm of the Caſpian Sea; for beauty, wealth, and greatneſs, of moſt note in this Country. Well traded from all parts of this Inland Sea, eſpecially by the Ruſſian Merchants, as before is ſaid, whoſe ſhips come hither in March, and return in July; it being from hence to Aſtrachan but ten daies ſail. Beautified with goodly Gardens, a Royal Manſion of the Kings, and a ſpacious Market-place. 8 Chiacoporo, near the Sea alſo, but on the banks of a River; the water whereof is ſaid for eleven months to be freſh and ſweet, and for the twelfth month very ſalt. 9 Barfrushdee, twelve miles from the Sea, well furniſhed with wood and water. 10 Oroul, a Town of about 3000 houſes, ſeated on the North ſide of the Taurus, in a pleaſant and fruitful ſoil; reſorted to by the people of ſo many Nations, that ſeven Languages are there commonly ſpoken. Once larger, as appeareth by ſome ruins than it is at the preſent, by ſome conceived to be the Nabarca of the Ancients, honoured in thoſe times with an Oracle. 11 Strava, a Town of great Traffick, for raw Silks eſpecially. 12 Meſandra, whence the whole Province (or rather the parts adjoyning to it) hath the name of Mezendrum.

The old Inhabitants hereof, beſides the Caſpii, were the Maxeræ, Aſtabeni, Chrindi, and the Arſitenſes, united in the name of Hyrcans, in the time of the Perſians; and by that name well known at the coming of Alexander. Againſt whom they ſo defended themſelves, by tying the boughs and twigs of their trees together, that it was impoſſible for him to come at them; till with incredible pains and labour he had cauſed their Woods to be cut down: at ſight whereof the people, who ſuppoſed the King had too much other buſineſs, and of more importance, than to put himſelf unto that trouble, did ſubmit unto him. Falling to the ſhare of Seleucus, they were the firſt people that were gained by Arſaces, and joyned with him in recovering their former liberty; though they got nothing by the bargain but the change of their Maſter. In all times ſince, they have been looked upon as Members of the Perſian Empire, till the conqueſt of it by the Tartars; in the diſtractions of whoſe great Empire after Tamerlane's death, it fell to ſome Princes of his Houſe, who governed here under the vaſſallage and protection of the Tartars of Zagathay. Recovered not long ſince to their old obedience by Sultan Abas; who for the better ſettling the affairs hereof, removed the Seat Royal from Spawhawn, to which before he had transferred it from the City of Casbin to Aſharaffe, then a ſmall Town, now the chief of this Country.

12. MARGIANA.

MARGIANA is bounded on the Weſt, with Hyrcania; on the Eaſt, with Bactria; on the North, with part of Tartary, from which ſevered by the River Oxus; on the South, with Aria, divided from it by the Mountains. So called from the River Margus, which runs thorow the Country: but is now named Tremigen.

The Country environed with Mountains, and in moſt places of it full of ſandy Deſarts. But where it is watered with the Rivers, Arias and Margus, it is very fruitful, ſtretching it ſelf into a large and ſpacious Plain, containing in the circuit near 200 miles. The Plain once compaſſed with a Wall by Antiochus Soter, King of Syria; more memorable for the huge ſtocks of Vines which are ſaid to be in it, as big in bulk as two men can fathom, and ſometimes bearing branches of Grapes two Cubits long. The more to be admired, in regard there is no other place near unto it, where the Vine will grow. And if the Ark reſted on the top of Mount Caucaſus, as it is moſt probable it did; why may not this be ſome of the remainder of that firſt Vineyard which was planted by Noah, when he deſcended from theſe Mountains, as is affirmed by the conſtant tradition of the people which inhabit here?

The people mixt of Scythian and Perſian breed, partaking of the fierceneſs of the one, and the behaviour of the other, conform unto the Perſians in Religion, Language, and Apparel; diſtinguiſhed from them in the colour of their Turbants only, which are commonly Green: and therefore by the Perſians called Jeſelbas, or Green-caps; the Turbants of the Perſian being alwaies red.

Chief Rivers of this Country are, 1 Margus, the peculiar River of it, which riſing out of the foot of the Mountains, and paſſing thorow the midſt of the Province, receiveth receiveth into its Channel the River. 2 Arias, hastning out of Aria; and so together lose themselves in 3 Oxus, dividing the Margians from the Tartars. Out of the joynt streams of which several Rivers, is made a large Lake now called Sabacamber, but anciently Palus Oxiana, from the principal River.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Alexandria, or Alexandria Margianæ, for distinction sake; one of the six Towns built by Alexander for defence of this Country: called afterwards Seleucia from Seleucus; next Antiochia from Antiochus Soter, King of Syria, by whom fortified with a very strong Wall. It is now called Indion, and esteemed for the chief of the Country. 2 Jasonium, seated on the confluence of Margus with a nameless River issuing from the Seriphian Mountains. 3 Nigæa, as the Printed Books of Ptolomy call it, but mistook for Nissa, or Nysæa. 4 Argadina. 5 Rhea, of which nothing memorable. 6 Maran, near to which Ismael the first of the Sophian Race, discomfited the Forces of Saba the Cham of Zagathay.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Massagetes, and the Parni, taking up the mid-lands; the Derbiccæ bordering upon Oxus; and the Tapyri, dwelling towards the East. United by the name of Margians, they were subdued by the Kings of Persia, from whom won by Alexander to his Empire: who to assure himself hereof built six Cities in it, two towards the South, and four towards the East; all situate on the tops of hills, and built at such convenient nearness that they might afford succour to each other, as occasion served. After this nothing singular in the story of them; involved in the same fortunes with the rest of Persia, till Persia was conquered by the Tartars. Since which time, though the rest of the Persian Provinces were freed from the Tartarian yoke by Gempsus, the Soldan of Parthia, and King of Persia for a time; yet part of this Province, and of Bactria, are still subject to them.

BACTRIA or BACTRIANA is bounded on the West, with Margiana; on the East and North, with the River Oxus, dividing it from Sogdiana; on the South, with Paropamisus, from which parted by the hills so named, and the Mountain Caucasus. It took this name from Bactra, the chief City of it; and is now called Chorassin, but by some named Batter.

The Country towards the River Oxus, is for the most part well manured, and affordeth plenty of Wheat, and all sorts of fruits, excepting Olives; rich Metals, and some precious Stones, as Emeralds, Chrisolytes, and Jacinths. Plenty of Pastures there be also, well stored with Cattel, and those of bigger bulk than in other places. But the greatest part hereof to the South and West, is nothing but a sandy Desart; and by reason that the sands are driven up and down by contrary winds, no tract or beaten way is to be discerned: insomuch as Travellers rest all day, and take their journey in the night, that they may guide themselves by the course of the Stars, as upon the Sea; not without great danger of being lost or buried, whilest alive, in that sandy Ocean.

The people heretofore a puissant and warlike Nation, not without great difficulty conquered by the Assyrians, nor with less by the Persians; alwaies in Arms, cruel, and resembling the Scythians, whose near neighbours they were: and (which may very well pass for their greatest vertue) Multum à Persarum luxu abhorrentes, abhorring naturally from the Persian Luxuries. But withal unnatural to their Parents, whom when old they cast unto their dogs, kept for that purpose, and called Canes Sepulchrales, or burial dogs. The women gorgeous in Apparel, and proud of Gesture, but prodigal of their bodies to their meanest slaves. The men to this day do retain their ancient stoutness; but hard beset betwixt the Persians and the Tartars, who severally pretend a dominion over them.

No Province of the Persian Empire hath so many Rivers. The principal of which are 1 Artamis, and 2 Zariaspes, mingling streams together, as do also 3 Ochus, and 4 Orgomanes; all four contributing their waters to the River Oxus. Of Oxus, being rather a bondary betwixt the Persian and the Tartar, than rightly proper unto either, we have spoken already.

Towns of most observation in it, 1 Bactria, the Metropolis, or the chief City of it, situate at the foot of the Mountain Sogdii, giving the name of Bactria unto all the Province. It is now called Bochor, and still keeps the dignity of the Metropolitan: the seat of the Chief Priest or Bishop of the Mahometans of Zagathay (to which this City, and great part of the Country also doth now belong) having here his residence, in power and reputation equal to the King himself. Well fortified, and stored with all military Provisions: the birth-place (as Maginus saith) in these latter Ages of Avicenna, that learned Philosopher and Physician; and in the first Ages, of Zoroaster the more learned Astrologer. 2 Eubusmi, once the Regal seat, and therefore honoured by Ptolomy with the name of Regia. 3 Zarispe, or Charispe, the chief City of the Charispæ, a great Tribe of this Country. 4 Charracharta, mentioned by Ptolomy and Ammianus: these two, upon the River Oxus. 5 Eucratidia, built or repaired by the Macedonians; as the name, being meerly Greek, doth seem to imitate. 6 Alicodra, as ancient as the rest, but of no great note in the course of business. 7 Itigias, of a later date, but of greater beauty than any of those before spoken of: superiour to Bochor in Elegancy, State, and Greatness, though not in Dignity; and held by some to be the pleasantest of the East.

This Country was as soon peopled as any since the general Deluge. It had not else been possible that Zoroaster, King hereof in the time of Ninus, and by him assaulted, should bring into the field an Army of 400000 men of this, and perhaps some other of the neighbouring Provinces, as most credible Writers say he did. Encountring Ninus, with this Army he prevailed at first, and slew of the Assyrians near an hundred thousand. But Ninus having better opportunities of recruiting his Forces, invaded him a second time with an Army of 1700000 Foot, and 20000 Horse (the greatest on record in all Ages since that time, except that of Semiramis:) with which he overcame Zoroaster, slew him in the field, and united Bactria to his Empire. Unto this Zoroaster is ascribed the invention of Astronomy, but on no good ground; that Art or Science being studied before the flood, (if Seth's Pillars, mentioned by Josephus, be of any credit:) and therefore probably no otherwise to be ascribed to Zoroaster, than as to the Reviver of it; or because he first committed that unto writing, which he had received by tradition; or because he brought those confused notions which he had received from others, into rule and method. He being slain, and Bactria his chief City taken by the wit of Semiramis, then the wife of Menon (but on the merit of that service made the wife of Ninus) the Bactrians became subject unto the Assyrian Kings, after to the Monarchs of the Medes and Persians. In the expiring of which great Monarchy, Bessus a false and cruel Traitor, did command this Province: and having villainously slain Darius, his Lord and Master, assumed unto himself the title of King of Persia, under the name of Artaxerxes. But being betraied by Spitamenes, one of his Confederates,

Confederates, by him delivered unto Alexander, and by Alexander put to a cruel death: the Bactrians became subject to the Macedonians, and in that right unto Seleucus and the Kings of Syria. But long it held not in that State; one Theodatus, who formerly had the government of it for the Syrian Kings, taking unto himself the title of King, and the possession of the Country, about the same time that Arsaces and the Parthians made the like revolt. Wrested from his posterity by one Euthydemus, the recovery of it was attempted by Antiochus Magnus: and the whole cause put to the trial of a battel. In which, though Antiochus had the better, and shewed more personal valour in it than any time after: yet he was glad to come to a composition, and left to Euthydemus, both the Crown and the Country. Made not long after an accession to the Parthian Kingdom, it continued part thereof whilest that Kingdom stood; and in the time of Ptolomy (as long time before) had for the chief tribes or nations of it, the Salatarae, and Zariaspae towards the North; the Camani, or Coamoni (as Pliny calleth them) dwelling in the South, the middle parts being taken up by the Thocari, said to be gens magna; the Scordae, Savadii, Marixae, Tambyzi, Amarispae, and others of as little note. In the often changes and alterations of the Persian State, one of the last Nations which submitted to the new Pretenders: and at this time so nutral betwixt the Persians, and the Cham of Tartary, that it is not wholly under the power of either. More averse from the Persian Government, since the alteration of Religion made there by Hysmael, and the rest of the Sect of Mortis Hali: these Bactrians being of the old Race of Mahometans, which adhered to Haumar, Osman, and Abubecher, as the true Successors of their false Prophet; and therefore ill-affected to the Sophian Faction, whom they call commonly Caphers, or Hereticks, for the innovations by them made in the Law of Mahomet.

Thus having taken a survey of those several Provinces, which constitute the Persian Empire, and shewn by what means they were first united into one estate, we must next look upon the names and actions of those mighty Monarchs, who have successively, and from time to time enjoyed the Soveraignty. By what good chance Arbaces from a deputy or Lieutenant of Media, obtained the Diadem for himself, we have shewn before: and we have shewn how liberally he enfeoffed the Vice-Roys of the several Provinces (which in the division made betwixt him and Belochus, fell unto his share) in the propriety and command of those Countries, which before they held. Nothing reserved unto himself, and his Posterity, but the title only; and perhaps some acknowledgements made to them, as the Lords in chief. Nor left he less liberty to his own Medians, than to the rest of the Provinces; which turning to licentiousness was so hurtful to them, that they were glad at last of that wholsome severity, which Deioces a more Lordly King, began to exercise: who taking to himself a guard, building the Royal City of Ecbatana, and fortifying some other places of importance, first brought the people under the command of Law; in that regard not unfitly called by Herodotus, the first King of the Medes.

KINGS of the MEDES.

A. M.

3146 1 Arbaces, at first Governour of the Medes, under Sardanapalus the Assyrian; but joyning with Belochus, overcame his Master, and was the first Founder of the Median Monarchy.

3174 2 Mandanes, the son of Arbaces. 50

3224 3 Sisarmus. 30.

3254 4 Medidus, by some called Artyras. 25.

3279 5 Cadicenus, whom some call Arbianes. 13.

3292 6 Deioces, the Founder of Ecbatana, and the Legislator of the Medes, whom he first brought under the command of Law and a Regal Government; the former Kings having left the reins so loose on the necks of the people, that they seemed to reign by curtesie only; and had no more authority amongst their Subjects, than any of the mean Lords had upon their Vassals.

3303 7 Phraortes, a man of great prowess and fortune. He made all Asia stand in fear, and compelled the Persians to be his Tributaries; but was after overtopped by the Scythians, 22.

3331 8 Cyaxares, united to his Empire the Saracens, and the Parthians. The King was so overlaid by the Scythians, who in the reign of Phraortes, had broke into Media, that he was little better than their rent-gatherer. But having endured them for above two years he plotted their final extirpation, and committed his design to the Nobles, who willingly gave ear to it. One night they invited the chief of the Scythians to a banquet; where having well liquored them, and put them all to the sword, the baser sort willingly returned homewards. 40.

3371 9 Astyages, the Son of Cyaxares, who having married his daughter Mandane, to Cambyses the Tributary King of Persia, dreamed that she had made as much water as drowned all Asia: hereupon he commanded Harpagus, one of his Noble men, to see the Child killed; but he loathing so cruel a fact, committed the charge of executing the Kings Commandment, to Mithridates the King's heardsman. He preserved the life of the young Infant, to whom he gave the name of Cyrus, whose fortune at last lifted him up to the Kingdom of Persia: when abhorring his Grandfather for that intended cruelty, he both bereft him of his Kingdom, and confined him to Hyrcania; when he had reigned thirty five years, A. M. 3406.

3406 10 Cyaxares II. in the Scripture called Darius Medus, Son to Astyages, at the age of 52 years succeeded his Father. For Cyrus, pretending no quarrel to his Uncle who had never wronged him, left him the Kindom of Media, and took unto himself the Soveraignty of Persia, which before was Tributary to the Medes; not making any other alteration in the State of Media.

At this division of the Median Empire, as Torniellus in his Annals, (and that not improbably) is of opinion, it was also agreed on, that Cyrus should take the daughter and only child of Cyaxares to wife; that they should both joyn together, in subduing of their neighbours; that whatsoever they won, should belong to Cyaxares, (who was even then an old Prince) during his life; and that Cyrus should be his heir. In the twentieth year of their several reigns, they took Babylon, slew Baltazar, and destroyed the Empire of the Chaldeans. This action the Scriptures attribute wholly to Cyaxares, who is by them called Darius Medus; whereof S. Hierom alledgeth three reasons: 1 Ordo ætatis. 2 Regni. 3 Propinquitatis. 1 Darius was the elder. 2 The Empire of the Medes was more more famous than that of the Persians; and 3 the Uncle ought to be preferred before the Nephew. We may add to these three, the composition above mentioned, made between these Princes, at the beginning of their Reigns on the death of Astyages. The Greek Writers attribute the Victory only to Cyrus, and that on three reasons also. The Persians desirous to magnifie Cyrus their own Country-man, gave him all the glory of the action; and from the Persians the Greeks had it. Secondly, Cyrus was only imployed in the Siege, (Darius then being absent) and by his valour and conduct was the Empire of the Chaldæans ruined. And thirdly, Darius lived not fully two years after this great Victory; so that before remote Nations had taken notice of the conquest, Cyrus was actually in the Throne. Josephus only in the 11 Chapter of his Book, cutteth the thred even between these two Princes; and telleth us that Darius, with Cyrus his Allie, destroyed the Estate of the Babylonians. That this Darius Medus of Daniel, is the Cyaxares of the Greeks, is more than manifest. For Josephus in the place above cited, telleth us. Ὃς ἦν Ἀστυάγους υἱὸς ὁ παρὰ τοῖς Ἕλλησιν ἐκαλεῖτο ὄνομα That he was Astyages Son and is otherwise called by the Greeks: now ask the Greeks what was the name of the Son of Astyages, and Xenophon will tell you, that it was Cyaxares. As for the name of Nabonidus, which Joseph Scaliger in spight of reason, and the whole world of Chronologers, would thrust upon this Darius Medus; we have already refelled it: though we are not ignorant that Helvicus and Calvisius, two most worthy Writers, have followed him, as in all his Canon, so also in this particular Error. But to proceed unto the course of the Persian History; after the death of this Cyaxares, Cyrus succeeded in his Throne, and the Empire of the Medes was Incorporated into that of the Persians, (as it hath ever since continued) if not subject to it.

The first Dynasty, or Race of the Persian Monarchs, of the House of Achæmenes.

3406 1 Cyrus, who having vanquished Astyages, united to the Empire of Persia the whole Kingdom of Media; the Countries of Armenia, Phrygia, Lydia, some part of Arabia, and all the Provinces possessed by the Babylonian and Assyrian Monarchs. After which Victories, he was slain by Tomyris a Queen of the Scythians, as some Writers say: others affirming, that he escaped alive (but wounded) out of the Battel, died in his own Kingdom, and was buried at Pasagarda, a Town of Persis. This Cyrus is magnified by Xenophon, as Æneas by Virgil, and Ulysses by Homer 29.

3434 2 Cambyses, the Son of Cyrus, subdued Psamniticus King of Ægypt, which Country he united to his Empire. Having a mind to marry his own Sister; he was told by his Lawyers that they knew no Law which admitted such Marriages; but that there was a Law, that the Persian Kings might do what they listed. This King was a very bloudy Tyrant.

The Inter-regnum of the Magi.

Cambyses, at his Expedition into Ægypt, constituted Patizithes, one of the Magi, Vice-Roy in his absence. He hearing of the Kings death, conferred the Kingdom on his own Son Smerdis, making the people believe, that he was the Brother of Cambyses: A matter of no difficulty, considering, how retirement from the publick view, was a chief point of the Persian Majesty. But the Nobles either knowing the true Smerdis to be slain, or suspecting the overmuch retiredness of the new King, began to search out the matter. Otanes had a Daughter, which was one of the Kings Concubines. Her he commanded when the King took next his pleasure with her, to feel whether he had any Ears; for Cambyses (in I know not what humour) had cut off the Ears of this Magus. This commandment she obeying, found out the falshood. The seven Princes informed of this imposture, joyn'd together, and slew this Pseudo-Smerdis, in the eighth month of his Reign. This done, to avoid contention, they agreed among themselves, that the seven Princes, meeting on the Palace-green, should acknowledge him for King, whose Horse before the rising of the Sun first neighed. The evening before the day appointed, the Horse-keeper of Darius the Son of Hystaspis, brought his Masters Horse into the Green, together with a Mare, which the Horse then covered. In the morning the Princes met; and Darius his Horse knowing the place, and longing for his Mare, neighed lustily: on which the Princes presently acknowledge Darius for their King.

The restoring of the Kingdom.

3443 3 Darius Hystaspis, one of the seven Persian Princes, descended from Cyrus the fourth King of the Persians, thus Elected King, took Babylon (which had revolted) by the ingenious fetches of Zopyrus, and over-ran all Asia, and some part of Greece, where he was overthrown at the Battel of Marathon. 36.

3479 4 Xerxes, to revenge the overthrow at Marathon, attempted to subdue the Greeks: by whom he was overthrown in the naval Battel of Salamis; and that famous and honourable exploit of the Græcians, at Thermopylæ 21.

3500 5 Artaxerxes Longimanus, was he who sent Esdras to re-build the Temple of the Lord; and received Themistocles, being banished from Athens. This also was he, as some would have it, whom the Scriptures call Ahasuerus, the Husband of Hester; though others choose rather to place that story in the time of Xerxes. 44.

3544 6 Darius II. sirnamed Nothus, in whose time the Ægyptians revolted, and chose a King of their own. 19.

3563 7 Artaxerxes II. from the greatness of his memory sirnamed Mnemon; under whom hapned that famous retreat of Xenophon, with an handful of his Græcians, through most of the Provinces of this Empire; by which they shewed the way to the Macedonians, how easie a Conquest they might make of that mighty Empire. 46.

3599 8 Ochus, a great Tyrant, but a valiant Prince, recovered Ægypt, subdued Syria, Cyprus, and some part of India, and was at last slain by Bagoas, one of the Eunuchs of his Chamber.

3625 9 Arses, the Son of Ochus, most villainously murdered by the same Eunuch, for fear he should revenge the death of his Father.

3629 10 Darius III. Governour of Armenia, and Cousin German of Ochus, before his coming to the Crown named Codomanus; by the means of the said Bagoas made Sole Monarch of Persia. But being vanquished by Alexander the Great in the three Battels of Granicus, Cilicia, and Arbela, the Empire of the Persians was transferred to the Græcians, A. M. 3635.

The certain Revenues of this great Monarchy, seem to have been 14560 Talents; for so much the last Darius received yearly. But what the casual and extraordinary Introdo was, is not easie to say; though manifest it is, and demonstrable by many strong and evident reasons, that they far exceeded the certain. For first, the Persian Monarchs were Kings of 127 Provinces. Secondly, Darius offered to Alexander for the Ransom of his Mother and two daughters, 30000 Talents of Gold. Thirdly, Alexander found in the Treasury of Damascus, 2600 Talents; in that of Susa, 50000 Talents of Gold uncoyn'd; in that of Pasagardis, 60000 Talents; in that of Ecbatana, 26000 Talents; in that of Persepolis, 120000 Talents; in all 204600 Talents; besides the infinite riches of the Treasury of Babylon, yielded into his hands by Bagophanes, and other places of note, not particularly specified: An huge and most unspeakable sum! Fourthly, in that the Gold and Riches which Alexander, now a Conquerour, sent from Persia to Macedon and Greece, (besides which every Captain and common Souldier had provided and laid up for his own maintenance) loaded ten thousand Mules, and five thousand Camels.

After this overthrow of the Persian Monarchy, the Persian Nation lay obscure 535 years, viz. from the 3635 year of the world, to the 228 year of CHRIST: of which time they were 83 years under the Syrian Successors of Alexander; and 452 years under the Arsacidan Kings of Parthia. Μετὰ γὰρ Δαρεῖον, &c. as Herodian. "For after Darius had lost his Kingdom to Alexander "the Macedonian, and after the Victor himself was "dead also, the more Potent Captains Divided Asia "among them. But discords often arising, and the Ma"cedonians puissance, by these often broils, not small"y broken, Arsaces, one of the Parthian Nobility, per"swaded the barbarous people of the East, and among "them the Persians, to cast off the Greek yoke, and stand "for their Liberty: he himself taking upon him the "Title of King, and investing himself with a Diadem, "A. M. 3718. The Persians by this revolt got little or nothing, having indeed not changed the Tyranny, but the Tyrant only: these Parthian Princes Lording it with as high an insolency, as ever the old Persian Monarchs, or the Kings of Syria did before. From this Arsaces, all the rest of his Successors, and those too of the Family of Artabanus, or second Race of Parthian Kings, took that name upon them: as the Roman Emperors that of Cæsar, or the old Ægyptian Kings the name of Pharaoh. Their usual Style was Rex Regum, or King of Kings: and by that Style with arrogance and insolence enough, Vologeses thus Inscribed his Letters to Vespasian the Roman Emperor, viz. Arsaces, Rex Regum, Flavio Vespasiano: giving himself the Title of King of Kings, but the other nothing but his bare names only. To which, Vespasian without taking notice of the Parthian's pride, returned his answer to him with this Superscription, Fl. Vespasianus Regi Regum Arsacidi: whether with more scorn or modesty, it is hard to say. They also called themselves the Brethren of the Sun and Moon, which were the chiefest Gods they worshipped. Great Princes questionless they were, and kept the Romans harder to it, than all the Kings and States in the world besides: whose names and acts occur in these following Catalogues of

2. The Arsacidan or Parthian Race of the Kings of Persia.

A. M.
3718	1	Arsaces, the Founder of the Parthian Family.
3741	2	Mithridates, or Arsaces the second, assaulted by Antiochus Magnus with an Army of 120000 men, but without success.
3761	3	Pampatius.
3773	4	Phraartes, the Son of Pampatius.
3783	5	Mithridates II. Brother of Phraartes, subdued the Medes, and extended his Empire to Euphrates.
	6	Phraartes II. slain in a War against the Scythians.
3857	7	Artabanus, Uncle to Phraartes the second.
	8	Pacorus, the Son of Artabanus.
	9	Mithridates III. Brother of Pacorus.
3903	10	Horodes, Brother of Mithridates, whom he overcame, and caused to be slain in his own sight. He also vanquished M. Crassus, and slew 20000 Romans; and because Crassus was reported to be wondrous covetous, he caused Molten Gold to be poured down his Throat. A miserable death, but in respect of the divine Providence, a most just Revenge upon him for his Sacriledge, in Robbing the Temple of Hierusalem, as he marched towards the Parthians. The overthrow, and the disgrace which thereby hapned to the Romans, was not long afterwards recompensed by Ventidius, one of the Lieutenants of Mark Antony the Triumvir, who slew great numbers of them in a pitched Field, and amongst others, Pacorus the Kings Son: the day of the Battel being the same, in which Crassus had before been vanquished. After this Victory, for which Ventidius had the honour of a Triumph (and the first Triumph that ever the Romans had held for a Parthian Victory) he was in a fair way to have ruined this Kingdom, to have shrewdly shaken it at the least, had not Antony in an envious humour called him from that service. Finally, Horodes was slain by his Son Phraartes.
	11	Phraartes III. a valiant Prince, but wicked and cruel, as the Murther of his own Father and many of his Brethren doth clearly evidence. Against him marched Marcus Antonius with a populous Army, which wanted little of an absolute overthrow; of 16 Legions, scarce six returning home in safety. This King submitted himself and Kingdom unto Augustus, restoring the Roman Enlignes, and freeing the Captives taken at the defeat of Crassus. The only mark of the Parthians Subjection, was their receiving Kings at the appointment of the Senate and Emperors of Rome; which also was of no long continuance.
	12	Phraartes IV. Son of Phraartes the third, whom he slew and Succeeded.
	13	Horodes II. Son of Phraartes the fourth, slain in a conspiracy.
	14	Vonon, substituted in the place of Horodes, but outed by
	15	Tiridates, who was also dispossessed of his life and and Kingdom by Artabanus, the people flocking to him as a man of courage, and being offended with the two last Kings, because they either had received the Kingdom, or at least the Confirmation in it, from the Roman Emperors. Which Artabanus, though descended either from a Female, or some of the Collateral line of the former Family; yet being not direct Heir thereof, he is looked on as a Stranger to the Bloud of the Arsacidæ the Family of Arsaces, giving place to that of this Artabanus, of which Family we have the names of twelve Kings successively Reigning: the most considerable of them being Chosroes, the eighth King of this Line, from whom the Emperor Trajan gained Armenia, and Mesopotamia, adding them to the Roman Empire. Members whereof they did continue till regained to the Persian Crown, by Sapores the ninth King of the next Persian Dynasty. But for those twelve Kings of this house, they are these.

The third Dynasty of the Kings of Persia, and the second of the Parthian Race.

1 Artabanus.
2 Bardanes.
3 Goteres.
4 Vonones,
5 Vologeses.
6 Artabanus II.
7 Pacorus.
8 Chosroes.
9 Parmaspates.
10 Vologeses II.
11 Vologeses III.
12 Artabanus III. the last King of this new Race of the Parthians, whose overthrow by the valour of Artaxerxes the first Persian King of the fourth Dynasty, occasioned the Translation of the Diadem to the natural Persians; after it had continued in two Parthian Families for the space of 470 years. Which Translation, as it was wrought by the unresistable power of God, who only hath the disposing of Crowns and Scepters; so in the way of second causes it may be principally referred to the Barbarous Massacre of this people, by Antonius Caracalla the Roman Emperor; Who having Negotiated a Marriage with the Daughter of this Artabanus, and going (as he gave it out) to solemnize the Nuptials, was met by the old King accompanied with the flower of his Nobility, and the choicest of his Souldiers, and other Subjects, in Triumphal Ornaments. Which honourable Train was no sooner come near his Army, but he commanded his Souldiers (on a Watch-word given) to put them all to the Sword, the King himself hardly escaping with his life. Caracalla being dead, and Macrinus succeeding in the Throne, the Parthians set upon him to Reveng that slaughter. But understanding after a long fight of three days continuance, that Macrinus had slain Caracalla, they made Peace winh him; but were so weakned and unable to hold their own, that it made the Persians once more think of recovering to their own Nation, the Regal power. For Artaxerxes, a noble and generous Persian (his name perhaps suggesting some high thoughts unto him) did so well husband the opportunity, that he slew Artabanus the last King of the Parthians, and once more brought the Royal Seat into Persia. Yet was not this so easily effected, the Parthians notwithstanding their former losses, maintaining another cruel fight for three days together; so difficult was it to vanquish that Nation, when their Forces were broken; impossible when they were entire. Artaxerxes, proud of this success, sent a peremptory Embassy to Alexander Severus, the then Roman Emperor, to have all the Provinces of Asia, which had formerly belonged to the Persian Monarchy, re-delivered to him: a matter not so easily granted as demanded. For Severus to suppress so insolent an Enemy, Marched towards Persia with an Army Romanly appointed; which, to find his Enemy more work, he Divided into three parts: whereof the first was to march into Media; the second into Persia, the third himself Led in the mid-way between both, to succour both, or be succoured by both, as occasion required. But his device succeeded not happily; for his two Armies being by the Persians broken, he with much danger and haste retired back with the third. This was a good beginning for the Persian Kingdom; the Establishment followed not long after: Valerianus the Emperor being vanquished, and taken Prisoner by Sapores, the second King of this Race. So that now the name of the Persian grew so terrible to the Romans, that Constantine the Great Transplanted many of the Colonies and Garrisons of the North-west part of the Empire, into the East, to keep the Persian from growing too far upon the Roman Provinces; and removed also the Seat of the Empire nigher unto them, from Rome to Constantinople. And thus having shown the beginning and Establishment, the Foundation and Building of the new Kingdom of the Persians, take along with you the Catalogue of their Kings, untill they once more lost the Soveraignty of their own Nation, and became Slaves again to more barbarous Masters.

The fourth Dynasty, or Race of the Persian Kings.

629 25 Adhesir.
26 Sarbatus.
27 Barnarius.
630 28 Hormisda II. the 28 and last King of the Race of Artaxerxes, or the fourth Dynasty: of whom besides the two first Kings, whose Acts are spoken of before, the most remarkable were, 1 Vararanes the second, in whose time Carus the Emperor passing over Euphrates, and laying Siege to Ctesiphon, was there slain by a Thunderbolt. 2 Narses, the Son of Vararanes, who first discomfited Galerius, one of the Cæsars, in the Empire of Diocletian, and totally ruined his Army: for which Galerius being forced to Lacquey it by the Emperor's Chariot in his Purple Robes, was so highly shamed, that to recover his credit he set upon Narses once again, routed him, and took Prisoners his Wives and Children.

3 Sapores the second, the Son of Misdates, who began his Reign before his Birth. For his Father dying without Issue, left his Wife with Child: which Child the Magi having signified by their Art to be a Male, the Persian Princes caused the Crown and Royal Ornaments to be set upon his Mothers belly, acknowledging him thereby for their future King. A great and puissant Prince he proved, holding continual War with Constantine, and his Successors, till the Death of Valens; and gaining from them the best parts of Mesopotamia: but withal a great Persecutor of the Christians, of whom no fewer than 20000 are said to have suffered in his time. 4 Isdigertes, a Prince so esteemed of by Arcadius, the Eastern Emperor, that he made him Protector of his Empire, during the minority of his Son Theodosius: which trust he Royally performed, and was a great friend unto the Christians in his own Dominions. 5 Cabades, first outed of his Kingdom by Zamaspes, and restored again, was the first Persian King who permitted the free exercise of the Christian Religion. He slew Zeliobes, a King of the Huns, coming to his Aid against the Romans, because he had before promised to assist the Emperor; and rooted the Manichean Sect out of his Estate. 6 Cosroes the Son of Cabades, surnamed the Great, a constant Enemy to the Romans; from whom he Conquered a great part of Syria, and took and sacked the City of Antioch. But finding the War brought home to his own door, by Mauritius, who was afterwards Emperor, and his own Countries in a flame, he took such thought of it, that he died of a Fevor. 7 Cosroes the second, as great an Enemy to the Emperor Heraclius; from whom he took all that was left of Mesopotamia, Syria, and the Holy Land, with the City of Hierusalem it self; most of it recover'd by Heraclius: in despight of whom he caused all the Christians in his Kingdom to turn Nestorians. 8 Hormisda the second, the last of the Dynasty, who being first weakned by Civil and Domestick dissentions, was vanquished by Haumar and his Saracens, Anno 634. burying so the glory of this renowned Nation in the grave of oblivion, or at least subjection.

The Saracenical Caliphs, having added this Kingdom to their huge Empire, appointed here their Deputies, whom they honoured with the name of Sultans; not one Supreme for the whole Kingdom, but several Governours or Sultans for each several Province: called by new names, and moulded into many Toparchies as Chorazan, Mozenabar, Usbeck, and I wot not what; the Sultans acting of themselves, and warring upon one another, as their humours led them, without relation to the Caliph, or Lord in chief. During which bustles it so hapned, that Mahomet, the Sultan of Persia (so called because he was the chief in Command and Power) picking a quarrel with his Neighbour the Sultan of Babylon, (Pisasiris he is called in some Christian Writers, by whom taken or mistaken for the Caliph himself) made War upon him. But finding him countenanced and supported by the Power of the Caliph, invited the Turks, then possessed of some part of Armenia Major, to come to his Aid: by whose means he overthrew the Caliph's Forces, and might have got the Soveraignty of Persia unto himself, if he had used his Victory and his Friends, with any tolerable discretion. But denying to pay these Turks their Wages, and send them home, he occasioned them to make head against him, under the Conduct of Tangrolipix, their principal Leader; to whom being once in Arms, several discontented persons of the natural Persians, did unite themselves. Encouraged with which additions, and being furnished with Horse and Armour, and other necessaries, by the Spoil of the Country, they give Battel to the Sultan himself: whom having vanquished and slain, Tangrolipix by the joynt consent of both Armies is made King of Persia, the Founder of 1030 1 Tangrolipix, of whom sufficiently before.

The fifth Dynasty, or the Turkish Race of the Kings of Persia.

2 Axan, the Son of Tangrolipix, by whom Cutlu Moses, his near Kinsman, was sent with great Forces against the Christians; whom he dispossessed of a great part of Asia Minor.

3 Balak, Sultan of Persia, in the beginning of the Wars in the Holy Land, undertaken by the Western Christians; against whom he is reported to have sent his Forces. Of whose Successors I find nothing till the time of 1198 3 Cassanes, the last King or Sultan of the Turks, vanquished in the year 1202. by the Cham of Tartary. Which makes me very apt to think, that after the Death of Axan, or his next Successor, the Turks lost the Soveraignty of Persia, though they kept the possession of some parts of it; the Soveraignty thereof being recovered by the Caliphs of Babylon: and that it was so held by both, till the Tartars dispossessed the one, and destroyed the whole Progeny of the other, as before was noted. And this I find to be the Opinion of Benjamin Tudelensis, a Learned Jew, which had Travelled most part of the East; to whose judgment herein I subscribe, as most sound and rational.

The Sixth Dynasty, or the Tartarian Race of the Kings of Persia.

1260 1 Haalon, or Ulab-Kubkan, by Occata the great Cham, made King of Persia; exterminated the whole Race of the Caliph of Bagdet.

1266 2 Habkakaihon, the Son of Haalon.

1282 3 Nicador Oglan, by Haiton call'd Taugador, who made himself a Mahometan, and was named Hamed, the Brother of Habkakaihon.

1284 4 Argon-Khon, the eldest Son of Habkakaihon.

1292 5 Geniotukhon, Brother of Argon-Khon.

1295 6 Badukhon, the Uncle of the last, of which three there is little memorable.

1296 7 Gazun, the Son of Argon-Khon, who made Casbin his Imperial Seat.

1305 8 Alyaptu, who transferred the Court to Tauris, and is said to have been the Founder of Sultania, a chief City of Media; the Brother of Gazun.

1317 9 Abusaid, Son of Alyaptu the last of the Race of Haalon, that Raigned in Persia. After whose death, Anno 1337. (being the 736. of the Mahometan Hegira) the more Potent Princes of the Tartars seized on the several parts and Provinces of it; every one calling himself King of that part or Province, which he was possessed of. And amongst them Gempsas the Sultan or Soldan of Parthia, (though a Persian born) put in for a share, and made himself Master of his own Province, and some parts adjoyning: made on that ground by some of our Christian Writers (who very imperfectly have transmitted to us the affairs of this Country) the sole King of Persia. In this confusion it continued till the coming of Tamerlane, who like a furious Whirlwind, driving driving all before him composed the differences, by getting all unto himself. But as Philosophy doth teach us, that no violent motion is of long continuance; so the course of business and the success of actions may instruct us also, that a Kingdom forced to bow under the command of a prosperous Army, is not so well assured to the Victor, but that fury of the War once past, it may return again to its former liberty, or open a more easie passage to some new Invader. And so it fared with the Conquests and Successes of Tamerlane, whose Issue quickly lost this Kingdom, and almost all the rest of his other Purchases: leaving but little memory of their names and actions. For partly by his own imprudence, in cantoning his Estates amongst his Children; and partly by the weakness of his Successors in the Realm of Persia, this Kingdom did relapse immediately to the same confusions in which he found it; having almost as many Soveraign Kings as Provinces. Most of them Homagers perhaps to the Kings of the House of Tamerlane, and those who afterwards Succeeded in the Title of Kings of Persia, of the Turcoman or Armenian Dynasty: not yet reduced unto this Crown, notwithstanding the great and prosperous successes of the Sophian Family. But for the Kings of the Race of Tamerlane, who only in their times had the honour to be called Kings of Persia, (and well enough content with that:) such as they were, we find them in this order following:

1405 10 Mirza Charock, the fourth Son of Tamerlane, succeeded in his appointment in the Realm of Persia.

1447 11 Oleghbegh, Son of Mirza Charok, vanquished and slain by his own Son.

1450 12 Abdalatife, slain not long after by his own Souldiers.

1451 13 Abdulla, the Son of Oleghbegh, and Brother of Abdalatife, vanquished by.

1453 14 Abusaid II, descended from Moroncha, the third Son of Tamerlane, succeeded on the death of Abdulla.

1461 15 Zeuzes, whom some call Jooncha, others, Malaonchres, discomfited and slain in battel by Ussan-Cassanes, Anno 1472. which was about 70 years from the death of Tamerlane.

The seventh Dynasty of the Turcoman, or the Armenian Race of the Kings of Persia.

1472 1 Ussan-Cassanes, by some call'd Assymbeius, by others more truly Ozem-Azambec, was the Son of Tracheton, one of those poor Armenian or Turcoman Princes, dispossessed by Bajazet the first, and restored by Tamerlane. Encroaching on his Neighbours, he was warned to desist by Zeuzes last Persian King; with whom encountring in a pitched Field he overcame him, and got that Kingdom by the Victory.

1478 2 Jacub, the second Son of Ussan-Cassanes, having put by his elder Brother, attained the Throne, and repulsed the Mamalucks out of Mesopotamia and Assyria, which they had invaded. He was after Poysoned by his Wife.

1490 3 Julaver, a Kinsman of Jacub's, succeeded him in the Estate, which he held only three years, and then left it to 1493 4 Baisinger, a Prince of the same Bloud; who living in Adultery with the Wife of Jacub, had conspired his death. 2.

Mahomet the Impostor and first Emperor of the Saracens, by his last Will and Testament, bequeathed the succession unto that Estate, to Hali his near-Kinsman, and Husband of Fatime his Eldest Daughter. But Abudezer, Haumar, and Osman, three powerful men, and the chief Commanders of the Army in the time of Mahomet, successively followed one another in the Supreme Dignity. After their death, Hali enjoyed that honour for a little while, supplanted first, and afterwards vanquished and slain by Muhavias, a great man of War, who succeeded in it: and to secure himself therein, slew Hasem or Ossan, the Son of Hali, and eleven of the Sons of that Ossan; the twelfth, called Musa Ceredine, escaping with life. From him descended lineally one Guine, the Lord of Ardoville in Media; who considering that there had been no Caliph in long time before, began to plot the Establishing of that high honour in his own Family, as the right Hiers to it. A man of so great reputation among the people, that Tamerlane having made a Conquest of Persia, thought it no dishonour to his Greatness to bestow a friendly visit on him. Dying, he left his hopes and projects to his Son, call'd Aider, who afterward for the Purity of Religion pretended by him, had the adjunct of Izophy; the word so signifying in that Language: who also proved of such esteem and power with all sorts of men, that Ussan-Cassanes, the first King of the Armenian or Turcoman Race, thought fit to make him Husband unto one of his Daughters. But on the contrary, Jacub the Son of Ussan, and some of his Successors, seeing him grow unto such power and estimation with the common people; and fearing what he could do, and not what he would do, endeavoured to depress him by all means that might be. Which he not able to remedy, as the Case then stood, practiced to add unto his Party under the popular pretence of reforming things that were amiss in their Religion; and grew so powerful in the end, that he gave Battel unto Rustan and Alamat, the two last Kings of the former Race. But Alamat having got the Victory, caused him to be slain; and delivered Hysmael and Solyman his two Sons, into the hands of Amazar, a chief Commander of his own, by him to be kept in perpetual Prison. But Amazar, a man of a more ingenious disposition, afforded them not only liberty, but also good Education: insomuch that Hysmael Sophi, a towardly young Gentleman, undertook Revenge for the death of his Father, which work he fulfilled, having overcom and slain King Alamat, and his Son Elvan. After this Victory, he being Crowned King, or Shaugh of Persia, altered the Form of Religion: making Hali, and himself the true Successors of Mahomet, but condemning Abudezer, Haumar, and Osman, with the Turks, as Rebels and Schismaticks.

Hence proceeded the bloudy Wars, which to the Persians loss, have hapned between them and the Turks: the Persians burning whatsoever Book or Monument they find concerning those three; and the Turks holding it more Meritorious to kill one Persian, than seventy Christians. Surius in his Commentaries, writing purposely of the acts of Hysmael, saith, that the Jews on some fond conceit, were perswaded that he was the Messiah, they had had ſo long looked for: But it proved quite contrary, there never being Prince that more vexed and grieved them.

The eighth Dynaſty, or Sophian Race of the Kings of Perſia.

1505 1 Hyſmael Sophi, the Founder of this Family, overthrown by Selimus the firſt, in the Calderan Fields. 20.

1525 2 Tamas, the Son of Hyſmael, vanquiſhed by Solyman the Magnificent, who took from him the Countries of Chaldæa, Aſſyria, and Meſopotamia, with ſome part of Media. 13.

1578 3 Aider, the ſecond Son of Tamas, obtained the Kingdom, impriſoning his Elder Brother; but his cruelty being much feared, he was made away by the practice of Periancona, his own Siſter, having only Reigned 15 days.

4 Hyſmael II. Eldeſt Son of Tamas, reſtored unto his Father's Throne; but Murdered with the privity of his Siſter alſo, who found him of too rough a nature for her to Govern; having Reigned near two years.

1579 5 Mahomet Codabanda, advanced unto the Throne by his Siſters Faction, (as being of a milder and more tractable nature) at his firſt entrance cauſed her to be Beheaded for the former Murders. During his time, not fully ſettled in the State, Amurath the third, by his Lieutenants won from him almoſt all Armenia, Media, and great part of Georgia. 7.

1585 6 Abas, the ſecond Son of Mahomet, having Treacherouſly practiced the death of Mirza, his Elder Brother, ſucceeded his Father, recovered almoſt all which the Turks had gained, and added the Kingdoms of Ormus, Heri, Candahor, and Hyrcania, to the Crown of Perſia.

7 Sophy, the Nephew of Abas by his Son Mirza, (whoſe Eyes he cauſed to be put out on a falſe ſuſpicion) at the Age of fifteen years ſucceeded: committed by his Grandfather during his Minority to the Protection of Emangoli, Chawn, or Duke of Shiras. A Prince, who ſince he came to Age, hath had a good hand againſt the Turks, attempting the recovery of Bagdat and other places, which had been taken from them in time of Abas.

The Government of theſe Perſian Kings, though it be deſpotical and ſevere, hath a great deal leſs of the Tyrant in it, than any other of the Mahometan Kings or Princes: theſe cheriſhing their Brethren, maintaining Nobility amongſt them, and encouraging induſtry; which makes them to be better ſerved than the Turk, or Tartar; to both whom they are far inferiour both in power and Treaſure. Their Officers of State, and men of principal Imployment, for the moſt part, Eunuchs (as generally in all the Empires of the Eaſt:) ſuch perſons being thought moſt truſty, becauſe abſtracted from the obligations of Wife and Children, they ſtudy more the Princes Service than their own Advantages. Their Forces conſiſt moſt of Horſe, to which they are inclined more generally, than to ſerve on Foot; and yet the greateſt Body of Horſe which they have brought at any time into the Field, came not to above 30000; but thoſe well furniſhed and appointed, maintained on Lordſhips and Eſtates after the manner of the Turkiſh Timariots. The Foot-Souldiers of his own Countries, but poor and raw, and very ſeldom ſtand their ground; that defect being for the moſt part ſupplied by Mercenaries. The inconveniency of which being found by Sultan Abas, he ſerved himſelf of Children bought of Chriſtian Parents near the Euxine Sea (from whence the Ægyptian Sultans had their Mamalucks) whom they call by the name Cozal-Baſſas, or Red-Caps, ſo named from the Colour of their Turbants trained up by them in their Religion and Warlike-Diſcipline, as the Turks their Janizaries; yet far inferiour to the Turks, againſt whom if they have prevailed ſince the time of Abas, they may aſcribe the greateſt part of their good fortune to thoſe Diviſions and Rebellions, which in theſe late times have been frequent in the Turkiſh Empire. And as for their Sea-Forces, they are inconſiderable. For though they have large Sea-coaſt both on the Perſian Bay, the Caſpian Sea, and the Southern Ocean; yet are they very poor in Shipping: ſuffering the Muſcovite to ingroſs the Trade of the Caſpian Sea; the Portugals, to manage that of the Southern Ocean; as formerly that alſo of the Perſian Bay, till the taking of Ormuz.

The Revenues of this Kingdom in the time of Hyſmael the firſt Sophy, were exceeding great: inſomuch that Tamas his Succeſſor, to ingratiate himſelf with all ſorts of people, releaſed them of all kinds of Cuſtoms impoſed on Marchandiſe, either imported or exported. And this they ſay amounted to the ſum of 90000 Tomans yearly: which, reckoning every Toman at 20 Crowns, made up a Million and 800000 Crowns of annual income. Which notwithſtanding, his Revenue was computed at four or five Millions of Crowns yearly; raiſed out of Demain Lands, the tenth of Fruits, the profit of Mines, and the Fine pay'd by every Subject when he ſets up Shop. But Tamas finding this not to be ſufficient to maintain his Royalty, doubled the value of his money, and thereby for the preſent his Revenue alſo. Since that they have been much impaired by the Conqueſt made upon them by the Turks, who had got from them ſo much Land as maintained 40000 Timariots; and yielded to the Grand Seigneur one Million of yearly income: whether improved again or not to their former height, I am not able to determine.

TARTARIA is bounded on the East, with China, the Oriental Ocean, and the Streights of Anian (if such Streights there be) by which parted from America; on the West, with Russia, and Podolia, a Province of the Realm of Poland; on the North, with the main Scythick or Frozen Ocean: and on the South, with part of China, from which separated by a mighty Wall, some part of India, the River Oxus, parting it from Bactria, and Margiana, two Persian Provences; the Caspian Sea, which separates it from Media, and Hyrcania; the Caucasian Mountains interposing betwixt it and Turcomania; and the Euxine, which divideth it from Anatolia, and Thrace. So called from the Tartars, a puissant and mighty people now possessed hereof; the reason of whose name we shall shew hereafter.

It containeth all those great and spacious Provinces, which the Ancients called Seres, Scythia extra Imaum, Scythia intra Imaum, Sacæ, Sogdiana, the greatest part of Sarmatia Asiatica, and part of Sarmatia Europæa: extending it self the whole length of Asia, from the River Tanais, to the Eastern Ocean; taking in Taurica Chersonesus, and some other parts of Europe also. So that if we measure it by miles, it is said to contain 5400 from East to West, and 3600 from North to South: a greater quantity of ground than the Turkish Empire, but of less fertility and accompt.

In measuring by the Way of Degrees, it reacheth from the 50 Degree of Longitude, to the 195. which is 145. Degrees from West to East: and from the 40th. Degree of Northern Latitude, unto the 8th. which is within ten Degrees of the Pole it self. By which accompt it lieth from the beginning of the sixth Clime, where the longest day in Summer is 15 hours, till they cease measuring by Climates; the longest day in the most Northern parts hereof, being full six months; and in the Winter half of the year, the night as long.

The Country lying under such different Meridians, and such distant Climes, must needs be such, as no general Character can be given of it; and therefore we shall defer that with the names of the Rivers, and chief Mountains, to the discription of the several and particular Provinces. But for the people, being much of the same nature in every part, we may take the measure of them here. Affirmed to be of square Stature, broad faces, hollow eyes, thin beards, thick lips, flat noses, ugly countenances, swart of complexion, not so much by the heat of the Sun, (which keeps far enough off) as their natural sluttishness. Barbarous every where in behaviour, especially in those parts which they call Asiatica, and Antiqua: but withal very strong of body, swift of footmanship, vigilant in time of service, and patient of all extremities both of cold and hunger. The women sutable to the men, scorning or wanting Ornaments to set themselves out; or when they do, they seldom go beyond Copper, Feathers, or such precious Gew-gaws.

In behaviour they are rude and barbarous, as before was said; eating their Enemies when they take them, as in way of Revenge; first letting out their bloud, which they receive into Cups, and use it as Wine unto the feast. Though swift of foot, yet generally they love to ride, though it be but on Oxen; about whose necks, as about Horses, when they Travel, they use little Bells, with which Musick they are much delighted. Their Speech, even in their common talk, is a kind of whining, and their singing little better than the howling of Wolves. They eat commonly with unwashed hands, the dirt and grease about their fingers serving as a sauce for their meat, which they devour greedily, and with little chewing; and for their ordinary drink use Mares milk. Homely of habit, made of the courset stuff, and reaching no lower than the knee: and if they go to the charge of Furs, contrary to the custom of other people, they wear the hairy side outwards, and the skin next their own bodies; only to shew the richness of their Apparel. And yet so proud in this beggery that they account the Christians but as Dogs, contemn all the rest of the world, and think their Cham the only considerable Prince; by whose name they swear, as by their Gods.

In matter of Religion it is hard to say, whether Mahometanism or Paganism, be of most extent: some parts hereof being wholly Pagan, some wholly Mahometan, and some mixt of both. But of the two the Pagan is the better Gentleman, as being of the elder house, and of more Antiquity: the Sect of Mahomet not being entertained amongst them, till the year 1246.

And yet these have not so prevailed, as to extinguish the remainders of Christianity, of which there are amongst them many several Churches. The Christian Faith first planted amongst the Scythians, by the preaching of S. Andrew, and S. Philip, two of the Apostles. Overgrown in these latter Ages by the Sect of Nestorians, either by the diligence of their Preachers, or for want of others to instruct them in more Orthodox Tenets. Before the prevailing of the Tartars, besides the Circassian Christians, of whom more anon, there are in the most remote parts of Tartary, whole Kingdoms of that Religion; as namely that of Tenduc, then the chief of all: besides some numbers of them in Tanguth, Cauchinteles, Cassar, Samarchan, Karthim, Suchair, Erginul, and Caraiam; where in the time of Paulus Venetus, who surveyed these parts about the year 1270. they lived intermingled with the Pagans. Not so diminished since the Conquest of those Countries by the Tartars, but that they are of a considerable number, especially in Cathay it self: where they are said to have a Metropolitan in the City of Cambalu (the principal City of that Empire) and he so honoured by the Great Cham, that for a time they receive their Crowns from no hands but his.

Great

As for the Tartars, they are by the Chronologer Genebrard, said to be the off-spring of the Ten Tribes, whom Salmanassar led away Captive; and that especially for three reasons. The first is, that the word Tatari, by which name (saith he) they ought rather to be called, than by that of Tartari, signifieth in the Syriack and Hebrew Tongues, a Remnant. But unto this it is answered, that the name of this people is derived from the River Tartar, as some; or from the Region called Tartar, where they first dwelt, as most think: and again, that though the Hebrew word הרחר signifie a Remnant, yet can it not properly be applied to the Tartars; who so infinitely exceed the Jews, that they cannot be thought to be a remainder of them. Secondly, He alledgeth for proof hereof, that this people use Circumcision, the Character of the Jewish Nation. And hereunto it is replyed, that Circumcision was common to many people, besides the Jews, as to the Ægyptians, Æthiopians, &c. and that rather as a National Custom, than a Religious Ordinance; and again, that the Tartars cannot be proved to have received Circumcision, before they received Mahometanism. Thirdly, There is brought to confirm this Opinion, a place of Esdras, cap. 13. lib. 2. where it is said, that the Ten Tribes (that they might the better keep God's Statutes) passed over the River Euphrates; and after a journey of one year and a half, came into a Country called Arsareth. To refell which, those of the contrary Opinion find no better course, than by shewing the impossibilities of it. For the Tartars (when their name was first known) were meer Idolaters, had no remembrance of the Law, observed not the Sabbath, nor any other point of Jewish Religion: and so the Ten Tribes retired not hither to keep Gods Statutes. Secondly, Euphrates lyeth quite West from Assyria, and those places to which Salmanassar Transplanted the Israelites; and so it could not be passed over in a journey towards the North. And thirdly, It is very improbable, that the Ten Tribes should either be so simple, as to leave Assyria, where they were peacably settled, or so Valiant, as to force a passage through those Countries of Scythia, which neither Persians, Greeks, or Romans were able to withstand in the best of their Fortunes.

To let pass therefore all imaginations of a Forein Pedegree, the truth is, that they were no other than a Ruder and more Northern brood of Scythians; who pressed by want, or otherwise oppressed by the King of Tenduc, unto whom they were subject, Armed themselves against him, obtained a memorable Victory, and settled Cingis their chief Captain in the Royal Throne, Anno 1162. After which, growing of more power, and inlarging their Dominions further, they united in the name of Tartars all the Scythian Nations; as Mahomet did those of the three Arabia's, in the name of Saracens; or as in former times, the many several Tribes of the German Nations, were united in the names of Franks, or Alemans. Not known in Europe by this name, till their many great and signal Victories had made them formidable; which was about the year 1212. within very little of which time they had made themselves Masters of a larger Empire, than that of Macedon, or Rome, in their greatest glories. But being of a hasty growth, it decayed as suddenly; the greatest part of their Europæan purchases, being conquered from them by the Dukes of Moscovy, and the Kings of Poland, as their acquests in Asia, and Africk, by the Turks and Persians. Yet still are they possessed of so large a Territory, that were they not distracted into several States; or did those several States depend upon one Supreme, that one Supreme might very easily give Law unto all his Neighbours, and make the Turks and Persians Tributaries, as in former times. But laying aside these speculations of what they might do if united under one command, let us now look upon them as they are divided into these five parts, that is to say, 1 Tartaria Precopensis, 2 Asiatica, 3 Antiqua, 4 Zagathay, and 5 Cathay.

1 TARTARIA PRECOPENSIS.

TARTARIA PRECOPENSIS is bounded on the East, with the River Tanais, now Don; on the West, with the River Borysthenes, now call'd Nieper, by which last parted from Podolia, a Province of Poland; on the North, with part of Russia; and on the South, with some part of the Euxine Sea: by this accompt lying totally within Europe.

It had the name of Precopensis from Precopia, a chiefe Town thereof. By some called Tartaria Minor, to distinguish it from the greater body of that People: the Inhabitants hereof most commonly passing by the name of Crim-Tartars, from the Town of Crim, in which their Cham or Emperor doth reside most usually. The Country by them now possessed, part Anciently of Sarmatia Europæa, was Inhabited by a Warlike Nation, called the Tauri: from whom those parts hereof which lye betwixt the Empire of Russia, and the two Rivers Tanais, and Borysthenes, were call'd Tauro-Scythia; that which shooteth out into the Sea, encompassed with the Euxine on the one side, and Palus Mœotis on the other, being called Taurica Chersonesus. In the Description whereof at this place and time, as formerly I made bold with some part of Asia, to lay together the Estate of the Russian Empire: so now to satisfie for that trespass, I shall make bold with part of Europe to lay together the discourse and affairs of Tartary.

The whole Country plentiful of Fruits, and the Soil indifferently disposed to Tillage and Grazing, though more accustomed unto the last: the people more delighting in their Herds of Cattel, than in the fulness of their Garners. Camels, Horse, Oxen, Sheep, and Goats they have plenty of; great store of delicate Fowl, and abundance of Fish, bred in the large Fens of Mœotis: and in their Forests plenty of all sorts of Venison. Which Character as it belongeth generally to all the Country, so most especially to the Chersonese, or Demy-Island. United to the main Land with so narrow an Isthmus, that the Tartars once went about to dig it thorow; from whence some say they had the name of Precopenses, Precoph in the Sclavonian Tongue, signifying a deep Trench, or digging through. In Length not above 24 German, or 96 Italian Miles; in Breadth but 60 of the one, or 15 of the other. Blest with a very temperate Air, and a gentle Winter: which beginning with the last of December, ends the first of March. Never extreme; and when the frosts are at the sharpest, but of short continuance. Divided in the midst with a Chain of Hills, extended from the East to the West; the boundray of the Dominions of the Turk and Tartar.

The people of the same complexion and composition as the rest of the Tartars; and not much different in manners. Their Diet, Roots, Cheese, Garlick; and of the poorer sort, for the most part Horse-flesh (none but the better sort presuming upon Beef or Venison, though of both abundance) which they eat without Bread, or any thing else: and therefore when they go to the Wars, every Souldier takes two Horses with him, the one to serve upon, and the other to kill. And yet for all this havock which they make of Horse-flesh, there are few years in which they sell not 40 or 50 thousand in the Fairs of Mosco. Towns they built none, scarce willing to maintain those which were built to their hands. Nor have they (except men of Trades and Manufactures) any standing houses; removing up and down with their Droves of Cattel, moving their houses with them, (which they build on Wheels) from one place to another. Of money they make no esteem, preferring Brass and Steel before other Metals; because more useful to them for Swords and Knives. Good Souldiers for the most part, especially at the Bow and Arrows; to which so accustomed from their child-hood, that they can shoot as readily backward as forward. Trained also of late times to the Harquebuse, well skilled in handling the Turkish Scymetars, and their Horsemens Staves. Not to be vanquished but by death, as men that are resolved rather to die than be taken Prisoners: and if victorious, more intent upon taking Captives (especially young Boys and Girls, whom they sell to the Turks) than upon any other booty or spoils of war.

Mosco.

The Religion most embraced and countenanced is that of Mahomet, mingled with some of their old Principles of Christianity: for they confess that CHRIST shall be the Judge both of the quick and dead in the day of Judgment; and punish those that speak irreverently of him. In that regard more favourable to the Christians than other Mahometans; which makes great store of Grecian and Armenian Christians to dwell amongst them. The Language which they speak is their own Tartarian, but intermixt with much of the Arabick and Turkish Tongues; and when they write, they use either Chaldæan, or Arabian Characters.

Rivers of most note in it, are 1 Borysthenes, and 2 Tanais, which though they have their spring-heads in the Empire of Russia (as was there declared) have their falls in this: the first in the Euxine Sea, in the 57th. the other into Palus Mæotis in the 67th. degree of Longitude; by which we may conjecture somewhat of the length of the Country. 3 Hipanes. 4 Carcimitis, falling into the Euxine. 5 Agaris, and 6 Byces, which lose themselves in the Fens of Mæotis; as do also 7 Pasiascus, 8 Gerus, 9 Lycus, from the main Land; and 10 Istrianus from the Taurican Chersonese. By the confluence of which waters, and many others falling into the Asian side, the Lake or Fens of Mæotis are of great extent, in compass at least a thousand miles; well stored with Fish, and still retaining somewhat of the sweetness of those many Rivers which are emptied into it. So called from the Mæotæ, who formerly inhabited on the banks hereof; and giving name to an excellent kind of Fish which were called Mæotides by the Ancients. At this day generally called Mar delle Zabahe, by the Italians commonly Mar della Tana, the Sea of Tanais, and sometimes also Mer Bianco, or the White Sea, to difference it from the Euxine, which they call the Black, for the reasons formerly delivered. Passing directly towards the South, it is streightned by a narrow Channel, not above four miles in breadth, though about 24. in length, called anciently by the name of Bosphorus Cimmerius; Bosphorus, because Oxen did use to swim over it; Cimmerius from the Cimmerii who possessed the adjoyning Country, on the Asian side: but known at this day by the name of Stretto di Caffa, from the City Capha near unto it; and by the Inhabitants, Vospero, more near the Original. Out of this Streight that confluence of waters which do meet in the Mæotick Fens, do make their way into the Euxine, according to that of Lucan;

Quaque Fretum currens Mæotidas egerit undas.
Where the Mæotick Pools at last
Thorow a narrow Streight make haste.

Chief Cities of it at the present, 1 Capha, or Caffa, in the Chersonese, not far from the Streight called hence Stretto di Caffa; a flourishing Empory, and furnished with a large and capacious Haven. Heretofore possessed by the Genoese, who by the benefit of this Port, and the Plantation which they had in Perah on the North side of Constantinople, engrossed into their own hands the whole Trade of the Euxine. Taken by Mahomet the Great, Anno 1475. it became subject to the Turks, and drew into that thraldom all the Southern parts of the Chersonese, which depended on it: deprived thereby of the greatest part of its former lustre, the Christian Churches being destroyed, the Towers and publick buildings razed; the houses of the Genoa Merchants which were fair and beautiful, destroyed and ruined: yet still the principal of this Biland, or Demy-Island; and anciently better known by the name of Theodosia, and by that name remembred in Ammianus. 2 Precopb, in Latine called Precopia; a Town and Castle situate in or near the place, where stood the Eupateria of the Ancients, called also Pompeiopolis, Heraclea, and Achillis Cursus. 3 Corsunum, the Chersonesus of Ptolomy, anciently a Greek Colony; and then accompted for the chief of the whole Peninsula: rich, populous, and well-traded, by reason of the Haven which was safe and large; and of great beauty and magnificence, as the ruins testifie. By the Turks at this day called Sari-Germanum, or the yellow Tower, the soyl about it being of a Saffron colour. 4 German, or Crim, the ancient Seat of the Chams, or Princes of these Tartars; and at that time the fairest and greatest of this Biland: Situate in the midst thereof, and fortified with a strong Castle, for the height of the Walls, and depth of the Ditch esteemed impregnable: supposed to be the Taphræ of Pliny, or the Taphros of Ptolomy: Mentioned by Florus, as then lately taken by some Roman Emperour, and so most likely to be Trajan, the first that ever extended the Roman Empire beyond Danubius, and the Euxine: Situate in the very Isthmus, and so commanding both the Euxine, and the Lakes of Mæotis; as Corinth betwixt the Ægæan and Ionian Seas. 5 Panticapæum, situate on the very Bosphorus, and now called Vospero by the Natives: the ancientest City of this Peninsula, and said by Ammianus to be the mother of all the Greek Colonies, which were planted in it. 9 Tanais, the Tanais of Ptolomy and other Ancients, because situate on the mouth of that River; or rather betwixt the two mouths of it, distant from one another a degree of Longitude. A Town of great Trade, and well frequented by the Merchants of all those Countries, which border on the Euxine Sea: but subject to the Turks, who have there a Garrison, and by them called Azac. 7 Ingermenum, situate on a large and lofty Mountain, and fortified with a Tower or Castle of stone; under which there is a Church, with great Charge and Art cut out of the Rock: formerly of great wealth and fame, now decayed and ruinous. 8 Jamboli, by some called Belachium. 9 Mancopia, by the Turks called Mangutum. 10 Circum; all boasting of their several Castles. 11 Oczakow, or Oczacovia, situate near the influx of the great River Borysthenes, into the Bay of Carcimitis; and so most like to be built in the place of that, which Ptolomy calleth Olbiah; Pliny, Olbiopolis: Honoured of late times (since the taking of Taurica by the Turks) with the residence of the Great Cham: from whence these Tartars are by some called Olsanenses. 12 Metropolis, as Ptolomy, or rather Melitopolis, as Pliny calleth it; a Colony in old times of the Milesians, not far from Olbia. Besides all which, and many others mentioned by the ancient Writers, of which there is nothing now remaining; the Court of the Great Cham in Summer time makes a movable City, built upon Wheel houses, and transported from one place to another, as occasion serveth: which houses at every ſtation are orderly diſpoſed of into Streets, and Lanes, and by the Tartars are called Agara, or a Town of Carts.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were of Scythian Race; for by that name ſo elder Writers call not only the true and proper Scythians, lying on both ſides of Imaus: but even the Sauromatæ or Sarmatians alſo; and thoſe not only of Sarmatia Aſiatica, bordering next unto them: but even ſuch Europæan Nations, as lived on the Northern banks of Iſter, and the Euxine Sea. And ſo they are affirmed to be by Ptolomy himſelf; though otherwiſe more exact than any, in diſtinguiſhing Sarmatia Europæa, from Aſiatica; and Aſiatica from the Scythians. For ſpeaking of the Nations of Sarmatia Europæa, inhabiting on the Palus Mæotis, he ranks them thus, Καὶ πα' ὅλην τὴν πλευρὰν τῆς Μαιώτιδος, &c. i. e. And all along the Coaſts of Mæotis, dwell the Jazyges (diſtinct from thoſe called Metanaſtæ) and the Rhoxolani; and more within the Land, the Himaxobii and Alani, Scythians. More towards the banks of the Euxine, and in the Cherſoneſe it ſelf, dwell the ancient Tauri, ſubdivided into the ſeveral Nations of the Sinchi, Napæi, and Arinchi, by the ſaid Ptolomy included in the general name of Tauro-Scythæ. To none but theſe, of all the Europæan Sarmatians doth he give this name. And therefore I conceive them to have been thoſe Scythians, againſt whom Darius King of Perſia made his fruitleſs war. Picking a quarrel with this People, becauſe their King had denied to give him one of his Daughters to Wife; or to revenge, as others more probably ſay, the inrode which the Scythians formerly had made into Aſia, he drew together an Army of 700 thouſand. Paſſing over the Thracian Boſphorus, he came at laſt to the banks of the Iſther, where it parteth Moldavia and Bulgaria; and there for the paſſage of his men cauſed a Bridge to be built, to the keepers whereof he left a Cord of 60 knots commanding them every day to untie one knot; and if he came not back before all were untied, to return to their houſes. This done, he marched towards his enemies, who ſtill fled before him; leading him into the moſt deſert and unhabitable parts of their Country; and when they had brought him into a ſtreight, ſent Embaſſadours to him with a Bird, a Mouſe, a Frog, and an handful of Arrows; willing the Perſians, if they could, to expound that Riddle. Darius, willing to hope the beſt of his deſign, conjectured that the Scythians did ſubmit unto him, by delivering into his hands their Air, Earth, Water, and Arms, Hieroglyphically ſignified in their Preſent: But Gobrias, one of the ſeven Princes, made this Expoſition, That if the Perſians could not fly like a Bird thorow the Air, or like a Mouſe creep under the Earth, or like a Frog ſwim over the Water, they could by no means eſcape the Scythian Arrows. And to ſay truth, this Commentary beſt agreed with the Text. For theſe Scythians following cloſe upon him, or rather driving him before, and vexing him with continual skirmiſhes, forced him to make ſuch haſte to get over the River, that he loſt 80000 of his men in the fight and flight. This was the only memorable Action of theſe Europæan Scythians in thoſe Elder Ages: more memorable in the times ſucceeding for their horrid cruelty, than any argument of their valour. For it is ſaid of theſe Tauri, or Tauro-Scythæ, that for the pleaſing of their Gods, eſpecially of Diana, whom they called Orſiloche, they uſed to ſacrifice all ſuch ſtrangers as they could lay hands on; and with their heads moſt barbarouſly adorned the Walls of her Temples. An inhumanity with which the Chriſtian Advocates of the Primitive times did much uſe to upbraid the Gentiles; taunting them with the Sacrifices of Diana Taurica (ſo named from hence) as inconſiſtent with the nature of a God or goodneſs; moſt rightly giving them this brand or cenſure, that they were not Sacra, but Sacrilegia. Et præſtat profanus eſſe quàm ſic religioſus. Better it was to be of no Religion, than of one ſo cruel.

But to go forwards with the ſtory, In the actions of the Greeks and Romans we hear nothing of them, unleſs it were that the Emperour Trajan (as Florus ſeems to intimate) took the City of Taphre: Which if he did, he added by that action ſomewhat to his own honour, but nothing to the Roman Empire: this people being never reckoned amongſt their Provinces. Nor hear we any thing by name of their infeſting the Roman Territories (as the other barbarous Nations did:) except they paſſed in the account of the Goths, Alani, Hunns, Avares, or other of the Scythian, or Sarmatian People; by which the Majeſty of that Empire was trod under foot. But what the Perſians, Greeks, and Romans were not able to do, was with eaſe effected by the Tartars: who in the time of Jocchata, or Hoccata, the next to Cingis, under the conduct of Bathu, or Roydo, one of their moſt renowned Commanders, ſubdued all theſe parts; together with Ruſſia on the North, Bulgaria, and Hungarie on the Eaſt. Subject at firſt to the Command of the Great Cham of Cathaia, as the reſt of the Tartarians were, they came at laſt to have a Prince of their own; one Lochtan Cham, deſcended from the aforeſaid Bathu, and (as it was pretended) of the bloud of Cingis. They grew at laſt of ſo great power, by conquering the Aſiatick Tartars which lay neareſt to them, that Mahomet the Great thought fit to keep them down before grown too ſtrong for him: and therefore under colour of taking in the City of Capha, then poſſeſſed by the Genoeſe, made himſelf Maſter of the greateſt part of the Taurican Cherſoneſe, and the Port of Tanais; thereby commanding both Mæotis and the Euxine Sea. In the time of Selimus the firſt, who had married a Daughter of this Crim-Tartar, (for ſo they call him) and was aided by him with an Army of 15000 men againſt his Father, the Turks and theſe Tartarians grew into a League. The chief conditions of it were, that the Tartar ſhould aid the Turk upon all occaſions, with 60000 horſe, if it were required; that they ſhall not make war with any of their neighbours, (except the Muſcovite) without leave of the Turk; that they ſhall pay yearly to the Grand Seigneur in the way of Tribute 300 Chriſtians; that the new Cham, upon the death or depoſition of his Predeceſſor, ſhall receive from the Great Turk a Royal Banner, in token of his Confirmation in that eſtate; that in reward of theſe ſervices, the Crim-Tartar ſhall have yearly from the Grand Seigneur 5500 Ducats, in the way of Penſion; and ſucceed finally in the Turkiſh Empire, if ever the male Iſſue of the Houſe of Ottoman ſhould chance to fail. According unto this agreement, the Tartars have been aiding to the Turks from time to time, againſt the Perſians, Polanders, Hungarians, Moldavians, and indeed whom not? And that with great and puiſſant Armies; the Great Cham ſometimes arming 150000 of his own Subjects (leaving but one man in an houſe to attend their Cattel;) and ſometimes adding 50000 Circaſſians and others of the Aſian Tartars. And for the Moſcovite, whom he is left at liberty to aſſault by this Capitulation, he hath had ſo hard an hand upon him, that in the year 1571. they pierced as far as to the City of Moſco, and ſet fire on the Suburbs: which flaming into the City built moſt of wood, and then reckoned to be 30 miles in compaſs, within the ſpace of four hours burnt the greateſt part of it; and therein no fewer than 800000 of all ſorts of people. A quarrel not to be compoſed; the Tartar not only laying claim to the Kingdoms of Caſan, and Aſtrachan, which the Ruſſe poſſeſſeth; but even to Moſcovie it ſelf, as hath there been

shewn. Nothing so punctual is the Turk on his part, to perform the Contract; who not content to have the Tartar for his friend, or at the worst his Homager, hath of late times attempted to make him his Slave or Vassal. For Amurath the third, quarrelling Mahomet the Crim-Tartar for a design to intercept Osman-Bassa, in his way from Persia to Constantinople, authorized the said Osman to war upon him: by whom the poor Crim and his two Sons, betrayed by some of his own Counsellors (corrupted with Turkish Gold) were strangled with a Bow-string; Islan a brother of the Crims, first sworn a Vassal to the Turk, put into the place; and over him a Turkish Beglerbeg or Bassa, to command in chief. What hopes he hath of succeeding in the Turkish Empire, if the House of Ottoman should fail, hath been already taken into consideration, in our discourse upon that subject.

What the Revenue of this Prince is, it is hard to say; his Subjects having little money, and living most upon the bartery of their Cattel. But besides what he hath in Lands or Customs, and the 5500 Ducats yearly which he receiveth from the Turk, he hath the tenth of all the spoils which are got in the wars, and a Cheekine for every Captive, for some two or three (whosoever taketh them) according unto their estates.

As for his power, what he can do in Horse, we have seen already; and as for Foot, and Ammunition, and other necessaries, he is supplied with them by the Turk, (who doth sometimes espouse his quarrels:) by whose assistance they have brought the Moscovites to some extremities, And upon confidence of the favour and protection of the Grand Seigneur, the Cham then being, upon the death of Stephen Bathori, (whom Amurath the third, commended to the Crown of Poland) sent Embassadours to negotiate his Election to that Kingdom; and to enduce them thereunto, promised them in his Letters amongst other things, that their Pope should be his Pope, their Luther his Luther: and that rather than put them unto any charge to find his Table, he could live with Horse-flesh. His Embassie entertained with Laughter, as it well deserved.

2. TARTARIA DESERTA.

TARTARIA DESERTA is bounded on the West, with Precopensis, and the Empire of Russia; on the East, with Antiqua, and Zagathay; from which last parted by the River Spane, which falleth into the Caspian Sea about the middle of it, and with the great Lake of Kitay, from East to West: on the North, with the Scythic or frozen Ocean; and on the South, with part of the Euxine Sea, the Caucasian Mountains, and some part of the Caspian.

It took this name from the many Deserts which are in it; and is called also Asiatica, to difference it from Precopensis, which is wholly in Europe: or because it taketh up the whole Continent of Sarmatia Asiatica, according to the bounds thereof laid down by Ptolomy, except some part hereof incorporated to the Russian Empire.

The Country of it self sufficiently fruitful, if well manured; and were it in the hands of a laborious and industrious people, would yield large increase: as appears by the ill-husbandry of the Tartars, who sow nothing on it but Mill and Punicum (grains unknown to us) and yet without giving it any tillage, receiving very plentiful returns of both. But the Tartar being a Nation that hateth Agriculture, and laugheth at Christians for living on the tops of Reeds, (so they call our bread) neglect all that which is not of a rank Pasture for their Herds and Cattel: moving from one place to another, as the Grass faileth them; which maketh it so full of Deserts, and so empty of Towns, as to deserve the name of Tartaria Deserta.

The People or Inhabitants of it are of several sorts, derived from three several Originals, and disposed of in three several parts. 1 The Samoyeds, dwelling towards the Northern Ocean, who are wholly Idolaters, now reckoned as a part of Zagathay, and there we shall hear further of them. 2 The Circassians, bordering on the Euxine, for the the most part Christians; and 3 the Tartars, planted betwixt both, being all Mahometans. These again subdivided into several Tribes, which they call their Hordes: of which the most considerable are, 1 the Nagaian Tartars, 2 the Zavolhenses, 3 the Thumenenses, 4 the Kirgessi; besides the Hordes or Kingdoms of Casan, and Astrachan, added unto the Empire of Russia, where described already; and others of inferiour note, not here considerable.

But before we come to speak of these People in their several places, we must first look upon the whole Country, as presented to us under the name of Sarmatia Asiatica: bounded by Ptolomy as before, save that it did extend more Westwards; and was unknown to him in the Northern parts of it: now possessed by the Moscovite. So populous in the time of that Author, that he giveth us the names of forty several Nations which did then inhabite it; and of about as many Towns of good estimation. Of which there are but few or none remaining; and for the names of some of the principal of them, we shall have them presently.

Rivers of most note in it, 1 Marabius. 2 Rhombitus, the Greater, and 3 the Less; 4 Anticus, 5 Theophanius, 6 Psathis, 7 Thesyris, 8 Corax, and 9 Vardanes; all of them falling into the Euxine, and Mœotic Fens. 10 Vidonis, 11 Alnata, and 12 Rha, paying their Tributes to the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. Of these the principal is Rha, by the modern Latines called Volgo; by the Tartars, Edi; rising in Russia, not far from the City of Mosco, (where we have described it.) Most memorable, besides the seventy Mouths or Channels, wherewith it openeth into the Caspian, for a Medicinable and wholsome root growing on both sides thereof; which the Physicians call Rha, by the name of the River; and for distinctions sake, Rha Pontick, to difference it from Rhubarb, or Rha Barbarum, as of a different nature from it; this last being purgative, and the other more apt to bind. 13 Ob, a River unknown to Ptolomy, rising out of the Lake of Kitay, a Lake in bigness like the Sea, and full of many little Islands (most of them inhabited.) Which River at its first parting from this Lake, is said to be of 8 miles breadth; and growing still bigger and bigger, emptieth it self at last in the Northern Ocean: the present boundary betwixt the Russian, and the people in the North of this Country.

Principal Mountains of this part 1 Corax, giving name unto the River issuing out of it, 2 Montes Hippici, extended towards the Caspian Sea. 3 Montes Ceraunii lying in the furthest parts hereof (then known unto my Author) to the North and East. 4 Caucasus, or Cauciſii Montes, extended from the Euxine to the Caspian Seas; and parting Sarmatia Asiatica from Colchis, Iberia, and Albania. A chain of Hills of which Aristotle saith, Acumine & latitudine omnium maximi, &c. that for height and breadth they are the greatest of the East; the tops whereof are lightned by the Sun beams in midnight till almost day-break, when it is dark night in the valleys beneath. Not passable for horse or foot (except they creep along by the Euxine shore) but at one place only, called Sarmatiæ Pylæ, or the Gates of Sarmatia; by others named Caucasiæ Portæ, from the Hills adjoyning. Situate in the 81 degree of Latitude; and not far from the Caſpian Sea: but that ſo intricate and narrow, that very ſmall force may keep it againſt ſtrong Armies. So carefully did Almighty God in his Heavenly Providence, ſhut up this fierce and barbarous People, from the reſt of Mankind, by ſuch unfordable Waters, and unpaſſable Mountains: not to be freed out of this Priſon, till he thought good to uſe them, as the Executioners of his wrath and vengeance, for the puniſhment of ſinful and impenitent Nations. This ſaid, we will conſider thoſe particular Nations, which before we named, and are now poſſeſſed of it in their ſeveral places.

1. Oppoſite to the Precopenſes lie the CIRCASSIANS, extended from the Cimmerian Boſphorus and the Fens of Mæotis, towards the Eaſtern ſhores of the Euxine Sea for the ſpace of 500 miles; and reaching 200 miles towards the North. The name impoſed on them by the Tartars, whereas before they were called by Pliny, Zigæ; by ſome Writers, Zychi, conceived to be the Zinchi of Ptolomy.

The Country very fitly ſeated for Trade and Merchandiſe, as having a fair and large Sea coaſt, with many Rivers opening into it (nine of thoſe ſpoken of before, paſſing thorow theſe Tracts:) and not a few capacious Bays, and commodious Havens. Of which the principal were Sinus Cerceticus, or the Bay of Cercetis, Synda, and Bata, two known Havens, and ſpecified by my Author with the adjunct of Portus. But theſe conveniences not much looked after by the preſent Inhabitants, who are more inclined to the Wars, than to Trades, or Merchandiſe. A ſtout and Military People, trained to their Weapons from their Childhood; and ſold as ſoon as trained to it by unnatural Parents. For from theſe parts did the Mamalucks of Ægypt fetch their firſt Original; and from hence ſupply themſelves with a perpetual Seminary of Slaves and Souldiers, raiſed by degrees unto the higheſt dignities of that ſlaviſh Empire; And from theſe parts the Perſian Sophies are ſupplied with their Cozzel-Baſſis, diſciplined and inſtructed by them like the Turkiſh Janizaries.

The Chriſtian Faith was here planted in the year 860. or thereabouts, by the Miniſtry of Cyrill (or Chiurill) and Methodius; employed in that Service by the Patriarch of Conſtantinople. In which reſpect their Churches are of the Greek Communion, conforming thereto in Rites and Doctrine, and of the juriſdiction of that Patriarch: but differing from them very much in matters practical. For it is ordinary with theſe half Chriſtians, not to baptize their Children tell eight years old; to hear Divine Service ſtanding without their Churches, into which they very ſeldom enter (eſpecially the Gentlemen) till the fortieth, or (as ſome ſay) the ſixtieth year of their age: dividing the whole courſe of their life betwixt God and the Devil, in dedicating their youth unto Theft and Robbery, their old Age (when they can no longer commit thoſe villanies) to the difficult buſineſs of repentance.

Places of moſt obſervation amongſt the Ancients, 1 Cimmerium, a Town and Promontory, ſo called from the Cimmerii, once the chief People of theſe parts, of whom more anon; ſituate on the very ſhore of the Boſphorus, from hence denominated. 2 Phanagoria, in old times a well-traded Empory; ſituate on a little Iſland raiſed out of the Sea, by the care and induſtry of the Greeks, who had here a Factory. 3 Apathurgus, by Pliny called Apaturum, memorable for a Temple of Venus ſirnamed Apaturia (which name ſhe gave unto this place,) becauſe (ſaith Strabo) when the Giants aſſaulted her, ſhe craved help of Hercules, who ſlew them all one after another. 4 Geruſa, by Ptolomy honoured with the title of Civitas, the Gargaza of Diodorus, now called S. George's. 5 Oenuntia, near the mouth of the River Theſyris. 6 Araza, more within the Land, which with 7 Ampſacis, hath the name of a City alſo. The names of their chief Havens we have ſeen before. But few of theſe, or any other mentioned by the ancient Authors, being now viſible in their ruins: the chief of thoſe which are now extant, are 1 Locoppa, 2 Conioce; but of no great note.

The People anciently though divided into the ſeveral Tribes of the Thyrſagetæ, Zigæ, Turcæ, the Huns, Avares, and Mæotæ, all noted Nations; beſides the Coaxtræ, Zinchi, Tyrambæ, Pſelii, and others as obſcure as they, were better known by the name of Cimmerians, in which thoſe ſeveral Tribes concentred. Deſcended in the right of that common original, from Gomer the Son of Japhet, firſt planted in the Mountainous places of Albania: his Poſterity known by the name of Gomerii, afterwards Cimmerii, left there a memorial of themſelves in the Mountains called Cimmerini. But that Country proving both too barren, and too narrow for them, ſome of them paſſed into Phrygia Major, where they built the City Cimmeris, not unknown to Pliny, in whoſe time it was extant: and others in ſome Tract of time, keeping the Euxine on their left hand, fixed themſelves in theſe parts; here giving name to the Town and Promontory Cimmerion, to the Cimmerian Boſphorus, and generally to all the people deſcended of them. From theſe particularly, as the ſtout and valiant Nation of the Cimbri, do derive their Pedigree; ſo from theſe and the Children of Meſech, Magog and Tubal, the Sarmatians both of Europe and Aſia, the Moſcovites, and perhaps the Scythians, are to fetch their Original: all of them great and puiſſant Nations, and all involved promiſcuouſly in the name of Scythians. Renowned for no other action more than the memorable expedition, which they made into Media in the Greater, and Lydia in the Leſſer Aſia: the Cimmerians by themſelves alone, or by them as principal; the reſt of theſe Sarmatians in a body together as a Scythian People. Diſtreſſed with want, or to diſburden their ſmall Country of ſuperfluous multitudes, theſe Cimmerii in the time of Nabulaſſar, or Salmanaſſar, King of Aſſyria, communicating their deſign with the reſt of the Scythians, to enlarge their quarters; holding along the courſe of the Euxine Sea, and paſſing thorow the Country of Colchis, firſt ſeized on ſome parts of Pontus and Paphlagonia. Where having fortified the Promontory on which Sinope was after built; and leaving there their Carriages, and the weakeſt of their Train with ſufficient guards, they marched into Lydia, reputed (as it was indeed) for a wealthy Region. There they poſſeſſed themſelves of Sardis, the Royal City; and after of the reſt of the Country, or the moſt part of it, Ardis, the Son of Giges, who then reigned in Lydia, not being able to withſtand them. Both beſides being wearied with long War, and grown more pliant by degrees unto one another (as in like caſe betwixt the Saxons and the Danes) it proved no difficult matter for Halyattes, the Grand-child of Ardis, to compound the buſineſs: aſſigning to the Cimmerians all thoſe parts of his Dominions, which lay beyond the River Halys; and ſettling his Lydians in the reſt. By this tranſaction there were ſo good correſpondences betwixt the Nations, that when Cyaxares, King of the Medes, invaded the Country of theſe Cimmerians, under colour of the invaſion which the Scythians had made in Media, Halyattes did eſpouſe the quarrel, and appeared in their aid. In following times, growing into confidence of one another, and mixt in Marriages and bloud, they became one People; or at leaſt paſſed not under the accompt of ſtrangers, or the name of Aliens. Such end had this moſt notable notable expedition of these Cimmerians; not much remembred after this, for the like undertakings. Yet here they held their own, though in other names, governed by many petit Princes, but all associated with Mithridates against the Romans: that King being so great amongst them, that his Son Machares having married into some of their Families, was made King of Bosphorus. But Machares having made his peace with Lucullus, the Romans never looked this way. Nor hear we much of them in succeeding times, till the invasion of the Tartars; by whom subdued, they acknowledge at first the Great Cham for their Soveraign Lord: whose power declining, they have successively been subject to the Crim-Tartar, the Turk, and Moscovite; but most commonly to the Crim-Tartar, as their nearest neighbour, and most able to hurt them. And him they furnished on command with 50000 horse for the Grand Seigneur's Service: yet so that they supply the Persian with his Cozzel-Bassis, and sometimes serve under him for pay, as they do under any which will entertain them. Governed like the Suissers, by their several Commonalties: yet so, that every Commonalty hath some principal man (which the Suissers have not) whom they call Morseys, (that is Dukes) to direct and order them.

2. Betwixt these and the River Volga dwell the ZAVOLHENSES, one of the greatest Hords or Tribes of all the Tartars; and therefore called Horda Magna. Of these the Crims, or Precopenses were a Castling only; proceeding out of this great Swarm or Nest of Hornets, though afterwards they became their Masters. Of the Country or the People we say nothing here, having sufficiently spoken of both already. Their chief Town hath the name of Bolgar, situate on the River Volga, and from thence so named: Volgar and Bolgar differing but little in Orthography, and not much in sound.

This Country, as I take it by the situation, should be that which Ptolomy calleth Mithridatis Regio: whether so called in honour of him by the Princes of the neighbouring Cimmerians, with whom he had contracted alliance; or that he had made any Conquests there; or from some other Prince of the same name, I determine not. And in this Tract were those two Pillars, advanced unto the honour of Alexander, in Ptolomy called Columnæ Alexandri, in whose time they stood without defacement: there being also Altars erected to him, or in memory of him, near the Banks of Tanais, occurring in the same Author by the name of Aræ Alexandri. Which probably occasioned the error of Qu. Curtius, who brings Alexander in pursuit of the Scythian war, as far as Tanais: whereas it is apparent by the course of his actions, that he never got beyond the River Jaxartes; distant from Tanais no less than 2000 miles.

This Tribe first governed by its own King, whom they called Ulu-Cham, or the Great Cham, was in the year 1506. subdued by the Crim-Tartar, and made subject to him. Afterwards conquered by Basilius the Great Duke of Moscovy, who thereupon assumed the Title of King of Bolgar: which his Successors still preserve, with the Town it self; well garrisoned to keep open the whole course of the River Volga, by which they manage the great trade of the Caspian Sea. But for the main body of this people, they returned again to their obedience to the Crim, as being a Limb of the same body with him; and are subject unto his Commands: though by reason of their neighbourhood to the Moscovite, and commerce with that Nation, they frame themselves both to their language, habit, and behaviour.

3. East of the Zavolhenses, on the other side of the Volga, dwell the NOIHACENSES, or NAGAIANS, spreading as far as the borders of Zagathay, and declining Southward towards the Caspian Sea, and the Montes Hippici: Accompted the best men of war of all the Tartars, but more fierce and cruel than the rest; void of all Arts, not having, or contemning Money, or the use of Corn. Horse-flesh and Mares milk their best diet: the flesh either roasted by the Sun, or heated by continual hanging at the Saddle-bow. And with such cheer (nor worse nor better) did Azim Can, one of the Princes of this Tribe, entertain Jenkinson and other English men in their travels to the Caspian, from the River Volga. Their chief Town, if possibly it deserve that name, is called Scharayirzik, the Residence of one of their Princes; and the next, Sellisture, where the said Jenkinson found the Cham, as in the prime place of his abode. The Government is by several Morseys, the Heads or Chiefs, no doubt, of their several Clans: agreeing well enough together against the Moscovite; whom they infest with frequent inrodes, and put him to the charge of continul Garrisons, at Casan, Astrachan, and Viatka. Their Wars for the most part only Prædatory, rather to get some present booty, than out of any hope to enlarge their Dominion; and therefore commonly pacified, and sent home with Presents. The Great Duke is so good a Statesman, as to think the expense of Money cheaper than that of Blood; especially when he hath to deal with such an Enemy, who hath neither any Town of consequence, or fixt place of dwelling, and consequently nothing to be got but blows. Their Morseys, formerly more in number, were of late times reduced unto three; of which he of Scharayirzik was the chief: to whose direction, and appointment (especially in matters which concerned the publick) the other two do commonly submit themselves.

4. Betwixt these Nagaians, and the Circassians, lie those Tribes which they call the KIRGESSI, spreading as far as to the mouths or influx of the River Volga: but intermixt with the Heselites, and Baschurides, two other of the Tartarian Tribes, but of less power. Their life, for the most part in continual motion, removing with their Wives and Families from one place to another; and governing themselves in their removes, by the sight of the Pole-star. Partly Mahometan, partly Gentile; but the Gentiles make the greater number; not burying their dead bodies, as in other places, but hanging them upon a Tree, though they stink again: certain enough that they will be devoured or sweetned, before they return back to the same Station. Much reverence yet they give their Priests, by whom sanctified and besprinkled in their publick meeting, with a certain mixture, compounded of Blood, Milk, Earth, and Cow-dung, a most sweet Confection, but good enough for them that desire no better. And yet with these the Moscovite is fain to hold fair compliance, and to send them every year some Presents; for fear they should joyn with the Nagaians: or otherwise disturb him in his Caspian Trade down the River Volga.

5. The THUMENSES or THUMEN TARTARS lie more North than any of these Tartarians; having on the South, the Zavolhenses, and the Territory of Viatka in the Empire of Russia. A warlike People, and living near a dangerous neighbour; for which cause they do not straggle so abroad in petit companies, as the others do, but keep together in great bodies: For the most part much delighted in Negromancy, and Conjurations. In which the Devil so befools them, that he suffereth them to raise tempests; and sometimes, by Diabolical illusions, to defeat their enemies. The only Hord of all Deserta, which still continue in obedience to their natural Lord, the Great Cham of Cathay (if such Cham there be.) And unto these we may adjoyn the Molgomozans, all Gentiles, and the moſt barbarous of all: living in Caves, and feeding upon Worms, and Mice, and Serpents, and ſuch other vermine as would be poyſon unto any but ſuch Molgomozans, who are more poyſonous than thoſe Creatures.

Molgomo-

Theſe Hords, together with the Kingdoms of Caſan, and Aſtrachan and ſuch of the Ruſſian Provinces as lie on the Eaſt of Tanais, and the River of Duina, make up that Country which anciently paſſed under the name of Sarmatia Aſiatica: inhabited originally by the Deſcendants of Gomer, Meſech, Tubal, Magog, the Sons of Japhet, ſpreading themſelves more Northwards as they grew in numbers, out of Albania, Iberia, Colchis, and the Pontick, or Cimerian Nations. Divided into the Tribes or Families of the Olandæ, Gerri, Samocolchi, Socani, Seci, Scimnitæ, Agaritæ, Merdi, Canapſeni, Chænides, Baſilici, Hyperborei, Hippophagi, and others of as little note: theſe laſt ſo called from their eating of horſes, which diet they have left unto their Succeſſours. So like in manners and conditions, to the neighbouring Scythians, that they paſſed commonly by that name; and by that name are memorable for the great expedition by them made into Aſia the Greater, at ſuch time as the Cimmerians fell into Aſia Minor. For paſſing without oppoſition thorow the Sarmatian Streights, where they might have been eaſily kept out; and leaving behind them the more barren Country of Albania, they fell into Media: where they were incountered (but victorious) by Phraartes, then King of the Medes: Who finding that he was not able to remove them by force, aſſayed it by cunning; and firſt perſwaded them to look towards the South, as into richer Countries, and more like to yield them full content. Hereupon, full of Prey and Preſents, they marched towards Ægypt, but were met in Syria by Pſamniticus the Ægyptian King, who had heard of their coming; and thought it beſt to entertain them on the way, and not to bid them welcome at home to his greater coſt. Outvying the Median (as of the two the richer Prince) he loaded them with gifts and treaſures, and ſo ſent them back again into Media, from whence they came: where for many years they afflicted that People, and the neighbouring Provinces, doubling their Tributes, and uſing all kind of Inſolencies: till in the end, Cyaxares, the Son and Succeſſour of Phraartes, acquainting ſome of his moſt faithful Subjects with his deſign, cauſed the better part of them to be plentifully feaſted, made them drunk, and ſlew them; recovering thereby the poſſeſſion of his whole Eſtate. Afterwards imitated by the Engliſh in their Hock-tide ſlaughter. Such of them as eſcaped this blow, and were not willing to be ſubject to the Kings of Media (as many of them were) were ſuffered to return home by the ſame way they came; where at their coming, they found foul work made by their Wives and their Slaves, the ſtory whereof we had when we were in Ruſſia. After this we hear nothing of them in the ſtories of the Greeks, and Romans, unleſs thoſe Amazons, who attended their Queen Thaleſtris, when ſhe beſtowed a viſit on Alexander, were rather of theſe Sarmatian Amazons, than of thoſe of Pontus and Thermodon, as I think they were: the nearneſs of their dwelling to Hyrcania, in which place they found him, inducing me to this opinion. But poſſible enough it is, (though it be not certain) that ſome of theſe Sarmatian Tribes, though by other names, hearing of the ſucceſſes of the Huns, Avares, and other barbarous Nations, which made havock of the Roman Empire, might joyn themſelves unto them, and make up their numbers: thoſe Nations being elſe too ſmall to compound ſuch Armies, as by them were brought into the field againſt the Romans, without ſuch like helps. What their eſtate hath been ſince ſubdued by the Tartars, hath been ſhewn already.

3. ZAGATHAY.

ZAGATHAY is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Mountan Imaus, by which it is parted from Cathay; on the North, with the main Scythic or Frozen Ocean; on the Weſt, with Tartaria Deſerta, from which ſeparated by the River Soane, and the Lake of Kitay; and on the South, with the Caſpian Sea, and the River Oxus, by which divided from the Empire of Perſia. So called from Zagathay, a brother of one of the Great Chams, on whom it was conferred for his better maintenance; the Scythia intra montem Imaum of the ancient Writers.

The Country ſpreading out ſo far, on all ſides, as before appeareth, comprehendeth all thoſe Provinces and tracts of ground, which anciently were called, 1 The Country of the Sacæ, 2 Sogdiana, with 3 Zagathay, ſpecially ſo called, 4 and Turcheſtan, included anciently in the name of Scythia intra montem Imaum; and 5 the Terra Incognita, which Ptolomy makes to be the Northern boundary of that part of Scythia. By taking a ſurvey of all which particulars, we ſhall find the temper of the whole.

1. SACÆ, or the Country of the Sacans, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Mountain Imaus; on the Weſt, with Sogdiana; on the North, with Zagathay, properly and ſpecially ſo called; on the South, with the River Oxus, by which parted from Bactria. So called from the Sacæ, the Inhabitants of it; but the reaſon of their name I find not.

The Country anciently either barren, or ill manured; full of vaſt Foreſts, wide Deſarts, and the like unhabitable places, Few or no Cities in it, and not many villages (Civitates autem non habent, as my Author hath it) the people living moſt part in Caves, or orherwiſe wandring up and down with their droves of Cattel; Called for that reaſon Nomades by ſome ancient Writers. The name not proper to theſe only, but common to all thoſe who followed the like roving life, as the Sarmatians, wild Arabians, Saracens, and the Inhabitants of Libya and Numidia in Africk. Only one fortified place they had, which from the materials of it had the name of Turris Lapidea, (λιθινὸς πύργος, in the Greek) or the Caſtle of Stones; Part hereof being peopled for the moſt part by Camels, or travellable only with thoſe Creatures, had the name of Camelorum Regio.

Divided it was anciently into many Tribes, the Caratæ, and Comari, near the River Jaxartes; the Maſſagetæ, and Comedæ, near the hills called Aſcatanas; the Bylcæ, and Grynæi, more within the Country. All joyned in one by the name of Sacæ; and by that name made a very fortunate Progreſs into Armenia (to which they had an eaſie paſſage by the Northern banks of the Caſpian Sea) and therein gave name unto the Province called Sacaſena. But proceeding into Cappadocia, and there ſlain by the Perſians in the midſt of their Feaſtings, they left there alſo ſome reſemblance of their name, in an annual Feſtival called Sacæ; celebrated by the Perſians, in memorial of their good ſucceſs in the war againſt them. Such as ſtaid here, being overcome by Cyrus the firſt Perſian Monarch, did ſo good ſervice to that Prince, that Amorges the King of theſe Sacæ, is ſaid to have reſcued him from the hands of the Scythians, by whom otherwiſe he had been ſlain, or taken Priſoner. In the declining of that Kingdom, they were ſubdued by Alexander at the end of his Scythian, and Sogdian wars; who hereabouts, by Cohortanes a noble Perſian, was preſented with a Bevy of beautiful Ladies; one of the which was that Barſine, whom he made his Wife, and had by her that Hercules, Hercules, whom Polysperchon and his Faction proclaimed King of Macedon. Not memorable in the following times for any thing which they did or suffered; as they have been made by the opinion or mistake of others; who building Castles in the Air, will needs derive the Saxons (our famous Ancestors) from this Original: as if they were called Saxons, quasi Sacæ sones, or the Sons of the Sacæ. A fancy in my poor conceit, of no ground at all. For either the number of these Sacæ, when they left these parts, must be great, or little. If little, how can we conceive it possible, they should force their way through those valiant Nations of both Sarmatia's, who to the last maintained their Liberties and Estate against the Romans? If great enough to force their passage (for stout and provident Nations use not to give passage to great Armies, but they pay dear for it) how can we think it possible they should be shut up in a corner of Germany, betwixt the River Albis and the Cimbrick Chersonese? The Saxons then, whatsoever they were, were no Sons of the Sacæ; and what in likelihood they were, hath been elsewhere shewn.

2. SOGDIANA hath on the East, the Sacæ; on the North and West, Zagathay specially so called; on the South, the River Oxus, parting it from Margiana. So called from a chain of Mountains named Montes Sogdii, being the chief of all this Country, though of themselves a spur or branch of the Mountain Caucasus.

The Country indifferently fruitful, and very rich in Pasturage, because very well watered. For besides Oxus, and Jaxartes, which are common unto them and others; they have many Rivers of their own. The principal of which, 1 Dymus, and 2 Araxates, both navigable, and capable of very good ships; both also running down the hills with a headlong course, and passing through the Champion Country, empty themselves at last in the Lake called Oxiana; as is affirmed by Ammianus, but as Ptolomy saith, into Jaxartes.

Places of most consideration are, 1 Drepsa, the Metropolis or Mother-City of this people. By Pliny called Panda, by Solinus Darapsa: situate on the River Oxus. 2 Oxiana, on the same River, and from thence denominated. 3 Maruca, on the same River also. 4 Alexandria, called for distinction sake, Alexandria Oxianæ, which name declareth both the founder and the situation. 5 Alexandria, for the same cause of distinction, named Alexandria ultima: either because the last City which he built in these parts: or because it lay furthest off on the borders of the Scythians, against whose invasions or irruptions it was said to be built. 6 Tribarra, one of the chief hereof in the time of Ammianus Marcellinus. 7 Cyroschata, more memorable, and not less ancient, than any of those named before, by Qu. Curtius called Cyropolis, built by Cyrus, to fortifie his borders against the Scythians. It held out against the great Macedonian, a long time; and he himself coming nigher to the Walls than discretion would permit an ordinary General, had such a blow on the neck with a stone, that he fell to the ground, his eyes swimming in his head, and his whole Army giving him for slain: But reviving, he took the Town by a Mine, and levell'd it with the ground, in revenge of so great a danger.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Oxydracæ, and Candari, dwelling at the foot of the Sogdian Mountains; the Oxiani, and Cherasmii, near the banks of Oxus; the Jasii, and Tachori, near the River Jaxartes; the Drepsianii in the East parts bordering on the Sacæ; whose chief City was Drepsa: descended from their several roots but all called Sogdians. Conquered by Alexander, not without danger to his own person, as before was said; at the solicitation of Spitamenes a noble Persian, it rebelled again. Who being suppressed, and the Country in some measure quieted, Arimazes, a Native of the Province, renewed the war. Who followed with 30000 men, encamped upon the top of an hill, in a place of such notable advantage, that Alexander, neither by force nor fair words, could get him out of it. He therefore dealt with 3000 of his youngest and most active men, on the promise of great reward, to climb the hill; and without any noise to shew themselves at the back of the Enemy: Which having performed with the loss of 30 of their company, Alexander sent one Cophes to Arimazes, to let him know that the whole Army of Macedon was at his back; who terrified with what he saw, more with what he feared, gave up the place, and was scourged and crucified for his labour. So necessary in the Art of warfare is a piece of wit. After this time, it ran the same alterations and change of fortunes, as the Persians did; till they were conquered by the Tartars, unto whom still subject.

3. ZAGATHAY specially so called, is bounded on the East, with Cathay; on the West, with Turchestan, and part of the Caspian Sea; on the North, with the Country of the Samoyeds, the Terra Incognita of the Ancients; on the South, with the Sacæ, and Sogdiana. Anciently part of Scythia intra montem Imaum; and took this new name from Zagathay, the first Prince hereof, since the time of the Tartars.

The Country reasonably fruitful, but not so rich in the natural temper of the soyl, as the industriousness of the people, more civil far than any other of the Tartars; studious of good Letters, lovers of Arts, as well ingenious as Mechanick; well skilled in Manufactures, and very seldom without the confluence of forein Merchants. Populous, and well-stored with Towns and Villages; both for their own more handsome dwelling, and the entertainment of others.

Chief Rivers of it, 1 Jaxartes, now called Chesel, the principal of all this Country: great of it self, but made much greater by the waters of 2 Daix, another River of good note, rising out of the Mountain called Norosus, and falling with many others into Jaxartes; mixt with those streams they are dischannelled in the Caspian Sea. 3 Jartus, and 4 Polytimetas, falling into Oxus. Others there are whose names I find not in my Authors, descending from the Mountains of this Northern Region, which are great and many: As viz. 1 Norosus, spoken of before. 2 Aspisii, on the North of that. 3 Toporus, more unto the North. 4 The Mountains called Sychi, more Northward still. 5 Those called Anarei, besides 6 Imaus, of most name, but common unto Cathay as well as to Zagathay, and there we shall hear further of it.

Cities of most observation in it, 1 Aspabota, the only Town ascribed by Ptolomy to this Country, and by him honoured with the title of Civitas. 2 Zabaspia, of less antiquity, but of greater estimation at the present time. Situate on the mouth of the River Oxus (now called Abias) on the brink of the Caspian; and much frequented by the Merchants of forein Countries, chiefly from India, and Cathay. 3 Marachanda, ancient, and of fame, but placed by Ptolomy (why I know not) amongst the Cities of Bactria: differing herein from the common and received opinion of other Authors, by whom this City is affirmed to be on the North side of Oxus, and consequently not within that Province. Made good by Spitamenes, (who having delivered the Traitor Bessus into the hands of Alexander, revolted from him) against the Macedonian Army; by which besieged under the command of Menedemus. But Menedemus being slain, with some of his Souldiers, Spitamenes escaped hence to Bactria, where he was slain by his own Wife, and his head presented ſentedt to the Conquerour. Here was it alſo that Alexander, being then Maſter of the Town, in a drunken fit ſlew his dear friend Clytus; who at the battel of Granicus had ſaved his life, by receiving a blow which was aimed at him. It was afterwards called Samarchand, the ſeat-Royal of Tamerlane, by whom enriched with all the ſpoils and treaſures he got in the Wars; there being brought hither from Damaſcus only (and by that one inſtance we may gueſs at the reſt) 8000 Camels laden with the choiceſt movables. Still the chief Reſidence of the Chams of Zagathay, but far ſhort of that magnificence which once it held. 4 Bichend, of no Antiquity, nor of ſuch great name as the Regal Samarchand, but at this time of greater wealth: ſituate ſomewhat in the mid-land, but populous, and a well-traded Town. 5 Azara, memorable for being made the Rendezvouz of that mighty Army, which Tamerlane raiſed againſt the Turks, conſiſting in the total of 1200000 fighting men when it was at the biggeſt. 6 Maranis, from which place the ſaid Tamerlane, having received his aids from China, began his march.

Theſe Tartars, called Zagathayans, by the name of their Country, are of a different government from that of the Great Cham of Cathay, though ſubject to him at the firſt: and have ſo been ever ſince the time of Zaicham or Bathu, the third Great Cham; who gave it unto Zagathay, a younger Son, whence it had the name. To Zagathay ſucceeded Og, by ſome called Zain Cham; (the Father of Tamerlane) a peaceable and quiet Prince, who rather ſtudied to preſerve than enlarge his Empire. But Tamerlane being of a fierce and more warlike nature, made the firſt proof of his valour and good fortune againſt the Moſcovite (for ſpoyling a City which had put it ſelf under his protection) whom he overthrew with the ſlaughter of 25000 foot; and 15000 of his horſe. Moved with this notable exploit, and the hopes of greater, Gino Cham, the Great Emperour of the Tartars gave him to Wife his only Daughter, and therewithal declared him his heir apparent. Encouraged and enabled with this advancement, he firſt brake down the Wall of China, encountred with the King thereof, overcame him in battel, and impoſed on him the ſum of 300000 Crowns of yearly Tribute. Having left things quiet at his back, and taking with him a great part of the Forces of China, he advanced forwards againſt Bajazet, the fourth King of the Turks; of the greatneſs of whoſe growing Empire he began to be jealous. Paſſing along the left hand ſhores of the Caſpian Sea, and ſo through Albania, and the reſt of the Provinces which lay in his way (which he took and conquered as he went) he came at laſt into Aſia Minor: where near the City of Sebaſtia, he encountred with Bajazet: vanquiſhed him, ſlew 200000 of his men, and carried him away Captive in an Iron Cage. Reſtoring thoſe Princes diſpoſſeſſed by Bajazet unto theſe Eſtates, and taking to himſelf all the Turkiſh Provinces in Anatolia; he beſtowed a private viſit on Conſtantinople: which ſeen, he marched towards Syria, ſubdued both that Province and the Kingdom of Ægypt, then poſſeſſed by the Mamalucks; viſited Hieruſalem, and did honour to the Holy Sepulchre; returned by Babylon, and won it, and with it the whole Countries of Babylonia, and Aſſyria. And taking Perſia in his way impatronized himſelf of that Kingdom alſo; and ſuch parts of India, as either lay near Perſia, or his own Dominions; now made the Soveraign Lord of all the Regions and Kingdoms in both Aſia's, excepting India; for which the rich Kingdom of Ægypt, may be put in balance. Come home at laſt to Samarchand, he there died in peace. A Prince of ſtrong body, but lovely lineaments, his eyes bearing in them ſuch rayes of Majeſty, that ordinary men could ſcarce endure to look upon them. His hair long, contrary to the cuſtome of the Mahometans, (for the moſt part ſhaved on their heads) for which he pretended a deſcent from Sampſon. Perfect in the Arabian Learning, and a lover of all learned men, a hater of Idols, and Polytheiſm, and a great friend to the Chriſtians. More fortunate in the conquering of ſo many Kingdoms, than in laying any ſure foundation to maintain his conqueſt. For by holding his ſeat Royal in Samarchand, Cambalu, and others the chief Cities of Cathay, he gave the remote Provinces the opportunity of returning to their former Governours; and by parcelling his Eſtates amongſt his Children, and kindred, this mighty flood which had ſo quickly overflown both Aſia's, returned in very little time within its own proper and original banks. Even Zagathay it ſelf, divided from the Empire of Cathay, had its King apart (hardly acknowledging the great Cham for the Lord in Chief) the moſt conſiderable of whom was that Saba, who in the new beginnings and unſettledneſs of the Sophian Empire, invaded Perſia; But inſtead of recovering that Kingdom into the power of the Tartars, he loſt ſome Provinces of his own: Hyrcania, Margiana, and ſome part of Bactria, being ſince ſubdued by Abas the late Sultan. Nothing ſince memorable, that I meet with, in the affairs of this part of the Empire of Tartary.

4. TURCHESTAN is bounded on the Eaſt, with Zagathay ſpecially ſo called; on the Weſt, with the River Zoane, parting it from Deſerta; on the North, with thoſe deſarts which Ptolomy blindeth under the name of Terra Incognita; and on the South with the Caſpian Sea. So called from the Turks; ſome of which people when they left their firſt Seats near the Fens of Mæotis, ſettled in this Country, and here ſtill continue.

The Country as deſert and ill planted, as the reſt of Tartary, not ſo much out of any defect in the ſoil it ſelf, as in the humour of the people: who though originally Turks, do yet compoſe themſelves unto the lives of the Scythian or Tartarian Nomades, neglecting tillage, and abiding in no place longer than that place affords them paſturage for their Cattel: huge herds of which they keep as their greateſt treaſure, but more to cloath their backs with the skins, than to fill their bellies with the fleſh.

Amongſt the Rivers of moſt note we may reckon, 1 Rhymnus, mentioned by Ptolomy, which by the poſition of it in the 91 degree of Longitude, ſeems to be of this Tract. It riſeth out of the Mountains called Montes Rhymnici, giving name to the River, or taking name from it. 2 Ardock, not known by that name amongſt the Ancients, and whether known at all or not, I am not able to ſay. Shaping its courſe towards the North, and weary of ſo cold a Clime, and ſuch barbarous people; after a long and ſwift courſe of a thouſand miles, it hideth it ſelf under the ground for five hundred more: but breaking out again, and finding little or no hope of a better fortune, loſeth it ſelf for ever in the great Lake of Kitay.

To look for Towns amongſt a people which delight not in ſettled houſes, were a labour loſt: yet ſome I find aſcribed unto them. The principal, but of no great note, 1 Calba, and 2 Ocerra. Then there is 3 Cruſtina, ſituate on or near the Lake or Kitay, never without the company of Ruſſian and Tartarian Merchants: the Ruſſians ſayling to it by the River Ob; and the Zagathayan Tartars travelling to it by Land. By theſe two Nations more peopled, to maintain their Traffick, than by the Turcomans themſelves, in whoſe Land it ſtandeth.

Theſe Turcomans are of the Poſterity of ſome of thoſe Turcæ, who wanting room, or otherwiſe oppreſſed with want, forſook their ancient dwelling near the Fens of Mæotis, Mœotis, and the Coasts of the Euxine Sea, to seek new seats, Anno 844. That their whole body settled here, and from hence made their conquest of Persia, as some very industrious men are of opinion, I by no means grant. For when the Sultan of Persia, having by the means of Taugrolipix and those Mercenary Turks whom he invited to his aid, obtained the Victory; and thought it fit for his affairs to detain them longer in his Service: it is said he shut up the River Araxes, to hinder them from returning to their habitations. The shutting up of which River, and fortifying against them all the passages and bridges of it, had not served his turn, if the Turks had come from this place: for then he must have manned against them the River Oxus, and such as lay betwixt them and him in the common road. Nor is it probable, that the Turcomans dwelling in this Province, on the East-side of the River Volga, would undertake the boarding of that dangerous and violent Water; and force themselves a way thorow Albania and Armenia, with no greater numbers, than 3000 men, which was the whole strength that they carried with them. So that it is not to be doubted, but that they came first into Persia out of Turcomania, and not out of Turchestan: and probable enough, that when they first left their own abode, and came unto the Northwest shores of the Caspian Sea, they might there divide themselves. Some of which leaving that Sea on the left hand, and passing thorow the Sarmatian or Albanian Streights, made their way into Armenia, and those parts of Iberia, which from them are now called Turcomania. The residue keeping that Sea on the right hand, and crossing the Volga, where they found the passage most easie for them, settled themselves in these parts of Scythia which they found less peopled, now from them named Turchestan. Some of which hearing of the good success of their Country-men in the Conquest of Persia, might afterward joyn with them to assure that purchase. Governed since their first coming hither, by the Chiefs of their several Clans, whom they honour with the title of Chams; but all of them Tributaries and Vassals of the Cham of Zagathay.

5. That part of the Kingdom of Zagathay, which anciently passed under the name of TERRA INCOGNITA, and was accompted the Northern limit of Scythia intra Imaum, hath on the South, Turchestan, and part of Zagathay, strictly and specially so called: extending Northwards to the Scythick or Frozen Ocean, and bounded on the West, with the River Ob.

The Inhabitants of this Northern Tract are now called by the name of Samoyeds; neither the people nor the Country known to the ancient Romans: and indeed neither of them worth the knowing. The men black-haired, naturally Beardless, and not to be discerned from women, but that the women wear a long Lock down to their ears. Clad from the head to the feet in Deer-skins, or Seil-skins, with the hairy side outwards; (nothing more wise in that than the other Tartars.) Their kind of life more rude than theirs, if more rude may be, ranging from place to place, without any propriety of house or dwelling; the Leader of each Company their Priest, whom they call their Popa, who at every one of their Removes is to offer Sacrifice. Idolaters they are all, and most of them Witches; especially such as live most towards the East, and furthest off from the Moscovite, who many times destroy their Idols, and rob them of the skins of Bevers, black Foxes, and Sables, wherewith those Idols are set forth to the publick view: but bestow on them greater heats in a good Fire, into which they commonly use to cast them.

These Zagathayan Provinces, with those of Margiana, and Bactria, before described, made that part of Scythia, which anciently was called Scythia intra montem Imaum: though in the time of Ptolomy, when Margiana, Bactria, Sacæ, and Sogdiana, were reckoned of as Provinces of the Kingdom of Persia, this Scythia was restrained within narrower bounds, and comprehended only Turchestan and the Special Zagathay. Inhabited, besides the several Nations dwelling in the four Persian Provinces, by many fierce and savage Tribes, as the Alani, Alanoesi, Saubeni, and Massei, towards Terra incognita; the Tectosages, and Asiatæ, near the Mountain Imaus; the Jaxartæ on the banks of the River so called; and the Mologeni, not far off; the Zaratæ, and Susones, near the Mountains Alani; the Galactophagi, or milk-eaters, more towards the East; the Taporæi, and the Sychi, by the Hills so named: and many others not material to be here remembred. All now united under the general name of Tartars, by whom first subdued.

And now we are at last come to Scythia, truly so named; Sarmatia Europæa and Asiatica being called so only by way of participation and resemblance; because the inhabitants thereof had so much in them of the manners and conditions of these natural Scythians. Here therefore we intend to speak something of them, their name, Antiquity, disposition, customs, and the most memorable actions relating to them, as far as we can go by the light of story.

First, for the name, the Græcian Fables have derived it from one Scythes, the Son of Hercules, begotten by him on a Monster, half Woman, half Viper. The Grammarians ἀπὸ τῆ σκυζεσθαι, signifying to be fierce and angry; whence it is said of the Jewish Puritans, who fasted to be seen of men, Σκυθρωπὰ ἀφανίζουσι, that they looked with a sower, severe, and a disfigured Countenance. Goropius Becanus doth derive it rather from the Dutch word Schutten, signifying to shoot: agreeable enough to the custom and exercise of the Scythians, who are observed by Herodotus, Pliny, Lucian, and other of the ancient Writers, to be very good Archers. But that the word Schutten signifieth the same in the ancient Scythick; or that the High-Dutch was originally the Tongue of the Scythians, will not so easily appear.

Letting that pass therefore as a matter not to be defined, let us look on the Antiquity of these Scythian Nations: and we shall find it to be great, if not greatest of all. Scytharum gens semper antiquissima, That the Scythians were of all others, the most ancient people, was received for an Oracle, in the elder ages of the world: and so resolved by way of Verdict, when the great Controversie touching the Antiquity of those Nations, was to be determined, betwixt the Ægyptian and the Scythian, who contended for it. And this hath passed with such a general approbation, that it is not now to be disputed. In which regard I am so far of the judgment of Becanus in that particular, as to conceive that the Countries lying on the North of Mount Caucasus (on which the Ark is thought most probably to have rested) were peopled by the Sons of Noah before they travelled towards the West, or set themselves on building the Tower of Babel. We had else no doubt heard somewhat amongst our Antiquaries, of the settling of some of those Adventurers in these Northern Regions; when giving off that enterprise, and falling upon new Plantations, they either went themselves, or sent forth their Colonies into all places of the world. But of any such Plantations, ne gry quidem, not one word say they. Nor can it probably be supposed, that Zorooster, the King of Bactria, could have raised 400000 fighting men out of that one Province (though some of the adjoyning Provinces were took into the reckoning) in those early days, in which he did encounter Ninus the great Assyrian; had the Bactrians, and the rest of these Scythian Nations, been but a Castling as it were of some second swarm, and not coæval with the first. But besides these presumptions we have other proofs: viz. An old and constant tradition on this side the Mountains, that the great Vineyard of Margiana was of Noah's planting; and 2 the affirmation of Portius Cato, (though one of the Writers of Frier Annius) in Scythia Saga renatum mortale genus, that mankind was repaired in these parts of Scythia, so called from Sabatius Saga, an Armenian King, whose Dominions did extend thus far. So that I look upon it as a matter of strong presumption, if not demonstrably concludent, that these people were of the first Plantation which was made after the Floud; before the rest of the world was peopled by the Confusion of Languages: Scytharum gens semper antiquissima, could not else hold good.

As for their dispositions, and natural inclinations, they are said by Trogus, or his Epitomator Justine, to be Gens & laboribus & bellis aspera, "A Nation patient of labours, and fierce in War; of bodily strength immense "and vast; yet so much Masters of their affections, that "they made no further use of their greatest victories than "the augmentation of their fame. Theft they esteemed "the greatest crime, and that they punished so severely, "that their Flocks and Herds might and did safely wan"der from one place to another, without fear of stealing. "In them they placed their greatest wealth, feeding "themselves with the Milk thereof, and making their "Rayment of the Skin. Silver and Gold they contemned "as much as it was coveted by others; there being no de"sire of Riches where there was no use. Meum, and Tu"um, those common Barretours, and authors of debate "amongst other men, were not known amongst them: "and therefore did not care for tillage, or made any in"closures, nor troubled themselves with the care of build"ing. But putting their Wives and Children upon "Wains, or Waggons, covered with Hides against the "weather, they removed from one place to another, no "longer staying upon one than they found grass and her"bage to sustain their Cattel. So just in all their actions, "that they needed not the restraint of Laws; and had "attained to such an eminent degree of humane perfecti"on, as not to covet. In a word, that moderation which "the Greeks endeavoured to attain unto by the help of "Learning and Philosophy, was to these so natural, that "the ignorance of Vice did as much contribute to their "welfare, as the knowledge of Vertue. Such are the ancient Scythians affirmed to be. And being such, it was a wonder that the great Monarchs of the world, who had wealth at will, should make war upon them; amongst whom there was nothing to invite an Army, or reward a Conquerour. Yet either on desire of glory, or to add unto the former multitudes over whom he reigned, they were first invaded by Cyrus the great Persian Monarch: who quarrelling with Tomyris Queen of the Massagetes, a warlike Nation, inhabiting on both sides of the River Oxus, discomfited her Army, and slew her Son Spargapises, who commanded it. In revenge whereof, the Queen having in a second battel obtained the Victory, and took Cyrus prisoner, is said to have cut off his head, and cast it into a boul of blood, with this scornful taunt, Satia te sanguine quem sitiisti, Now drink thy fill of blood which thou hast so thirsted. But others tell us otherwise of the success of this fight. By whom it is reported that the Horse of Cyrus being disordered on the sight of some Elephants, which came from India to her aid, and himself dangerously wounded, the Scythians had won the victory but for the coming in of Amorges King of the Sacans, (who of a conquered enemy was become his Confederate:) by whom he was rescued, and by the 20000 fresh men which he brought with him, obtained the honour of the day; though long he lived not to enjoy it, dying not long after of the wounds he had received. With Alexander they are said to begin the war, as loath to be behind hand with him; arming themselves upon the building of Alexandria ultima, so near their borders, which they conceived rather intended for a curb to hold them down, than for a bridle to keep them in. But being repulsed, and wise enough to suffer what they could not hinder, they sued for peace, and had it granted; Alexander being called away by the revolt of the Bactrians, a matter of more consequence than these Scythian brabbles. With Alexander's Successors they had nothing to do, nor with the Persian Kings of the Parthian Race; the Parthians being their Allies, and of Scythian breed. And for the Romans, it is well observed by the Historian, Romanorum arma audivere magis quàm sensere. that they had heard much of their valour, but never felt it: Remaining undisturbed in their honest poverty, till the Tartars, an obscure and beggerly people brake out of their Prison, and carried out the whole World before them.

As for their Kings, I find some of their names laid down, but without any note of time in which their reigns might be supposed to begin or end. Nor can I think that the Kings occurring in that Catalogue, did either reign in the same place, or over the same Nations; or that they succeeded one another. Howsoever we will take their names as they come before us, in this list of.

The Kings of Scythia.

1 Scythes.
2 Napis.
3 Phitra.
4 Sagillus.
5 Targitana.
6 Plinus.
7 Scholypethus.
8 Panaxagora.
9 Tanais.
10 Indathyrsus.
11 Saulius.
12 Spargapises.
13 Tomyris.
14 Aripethes.
16 Ocimasdes.
17 Lanthinus, the last of all those Scythian Kings who are conceived to have the Government of these warlike Nations. But for my part I dare not say that ever any one King did command the whole people generally; each Tribe or Nation having their particular Kings, as in other places not reduced into form and order. And therefore for those Kings, if such Kings there were (as for some of them I durst venture to swear the contrary) they must be such as in their several Countries were of greatest fame, most taken notice of in the world, or imployed in the conduct of their joynt and united forces; and so conceived to be the Kings of the whole Scythian Nation: as Cassibelane, King of the Trinobantes, and perhaps not that, is by some Writers said to be the King of the Britains; because he had the conduct of their forces against Julius Cæsar..

4. CATHAY.

CATHAY is bounded on the west, with Zagathay, from which parted by the Mountain Imaus; on the East, with the Oriental Sea, and some part of China;

China; on the North, with Tartaria Antiqua; and on the South, with part of India. So called from the proper or special Cathay, the principal Province of the whole, the other parts into which it is commonly divided being 2 Altay, 3 the Countries of the Eastern Tartars.

1. CATHAY, more properly and specially so called, is bounded on the East, with China; on the West, with the Mountain Imaus, by which parted from Zagathay; on the North, with Altay; and on the South, with India extra Gangem: So called from the Chate, an old Scythian people, who having conquered the Seres, and the rest of the neighbouring Nations, gave their own name unto the whole, according to the Custome of victorious people.

This Country is exceeding long, if it be measured by the Scale, and Rules laid down by Ptolomy, who placeth Auzacia, the most Western Town of Scythia extra montem Imaum, in the Longitude of 144 degrees, and Sera the Metropolis and most Eastern City of Serica, in the Longitude of 177 degrees and 15 Minutes; as on the other side he placeth Seta, the most Southern Town of Scythia extra montem Imaum, in the Latitude of 35 degrees, and 20 minutes, and Damna the most Northern Town of Serica in the Latitude of 51 degrees, and 40 minutes. By which account, supposing these four Towns to be placed in the very extremities and out-parts of this Country, it must extend from North to South 960 miles and somewhat upwards, and about 1500 miles from East to West in the length thereof; which as it sheweth the dimensions and extent of it to be very great, so it may probably infer that the Country is not in all places of the like fertility; the West parts of it being very mountainous and barren, and consequently not very fruitful, as being overgrown in most places with the spurs and branches of Imaus. But in those parts thereof which lie towards the East, it is said to be abounding in Wheat, Rice, Wooll, Hemp, Silk, and Musk; Great store of that medicinal Root called Rhubarb, or Rha-Barbarum, to difference it from the Rha-Pontick, growing on the banks of Volga. They have also very great Herds of Camels, of whose hair they make those stuffs which are hence called Camelets, or, Chamlets; and such an infinite breed of Horses, as besides those which they preserve for their own use, they furnish the whole Realm of China with such multitudes of them, that at one time there were sent no fewer than 80000 for a Present to the King of that Realm by the Princes of these Western Tartars, as the Chinois call them; of which he that writ the Book called Bellum Tartaricum, affirmeth himself to have been an eye-witness, and to his credit I refer it, that the great Cham feedeth yearly 10000 white Mares, which he keeps for their Milk. Some of their Rivers are reported also to yield Golden Sands. But whether it be so or not, certain it is, that it is so well provided of all things both for necessary use, and the pleasures of life, that it is thought to be inferiour to few Countries of Europe. The Air indeed not so temperate, as in many places; in Summer-times extreamly hot, and in Winter miserably cold: the thunders and lightnings being here so terrible, that in Summer many men die for fear, when they hear it. The winds no less violent than the thunder, do sometimes tear up Trees by the roots, and beat men from their horses; but seldom bring with them any storm of rain: the greatest showers which they have, hardly wetting the ground.

The people are generally very warlike, strong of body, quick of action, fearless of the greatest dangers, patient both of want and labour: of mean stature, little eyes, sharp-sight, and thin beards. Industrious they are in several Manufactures; of a good wit for dispatch of business: more honourable than the rest of the Tartars, as loving to dress themselves gorgeously, to fare sumptuously (if there be occation) to live in handsome houses, and to frequent the most populous and best-traded Cities. All which civilities or effeminacies, call them which you will, together with the greatest part of their Arts and Manufactures, they first learned of the Chineses, during the time that the Chinois lived as Subjects under the great Cham, and the Nations had continual entercourse with one another. They account not any for a Wife till she bear them Children, nor till then do meddle with their Dowries; but repudiate them at a certain time, if they find them barren. They reverence their Cham, or Emperour, even to Adoration; not suffering any Stranger to come in his presence, except he be first purged: if any otherwise presume, it is present death.

The Religion publickly allowed and countenanced, is that of Mahomet; but so that they retain the Pentateuch of Moses, and observe many things therein commanded. It was much laboured by Pope Innocent, and King Lewis of France, that they should receive the Christian Faith; and they found some inclinations in the People, and chief Princes to it. But finding by the Mahometan Agents, who then laboured to bring them to their Superstition, that Mahomet allowed of many Wives, and other things more agreeable to their fleshly lusts, they conformed to that; Yet so, that there are many Idolaters in Cathay it self (I mean Cathay strictly so called) and some Christians also; the state of whose affairs we have shewn before.

Chief Rivers of the whole. 1 Polysanga, which falling into the Eastern Ocean is navigable up to the City of Cambalu, to which it is a means of conveying great store of Merchandise. 2 Caromoram, so broad and deep that no Bridge can be made over it. 3 Quiam, one of the greatest in the world; in length about an hundred daies journey; for breadth, in most places six miles, in many eight, and in some ten. 4 Quiantu, about half a mile over, and well stored with fish; of all which we shall speak more fully when we come to China. Here are also very many Lakes, both large, and useful, as 1 The Lake of Caniclu, in which are said to be so many Pearls as would make them of no value, if every man might have leave to fish for them; which is therefore interdicted (without special licence) upon pain of death. 2 The Lake of Carami, about an hundred miles in circuit, and so full of fish as might suffice for all the Country, did they love to eat of it. The Mountains we shall climb over in their several places.

Principal Cities of the whole at this present time, under the notion of Cathay, are 1 Cambalu, supposed to be the Issedon Serica of the Ancients, and like enough to be that City of the Cathayans, which made that notable resistance unto Cingis the first King of the Tartars, in his first attempts upon this Country, of which more anon. Made afterwards, in regard of the pleasantness of the situation, and extreme fertility of the soyl, the chief Seat of his Empire; and being exceedingly enlarged and beautified had the name of Cambalu, that is to say, the Seat or City of the Cham, in the same sense as the chief City of China had the name of Pequin, signifying in that Language the Court or City of the King. Built of Free-stone, and situate in the midst of the Country as the heart and center to the rest. It is seated on the River Polysanga, honoured with the Great Cham's residence, and enriched with a mighty confluence of Merchants of all sorts. Besides other Merchandizes there are every year 10000 Carts loaded with Silk sent thither from China. Affirmed to be in compass 28 miles besides the Suburbs, in which, besides other Inhabitants of all sorts, are said to be 50000 Aſtrologers or rather Fortune-tellers. 2 Xaindu the Royal Palace of the Emperour, of a fourſquare figure, every ſide extending eight miles in length: within this Quadrant is another, whoſe ſides are ſix miles long, and within that another of four miles ſquare, which is the Palace it ſelf; between thoſe ſeveral Walls are Walks, Gardens, Orchards, Fiſh-ponds, places for all manner of exerciſe, and Parks, Foreſts, and Chaſes for all manner of Game. 3 Caraio, where the women are ſaid to guild their Teeth. 4 Gonza a fair City and a great, adorned with many Idol Monaſteries. 5 Careanſu, near which there groweth an herb called Chiny-Cathay, of admirable effect againſt many Diſeaſes, and ſo eſteemed of by the Natives, that they value an ounce of this at a ſack of Rubard. 6 Segni, the reſidence of a Neſtorian Biſhop.

Having thus took as good a view of the preſent face of this Country, as the time affords us, we will next look upon it in thoſe integral parts, of which it ſpecially conſiſteth comprehending (as before was intimated) thoſe two long and ample Provinces, which the Ancients called, 1 Serica, and 2 Scythia extra montem Imaum, according to thoſe Bounds and Characters which are given us of them.

1 SERICA, hath on the East, ſome part of China; on the South, India extra Gangem, and ſome part of the Country then inhabited by the ancient Sinæ; on the North, Altay; on the Weſt, Scythia beyond the Mountains of Imaus. In which I follow not the bounds laid down by Ptolomy, who for want of that knowledge in theſe remote Countries which theſe later Ages have afforded, is fain to ſhut it up on the North and East with a Terra Incognita. At the preſent it is called CATHAY, and that moſt probably from the Chatæ, a Scythian People, who ſubduing the old Inhabitants, became Maſters of it.

But for the name of Serica, it was derived originally from Sera the chief City of it; whence the people had the name of Seres, very induſtrious in their times, and amongſt other things in the making of Silks (made of a fine wooll growing on the leaves of Trees) from hence named Serica. Of great eſteem amongſt the Romans, as is ſaid by Pliny, Tam multiplici opere, tam longinquo orbe petitur, ut in publico matrona tranſluceat; being far fetched and dear bought, they were good for Ladies. Nor were they induſtrious only, but chaſte and temperate. The names of Thieves and Whores were not known amongſt them. They eat not any unclean fleſh, nor uſed the company of their Wives either after Conception, or during their Menſtrual Purgations. So moderate of diet, that they lived commonly to the age of 200 years; the quietneſs and mildneſs of their diſpoſition helping much thereto. Of yellow hair, watchet or Sea-green eyes, and good compoſure. Men of few words, but very juſt in all which they ſaid or did. Governed by a Common-Council of 5000 men, every one of which was to find an Elephant for the uſe of the State.

If you will take the Character both of the Country and People from Ammianus Marcellinus, he will give it thus. "First of the Country, that it is plentiful and "large, circled about with a chain of Mountains, the "two famous Rivers Oechardes and Banthiſis with a ſtill "and ſlow ſtream running thorow the middle of the in-"cloſed Plain, ſpaciouſly ſtretched out to the ſides of the "precipices: in one place large and open, in another ly-"ing flat and low with an eaſie deſcent; in which re-"gard they have abundance of Corn, ſtore of Cattel, "and plenty of Orchards. The temperature of the Air "pleaſant and wholſome, the conſtitution of the weather "clear and pure, the blowing of gentle winds moſt commodious, and the Woods with a pretty glimmering of "light, both within and under them: from whence the "people with much ſprinkling of water, ſoftening that "which the Trees bring forth like a kind of Fleece, kemb "a moſt fine and tender matter, which they ſpin into "Silk, ſerving in former times for the Nobility and Gen-"try, now become common to thoſe alſo of inferiour "rank. Then for the People, he ſaith, that they are a fru-"gal Nation, lovers of quiet, not troubleſome unto their "Neighbours, without the uſe of Arms, and the know-"ledge of battels, declining the company of Strangers, "and ſo far from covetouſneſs, or curioſities, that when "any Merchants come unto them to buy their Silks, "without much beating of the price, they let them "have ſuch things as are bred amongſt them, without "looking after the Commodities of other Countries. So he. And if he did over act the Panegyriſt (as I ſee no reaſon why he ſhould) never were people happier in the place of their dwelling, nor Country happier in its people.

Chief Mountains of it (and Mountains they had very many) were 1 the Montes Caſii, and 2 Auzacii towards the East. 3 The Annibæ, environing a great part of the Country. 4 The Aſmarei, 5 and thoſe called Serici, near the City Sera. 6 Tagurus. 7 Enuodorus, and 8 Ottorocorus: But all of them probably the ſpurs and branches of the great Mountain Imaus; But by what names now called it is hard to ſay; and no leſs hard to ſay how to accommodate the names of the Rivers ſpoken of before, to thoſe which we find mentioned in the ancient Writers; the principal of which (all flowing out of theſe great Mountains) are, 1 Oechardes, by Pliny called Cambris, riſing out of the Montes Auzacii; 2 Pſitara, iſſuing out of the Aſmiri. 3 Bautiſus, whoſe Fountain is in the Montes Caſii. And 4 Lanos.

Towns of chief note amongſt them, 1 Sera, which gave the name of Serica, and Seres, to the Province and People. 2 Ottorocora, near the Hills ſo called; whence it had the name. 3 Iſſedon, for diſtinction ſake called Iſſedon Serica, to difference it from another of that name in Scythia, called Iſſedon Scythica; the chief City of the Iſſedones, gens magna, one of the greateſt Nations in all the Country, as is ſaid by Ptolomy; and like enough to be that City of the Cathayans, which made that notable reſiſtance unto Cingis (which before I ſpake of) in his firſt attempts upon this Country. 4 Oroſana, 5 Droſache, 6 Daxata, of which little memorable. Some other Cities there were in it (about nine more being named by Ptolomy) of which we find nothing but the names, and therefore I ſhall paſs them over without further mention.

But here it is to be obſerved, 1 That Ptolomy gives unto this Country, and to ſome of the Towns or Cities of it, ſuch a Northernly Latitude (ranging the furtheſt parts thereof in the ſame Parallel with the Iſle of Thyle) as cannot poſſibly agree with that fertility of ſoyl, and delightful temper of the Air, which is given to Serica. 2 That he tells us of a Promontory called Tabyn, ſituate in Extrema terræ, in the extremities of the Country between North and East, which I cannot but extreamly wonder at, conſidering that he ſhuts up this Country on the East and North with a Terra Incognita, and extends not any part thereof towards the Sea, rendering it thereby uncapable of any ſuch Promontory. 3 That ſome of our late Writers, both in their Tables and their Maps, have placed the Regal City of Cambalu ſo far towards the North, as very ill agreeth with that pleaſantneſs and ſweetneſs of ſituation, which induced the great Chams to make choice thereof for the Seat Royal of their Empire. But as we may eaſily pardon theſe miſtakes of Ptolomy in places ſo far far distant from him, and then but little known to the Greeks and Romans; so we may as easily pardon these of the later times, who grounding on the authority of so eminent an Author, have in some things been misguided by him: it hapning very many times (which I find somewhere mentioned on the like occasion) Magnos errores, magnorum virorum authoritate, transmissos, that great errors are often entertained upon the credit of their Authors.

The old Inhabitants hereof, in those parts which lay next the Scythians, are said to have been Anthropophagi, or Man-eaters, most probably a Scythian Nation, that Custome being so abhorrent from the mildness of the Serican temper. Or else, we must correct the Copies of Ptolomy, by the History of Ammianus Marcellinus, who instead of Anthropophagi, placeth the Alitrophagi in the self same Tract. The other Nations not distained with the like reproaches, are the Sizyges, and Anabi, not far off the Auzacian Mountains; the Piala near the River Oechardes; the Geranei, and Rhabbanei, their neerest neighbours; the Throani dwelling towards the East, the Batæ and Ottocorovæ more towards the South. These with the residue, governed by a Common-Council of 5000 men, every one of which was to find an Elephant for the service of the Common-wealth, as was said before. And more than this we hear not of them in the way of Story; the Natives never going abroad with their wares, and having little speech with Strangers, when they come amongst them. Being vanquished by the Chatæ, a Scythian Nation, from whom it is like that it took the name of CATHAY; (for in this we go but by conjecture) they continued under Kings of their own, till subdued by the Tartars, against whom they made such stout resistance, being besieged by Cingis in their principal City, that when they wanted stones to cast out of their Engines, they supplyed that want with molten silver; and held it out so long, that Cingis finding Victuals to grow short in his Camp, commanded that every tenth man should be eaten. But at the last being undermined, the Town was taken, the Citizens massacred, and their King or Emperour (as some calle him) slain: after whose death, and not before, Cingis assumed the Title of the Cham, or Emperour. The residue of their Story we shall have hereafter.

SCYTHIA EXTRA IMAUM was bounded on the East, with Serica; on the West, with Imaus; on the South with India extra Gangen; and on the North, with the Countries comprehended in the name of Altay, which Ptolomy hath given us in the notion of the Terra Incognita. Called Scythia because planted by a brood of the Scythians. Extra Imaum was put to it, to difference it from that part of Scythia which lay on the West side of that Mountain, neerest unto the Greeks and Romans. But now the Mountain, and the Country, have the name of Altay.

To look upon it as it standeth by the name of Scythia extra Imaum, we find not any thing delivered of the Rivers or Mountains of it, but what is common unto them with the neighbouring Nations: the Mountains called Auzacii, and Casii, and Ennodorus, being common unto this with Serica; as Imaus jointly to both the Scythia's, which it divided anciently the one from the other: though now this last be reckoned to belong to Cathay alone, because the Tartars on both sides of it profess themselves subjects to that Cham. This the most famous Mountain in the East of Asia, beginning at the shores of the Scythick or Frozen Ocean, and extending thence directly Southwards unto Cape Comari, a Promontory of the Southern or Indian Seas. By which account it divideth the Greater Asia into East and West, as Taurus doth into North and South, which Mountain it crosseth in right Angles, about the Longitude of 140. as before was said. That part hereof which lyeth on the South of Taurus, was by the Ancients called Bitigo; and by the modern is named Gates: of which we shall speak more when we come to India. That on the North of Taurus, called Imaus properly, was anciently most memorable for dividing the vast Countries of the Scythians, into Scythia intra Imaum, and Scythia extra Imaum; a division much observed by the old Geographers: now chiefly memorable for being the Sepulchre of some of the Chams of Tartary; most generally known by the Name of Altay, but by some called Belgion.

Chief Towns hereof were 1 Auzacia, at the foot of the hills so named. 2 Chaurana, the chief City of the Chaurqnæi. 3 Seta. 4 Issedon Scythica, so called to difference it from the other of that name in Serica. These with the rest, and all the Country, as far as it was known in the days of Ptolomy, inhabited by the Abii, Hippophagi, or horse-eaters, a diet still used by the Tartars or modern Scythians. 2 The Issedones, who are said by Pomponius Mela to make carousing cups of their Fathers heads, first trimmed and gilded. 3 The Cauranei, and 4 the Chatæ, who being (as it seemeth) the most potent Nation, caused all the rest to be called by the name of Cathay, communicating that name also to the conquered Seres. Besides the possessions of which Tribes, there was also the Regions of Achassa, Cusia, and Auxuatis; these last so called from the Mountains upon which they stand. More than this we have not to say of this Country by the name of Scythia, there being nothing memorable of it in the course of story, or worth the observation in the way of Chorography.

ALTAY is bounded on the South, with Cathay, specially so called, and part of China; on the North, with Tartaria Antiqua; on the West, with the great Mountain Imaus; and on the East, with the Nations or Countries of the Eastern Tartars. So called from its neighbourhood to that mighty Mountain, which the Tartars in their Language call by the name of Altay.

The Country utterly unknown to the ancient Writers, and not much canvassed or travelled by our Modern Pens. In which respect I shall now trouble my self no further, than by giving a brief touch on the several parts of it. Of which the most that can be said, will be but little for the information of the judicious Readers; who are not to be bettered by the names of places, if there be not something in them of further use. Now for these Provinces the principal of them are, Cascar, 2 Chesmur, 3 Lop, 4 Camul, 5 Tainfu, 6 Caindu, 7 Carazan, 8 Cardandan, 9 Erginul, 10 Tanguth.

1. CASCAR, bordering on the North-West of China, a Mahometan Country, but admitting of some Christians also; the largest Kingdom in all Altay, except Tanguth only, and furnished with many Towns or Cities both of Trade and Note, the principal whereof are 1 Hiachan, the Royal City of this Country, and Mart famous for concourse of Merchants; and variety of Merchandises. 2 Cialie, the chief Town of a Province or Kingdom so named, but subject to the King of Cascar, who in the year 1603 was called Mahomet Chan, a Prince of credit in those parts, but neither equal in Fort or Power to the King of Tanguth. The people generally rude and barbarous, in so much that some parts here of both Sexes do indulge themselves this mutual priviledge, that if the Husband or the Wife be absent above twenty daies, the other party is at liberty to marry again.

2. CHESMUR, the Inhabitants whereof are generally both Idolaters and Inchanters, causing the dumb Idols to speak, the winds to rise, and the Sun to be darkdarkned. For ſtudying which black Arts (if they come to them by ſtudy) they have many Monaſteries, in which their Hermites or Monaſticks live a ſtrict kind of life, and are very abſtemious.

3. LOP, memorable for a great Deſart of thirty days journey; ſo true a Deſart, that whoſoever doth not mean to be ſtarved, muſt carry all his victuals with him. Dangerous to Travellers, if not before-hand made acquainted with their danger: the evil ſpirits uſing to call men by their names, and make them go aſtray from their company, where they periſh with famine, or are devoured with wild beaſts. The chief Town hereof called Lop, giving name to both.

4. CAMUL, an Idolatrous Country, the people whereof account it a great honour to them to have their Wives and Siſters at the pleaſure of ſuch as they entertain. From which brutiſh cuſtome when reſtrained by Mango Cham, they petitioned him at three years end to be reſtored again to their former liberty; proteſting they could never thrive, ſince they left that cuſtome. Which deſire of theirs was at laſt granted, and is ſtill in uſe.

5. TAINFU, more civil than the reſt, the people being very induſtrious and good Artificers; making the moſt part of the Arms which are uſed by the Cham; and ſome alſo which they ſell to Merchants.

6. CAINDU, with a Town in it of the ſame name, of great reſort by Merchants (ſuch as we commonly call petit Chapmen) for Womens Veils here made, with very great Art, of the Barks of Trees. And it is well that they have Veils to hide their ſhameleſsneſs, the Women of this Tract being proſtituted unto every Traveller.

7. CARAZAN, inhabited by a barbarous and ſavage people, who in the day time live in Dens for fear of Serpents, with which (and ſome of them 10 paces long, and ten ſpans in thickneſs) they are much infeſted; and in the night go forth to prey upon Wolves and Lions. They have an uſe, that when any ſtranger cometh into their houſes, of an handſome ſhape, to kill him in the night: not out of deſire of ſpoil, or to eat his body: but that the ſoul of ſuch a comely body might remain amongſt them.

8. CARDANDAN, near Carazan, and as ſavage as that. The people whereof draw black lines on their bodies, which they count for the greateſt Ornament. In caſe of ſickneſs they ſend not to the Phyſitian but the next Inchanters, who taking Counſel of the Devil, apply ſome remedy; or if they think the man paſt cure they tell him that his offences are grown too great to admit of help; and ſo put him off.

9. ERGIMUL poſſeſſed by an Idolatrous people, but mixed with ſome Mahometans; and Neſtorian Chriſtians. In which Country they have certain Bulls as big as Elephants, with Mains of fine white hair, like ſilk; ſome of which they tame; and betwixt them and their Kine engender a Race of ſtrong and laborious beaſts, not inferiour in that kind to Oxen. Here is alſo found a beaſt of an exquiſite ſhape, but not bigger than a Goat, which at every Full Moon hath a ſwelling under the belly; which being cut off by the Hunters, and dried in the Sun, proveth to be the beſt Muſk in the World.

10. TANGUTH, the greateſt and moſt potent of all the reſt, bordering on the North of Cathay, ſpecially ſo called, and (like to that) inhabited by an induſtrious and laborious people, amongſt whom the Art of Printing is ſaid to have been extant a thouſand years. Bleſſed heretofore with a great increaſe of Chriſtianity; but now the Gentiles or Idolaters make the greateſt part, with ſome Mahometans amongſt them. And for the ſerving of thoſe Idols, they have not only many large and beautiful Temples, built in the manner of Chriſtian Churches, and capable of 4 or 5000 perſons: but alſo many fair Monaſteries for the uſe of their Votaries, and Recluces. They are poſſeſſed of many Towns, moſt of them well fortified, and planted with good ſtore of Artillery. The chief of which, 1 Sacbian, bordering on the Deſart of Lop, inhabited by ſome of all three Religions; in which it is affirmed that they firſt uſed the Art of Printing. 2 Campion, the Metropolis, or Mother City of this Country; where the Chriſtians in the time of Paulus Venetus, had three fair Churches: now over-numbred by the Gentiles, who have here many Monaſteries for the uſe of their Idols, and many Religious perſons dedicated to their ſervice only. Who though they live more honeſtly than the reſt of their Order, and hold it an impiety to tempt a woman to the act of Luſt; yet if the woman make the offer, they hold it no ſmall ſin to refuſe her curteſie. 3 Sauta, a Town in the middle way betwixt Campion and Succuir, as being five daies journey from the one, and ſix daies journey from the other; by which we may conjecture at the long extent of this King's Dominions. 4 Succuir, ſituate amongſt Mountains cloathed with Rhubarb, from whence conveyed by Merchants over all the world; but ſo neglected by the Natitives, that did not the foreign Merchant bring it into requeſt, they would ſcorn to gather it. This once a Kingdom of it ſelf, made ſubject afterwards with Tanguth, to the Cham of Cathay, or the great Cham of Tartary. But the fury of this Tartarian tempeſt, being overblown, the Kings of Tanguth did not only recover their ancient Royalty, but by degrees poſſeſſed themſelves of the moſt part of the reſt of Altay, and perhaps part of Cathay alſo, being looked on at the preſent as the greateſt and moſt puiſſant Prince betwixt the Mountains of Imaus and the Eaſtern Tartars, to the deſcription of whoſe Countries we do next proceed.

The Countries of the Eaſtern Tartars are bounded on the Weſt, with Altay; on the Eaſt, with the Oriental Ocean; on the North, with Tartaria Antiqua; and on the South, with China; ſo called from their Eaſtern ſituation, in regard of thoſe of Cathay and Altay, which by the Chineſes are called commonly the Weſtern Tartars.

The Country not very fruitful, becauſe ill cultivated, ſo that the chief commodities which they ſend abroad, are, the Root called Ginſem, ſo much eſteemed amongſt the Chineſes, and all ſorts of precious ſkins, as thoſe of Caſtor, Martron, and Zibellins; and alſo Horſe-hair, of which the Chineſes make their Nets, and the men (though madly) uſe it in tying up their hair, as the handſomeſt dreſs they can appear in. With theſe Commodities they traffique into Leaotong, a Province of the Northeaſt of China (from which they are parted only by an Arm of the Sea) where commonly they make good Markets, their Merchandiſe being thence diſperſed into all parts of that Kingdom. The people are generally of broad Faces, their colour White, but their Noſe is not ſo flat, nor their Eyes ſo little as the Chineſes are, ſparing of ſpeech, and ſomewhat penſive, but neither ſo unſociable as their neighbours of China, or ſo barbarous and rude as the Tartars of Europe. They ſhave both the head and beard, reſerving only the Muſtaboes, which they extend to a great length, and in the hinder part of their head they leave a Tuft, which being curiouſly woven and plated, they let hang down careleſly below their ſhoulders; they have a round and low Cap, which is alwaies garniſhed round with ſome precious ſkin three fingers broad, of Caſtor or Zibellin, and ſerveth to defend their Temples, Ears, and Foreheads from Colds, and other Tempeſts. That which appears above the skin being covered over either with curious red Silk, or else with black and purple Horse-hair, which they dye and dress most curiously; so as their appurtenances being handsomly joyned together makes the Cap both commodious and handsome. Their garments are long Robes falling down to the very foot, but their Sleeves are not so long and large as the Chineses use, but rather such as are used in Poland and Hungary, only with this difference, that they fashion the extremity of the sleeve ever like a Horse's Hoof. At their Girdle there hangs on either side two Handkerchiefs to wipe their face and hands, besides there hangs a Knife for all necessary uses; with two Purses, in which they carry Tobacco, or such like commodities. On their left side they hang their Scymitars, but so as the Point goeth before, and the Handle behind; and therefore when they fight they draw it out with the right hand behind them without holding the Scabbard with the other. They seldom wear shooes, and use no Spurs to their Boots, which they make either of Silk or of Horse-skin very neatly dressed; but they often use fair Pattens, which they make three fingers high. In riding they use Stirrups, but their Saddles are both lower and broader than ours. In matters of War they are very nimble, never carrying any baggage with them, nor taking care for provision, but filling themselves with what they find; yet commonly they eat flesh, though half washed or half boyled: and if they find none, they fall upon their Horses and Camels. The earth covered with their Horse-cloth is their bed, for they care not for houses and chambers; but if they be forced to dwell in houses, their horses must lodge with them, and they must have many holes beaten in the walls to let in the air; but yet their Tents are most beautiful, which they fix and remove with such Art and dexterity, as they never retard the speedy march of an Army.

They inhabit amongst many other Provinces, those of Sumahania, Tanin, Gupi, Niulhan, and Niuche; of which I am able to say nothing in the way of Chorography, or of the four first in way of History; only I find that those of Niulhan were aiding to the King of Niuche, in the Conquest of China: and of the Gupi it is written, that they are so called, by reason they make their Coats of defence or Brest-plates of Fishes skins, which grow (as is affirmed) in a manner impregnable. None of which Nations count themselves originally of Tartarian Race. Yet either terrified by the noise of their great successes, or willing to partake of some part of their fortunes, they not only aided them in their Wars on that side of Imaus, but were content to take their very name upon them. Never invaded nor subdued till the time of Hombu King of China, who having driven the Western Tartars, then Lording it over that Kingdom, from one part of it to another, compelled them finally to betake themselves unto those parts and Provinces of the Eastern Tartars, which now make up the Kingdom or Province of Niuche, where the War followed after them also, till by little and little they became more quiet; compelled to beg their Peace of the Conquering Enemy; divided into seven Hordes or Tribes, and governed for a long time by their several Chiefs, they became at last united into one Kingdom called the Kingdom of Niuche, Anno 1550. or thereabout. Oppressed by the Prefects of Leaotong in the way of their Trade, and suffering amongst many other indignities the death of their King, whom those Prefects had entrapped and murdered, they make complaint of these outrages to the King of China; and finding no remedy at his hands, put themselves into Arms, invade the Province of Leaotong, take the City of Leaotong: and having besieged the King himself in the Royal or Imperial City of Peking, they returned home (finding no hope of taking it at that time) with the spoil and plunder of all those parts through which they marched. The War thus first begun was managed for many years with great loss on both sides, the Tartars having got nothing by it, but the Eastern parts of the Province of Leaotong, and the honour of having shewed themselves twice more at the Walls of Peking, till in the year 1614. being invited into China by Usangueius to support the then falling fortune of the Royal Family, they husbanded the opportunity so well, as to make themselves the absolute Masters of that mighty Kingdom. The whole story and successes of which notable action, we shall sum up in brief when we come to China. In the mean time take here the Catalogue of

The KINGS of NIUCHE.

1550 1, 2 N. N. advanced unto this Kingdom after the reducing of the several Hordes into one main body, and Father of the King succeeding, who was slain at last by the treachery of the Prefects of Leaotong, as before was said.

1616 3 Theienmingus, who to revenge his Father's death, invaded China, took the City of Leaotong, braved the great Emperour at the Walls of the Regal City, and having enriched himself with the spoils of the Country returned home again.

1627 4 Theienzungus, the Son of Theienmingus, followed the War with the same fortune as his Father did, both of them growing greater in Renown and Riches than in Power and Patrimony.

1636 5 Zungteus, the Son of Theienzungus, secretly brought up amongst the Chineſe, by means whereof he grew not only acquainted with the conditions of that people, but their weaknesses also; and consequently was the better prepared to lay the foundation of that greatness to which the Tartars have attained by the Conquest of it. Called into China by Usangueius, as before is said, he possessed himself of the City of Peking; and though he died as soon as he was Master of that City only: yet left he such instructions to his Brothers, and the rest of his Council, that very easily and speedily they possessed themselves of all the Kingdom.

1644 6. Xunchius the Son of the former, of the age of nine years only at the death of his Father, the management of his affairs both for War and Peace being committed to his Uncles, but chiefly unto Amavangus the eldest of them, by whom so prudently conducted, that within the space of four years he was quietly settled in that Throne, all opposition and pretenders to the Royal succession, being beaten down, of which more hereafter.

5. TARTARIA ANTIQUA.

TARTARIA ANTIQUA hath on the South, Altay, and the Countries of the Eastern Tartars; on the West and North, the main Scythick Ocean; on the East, the Streights of Anian, (if such Streights there be) by which parted from America. So called, because the first habitation of the Tartars; who from this Den or Goal, Goal, made their first eruptions, and have since overgrown so much of Asia.

The Country cold and comfortless, as lying under the Polar Circle, and in part beyond it; not fit for any but such as can live no where else: yet heretofore a receptacle of many Christians (though those of the Nestorian Sect) who here enjoyed that liberty of their Religion, which the Persians and Saracens denied them in more pleasing Countries. It containeth many Regions, some not considerable. Those of most note, are 1 Thebet, 2 Tabor, 3 Tenduc, 4 Barbu, 5 Anian, and 6 Tartar.

1. THEBET, a fenny Region, and full of Woods, rich in Coral, which they find on the Sea-shore, and use it instead of money. So named from the chief City of it, the ordinary Seat of the Abassie, or Pope of this Idolatrous People; much reverenced, and having in his power the disposing of all Offices, which concern the service of their Idols. They have also some good store of Musk, and abundance of wild beasts which are bred in their Forests: But no beasts wilder than the People, who in times past (if not at the present also) used to bury their Parents in their own bowels, and to make drinking cups of their sculls; for fear lest in the midst of their jollity they should forget their Progenitors. Yet not more barbarous than immodest; it being contrary to their custom to take a Wife that is a Virgin. And therefore the Mothers use to prostitute their Daughters to the Merchant-Strangers, who having had their pleasure of them, gratifie them with a Jewel, or some other Present, which they wear on their Wedding-day: she being the most acceptable Bride to her husband, who bringeth the greatest Dowry with her of those base rewards. It contained once several petit Kingdoms, (Homagers to the Kings of Tenduc) with many Cities; but now laid desolate by the Tartar.

2. TABOR, once a distinct Kingdom also. One of the Kings whereof in the year 1540. came to the Courts of Charles the Fifth, and Francis the First; where he found Princely entertainment. But upon proof that he was a Factor for the Jews, and secretly solicited many unto that Religion; by the command of Charles he was burnt at Mantua.

3. TENDUC, a populous Kingdom of it self, but greater in name and power; the Kings hereof commanding all these Northeast parts, as far as the borders of Cathay. Christian in Religion, till the Conquest of it by the Tartars, though according to the Nestorian tendries: but now Mahometan for the most part, with some remainders, and but few of Christianity. Divided into many large and spacious Provinces, as Chinchintales, Cerguth, Egrigaia, Cercham, others of less note; so called according to the names of their principal Towns, or having some Towns in them of the name of the Provinces.

Those of most note in Tenduc it self, 1 Coras, the ordinary sepulture of the Kings of Tenduc, before it was subdued by the Tartars, and since that also. 2 Caracoras, where Cingis was first honoured with the Title of King. the Kings hereof bearing the Port of Kings, and the Office of Priests, were anciently called by the name of Presbyter Johannes, or Prester John: a Title now erroneously conferred by some on the Emperour of the Abassines, or Æthiopians in Africk. Concerning which it is a wonder, that Joseph Scaliger, a man of such infinite reading, should be so deceived: and by the Authority of his judgment deceive so many. For finding that there was a Presbyter Johannes in the North of Asia, and hearing vulgarly that Title given unto him in Africk, he fell upon a fancy that this Abassine Emperour was formerly of so great power, as to extend his Empire over India, and the North of Asia; and in this last, for the assurance of his Conquests, to hold his residence. A monstrous, and undefensible fancy! For besides that, all Histories, even those of the Abassines themselves, are silent in it: how improbable is it, that a King reigning in the heart of Africk, should subdue the most remote parts of Asia; and there keep his Court, so many great States and most puissant Nations, being interposed; or that so memorable an exploit should be buried in silence, and found in no record but in Scaliger's head! Besides it is well known, and generally granted, that the Presbyter John of Asia, was by Sect a Nestorian; but he that is so called in Africk, of the Sect of the Jacobites: and further, that the Christians of Æthiopia are circumcised, which never was reported of those of Asia.

Letting this pass therefore as an unwarrantable, and ill grounded fancy, we are to know that formerly this Province of Tenduc, was under the old Kings of Cathay, till the time of Cin Cham, the King thereof. After whose death a certain Nestorian Shepherd (that is to say, the Master of great flocks of sheep) being Governour of the Naymans, a People of Tenduc, took to himself the Title of King of Tenduc; whom they called by the name of Prest John, or Prince John (the same word in their Language, as in the Hebrew, signifieth both Priest and Prince.) Dying he bequeathed his Estate and Flocks to his Brother Unt-Cham, (commonly called in one word Uncham) a greater Sheep-Master than he; whose Flocks ranged over all the Pastures of the Moles, or Mongul Tartars, though dwelling fourteen daies journey off, whom he had in subjection: the Title of Priest John, or Presbyter Johannes, going along with the dignity and Royal estate. And though afterwards this Uncham was subdued by the Tartars, yet his Posterity for long time were suffered to enjoy the Title of Kings and Presbyters; (but Vassals and Homagers to the Great Cham,) the Great Chams, in regard of their Nobility and Royal Parentage, bestowing their Daughters on them in Marriage; as is said by William de Rubraquis, who travelled in these Countries, Anno 1253. the King hereof being then named George (the fourth from Uncham) but commonly called Presbyter Johannes, as his Fathers were.

4. BARGU, on the extreme Northwest, bordering on both those sides the cold Scythick Ocean, situate under the North-star; of the same nature, both for the Soil and People as that of the Tartars. And

5. ANIAN, on the Northeast, opposite unto it, giving name unto the Streights of Anian, lying betwixt Tartary and America; which Streights (if any such Streights there be) the Tartars, and some other of these Northern Nations, are thought to have passed over, and to plant that Country.

6. TARTAR, so called of the great River Tartar, the principal of this Northern Tract, and giving name unto the Tartars: this being their Original Country, where they lived like beasts, having neither Faith, nor Letters, nor Habitation, nor the use of Arms, nor any Reputation amongst their Neighbours. In matter of Religion, the worst sort of Gentiles, worshipping the Sun, Moon, Fire, and the very Earth: to which they offered in the morning fasting, the first of their meats and drinks.

Their Idols made of Felt, and placed on both sides of the doors of their Tents or Booths, as the preservers of their Cattel, and the Authors of Milk. Divided into five Clans or Tribes, denominating so many Towns and Territories in which they dwelt, that is to say, 1 Mongul, 2 Yeka Mongul (or the Great Mongul,) 3 Sommongul, or the Water-Mongul, 4 Mercat, 5 Metrit: each of them governed by its Chief, as commonly it is amongst barbarous Nations; though all those Chiefs subordinate to some higher power. Oppressed by Uncham, or Untcham, the King of Tenduc, who invaded their Pastures, and compelled them to pay unto him the tenth of their Cattel; with joynt consent they removed somewhat further off, and denyed their Tribute. This opportunity was taken by Cingis, one of the Tribe of the Teka-Monguls, and so well husbanded, that they admitted him for their King. For publishing abroad amongst the credulous people, that an armed man appeared to him in his sleep, with a white Horse, and said, O Cangius, or Cingis, it is the will of immortal God, that thou be Governour of the Tartars, and free them from bondage and paying tribute, he found a general belief; especially amongst those of his own Clan, who joyning themselves to him, followed him, as their Ring-leader, in all his actions. Thus backed and strengthened, he made war against the Sommonguls, slew their Commander, and subdued them: and by their help successively assaulted the Mercats, and Metrits whom he also vanquished. And having thus subdued all the Clans of the Tartars, and added the estates of Thebet and Tanguth, unto his Dominions, he was by the consent of the seven Princes or Chiefs of their Clans, (Thebet, and Tanguth being added to the former number) placed on a Seat on a peece of Felt, (the best Throne they had or could afford) and saluted King; with as great reverence and solemnity as their State could yield. And first to make tryal of his power, and their obedience, he commanded the seven Chiefs, or Princes to surrender their places, and each of them to cut off the head of his eldest Son: which was done accordingly. Had John of Leyden been a Scholar, as he was but a Botcher, I should think he had studyed the acts of Cingis, and proceeded by them. Assured by this of their fidelity and obedience, he set upon the Naymans, a People of the Kingdom of Tenduc, whom he overcame. And now conceiving himself fit for some great alliance, he sent to Uncham, and demanded one of his Daughters for his Wife; Which Uncham with some threats, but more scorn, denying, he marched against him, slew him in the field, and possessed his Daughter, and with her also his Estate. Proud with this good success, and encouraged by so great an increase of power, he invaded the Kingdom of Cathay; pretending for that also the authority of an Heavenly Vision, in the name of the Immortal God: in which attempt, discomfited at first with a very great overthrow, but at last victorious; conquering the several Nations of it one by one, till in the end he brought the War to the chief City of that Kingdom, which at last he took, and therewithal the Title of Cham or Emperour. Continuing in this Dignity for the space of six years, and every year adding somewhat to his Dominions he was at last woundeded in the Knee at the Castle of Thaygin; of which wound he dyed, and was honourably buried in Mount Altay.

This is the best account I am able to give of the beginning of this great Empire, the original of this spreading Nation, and the description of the Countrey of their first habitation. They that have Christned some of the most Northern parts of it, by the means of the Tribes of Dan and Naphthalim, and accordingly placed them in their Maps, might with more credit have supplied those vacant places, which they knew not otherwise how to fill, with the Pictures of wild beasts, or monstrous fishes; which might well enough have pleased the eye, without betraying the judgment of the looker on. Of his successors I am able to make no certain Catalogue; their names being doubtfully delivered, and the Succession much confounded amongst our Writers: the names of the Provincial Sultans being many times imposed upon us, instead of those of the Chams themselves. But we will wade through those difficulties as well as we can, and exhibit as perfect a Catalogue of them, as the light of Story will direct me: first adding (what should have been before remembred) that it is recorded, that Cingis before he joyned battel with Uncham, cosulted with his Diviners and Astrologers of the success They taking a green Reed, cleft it assunder; writ on the one the name of Cingis, and Uncham on the other: and placed them not far asunder. Then fell they to reading their Charms and Conjurations and the Reeds fell a fighting in the sight of the whole Army, Cingis Reed overcoming the other: whereby they foretold the joyful news of Victory to the Tartars, which accordingly hapned. And this was the first step, by which this base and beggerly Nation began to mount unto the Chair of Empire and Soveraignty, whereas before they lived like beasts, having neither Letters, nor faith, nor dwelling, nor reputation, nor valour, nor indeed any thing befitting a man, as before was said.

The Great CHAMS of the TARTARS.

A. C.

1162 1 Cingis, Cinchius, Zingis, or Changius, was made King or Cham of the Tartars; he subdued Tenduc, and Cathaia, changing the name of Scythians and Scythia, to Tartarians and Tartaria. 6.

1168 2 Jocusban Cham, or Hoccata, succeeded. In his time the name of Tartar was first known in Europe, Anno. 1212. in which year they drove the Polesockie from the banks of the Euxine Sea. By his Captain Batbu, or Roide, he subdued Moscovia, or Russia; planted his Tartars in Taurica Chersonesus; wasted Hungaria, Bosnia, Servia, Bulgaria; and by his other Captains took Persia from the Turks.

3 Zaincham, Batbu, or Barchum, ruined the Turks Kingdom of Damascus, and Asia the less.

4 Gino Cham, whose Daughter conveyed the Empire unto her husband Tamerlane, or Tamberlane.

1370 5 Tamir-Cutlu, Tamir Cham, or Tamerlane, a great Tyrant, but withall an excellent Souldier. It is thought, that he subdued more Provinces in his life time, than the Romans had done in 800 years. Of whose acts we have spoke at large. Dying, he divided his great Empire amongst his Children, as Persia to Mirza Charock his fourth Son, Zagathay to another, (perhaps unto Santochus his eldest Son) and so to others.

1405 6 Lutrochin, the second Son of Tamerlane, succeeded in Cathay, though the eldest was at first proclaimed, which his Father had before prognosticated: who when his Sons came to him before his death, laid his hand on the head of Santochus, who was the eldest, but lifting up the Chin of Lutrochin, who was the second. He lived not long, succeeded to by 7 Allan, who added little to his Estate.

8 Mango Cham, to whom Haiton an Armenian Prince (and the chief Compiler of the Tartarian History) went for aid against the Caliph of Bagdat. By whose perswasion the said Mango Cham is said to have been christned, with all his Houshold, and many Nobles of both Sexes.

9 Cublay Cham, the Son of Mango.
10 Tamor Cham, the Nephew of Cublay by his Son Cingis.
11 Demyr Cham, the Great Cham of Cathay in the year 1540 or thereabouts. What the names of the Chams are who have since reigned, we cannot learn; nor what memorable acts have been done among them. The great distance of Countreys, and difficulty of the journey have hindred further discoveries. For the great Cham, and his next neighbour the King of China, will neither suffer any of their subjects to travel abroad, nor permit any Forreigners to veiw their Dominions, or enter into them: unless their Embassadours or Merchants, and those but sparingly, and under very great restraints, to avoid all giving of intelligence touching their affairs; saving that in these later times the Jesuites have found some footing in China, by whom notwithstanding, we have received little or no intelligence in matters which concern this Countrey.

The Government is tyrannical, the great Cham being Lord of all; and in his tongue (besides which they have almost no Laws) consisteth the power of life or death. He is called by the simple Vulgar, The shadow of Spirits, and Son of the Immortal God: and by himself is reputed to be the Monarch of the whole world. For this cause every day as soon as he hath dined, he causeth his Trumpets to be sounded, by that sign giving leave to the other Kings and Princes of the earth to go to dinner. A fine dream of Universal Monarchy. At the death of the Cham, the seven chief Princes assemble to crown his Son, whom they place on a black course cloth: telling him, if he reign well, Heaven shall be his reward; if ill, he shall not have so much as a corner of that black cloth to rest his body on: then they put the Crown on his head, and kissing his feet, swear unto him fealty and homage. And at the Funeral of these great Monarchs, they use to kill some of his Guard Souldiers, whereof he hath 12000 in continual pay; saying unto them, Ite & domino nostro servite in alia vita. Paulus Venetus reporteth, that at the obsequies of Mango Cham, no fewer then 10000 were slain on this occasion.

These Chams are for the most part severe Justicers, and punish almost every small fact with sudden death; but theft especially: Insomuch that a man in Cambalu taking a pail of milk from a womans head, and beginning to drink thereof, upon the womans out-cry was apprehended, and cut asunder with a sword; so that the bloud and the milk came out together. Nor are Adultery or Lying punished with less than death, and so ordained to be by the Laws of Cingis, their first Emperour. A wiser man, than possibly could be expected from so rude a Countrey, and of so little breeding in the knowledge of Books or Business; the Tartars being utterly without the use of Letters, till the conquest of the Huyri, a Cathayan nation but of Christian Faith.

What forces the Great Chams, in the height of their power, were able to draw into the field, may be conjectured at by the Army of Tamerlane, consisting of 1200000 Horse and Foot, as was said before. And looking on them as confined within Cathay, we shall find them not inferiour to the greatest Princes. For Cublay Cham, long after the division of this great Estate, which was made by Tamerlane, had in the field against Naian his Uncle, and one Caiadus, who had then rebelled, an Army of 100000 Foot, and 360000 Horse: their being 500000 Horse on the other side. Which made almost a million of men in both armies. And this is probable enough, if report be true touching the Chams of Zagathay, and those of Turchestan, (before reduced under the obedience of the other) of which the first is said to have been able to raise 300000 Horse, and the last an hundred thousand more. For standing Forces, he maintains 12000 Horse, distributed amongst four Captains, for the guard of his Person; besides which he hath great Forces in every Province, and within four miles of every City, ready to come upon a call, if occasion be: so that he need not fear any outward invasion, and much less any homebred Rebellions. But on the other side, admitting this for truth which before is said, we find him of no power at Sea, without which great Princes are exposed most commonly to the invasions and affronts of such as are strong in Shipping: For either the Eastern Tartars interposed betwixt him and the main Ocean, whereby he is Land-locked (as it were) from all Trade at Sea; or if he have any Port in the North-east parts of this long Countrey, where it joyneth on Tartarea Antiqua, it is so far off, and so much out of the way, that it adds nothing to his power, and not much to his purse.

Of the Revennes of the Cham, I can make no estimate, but may conclude them to be what he list himself: he being the absolute Lord of all, the Subject without any thing he can call his own. But that which ordinarily doth accrew unto him, is the tenth of Wool, Silk, Hemp, Corn, and Cattel. Then doth he draw into his own hands all the Gold and Silver which is brought into the Countrey; which he causeth to be melted, and preserved in his Treasury: imposing on his people instead of money, in some places Cockl-shells: in others, a black coin, made of the bark of trees, with his stamp upon it. And besides this he hath to himself the whole trade of Pearl-fishing, which no body upon pain of death dare fish for, but by leave from him. So that his treasury is conceived to be very rich, though his Annual in-come be uncertain, or not certainly known.

Hitherto I have prosecuted the affairs of this mighty Monarch upon the common credit of approved Authors yet must confess I am not very well satisfyed in the truth and reality of the thing it self: it being rather my opinion, that there is no such man at this present time as a great Cham of Tartary with Soveraign Power and Jurisdiction over all the other Members of that vast body; but that this Empire being broken in pieces by the Sons of Tamerlane, the conquered Countreys did by little and little return again to their former Governments, or else were seized on by the Visi Chams or Governours of the several Provinces. For first I consider it as impossible that there should be such a mighty Monarch, of such absolute authority, such an infinite power, and such unlimited Revenue; and yet that for the space of an hundred years and more we should hear neither tale nor tidings of them, no not so much as of their names, especially in an active age, and when this great building of the world hath such Casements in it. For it must needs seem strange to a rational man, that neither Jenkinson who passed into Persia by the Caspain Sea, nor Sir Robert Sburley who spent much time in the Persian Court, nor Sir Thomas Roe, or Sir Dodmore Cotton (the first Embassadour to the great Mogul, the other to the Persian Sophy) should tell us any thing of this Prince, if such Prince there be; or that the Travellers of our Nation who have rambled over all parts of India, the next neighbouring Countrey, should bring us home no tidings of him; or the Jesuites with all their diligence should not find him out. Secondly, I consider it is a thing improbable, that if there were any such mighty Prince, keeping his Royal Court in the City of Cambalu, so near unto the Kingdom of China, he should permit the beggerly Nations of the Eastern Tartars to conquer that rich and mighty Empire in so short a time, he in the mean season sitting still as a dull spectator, neither considering his own danger, nor putting in for a ſhare of ſo great a booty. Thirdly, I obſerve that in the treating of a Marriage between Xunchius the great King of the Eaſtern Tartars, now reigning in China, with a Daughter of the King of Tanguth; the King of Tanguth is called Prince of the Occidental, or Weſtern Tartars, by which name the Chineſes call all the Tartars inhabiting the vaſt Countries of Altay and Cathay, ſpecially ſo called, (as being Weſtward of themſelves, and the Eaſtern Tartars,) which Title the King of Tanguth had not merited or durſt have aſſumed unto himſelf, if there had been any ſuch great Cham then raigning in Cathay, and reſiding in Cambalu, as our Authors ſpeak of. And fourthly, I obſerve it as a matter probable, that as at the breaking of this Empire into pieces upon the death of Tamerlane, the Precopenſes, or Europæan Tartars ſubmitted to a Prince of their own Nation, under the Power and Government of whoſe Succeſſours, they do ſtill continue: and much of the Aſiatick Tartary being ſubdued by the Moſcovites, the neigbouring Tartars did return to their ancient Government by Hordes or Tribes; that ſo the Kings of Tanguth might not only recover their own Inheritance, but by degrees poſſeſs themſelves of the greateſt part of all Altay, if not of ſome part of the Proper Cathay alſo. And therefore that ſome of the laſt great Chams mentioned in the former Catalogue, are no other than the Kings of Tanguth, or the Chams of Zagathy, in whom (if any where) remaineth the Succeſſion of the Houſe of Cingis.

From theſe Premiſes I conclude, that all which hath before been ſpoken touching the great power, authority, and revenue of the great Chams of Tartary, muſt either be referred unto the times of their greateſt glory, when their Empire was entire; or not much diſmembred; or elſe relate, with ſome qualifications, to the Chams of Zagathay, or the Kings of Tanguth. But theſe my obſervations and conſiderations, with the concluſion iſſuing from them I willingly ſubmit unto better Judgments.

And thus much for TARTARY.

OF CHINA.

CHINA is bounded on the North, with Altay, and the Eaſtern Tartars, from which ſeparated by a continued chain of hills, part of thoſe of Ararat; and where that chain is broken off, or interrupted, with a great Wall extended 400 Leagues in length; built as they ſay, by Tziantzon, the 117 King hereof; on the South, partly with Cauchin-China, a Province of India, partly with the Ocean; on the Eaſt, with the Oriental Ocean; and on the Weſt, with part of India, and Cathay; from which no otherwiſe ſeparated than by ſuch natural bounds, and Ramparts as commonly divide great Countries from one another.

The Northern parts hereof were utterly unknown unto the Ancients, both Greeks and Romans; But for the Southern parts hereof, they make up that Country which Ptolomy called Sinæ, or Sinarum Regio, by which name the whole Country is called at the preſent by our modern Latiniſts; and from whence that of China ſeems to be derived. By Paulus Venetus called Mangi, by the neighbouring Countries Sanglai, by the Natives Taine, and Taybinco: which laſt, ſignifies no other than a Realm; or by way of excellence, the Realm. By the Arabians it is called Tzinin; and the Inhabitants call themſelves by the name of Tangis.

It is ſaid to contain in circuit 69516 Diez of China meaſure, which reduced to our Europæan meaſure, will make a compaſs in the whole of 3000 Leagues: the length thereof extended from the borders of India, to the moſt Northern Provinces of this Continent, 1800 Leagues. But they that ſay ſo, ſpeak at random. For beſides that 1800 Leagues in length, muſt needs carry a greater compaſs than 3000 Leagues, they make it by this reckoning to be bigger than Europe, which I think no ſober man will grant. And anſwerable to this vaſt compaſs, it is ſaid alſo to contain no fewer than 15 Provinces, every one of which is made to be of a greater Continent than the greateſt Realm we know in Europe: Yet not a Continent of waſte ground, or full of unhabitable Deſarts, as in other places; but full of goodly Towns and Cities. The names of which Provinces, and the number of their Towns and Cities, I have thought fit once for all, to lay down in this Diagram following.

The Provinces, Cities, and Towns in China.

	Prov.	Cit.	Tow.
1	Canton	37	190
2	Foquien	33	99
3	Olam	90	130
4	Siſnam	44	150
5	Tolenchia	51	155
6	Canſay	24	122
7	Minchian	25	29
8	Ochian	19	74
9	Honan	20	102
10	Pagnia	47	150
11	Taitan	47	78
12	Quinchen	45	113
13	Chagnian	43	95
14	Suſnam	41	105
15	Quinſay	31	114

By which it doth appear, that in theſe fifteen Provinces there are 591 Cities; 1593 walled Towns; and beſides them 1154 Caſtles, 4200 Towns unwalled; and ſuch an infinite number of Villages, that the whole Country ſeems to be but one City only. But here we are to underſtand that theſe great Provinces are divided into many leſſer, and ſome of them preſented to us (in late ſtories) under other names, according to the Languages and Appellations of thoſe ſeveral Nations, which either have recourſe unto them, or do traffique with them; which the Reader may take notice of with leſs doubt or wonder, in regard that the main Country of China it ſelf is called by ſo many ſeveral names, as before was ſhewn.

It reacheth from the 130th. to the 160th. Degree of Longitude: and from the Tropick of Cancer, to the 53 Degree of Latitude. So that it lieth under all the Climes from the third to the ninth, inclusively: the longeſt Summers day in the Southern parts, being thirteen hours, and forty minutes; increaſed in the moſt Northern parts, to 16 hours and 3 quarters. Enjoying by this ſite an air ſomewhat of the hotteſt, eſpecially in thoſe parts which lie under the Tropick; but withal very ſound and healthy, and fit for the production of the choiceſt Fruits.

The Country very rich and fertile, inſomuch that in many places they have two, and in ſome three Harveſts in a year: well cultivated, and ſowed with all manner of Grain, and planted with the beſt kind of Fruits; which do not only come to a ſpeedy maturity, but to more excellency and perfection than any of theſe Weſtern parts. The like is alſo ſaid of their Pearls and Bezoar; fairer and of greater vertue than thoſe of America, or any other part of the world beſides. Particularly it aboundeth with Wheat, Barley, Rice, Wool, Cotton, Olives, Vines, Flax, Silk, all kind of Metals, Fruits, Cattel, Sugar, Honey, Rhubarb, Camphire, Ginger, all kinds of Spices, medicinal wood, call'd China wood, by the name of the Country, Musk, and Salt: the Cuſtom for which laſt in one City only, which is that of Cantan, amounteth to the yearly value of 180000 Crowns. It yieldeth alſo an Herb, out of which they preſs a delicate juyce, which doth not only ſerve them in ſtead of Wine, but preſerveth their health, and freeth them from many of thoſe inconveniencies, which the immoderate uſe of Wine doth breed to others. Such ſtore of Poultry of all ſorts, but of Ducks eſpecially, that in the Town of Cantan only before mentioned, it is thought there are 12000 eaten every day, one day with another.

The people are for the moſt part of ſwart complexion, but more or leſs, according to their nearneſs to the heat of the Sun, ſhort noſed, black eyed, and of very thin beards. They wear their Garments very long, with long looſe ſleeves, and their Hair much longer than the neighbouring Tartars, who wear their Hair exceeding ſhort, and their cloaths much cloſer; to which two Faſhions ſo addicted that more of them took up Arms for their Hair and Habit (when required to conform in thoſe particulars to the will of the Conquerour) than had done either for their King, or their common liberty. So much delighted with their own faſhion and compoſure, that as the Negroes uſe to paint the Devil White, as a Colour contrary to their own: ſo when theſe Chinois uſe to draw the Picture of a deformed perſon, they ſet him forth in a ſhort coat, broad eyes, long noſe, and a buſhy beard. They are much given unto their bellies, and eat thrice a day, but then not immoderately: drink their drink hot, and eat their meat with two ſticks of Ivory, Ebony, or the like, not touching their meat with their hands at all, and therefore no great foulers of Linnen. The uſe of Silver Forks with us, by ſome of our ſpruce Gallants taken up of late, came from hence into Italy, and from thence into England. Their Marriages they celebrate moſt commonly in the New Moon, and many times put them off till March, when the year beginneth with them as it doth with us: in which ſolemnity they ſpare for no coſt nor charge, Muſick, and Stage-plaies, and good chear many days together. Yet doth not this take them off a jot from their natural induſtry, and their proficiency in Manufactures and Mechanick Arts. For the Son is bound to follow his Father's occupation: which Law, preventing the roaving about of idle people, and exciting in each breſt an emulation in every Art, maketh the Inhabitants excellent Artificers. In giving Alms they are bountiful to the maimed, and the lame; but reject the blind, as being ſufficiently able to get ſuſtenance for themſelves by corporal labour, as grinding of Corn, &c. They have long enjoyed the benefit of Printing before it was known in Europe, but Print not as we do, from the left hand to the right; nor as the Jews, from the right hand to the left; but from the top of the leaf downward to the bottom. Guns alſo have been uſed among them time out of mind: whence they are ſo well conceited of themſelves, that they uſe to ſay, They themſelves have two eyes, the Europæans one, and the reſt of the people of the world not one. A pretty flouriſh of ſelf-praiſing. Now that Guns were in uſe in theſe Eaſtern Countries, and conſequently alſo amongſt them, even when Bacchus made his Expedition into India (which was ſome three or four years before, or after the departure of Iſrael out of Ægypt,) Sir Walter Rawligh ſeemeth to affirm: becauſe Philoſtratus, in the life of Apollonius Tyaneus, telleth us how Bacchus was beaten from a City of the Oxydracæ, by thunder and lightning; which he interpreteth to be the Cannon. But certainly himſelf in another place of his moſt excellent book, acknowledgeth this Philoſtratus to have written fabulouſly; and therefore no fit foundation for a conceit ſo contrary to probability, and the opinion of all times. Beſides, whereas Dion telleth us, that by the benefit of thunder and lightning from Heaven Severus diſcomfited Peſcennius Niger; and by the ſame means, was himſelf repulſed from the Walls of Petra in Arabia: we may (if this interpretation hold good) as eaſily maintain, that Severus had great Ordnance in his Camp; and the Arabians in their Town. As for Printing, whether John Guttenberg learned it of the Chinois; or whether good inventions, like good wits, do ſometimes jump, I dare not determine: ſure I am that he firſt taught it in Europe; and as ſome ſay, in the year 1440. At Harlem a Town of Holland, it is firſt ſaid to be practiced; and at Mentz perfected. Now whereas it is by ſome doubted, whether the Art of Printing be available to the proficiency and advancement of Learning, or not; I muſt not herein be both a Judge, and a party: but muſt leave the deciſion of the point to men unintereſſed. Only this I dare boldly ſay, that this moſt excellent Invention hath been much abuſed, and proſtituted to the luſt of every fooliſh and idle paper-blurrer: the Treaſury of Learning being never ſo full, and yet never more emty; over-charged ſo with the froth and ſcum of fooliſh and unneceſſary diſcourſes. In which (though all Nations have their ſhare therein, and we of late as much as any) the Dutch have been accounted the moſt blameworthy: who not content to ſcatter their poor conceptions amongſt themſelves, and Print them in their own Tongue only (as our Engliſh Paper-blurrers do) publiſh them in the Latine to the eye of others, and ſend them twice a year to the publick Marts, though neither worth the Readers eye, nor the Printers hand. Scriptorum plus eſt hodie quàm muſcarum olim cùm caletur maximè; the complaint once of an old Comedian, was never truer than at the preſent.

But not to dive too deep into this diſpute, the people, as before was ſaid, are good Artificers, Ingenious and excellent in all things which they take in hand: the Porcellan Diſhes, curious Carvings, and the fine Painted Works which we have in Tables, Leather, Stuffs, being brought from thence. Effeminated with much eaſe and pleaſure, they are not much given unto the Wars which make them the more eaſie prey to the Neighbouring Tartars, whoſe very name hath bred more terrours in them than their Arms or Conqueſts. Inſomuch that when Uſangueius, requeſted Aid of Zungteus King of the Eaſtern Tartars, againſt Lycunſtzus, and his rabble of Rogues, which ſacked the City of Peking, and placed himſelf in the Throne Imperial; the Tartarian having bu few men in readineſs, adviſed him to array a good part of his own Souldiers with the Arms and Colours of the Tartars, that on the Terrour of that ſight he might obtain the cheaper, and more certain Victory; which prudent Counſel was purſued, and it proved accordingly: but what they want in courage, they ſupply with Wit, being ſaid to be a politick and judicious people; but withal very jealous of their women, and great Tyrants over them, not ſuffering them to go abroad, or ſit down at the Table if any ſtranger be invited, unleſs he be ſome very near Kinſman. A Tyranny or reſtraint, which the poor women give no cauſe for, being ſaid to be very honeſt and much reſerved; not ſo much as ſhewing themſelves at a window for fear of offence: and if they uſe painting, as moſt of them do, it is rather to preſerve themſelves in the good affections of their Husbands, than for any other lewd reſpects. For the moſt part of a fair Hair, whereof very curious, binding it about their heads with Ribbands of Silk, and garniſhed with Pearls and precious Stones. Neat in their dreſs, and very coſtly in their apparel, with reference to their eſtates, and the degree of their Husbands: the richer ſort wearing Sattin ſtrip'd with Gold, and interlaced with very rich Jewels; the poorer in Serge, and razed Velvets. They have moſt of them little feet, which they take great pride in, and for this cauſe bind them up hard from their very Infancy; which they indure patiently though it be very painful, becauſe a ſmall foot is accounted for ſo great a grace. And yet it is conceived that this proceedeth not ſo much ſtom their own curioſity, as from the jealouſie of the men, who have brought it in, to the end that they ſhould not be able to go but with a great deal of pain; and that going with ſo ill a grace, and ſo little eaſe, they ſhould have no deſire to ſtir much abroad. A cuſtom ſo Ancient and received, that it hath got the force of Law; and if any Mother ſhould do otherwiſe in breeding their Daughters, they would undergo ſome cenſure or mark of infamy. If a deſire to ſee their Parents get them the freedom of a viſit, they are carried to them in cloſe Chai s, and attended by ſo many waiters, that it is not poſſible for any man either to ſee them, or hold any diſcourſe with them.

Arms

Of both Sexes it is thought that this Country contaiſneth no fewer than 70 Millions. Which though it ſeem to be a number beyond all belief; yet it is knowingly averred, and may be thought probable enough, if we conſider the ſpaciouſneſs of the Country. 2 The ſecret goodneſs of the Stars, and temperature of the Air. 3 The abundance of all things neceſſary to life. 4 That it is not lawful for the King to make any War, but meerly defenſive, and ſo they enjoy perpetual peace. 5 That it is not lawful for any Chinois to go out of the Country. And 6 That here the Sea is as well peopled as whole Provinces elſewhere. For the Ships do reſemble a City, in which they buy, ſell, are born, and die. And on the ſeveral Rivers which water the Walls of Nanquin, and Pequin, for no leſs than 300 Leagues, the Ships are ſaid to be ſo thick ranked, that it ſeemeth to be a continual Street.

The people hereof in matters of Religion, are generally all Gentiles, and conceive thus of the Creation; viz. That there was one Taine, who created Panzon, and Panzina, whoſe Poſterity remained 90000 years; but they for their wickedneſs being deſtroyed, Taine created Lutitzam, who had two horns, from the right came men, from the left came women. When any of them dieth, they cloath him in his beſt apparel, all perfumed, ſet him in his beſt Chair, and their all his neareſt Kindred kneeling before him, take their leave with tears. When he is Coffin'd, they place him in a room richly furniſhed, and ſet by him a Table full of viands and good cheer, with Candles continually burning on it. Not much unlike to which Ceremonies, we find, how whileſt the funeral was preparing for Francis the French King, his Statue apparelled in Royal Robes, with the Crown, Scepter, &c. was laid on his Bed; whither Dinner and Supper was daily ſerved in, with the like State and Solemnity as when he was living. But to return again to my dead Chinois; when he has lain, as is above ſaid, fifteen days, he is carried forth to his Funeral, the place whereof is in the Fields; for to be buried within the Walls, were a thing of all others the moſt wretched. Hither, when they are in the manner of a Proceſſion, come; they burn his body, and with it Men, Cattel, and other proviſion, for his attendance and ſuſtenance in the other world: as they uſe in the Funerals of Tartary. As great Idolaters as any, ſacrificing to the very Devil, and that upon the ſame reaſon, as the moſt ignorant ſort of the Gentiles do; becauſe forſooth he is a wicked and miſchievous creature, and would otherwiſe hurt them.

Yet in the middle of this darkneſs there appeareth ſome light, whereby we may perceive that Chriſtianity had ſome footing here, in the times foregoing; for they believe, that God is an immortal Spirit; that by him the firſt man was made of nothing; that the Soul dieth not with the Body, but is capable of reward and puniſhment in another life, according to the works it hath done in this. Which leſt they ſhould be thought to be only ſome remainders of the light of nature, (the learned men amongſt the Ancient Greeks and Romans, having ſo much Divinity as this, without the Goſpel) we may here add, that the Idol moſt generally worſhipped by them, is painted with three heads looking one on another; ſignifying, as themſelves affirm, that they have all but one will, which makes ſome think they had been Anciently inſtructed in the Doctrine of the Holy Trinity. They have alſo the Picture of a very fair Woman holding a Child in her Arms, who, as they ſay, was Daughter of ſome great King; and that ſhe was delivered of that Infant when ſhe was a Virgin. And as ſome add, they have portraitures of the Faſhion, and with the marks or Characters of the twelve Apoſtles (as uſually painted in ſome part of the Chriſtian Church:) of whom they are able to ſay nothing, but that they were great Philoſophers who lived vertuouſly here, and were therefore made Angels in Heaven. And finally they hold, that there is a great number of Saints, or men Eſtated in an eminent degree of Happineſs, who in their times exceeded others in knowledge, induſtry, or valour, or lived an auſtere life without wronging any man: or otherwiſe deſerved nobly of the Common-wealth, as the Authors of ſome ſignal benefit unto their Country. Theſe I conceive to be ſome evident remainders of Chriſtianity, or the Remembrances rather of that Chriſtianity, which formerly was known amongſt them: firſt planted here (as may be probably collected) by St. Thomas, or ſome of his Diſciples; an Ancient Breviary or Liturgy of the Indian Churches, giving good hint to it: Where it is ſaid, Per D. Thomam regnum cœlorum volavit, & aſcendit ad Sinas: i. e. that by St Thomas the Kingdom of Heaven was Preached unto thoſe of China. Some Characters here were alſo of it, in the time of the Tartars, though now obliterated, and not viſible but in theſe defacements; And in this ſtate it ſtood till the time of our Fathers, in which the Jeſuites (commendably induſtrious in the propagation of the Chriſtian Faith) not without great danger to themſelves, have endeavoured, and in part part effected, their Converſion. For though they have gained but few Proſelytes, (in regard of thoſe infinite numbers of people which are ſaid to live here) yet ſome Converts they have made amongſt them; and thereby ſown thoſe ſeeds of that ſaving Truth, (though mingled with ſome tares of their own) which may in time increaſe and ſpread over all the Country. For at the preſent they have not only got footing in the Ports and Sea-Towns; but alſo in many mid-land Cities, and in ſome alſo very far diſtant from the Sea, in all of which, they have both Churches for their followers; and Cells or Monaſteries for themſelves; and finally, have gained ſo far upon the Court, as not only to have their doings well approved of by Authority Royal; but have alſo gained unto the Faith, the Mother, Wife, and eldeſt Son of Jungly the laſt declared Emperour of the Chineſes, which eldeſt Son they have baptized (and be it an happy Omen; for the good of Chriſtendom) by the name of Conſtantine.

Hills of great Note here are not many, here being but one Mountain touched upon by Ptolomy, in his deſcription of the Country called Sinarum Regio, which we conceive to be the Southern part of this China: agreeable unto the obſervation of Modern Writers, by whom it is affirmed to be ſo plain and level, and ſo unſwelled with hills at all; that they have Carts and Coaches driven with ſails as ordinarily as drawn with horſes, in theſe parts. Not the leſs deſtitute of Rivers for this want of Mountains, Ptollomy naming in it, 1 Aſpthara, 2 Senus, 3 Ambaſtus, and 4 Cotiaris; all which had here there fount and fall: and yet he knew the out-skirts of the Country only. But becauſe the Country of the Sinæ, of which Ptolomy ſpeaks, make but a South part of this great Country, and the Rivers which before we mentioned in Serica, paſs into it alſo, it's poſſible enough, that we may find them all, amongſt the chief Rivers of this Country, whenſoever we ſhall come to have a more perfect Chorographie hereof than former times have given unto us. In the mean ſeaſon we may know, that the names by which the principal Rivers are now called, are 1 Talo, which riſing in the North-eaſt parts of the Country, and paſſing by the Southern skirts of Leaotong, falleth into the Ocean over-againſt the Iſland of Corea, making a little Iſlet at the Influx of it, fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle called Xainghai, to ſecure that entrance. 2 Croceus, which ariſing in the Weſt borders hereof, firſt bendeth its courſe to the North-eaſt, watering the City of Kaiangchen, and after paſſeth directly Eaſtward, till it falls at laſt into the Talo. 3 Polyſanga, which iſſuing out of ſome of the branches of Mount Imaus, firſt paſſeth by the great City of Cambalu, and falls at laſt into the mighty Lake of Quinſay, and finally again contracted to its proper Channel, doth either loſe it ſelf in the Eaſtern Ocean, or in the great River of Kiang, of which more anon. 4 Cacamacan, another of theſe great Rivers which falleth into the Lake of Quinſay, and poſſibly may be the ſame which the Chatayan Tartars call by the name of Caromoram. 5 Kiang, (or Quiam as the Tartars call it) which having its original from Mount Imaus, and paſſing thorow the whole breadth of Cathay, cutteth thorow the middle of this Country which it divideth (like an Æquator) into North and South, watering therein the ſtately Cities of Nanquin and Caifung where it is no leſs than 4 miles broad, encreaſing more and more in breadth by the falling in of other principal Rivers, till it come at laſt to be 10 miles over, and caſting up ſuch Mountains of Water, that the Chineſes call it not undeſervedly, The Son of the Sea. 6 Cianthang, the ſame (I think) which the Tartars call Quiantu, which riſing out of ſome other ſpurs or branches of the Mount Imaus, falleth at laſt into this Country, and paſſing by the goodly City of Hangchcu on the North, and the fair Town of Xaoking on the South, endeth its courſe at laſt in the Eaſtern Ocean. 7 Queio, a River of the Southern parts, but not much obſervable. Here are alſo many great Lakes not inferiour to ſome Seas in bigneſs; ſo plentiful in fiſh, as if they contended with the ſoyl, which ſhould be moſt profitable: and yet ſo ſwelled with winds (though the winds many times blow ſtrongly) that both upon theſe Lakes, and on the Rivers and Sea-coaſts, they paſs up and down in ſmall Barks, with no other Sail than a Bough ſet up an end in the midſt of them; by the help whereof they make good ſpeed in their Navigations. Nor do theſe Lakes or Rivers uſe to overflow their banks, or endamage the Country: but when they do, it brings ſome fatal ruine with it; as in the year 1527. when the Lake of Sancey breaking out overwhelmed ſeven Cities, many Towns and Villages, and Country people, almoſt infinite numbers.

Towns of moſt Note amongſt the Sinæ, though nothing but the names be remaining of them, 1 Bramna; and 2 Rhabana, honoured with the title of Civitates, 3 Aſpithra, 4 Achatara, more within the Land; but all four under ſome degree of Northern Latitude. 5 Thine, the Metropolis of the Country, by ſome called Sinæ, 6 Sarata, 7 Cateranagara; theſe on the South ſide of the Line. But in this Ptolomy was miſtaken; it being found by the more certain obſervations of our later Writers, that no part of China comes within 20 degrees of the Æquinoctial; and ſo not capable of having any Towns or Cities of a Southern Latitude. Here was alſo a large Bay called Sinarum Sinus, a Promontory named Notium, in the fourth degree of Northern Latitude; and another named Satyrorum, lying under the Æquinox. More than this of the Cities of the ancient Sinæ, I have nothing to ſay, which I dare offer to the Reader.

But to behold them as they are preſented to our view in the Modern China, it hath been ſaid, that for number there are no fewer than 591 Cities; and thoſe ſo uniformly built; ſo conformable to one another, that they differ not in form and faſhion, but in quantity only. Much like the Cities of Utopia, mentioned by Sir Thomas More, Idem ſitus omnibus; eadem, quatenus per locum licet, rerum facies; ſo near reſembling one another, that he who knoweth but one of them, may conjecture at all. And this is the manner of their building. Moſt of their Cities have the benefit of ſome navigable River, near which they ſtand: the waters whereof ſerve them both for navigation, and domeſtick uſes. Two great Streets croſſing one another in the very midſt, ſo broad, that ten horſemen may ride a breſt in the narroweſt of them; ſo ſtrait, that a man ſtanding in the middle, may ſee either end; each end being ſhut up with a gate of great ſtrength and beauty; and thoſe Gates fortified and ſtrengthened with thick plates of Iron. Generally greater and more ſtately than thoſe of Europe, but defective in that point of elegancy which the Magnificent Churches, and more ſumptuous buildings for the diſpatch of publick buſineſſes, in theſe parts abound with. Their private houſes for the moſt part are alſo low, and deſtitute of Porches, Windows, Galleries, the principal ornaments and graces of Architecture. Nor are their Cities built only for reſort, or trade, but for ſtrength and ſafety, environed with deep and broad ditches, the Walls of brick or ſtone, ſtrong above beliefe, planted with Ordnance and Artillery in convenient places: and every night the Gates not only locked but ſealed; not to be opened till unſealed by the principal Magiſtrate. So like they are to one another that we may ſay with Ovid on the like occaſion.

——— Facies non omnibus una,
Nec diverſa tamen, qualem decet eſſe ſororum.

Which

Which I find thus Engliſhed by G. Sandys,

Amongſt them all no two appear the ſame,
Nor differed more than Siſters wellbecame.

But not to reſt our ſelves on this general Character, let us take a more particular view of ſome of the principal. And in that liſt we find, 1 Quinſay, called Suntien by the Natives, ſituate ſomewhat towards the ſouth, on the Weſtern borders of this Kingdom, where it confineth on Cathay; of this Town many things are reported beyond all belief, as namely, that it contained once in circuit an hundred miles, and had in the middeſt of it a Lake of 30 miles compaſs; in which Lake were two goodly Iſlands, and in them two magnificent Palaces, adorned with all neceſſaries, either for majeſty, or convenience; in which are celebrated the publick Feaſts, and the marriages of the better ſort; The Lake nouriſhed with divers Rivers, the chief being Polyſanga, and Cacamacan; on which Rivers 12000 Bridges are ſaid to have lifted up their ſtately heads: and under whoſe immenſe Arches, great Ships with Sails ſpread abroad, and top and top gallant, might and did uſually paſs. It is alſo ſaid to have had ten Market-places, each of them four miles aſunder, and every one in form quadrangular, the ſides thereof half a mile in length. Here were ſaid alſo to be twelve Companies of Tradeſmen or Artizans, each Company having 12000 Shops, and in all a million and 600000 Families. But whatſoever it was in the former times, certain it is that at this time (if it hath at this time any being at all) partly on the removal of the Court from hence to Cambalu by the Tartars; and ſince to Nanquin and Pequin by the Princes of the houſe of Hombu, and partly the fury of Wars, and partly by the violence of Earthquakes, it hath loſt no ſmall part of her ancient beauty and renown. 2 Unguen, famous for the abundance of Sugar there made. 3 Nanquin, ſeated 9 Leagues from the Sea, on the great River of Kiang, whereon ride for the moſt part no fewer than 10000 of the Kings Ships, beſides ſuch as belong to privat men. The Town in compaſs 30 miles, being girt with three fair brick walls, having large and ſtately Gates: The ſtreets in length two Leagues, wide and paved; the number of houſes is about 200000 ſo that it may equal four of the faireſt Cities of Europe. 4 Pequin, or Pagnia, in the middle of the Province ſo named (being one of the four Northern Provinces, which take up the whole breadth of this mighty Kingdom) where the King continually reſideth; and that, either becauſe the air hereof is more healthful and pleaſant, than any of the other, or becauſe it lieth near unto the Tartars, with whom the Chinois are in perpetual War: ſo that from hence the dangers which may by their invaſions happen unto the Countrey, may with more convenience be either prevented, or reſiſted. The City ſaid to be inferiour to Nanquin for bulk and beauty, but to exceed it in multitude of Inhabitants, Souldiers, and Magiſtrates, occaſioned by the King's abode. Environed on the South with two Walls, of ſo great breadth, that twelve horſemen may run abreſt upon them; on the North, with one Wall only, but that ſo ſtrong and vigilantly guarded, that they fear as little annoyance on that ſide as they do on the other. But the greateſt Ornament hereof is the Royal Palace, compaſſed about with a triple Wall, the outwardmoſt of which would well environ a large City; within which ſpace, beſides the many Lodgings for Eunuchs, and other Courtiers, are Groves, Hills, Fountains, Rivers, and the like places of pleaſure, larger in circuit, but not comparable for the Arts of Architecture to the Royal Palaces of Europe: Firſt built by ſome of the Tartar Kings of this Countrey in imitation of the Royal Palace of Xaindu, mentioned in Cathay, honoured ſometimes with the reſidence of the Chams themſelves, which as it gave unto the City the name of Pequin, that is to ſay, the Court or City of the King, in the Language of China, ſo gave it occaſion unto ſome Writers to make this and Cambalu the ſame, both names being of the ſame ſignification, though in divers Languages. 5 Cantan, ſuppoſed to be the Cattigara of Ptolomy, by the Chinois called Quamcheu, the leaſt of the Metropolitan Cities of this Countrey, but beautified with many triumphant Arches, a navigable River, large ſtreets, and many goodly Bridges. Fortified with deep Trenches, 83 Bulwarks, and ſeated in ſo rich a ſoil, both for Fowl and Cattel, that here are ſaid to be eaten daily 6000 Hogs, and 12000 Ducks, beſides proportionable quantity of other victuals. If this be one of the leaſt of their Metropolitans, what may we fancy of the greateſt? A Town in which the Portugals drive a wealthy trade, being permitted in the day-time to come within the City it ſelf, but at night excluded, and forced to find lodging in the Suburbs. By reaſon of which reſtraint they have ſetled their Mart at Macao the Port Town to this, where they have their Factor, and many families; the Town being almoſt wholly peopled by them. 6 Leaotong, the chief City of Leaotong, (another of the four Northern Provinces) and the firſt Town taken by the Eaſtern Tartars in their attempts upon this Kingdom, by this door making themſelves an entrance into all the reſt. 7 Ninguiven made the Metropolis of Leaotong after the taking of Leangang by the Eaſtern Tartars. 8 Sigan, or Singan, the chief City of Xenſi, another of the four Northern Provinces, and honoured ſometimes with the Kings reſidence. 9 Xaoking, on the Southſide of the River Cienthang, one of the faireſt Cities of China, ſo environed with ſweet waters, as a man may contemplate its beauty, as rounding it in a Boat; conſiſting of large and fair ſtreets paved on both ſides with white ſquare ſtones, and in the middle of them all runs a Navigable Channel whoſe ſides are garniſhed with the like ornament; and of the ſame ſtone there is alſo built many fair Bridges, and triumphant Arches; the houſes being all of the ſame ſtone alſo, which render it the neateſt (though not the biggeſt) City in this mighty Kingdom. 10 Sucheau, about two days journey from the Sea, ſeated in Mariſhes like Venice, but more commodiouſly, becauſe thoſe Mariſhes are of freſh water; the ſtreets and houſes founded upon Piles of Pine-tree; with many Bridges, and conveniences for paſſage both by land and Water. Well traded, as the fitteſt Center for diſperſion of Merchandiſe from all the other Ports of the Kingdom: by the multitude and frequency of ſhips, almoſt denying faith to the eyes, which would think all the Ships of China to be here aſſembled. So infinitely rich, that the ſmall Region whereof it is the Head, containing but eight Cities more, payeth 12 millions to the King of yearly incom. 11 Hamſeu, or Hangcheu, on the North ſide of the River Cienthang; out of which furniſhed with a Channel of great length and breadth, by which it trades into the Northern parts of this Kingdom; the Metropolis of the Province of Chequian, about two days journey from the Sea, in compaſs leſs than Nanquin, but better builded: no places in it taken up with Gardens, Orchards, or other pleaſures; but all employed for Shops, Houſes, and other Edifices. So beautified with Triumphant Arches, erected to the honour of deſerving Magiſtrates, that in one ſtreet there are 300 of great maſs, of workmanſhip. The Temples magnificent and many; the bank-ſides of the Channels watring every ſtreet, beſet with trees of ſhade, and moſt excellent fruits: and in the middle of the City a round high Mountain, which gives the eye a gallant proſpect into every ſtreet. And not far off a pleaſant Lake of great breadth and length, the banks whereof are beautified with Groves and Gardens, and the Lake

it

it self even cloathed with Vessels of all sorts, on which the Citizens use to feast, and entertain their idle time with Plays and Spectacles. Two Cities so replenished with all kind of pleasures, that the Chinois use it for a Proverb, Thien Xam, thien thum, ti Xamsu hum, that is to say, Look what the Hall or Presence-Chamber is in Heaven, that Hamseu and Sucheau are on earth. 12 Fochea, beautifyed amongst many other stately Structures, with a Magnificent Tower erected on 40 Marble Pillars, of great elegancy, cost, and bigness, every Pillar being 40 spans in height, and 12 in breadth: not to be parrallel'd, as some say, by any the like work in Europe. 13 Lochiau, in which are 70000 Families. 14 Colans, famous for the best Porcellane. 15 Scianhay, by some called Thiencin, a station to which an incredible number of Ships resort, both by Sea and River from all parts of this Kingdom; seated within 24 hours sail of the Isle of Japan, and therefore defended with a strong Garrison, and a Navy. Situate in a pleasant and wholesom soyl, the whole Countrey so set forth with trees, as if it were one continued Orchard. So populous, that it containeth 40000. Housholds, most of which get their livelihood by weaving Cottons, it being supposed that here are 200000 persons which attend that Manufacture. 16 Chinchiamsu, whence by a River made by hand, there is a passage to Sucheau; the water of which never freezeth, and for that cause so clogged with Ships in time of Winter, that the passage is stopped with the multitudes of them. 17 Zuancheu a most rich and beautiful City environed with large waters, and the only Southern Port within the Land to which Ships or Boats may have access. 18 Caiton or Caifung, seated upon the River Ciang, a City once of three Leagues in compass, whose Harbour was seldom without 500 Ships, and sometimes honoured with the Seat or Residence of the Kings themselves; most miserably destroyed Anno 1642. by Zunchinius the late King of this Countrey, who breaking down the dams and sluces to let in the River, for the dislodging of some Thieves and out-laws, who had then besieged it, gave it so great and forcible a passage towards the Town, that it bare down the greatest part of the houses of it, and therein drowned above 300000 of the Natural Citizens; before which time the Metropolis or chief City of the Province of Honan. 19 Kaingcheu, on the South-side of the River Croceus, the richest and the fairest City in these parts of the Countrey, commodiously seated to command that River. 20 Chuking, the head City of the Province of Quamtung, for the strength and conveniency of its situation thought fittest for the seat of Jungly, the last declared Emperour of the Chinese against the Tartars. 21 Queilin the cheif City of the Province of Quangsi. 22 Taitung, the Metropolis or chief City of Xansi or Cansay, another of the four Northern Provinces, but not else observable for any thing I find of it, either in point of Trade or Story. 23 Manchang, a chief City of the Province of Kiansi, of which little memorable; and less of 24 Cergiron, but that it is like unto the rest in form an structure.

Besides the Provinces before mentioned, there are three others not directly under the dominion of the Kings of China though depending on it, that is to say, 1 The Province of Suchuen, 2 The Island of Corea, 3 The Island of Cheuxan.

1. The Province of Suchuen, lyeth on the Southwest of this Kingdom, of the same nature both for soyl and air with the rest of China, but possessed by a more warlike people; the women here being trained up to feats of Arms, and so well practiced on their weapons, that when the Queen hereof went to the aid of the Emperour Vanley against the Tartars, Anno 1618. she took with her a small Army of 3000 women, performing actions not unworthy the bravest men: the chief City hereof is called Cingtu, of great capaciey, and so exceeding populous withal, that Changhienchungus (that most barbarous Tyrant) caused no fewer than 600000 of them (men, women, and children, all indifferently) to be slaughtered in one day before his face. The whole Country governed for a long time by its own Kings of the same Taimingian Race with the Kings of China, from whom having received their investiture, they were afterwards of absolute authority over their own Subjects, who acknowledg no other King but him. And in this state it did continue till the year 1644. when Changhienchungus, whom before I named, entring into this Countrey with his rabble of Rogues made a Conquest of it, murdered the young King, Son to the Amazonian Queen, which before we spake of: dispeopled the great City of Cingtu, butchered at one time twenty thousand Priests, at another time eighteen thousand Students; and finally committed such unspeakable outrages, that the Tartars in meer pitty to that wretched people, sent an Army against him, by which he was vanquished, and slain; this Province thereupon submitting to the Tartars as their great deliverers.

2. Corea, is an Island of the Eastern Ocean, not far from the Northeast of China, over-against the fall of the River Talo. The quality of the soyl, the dimensions of it, and what Cities it containeth in it, I have no where found. The people far more warlike than those of China, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of the Japonites, with whom they have always either open wars, or uncertain peace. Invaded by those Islanders and in danger to be conquered by them, they made an offer of their Countrey to the King of China; who having repulsed the Invaders, restored their Countrey freely to them, without laying any other Imposition on them, than of love and gratitude, which obligations those of Corea have discharged most fully. For when Vanley, the late Emperour of China, was first invaded by the Tartars, they sent unto his aid twelve thousand men well Armed, and exercised in the Wars; increasing their supplies in the time of Theinkins, who next but one succeeded Vanley. Drawing the whole storm upon themselves by those friendly aids, they were accordingly assisted by the King of China, whose forces came so seasonably in the heat of a Battel between the Coreans and the Tartars, that the Tartars after a long and terrible fight, were driven out of the Island, but with such incredible loss on all sides, that few or none escaped of the Army of China, seventy thousand of the Coreans slain, and the Tartars leaving fifty thousand of their men behind them; after this they were unmolested, till the fatal and final Conquest of the Kingdom of China, when seeing the Tartars Lords of all, And no possibility of resistance, they submitted to them, about the year 1648. upon condition of retaining their Hair and Habit, which no extremity of personal danger, or fear of publick desolation, could compel them to alter.

3. Cheuxan, is an Island of the same Seas, on the South of Corea opposite to the City of Nympus in the main Land of China, an Island which being heretofore a dwelling place of poor Clowns and Fishermen only, is now become a potent Kingdom. For Liu. Regulus, chosen by a party of his own to succeed to the broken Crown of China, and finding no hopes of withstanding the great power of the Tartars, retired himself into this Island with his friends and followers, followed not long after by great multitudes of the natural Chineſe, who chose rather to forsake their Countrey, than to Conform in hair and habit to the will of the Tartars; Insomuch that there are now found in this Iſland threeſcore and ten Cities, with a ſtrong and formidable Army, which hitherto hath contemned all the Tartarian Power and Forces, and watch for ſome happy occaſion to advance again their Kingdom in China.

The ancient Inhabitants of the Sinæ, in the time of Ptolomy, were towards the North, the Semantini bordering a mountain of that name, and the only one remembred in all this Country: more Southward, the Acadræ, and Aſpithræ; Towards the Sea Anabaſtæ, and Ichthyophagi (theſe laſt ſo called from living wholly upon Fiſh.) United into one body by the name of Sinæ, and known by that name to the Romans, in the time of Ptolomy, who boundeth them on the North with Serica, on the Weſt with India extra Gangem, and on the Eaſt and South with a Terra Incognita: which though it make up the leaſt part of the Modern China, Serica touching only on a Corner of the Northweſt of it, and the main Ocean waſhing it on the Eaſt and South: yet the Arabians in their Tzinin, and our late Latine Writers in their Sina and Sinenſium Regnum, do from hence give the denomination to this mighty Kingdom. How far they ſtretched beyond the bounds laid down by Ptolomy, and whether they ſubdued the Eaſtern and more Northern Nations, or were Conquered by them, it is hard to ſay; nor is it eaſie to reſolve, from what original theſe and the reſt of the Inhabitants do derive themſelves, whether from the Indians, or the Scythes: or that it was primitively planted by ſome of the Poſterity of Noah, before the enterpriſe of Babel: which laſt may probably be concluded from the extreme populouſneſs of the Country, the many magnificent Cities; their Induſtry and Ingenuity in all Arts and Sciences, not to be taught them by their neighbours, more ignorant in thoſe things than themſelves. And hereunto the Chronicles of China ſeem to give ſome ground, which tell us of three hundred and forty Kings, which for the ſpace of four thouſand years have therein reigned. For as their Chronicles inform us, (if they may be credited) the Country being without Rule or ſettled Government, was firſt reduced into order by one Vitey, the Son of Ezolem; by whom the people were inſtructed in Phyſick, Aſtrology, Divination, and the Art of Tillage: to which, this Vitey, having found out the way of cutting or ſawing Timber, added the uſe of Ships and Houſes, and many other the effects of Mechanical hands. Having by the valour of Lincheon one of his Commanders, ſubdued a great part of the Country, he drew them into Towns and Villages; diſtributed them into Offices, and ſeveral Trades, diſpoſing thoſe of the ſame Trade into Streets by themſelves; and commanding that no man without leave from himſelf, or his Officers, ſhould follow any other Trade than that of his Father. He preſcribed them alſo the faſhion of their Garments, taught them the Art of making and dying Silks: and having reigned an hundred years, left the Kingdom well eſtabliſhed unto his Poſterity. Of this Race there are ſaid to have been 217 Kings, who held the State 2257 years.

The laſt of them was that Tzaintzon, who being ill-neighboured by the Scythians (not yet called Tartars) is ſaid to have built that vaſt Wall ſpoken of before: extended 400 Leagues in length, and at the end of every League a ſtrong Rampart or Bulwark, continually garriſoned, and well furniſhed with all warlike neceſſaries. He being ſlain by ſome of his Subjects, burdened and waſted with his work, the Race of Vitey ended; and that of Anchoſan ſucceeded, a Prince of much prudence, but greater courage. In his Line it continued under 25 Kings, but ſhrewdly ſhaken towards the cloſe by a Civil War, betwixt Trunthey, the 23 of his Houſe, and his Nephew Laupy. Hardly well ſettled under Quiontey, the laſt of this Houſe, when Tzobu, a great Tyrant of the other Faction, ſet upon him, and ſlew him. And ſo the Majeſty of the Blood-Royal being trod under foot, the Crown was alſo toſſed from one hand to another, and made a Prey unto the ſtrongeſt: there being of the Race of this Tzobu, eight Kings, reigning 62 years; Of the Race of Dian, five Kings, who reigned thirty one; Of the Race of Tzoy, three only, who reigned thirty ſeven; Of the Race of Tenco, one and twenty, who held the Crown 294 years, and eight there were who reigned 120 years, of the Houſe of Tantzom. Of other upſtart Families to the number of five, were fourteen Kings alſo, who governed only for the ſpace of 66 years: And then one Zaitzon, deriving himſelf from Vitey, the firſt King of this Country, obtained the Kingdom; which he and ſeventeen of his Poſterity, for the ſpace of 320 years, governed with much peace and honour. Forſar, the laſt King of that Royal Family, foretold by Prophecy that he ſhould be deprived of his Kingdom by one who had an hundred eyes, neglected the Advertiſment, as unworthy credit: but it fell out agreeable to that Prediction, when vanquiſhed by Chiſan-baan (which word ſignifieth an hundred eyes) Lieutenant unto Uſan, a Tartarian Prince, but Feudatary and Vaſſal to the Great Cham. China thus made a Province of the Tartarians, was governed for the ſpace of 93 years, under nine Tartar Kings, Tributaries to the Great Cham, and dependants on him: the Chams themſelves many times paſſing into China, and abiding there according as their pleaſures or affairs did invite them to it, which occaſioned ſuch a continual entercourſe betwixt thoſe of China and Cathay, that they have much participated ever ſince that time of the manners and cuſtoms of each other. But here it is to be obſerved, that the Tartars ſpent almoſt as much time in the Conqueſt of China, as they did in the poſſeſſion of it; the war being firſt begun Anno 1206. finiſhed 1268. the Tartars being totally outed when they had reigned here 90 years only, that is to ſay, Anno 1358. or thereabouts. For then it hapened that a mean perſon called Hugh, conſidering with himſelf the diſcontentedneſs of the Chineſe under ſo long Bondage, the luxury of the Tartars, effeminated with the pleaſures of that Country, and the unwarlike temper of Gino Cham, then reigning over all in the City of Cambalu, raiſed to himſelf ſo ſtrong a Party, that in ſhort time he drave the Tartars out of all; forcing them to betake themſelves to thoſe parts of the Eaſtern Tartars, which now make up the Kingdom of Niuche.

1. Finally turning towards the Weſt, he not only recovered back to China ſuch parts thereof (as had been layed unto Cathay, and incorporated with it by the Tartars; but growing thereby a formidable neighbour to the Cham himſelf; Advanced for this great Service to the Crown of China, Anno 1269. he took unto himſelf the name of Hungus (our late Writers commonly call him Hombu) which ſignifieth as much as the famous Warrior, and gave unto his Children, and their Poſterity, the name of the Taingian Family; which they ſtill continue. For the recovery of this Country, great Tamerlane muſtereth up his Forces, and though Hombu brought into the field 350000 Horſe and Foot, yet nothing could reſiſt the powerful genius of that mighty Conquerour, who obtained here a ſignal Victory with the death of 60000 Chineſe: But wiſely moderating his proſperity, and mainly bent upon his war againſt the Turks, he thought it his beſt and ſafeſt way to let the people of China have a King of their own, impoſing on him a Fine of 300000 Crowns in ready money, a certain Annual Tribute (long time after paid) with certain other conditions, which as they were pleasing to the Victor, so they were not destructive to the vanquished. By means hereof it came to pass, that such a long communication in affairs of state, having passed between China and Cathay (those of China in old times Lording it over part of the Cathayans, as the Cathayans in late times did over the Chinese) there grew a great resemblance between both Nations, in Manners, Conditions, Arts and Manufactures, as before is said, which circumstances layed together, may afford some reason why in some Writers, easily misguided by such probabilities, Cathay and China have been reckoned to be one and the same. Nor did the Empire of the Chinois extend in old times, only over part of Scythia, but also over part of India, and some of the Oriental Islands. But the Princes of the House of Hombu, finding their own Kingdom large enough to content their desires, abandoned all the Accessories and Out-parts of their Dominions; prompted thereunto, not only by their own moderation, but by some misfortunes which befell them. For as we find that the Romans having by the fury of two violent tempests, lost no fewer than 206 of their Ships and Gallies, resolved to abandon (and for a long time did forbear) the Seas, which had used them so unkindly: So the Chinois having received a great overthrow, and loss of 800 Ships, nigh unto Zeilan, they freed all the Islands from obedience unto them, and contented themselves with the bounds which nature had bestowed on them. And of their moderation herein we have a very rare example. For when the people of Corea, a small Island abutting on the Confines of China, were invaded by the Japonites, they submitted themselves unto the King of China; who having repulsed the enemy, and thereby freed his own Country from danger, presently redelivers over unto the Coreans, their Town and liberty. A rare fact of a contented people. Which whether it savoured of greater moderation or magnanimity, I am not able to determine. In this Family hath the Realm continued under 15 Kings, for the space of 266 years and upward, reckoning from Hombu unto Boneg: who being the twelfth of this Line, succeeded his elder brother, unfortunately slain with a fall from an horse. Reported for a Prince of good disposition, great judgement, and a severe Justitiary. This Boneg (otherwise called Vanly) begun his Reign, Anno 1573. governing this Kingdom in great prosperity and glory for the space of 40 years and upwards; when cauling the Christian Subjects and the Jesuites their Converters to be hardly dealt with, and denying Justice to the Eastern Tartars for the many wrongs done them by his Prefects in the Province of Leaotong, he drew that people into Arms, as if marked out for Executioners of Divine displeasure. Stript by them in the year 1618. of a part of Leaotong, and braved by their Forces within sight of Pekin, he contracted some melancholick distempers, of which he died about two years after, leaving the Crown to his Son Taichangus, who having held it but four months left it, and all the troubles of it to his Son Theinkius, a valiant Prince and fortunate against the Tartars, but of short continuance. For dying in the year 1627. he was succeeded in that Kingdom by his Brother Zunchinius, a Prince of contrary disposition, cruelly bent, a great Oppressour of his Subjects, and for these causes ill beloved; yet they continued in obedience (though for fear rather of the Tartars, than for love of him) until the year 1640. or thereabouts. At what time the people in many places oppressed with Taxes, and in the Northern parts with Famine, arise in 8 Companies or Armies, which growing wanton by success, and warring upon one another, they are at last reduced under two chief Leaders, that is to say, Lycungzus and Changbienchungzus.

These two being come to an agreement took their several wayes, the last of them falling into Suchuen, whose villanies and deserved destruction we have there related. Lycungzus the more fortunate villain, in the year 1641. besieged Chifang the chief City of the Province of Honan, a place of great strength, but far greater riches, on the ruine whereof by the King's improvidence, and his subduing the whole Province of Xensi, he took to himself the title of King, and would be called Lycungzus the Prosperous; and not long after easing the people of the Taxes which the avaritious King had imposed upon them, putting the Tax-masters to death, and gaining upon all sorts of men by his courteous usage, he took unto himself the name of Emperour. Zunchinius succeeds his Brother, hindred by Factions in the Court, from sending seasonable Forces against the Rebels, who passing over the great River Croceus without any resistance prevailed in all places where they came, even to the taking of the great City of Peking, and the Palace Royal; at the hearing whereof, the Emperour seeing no way to escape their hands, hanged himself in his own Orchard, Anno 1644. his example therein followed by the Empress and his principal Servants. The body of the Emperour cut in pieces, his two younger Sons beheaded, the principal Magistrates murdered, and that great City sacked by command of the Victor. Forced to remove back again to Xensi by Vsangueius Commander of the Army in Leaotong, who called in the Tartars to revenge these Outrages, the Rebels taking with them all the wealth and treasure which the Emperours of the Tamingian Family had amassed together in the space of 260 years and upwards. Zungteus the King of the Tartars having thus got the City of Peking, died presently after, leaving his Son at nine years old to succeed him in that glorious fortune. By him commended to the care and protection of Uncles, who very faithfully discharged the trust reposed in them; Infinite numbers of Tartars thronging into China upon this occasion, and those not only of the Eastern but the Western Nations.

By these the Infant-King was proclaimed Emperour of China, by the name of Xaunchius, styling the new Imperial Family by the name of Tailing, the eldest of the Uncles whom the Tartars called Amavangus, having the chief conduct of Affairs.

Vsangueius by the Tartars not long after is declared King of Xensi, out of which he shortly drove the Rebels, and possessed himself of it; Lycungzus being either killed in the fight, or else otherwise lost. Hunquangus Nephew to Vanley, and Cousin German to Zunchinius, elected Emperour by the Chineses of the Southern parts, is opposed herein by one that pretended himself to be the eldest Son of Zunchinius; which division gave the Tartars a notable victory over all their Forces, and the great City of Nanquin in reward thereof.

The new Emperour being shortly after betrayed into the hands of the Tartars is by them hanged on the Walls of Peking; which death the Tartars count most noble. The pretended Son of Zunchinius discovered, and served in the same sort also. And though Loangus first, and afterwards Jungly, and Lu. Regulus, were chosen and declared Emperours by their several parties, Anno 1648. yet nothing could prevail against the fortune of the Tartars, Loangus being forced to put himself into their power, Jungly to fly into the Mountains, and Lu. Regulus to secure himself in the Isle of Cheuxan.

What hath succeeded since that year, future times will shew.

The Government of this Kingdom is meerly tyrannical; there being no other Lord but the King, no title of dignity or nobility ever known amongst them; nor Toll or Duty

Duty paid unto any but to him: the younger Princes of the bloud being maintained by Stipends, and annual Pensions, large enough to support their Trains, but without any Lands or Tenants, for fear of drawing on them any great dependances. The King alone is the general Landlord, and him the Subjects do not only reverence as a Prince, but adore like a God. For in the chief City of every Province, they have the Kings protraiture made of Gold, which is alwaies covered with a veil: and at every New-moon, the Magistrate and other inferiour Officers use to kneel before it, as if it were the King himself. By these and other Artifices of like contrivement the Common People are kept in such awe and fear, that they are rather Slaves than Subjects: calling their King the Lamp of the World, and Son of the everlasting Sun, without whose light they were able to see nothing.

In every Province, except Pequin and Tolenchia only, he hath his Deputies or Vice-Royes, maintained by liberal stipends from the publick Treasury: but those he governeth by himself. Some Laws they have, and those affirmed to have been written 2000 years since, as is like enough they were. So strongly do they savour of the ignorance and Atheism of the darkest times: the manner of life by them allowed, most obscene and shamless; their Idolatries most gross and palpable; their Exorcisms ridiculous, and the prostitution of their Virgins most abominable; and the variety of sensual prophanations, to an illuminated mind most base and contemptible. In a word, nothing commendable in their course of life (notwithstanding the brags which they make of themselves) but their Arts and industry.

The Forces which this King is able to draw into the Field must needs be infinite, considering that incredible number of Subjects under his command. For whereas France is thought to contain 15 millions of people; Italy, with the Isles, as many; Germany, with the Switzers and Belgick Provinces, about that proportion; Spain not above seven millions; and the Kingdom of England about four: this Country only is computed at 70 millions; which is more by 15 millions than all together. Proportionably his Levies must be so much greater, than can be ordinarily raised out of those Countries. But because it may be thought that his Subjects, though more in number, may be less trained to the wars than those of Europe; the contrary is affirmed by such as have taken an estimate of the Forces, which every Province is bound to entertain in continual readiness. And by that estimate it appeareth, that in the year 1557. (though a time of peace) there were dispersed in the fifteen Provinces of this Realm, to the number of five millions, 846500 Foot, and 948350 Horse. Which notwithstanding it may be said, and not unfitly, that he is able to bring into the field, amongst such multitudes of men, but few good Souldiers, the people being generally unwarlike, and of no great courage, as was before observed of them in that general Character. Nor is he less powerful for Sea-service, having continually great Fleets for the guard of his Coasts, in continual attendance; and many more ready to set out when there is occasion: insomuch that the Chinois use to say in the way of a Proverb, That their King is able to make a Bridge of Ships from China to Malaca, which are 500 Leagues asunder. Some of these Ships (whereof the King hath above a thousand of his own, besides those of his Subjects) of great magnificence and beauty: the Officers and Souldiers in all which are exceeding well paid, and rewarded answerably to their merits. And as this King is able to raise greater forces than any, from his own estates; so doth he also de facto do it, when the urgency of his affairs doth require it of him: his ordinary stint being 300000 Foot, and 200000 Horse; without which compleat number (not only in the muster-rolls, but in bodies of men) he vouchsafes not to go into the field.

Answerable unto these great Levies of men, must be his Revenue: which they who have travelled in this search if they tell us true, and do not build upon an hope of not being confuted, as for my part I fear they do) affirm to be 120 millions of Crowns, answered unto him out of the profit of the Mines of Gold, Silver, and other metals: the tenth of all commodities which the Earth brings forth; the tolls imposed on that unspeakable quantity of Merchandise, which passeth on so many navigable Rivers from one Town to another; the Customes taken of all those rich wares which are brought into Europe, and the Gabel laid on Salt in all parts of his Kingdom. Out of which sum, the payment of his Fleet discharged, the entertainment of the Souldiers satisfied, and his Court defrayed, there remaineth 40 millions of Crowns de claro to be disposed of, either in his treasury, or private pleasures, or the works of magnificence and ostentation.

And thus far also according to the general current of received opinions have I followed the description and affairs of China, as a distinct Country from Cathay; not ignorant that there are many probable reasons which might incline us to believe them to be one and the same; for first it is alledged in favour of this opinion that it is neither new nor strange, for one and the same Country, to be called by divers names, according to the languages and fancies of several Nations; that Country which we call Germany, being by the Natives called Dutch-land, not long since known most commonly by the name of Almaine; that part of Britain which we call Wales, being by the French called Galles, and Cambria by the Latine Writers; those mountainous people which the Romans know by the name of Rhœti, being by some of our Northern Latinists called Confœderati Cani, Campi Camini by Ammianus Marcellinus, Grauntpuntnor by the neighbouring Dutch, and finally Grisons by the French, which four last names do carry all the same sense and signification, though in different words; that China it self, is by the Natives called Tabinco, Tzinin by the Arabians, Mangi by Paulus Venetus, and by the neighbouring Nations Sanglag; that as it cannot be inforced from the like diversity of appellations that Almany, Germany, and Dutch-land, make three several Countries, (& sic de cæteris) so neither can it be concluded on the same grounds that China and Cathay make two several Empires. In the next place it is alledged that since by later voyages and navigations, this mighty Kingdom hath been discovered, and made known unto us of Europe by the name of China, the name and Empire of Cathay hath grown out of knowledge. For proof whereof they bring in the Itinerarie of Benedictus a Goes, a Jesuite, who in the year 1605. crossing from the North-east parts of Persia to the Realm of China, and naming all the several Countries and Towns of any note which lay in his way, makes no mention of any such Country as Cathay, nor any such Prince as the Great Cham thereof: telling us also that Martin Martinius, who had lived long in China, in his Books entituled Bellum Tartaricum, comprehendeth all the Countries betwixt China and Mount Imaus, under the general name and Notion of the Western Tartars, not taking notice of any such Country as Cathay; nor of any greater Prince amongst them, than the King of Tanguth; and that Ramusio in his notes on Paulus Venetus, reporteth some conference which he had with Chaggimemet a Persian Merchant, who told him that he had seen Campion and Succuir Cities of Cathay, in the reign of Demercan, which must be understood of Cathay in the general Notion, as it comprehendeth all the Tartarian Countries beyond Imaus, it being well known that Campion and Succuir are two Cities of Tanguth, and not of the proper Cathay, or Cathay especially so called. In the third rank of proofs they instance in the similitudes, or resemblances betwixt both Countries, and both people, which are so great and visible in temperature of Air, fertility of soyl, and pleasantness of situation, in customs, in ingenuity, Arts and Manufactures, as may be thought to carry an Identity, or sameness with them; which sameness or Identity they do also find in Pequin the chief City of China, and Cambalu, the supposed chief City of Cathay, being two words of the same sense and signification, though of divers sounds; for Pequin signifieth the Court or City of the King in the Chinian Language, and Cambalu signifieth the Court or City of the Cham, in the Language of Tartary. The like they also have observed of the Royal Palaces, adjoyning to the said two Cities, so like in the vast greatness and extent of the outer Walls, the Parks and Forrests intermingled, the magnificent form and structure of the inner Palaces, with all the rest of the particulars before recited, that a man might very well conclude them to be one and the same, adding withal that such an immense, and unparalleld a work, as the great Cham's Palace called Xaindu, must needs require more hands and a longer time, than the great Chams (considering their continual wars, and little intervals of leisure) could bestow upon it. But their foure head-proofs, which seem indeed to be the strongest, they derive first from the Testimony of Benedicta Goes above mentioned, who without taking notice of any such Country as Cathay, in so long a journey, telleth us that at Ciales a City of the Kingdom of Cascar, and not far from China, he was first informed that Cathay and China were the same. 2ly. From the Testimony of an old Mahometan Pilgrim, who returning from Meccha by Labor (the Royal Seat and City of the great Mongul) affirmed there that he had lived long in Cambalu, the chief City of Cathay, which Kingdom had in it one thousand and fifty Cities, the King thereof being a very mighty Prince, and having a strength of 400 Elephants brought thither from Malaca and Pegu, and that much Merchandize was brought into that Country by Sea: which if it be not meant of China (to which the story may agree in all particulars) must needs be one of the loudest lies that ever came from the mouth of a Mahometan, or a Pilgrim either; our Geographers finding very few Cities or Towns of note in Cathay specially so called, no access thither by Sea for any Merchandize, nor any way to bring those Elephants from Pegu and Malaca, which the Pilgrim dreamt of. 3ly. A clearer Testimony of some other Mahometans repairing to Pequin every fifth year, either as Merchants or Embassadours, or as both together; by whom the Jesuites there living were informed, that in the Dominions of the Persian, and the great Mongul, from whence they came, the Kingdom of China was called by no other name, than by that of Cathay, they knowing no other Country of that name, but China only. And 4ly. from the asseverance of Pantoja, another Jesuite; who in his Letters dated from Pequin much blamed our ordinary Maps for placing Cathay next to China, whereas (saith he) China or Sinai is Cathay, as this Pequin where we now are is the City of Cambalu; which two last evidences coming from the Pen of one who had lived many years in China; and not conducing any way to the advancement of the Catholick cause, must needs be thought to carry some great credit and authority with them.

These reasons if they be of force and moment to the point in hand, we must then act Penelope's part, unravelling all the Web which before was woven, Atque iterum in lanas omne redibit opus, in the Poet's Language; which that we may the better do, and with as little defacements to the whole piece as possibly we can, I shall thus proceed. First then it is to be conceived that Cathay specially so called, was an aggregate body, containing many several Kingdoms, and distinct Estates, though Homagers to the Kings of Cathay, or dependants on them: as anciently in the Realm of France besides the Kings of France themselves, there was a King of Burgundy, a King of Metz, a King of Soissons, a King of Orleans; and after that a Duke of Normandy, a Duke of Bretagne, a Duke of Aquitain, and Earl of Champagne, and Earl of Tholouse, all absolute and uncontroulable in their own Estates. And then the Kingdom of Tanguth, which we placed in the Southern parts of Altay, must be made one of the Kingdoms of Cathay; and Demercan, whom we ranked in the Catalogue of the Chams of Tartary, must be brought a peg lower, and looked on as a King of Tanguth only, and no more than so. 2ly. It must be taken for granted, that the Tartars having conquered the Realm of Cathay, and afterwards, by the help of that people, subdued China also, caused all the Northern parts of China to be called Cathay, as being in the same Latitude and parallels with it, and much of the same nature and complexion, both for Soyl and Air; giving unto the Southern parts (which was the true and proper Country of the Sinæ) the name of Mangi, transferred afterwards by some Authors to the Country generally: and having thus extended the name and Territory of Cathay, the first foundation of their greatness, they fixed their Regal Seat in the City of Pequin, which by a new Tartarian name (but of the same sense and signification) was from thence called Cambalu. Thus in the first place the French Kings of the Caroline Family, communicated the name of France (East France it was most commonly called) to the greatest part of Germany, then conquered by them; the Castilians of Spain extended the name of Castile on every side, as they gat ground upon the Moors, till it became the largest Province of any one name in all that Continent; and Roger Earl of Sicily, having conquered the Eastern parts of Italy (which now make up the Kingdom of Naples) commanded it to be called the further Sicily, and himself to be crowned King of both, by the name of King of both the Sicilies. And in the second place, the Dukes of Zweibrucken in high Germany are by the French called Dukes De Deux-ponts, by the late Latine Writers Duces Bipontani, all in the same sense and signification; the Town of Sbertzogen Bosch is by the French called Bois le Duc, by the Latine Writers, Sylva Ducis; and here at home the Military Towns or Stations of *Lectoduru*m, Colonia, Præsidium, ad Lapidem, and Portus Magnus, were turned by the conquering Saxons (the former significations being still retained) into Bedford, Colchester, Warwick, Stoneham, and Portzmuch, commonly now called Portsmouth; Castrum Alatum into Edenburg by the Picts or unconquered Britains. 3ly. We may take it for a truth unquestioned, that Hombu having expulsed the Tartars out of Mangi, or the Southern parts, and fixed his Royal Seat at Nanquin, on the South side of the River Kiang (though paying both fine and tribute to victorious Tamerlane) did afterwards on Tamerlane's engagements beyond the Mountains, and the cantonizing of that great Empire amongst his children, expell them out of the North parts also; his Successours thereupon removing the Court to Pequin (from henceforth known again by its true, proper, and Chinian name) the better to attend the motion of that dangerous Enemy. Jerusalem, commanded to be called Elir by the Emperour Adrian, and London named Augusta Trinobantum by some other of the Roman Emperours; returned to their old names names again, as ſoon as that authority failed which impoſed the new. And 4^ly. as from this time forwards the Northern parts of China might ſtill retain the name of Cathay, and being moſt traded by the Perſian and Indian Merchants, might be beſt known by that name in their ſeveral Countries: ſo by dividing this great Empire into ſo many parts, removing the Imperial Seat to Samercand, on the other ſide of the Mountains, erecting many new Eſtates out of the ancient Prefectures, and Governments of Cathay it ſelf, and parcelling the remainder of it between the Kings of Tanguth, Caſcar, and ſuch other Princes of the Tartars, as were not wanting to themſelves in thoſe opportunities, the true Cathay might loſe that name by little and little, which formerly it had communicated to thoſe parts of China. Thus the Burgundian, Lombards, Vandals, Hungars, loſt thoſe names at home, in their ancient and native habitations, which ſtill remain unto thoſe Countries that were conquered by them. Theſe reaſons and conſiderations I willingly ſubmit to the Reader's Judgment, being my ſelf ſo great a Sceptick in this point that I dare determine nothing poſitively on either ſide. It is enough that I have layed the cauſe open without partiality, or byaſſing on either hand, before the Jurors; let them give up their verdict in it as they like the evidence.

OF INDIA.

INDIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Oriental Ocean, and ſome part of China, or as ſome others ſay, with a great Country called Mauge (not much known unto us of Europe) interjected betwixt it and China; on the Weſt, with the Perſian Empire; on the North, with ſome branches of Mount Taurus, which divide it from Tartary; and on the South, with the Indian Ocean. So called from the River Indus, the neareſt of eſteem and note in all the Country, towards theſe parts of the world.

It is conceived to be the largeſt Country, of any one name in the world, except China and Tartaria; affirmed by Pomponius Mela, to be of ſuch a great extent on the Sea-coaſts of it, that it was as much as a Ship could ſail in 40 days. Extended from 106, to 159 degrees of Longitude; and from the Æquator to the 44^th. degree of Northern Latitude. By which accompt it lieth from the beginning of the firſt, to the end of the ſixth Clime: the longeſt Summers-day in the Southern parts being 12 hours only, and in the parts moſt North, 15 hours and an half.

Concerning the monſtrous Fables which the Ages foregoing have delivered to us of this Country, give me leave to ſay, that as the Poets uſed of old to fill up the times of which they were ignorant, with ſtrange Fictions, and prodigious Metamorphoſes; or as our modern Geographers, in the Maps of the World, fill up thoſe unknown parts thereof, of which they can give us no certain deſcription, with ſtrange Pictures and uncouth ſhapes of beaſts and trees; ſo alſo the Writers in former Ages have filled the more remote Countries, of which they knew little, with ſuch impoſſible and incredible relations. Hence there have been attributed to this India, the Fables of men with dogs heads, of men with one leg only, yet of great ſwiftneſs; of ſuch as live by ſent; of men that had but one eye, and that in their foreheads; and of others, whoſe ears did reach unto the ground. It is reported alſo that this people by eating a Dragon's heart and liver, attain to the underſtanding of the languages of beaſts; that they can make themſelves, when they liſt, inviſible; that they have two tubs, whereof the one opened yields wind, the other rain, and the like. But theſe relations, and the reſt of this ſtrain, I doubt not but the underſtanding Reader knoweth how to judge of, and what to believe. For my part I am of the ſame mind with Curtius, Plura equidem tranſcribo quàm credo; nec enim affirmare auſus ſum quæ dubito, nec ſubducere ſuſtineo quæ accepi: I may perhaps relate ſome things which I do not credit, but ſhall not let them paſs without ſome cenſure; that ſo I neither may impoſe any thing on the Reader's belief, nor defraud him of any thing conducible to his contentation.

The Country (to report no more of it than it doth deſerve) enjoyeth an exact temperature of the air, two Summers, (or one as long as two) and a double encreaſe; bleſt with all things which are either neceſſary to the life of man, or of convenience and delight; particularly with Mines of Gold and Silver, and with precious Stones; with ſpices of all ſorts, and Civets; with the beſt medicinable Drugs; Metals of all kinds, except Copper and Lead; abundance of all ſorts of Cattel, except Horſes. Somewhat defective alſo in Wheat and Vines, that ſo this Country might be beholding unto others, as well as others to this. Famed alſo for abundance of Camels, Apes, Dragons, Serpents, Rhinocerots, Elephants. Theſe laſt more ſavouring of reaſon and humane ingenuity, or elſe more tractable and docile, than any brute creature whatſoever. Of this we have a fair inſtance in the Story of the Acts of Alexander. the Elephant which King Porus ſate on, finding his Maſter ſtrong and luſty, ruſhed boldly into the thickeſt of the Enemies Army: but when he once perceived him to be faint and weary, he withdrew himſelf out of the Battel, kneeled down, and into his Trunk received all the Arrows which were directed at his Maſter. The greatneſs of the Creature makes it yet more admirable, that either he ſhould have ſoul enough of his own, to actuate ſo vaſt a body; or being of ſuch ſtrength and bigneſs, ſhould ſubmit himſelf to the inſtructions of another: ſome of theſe Indian Elephants, as Ælianus hath affirmed, being nine Cubits high, and as many long; and in breadth or thickneſs about five Cubits. Nor doth the Sea afford leſs plenty or variety, than we find on ſhore: yielding abundance of the richeſt and faireſt Pearls, huge ſholes of fiſh, and amongſt them the Whale or great Leviathan; exceeding the proportion of that Land monſter the Elephant. For though the ordinary dimenſion of the Whale be but 36

Cubits

Cubits in length, and eight in thickneſs: yet Nearchus in Arianus is ſaid to have meaſured one, in theſe Indian Seas, which was of the length of 50 Cubits, and of breadth proportionable: not to ſay any thing of that incredible report of Pliny, who ſpeaketh of ſome Indian Whales, which were nine hundred and threeſcore Foot, or four Acres long.

The people are of five ſorts, and as many Religions; that is to ſay the Natural Indians, derived from the Original Inhabitants of it. 2ly. Moors, or Arabians, who more than two hundred years ago, poſſeſſed themſelves of ſome Sea-Towns, driving the Natives up higher into the Country. 3ly. Jews, ſcattered and diſperſed (as in other places) into all parts of it. 4ly. Tartars; in thoſe parts and Provinces which are under the Great Mongul. And 5ly. Portuguez, who have many Colonies and Factories in the Ports and Iſlands, but brag as if they had made a conqueſt of all the Country. Which notwithſtanding, conſidering that the Natural Indians are by far the greateſt number, we muſt relate to them only in the Character which is made of this people. Affirmed to be tall of ſtature, ſtrong of body, and of complexion inclining to that of the Negroes: of manners civil and ingenuous; free from fraud in their dealings, and exact keepers of their words. The common ſort but meanly clad, for the moſt part naked, content with no more covering than to hide their ſhame. But thoſe of greater Eſtates and Fortunes (as they have amongſt them many ancient and Noble Families) obſerve a Majeſty in both Sexes, both in their Attendants and Apparel; ſweetning the laſt with Oyls, and Perfumes, and adorning themſelves with Jewels, Pearls, and other Ornaments befitting. They eat no fleſh, but live on Barly, Rice, Milk, Hony, and other things without life.

The Women not of much fairer complexion than the men, yet of lovely countenances, wear their hair long and looſe, but covered with a thin Veil of Calicut Lawn. Their ears hung with many rings, ſo great and heavy, that they are torn, and ſtretched to much diſproportion; their noſes alſo ringed, and behung with Jewels according to their eſtate and quality. Servilely obſequious to their husbands, whoſe affections they divide amongſt them without jar or jealouſie: the men allowed here, as in all the Eaſt, the uſe of many wives, whom they buy of their Parents for a yoke of Oxen; and may marry as often as they liſt. In which they have too great a priviledg above the women, who after the deceaſe of their common huſband, do either burn in the ſame flame with him, or elſe are forced to doom themſelves to perpetual Widow-hood. But of this we may ſpeak more hereafter, when we come to the particulars.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt planted in theſe Countries by St. Thomas, from whom the remainders of Chriſtianity take denomination; and unto whom the Records and Monuments of that Church do aſcribe their converſion. For in one of their Breviaries written in the Chaldæan Tongue, and tranſlated into Latine by Father John Maria Campanin a Jeſuite, we find it thus, Per D. Thomam evanuit error Idololatriæ ab Indis, &c. i.e. By St. Thomas the errors of Idolatry vaniſhed out of the Indies; by St. Thomas, they received the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Adoption of Sons; by St. Thomas, they believed and confeſſed the Father, the Son, and Holy Ghoſt; by St. Thomas, they kept the faith received of one God; And finally, by St. Thomas, the ſplendour of ſaving Doctrine did appear to all India. His body, as they ſay, intombed in the City of Maliapar, upon the Coaſt of Choromandel; the truth of which tradition I diſpute not here. But this Plantation of the Goſpel by the hand of St. Thomas was not univerſal over all the Country, but in ſome parts and Provinces only: or elſe was forced to give ground a while to prevailing Heatheniſm. For in the Reign of Conſtantine, we read how the Indians living on the further-ſide of the River Ganges (for ſo I underſtand the Indi interiores of my Author) were converted to the Faith by the Miniſtery of one Frumentius, of the City of Tyre; who having ſpent the greateſt part of his time amongſt them, was employed in that ſervice, and conſecrated the firſt Biſhop (for thoſe Churches) by the great Athanaſius of Alexandria. But being the foundation of this building was laid by St. Thomas, the remainder of Chriſtians here being, aſcribe the whole work to him; called therefore Chriſtians of St. Thomas. Governed originally by their own Biſhops, ſubordinate to an Archbiſhop of their own alſo, reſiding at Guagamale fifteen miles from Cochin; one of the chief Cities of this Country; who for a long time acknowledged obedience to the Patriarch of Muſal, by the name of the Patriarch of Babylon, as by theſe Chriſtians of India he is ſtill termed. The number of the Chriſtians computed at 15 or 16 thouſand Families; or at 70000 perſons in the accompt of others; inhabiting for the moſt part in that large tract of ground, which beginning at the outlets of Indus and Ganges, ſtretcheth unto the Cape or Promontory called Cape Comari. The Points wherein they differed from the Church of Rome, 1 Their adminiſtring the Sacrament of the Euchariſt in bread ſeaſoned with ſalt; 2 Adminiſtring in both kinds, but uſing inſtead of Wine (which is ſcarce, or not at all, to be had in this Country) the juyce of Raſins ſoftned in water over night, and ſo preſſed forth; 3 Not baptizing Children untill 40 days old, except it be in danger of death; 4 Permitting no Images in their Churches, but that of the Croſs; 5 Allowing one marriage to their Prieſts, but debarring the ſecond; 6 In painting God with three heads on one body, to denote the Trinity; 7 Denying the Uſe of extreme Unction; And 8 not acknowledging the Pope's Supremacy; but beſides theſe remainders of thoſe ancient Chriſtians, there are ſome others now of late of a new Plantation, by the pains and travel of the Jeſuites, though not with ſuch ſucceſs here, as they found in China: many of the Inhabitants, partly by the diligence of the Arabians, and partly by the power of the great Mongul, having embraced Mahometaniſm; and being conſequently leſs inclinable to admit the Goſpel, than when they were in the condition of their natural Gentiliſm. Yet have they made ſuch good progreſs in it, that Echebar the Mongul, not only founded a fair Church for the uſe of the Chriſtians in the City of Agra (the Regal City of that Empire) but committed to the care of the Jeſuites the Education of two Princes of the Regal Family. And poſſibly they might have made a great increaſe of Chriſtians before this time, had they not been oppoſed therein by Sultan Curroon, a bitter Enemy to their proceeding, in the Reign of his Father, and no great favourer of them ſince. Inſomuch that hearing a Jeſuite, called Franciſco Carfi, report unto his Father how miraculouſly a wooden Croſs of his had eſcaped the fire, he was very urgent with his Father to have a great fire preſently made, and the ſame Croſs to be thrown into it, upon theſe conditions, that if the Croſs conſumed not, his Father and himſelf would become Chriſtians; but if it did, the Jeſuite ſhould be burned in the ſame fire with it. A fiery trial which the poor Jeſuite had much ado to put off, and preſerve his credit. Howſoever by their practicing amongſt the old Chriſtians they have gained one point of very great conſequence and importance to the Church of Rome. For in the year 1599. by the ſolicitation of the Jeſuites and others, the Indian Chriſtians renounced their obedience to the Patriarch of Muſal, and ſubmitted their Churches Churches to the Jurisdiction of the Pope of Rome, in a National Synod held at Liamper, not far from Maliapar, by the Archbishop of Goa (the Primate of the Portugals in those parts) not only rejecting all opinions contrary to the Romish Tenets, but delivering all their Books and Liturgies to be altered and reformed by the said Archbishop, according to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Rome, which was done accordingly.

But these comparatively to the rest, come not to an handful; the main body of the People wallowing in their Gentilism; and still retaining many of those ancient Customs, which they used of old: as viz. 1 Not knowing their Wives after they have borne them two children: 2 Nor keeping them, if after five years cohabitation they can raise no issue by them, but then exchanging them for others: Rewarding none for any military exploit, if they bring not with them in their hands the head of an enemy: 4 Killing their Friends, before they were withered or decayed by Age, or sickness. To these they have since added others of a later invention, perhaps more barbarous; of which we may have opportunity to speak anon. Their Priests or learned men, in the time of old were called Brachmanes from one Brachman, the prescriber of their Rites and Laws, by whom instructed in the Rudiments of their Philosophy; some of which, from their going naked, had the name of Gymnosophists; who were to them as the Chaldæi to the Assyrians; the Magi to the Persians; and the Druides, to the antient Britains. Had in great Reverence by the People, and living for the most part an austere and solitary life, in Caves, and Desarts; feeding on herbs, poorly apparelled, and for a time abstaining from all carnal pleasures; but that time past, they may indulge themselves more liberty, and admit the company of women. Others of them live together with the common people, as being their ordinary Priests. Of these, the great Alexander, when he was in this Country surprized ten; one of them called by the name of Calanus, with whom he had a great deal of communication: propounding to him many strange questions, and receiving back to many of them, (as himself confessed) some not unsatisfying though strange, answers. To these Gymnosophists, or Brachmans, the Bramines do now succeed, both in place and authority; but differ from them most extremely in point of learning, and the civilities of their lives: these Bramines being the most impure, libidinous, and sensual beasts in all the Country; priviledged with the first nights lodging of every Bride, which when sated with their filthy lust, they sell, or traffick with, to strangers, serving as Stallions to old men, and as Panders to young; so fleshed in wickedness, and ignorant of all good Letters, that they have nothing of a man but the voice and shape. Mahometanism is also entertained in a great part of the Country, first brought in by the Tartars, and neighbouring Persians, unto whom conterminous; but much increased by the victories of the Great Mongul: who being originally a Tartar, and of that Religion, hath caused it to be propagated in most parts of his large dominions.

Mountains of most note in it, besides Caucasus, and some other of the branches of Taurus, or Ararat, common to this, and the Tartarian and Persian Empires, 1 Sardonix, full of Mines of those precious Stones which are called after the name of the Mountain. 2 Vindius, 3 Bittigo, 4 Adisathrus. 5 Those called Apocopi, and 6 Those named Orodii. And on the further side of Ganges. 7 Bepyrrhus. 8 Meanderus. 9 Those called Damisi, and 10 Semanthinus; part of this last extending also unto China. All of them very fruitful in the production of Mines, and Rivers, as will appear by looking over the particulars when we come unto them.

But the Mountain of chief note of all, is that which Ptolomy called Bittigo, and is now named Gates; the Southern part of the great Mountain Imaus spoken of before: extended from Mount Caucasus, where it crosseth the Taurus in right Angles, to Cape Comari, a known Promontory of Industan, or the hither India (which it divideth into East and West) for the space of 400 leagues and upwards. Conceived by Postellus, a Learned Writer, to be that Mount Sephar, mention whereof is made in the tenth of Genesis, where it is said to be the utmost Eastern limit of the Sons of Joktan, Gen. 10. 30. With probability enough, for ought I can see; the Sons of Joktan being settled in these parts of India, and the Provinces of the Persian Empire which lie nearest to them. And so far Stephanus doth concur with Postell, as to affirme of this Mount Sephar, that it is Mons Indiæ, an Indian Mountain: both of them grounding on St. Hierom, who expressly saith, Sophera mons Orientis in India, juxta quam habitaverunt filii Joctan, i. e. That Sephar, or Sopher, is the name of a Mountain of the East in India; near to which dwelt the Sons of Joktan. More probably, without doubt, than that we should transfer it into America, as I see some do; and make it there to be the great Mountain of the Andes, which runneth the whole length of Peru, from one end to the other, and thence, as some will have it, to the Streights of Magellan. Which should we grant, we must not look for Joktan, or the Sons of Joktan, either in Arabia Fœlix, where Bochartus placeth them; nor in the Eastern parts of Asia, where most probably they may be found; but we must cross the vast Oriental Ocean, and look for them in a place where they never were; besides, that granting this for true, we must allow America to have been known in the time of Moses, which no Author that I ever met with, did so much as dream of.

Rivers of most note are, 1 Indus, which ariseth out of that part of Taurus, which the Ancients called Paropamisus, the Moderns, Naugrocot; and having received into it 19 other Rivers, after a course of 900 miles, falleth into the Ocean at seven Mouths, that is to say, 1 Sagappa, being the most Western: 2 Sinthum, 3 Anreum, 4 Cariphi, 5 Sappara, 6 Sabalassa, 7 Lonibare, the most Eastward. But five of these being choaked with Sands, or drawn into the neighbouring Channels, there now remains but only two. A River famous in Records and ancient Stories, for giving name unto the Country, and that so celebrated Voyage of Alexander, who sailed down it towards the Indian Ocean: the voyage holding above five months, of which there is said to have passed no day wherein he sailed not 15 miles, or 600 Furlongs. 2 Ganges which riseth, as some say, from the Mountain Imaus, (or rather from that part of Taurus, where Imaus falleth right upon it,) and falling headlong down the Rocks, is first collected into a Lake, or Pool (supposed by others for the fountain and original of it) whence with a gentler pace it passeth towards the Ocean; taking in by the way, as is said by Pliny, 30 navigable Rivers. In the narrowest place of eight miles breadth, in the broadest 20, seldom so shallow but that the depth thereof is 100 foot, or 20 Geometrical paces. Parted into five great Channels it falleth at last into the Sea; the first of which most towards the West, is called Cambysum, 2 Magnum, 3 Camberychum, 4 Pseudostomum, and 5 that which lieth furthest towards the East, called Antiboli. This River erroneously supposed to be that Pison which watered Paradise: and to encrease the reputation of the error, we find it countenanced by Josephus, and other no less eminent names; and also backed by some traditions of the people which inhabit near it. By whom it is affirmed, that one of the Bengalan Kings sent men up the River, who came at last to a pleasant place, blest with a fragrant Earth, sweet air, and quiet waters; beyond which they could go no further. The truth and reality whereof doth so possess them, that at the mouth of this River called Gangasagie, such as are weary of this world use to cast themselves into the Current, and are presently devoured by a fish, called Sea-dogs, by whom they hope to find a quick passage to Paradise. The occasion of which error among the Ancients, proceeded from those words of the Scripture, in which it is affirmed of Pison, that it compassed the land of Havilah: which granting that it did, inferreth not that either this River must be Pison, or that India is intended by that Havilah. For besides Havilah the Son of Joktan, planted in some part of India, there was another Havilah the Son of Chus, settled in the Land of Havilah or Chusiana, not far from Babylon: this last indeed watered by the River Pison, and the first by Ganges; too far a sunder, and divided by too many Nations, to be taken or mistaken one for another. But not less famous, because none of those which neighboured the Garden of Eden, perhaps of greater fame than any of those which did. For to this River do the superstitious Indians make their solemn Pilgrimages, vainly conceiving that they shall be sure of their Eternity, if at the time of their death they may drink of this water. To the overflowings of this River do the people ascribe the fertility of the Countries adjoyning, as the Ægyptians do to Nilus. And finally, by this River was the whole Country anciently, and at this present is, divided into two main parts, (each subdivided into many particular provinces) viz. 1 India intra Gangem, 2 India extra Gangem. Of each of which we will first take a brief survey, with reference to the state and story of it in preceding times; and then consider them with reference to the present Age.

1. INDIA INTRA GANGEM.

INDIA INTRA GANGEM is bounded on the East, with the River Ganges, till the fall thereof into the Sea; and after that with that large and spacious Bay, called anciently Sinus Gangeticus, now the Gulf of Bengala; on the West, with Paropamisus, Arachosia, Gedrosia, Provinces of the Persian Empire; and part of the Arabian Seas; on the North, where it is broadest, with Mount Taurus, branched into Paropamisus, Caucasus, and other parts: and on the South, where it endeth in a sharp point or Promontory, by Ptolomy called Commaria extrema, but now Cape Commari, with the Indian Ocean. So named from being situate on this side of Ganges; by the Moderns, Indostan.

The Country of the same nature formerly, as it is at the present, not altered but by changing of the Channels of Indus; which being shifted by an Earthquake, turned a great part of the once neighbouring Region to a sandy Desart: Indus (as many other of the Indian Rivers) fatning and enriching all the Land which it overfloweth. The people of those elder times, much like the Scythians, especially in their course of life, living without Cities, Temples, Houses, in their movable Tents; their food the bark of a tree, called Tala, which served for bread; and the flesh of Bucks, Does, and other Venison, with the skins whereof they made their Garments. All of them Free-men, but no Slaves to be found amongst them. Less warlike than the Scythians, but as great contemners of death as they; the very women contending eagerly amongst themselves, which should accompany their Husband (one Husband having many Wives) to his Funeral Pile. Of which thus St. Hierom, He igitur contendunt de amore viri, & ambitio summa certantium est ac testimonium castitatis, dignum morte censeri. A Custom still retained amongst them; of which somewhat hath been said already, and more is to be said in another place.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1 Hydaspes, by Ptolomy (and by him only) called Bidaspes, one of the furthest bounds of Alexander's Conquests. 2 Suastus, 3 Coa, 4 Acesines, very memorable in the Gests of Alexander. 5 Sandabilis, 6 Zaradrus: all coming from the Northern Mountains, and all falling (Hydaspes with three other Rivers first received into it) into the great bed of Indus. 7 Diamna, 8 Sorabus, and 9 Soa, falling from the like Northern Mountains, into the main Channel of Ganges. 10 Naragonas, issuing from Mount Vindius. 11 Baris, from Bittigo. 12 Chaberis, from Adisathris. 13 Tindis, from the hill called Vxentius: and 14 Tina, from the Orodian Mountains, with many others of less note. By what names called at the present, I determine not; nor find I any which have dared to adventure on it. But doubtless to be found in 1 Catamul, 2 Cebcha, 3 Ray, 4 Chenao, 5 Rebeth, all Tributaries unto Indus, which is now called Schind. 6 Taphi, 7 Harunda, 8 Chambel, 9 Jamena, which empty their waters into Ganges; the which, with such others of the principal Rivers as are now known by name to us, shall occasionally be touched on in that which followeth. Besides which Rivers, here is a famous Lake mentioned in the Gests of Alexander, (but the name occurreth not) not much above a mile in circuit, but exceeding pleasant, shaded on every side with woods; memorable for the great refreshment which it gave to Alexander's Army, when even pined with thirst.

The Country so exceeding populous in the time of Ptolomy, that it affordeth him the names of more noted Cities, than any one Country in the world. Of which 1 Cotiara 2 Nigama, 3 Sageda, 4 Rarassa, 5 Masopelle, and 6 Pityndra are honoured with the name of Metropoles; as being the head-Cities of their several and respective Nations. 7 Ozene, 8 Sora, 9 Palibothra, 10 Gange, 11 Batana, 12 Hippocura, 13 Carara, 14 Modura, 15 Orthura, and 16 Malanga, mentioned as the Royal Seats of several Princes, by the name of Regiæ. 17 Bardaxema, 18 Tyndis, 19 Argari, 20 Cunula, 21 Chaberis, on the River so called. 22 Palura, on the shores of the Gulf of Bengala, and 23 Palura, on the banks of Cambysum. 24 Tilegramocum, marked out above the rest with the name of Civitates, (Cities) and therefore probably of more note than others not so distinguished. And finally, 25 Manogsassum, 26 Simylla, near a Promontory of the same name, 27 Nitra, 28 Maziris, 29 Elanchorum, 30 Colchi, 31 Salur, 32 Sobura, 33 Poduca, 34 Melange, 35 Maliarpha, 36 Contacissyla, 37 Nosygue, 38 Barygaza, specified as the most noted and celebrious Empories; besides 39 Canthymus, 40 Stathmus, (and 41 a Road opposite to Chrysas) two commodious Stations or Roads for shipping. The names and situation of these places is the most we find of them, which makes me pass them over with a bare recital, only to shew how populous and well planted this Country was in the time of my Author.

Of less name, but of more note in the course of story, 1 Nysa, built by Bacchus at the time of his Indian Conquest, and called thus by the name of his Nurse, to preserve her memory, his Mother dying in Child-birth of him. Replenished by him with his sick and wounded Souldiers, whose Posterity continued here till the time of Alexander, who spared the City and the people for his love to Bacchus, who was therein worshipped in a Temple of his own foundation, planted about with Bays, Vines, and Ivy, whose shady branches covered the roof of it. In the midst thereof an Image, with all the Instruments belonging to a plentiful Vintage, all of Gold or Silver.

Silver. 2 Taxilla, or Taxiala, as Ptolomy calleth it, ſeated betwixt Indus and Hydaſpes, in the Region called Verſa; and built moſt probably by Taxiles, a puiſſant King of India, in the time of Alexander. Adorned in elder times with a Temple dedicated to the Sun, and therein with an Ivory Image of Ajax, a Golden Statue of Alexander, and the portraiture of King Porus made in Copper. The floor of Moſaical work pouldred with Pearls, the Walls of red Marble interlayed with Gold, which made it ſhine a far off, like a flaſh of lightning. 3 Nagara, called alſo Dionyſiopolis, in memory of Bacchus, who was alſo called Dionyſius, and Liber Pater. 4 Adorne, by Diodorus called Aornos, and Avernus by Strabo; ſo ſtrongly ſeated on a rock, that Hercules was not able to force it: which made Alexander, imitating, and therein out-going the Acts of Hercules, aſſault it with the greater force, and at laſt he carryed it. 5 Bucephala, built by Alexander on the banks of Hydaſpes, and named thus in memory of Bucephalus, his beloved horſe; which had ſerved him in all the courſe of his Fortunes, and dyed hereabouts, being then thirty years old. 6 Pireta, another of his foundations, ſo called by the name of his Dog whom he dearly loved. 7 Alexandria, on the banks of Indus, another of his foundations alſo. 8 Mazage, on the Weſt of Indus, one of the firſt Towns of India, taken by the Macedonians, though garriſoned within, and invironed without by an Hoſt of 300000 men: but yielded after ſome reſiſtance, with the uſe of her own body, by Cleophe the Queen thereof, who received it back with other favours, from the hands of the Conquerour. 9 Nora, a ſtrong City on the ſame ſide of Indus, taken by Polyſperchon, one of his Commanders. 10 Samus, on the banks of the ſame River, taken by Alexander in the courſe of his Navigation down that Sea of Waters; the Inhabitants whereof fought againſt him with poyſoned Arrows, with one of which Ptolomy, afterward King of Ægypt, was dangerouſly wounded, and cured with an herb which Alexander dreamt he had ſeen in the mouth of a Serpent. 11 Oxydrace, the chief City of the Oxydracans; at the Siege whereof Alexander is ſaid to be the firſt that ſcaled the Walls, and the laſt that could do ſo, the Ladder breaking as ſoon as he was at the top. Standing thus alone as a mark to all their Darts, he was by the Souldiers deſired to leap down amongſt them; he in a daring bravado leaped into the Town among his Enemies: where it was not only his good hap to light upon his feet, but to have an old Tree at his back to defend him behind. In this poſture he is ſaid to have maintained the fight a long time, againſt all the Souldiers of the Town; killing two of them with his own hands, and by that example teaching the reſt to be more mannerly; till being wearyed, and dangerouſly wounded, he was forced to leave his feet, and commit the weight of his body to his knees. In this caſe Leonatus, Peuceſtes, and ſome other of his Captains, came to aſſiſt him; who defended their dying Maſter, till the whole Army entred the Town, and put all the people to the ſword, in revenge of their King, whoſe life they had little hope to enjoy: though he with much danger did afterward recover. For my part I give little or no credence to this ſtory, ranging it in the ſame Catalogue of truth with the Adventures of Donzel del Phœbo, Roſicleer, Belianis, Amadis, and the reſt of the rabble of Knights Errant. Neither is this the firſt time that Curtius hath diſgraced the ſoundneſs of Alexander's Judgment, and the truth of his Actions, with the like idle and impoſſible Fables: though indeed in that particular, he ſaith that it was multo magis ad temeritatis quam ad gloriæ famam. And 12 Nicæa, built by Alexander on the banks of Aceſines, in memory of his many great and ſignal Victories. Not far from which, finding how unwilling his Souldiers were to paſs further Eaſt, he purpoſed to leave behind him ſome Monument of his great Exploits, and to make his fame immortal amongſt the Indians. And to that end he cauſed the form of his Camp to be enlarged, and the Cabbins to be made bigger than ſufficed for his men to lodge in; the Mangers to be ſet higher than his Horſes could reach; Armets and Bitts for Horſes of too great a ſize (made not for uſe, but oſtentation of his might) to be ſcattered up and down the Camp, for the ſavage people to wonder at in the times to come. By means whereof he got nothing amongſt knowing men, but a ſuſpicion that his Actions were intended leſs memorable, than they are reported to have been; ſince he ſo vainly laboured to have them thought greater, than indeed they were.

The old Inhabitants hereof, were the Indo-Scythæ, inhabiting on the North-Weſt of Indus, the Mazagæ, Sadam, Piratæ, Limyrices, Aii, the Soringi, Aruari, Oxydracæ, Malli, and Lambatæ, the Gandarides, or Gangarides, near the mouth of Ganges, the Caſpirei, under the ſhades of Mount Vindius. The Muſicani, Chatzirei, Polindæ, Phyllitæ, Bitigi, Chadramitiæ, Pezuari, Adiſanbri, Mandalæ, Drylphita, Sabaræ, Pandioni, with many others, to the number of 122. ſeveral Nations, if Megaſthenes be not out in his reckoning, too many and too impertinent to be muſtered here.

Originally deſcended from the Sons of Noah, before they left theſe Eaſtern parts to go towards the unfortunate Valley of Shinaar. We could not elſe have found this Countrey ſo full of people in the days of Semiramis, the Wife of Ninus: who leading an Army compounded of ſeveral Nations, to the number of four Millions and upwards (if Cteſias, and Diodorus Siculus, who reports it from him, be of any credit; but certainly the greateſt Army that ever was raiſed) was encountered by Staurobates, a King of India, with greater force made up of natural Indians only; by whom ſhe was vanquiſhed and ſlain. A matter beyond all belief, though neither Army could make up a fourth part of that number, if the Indians had been no other than ſome one of thoſe Colonies, which were ſent from BABEL; or rather a ſecond or third Swarm of thoſe former Colonies, which went thence under the command of the firſt Adventurers, For that any of the firſt Adventurers, who were preſent at the building of the Tower of BABEL, travelled ſo far Eaſt, is not affirmed by any who have laboured in the ſearch of their Plantations. So that I take it for a matter undeniable, that the Plantation of India preceded the attempt of BABEL; though by whom made, there is nothing to be ſaid for certain: Yet if I might have liberty to expreſs my own conceptions, I am inclinable to believe that all the Eaſtern parts of Perſia, with China, and both the Indiaes were peopled by ſuch of the Sons of Sem, as went not with the reſt to the valley of Shinaar. For otherwiſe I can ſee no reaſon, that the Poſterity of Japhet ſhould plant the greateſt part of the Leſſer Aſia, and the whole Continent of Europe, with the Iſles thereof; and that the Sons of Cham ſhould ſpread themſelves over Babylonia, Paleſtina, the three Arabiaes, and the whole continent of Affrick: the Poſterity of Sem being ſhut up in a corner, the Greater Aſia, hardly ſo big as ſome one of the Provinces taken up by the other Adventurers. And therefore that I may allow to the Sons of Sem an equal Latitude, I think it not improbable to fix them in theſe Eaſtern Countreys; ſpreading themſelves this way as they grew in numbers, before the reſt of the Adventurers went to ſeek new fortunes at the Tower of BABEL. And being that the Countrey was large and wealthy, and might have room enough to ſpare for ſome ſecond comming (eſpecially deſcending from the ſame root with them) I doubt not but place here all the Sons of Joktan, Havilah, Chatſarmaveth, Saba, Abimail, who have left here ſome tract or monument of themſelves, as hath been ſhewn at large in our GENERAL PREFACE; and as concerning Ophir, ſhall be ſhewed hereafter. To proceed therefore to our Story, the next who made any invaſion on this Countrey, after that of Semiramis, was Bacchus, or Liber Pater, the Son of Jupiter and Semele, accompanied with Hercules Ægyptius, not much more fortunate than ſhe: the forces of Bacchus being defeated, and Hercules forced to throw away his Golden Shield. But what they could not do by Arms, they effected by Arts. Bacchus inſtructing them in the uſe of Wine, Oyl, Sacrifices, and the Art of Architecture, and drawing them into Towns and Cities; for that cauſe honoured as a GOD. To Hercules they aſcribe the Nation of the Pandioni, proceeding from a Daughter of his called PANDÆA: the memory of both preſerved in Statues and Pillars erected by them.

After this, unattempted till the time of Alexander, who having made a full Conqueſt of the Perſian Empire, invaded India with an Army of 120000 fighting men. Beginning with CLEOPHE, Queen of the Magazæ, a people of Indo-Scythia, he brought her to conformity, poſſeſſed himſelf both of her Perſon and Eſtate; on whom he begat a Son called Alexander, who is ſaid to have ſucceeded in her Dominions. Being paſſed over the River Indus, Taxiles (by ſome called Omphis) a prudent Prince, whoſe Kingdom is affirmed to be bigger than Ægypt, ſubmitted of his own accord: offering his ſervice and aſſiſtance to promote his Conqueſt, and preſenting him with a Crown of Gold, and 80 Talents of ready money. This King made welcom, but his money not ſo much as looked on; the Macedonian being ſo far from fingering of this Indian Gold, that he gave him a thouſand Talents of his own Treaſure. Encouraged by this Royal dealing, Abiſares, another puiſſant Prince of the oppoſite Faction unto Taxiles, ſubmitted alſo, and was as graciouſly received. Porus, whoſe Kingdom lay on the other ſide of the Hydaſpes, would not be ſo conquered; and therefore muſtereth up his Forces, and valiantly made good the banks of the River. But vanquiſhed at laſt, not without much difficulty, he was made a Priſoner to the Victor; who honouring the man for his brave reſiſtance, gave him his liberty and Kingdom, with a great enlargement. The Conquerour had a great deſire to go further Eaſt, but the Souldiers would not be perſwaded: ſufficiently taught by Porus, what they were to look for, if the Indians ſhould unite their Forces. Unable to prevail, he erected in the place twelve Altars, as high as Towers, where he obſerved many ſolemn Games and Sacrifices: and having ſacrificed to Hydaſpes, Indus, and Aceſines, he ſailed down Indus, towards the Southern Ocean; which ſeen at diſtance, he turned towards Gedroſia, and thence to Babylon, where he dyed.

After his death Eumenes raiſed ſome part of his Forces hence, but the Macedonians being plunged in a Civil War, one Andracottus ſtirred up the Indians to recover their freedoms, making himſelf at firſt their Captain, but at laſt their King. Poſſeſſed of all that had been conquered by the Greeks, he was encountered by Seleucus, who had then got the command of Aſia: againſt whom he brought an Army of 600000 fighting men. Frighted wherewith, Seleucus made peace with him, and contracted a ſolemn League betwixt them, continued with the interchange of friendly Offices amongſt their Poſterity; and more confirmed by an interview betwixt Antiochus the Great, and Saphragaſenus, one of the Succeſſors of Andracottus; by whom Antiochus was preſented with 150 Elephants, and the promiſe of ſome treaſure to be ſent after him. By the Poſterity of Andracottus was the Kingdom held, till the proſperity and full height of the ROMAN Empire. The power whereof though they rather knew by report than tryal, yet was it not amiſs to entertain a potent, though remote Seat, in terms of amity. Therefore they ſent Embaſſadours unto Auguſtus, who preſented him with a number of Tigers, (which Beaſts, ſaith Dion, till then, the Roman people had never ſeen) and which was the moſt pleaſing, a little Boy born without arms, who with his feet could bend a Bow, ſhoot, and play on wind-inſtruments, as exactly as others with their hands. Trajan the Emperour had a great deſire to ſee this Countrey, but was diverted from that purpoſe by matters of more neceſſary importance to the State of his Empire. Moved with the fame of Antoninus the Roman Emperour, they ſent a ſolemn Embaſſie unto him, making him Umpire in ſome Controverſies which they had with the Bactrians: from which Embaſſadours it is probable that Ptolomy the Geographer who then lived, might receive his informations of the Eſtate of this Countrey. The like they did to Julian the Apoſtate alſo, then ſetting forwards on his Expedition againſt the Perſians, deſiring his friendſhip and alliance. How it was with them in the time of Conſtantine and Juſtinian, hath been ſhewn already. After theſe times by little and little, Hiſtories have in a manner been ſilent concerning the affairs hereof; but for ſome conqueſts made on the parts next Perſia, by the Caliphs of Bagdat. For notwithſtanding that there was continual traffick from the Red Sea hither; and between the Perſians, Turkiſh, and Indian Merchants for Spices, and the other Commodities of this Region: yet were not theſe Merchants acquainted with the ſtate of the Countrey, becauſe they entred not into it; but were met by the Indian Merchants at Samarchand, being as it were the common Emporie. Neither did the Ægyptians at all enter into India, but were met by the Indians at Ormus, or ſome other Iſland: even as now the Chinois make ſome of the Philippine, the Staple of their Trade with the Spaniards, whom they licence not to come into the Continent among them. But our modern Travellers and Navigators have withdrawn this maſk of obſcurity, and ſhew us her lively portraiture in as lively colours. One of the firſt which brake the Ice, and gave us any certainty of their affairs, was Sir John Mandeville; accompted at his coming back for the greateſt Fabler in the World: ſo incredible ſeemed his reports of the magnificence of thoſe Kings, and the wealth of their Countreys, and the many rarities which he found amongſt them. But better thought of by our neighbours, he obtained a Monument in a Convent at Leige (where he ended the long courſe of his Life and Travels, 1372) the Friers of which keep ſome things of his, Comme pour honourable memoire de ſon excellence, for an honourable memorial of his Excellence. Many of his Relations ſince confirmed by the Portugals, who under the conduct of Vazques de Gama firſt diſcovered this Countrey, by the new way of the Cape of Good Hope, Anno 1499. or thereabouts. For ſo it hapned, that the Portugals having diſcovered all the Coaſts of Africk, as far as to Cape Verd, by the encouragement, and at the charge of Henry Duke of Viſea, one of the younger Sons of King John the firſt, began to think upon ſome way to the wealth of India, and getting into their own hands the rich trade of that Countrey. To which end it was firſt thought, that Pedro di Cannanilla, and Alphonſo de Pagua, ſhould make a journey into the Eaſt parts, to learn the certainty of the Spice trade, and make report of ſuch other Commodities as theſe Countreys yielded. Being come at laſt by long journeys to the City of Calicute, and having ſatisfied themſelves in the inquiry which they came about, they prepare for their return return to Portugal. Pagua dying in the Journey, and Cannanilla, though detained by the Habaſſine Emperour (commonly, but corruptly, called Preſter John) ſends home a full relation of his ſucceſſes; inflamed with which, King John the ſecond ſends out Bartholomew Diaz. Anno 1587. to find out a way into the Indies by the back of Africa: who having ſailed as far as the Cape of good Hope, without giving end to the Adventure, returned back to Portugal. Undertaken with better fortune 10 years after, at the command of King Emanuel, by Vaſquez de Gama, above mentioned; who doubling the Cape, and ſailing Northward, all along the ſhores of Africk, as far as the Kingdom of Melinde, received from the King thereof both Pilots and inſtructions to bring him to Calicute, where he found all true which Cannanilla had before reported. Full of good news at the end of 26 Months from his firſt ſetting out, he returns to Liſbone, received for the preſent with joy and triumph, and about two years after (that is to ſay 1502) furniſhed with 13 Ships and three Caravels, he ſets forward again, followed by Stephen de Gama the ſame year with 5 ſhips more, by which great ſtrength he made himſelf Maſter of ſome Ports; and by that means laid the foundation of that great Command, which the Portugals have attained unto in theſe Eaſtern Countreys. Seconded in this great enterpriſe by Ferdinando de Almeda, and Alphonſo de Albuquerque, and other noble Adventurers of the Realm of Portugal, as after them by ſuch of the European Nations as had the benefit and trade of the weſtern Ocean.

If it be asked, why the Caſtilians, or Spaniards, being ſtrong in ſhiping, bent not themſelves to the diſcovery of theſe wealthy Countreys; it may be anſwered, 1 That they were buſied at the ſame time in the diſcovery and conqueſt of the New World, which they looked on as a nearer, and no leſs profitable booty than this of India. 2 The Commodities of this Countrey, being brought home by the Portugals, were ſold to them at far cheaper rates, than they could have fetched them in their own bottoms. 3 And chiefly becauſe by the definitive ſentence of Pope Alexander the ſixth, both the Caſtilians, and the Portugals, were ſo limited in their Navigations, that the Caſtilians might not intermeddle in the Eaſtern, nor the Portugals in the diſcovery or Conqueſt of the Weſtern parts, beyond the bounds which he had ſet to thoſe ſeveral Nations before mentioned; and by ſome latter obſervations who have been informed, that in this part of India were no fewer than 47 Kingdoms, whereof ſome few have ſtill their own natural Kings, the reſt all ſubject to the power of the Great Mongul, contracted into a leſſer number by joyning many leſſer Territories into one Diviſion. We ſhall look on it as diſtributed into 15 Provinces. Some have reduced them unto five, but give us neither the bounds nor extent of any of them. And others in the deſcription of their travels, ramble up and down with ſuch uncertainties, (moſt of them being men of trades and ignorance) that though they tell us where they lodged, and what entertainments they did meet with, yet we ſhall hardly know by them (for I think they did not know themſelves) in what Province they were, or to what part the ſeveral Towns, thorow which they paſſed did of right belong. So that our paſſage thorow theſe Countreys (having ſuch blind guids to follow) will be full of difficulty, and not ſo ſatisfactory to the Reader as he might expect. Howſoever, I deſire him to bear me company, whilſt I take the beſt ſurvey I can of theſe 15 Provinces, to which the whole may be moſt handſomely reduced: that is to ſay, 1 Dulſinda, 2 Pengab, 3 Mandao, 4 Delly, 5 Agra, 6 Sanga, 7 Cambaia, 8 Decan, 9 Canara, 10 Malabar, 11 Narſinga, 12 Oriſſan, 13 Botanter, 14 Pantenam, and 15 Bengala.

1 DULSINDA.

DULSINDA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Indus; on the Weſt, with Paropamiſus, and Arachoſia, two Perſian Provinces, but for the moſt part under the command of the Great Mongul; on the North, with Caucaſus, by which parted from Tartary; on the South, with the Kingdom of Cambaia. So that it taketh up all the Northern parts of this Eſtate, which lye upon the Weſt of the River Indus; from which River called by the Natives Sinda, moſt probable it is that it took this name: and therefore I have written it with an s, Dulſinda and not Dulcinda with a c, as I ſee ſome do, but on no good reaſon, for any thing that I am able to underſtand.

The Countrey, by the reaſon of the Northern ſituation of it, more temperate, but leſs fruitful than the reſt of India. The Seat, in ancient times, of the Mazagæ and Indo-Scythæ, when ſubdued by Alexander. Made up at preſent, of many leſſer Kingdoms, and ſmaller Provinces, denominated, for the moſt part, from the principal Towns and Cities of them, as in other places.

Amongſt which thoſe of moſt eſteem, are 1 Caximir, Caſcimir, or Chaſmur, (for by all theſe names it is called) the chief of a Kingdom once, unto which it gave name, till ſubdued by Echebar the Mongul; who in a pleaſant Iſland, (in the midſt of a great and deep Lake, about three Leagues off the City) beſet round with Trees, built a Royal Palace: which he honoured ſometimes with his Court, removed hither from Labor, partly the better to aſſure this new conquered Kingdom; but principally becauſe his Palace at Labor, and therein an infinite deal of Treaſure, had but newly been conſumed by fire. The City it ſelf ſituate in the moſt healthy Countrey of all India, encompaſſed with high Mountains, covered for the moſt part of the year with ſnow, the reſt a delicate, goodly Plain, diverſified with Paſtures, Woods, Cornfields, Meadows, Parks, Gardens, and Rivers, even to admiration. The Air hereof, and of the Countrey round about, by reaſon of the Northern ſituation of it, and the ſnowy Mountains, very cool and temperate. The ſoil abundantly Productive of Wheat, Rice, and Vines; which laſt they plant at the foot of the Mulbery tree, which ſeemeth by this means to bear double fruits. Both Town and Kingdom ſubdued by Echebar, the Mongul, about the year 1597. their own diſſentions more conducing to that ſubjugation, than any viſible force which he brought before it. 2 Rorée, a Fort of the Monguls towards Paropamiſus; but bordering upon the Countrey of Multan, to which people it properly belongeth: Garriſoned not ſo much for fear of the Perſian, (for Paropamiſus, now called Cabal, is his ancient Patrimony,) but to preſerve the People from the ſpoil of Thieves, who always hang about the Mountains. 3 In the moſt Northern parts hereof, ſtood the Nagara of Ptolomy; miſtook by ſome for the modern Agra, of which more anon. 4 Seſtan, the chief City, as I take it, of the Kingdom of Rebat; ſituate on the Eaſt of Caximir, betwixt it and the Indus: in the ſame Latitude with that, but not of ſo temperate an air; the ſnowy Mountains much conducing to the temperature of the Realm of Caximir. 5 Multan, a great and ancient City, and the chief of a Kingdom, on the South of Caximir, or Chaſmur; and about three French Leagues from the banks of the River Indus. The ordinary thorow-fare of the Caravans in the way from Labor to Spahan, (the chief Seat of the Sophy, or King of Perſia) forced to abide there divers days, ſometimes ten or twelve to enrich the Town; which of it ſelf is of no great trading, nor otherwiſe able to ſubſiſt but by this, device; famed moſt eſpecially for many excellent Bows and Arrows made in it. The Bows made of Horn, excellently glewed and put together; the Arrows of ſmall Cains or Reeds, both of them ſet off by rich Paint and Varniſh. They which are made here being more neat and good than in any part of Eaſt India beſides. There is another Town or Kingdom of or near this name on the other ſide of the River Indus, of which we ſhall ſpeak more in its proper place. 6 Duckee, a Fort or Garriſon, ſituate in theSt reights of the Mountains to ſecure the Caravans, and protect other Paſſengers from the danger of Robbers, hovering in theſe Hill-Countreys, the out-parts of this Empire

2 PENGAB.

OPoſite to Dulſinda, on the Eaſtern ſide of the River Indus, but more inclining towards the South, lieth the Countrey, or diviſion rather, which my Authour calleth by the name of PENGAB: bounded on the Weſt, with Indus, which divideth it from Dulſinda; on the South, with the Kingdom of Mandao; on the North, and Eaſt, with thoſe many Kingdoms, which we have comprehended under the name of Botanter.

The reaſon of the name I find not, nor any thing memorable of the Countrey; but that it was divided in the time of Ptolomy, into the Provinces of the Lambatæ, Caſpiria, Cylindrine, and Sauſtene: ſubdued by Alexander in his Expedition into India: the famous Rivers of Aceſines and Hydaſpis (but by what names now called I find not) having here their ſours. So that it ſeemeth to have been a part of the Kingdom of Porus, or that the Kingdom of Porus was a part of this.

Places of moſt importance in it. 1 Labor, on the Eaſtern banks of Indus, affirmed to be the faireſt and moſt ancient City in both the Indies; of moſt eſteem for wealth and greatneſs. In compaſs about ſixteen miles, and honoured for a while with the ordinary Reſidence of the Great Mongul; till on the burning of his Palace, ſpoken of before, he removed his Court to Caſcimir, from thence to Fatipore, and at laſt to Agra. Since that time made the Seat of the eldeſt Son, or Heir apparent, ſent hither for avoiding all occaſion of Factions, which their living in the Court might breed. A City of exceeding Trade, as being the chief Staple for the Spices in theſe parts, and other commodities of India, from hence tranſported into Perſia by the way of Candahor, the principal Town of Arachoſia; and ſo to Spahan, the chief City of the Sophian Empire; where they are ſold, by reaſon of ſo long and chargeable a journey, at exceſſive rates. It is ſaid that 12000 Camels at the leaſt, paſs every year thorow it with their ladeing; beſides what is ferried down the River, and brought up by the Portugals, who therewith traded unto Ormus, till that Town was taken. By this we may conjecture at the wealth hereof, but more by that great maſs of Treaſure which a late Governour hereof did leave behind him. At whoſe death Echebar the Mongul (for the Mongul is the Heir General unto all mens Wealth) found in his Coffers three Millions of Gold ready coyned, great quantity of Gold and Silver uncoyned, and ſome ſtore of Jewels; beſides Horſes, Elephants, Houſhold-furniture, and other goods almoſt invaluable. 2 Sultan-puare, of more antiquity than beauty; yet of good eſteem. 3 Athec, in the common Road from Labor to China; reported in the deſcription of the Travels of Benedictus a Goes, a Portugal Jeſuite, to be a months Journey from Labor, and yet in the ſame Province with it. Which if it be true, either the province muſt be large, or his journeys ſhort: or if not true, we muſt remember that we had it from the Pen of a Jeſuit. And yet as great as this Province or Diviſion is affirmed to be, we do not find the names of any more Towns of conſideration, which may be ſaid with confidence to belong unto it; unleſs perhaps we may reduce under this Diviſion the Kingdoms of Haiacan and Buchor, of which laſt the chief City is called Bucorſuecor, enriched by the neighborhood of the Indus, but not elſe obſervable.

3 MANDAO.

THE Kingdom of MANDAO is bounded on the North, with Pengab; on the South, with the Realm of Agra; on the Eaſt, with Dilly; and on the Weſt, with the River Indus. So called from Mandao, the chief City of it.

The Countrey more Mountainous and rugged than the reſt of theſe Provinces, by reaſon of the many branches of Mount Bittigo (the Southern part of the Imaus) which do over-run it: in other things partaking of the riches of India. The men, as moſt of thoſe who live in ſuch Mountainous Tracts, of a warlike temper, comparatively with the reſt of the Indians: the women here anciently as valiant as the men in other places; riding aſtride, and practiced in the Arts of Horſemanſhip; for that cauſe called Amazons; ſome of which are ſaid to be ſtill remaining. Inſomuch as it is written in the ſtories hereof, that the King of this Countrey not long ſince going to the Wars, was accompanied by the Queen his Wife, marching in the Front of two thouſand women, all well mounted and prepared for ſervice.

Chief Cities hereof, 1 Mandao, ſeated on the banks of the River Mandavo, (the Manda of Ptolomy and the Ancients) whence it had the name. A City of great note, ſaid to be 30 miles in compaſs; yet ſo well fortified and furniſhed with all manner of neceſſaries for defence and reſiſtance, that it held out twelve years againſt Mirumudius, or Merhamed the Great Mongul, who then beſieged it. Surrendered at the laſt, and with it the Kingdom. Memorable for the great battel fought before it, betwixt the ſaid Merhamed, then coming to the relief thereof, and Badurius King of Cambaia, who had then diſtreſſed it: in which Badurius loſt his Tents and Treaſures, and was fain to fly diſguiſed unto Diu, to crave aid of the Portugals. 2 Moltan, which being miſtaken for another Town, of or near the ſame name, on the Weſtern ſide of the Indus, is by ſome Writers, ſaid to have been once the chief City of a Kingdom, or a Kingdom rather of it ſelf, but of no great note: the women whereof, though not ſo good Souldiers as their Anceſtors of the Female Sex, yet to come as near them as they can, uſe boots and ſpurs when they take a journey, and ſo fitted ſit aſtride the ſaddle. 3 Scernus, on the River ſo called, of more antiquity than greatneſs, as is alſo, 4 Polymbothie, the Palibothra of Ptolomy and others of the ancient Writers; then the chief Town of the Palibothei (by Plini and Strabo called Praſii) a People of as great authority and power as any in India.

This once a Kingdom of it ſelf of great power and wealth, till Badurius King of Cambaia having conquered the Realm of Cior, and therewith a great part of Sanga, made an attempt upon this alſo. Galgee, then King of Mandao, finding himſelf too weak for ſo ſtrong an Enemy, craved aid of Merhamed (or Miramudius as the Latines) the Mongul Tartar, then reigning in Chabul, or Arachoſia, and poſſeſſed of ſome parts of India alſo, ſince the times of Tamerlane. Who compounding an Army of his own Subjects, ſome mercenary Perſians, and a great body of Zagathaian Tartars, from whom originally deſcended, came in accordingly: diſcomfited the vaſt Army of Badurius, conſiſting of 150000 Horſe, and and 500000 foot, in two ſet battels, the firſt at Doceti, the next and Mandao, and following his blow, poſſeſſed himſelf of the whole Kingdom of Cambaia. But not content with that ſucceſs, quarrelled the Mandoan King in whoſe aid he came, beſieged him in his principal City, which at laſt he won, and therewithal the Kingdom alſo: the wretched King ſhewing hereby both a fair evidence and example to ſucceeding Ages, that the eaſieſt way for a Prince to ruine his own Eſtate, and endanger his neighbours, is to admit a Foreign power into his own Dominions; which he cannot as eaſily thruſt out, as he hath brought them in.

4 DELLY.

DELLY is bounded on the Weſt, with Mandao; on the Eaſt, with the Kingdom of Botantur; on the North, with the Eaſtern parts of Penjab; on the South with the Eaſtern parts alſo of the Kingdom of Agra. So named from DELLY, the chief City of it, by ſome called Delin.

The Countrey, beſides what is common to it with the reſt of *Indi*a, is ſaid to be more abundantly ſtored than any other part of it, with Horſes, Elephants, and Dromedaries. Of the people nothing ſingular, Except it be that many of them taking more delight in thievery than honeſt trades live for the moſt part upon ſpoil; but thoſe eſpecially whom they call by the name of Belemi, being ſuch of the Nobility or better ſort, who ſince the Conqueſt of their Countrey by the Great Mongul, have lived like Out-laws on the Mountains. Of the ſame temper with the Resbutes in Cambaia, and the Agwans in Sanga and Dulſinda; who rather than ſubmit themſelves to a Foreign yoke, (as they count that of the Mongul) chuſe to forſake their proper dwellings; and all honeſt ways and means of living.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Delly, a city not only honoured heretofore with the reſidence of the Great Monguls, who from hence paſs in common appellation, by the names of the Kings of Delly, and that amongſt their moſt knowing Subjects; but beautified with many Sepulchres of their ancient Kings, whoſe Funerals and Coronations were herein celebrated. And though deſerted of late times, by the Great Monguls, moving their Courts from place to place, as they enlarged their Empire, and encreaſed their Conqueſts: yet ſtill a great many of the Nobles, and not a few Captains and Commanders, do frequent the ſame, and have their houſes of pleaſure and retirement in it. 2 Tremel, upon the Weſtern ſide of the River Mandao; but not much obſervable. 3 Doceti, memorable for the great battel fought near unto it, in which Merhamed the Mongul overthrew the forces of Badurius, and thereby opened a fair way to the Realm of Cambaia.

This Countrey governed a long time by its natural Princes, was at laſt conquered by ſome Moors, or Saracens coming from Perſia and Arabia, but I find not which; who grew to ſo great power and wealth, that Sanoſaradine a Mahometan, one of their Deſcendants, dreamt of no leſs than the conqueſt of all India, if not of the whole Continent of Aſia alſo. Having about the year 1300 (memorable for beginning of the Ottoman Empire) ſubdued by little and little all the neigbouring Princes which made head againſt him; he pierced at laſt into Canora, now called Decan: and conquering a great part of it, returned back to Delly. The purſuit of his victories he left unto one Abideſſa his Lieutenant there, who added the reſt of that Countrey to his Maſters Teritories, but kept the poſſeſſion to himſelf; confirmed therein by Sanoſaradine, with the title of Regent. But Sanoſaradine dying in a War againſt the Perſians, left for his Succeſſor a Son ſo unlike his Father, that the conquered Provinces revolted from him unto other Maſters, more able to govern and protect them. Confined unto its former bounds, it remained notwithſtanding of ſufficient power to preſerve it ſelf, from any of their equal neighbours, till the riſing of the Great Monguls: whoſe puiſſance being unable to withſtand, it ſubmitted at the laſt to Adabar, the Son of Merhamed, the ſecond Emperour of this Line: who to aſſure himſelf of the peoples loyalty, and conqueſts, ſettled his Court a while at Delly, the chief City of it; from whence removed on the next proſperous emergency, as before was noted.

5 AGRA.

THE Realm of AGRA is bounded on the North with Delly, and Mandao; on the South with Sanga and Cambaia; on the Weſt, with Indus, which parteth it from the Province of Sinda, a part of the Kingdom of Cambaia; on the Eaſt, with Oriſtan, or Orixa. So called from Agra the chief City of it, and the ſeat Royal of late times of the Great Monguls.

The Countrey ſaid to be the beſt and moſt pleaſant of India, plentiful in all things, and ſuch a delicate even piece of ground, as the like is hardly to be ſeen. Well watered, as with other Rivers, ſo moſt eſpecially with thoſe of Tamlico and Jemena; which laſt runeth thorow the midſt of it, North and South, or rather from the North-weſt to the South-eaſt, from whence bending more directly Eaſtwards, it falleth at laſt into the Ganges, or that which is ſuppoſed to be Ganges; for the head of that great River is not certainly known. The people for the moſt part Gentiles, Mahometaniſm coming in with the Great Mongul; and generally inclining ſomewhat to the Pythagorean. For ſuch as live upon the banks of the River Jemena, neither eat fleſh, nor kill any thing. The waters of which River they eſteem ſo ſacred, that thereof they uſually make their Temple, and ſay their Prayers therein, but naked (in which poſture they both dreſs their meat and eat it) lodging upon the ground, being impoſed by them as penance, and ſo conceived.

Places of moſt eſteem herein, 1 Fatepore, or Fettibarri, on the Weſt ſide of the River, a very fair and goodly City, once beautified with a Royal Palace here built by Echebar (after the removal of his Court from Caſcimer) with many ſpacious Gardens belonging to it; but much decayed, ſince the fixing of the Court at Agra, to which moſt of the ſtones are carryed, and no ſmall quantity of Corn ſowed within the Walls. 2 Agra, on the North bank of the River Jemena, inferiour to Labor for wealth and greatneſs, but far more populous: the conſtant reſidence of the Court here in theſe latter times, drawing to it great reſort of all ſorts of people. By ſome ſuppoſed to be the Nagara of Ptolomy, but ſuch a ſuppoſition as is built on no better ground, than ſome reſemblance of the names. For Ptolomi's Nagara is by him placed on the Weſtern ſide of Indus, in the Latitude of 33, whereas this Agra ſtandeth on the Eaſt of the River Jemena, five degrees more Southwards, in the Latitude of 28. But what it loſeth in antiquity, it hath got in honour: the Town and Territory being a peculiar Kingdom, till Echebar the Mongul ſubdued it, Anno 1598. in his paſſage from Labor to Decan. But it loſt nothing by the hand; for Echebar delighted in the ſituation of it (and that withal it ſtood in the midſt of his Kingdoms) made it the Seat Royal of his Empire; fixt there, for the moſt part ever ſince: by means whereof exceedingly increaſed in wealth, beauty, and greatneſs; the very Caſtle in which the Mongul uſually reſideth, being two miles in compaſs, invironed invironed with moſt high and unſcaleable Walls, and fortified with great ſtore of Ordnance. The whole ſpace betwixt it and Fatipore, being 18 miles, beautified with many Mahometan Temples, and with one alſo built by Echebar, for the uſe of ſuch Chriſtians as had been gained unto the faith, by the care and diligence of the Jeſuites. For the ſupply hereof with Victuals, and other neceſſary proviſions, and the ſecurity of ſuch as reſort unto it, affirmed to be a continual Market: and all the Interval from hence to the Town of Labor (from which diſtant 400 miles towards the South) adorned with continual Rows of Trees on both ſides of the ways, moſt of them bearing a kind of Mulbery; and at every ten miles end, houſes erected by the King or ſome of the Nobles, for beautifying the way to the Regal City, for preſerving their own memory, and the ſafe lodging of Paſſengers, in danger otherwiſe by night of Thieves and Cut-throats. 3 Hendee, a Town more towards the South, beautified with a fair Caſtle of the Kings, cut out of the main Rock, and wrought with carved work round about; fortified with 50 Pieces of Ordnance, and thought impregnable: for that cauſe made a Priſon for great Perſons. Here are alſo two Hoſpitals for ſuch Captains (and Captains only) as are maimed in the Wars. 4 Biani, twelve courſe or 18 miles from Pattipore; the moſt noted place for Indico in all the Indies; for the making whereof they have here twelve Mills. Which Indico (by the way) groweth on a a ſmall ſhrub like our Gooſebery buſhes, bearing ſeed like a Cabbage ſeed: which being cut down, are laid in heaps for half a year, and when rotten, brought into a Vault to be trodden with Oxen from the ſtalks; and being ground ſmall and fine at the Mills, is laſt of all boyled in Furnaces, refined, and ſorted, and ſo ſold to the Merchants.

To this diviſion alſo we may reduce the Kingdom of Gwaliar, ſo called of Gwaliar the chief City, where the Mongul hath a very rich Treaſury of Gold and Silver; kept in a ſtrong Caſtle, wherein his Priſoners are ſecured likewiſe; and for thoſe reaſons, continually guarded by a ſtrong Company of ſtout and well appointed Souldiers.

6 SANGA.

SANGA is bounded on the North, with the Eaſt parts of the Realm of Agra; on the South, and Weſt, with Cambaia; from which parted on the Weſt, by the Mountain Gate; and on the Eaſt, with Oriſtan. The reaſon of the name I find not: this Countrey being too far South to be ſo called from Sangalaſſa, a Town of chief note near the Fountains of Indus where placed by Arianus lib. 5.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Azimere, or Agimer 180 miles from Agra. At the end of every courſe (each courſe a mile and a half) a fair Pillar erected, and at every tenth courſe a fair Seraglio, (ſuch as we call Inns) for the entertainment of Travellers. All built by Echebar, who wanting children, is ſaid to have gone in Pilgrimage on foot from Ayra to Azimere; ſaying his Prayers at the end of every courſe, and lodging all night at the tenth. 2 Citor, the chief City of Sanga, and once a Kingdom of it ſelf, or the chief of that Kingdom. Situate in the middle way betwixt Surat, a known Port of Cambaia and Agra ſpoken of before: and moſt magnificently built on the top of a rocky hill, to which the paſſage is ſo narrow, and ſo well fortified, (there being in it three Gates, at the top, the middle, and the bottom) that thereby, and by other advantages of Art and Nature, it was thought impregnable. Affirmed to be 12 miles in compaſs, beautified with many good buildings both publick and private; but once more glorious than it is; here being to be ſeen the ruins of 100 Temples, and above 100000 houſes, either demoliſhed by the Wars, or ſuffered to decay by the Great Monguls, who would not willingly have any thing in the Indies of more Antiquity than themſelves; and therefore are rather inclined to build new Cities, than uphold the old. The greatneſs and antiquity of it have made ſome men think, that it was the Royal Seat of Porus. Others affirm the ſame of Delly, but neither rightly: the Kingdom of Porus lying more towards the River Indus, and not ſo far South. Governed not long ſince by a Queen called Crementina, not more fair than valiant, who revolting from Baburius King of Cambaia, to whom ſhe formerly had paid tribute, was diſpoſſeſſed of the Town of Citor, where ſhe had fortified her ſelf with 30000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe: the people in a deſperate reſolution, laying all their Treaſure on a heap, which they burnt together with themſelves; in which flame it is ſaid that there periſhed 70000 perſons. But the Cambaian did not long enjoy his Victory, for not long after both the City and a great part of the Countrey was conquered by the Great Mongul; the mountainous parts hereof being held againſt him by Ramee, the Son or Succeſſor of Queen Crementina: till ſeeing himſelf deſtitute of all better helps, he put himſelf into the hands of one of the Sons of the late Sultan, by whom reconciled unto his Father. Some other Towns there are in this Province, and in the reſt before mentioned; and thoſe of good eſteem perhaps amongſt the Natives: but of no obſervation or importance in the courſe of buſineſs. Under this name we may alſo comprehend the Kingdom of Nagracol, ſo called of the chief City of it; and that moſt memorable for a rich and ſumptuous Chappel, ſieled and paved with Plate of pure Silver, moſt curiouſly imboſſed over-head in ſeveral figures, which they keep exceeding bright, with often rubbing, and continual burniſhing. Malway, another of theſe Kingdoms, for its near neighbourhood to Citor, may be placed here alſo, affirmed to be a fruitful Province, and the chief City of it to be called Rantipore.

7 CAMBAIA.

CAMBAIA hath on the Eaſt, Delly, and part of Mandao; on the Weſt, Gedroſia, a Province of the Perſian Empire; on the North, Dulſinda, and the reſt of Mandao; on the South, the main Ocean, and ſome part of Decan. It lieth on both ſides of the Indus; and is ſo called from Cambaia, the chief Province of it. The whole divided into, 1 Sinda, 2 Guzarate, and 3 Cambaia, eſpecially ſo called.

1. SINDA, (by ſome called the Kingdom of Tutta, from Tutta the chief City of it) hath on the Eaſt, the River Indus, by which ſeperated from Mandao; on the North, that part of India which is called Dulſinda; on the Weſt, part of Gedroſia and Guzarate, and on the South, the reſt of Guzarate only: coaſting along the Weſtern banks of the River Indus, whence it had the name; that River being now called Schind, as was ſaid before. And for this reaſon, as I take it, the Weſtern part of India lying North of this took the name of Dulſinda, and not Dulcinda (with a C) as moſt commonly written.

The Countrey for the generality very rich and fertile; but in ſome places nothing but a ſandy Deſart, inhabited for the moſt part by wild Aſſes, Foxes, Deer, and ſome wilder beaſts; but none ſo wild as the Celies, a robbing Nation, ſo numerous withal, that they ſometimes rob whole Caravans as they paſs that way; notwithſtanding the teh many Forts and Castles built of purpose to secure those passages.

Places of most importance in it, 1 Tutta (Gutu Negar Tuta) on the banks of Indus, a Town of grat Trade, but most frequented by the Portugals, who here receive such Indian commodities as come down the water from Labor, returning Pepper in exchange, which they bring up the River from their other Factories. 2 Lawribander, at the mouth or out-let of the Indus, three days journey from Tutta, the Port-Town unto which it is, notwithstanding that distance. Supposed to be situate in or near the place of that Alexandria which Alexander built in memory of his Navigation down this River to the Indian Ocean. An Haven much frequented, because free from Worms; which at Surat, and other Havens on these Seas, so infest the Ships, that without much cost and care bestowed upon them, they make them unable to return. 3 Calwalla, memorable for the Tenure, as given by Echebar the Mougul to a company of women and their posterity for ever, to bring up their Daughters to dancing, and more wanton exercises. 4 Radempoore, a great Town with a strong Castle, seated at the edge of the Desarts: thorow which those that are to pass, use here to provide themselves of water and other necessaries for their journey. 5 Nuraquemire, a pretty Town on the further side of the Desarts, esteemed a Paradise by such as have passed thorow those uncomfortable and dangerous Sands, for the space of ten or twelve days journey. 6 Sarrama, a large Town, twenty miles from Tutta, the Center in which all Lines meet; and from whence the distances of all Towns of Sinda are accustomably measured.

The Countrey anciently subject to the King of Cambaia, and in the right of that Crown to the Great Mongul: but the people for the most part so untamed and masterful, that except in some of the greater Towns, they pay no Tributes; and in some places, even within half a days journey of Tutta, will acknowledge no King, but rob and spare whom they please. If at any time the Mongul sends a force against them, (as he doth sometimes) they fire their houses, made like a Bee-Hive of Straw and Mortar, which are soon rebuilded, and retire themselves unto the Mountains. Yet one good quality they have amongst many ill ones: When they have robbed a Traveller, took money of him in the way of Toll or Custom for his passage by them, they will conduct him honestly to the end of the Desarts, lest any should rob him but themselves.

2 GUZARATE hath on the North, Sinda; on the South, the main-Ocean; the River Indus on the East; on the West, Gedrosia, which the Indians call Nawatacos, but the Persians, Circam.

The soyl of the same temper and fertilty with that of Cambaia, especially so called; and there we shall speak further of it. The Common people, whom they call Guzarates, of the same disposition generally with the rest of the Indians: but the greatest part of the Countrey is possessed by the Resbutes or Rasbooches, the ancient Inhabitants of this Tract. Who when their Countrey was subdued by the Moors or Saracens, retired unto the Mountains or Fastnesses of it, standing upon their guard; and were never yet subdued by the Great Monguls. Who though possessed of the Sea-shores, and most Towns of consequence, are fain to leave the In-land parts and open Countreys to the power of the Out-laws: who either prey upon the people, or force them to compound for their peace and quiet at uncertain prices. Their Arms most commonly a Sword, Buckler, and Lance; well horsed, and resolute in any thing which they undertake; which made one of the Monguls say of them, That no men in the world knew to dye, but they.

Places of most importance in it, 1 Diu, in a Peninsula looking towards Persia, but on the East side thereof, near the mouth of Indus. Possessed by the Portugal, and by them fortified with a strong and impregnable Citadel, built with the leave and liking of King Badurius, thereby to buy their aid against Merhamed the Mongul; who had newly vanquished him. A matter of such consequence to the Crown of Portugal, that John Botelius, confined to India for some crimes by him committed, undertook (in hope by the merit of that service to obtain his pardon) to carry the first news of it in a small Vessel, not above 18 foot long, and but 6 foot broad (the best which for the present could be provided:) Which with great courage he performed, and through that large, wide, and tempestuous Ocean came in safety with his news to Lisbon, to the great joy of the King; but greater admiration of all sorts of people. Scarce setled in their new possession, when besieged by Solyman Bassa, Admiral to Solyman the Magnificent, with a Fleet of 80 Ships and Gallies, Anno 1537 offended with the Portugals for aiding the King of Persia, more for diverting the Spice-trade from Alexandria. In which he had so ill success, that having assaulted it in vain with his Land forces, he was fain to raise his siege in such hast and tumult, that he left his great Ordnance behind him. 2 Sauran, a Town and Castle of the Resbutes, spoken of before; and by them held against the power of the Great Mongul. 3 Boldra, a very fair and beautyful City, but of no great Compass. 4 Ardovat, not far from the banks of the Indus, on the North of this Region towards Sinda. 5 Madabat, by some called Amadabat, affirmed to be both for wealth and greatness the chief of Guzarate, near as big as London; well walled, and situate on a Plain near the Rivers side: seldom without Merchants of all Religions, Jews, Gentiles, Christians, Moors, some of all, and neither. 6 Saringa, 7 Periano, 8 Serkesse; this last remarkable for the Sepulchres of the old Kings of Cambaia; fair, and well kept; and visited from all parts of the Kingdom.

Nothing considerable in this part of the Countrey as to point of story, but what is common to them with the rest of Cambaia; but that the Resbutes, or Rasbooches still remain unconquered. Possessed not only of the Hills and Mountains, but of some strong holds; and governed by the heads of their Casts or tribes, all which acknowledge the Mongul for their Superiour, in regard of his power, but none of them obey him as their Lord or Sovereign: conceiving it to be some abasement of their own authority, if they admit him as an Umpire to compose their differences, which they sometimes do.

3 CAMBAIA specially so called, hath on the North, Mandao; on the South, the main Ocean, and some part of Decan; on the East, Surat, from which parted by a ridge of Mountains; on the West, the Main Ocean, with some part of Guzarate. It standeth on the East sides of the out-lets of Indus, running along the Sea-shore for 500 miles, and took this name from Cambaia the chief City of it.

The Countrey said to be the most fruitful of all India, abounding in Rice, Wheat, Sugar, Spices of all sorts, and choicest fruits: of Silk and Cotton so great plenty, that they fraught yearly forty or fifty ships with those commodities. In the Mountains they find Diamonds, Chalcedonies, and a kind of Onyx stone, which are called Cornelines, and corruptly Cornelians. Amongst the rarities hereof, they reckon the Abades, a great beast, twice as big as a Bull, having on their snouts a little horn, and the Hide so hard, as no man can pierce it with a thrust; which is the Rhinoceros of the Ancients.

The people effeminate and unwarlike, and therefore not much used by the Monguls in a war of consequence; to ſupply which defect he furniſheth himſelf with Souldiers out of Perſia, of which his ſtanding bands conſiſt; moſt of their Sultans and Commanders of that Nation alſo. More given to Merchandiſe than War, and therein thought to be as cunning (if not deceitful withal) as any people in the world: treacherous in their truſt, proud in their carriage, bloudy upon advantage, and much given to Venerie; ignorant of Letters, but well practiced in Mechanical Arts. In matters of Religion for the moſt part Gentiles, not knowing or contemning the Law of Mahomet; but very punctual in their own heatheniſh ſuperſtitions. The Bannians in this Countrey, being natural Indians, nuſled in Paganiſm, and ſo wedded to their old Idolatries, that no perſwaſions can prevail with them, make the greateſt number; and ſeem to be all Pythagoreans in ſome opinions, for they eat not any thing that hath bloud or life, but feed on Rice, Roots, Plantons, and ſuch natural fruits: paying a large Revenue yearly to the Great Mongul, that no Oxen may be killed amongſt them. And becauſe new Opinions ſhould not grow amongſt them, they marry in their own Tribes only, and never out of their own Trades; ſecure thereby as they conceive from all innovations.

to

Cities of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Cambaia, three miles from the Indus, and as many in compaſs, one of the neateſt and beſt built in all the East. So populous withal, that it is thought to contain 130000 Families; and is therefore called the Caire of the Indies. Of moſt eſteem in all this Kingdom (though far leſs than Madabat) to which it doth impart its name. 2 Baracho, Southwards of Cambaia on the top of an hill, with a fair River underneath it; well-walled, and noted for the beſt Calicuts (a kind of linnen Cloath ſo called from the City of Calicut, where it was firſt made) not to be matched in all the Indies. 3 Swalley, ſtill more unto the South, and about a mile from the Sea-ſhore; but giving name unto a large and capacious Bay, where the ſhips ride which trade at Surat. 4 Surat, about ten miles from the Bay of Swalley, from whence the River navigable but by Boats and Shallops, fortifyed with a Caſtle of ſtone, well ſtored with Ordnance. The houſes for the moſt part of Sun-dryed Briks, very large and laſting: built with flat Roofs, but Battlementd on all ſides for fear of falling; and beautifyed with goodly Gardens of Pomgranates, Melons, Figs, and Limons, enterlaced with Riverets and Springs. Made of late years a Factory for the Engliſh Merchants, who have here their Preſident, and a magnificent houſe for their reception, and ſtaple of their Commodities. 5 Neriand, a great Town, and as remarkable for the making of Indico, of the matter and making whereof we have ſpoke already, when we were at Biani, a Town or City of the Kingdom, or Diviſion of Agra; as memorable for that Commodity as this Neriand, or any other of India. 6 Daman, upon the Sea-ſide over-againſt Diu; and poſſeſſed as that is by the Portugals. A beautiful and pleaſant Town, fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle at the North end of it, of white chalky ſtone, well planted with Ordnance: oppoſite whereunto on the South Side of the Town a goodly Church, edged on the top with white. Which with the houſes for the moſt part of the ſame colour alſo, afford a pleaſant proſpect to the Sailors by 7 Campanel, ſituate on the top of an high Mountain, and environed with a ſeven-fold wall, once the Seat Royal of the Kings of Cambaia. 8 Dacaiotote, a place of ſuch ſtrength, that the Great Monguls could never get it by force. Rendred at the laſt upon compoſition, conditioned they ſhould ſtill be governed by a King of their own. 9 Netherby, a great Market of brazen ware, Beaſts, and Armour. 10 Bandora. 11 Tanai, &c.

This Kingdom taking in Guzarate and Sinda, as parts hereof, is extremely Populous; ſaid to contain 60000 Towns and Villages, very well inhabited: but the people not accuſtomed to, or unfit for wars. Anciently governed by Kings of their own, it was firſt ſubdued by the Arabians or Moors, Anno 1423. under the conduct of one Mahomet or Machamut; who having forced the Resbutes or Naturals of the Country to betake themſelves unto the Mountains, was made King hereof. To him ſucceeded his Son Mamudius, one of no great action. But what he wanted was ſupplyed by his Son Baduius, who having conquered the Kingdom of Citor, invaded that of Mandao alſo. His Army for that War conſiſted of 500000 Foot, 150000 Horſe, 1000 great Pieces of Ordnance, 500 Wagons loaded with Powder and Shot, and as many Wain-loads of Gold and Silver to pay his Army. But being diſcomfited in two great Battels by Merhamed the Mongul Tartar, whom Galgee the Mandoan King had called in to his aid, he ſhaved his beard, and fled in a diſguiſe to Diu, then poſſeſſed by the Portugals; whom he licenſed in that diſtreſs to build the Cittadel: ſlain afterwards by a mean Mariner, at his return from the Portugal Vice-Roy, whom he had viſited on ſhipbord. And though Mamudius his ſucceſſor endeavoured to free his Kingdom from both pretenders; yet weakned with the loſs of ſo great an Army, he was not able to effect it. Firſt driven from Diu, which he had beſieged both by Sea and Land, to his great diſhonour; and after vanquiſhed in battel by Adabar, the Son of Merhamed, not far from Serkeſſe, the ancient burial-place of the Kings of Cambaia, but then the Sepulchre of the Kingdom; which by that victory fell to the Great Monguls, who have ſince enjoyed it.

4 DECAN.

DECAN is bounded on the East, with Narſinga; on the Weſt, with the Indian Ocean; on the North, with Cambaia; on the South, with Malavar and Canara. The reaſon of the name we ſhall have anon.

It lieth along the Sea-coaſt for the ſpace of 250 miles, betwixt Aliga and Bate, two noted Rivers; extending East, as far as the Mountain Gates, and afterwards thruſting into the North betwixt Cambaia and thoſe Mountains till it meet with Cambaia. The ſoil much of the ſame nature with the reſt of India, but not ſo flouriſhing as Cambaia. The people for the moſt part Mahometans, which Religion was firſt planted there by the Conqueſts of Sanaſaradine, 350 years ago; yet not without ſome intermixture of their ancient Gentiliſm.

Places of moſt importance in it. 1 Bider, the Seat Royal of Mamudza, once ſole King of this Countrey; who to beautifie and adorn this City, commanded every one of his Prefects, or ſubordinate Governours, being eighteen in number, to build here a Palace, and to reſide therein certain months in the year: each one to leave a Son there in perpetual hoſtage. Situate in the moſt Northern parts of the Countrey more near the borders of Delly: from the King whereof Mamudza had then newly revolted; and therefore would make ſure of this place, as moſt in danger. 2 Viſapote, bordering on Cambaia, the Princely Seat of Idalcan, one of the Kings of Decan, after it was diſmembred into ſeveral Kingdoms. 3 Danager, confining on Canara, a beautiful and flouriſhing City, once the chief Seat of Niſalamocon, or Nizalmuza, another of the Kings hereof, after that diviſion. 4 Decan, ſo called by the name of the Province; of which the chief City next to Bider, the Imperial Seat. Six miles from which there is an Hill encompaſſed with an high wall, and kept by a ſtrong Garriſon, becauſe of the great ſtore of Diamonds which are digged out of it. The Town ſo wealthy, that that the people generally are attired in silks, or the purest Tiffany. 5 Sintacora, on the mouth of the River Aliga, where it falleth into the Sea. 6 Goa, a Sea Town also, situate in a little but most pleasant Island, called Tienarinum, fifteen miles in compass; opposite to the mouth or out-let of the River Mandavo. A noted Empory, and one of the chief keys which unlock the Indies; for number of Inhabitants, magnificent buildings, and pleasantness of situation, one of most note in all this Country. Possessed by the Portugals, who have here their Arsenal, and harbour for their Indian Fleet; by which they do command these Seas. So strongly fortified withal, that though beleaguered by Idalcan (of whom before) with 35000 Horse, 6000 Elephants, and 250 Piece of Ordnance, Anno 1573. yet he could not force it. Made in regard of the convenient situation and strength thereof, the ordinary Residence of the Portugal Vice-Roy, who hath here his Council, Chancellour, and other Officers, for the government of such parts of India as belong to that Crown: as also of the Archbishop or Primate of the Indian Churches planted by that Nation, who is hence called the Archbishop of Goa. 7 Chaul, a Sea Town, in the hands of the Portugals also, and by them well fortified: Insomuch as Nisamalocco assaulting it at the very same time with a very great Army, was fain to leave it as he found it. 8 Balaguate, in the up-lands or Hill-Country, whence it had the name: Bala in the Persian Language signifying a top, or summit of a Mountain; and Guate an Hill. 9 Brampore, once the chief Seat of another Kingdom, called the Kingdom of Chandis, now the chief City of those parts of Decan which are subject to the Great Mongul. Situate on a great River in the midst of a spacious Plain, beautiful, and of very great Trading; in bigness equal unto Paris, yet yielded to Echebar the Mongul, without any resistance, Anno 1600. Miram then the King thereof forsaking it, and betaking himself to 10 Syra, a strong Hold both by Art and Nature; Situate on the top of an hill, which is in compass five Leagues, and environed with a triple Wall: furnished with Victuals, and all other necessary Provisions, sufficient to maintain 60000 men many years; 3000 great Pieces of Ordnance planted on the Walls. Besieged herein by Echebar with an Army of 200000 fighting men, he held out against him; till overcome by promises of fair correspondence, drawn out of his Hold (some of his Counsellors being bribed to perswade him to it) he was detained by the Mongul: and the Commanders won by rewards and hopes yielded up the Fort, and thereing all the Princes of the Royal Family, accustomably kept therein when the Throne was full; which vacant, the next Heir was taken hence, to succeed unto it. Of the same nature, as it seemeth, with the hill Amara in Æthiopia, or the Abassine Empire.

The Country formerly inhabited by a people called Venazarari, by Religion Gentiles, and held by them till the year 1300, when overcome by Sa Nosaradine, a Mahometan, and King of Dely: who driving the Inhabitants into the Hill-Countries, possessed himself of a great part of it, compelling them to submit unto his Religion. The residue hereof subdued by Abdessa, whom Sa Nosaradine left here to pursue the War, was by him governed with great justice for 20 years; when dying he left his Government to his Son Mamudza, confirmed by the Successor of Sa Nosaradine in his Father's Regency, on the payment of an annual Tribute. Mamudza soon finding that the young King was of no great spirit, not only refused to pay the Tribute imposed upon him, but took unto himself the title of King of Decan, giving this name unto the Country (before called Canara) in regard that he had filled it with a Mungrel body of Christians, Mahometans, and Gentiles, acknowledging no common Parent, nor agreeing in Language, Customs, or Religion; the word Decan signifying in that Tongue, as much as an illegirimate brood, or a body of Bastards. Out of these he made choice of twelve (others say eighteen) whom he appointed Governours of so many Provinces: not daring to trust any of the old Nobility, or of the Natives of the Country; and hoping that these Slaves, so promoted by him, would be more subject to command. But here his silly hopes deceived him. For these Slaves either governed by their Master's example, who had done the like unto the Son and Heir of Sa Nosaradine; or presuming on their own strength, and some Foreign Aids, left to their Master nothing but an empty Title; each one becoming absolute in his several Province. Nor did his Successors for any long time enjoy that Title: Daquem, the last of them, being taken at Bider his chief City; and thereupon the name of King usurped by every one of those petit Tyrants, reduced at last into fewer hands. Such of them as were left, became considerable Princes, as appeareth by the great Army raised by Idalcan for the siege of Goa: But in the end, distressed on the one side by the Portugals, who embarred their Trade, and invaded on the other side by the Great Mongul with most puissant Armies, Melic entituled King of Decan, and Miram King of Brampore, were in fine subdued by Echebar, about the year 1600. Against whom and his Successors, though the Venazarari still hold but, as the Resbutes or Rasbooches do in the Realm of Cambaia; and that the King of Amdanager, and perhaps some other petit Princes, are not yet brought under: yet we may look on the Mongul as the Lord of this Country, the residue of these Roytelets, and petit Princes (if any of them be remaining) being Homagers or Vassals to him. Against whose further Progress to the Cape of Comari, which Echebar so greedily aimed at, the puissant Kings of Narsinga, and those of Malabar have opposed their power; whose Kingdoms and Estates we must next survey, before we take a view of those other Provinces which are now under the command of that mighty Monarch.

9 CANARA.

CANARA is bounded on the North, with Decan (whereof anciently it was a part;) on the South, with Malabar; on the East, with Narsinga, from which separated by the Mountain Gates; on the West, with the Ocean. The reason of the name I find not, nor much worth the searching.

The Country hath a fair Sea-coast, with many capacious Harbours to it, which cannot but add much to the wealth thereof; as liberally furnished in the in-land parts with Rice, Figs, and Sugars: but destitute of Wheat, Pulse, and Barley. Nor much the poorer for that want, the people either not knowing, or not regarding the use of bread; but living on such fruits as the earth produceth of it self, without the charge or care of the husbandman. In other things but little differing, if at all, from the rest of the Indians: their Religion for the most part Paganish, but intermixt with Mahometans.

Principal Towns and Cities of it, 1 Melinde, a commodious Haven. 2 Onor, a Port Town of good note, sometimes held by the Portugals. 3 Batticalia, situate in the richest part of all this Country; never possessed by the Portugals, but under contribution to them. 4 Mangalor, a Town of great wealth and trade; fortified with a strong Castle, once destroyed by the Portugues, but recovered and repaired by the King of Narsinga, who is Lord of this Country. 5 Mayendre, more within the land. And so is also. 6 Lissor, famous for her Quarries of Adamant. 7 Salsette, in a Peninsula of 20 miles compass, containing 36 Villages, and 80000 Inhabitants; the Town about 9 miles from Goa, and subject with the whole Peninsula to the Portugals.

This Country is now subject to the Kings of Narsinga, but formerly under the command of its own Princes: the name of Canara, comprehending in those times all that Country also, which is now called Decan. Conquered by Sa Nosaradine and Abdessa, and by Mamudza cantoned into many Prefectures, this part reverting to its old name, fell to the Narsingan, who taking his advantages, in the Minority of one of their Princes, became Master of it. And when the Idalcan (for I take that not so much for the name of a man, as a Title of dignity) quarrelled his possession of it, as appertaining properly to the Kingdom of Decan; Chrismarao, then King of Narsinga, brought a powerful Advocate to defend his right; that is to say, an Army of 606000 Foot, 29650 Horse, and 537 Elephants; every Elephant having a Tower on his back with four men in it. With which strong Argument the Idalcan being confuted in the Schools of War, with much difficulty saved himself though he lost his cause; the Narsingan ever since continuing quiet in the possession of this Country, except only some of the Sea Towns in the power of the Portugals: Who in the year 1567 destroyed in those few places by them possessed, no fewer than 200 of their Idol Temples, with many of their Pagodes, or Idols in them, converting the Rents and Lands which belonged unto them, with the Revenues raised from the several Ports which they hold herein, to the maintenance of a Colledge of Jesuites in Salsette, and other Religious houses founded by them in their other Cities.

10 MALABAR.

MALABAR is bounded on the North, with Canara, from which parted by the River Gangeraco; on the East, with the great Mountain Gates, by which divided from the Realm of Narsinga South-east; on the West and South, with the main Indian Ocean. On the Coast whereof it doth extend for the space of 300 miles; that is to say, from the River Gangeraco, to the Cape Conmari: which I conceive to be the Commaria Extrema of Ptolomy, though others take it for the Promontory by him called Cory. But the breadth hereof is nothing answerable to the length, not above 50 miles where broadest, and ending towards the Cape in a point or Cornu.

The Country more populous, for the bigness, than any in India, enjoying a very temperate Air, and a fruitful soil; well watered, and indented with many Creeks: unfit for Corn, but plentiful in Rice, and all manner of Spices, as Ginger, Cinamon, Cassia, Pepper, and most excellent fruits. Amongst their Trees, there is one whose name my Author speaks not, which bears Dates like unto the Palm; out of which they have not only Wood for fewel, but they draw from it Wine, Sugar, Oyl, fine Cloth, and Cordage; another Tree, which beareth Cotton, and Cypress, or Cobweb-lawn, of the Leaves whereof they make a fine Stuff like to Satin or Taffatie. They have also great store of Apes, and Monkies, Parats, Paraquettoes, and other Creatures not known in these parts but from thence: not to say any thing of their Lions, Elephants, Bears, Bugles, common to them with others of their Indian Neighbours. The flowers there always in their Verdure, and the Trees perpetually green, by reason that the Air is so sweet and temperate.

The people are of coal-black colour (differing therein from the rest of the Indians, swarth and complexioned like the Olive) well limbed, and wearing their hair long and curled: about their heads an handkerchief wrought with Gold and Silver; and about their middle a cloth, which hangeth down to conceal their nakedness. Of manners treacherous and bloudy, more properly to be termed desperate than stout and valiant; and for more surety in their Wars, they use poysoned Arrows, as they do also in their thieving both by Sea and Land, to which more addicted. In Religion for the most part Gentiles, and more besotted generally on their Idolatries, than the rest of these Nations. The Pagode, or Idol which they worship, seated upon a brazen Trone, and crowned with a rich Diadem; From his head issue out four horns; from his mouth four tusks; his eyes fiery like a Glow-worm, his nose flat and ugly, his visage terrible; his hands like claws, his legs and thighs like those of a Lion. In a word, we cannot paint the Devil in a more ugly figure than they do their God. Unto this Pagode or his Priest, they offer the Virginity of all their Daughters: the Pagode having in the place of his privy parts a Bodkin of Gold or Silver, upon which the Bride (married most commonly at ten or twelve years of age) is forcibly set; the sharpness of it being such, that it forceth out the blood in great abundance: and if she prove with child that year, it is said to be of his begetting, and more esteemed. Others with more humanity, instead of torturing their daughters on this wretched Idol (parallel almost to the offering of their Sons to Moloch amongst the Syrians) present them to the Bramini, or Idol-Priest, to be defloured the first night of the Wedding: and without one of these two handsels no man is suffered to enjoy the use of his Wife, not their Kings themselves. More priviledged yet than many women neighbouring on them, in that they are not compelled to burn themselves with their husbands bodies; but may have many husbands either successively or at once, as they list themselves: and if at once, she sends her children to that husband (as we know who did) who she thinks to have the best right to them.

The Country very well watered, as we said before, and parted by large Rivers into many Provinces; as if intended naturally to be cantoned into many Kingdoms. Divided at present, and long since, into those of 1 Cononor, 2 Calicut, 3 Graganor, 4 Cochin, 5 Cai-Colam, 6 Coulan, and 7 Travancor.

1 CONONOR joyneth to Canara, extending Southward on the shore about 20 miles, where it bordereth on the Kingdom of Calicute. The chief Cities of which, 1 Cononor, giving name to the whole Kingdom, well built and beautified with a very fair Haven, no more safe than spacious, capacious of the greatest Vessels, and for that cause much frequented by foreign Merchants; but especially by the Portugals, who for the assuring of their Trade have here a Cittadel, erected and well garrisoned with the King's consent. 2 Cota, not far from Cangerucco, the border betwixt this and Canara. 3 Peripatan, on the Confines of Calicute. 4 Marabia, 5 Tramopatan, 6 Main, intermediate Towns, but not much observable.

2 CALICUTE, South from Cononor, extending on the Sea-shore 25 Leagues, and situate in the most pleasant and fruitful part of all Malabar. Chief Towns whereof, 1 Pandarane, on the skirts of Cononor. 2 Tanor, a retiring place of the Kings. 3 Partangale. 4 Chatua, on the borders of Cranganor. 5 Chale, a strong piece, once in the hands of the Portugues; but in the year 1601 recovered by the King of Calicute, who had besieged it with an Army of 90000 men. 6 Capacote, the Haven of Calicute. 7 Calicute, the chief City of the Kingdom, to which it gives name, in length upon the Sea three miles, and a mile in breadth; containing about 6000 houses, but ſtanding ſome of them far aſunder; mean and low built, few of them exceeding the height of a man on horſe-back; the ſoil being ſo hollow and full of water, that it is not capable of the foundation of an heavier building; for that cauſe unwalled. Inſomuch that Merchants houſes are here valued but at 20 Crowns, thoſe of the common ſort at no more than ten. Which notwithſtanding, of great trading, and much frequented by Arabians, Perſians, Syrians, Indians, yea the very Tartars; theſe laſt from the furtheſt parts of Cathay (taking Cathay in that general ſenſe, as it comprehendeth all the Countries of the Tartars, between the Mount of Imaus, and the Eaſtern Ocean) being 6000 miles diſtant from it, inſomuch that it is ſaid by ſome of the Spaniſh Writers, that when Vaſques di Gama, the firſt diſcoverer of the way to the Eaſt Countries by the Cape of Good Hope, firſt arrived in this Haven, he found in it no fewer than 1500 Merchants Ships of all ſorts, but without Anchors and the Compaſs, few of them fit for a Sea-fight, nor able to ſail (in regard they had not the uſe of the Compaſs) but by four-winds only. The common Staple in thoſe times of all Indian Merchandiſe, till diſtracted into ſeveral Ports by the power of the Portugals: who being more induſtrious, and better Architects, have forced a foundation on the Shore for a very ſtrong Caſtle; by which they do command the Haven, and receive Cuſtom of all Merchandiſe going in and out. The inconvenience whereof being found by the King of Calicute, he beſieged it with 100000 men; and though the Portugals held it out a whole Winter together, yet in the end they were fain to quit it; but firſt demoliſhed it to the ground, that it might not be made uſeful to thoſe of Calicute. A City of exceeding wealth, and of no leſs wantonneſs; the men here uſing to change Wives with one another, to confirm their Amities: and the women ſpending their whole time in adorning themſelves with Rings and Jewels about their ears, necks, legs, arms, and upon their breaſts; though going naked for the moſt part, one would think that a little dreſſing might ſuffice them. If covered, it is only with a Smock of Calicute, a kind of linnen cloth here made, and from hence ſo called: and that not uſed but by thoſe of the better ſort.

3 CRANGANOR lieth on the South of Calecute, a ſmall Kingdom, and affording little worth the ſpeaking of; but that a great part of the Inhabitants of it are of thoſe old Chriſtians, whom they call Chriſtians of St. Thomas. Cranganor, the chief City, which gives name to the whole, affirmed to be ſo full of them, that they amount unto the number of 70000; vexed and expoſed to publick ſcorn both by the Idolaters and Mahometans, amongſt whom they live. The City rich, commodiouſly built for trade, at the mouth of a River, which watering with his crooked ſtreams the moſt part of the Country, makes it fat and flouriſhing.

4 COCHIN, more South than Cranganor, extended on the ſhore for the ſpace of 40 leagues; and therein many Chriſtians of the firſt Plantation, beſides ſome Converts made of later times by the Jeſuites. Towns of moſt note herein, 1 Angamale, the Archbiſhops See of thoſe ancient Chriſtians, fifteen miles from Cochin. 2 Cochin, a Biſhops See, but of later erection, and the chief City of this Kingdom, which takes name from hence. Situate on the mouth or out-let of the River Maugat, by which almoſt encompaſſed like a Demy Iſland. Of great trade in regard of its Haven, very ſafe and ſpacious; as alſo by the friendſhip of the Portugal Nation. By whoſe power and favour they have not only freed themſelves from the King of Calicute, to whom before they did acknowledge ſome ſubjection; but drawn from thence a great part of the traffick alſo: this King permitting them to erect a Caſtle on the Haven, to ſecure their trade, which the other on good reaſons of State forced them to deſtroy. The King hereof in ſome reſpect ſuperiour unto him of Calicute, when a Vaſſal to him: this King being the Pope, or chief Biſhop, as it were, of all the Bramines: for which cauſe reverenced by all the Kings of Malabar, (as the Pope by many Princes of theſe Weſtern parts) who look upon him as the head of their ſuperſtition, and pay him many annual duties.

5 CAI-COLAM is on the South of Cochin, with which agreeing both in the temper of the Air, and fertility of the Earth: which notwithſtanding, the King hereof is not ſo rich as his other neighbours. Here live alſo many of the old Chriſtians, taking name from St. Thomas: but thoſe ſo deſtitute of Prieſts and Miniſters to inſtruct them in the Principles of Chriſtianity, that once in three years there came ſome formerly from the Patriarch of Muzal in Aſſyria to baptize their children. Better I hope provided for in theſe later daies, ſince their emboſoming and reconcilment to the Church of Rome. Their chief Town of the ſame name with the Country, hath a very fair haven, in the faſhion of a Semi-Circle; well traded till deſtroyed by the Portugals, but ſince that re-edified. Of leſs note there are many both towns and villages, but ſuch as do deſerve here no particular mention.

6 COULAN, upon the South of Cai-Colam, extended 20 Leagues more Southwards upon the Shores, is ſaid to be deſtitute of Corn, but plentiful of Pepper, and moſt ſort of Spices. So ſtored with Horſes, and fit Riders to ſerve upon them, that the King hereof keeps 20000 Horſe in continual readineſs either for invaſion or defence. This Kingdom, as the reſt before, takes name from the chief City of it, which is called Coulan, 24 miles from Cochin, and once a Member of that Kingdom; of great reſort by foreign Merchants, by reaſon of the fair and commodious Haven. In former times the ordinary ſeat of the Cobritin, or chief Prieſt of the Bramines, till moved to Cochin; and held to be the Metropolis or Mother City of all Malabar the reſt being thought to be but Colonies of this. Both in the City and the Country there are many Chriſtians, as well of the original foundation of Chriſtianity, as of the late improvements which are made by the Jeſuites.

7 TRAVANCOR, called alſo TRANCANOR, reacheth from the Kingdom of Coulan, to the Cape of Comari, and turning towards the Eaſt, bendeth again unto the North, as far as Cael in the Kingdom of Biſnagar or Narſinga. By which accompt it hath the benefit of the Sea on all ſides except towards the North: reaching in breadth from the Weſt Seas unto the Eaſt about 90 miles. The Country as the Reſt before, inhabited by many with the name of Chriſtians, if they may be called ſo which want Sacraments: the condition of theſe Thomaan Chriſtians in former times being ſo unhappy, that in 50 years before the coming of the Jeſuites, (if the Jeſuites may be believed from whom we have it) they had ſeen no Prieſt, nor other Miniſter of the Goſpel. Chief Towns hereof, (for of thoſe many others of leſs note I ſhall make no mention) are 1 Travancor, the chief City, which gives name to the Province, but neither well built, nor of very much trading. 2 Quilacare, the head City of a Signeury, but held of the Kings of Trancanor, as their next and immediate Lords; though all thoſe Kings alſo Feudataries of the Crown of Narſinga. And were that the worſt Tenure by which they hold, it might be tolerable; but there is a matter of worſe conſequence which attendeth theſe beſotted Princes. The Kingdom here is but a pomp of 12 years continuance, and then endeth in a ſad Cataſtrophe. For at the end of thoſe twelve years, the King repairs to Quilacare, prayeth before the Idol above mentioned, then mounteth on a Scaffold covered with Silk or Tapestry; and in the sight of all his People, gathered together to behold this strange solemnity, cutteth off his nose, ears, lips, and other parts, which he casts towards the Idol, and in conclusion cuts his own throat for his final Sacrifice: his designed Successor being present at this bloody Sacrifice, who at the twelve years end is to do the like. Never was Scepter bought at so dear a rate: For though all Crowns be lined with thorns, yet here the pomps of Sovereinty be less lasting than in other places; the entrance full of fears, and the end of horrors.

These Kingdoms heretofore but one, till the year 900. or thereabouts, were branched and cantoned into these seven, by Sarama Pereimal, the sole Monarch. He by the solicitation of some Arabians, trading to his Ports, became Mahometan; and therein so devout, that he resolved upon a Pilgrimage to Meccha, there to end his days. At his departure he divided his Estates into these seven parts, distributing them amongst the neareſt of his Kindred; assigning unto him of Coulan the preheminence in sacred matters: and the Imperial dignity unto him of Calicute, with the title of Samorin, that is to say, Chief Emperour, or as some write, a God on Earth. He only priviledged with the right and power of Coinage; the rest to be subordinate, if not subject to him. From Pereimal's setting towards to the City of Meccha, the Malabars accompt their reckonings, and begin their years; as the Christians from the birth of their Lord and Saviour. And for a time his Hests were punctually observed. But the Kingdom of Calicute being weakned by the power of the Portugals, the other Kings began to free themselves from that subjection; and in the end to cast off all relation to him, and to his Prerogatives. Yet still he is esteemed of more Power and Majesty than any of the rest of the Kings of Malabar; and looked on with more reverence than any of them. The certainty of his Revenues I have no where met with, but conjecture them to be very great; first in regard of that infinite trading which is managed from most parts of the World in his Port of Calicute, the Customs and Imposts upon which must needs be of exceeding value; and secondly in reference to the wealth of private Merchants, many of which are said to equal some Kings in Africk, and Dukes in Europe not a few.

Quid Domini facient? audent cùm talia Fures.
And if the man such riches have,
Then what must he that keeps the Knave?

What Forces he is able to raise may be fully seen by that which hath been said before; wherein we find him with an Army of 90000 men besieging and taking in the Fort of Chalen, wtih another of 100000 beleaguering the Castle which the Portugals had built near the City of Calicute. And when the said Portugals stirred up the King of Cochin to make head against him, he fell upon them suddenly, both by Sea and Land, with 60000 Land-Souldiers, and 200 good Vessels of War for his Service at Sea. Sufficient Force to reduce the rest of these petit Kings to their old acknowledgments, but that some of them to avoid the danger, have put themselves under the Vassalage, or protection at the least, of the Great Mongul: others by suffering the Portugals to build Forts in their Kingdoms, have engaged them in defence of their Estate against this pretender. His Forces consist most of Foot, Horse being unserviceable in these countries, by reason of those many Rivers which interlace it, and these Foot are compounded most of Gentry, which they there call Nairos, trained to their Weapons when they are but seven years of Age; every one to that weapon which he most delighteth in, which makes them very expert and nimble at them: much priviledged for that cause by the Laws of the Country, and so esteemed of by the King, that out of them his Sisters chuse what men they please to their Husbands, some of them by that means being made the Fathers of the King succeeding.

Nothing else memorable touching the affairs of Calicute, but the way of succession to the Kingdom; the Crown descending upon none of the Kings Children, but on the Son of his eldest Sister, or neareſt Kinswoman. For being that one of the Bramines hath always the maiden-head of his Queens, and that some of these Stallions are continually allowed to keep them company, it is presumed, or very probably supposed, that the Queens Children are the Bramines, and not the Kings.

8 NARSINGA.

NARSINGA is bounded on the South, with Travancer; on the West, with the Mountain Gates; on the North, with Oriſtan, or Orixa; on the East, with the Gulf of Bengala. So called from Narsinga the chief City of it, and the Royal Residence of the King.

The Country is said to be in length 600 miles, or as some say, of as much extent as can be travelled in six months, plentiful in the same Commodities which the rest of India doth afford, except Pepper and some other Spices which are proper to Malabar. Not so well furnished with Rivers as some other places: which want is liberally supplied by water falling from the Mountains and received into trenches, meers, and Lakes, which do wonderfuly cool, moisten and enrich the Land, causing the Corn and Cattel to prosper above all imagination. Most destitute in this kind is the Province of Choromandel, in which if any year passeth without rain, they fall into such extremities, that they are fain to sell their children.

The People in Religion Gentiles, so worshipping one God, as the Lord of all, which is taught them by the light of nature, that they joyn the Devil or their Pagodes in Commission with him, whereto induced by the perswasion of their beastly Bramines, who thereout suck no small advantage. Some Christians there are intermixt of the old Plantation; especially in Maliapur, and the Region of Choromandel: but not so well instructed in the Principles of their own belief, as to be able to convince or convert the Gentiles, nor to disswade them from the use of some Heathenish Customs though barbarous, inhumane, and against all reason; not used in any place, but amongst the Indians. Amongst which I reckon for most savage, the forcing of poor women to burn themselves with their husbands bodies, the womens kindred, not the husbands, thrusting them on these hard conditions; who reckon it a disgrace to their Family, if she should refuse. And because they will be sure not to have that infamy stick upon them, they have ordered that the woman who shall so refuse, must shave her head, and break her Jewels, and not be suffered to eat, drink, or sleep, or company with any body till her death. A life more miserable than the Flames which they seek to shun. This makes them leap into the fire with joy and greedineſs, and to contend which shall be formost; she being thought to have been most loving during his life, which is now most willing to accompany him in his death, and offer her self to his Manes, at the Funeral Pile: whereunto thus alludeth the Poet:

Et certamen habent, lethi, quæ viva ſequatur
Conjugium; pudor eſt non licuiſſe mori.
Ardent victrices, & præbent pectora flammæ;
Imponuntque ſuis ora peruſta viris.
A shame 'tis not to dye; they therefore strive,
Who may be fam'd to follow him alive

The

The Victor burns, yields to the flame her breſt;
And her burnt face doth on her husband reſt.

Chief Cities of this Countrey, 1 Cael, on the borders of Travancer, belonging anciently to the Kings of Coulan, now to thoſe of Narſinga; the people whereabout called Paravi, are a kind of Chriſtians, who live for the moſt part by fiſhing for Pearl, which they ſell to the Portugals, and Bengalan Merchants. 2 Golconda, the chief City of the Province called Muſulipatan, the Lord whereof is a Moor, of the Sophian Sect; but a Vaſſal to the Kings of Narſinga. 3 Chamdagrin, one of the Seat-Royals of the King. 4 Prepeti, three miles from Chamdagrin, memorable for a yearly Feaſt here celebrated in honour of Pereimal (once ſole King of Malabar) reckoned for a Saint at leaſt in theſe parts of India: the offerings at which accuſtomably amount unto 200000 Crowns. 5 Chadambaram, the mother-City of thoſe Pagan Solemnities, which are done to Pereimal; who hath here a Temple endowed with 30000 Ducats of Annual Rent, all conſumed by the Bramines belonging to it, who pretend to have been born out of Pereimal's head. 6 Madura, honoured with the reſidence of the Chochanada, or the chief Prelate of the Bramines of this Kingdom; ſo numerous, that in this Town, and the Territories of it only, are thought to be no fewer than an hundred thouſand. The ſeat alſo of one of three Naichi, or Tributary Kings of the Crown of Narſinga; the other two reſiding at 7 Gingi, and 8 Tanajor, the chief Towns of their Principalities, but not elſe obſervable. 9 Maliapur, called alſo St. Thomas, from an opinion that the body of the Apoſtle was here interred: martyred here by the Idolatrous Indians, whoſe Poſterity in other things like unto other men, are ſaid to have one leg and foot as big as an Elephant's: a puniſhment inflicted on the whole Generation for the ſin of their Anceſtors. How true this is I cannot ſay, but ſure I am that Dorotheus ſaith, that he reſteth at Calamina, where he was ſlain with a Dart. However the Portugals, to make ſome uſe of the old Tradition, removed ſome bones from this place, which were ſaid to be his, and enſhrined them in Goa, their own City; much viſited by profitable Pilgrims, to their great enriching. The City once ſo large and populous, that it contained 330 Temples, for the uſe of divers Nations which reſorted thither. In theſe latter daies deſolate and forlorn, inhabited only by ſome old Chriſtians, till the Portuguez began to people it with new Colonies. 10 Choromandel giving name to a large Sea-Coaſt, lying on the Weſt-ſide of the Gulf of Bengala. 11 Caſta, a Town of Choromandel, in which the woman is not burned with her Husband, as in other places of this Country, but buried quick in the ſame grave with him. 12 Negapatan, in the ſame Region, inhabited for the moſt part by St. Thomas Chriſtians. 13 Tarnaſſari, once the head City of a Kingdom ſo called, the King whereof was able to bring into the field 100000 Horſe and Foot, and 100 armed Elephants, but now ſubject to the King of Narſinga. The people black, but ſo out of love with their own colour, that they willingly proſtitute their Wives or Daughters, to any people of a whiter and more clear complexion. 14 Biſnagar, once the chief City of this Kingdom, whence the King is ſometimes called the King of Biſnagar. In thoſe times 24 miles in compaſs, with nine Gates in it, (amongſt others) continually guarded with Souldiers; and a magnificent Palace, not elſewhere equalled. In the year 1565 ſacked by four of the Mahometan Kings of Decan, who with their joynt Forces had invaded this Kingdom, it became deſolate and forſaken; and the Court removed to 15 Penegardo, eight days journey within the Land (Biſnagar being ſeated on the borders of Decan) but long it had not ſtaid there when removed to 16 Narſinga, where it hath ever ſince been fixed, which is now the chief City of this Kingdom, unto which it gives name; though the King many times calls himſelf by the name of that City where he reſideth for the preſent.

Of the Antiquity of this Kingdom I have little to ſay, theſe Eaſtern parts not being known at all till theſe later times, nor well known in theſe. About the year 1550. their King then reigning was impriſoned by three of his Captains or Commanders; who ſhewed him only once a year to his Subjects, parting the power and government amongſt themſelves. He being dead, and his Son kept in the like reſtraint, Romaragio the firſt Captain aſcended the Throne, Timaragio managed the Eſtate, and Bengabe commanded the Army. But theſe Uſurpers being overthrown by the Kings of Decan, in the year 1565. Timaragio the Survivor took the charge of all; whoſe Son, to make himſelf ſure of the Kingdom, murdered his impriſoned Soveraign (the life and liberty of Kings being much of a date) whence followed many broils and troubles touching the ſucceſſion, till ſettled in the perſon of Chriſmarao, the undoubted Heir: who did not only reſtore peace and quiet to Narſinga it ſelf, but recovered Canara out of the hands of the Idalcan, who had before endangered his eſtate therein. Of the great Army which he led againſt this Idalcan, we have ſpoke already; adding here only, that before he went upon this enterpriſe (called the journey of Rachiol) he ſacrificed in nine days 2036 Beaſts to the Country Idols, the fleſh whereof he cauſed to be diſtributed amongſt the poor. Routed at firſt, and being perſwaded by ſome about him to go out of the field, he is ſaid to have made this Noble Anſwer, That he had rather the Idalcan ſhould boaſt that he had ſlain him, than vanquiſhed him. And thereupon leaping into the thickeſt of his Enemies, and well followed by the valianteſt of his Friends, he obtained the victory. But this vaſt Army of 600000 Foot, 30000 Horſe, 537 Elephants, with neceſſaries anſwerable to ſuch infinite multitudes, ſpeaks only what he can do on extreme neceſſity, or when he had ſome long time of preparation, as he had in that Action. The power of Kings is better meaſured by their ſtanding Forces, than by neceſſitated Levies. And herein this Prince comes not much ſhort of his greateſt Neighbours: his ſtanding Bands conſiſting of 40000 Nairos, or Gentlemen of his own Kingdom, which ſerve on foot; 20000 Horſe, who are either Perſians or Arabians, and 200 Elephants; well paid, and kept in continual readineſs; his Foot defrayed out of his Revenues, his Horſe maintained like the Turks Timariots, out of certain Lands diſtributed amongſt his Captains (ſome of which are ſaid to have a million of Crowns per annum) to furniſh him with theſe ſtable Bands of Horſes and Elephants.

As for his Revenue, it is reckoned at 12 millions yearly, out of which he is thought to lay up three; defraying with the reſt the expence of his Houſhold, and the entertainment of his Foot. This Sum amaſſed together out of the Lands, Mines, and Forreſts of the Country, which are wholly his; and the waters of ſome Rivers (ſold by him to his Subjects) which he monopolizeth, the common people having nothing but their Arms and Labour. Of which, the Mines, Forreſts, and one third of the Lands, he retaineth to himſelf; the other two being divided amongſt his Captains. So that it is no marvel if ſo rich a Country yield him ſuch an income, conſidering it is all his own. I do rather wonder (of the two) it ſhould yield no more.

9 ORISTAN.

ORISTAN or ORIXA, is bounded on the South, with Narsinga; on the West, with Delly and Sanga; on the North, with the Kingdoms of Botanter; on the East, with the Gulf of Bengala, and part of Patanaw or Patane: so called from Orissa, the chief City of it.

The Country hath plenty of Rice, cloth of Cotton, and a fine stuff like silk, made of grass, and there called Terva; with which, together with Long Pepper, Ginger, Myrabolans, and other Commodities here growing, they use to load 25 or 30 Ships from the Haven of Orissa only. The people so well governed, or so hating theft, that in the time of their own Kings, before they came under the Monguls, a man might have travelled with Gold in his hand without any danger. In other points, of the same temper and religion with the rest of the Indians subject to that Prince.

It is generally well watered, and interlaced with many Rivers, which do much moisten and refresh it; but none so beneficial to the Kings hereof as the River Guanga (of old called Chaberis) the waters whereof esteemed sacred by the Kings of Calicute and Narsinga, and much used by them in their sacrifices and superstitious purgations, are wholly ingrossed by this King, who selleth them to those Princes at excessive rates. Besides which Rivers it is watered with a fair Sea-coast, of 350 miles in length; that is to say, from Cape Guaderino in the South, which divides it from the Realm of Narsinga, to Cape Leogora in the East, which parts it from Bengala. But for all that not very much traded, because not so well provided of commodious Havens, as many other Indian Provinces of a far less Territory.

Towns of most note herein, 1 Orissa, on the Sea-side, or not far from it, the best traded Port of all this Kingdom; to which the name thereof is to be ascribed, as the Head-City of the Country. 2 Catcoba, six daies journey within the Land, the ordinary residence of their Kings, before it was subdued by the Great Monguls. 3 Angeli, a well frequented Port, at the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala; from whence many Ships are yearly laden with Indian Wares. 4 Bacolli or Bacola, more within the Land, and once the head City of a Kingdom, but a very poor one. 5 Simergan, where they held it an impiety to eat flesh, or kill any beast. 6 Senerpate, of which little memorable. Nor do I find any thing which deserves much memory in the affairs of this Kingdom, but that the Kings hereof were Gentiles, subdued not many years since by the King of Patanaw; and both grown weaker by that War, by Echebar, the Great Mongul.

10 BOTANTER.

BOTANTER (under which name I comprehend all those Petit Kingdoms which are crowded together in the North and North-East of this part of India) hath on the South, Oristan and Patanaw; on the West, the River Guenga or Chaberis, by which parted from the Realms of Pengab; on the North, the Zagathaian Tartars, divided from it by some branches of Mount Taurus; on the East the famous River Ganges. So called from Rostia, the principal City of Botanter, which is the chief of these small Kingdoms.

The Country great, of three months journey in extent, full of high Mountains, one of which may be seen five days journey off; in which are said to dwell a people with ears of a span long or more, whom otherwise those of the Valleys count as Apes. In those parts which are next Pengab, they are white, and Gentiles; in others, more enclined to the Olive colour. Their garments they wear close to their bodies, so streight that one cannot see a pleit or wrinckle; and those they never put off by night nor day whilst they are able to hang on: nor do they wash at any time, for fear of defiling so pure a Creature as the water. Content with one Wife (deserved to be held a miracle in these Eastern parts) and yet cohabit not with her after two or three Children. When any of them die, the South-sayer is to tell them what to do with his body; according to whose direction (first consulting his books) they burn, bury, or eat it. Few Towns of note there are amongst them. The principal, 1 Bottia, the Metropolis of it. 2 Clamur, of which little memorable. 3 Kukares, the second Kingdom of this rank, large, but exceeding mountainous, as being over-run by the branches of Mount Caucasus, which divides it from Tartary. So named of Kakares the chief Town thereof, by some called Negariot, their Staples for the sale of their cloth, (most of the people being Weavers) bought of them by the Chinoys, and Tartarian Merchants, who resort frequently to those Markets. This is a distinct Kingdom of it self, the Kings whereof are called Dermain, but Vassals to the Great Mongul. And so is he of 3 COUCHE, another Kingdom of this Tract, frontiering upon Cauchin-China, beyond Ganges; so called from Couche, the chief Town of it. The Country rich, by reason that it may be drowned, and dried up again, when the people will: full of good pastures by that means, and those well stored with Sheep, Goats, Swine, Deer, and other Cattel; though the people neither kill nor eat them, but on the contrary build Hospitals for them, in which when lame and old, they are kept while they die. Yet many times they eat their money, and I cannot blame them; their small money being Almonds.

4 GOUREN, the most Northern Realm in this general division, so called of Gor, or Goren, the chief Town of it. The Country in some parts mountainous, out of which springeth the River Sicilly, one of the Tributaries unto Ganges; the rest a kind of Desart or unpeopled Country, joyneth close to Couche. In which are few Villages, grass (or reeds rather) longer than a man, and therein many Buffs, Tigers, and other wild Beasts; none wilder than the Thieves, who frequent the Wildernesses.

In this Tract also are the Kingdoms of 5 RAME, and 6 RECON, joyning upon Zagathay, or enclining towards it; possessed by the Mongul Tartars from the time of Tamerlane, if not before: but Feudataries to the Kings of Chabul or Arachosia, who commanded in the North-East of Persia, and these North parts of India; and from those places drew his Army or the greatest part of it, when called unto the aid of Galgee, the King of Mandao. Here is also the Kingdom of 7 TIPPURA, naturally fenced with Hills and Mountains; and by that means hitherto defended against the Mongul Tartars, their bad Neighbours, with whom they have continual wars. But of these Northern Kingdoms lying towards Tartary, there is but little to be said; and that little of no certain knowledge, those parts being hitherto so untravelled, that they may pass in the Accompt of a Terra Incognita.

11 PATANAW.

PATANE or PATANAW, is bounded on the North, with the Realms of Botanter; on the East, with Ganges; on the West, with Oristan; and on the South, with the Kingdom and Gulf of Bengala. So called from Patane the chief City of it. There is another Kingdom

Kingdom of this name in the further India: but whether it were ſo called becauſe a Colony of this; or from ſome reſemblances in the nature of the ſeveral Countries, or from the ſignification of the word in the Indian Language, I am not able to determine. Certain I am, that though they have the ſame name, yet they are under ſeveral Governments, and ſituate in far diſtant places: no otherwiſe agreeing than in ſome reſemblances, as Holland in the Low-Countries doth with Holland in Lincolnſhire.

The Country yieldeth veins of Gold, which they dig out of the pits, and waſh away the earth from it in great Bolls. The people tall, and of ſlender making, many of them old: great Praters, and as great diſſemblers. The women ſo bedecked with Silver and Copper, eſpecially about the feet, that they are not able to endure a ſhooe. Both Sexes uſe much waſhing in the open Rivers, and that too intermixt together in their natural nakedneſs; eſpecially ſuch as live near the banks of the River Jamena (eſteemed more holy than the reſt) which from Agra paſſing thorow this Country falleth into Ganges.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Patane, a large Town and a long one, built with very broad ſtreets; but the houſes very mean and poor, made at the beſt of earth and hurdles, and thatched over head. The Metropolis of this Kingdom, becauſe the ancienteſt, and that which gives the name unto it. 2 Banaras, a great Town on Ganges, to which the Gentiles from remote Countries uſe to come in Pilgrimage, to bathe themſelves in the holy waters of that River. The Country betwixt this and Patanaw, very fair and flouriſhing, and beautified upon the Rode with handſome Villages. 2 Siripur, the chief Seat of one of the old Princes of this Country; not yet ſubdued by the Great Monguls. 4 Ciandecan, on the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala; the Seat of another of their Kings. One of which memorable for a trick put upon the Jeſuites, when blamed by them for the worſhip of ſo many Pagodes, as contrary both to the Law of God and Nature; For cauſing them to rehearſe the Decalogue, he told them that he did offend no more againſt thoſe commandments in worſhipping ſo many Pagodes, than they themſelves in worſhipping ſo many Saints. 5 Satagam, a fair City (for a City of Moors) once part of Patanaw, ſince aſcribed to Bengala.

The people of this Country properly called Pataneans, but corruptly Parthians, were once of great command and power in theſe parts of India. Lords, for a time, of a great part of the Kingdom of Bengala, into which driven by Baburxa, the Mongul Tartar, the Father of Emanpaxda, and Grand-father of Echebar. Their laſt King being ſlain in that war, twelve of their chief Princes joyned in an Ariſtocracy, and warring upon Emanpaxda had the better of him. After this, their Succeſſors attempted Oriſſan, and added that alſo to their Eſtate, but they could not long make good their fortunes; ſubdued by Echebar the Mongul, and made ſubject to him. Three of them, viz. the Prince of Siripur, the King of Ciandecan, and he whom they call Mauſadalim, retain, as yet (for ought I can learn unto the contrary) as well their ancient Paganiſm, as their natural liberty. The other nine, together with Mahometaniſm, have vaſſalled themſelves to the Great Mongul, now the Lord Paramount of the Country.

12 BENGALA.

BENGALA is bounded on the North, with Patanaw; on the Eaſt, with the Kingdoms of Pegu; on the South and Weſt, with the Gulf of Bengala. So called from Bengala the chief City of it. It containeth in length on the Gulf and River 360 miles, and as much in breadth into the Land. A Country ſtored with all things neceſſary to the life of man, great plenty of Wheat, Rice, Sugar, Ginger, and long Pepper. Such abundance of Silk, and Cotton, and of Fleſh and Fiſh, that it is impoſſible that any Country ſhould exceed it in thoſe commodities. And which crowns all, bleſt with ſo temperate and ſweet an air, that it draws thither people of all ſorts to inhabit it. Here is alſo amongſt other rarities, a Tree, called Moſes, which beareth ſo delicate a fruit, that the Jews and Mahometans who live here, affirm it to be the fruit which made Adam to ſin.

The natural Inhabitants for the moſt part are of white complection, like the Europeans, ſubtil of wit, and of a curious diſpoſition; well skilled in dealing in the world, much given to traffick, and intelligent in the way of Merchandiſe, if not ſomewhat deceitful. Not ignorant of other Arts, but with ſome ſmattering in Philoſophy, Phyſick, and Aſtrology. Stately and delicate both in their Diet and Apparel: not naked, as in others of theſe Indian Provinces, but cloathed in a ſhirt or ſmock reaching to their feet, with ſome upper Garment over that. The women of an ill name for their unchaſtity, though Adultery be puniſhed with cutting off of their noſes. Neat, if not curious and too coſtly in this one cuſtom, that they never ſeeth meat twice in the ſame Pot, but for every boyling buy a new one. In Religion, for the moſt part Mahometans, eſpecially on the Sea-ſhores, which lay moſt open and commodious to the Arabians; by whom Mahometaniſm was here planted many Ages ſince.

Of Rivers we need take no care, having ſpoken of Ganges; That with its many channels may abundantly ſerve to water ſo ſmall a Province. But hereof more anon in a place more proper. Proceed we now unto the Cities. The principal whereof, 1 Bengala, which gave name to the whole Kingdom, ſituate on a branch of the River Ganges, and reckoned for one of the moſt beautiful Towns of all the Indies. Exceedingly enriched by trade, but more by Pilgrimages, by reaſon of the holineſs and divine operations aſcribed by the Indians to the waters of it: there being few years in which not viſited by three or four hundred thouſand Pilgrims. 2 Gouro, the Seat Royal of the ancient Kings. 3 Catigan, on the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala, a well-traded Port. 4 Taxda, once a Town of great traffick, and ſituate in thoſe times on the banks of Ganges; now by the changing of the Channel (occaſioned by the frequent over-flowing of it) above a League off from the River. 5 Porto Grande, and 6 Porto Pequeno, two Towns of the Portugals; but without Forces for defence, or rules for Governments. Places like the Aſylum, which was built by Romulus: whereunto ſuch as dare not ſtay in their own Countries, or any well regulated Cities, uſe to make their reſort; priviledged here to live in all kind of licentiouſneſs.

Here is alſo in the North parts of this Province, or adjoyning to it, the City and Kingdom of ARACHAN; Lying along the banks of Ganges, but ſo remote from the Sea, that it is 50 miles diſtant from the neareſt branch of it. Wealthy, and populous withal; governed heretofore by a King of its own, ſo wallowing in wealth and ſenſual pleaſures, that he had in this City, and the parts adjoyning twelve Royal Palaces or Seraglio's, all ſtowed with women for his luſt. Now ſubject with Bengala and Patanaw, betwixt which it lieth, to the Empire of the Great Monguls.

There are ſome ſmall Iſlands in the Gulf of Bengala, which I account unto that Kingdom. 1 Bazacata, now called Baſſe. 2 Baraſſa, of which name there are five in Ptolomy, three of them by Mercator ſaid to be Mindanao, Gailon, and Subut. 3 Two, called the Iſlands of Good Fortune, Fortune, by him placed under the Æquator, and ſaid to be inhabited by Anthropophagi, or man-eaters; as alſo were three more which he calls 4 Sadadibæ, now named Cainam. 5 Inſulæ Satyrorum, or the Iſles of Satyrs, three in number, the people whereof were reported to have tails like Satyrs. And 6 thoſe called Maniolæ, in number ten, (now Iſlas de Pracel) reported by Ptolomy to be ſo ſtored with Adamant ſtones, that they violently drew to them any ſhips or veſſels which had Iron in them; for which cauſe they which uſed theſe Seas faſtned the planks of their Ships with wooden Pins. But our later Navigators find no ſuch matter, unleſs perhaps it may be in the exploits of Sir Huon of Bourdeaux, where indeed we meet with ſuch an Iſland, in the courſe of his Errautrie.

But to return again to the Kingdom of Bengala, we find it of a different conſtitution from the reſt of the Kingdoms of theſe parts. Not governed by a Family of Succeſſive Princes, deſcended from the Stem of a Royal Anceſtry, as others are. Chance, or neceſſity, had brought thither many Habaſſines, or Æthiopians, who made a Conqueſt of the Country; and choſe a King out of themſelves. To keep what they had gotten, and perpetuate the Regal honour to the Habaſſine Nation, they procured thence yearly certain thouſands of Slaves, whom they trained up unto the wars, advanced unto the higheſt commands in Civil and Military ſervice; and out of them elected one for their Lord and Soveraign: as the Mamalucks in the Kingdom of Ægypt, whom herein they followed. By ſome Arabians trading with them, they came in time to admit Mahometaniſm, amongſt them; on the Sea-coſts eſpecially. Diſpoſſeſſed firſt of ſome part of their Kingdom, lying about Satagen, by the Patanæans, when driven to ſeek new dwellings by Baburxa, the Mongul Tartar: and of their whole Kingdom, by the valour and good fortune of Echebar, who added it unto the reſt of his Eſtate.

Thus have we drawn together all the Indian Provinces on this ſide of Ganges (the Kingdoms of Malabar and Narſinga being but a Parentheſis in the conſtruction of this ſentence) into the hands of the Mongul. So called for his deſcent from the Mongul Tartars, one of five great Tribes or Nations into which that people were divided. Derived orignally from the famous and mighty Tamerlane, who having added almoſt all the Greater and Leſſer Aſia unto his Eſtates, left Perſia, with the parts of India which lay neareſt to it on the North, to Myrza Chorrok, his fourth Son. But his Iſſue failing in Abdula, the fourth of that Line, thoſe Eſtates fell to Abuſaid, deſcended from Meranſha, the third Son of Tamerlane: Whoſe Son and Succeſſor called Zeuzes, by ſome Malaonones, being diſſeized of the greateſt part of the Kingdom of Perſia, by Uſſan-Caſſanes: the rights of all, with the poſſeſſion of Aracboſia (now called Cabul) and Paropamiſus (now Candahor or Sableſtan) together with ſo much of India as was held by thoſe Princes, remained in Hamed, one of the younger Sons of Abuſaid: whoſe Poſterity laying hold on ſuch opportunities as were offered to them, have made themſelves Maſters in few years of this mighty Empire. Whoſe Succeſſors and their atchievements we ſhall here preſent.

The Great Mongul

1473 1 Hamed, the Son of Abuſaid, of the Race of Tamerlane, after the Conqueſt of Perſia by Uſſan-Caſſanes, ſucceeded in Cabul, Candahor, and the parts of the Realms of India ſubject to the Tartars.

1500 2 Babor or Baburxa, in danger to be diſpoſſeſſed of moſt of his Eſtates by the neighbouring Vsbeques, living upon the borders of Perſia, Tartary, and India, whom at laſt he quieted; enlarging his dominions by the Conqueſt of ſome part of Patanæa, and other Kingdoms in the North.

1532 3 Humoyon, the Son of Babor, or Baburxa, commonly called Emanpaxda, vanquiſhed by the Parthians, or Patanæans, and their confederates, craved aid of Tamas, the ſecond Perſian Monarch of this Line, on promiſe to conform to the Sophian Sect: and by that aid confirmed and ſettled his affairs, but held himſelf to the former Principles of his Irreligion.

4 Merhamed or Miramudius, Son of Emanpaxda, called in by Galgee the King of Mandao, againſt Badurius the Cambaian, vanquiſhed the Cambaian King in two pitched fields; and conquered the Kingdoms of Mandao, and Balaſſia, with ſome other Provinces.

5 Adabar, the Son of Merhamed, added the Realms of Delly and Cambaia, unto his Dominions.

1550 6 Mahomet Selabdin, commonly called Echebar, brother of Adabar, the moſt fortunate and victorious Prince of all this Family, ſubdued the Kingdoms of Cacimir, Agra, Decan, Oriſſa, Bengala, Patanæa, and divers other of leſs note.

1605 7 Selim, ſurnamed Jaugheere, the Son of Echebar, who added nothing that I hear of, to his Father's Conqueſts.

1627 8 Blackie, the Grand-child of Selim by his eldeſt Son, (wickedly murdered by the practice of Curroon at Agra) proclaimed King on the death of his Grand-father; but ſhortly after made away by Aſaph Chawn, ſo to make room for 1627 9 Curroon, the third Son of Selim or Jaugheere, and Son-in-law unto Aſaph Chawn; having by his own Miniſters, and the hands of his Father-in-law, murdered the proclaimed King his Nephew, and all the other Princes of the Royal bloud, ſucceeded into the Eſtates, and was crowned at Agra. A wicked and bloody Prince, ſtill living for ought I hear to the contrary.

To look a little on theſe Princes, their eſtate and power; in matters of Religion they have generally been Mahometans, that Religion being long ſince embraced by the Tartars, from whom they originally deſcended. But not ſo ſcrupulous or preciſe in that profeſſion, as to endeavour the ſuppreſſing of any other opinions: both Echebar, and his Son Jaugheere, being ſo inclined unto Chriſtianity, that they permitted the Jeſuites to build Colledges and Churches in Agra it ſelf, the Imperial City, and many other chief Cities in his Dominions. Of Echebar it is reported, that being doubtful what Religion to adhere unto, he cauſed 30 Infants to be ſo brought up, that neither their Nurſes nor any body elſe ſhould ſpeak unto them; reſolving to addict himſelf to the Religion of that Country, whoſe Language ſhould be ſpoken by them, as moſt agreeable to nature; and he did accordingly. For as thoſe Children ſpake no Language, ſo was he poſitive and reſolved in no Religion; Able to ſee the vanities of Mahomet, and the horrible impieties of the Gentiles, but not willing to conform unto the ſtrictneſs of Chriſtianity. And though Selim who ſucceeded, to content his Mahometan Subjects, declared himſelf for that Religion; yet his affairs being once ſettled, and his Throne confirmed, he became as Neutral as his Father; Sultan Curroon now Reigning, Reigning, of the ſame Neutrality, and 'tis well he is ſo; there being no Religion ſo impure and bloudy, which he would not diſhonour by his known ungraciouſneſs.

The Language ſpoken by theſe Princes, and their natural ſubjects the Magores, or Mongul-Tartars, is ſaid by ſome to be the Turkiſh. But I think rather, that it is ſome Language near it, than the very ſame: And that the Language which they ſpeak is the ancient Scythian or Tartarian, from which the Turks (a Scythian people) differ but in Dialecti, a ſprinkling of the Perſian intermixt amongſt them. A mixture not to be denyed, in regard of their long dwelling in that Country, the entercourſe which their Subjects of thoſe parts have with theſe of India; and that the greateſt part of their Souldiers, Officers, and Commanders, are ſupplyed from thence.

There Government is abſolute, if not Tyrannical, the Great Mongul being Lord of all, and heir to every man's eſtate which is worth the having: the Perſons and Purſes of his Subjects at his ſole diſpoſing; ſo that he may amaſs what Treaſures, and raiſe what Forces for the Wars his need requireth; or the Avarice or Ambition of his Miniſters ſhall ſuggeſt unto him. Firſt, for his Treaſures, it is conceived that his Revenue doth amount yearly to fifty Millions of Crowns; and there are reaſons to perſwade that it may be more. The Countrey very rich, and notably well traded from all parts of the world, the Impoſt upon which, is of infinite value; beſides the vaſt ſums of money brought into his Dominions from all Countreys whatſoever, which hold traffick here; their Commodities not being to be parted with but for ready Coyn. The whole Land being alſo his, he eſtates it out for no term certain, retaining a third part of the profits to himſelf, and leaving two thirds to the Occupants, to be held by them during pleaſure. Who if they thrive upon their bargains, they thrive not for themſelves, but him: it being in his power, if he want patience to expect the Incumbents death, to enter on the whole eſtate of the Tenant by the way of Eſcheat: but if he tarry till the death of the Occupant, it falls to him of courſe, the Wife and Children of the deceaſed being fairly dealt with, if he content himſelf with the perſonal eſtate, and leave the Land to them to begin a new, for inſtance, of thoſe huge ſums which in ſo rich a Countrey may be had this way, it is ſaid, that when the Vice Roy of Lahor dyed, he left to Echebar three Millions of Gold, beſides Silver, Jewels, Horſes, Elephants, Furniture and goods, almoſt invaluable: And of one Raga Gagnar, another of his great Officers, that at his death the Great Mongul ſeized of his into his hands 3300 pound weight of Gold, beſides Plate and Jewels. Beſides theſe means of heaping Treaſure, all the Mines of the Countrey are wholly his, and the Preſents given by all ſorts of Suters, hardly to be numbered; none being admitted to his preſence which comes empty handed. Finally, if Badurius, which was King of Cambaia only, could bring into the held at once 500 Tun of Gold and Silver to pay his Army; and after the loſs of all that treaſure, advanced upon the ſudden the ſum of 600000 Crowns, which he ſent to Solyman the Magnificent to come to ſuccour him; both which it is well known he did: What infinite Treaſures muſt we think this Prince to be Maſter of, who hath more than four times the eſtate of the King of Cambaia, and far more trading now than in former times.

By the like Parallel we may conjecture ſomewhat at his Forces alſo; Badurius the Cambaian brought into the field againſt Merhamed, and the King of Mandao, as was partly touched upon before, 150000 Horſe, 500000 Foot, 2000 Elephants armed, 2000 Pieces of braſs Ordnance, of which were 4 Baſiliſks, each of them drawn with 100 yoke of Oxen: and 500 Carts loaded with Powder and Shot. What then may we conceive of this Prince's who is Lord of ſo much a greater Eſtate than he, but that his Levies may be raiſed proportionably to ſo great Dominions? But becauſe poſſibly Badurius did extend himſelf to the utmoſt of his power, and having loſt two Battels was never able to recruit again, which no wiſe Prince would do but in great extremities: It is conceived that the Mongul, without running any ſuch hazards on the loſs of a Battel, can in an inſtant raiſe 50000 Elephants 300000 Horſe and Foot proportionable; and yet have ſtock enough for an After-game, if that he ſhould chance to loſe the firſt. But it is ſeldom that he hath advanced to ſo high a Muſter. For in his action upon the Kingdoms of Decan, he had but an hundred thouſand men, and a thouſand Elephants for fight; though poſſibly of all ſorts of people there might be more than double that number. For in his ordinary removes in time of Progreſs, it is ſaid that his followers of all ſorts amount unto two hundred thouſand; and that his Tents do uſually take up as much ground as the City of London. Yet notwithſtanding this great power, the fortunes of this Empire have not only been at a ſtand, ſince the death of Echebar; but the Rasbooches in Cambaia, the Venazarari in Decan, and other puiſſant Rebels in other parts of his Dominions, hold out ſtill againſt him; ſome of them being ſaid to command as much Land as a pretty good Kingdom, and to have always in readineſs 20000 horſe and 50000 foot, to make good their Mountains. Nature or divine providence have given to Empires, as to men, a determinate growth, beyond which there is no exceeding.

2 INDIA EXTRA GANGEM.

INDIA EXTRA GANGEM is that part of the great Continent of India, which lieth on the further ſide of the River Ganges, from the ſpring or fountain of it, whereſoever it be, to the fall thereof into the Sea by the fifth and laſt mouth thereof, which is called Antiboli: The other four being reckoned into the other part of India, on this ſide of that River. From hence extended Eaſtward as far as China and the Oriental Ocean, on other parts bounded as before.

The Countrey in thoſe elder times ſo renowned for wealth, that one Tract of it had the name of The Silver Region, and another of The Golden Cherſoneſe: this laſt ſuppoſed to be the Ophir of Solomon, of which more hereafter. The people of the ſame nature and diſpoſition, in the elder times, as thoſe which did inhabit on the hither ſide of the Ganges; not ſo well known to the Greeks or Romans as the others were, by reaſon of the remoteneſs of their ſituation; nor ſo well diſcovered ar the preſent. So that the beſt accompt we ſhall be able to give of it (though that lame enough) will not be ſo exact and punctual as of that before; with reference either to the ſtate hereof in the times of the Ancients, or the affairs of it in theſe days.

Mountains of moſt note in it, 1 Bepyrrus, 2 Maandrus, 3 Semanthinus; and 4 thoſe called Damaſi, touched upon before, in our general diſcourſe of India. Out of which, and from other ſrpings, flow theſe following Rivers, 1 Catabeda, 2 Borſanna, 3 Sadus, 4 Temala, 5 Boſynga, 6 Chryſaoras, 7 Polandas, 8 Attabas, theſe three laſt in the part hereof called the Golden Cherſoneſe, 9 Daonas, and 10 Dorias, riſing out of the Mountains called Damaſi. Others there are whoſe names I meet with in my Author, but of no great note: by what names any of them now diſtinguiſhed, it is hard to ſay. Nor find I any who have dared to adventure on it.

Of the chief Towns, 1 Balanga, 2 Cirtatha, 3 Taſale 4 Tagma, and 5 Malthura, have the name of being the Metropolis of their ſeveral Nations, 6 Triglyphon, only honoured with the name of Regia: more memorable perhaps for the white Crows, and bearded Hens, which are ſaid to have been thereabouts, than for being the Seat Royal of ſome petit Prince. After theſe 1 Sada on the banks of the River Sadus. 2 Samba, 3 Sabara, 4 Coly, 5 Zabæ, and 6 Sinda, have the name of Cities. 7 Baracura, 8 Berabonna, 9 Bebynga, 10 Tacola, 11 Sabana, and 12 Thibonobaſtus: are marked out for the moſt noted Empories, or Towns of Trade; the memory of Sabana being ſtill preſerved in the Frith of Sabaon, betwixt this Cherſoneſe, and Sumatra. Others there are not noted by thoſe ſpecial Adjuncts, of which, 1 Cocconagora, and 2 Balonca, in the Golden Cherſoneſe. 3 Rhandamarcotta, in the Midlands. 4 Pentapolis, near the mouth of Ganges, called Antibolum; 5 Aganagara, near the Bay called Sinus Magnus; and 6 Corygaza, one of the principal Towns of the Marandæ, may be ſome of the chief.

The old Inhabitants hereof, beſides the Marandæ laſt ſpoken of, were the Gangarides, and Gangæni, inhabiting on the banks of Ganges; the Tacoræi, bordering on the Mountain Bepyrrus; as the Tilædæ on Meandrus; and the Animachæ, and Cabocæ, near the hills called Damaſi. The Baſadæ, ſaid to be crooked, ſhort, and thick; but of a chearful aſpect, and clear complexion: of which compoſition alſo the Inhabitants of the Golden Cherſoneſe were obſerved to be: the Barræ, and Cudutæ, on the Bay called Sinus magnus; the Leſtori, a thieviſh and Pyratical people, who lived in Caves, and were affirmed to be of ſo hard a skin, that it was not penetrable by an Arrow. Theſe, with the reſt, too many to be here recited, the iſſue in moſt likelyhood of Chavilah and Saba the Sons of Jocktan; of whom we find ſo many footſteps in Sabara Civitate, Sabaraco, Siam, Sabana Emporio, Sobanus Fluvio; and in the Countreys now called Ava, and the Kingdom of Cavelan. Of any of their actions we find little in ancient ſtories, or of the power of any of their former Kings, but that it was given out in the time of Alexander, that beyond the Ganges lived a Prince called Agramenes (the moſt powerful King of all thoſe Countreys) able to bring into the field 200000 Foot, 20000 Horſe, 3000 Elephants, and 2000 armed Chariots. With which report though Alexander was the more inflamed to try Maſteries with him; yet his Souldiers were ſo terrifyed with it (remembring the hard bout which they had with Porus) that no perſwaſions could prevail with them to go further Eaſtward. Nor hear we much of them after this, unleſs the converſion of the Indians in the time of Conſtantine, may be applyed to thoſe on that ſide of the River, as perhaps it may.

As for the latter obſervations and diſcoveries of it, we find it (as moſt barbarous Contreys elſe till reduced to order) diſmembred and ſubdivided into many Eſtates, almoſt as many Realms as Cities, and diſtinct governments amongſt them, as Tribes and Nations. Moſt of them Gentiles in Religion, with whom the name of Chriſt and Chriſtianity not ſo much as heard of, till the coming of the Jeſuites thither; who have not only obtained leave but ſome invitations, for the promoting of the Goſpel. And for Mahometaniſm, though it had got ſome footing on the Sea-coaſts of the Gulf of Bengala, lying moſt convenient for the trade of the Arabian Merchants: yet on the North, and midland parts, and thoſe towards China, and the Oriental Seas, it was as little heard of as Chriſtianity. But for the Kingdoms of this part, I mean the chief of them, to which as many of the reſt as are worth the looking after are to be reduced, they are thoſe of, 1 Brama, or Barma, 2 Cauchin-China, 3 Camboia, 4 Jangoma, 5 Siam, and 6 Pegu.

1 BRAMA.

THE Kingdoms of BRAMA or BARMA have on the Weſt, the River Ganges; on the North, part of Cathay in Tartary: on the Eaſt, Cauchin-China, and on the South, the Kingdom of Pegu. So called from the Brachmanes, Bramanes, or Brames, poſſeſſed for many Ages paſt of theſe North-Weſt Countreys. By the tranſpoſing of a Letter, they are now called the Kingdoms of Barma.

The Countrey of theſe Brames or Bramanes, extendeth Northwards from the neareſt of the Peguan Kingdoms, for the ſpace of 150 Leagues, but far more from Weſt to Eaſt: watered with many great remarkable Rivers, iſſuing from the Lake Chiama, which though 600 miles from Sea, and emptying it ſelf continually into ſo many Channels, contains four hundred miles in compaſs, and is nevertheleſs full of waters for the one or the other.

By the overflowing of which Rivers, and the commodiouſneſs of the Lake, the Countrey is wonderfully enriched, as Ægypt by the overflowings of Nilus. Which notwithſtanding, there are in it many huge Forreſts, in the Weſt eſpecially; and therein many Lyons, Tygers, Ounces, Serpents, and other Creatures of a miſchievous and hurtful Nature.

The whole Countrey containeth the Kingdom of 1 Calam, 2 Prom, 3 Melinta, 4 Miranda, 5 Bacan, 6 Tangu, 7 Ava, and 8 Brama.

Of 1 MELYNTAY, and 2 MIRANDA, I find little written, but that they were conquered with the reſt, by the Vice-Roy of Tangu, in the firſt riſing of his fortunes; becoming the foundation of his following greatneſs. Of 3 BACAM, it is ſaid, that it is plentifully enriched with Mines both of Gold and Silver. In 4 CAVILAN, commonly and contractedly called CALAM, we find apparent foot-ſteps of the name of Cavilah the Son of Jocktan. Of the reſt more is to be ſaid, not much.

5 PROM, though it be a little Kingdom, is exceeding populous, and ſtored with a warlike people. Given by the ſecond King of Pegu of the Tangum Race, to a younger Son; who being by his Father commanded to the ſiege of Marmolan, which had then revolted, not only did decline the ſervice, but rebelled againſt him, and by the ſtrength of this ſmall Kingdom held it out three years. But ſeeing his Fathers fortunes in a manner deſperate, he repented of his diſobedience, and went unto his aid, with an Army of 50000 men of his Natural Subjects. Treacherouſly poyſoned on the way by his chiefeſt Counſeller, for fear the Crime of his Revolt would be charged on him.

6 TANGU, is the name of one of theſe Bramain Kingdoms, ſo called from the chief Town thereof: formerly ſubject with the reſt of the Kings of Pegu, and governed by their ſeveral Vice-Roys. One of which taking his advantage of the wars between the Kings of Pegu and Siam, began to ſet up for himſelf; and huſbanded his affairs ſo well, that he became ſole Lord of theſe Bramain Kingdoms; as afterwards of all the reſt in this part of India. Not long enjoyed by his Succeſſor, when diſpoſſeſſed and ſlain by one whom he marryed to his Siſter, and made Governour of this very Province. In which he bore himſelf ſo ſtiffely, that being ſent for by his King to aid him againſt ſome of his Rebels, and to bring all the Inhabitants of the Countrey with him: he anſwered that he would ſend one half; to ſend all, unreaſonable. Incenſed with which denyal, the King armed againſt him; but he put the Leaders to the ſword, and ſeized their followers. After this being now in Arms, and despairing of reconcilement, he took upon himself the Title of King of Tangu; and to secure himself therein, joyned with the King of Arrachan against his Sovereign: whom he most barbarously slew (after he had put himself into his hands) with his Wife and Children. Neither enjoyed he long the fruits of his villany, subdued not long after, with the rest of these Indian Princes, by the King of Barma; of which more hereafter.

deſparing

7 AVA, another of these Kingdoms, and one of the Plantations of Cavilah also, is liberally furnished with all things necessary for the life of man. It affordeth also store of Rubies, which they dig out of the Mountains, a certain creature which breeds Musk, together with great plenty of Horse and Elephants. Their chief City is called Ava, which name it giveth to the River upon which it is built, issuing out of the Lake of Chiamai, and communicates the same to the whole Province. Subject for many Ages past to the King of Pegu, till conquered by the Vice-Roy of Tangu, as before is said; and by him given, with the Title of King, unto one of his brothers. Who rebelling against the Son and Successor of his Benefactor, and by him slain in single Combate, this Kingdom was conferred on a Son of the Conquerour. A Prince of more vertue than his Brother, and one which grew at last unto so great power, that in the bustle or combustions of the Kingdom of Pegu, he surprized or forced the Fort of Siriangh, formerly given unto the Portugals by the King of Arrachan, slew all the Souldiers, and spitted Philip de Britto, who commanded it. After which, gathering together the dispersed Peguans, and repairing part of the City for them, he was likely to have made himself a good bargain by it; if the sudden coming of the King of Barma, had not spoiled his markets.

8 BRAMA or BARMA, the most Southern of these Bramain Kingdoms, the King whereof was Feudatarie to the Kings of Pegu, or of their appointment. Of no accompt when the Portugals came first acquainted with India, nor in many years after; now of most renown. For sitting still when all the rest of their neighbours were embroyled in wars, they gathered so much power and strength, that in the end, one of the later Kings hereof observing how the Forces of his neighbouring Princes were consumed, and their Treasures wasted, levied an Army of 300000 fighting men, 40000 Elephants, with all things sutable. And with this power subdued the Kingdoms of Macin, and Arrachan; conquered the Cities of Pegu and Odia, (the two chief Cities of these parts) invaded the Kingdom of Siam, and possessed himself of it: making in little time all the lesser Princes to become his Tributaries, as they still continue.

2. CAUCHIN-CHINA.

CAUCHIN-CHINA is bounded on the West, with the Kingdoms of Brama; on the East, with part of the great Realm of China; on the North, extending towards Tartary; on the south, bordering on Camboia.

The Countrey aboundeth with Gold, Silver, Aloes, and great store of Silks, of which the Inhabitants make Taffata, and other stuffs. It affordeth also plenty of Porcellane earth, which being made into Cups, Dishes, and other Utensils of houshold, is sold by the name of China-ware; well counterfeited of late amongst us, by putting a white crust on our Potters earth, as neat for use and shew as the natural China.

The people very stout and warlike, especially for Foot-service; though they have many horses here, and those fit for war. Well-practiced on their Peeces also, on which they spend great store of powder; but not so much in War, as in Sports and Triumphs: yet making much more than they spend, the earth in some parts yielding very fit materials for that commodity. Trained up to Manufactures, especially to the making of Powder, Silks, and Porcellane, which they sell to the Chineses. Idolaters for the most part, as are those of China, whose Characters and Language they also use: but so that there appear some inclinations unto Christianity, in many of them; who have erected many Crosses, and do admit the Pictures of the blessed Virgin, and the final Judgment. Men not unlikely to have made a further Progress in the Gospel, if they had met with better Teachers than these Laymen's Books.

The chief City hereof is called Cauchin-China by the name of the Province, situate on a River coming out of China, and passing hence into the bottom of a large and capacious Bay. The whole Countrey divided into three Provinces, and as many kings; over which one Paramount: but he and they the tributaries of the King of China. Belonging hereunto is a little Island called Ainao, ten miles from the Land, where the Inhabitants have a great trade of fishing for Pearls. The only Province of the Indies, which is wholly subject to the power of a Foreign Prince; the Portugals holding in this Continent many Towns and Cities, but no whole Provinces.

3. CAMBOIA.

CAMBOIA is bounded on the North, with Cauchin China; on the East and South, with the Ocean; on the West, with parts of the Kingdom of Siam, and the Realms of Jangoma. So called from Camboia, the chief City of it. Divided commonly into the Kingdom of Champa, and Camboia specially so called.

1 CHAMPA, the northern part hereof, bordereth on Cauchin-China; and is liberally provided of all necessaries: besides which, there is plenty of Gold, and of the wood called Lignum Aloes, prized at the weight thereof in Silver, much used in Bathes, and at the Funerals of great persons. This a distinct Kingdom of it self, but subject with the rest to the King of Barma. The chief City of it, called by the name of Champa, which it communicates to the Countrey, is situate near the Sea-side, and of very good traffick.

2 CAMBOIA specially so called, lyeth South of Champa, a very great and populous Countrey, well stored with Elephants and Rhinoceros, which last the Indians call Abades. It yieldeth also great plenty of a sweet-wood which they call Calamba; as precious and as much esteemed of as the wood of Aloes, (if not the same, or some Species of it as I think it is) together with abundance of Rice, Flesh, and Fish; well-watered with the River Mecon which issuing out of China, and having received many lesser streams falleth first into a great Lake of 200 miles compass, and thence into the Indian Ocean; making betwixt the Lake and that an hundred Islands. By the overflowings of this River the whole Countrey is enriched (as Ægypt by the like overflowing of Nilus) the Inhabitants at those times betaking themselves to their upper Rooms, and passing altogether by boats from one place to another.

The people are conceived to be strong and warlike, though more enclined to Merchandise and Navigation than to deeds of Arms. Idolaters of the worst kind, esteeming Men and Beasts of a like condition in regard of any future judgement: of late, beginning to set up, and adore the Cross, which is (it seems) the first Principle of Religion in which the Friers are wont to instruct their Converts. Not weaned as yet by these new Teachers, from burning the women with their Husbands, common to them with many other Indian people, nor from burning their Nobles with the King, uſed any here; but voluntarily to expreſs their loves, not upon conſtraint.

The chief Towns of it, 1 Camboia, one of the three prime Cities of this part of India; the other two being Odia and Pegu, of which more anon. Situate on the River Mecon before it was deſtroyed: where it hath its fall into the Sea. Well traded, as the Staple for all this Countrey, the Commodities whereof are brought hither, and here ſold to the Merchants. 2 Cudurmuch, twelve Leagues from Camboia, on the ſame River alſo. 3 Coul, on the Sea-ſide in the very South-weſt Angle of all the Countrey. The Kings whereof, once abſolute, and at their own diſpoſing, till invaded by a vaſt Army of the neighbouring Laos: in which their King being ſlain, and his forces weakned, his Son and Succeſſor was conſtrained to become a Vaſſal to the Crown of Siam. But fearing the loſs of his Eſtate, when that Kingdom was made ſubject to the Kings of Pegu, in the year 1598. he applyed himſelf unto the Portugals, offered them a Peninſula (part of his Dominions) extending three Leagues into the Sea; and ſent to the Jeſuits for ſome of their Society to live and preach amongſt his people. Not able for all theſe honeſt Policies to preſerve himſelf from being made a Feudatary of the King of Barma.

4 JANGOMA.

JANGOMA, or the Countrey of the LAOS, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Camboia and Champa, from which parted by the River Menon; on the Weſt, with the River of Pegu, by which divided from that Kingdom; on the South, with the Realm of Siam; on the North, with Brama.

It took its name from Jangoma, the chief Province of it; the other two (for there be three of them in all) being thoſe of Lavea, and Curroy. All of them joyned together called the Countrey of Laos, by the name of the people. A mighty Nation and ſtout, by Religion Gentiles, naked from the middle upwards, and truſſing up their hair like a Cap. Their Countrey very rich and level, but very ill neighboured by the Gueoni (Paulus Venetus giveth them the name Gaugigu) who poſſeſs the Mountains; whence falling in great companies to hunt for men, whom they Kill and eat, they commit cruel butcheries amongſt them. Inſomuch as this people, not able to defend themſelves againſt there fury, or rather wanting good Leaders to conduct and order them (for it is ſaid that they can make a Million of men) were fain to put themſelves under the protection of the King of Siam, whom they obeyed no further than the humour took them.

Towns they have none of any note, except thoſe three which give name to the ſeveral Provinces, and thoſe of no note neither but for doing that. The people for the moſt part live on the banks of their Rivers, where they have Cottages of Timber; or elſe upon the Rivers in Boats and Shallops, as the Tartarians of the Deſarts in their Carts or Wheel-houſes. One of their Rivers (commonly called River of Laos) ſaid to extend 400 Leagues within the Land, as far as Tartary, and China; and from July to September to invert its courſe, and flow back ſtrongly towards its fountain. Not governed by any certain rule or order, till they ſubmitted to the Patronage of the King of Siam; and then no other than they liſted: though for their ſakes, that King engaged himſelf in a War againſt the Cannibals, their moſt deadly Enemies, accompanied with 25000 Foot, 20000 Horſe, and 10000 Elephants. Secured by his protection from the teeth of thoſe Cannibals (of whom otherwiſe they had been devoured) in the year 1578. they deſcended the River in great multitudes, to the number of 200000; and fell into the Realm of Camboia: but they made an unproſperous adventure of it. For though the King of Camboia loſt his life in the Battel, yet he gave them ſuch a fatal Blow, that they were almoſt all ſlain, drowned, or captivated in the fight. Weakned wherewith they became an eaſie prey to the Vice-Roy of Tangu, when he firſt made himſelf ſole Maſter of this part of India. Who giving to his Brother the Kingdom of Ava, and leaving to his Eldeſt Son the Kingdom of Pegu, with the Soveraignty over all the reſt, conferred this Countrey, with the Title of King of Jangoma, on a younger Son. But he, begotten on a Daughter of the King of Pegu, and born after his Father had attained this whole Empire, was eaſily perſwaded by the Talapoies, (ſo they call their Prieſts) that his Title was better than that of his Elder Brother, who was born before it. Prevented in his claim by the Kings of Arrachan and Tangu, by whom that King was ſlain, and his Kingdom waſted. How he ſped afterwards I find not: But probable it is, that he ſubmitted with the reſt to the King of Barma.

5 SIAM.

SIAM is bounded on the North, with Jangoma, and part of Pegu; on all other parts, with the wide Ocean, ſave that it toucheth on the Eaſt, with a part of Camboia; and on the Weſt, with a Point of Pegu. So called from Siam the chief of all thoſe Kingdoms which paſs under this name, as that from Siam the chief City of it.

The Countrey of greater length than breadth, ſtretcheth it ſelf Southwards into the Sea many hundred miles, in form of a Peninſula or Demy-Iſland, called anciently Aurea Cherſoneſus, or the Golden Cherſoneſe: one of the five famous Cherſoneſes or Peninſulaes of the elder Writers; the other four being Peloponneſus in Greece, the Thracian Cherſoneſe near Proponis, the Taurican Cherſoneſe in the Euxine, and the Cimbrian Cherſoneſe in the North of Germany; now part of Denmark. It had the name of Aurea, or the Golden, ſuperadded to it, from its plenty of Gold, for which much celebrated by the Ancients, both Greeks and Romans, (and therefore not improbably thought by ſome to be Solomons Ophir) ſtill famous with the reſt of the Countreys of the Kingdom of Siam, for abundance of Gold, Silver, Tin, and other Metals; great quantity of Pepper ſent yearly thence, with ſtore of Elephants, and Horſes. The whole Countrey very fat and fertile, well ſtored with Rice, Corn, Graſs, and all other neceſſaries.

The people generally much addicted to pleaſures, if not to Luxury; delighted much in Muſick and rich Apparel: and ſuch as ſtand much upon their honour. For their inſtruction in good letters they have publick Schools, where their own Laws, and the Myſteries of their own Religion, are taught them in their natural Language; all other Sciences in ſtrange Tongues underſtood by none but by the Learned. To tillage they can frame themſelves, and are painful in it; but by no means will follow any Mechanical Arts, which they put over to their Slaves. In Religion for the moſt part Gentiles, worſhiping the four Elements amongſt other Gods; to each of which as they are ſeverally affected, ſo are their bodies to be diſpoſed of: either burnt, buried, hanged, or drowned, after their deceaſe; as in their lives they were moſt devoted to the Fire, Earth, Air, or Water. Some Chriſtians here alſo in and about the parts poſſeſſed by the Portugals, but more Mahometans; who poſſeſſing two hundred Leagues of the Sea-coaſts of this Countrey, have planted that Religion in moſt part of the Countrey now by them poſſeſſed.

It containeth in it many Kingdoms, ſome of little note; Thoſe of moſt obſervation, 1 Malaca, 2 Patane, 3 Jor, 4 Muantay, 4 Muantay, and 5 Siam, properly and especially so called. Of which Malaca is now in the hands of the Portugals, Jor and Patane are possessed by the Arabians or Saracens, the other two have followed the fortunes of the Kings of Siam.

1. The Kingdom of MALACA taketh up the South part of the Golden Chersonese, extended towards the North from the Cape or Promontory which Ptolomy alleth Malanconia, in the extreme South point hereof near unto Sabana, then a noted Emporye for the space of 270 miles. So called from Malaca the chief City of it, of old times called Musicana, or built very near it; from whence this Tract is called by Strabo, Musicani Terra. The City seated on the banks of the River Gaza, which is here said to be 15 miles in breadth; by the frequent overflowings whereof, and the nearness of it to the Line (being but two degrees in the North) the Air hereof, and all the Territory belonging to it, is very unwholsome; and for that cause the Countrey but meanly populous. In compass it is said to be 20 miles; of great wealth, because of almost infinite trading; for spices, Unguents, Gold, Silver, Pearls, and precious stones, the most noted Empory of the East. Insomuch that it is said by Ludovico Barthema, who was there before the Portugals knew it, that it was traded by more Ships than any one City in the world; more by far since the coming of the Portugals to it, than it was before. The People (as in all this tract) of an Ash-colour, with long hair hanging over their faces, bloudy and murderous; especially when they meet one another in the Night. Few other Towns of any note, in a place so unhealthy, except 2 Sincapura, situate East of Malaca, near the Promontory of old called Magnum; supposed by some to be the Zabe of Ptolomy: and that more probably, than that it should be his Palura, as Maginus would have it, Palura being a City of the Hither India, and different at the least 20 degrees of Longitude from any part of this Chersonese. But whatsoever it was called in the former times, it was in these later Ages the mother of Malaca; the greatest part of the Trade and people being removed from thence to this newer foundation: before which time it was the best frequented Empory in these parts of the East. 3 Palo Zambilan, 120 miles on the West of Malaca, from whence to Sincapura, coasting about the Southern Cape (now called Cape Liampo) we have a Sea-shore of 270 miles, as before was said. No other habitation of any reckoning, but a few Sheds upon the shore for the use of Fisher-men, and some scattered Villages in the Land: the People dwelling most on Trees for fear of Tigers.

This Tract in former times possessed by the Kings of Siam, about the year 1258. became a Kingdom of it self; founded by Paramisera, and some other of the Javan Nobility, who flying the tyranny of their own King, came into this Countrey; where they were lovingly received by Sangesinga, then reigning under the Siamite in Sincapura. Him they perfideously slew, and invested Paramisera in his Dominion. Outed of which by the King of Siam, he was forced to seek a new dwelling; and after two or three Removes, fell upon the place where Malaca now standeth: which City, pleased with the commodiousness of the situation, he is said to have built. The trade of Sincapura in short time removed hither also, which so increased the wealth and power of the Kings hereof, that joyning with the Moors, who began to plant themselves on the shores adjoyning, and receiving withal the Law of Mahomet, they began to cast off all subjection to the Kings of Siam, to whom the Son and Successor of Paramisera had submitted his new-raised Kingdom, and became their Homager. Incensed wherewith, the Siamite about the year 1500 sent out a Navy of 200 Sail to distress it by Sea; and an Army of 30000 men and 400 Elephants to besiege it by Land. But before he was able to effect any thing, hindred by tempests, and the insolencies of some of his Souldiers, the Portugals in the year 1511. under the conduct of Albuquerque had possessed themselves of it, who built there a Fortrese and a Church. And though Alodinus the Son of the expelled King (whose name was Mahomet) endeavoured the regaining of his Estate; and that the Saracens, Hollanders, and the Kings of Jor and Achen (two neighbouring Princes) envying the great fortunes of the Portugals, have severally and successively laboured to deprive them of it: yet they still keep it in defiance of all oppolition which hath been hitherto made against them.

2 North unto that of Malaca lyeth the Kingdom of TOR, JOR, or JOHOR, so called of Jor, or Johor, the chief City of it. Inhabited for the most part by Moors, or Saracens, Mahometanism by their means prevailing on the Natives of the Countrey also. A Kingdom of no great extent, but of so much power, that joyning his Land-forces with the Navy of the King of Achen, he besieged Malaca, and built a Royal Fort before it; in which, when taken by Paul de Lima by the defeat of this King, were found 900 Pieces of brass Ordnance. After this, picking a quarrel with the King of Paban, he burnt his Houses, Barns, Provisions, and the Suburbs of the City it self; but in the course of his affairs was interrupted by the King of Achen (one of the Kings in the Isle of Sumatra) his old Confederate; who after 29 days siege took the City of Jor. What afterwards became of this King or Kingdom, I am not able to resolve. In former times it did acknowledge him of Siam for the Lord in Chief.

3 More Northward yet lyeth the Kingdom of PATHANE, denominated from Patane, the chief City of it: but different from Patane in the other India, as Cleveland in York-shire from Cleveland in Germany; or Holland in the Low-Countreys from Holland in Lincolnshire, as hath been fully shewn before. The City made of Wood and Reed, but artificially wrought and composed together; the Mesquit only (most of the people being Mahometans) is built of Brick. The Chinois make a great part of the Inhabitants of it, insomuch that in this small City there are spoken three Languages, viz. The Chineſe, used by that people; the Malayan (or Language of Malaca) which is that of the Natives; and the Siam, to the King whereof this small Crown is Feudatary. Built of such light stuff and combustible matter, it must needs be in great danger of fire; and was most miserably burnt in the year 1613. by some Javan Slaves in revenge of the death of some of their fellows: at which time the whole City was consumed with fire, the Mesquit, the Queens Court, and some few houses, excepted only. The Countrey governed of late years by Queens, who have been very kind to the English and Hollanders, granting them leave to erect their Factories in Patane. Not memorable for any great exploit by them performed, but that a late Queen a little before that dismal fire, offended with the King of Pan or Paban, who had marryed her Sister, and reigned in a little Island not far off, she sent against him a Fleet of 70 Sail, and 4000 men; by which compelled to correspond with her desires, he brought his Queen and her Children with him to make up the breach.

4 The Kingdom of Siam, strictly and specially so called, is situate on the main-land (the rest before described being in the Chersonese) betwixt Camboia on the East, Pegu on the West, the Kingdom of Muantay on the North, and the main Ocean on the South. The chief Cities of it, 1 Socotai, memorable for a Temple made wholly of metal 80 spans in height, raised by one of the Kings; it being the custom of this Countrey, that every King at his first coming to the Crown, is to build a Temple; which he adorned with high Steeples, and many Idols. 2 Quedoa, renowned for the beſt Pepper, and for that cauſe very much frequented by foreign Merchants. 3 Tavay, upon the Sea-coaſt where it joyneth to Pegu. Whence meaſuring along the ſhores till we come to Champa before mentioned, being all within the Dominions of the King of Siam (not reckoning the Cherſoneſe into this Accompt) we have a Sea-coaſt of the length of 600 Leagues. 4 Lugor, upon the Sea-ſide alſo, near that little Iſthmus, which joyneth the Cherſoneſe to the Land; from whence to Malaca, is 600 miles ſail all along the coaſt. 5 Calantan, the head City of a little Kingdom, but ſubject to the Crown of Siam. 6 Siam, the chief City of this part of the Kingdom, which it giveth this name to. A goodly City, and very Commodiouſly ſeated on the River Menam, for Trade and Merchandiſe. So populous and frequented by foreign Nations, that beſides the Natives, here are ſaid to be thirty thouſand houſholds of Arabians. The houſes of it high built by reaſon of the Annual deluge, during which time they live in the Upper-rooms; and unto every houſe a Boat for the uſe of the Family. Thoſe of the poorer ſort dwell in little ſheds, made of Reed and Timber; which they remove from place to place for the beſt convenience of their Markets: And yet ſo ſtrong, that being beſieged by the Tanguan Conquerour, then King of Pegu, Anno 1567. with an Army of fourteen hundred thouſand fighting men, for the ſpace of 20 months together, it reſolutely held good againſt him: not gained at laſt by Force, but Treaſon, one of the Gates being ſet open to him in the dead time of the night, and by that means the City taken. The people hereof are thought to be inclining to Chriſtianity; but hitherto ſo ill inſtructed in the Principles of it, that they maintain, amongſt many other ſtrange opinions, that after the end of 2000 years, (from what time I know not) the World ſhall be conſumed with fire; and that under the aſhes of it ſhall remain two Eggs, out of which ſhall come one man and one woman, who ſhall people the World anew.

5. MUANTAY, the laſt of theſe Kingdoms, lieth betwixt Jangoma and Siam; memorable for nothing more than the City of Odia, or Udie, the principal of all the Kingdoms of Siam; and the uſual reſidence of thoſe Kings. Situate on the banks of the River Caipumo, and containing in it 400000 Inhabitants, of which 50000 are trained to the Wars, and in continual readineſs for preſent ſervice. For though this King be Lord of nine ſeveral Kingdoms, yet he uſeth none of them in his Wars but the natural Siamites, and thoſe of this City, and the reſt of his Subjects of Muantay. It is ſaid that for the uſe of this City only (being ſeated like Venice upon many little Iſlands, not bridged together) there are no fewer than 200000 Sciffs, and Shallops; ſerving to waft the people from one place to another. By means hereof of great ſtrength, and almoſt impregnable. But being beleaguered by the Tanguan or Bramin Conquerour with ten hundred thouſand fighting men (an Army big enough to have buryed a greater City than this, if every man had but caſt a ſhovel full of earth upon it) it was won at laſt.

The Government of theſe Kings of Siam, was abſolute heretofore, if not tyrannical, he being ſole Lord of all the Land in his Kingdoms; which he either gave to his Nobles, or Farmed out to Husbandmen, during life or pleaſure, but never paſſed over unto any the right of Inheritance. And theſe he grants unto his Subjects, beſide rents in money, upon condition to maintain a determinate number of Horſe, Foot, and Elephants: thereby enabled without further charge unto the Subject, to levy 20000 Horſe, and 250000 Foot for preſent ſervice; beſides far greater numbers out of the reſidue of his people, if occaſion be. And for his ordinary Guard he was ſaid to keep 6000 Souldiers, and 200 Elephants, of which Beaſts he is reported to have 30000, of which every tenth Elephant is trained up to the War. By reaſon of ſo great a power he became Maſter of the Realms of Camboya and Campa; held thoſe of Malacha, Jor, Pahan, and Patane, as his Vaſſals and Tributaries; with that of Jangoma and the Laos, under his protection. But when the fatal time was come, and that his City of Siam was betrayed to the King of Pegu, he poyſoned himſelf upon the news, his Son becoming Tributary to the Pegnan Victor. This Son of his, too much a Prince to be a ſubject, revolted from a Son of the Peguan, a vicious and tyrannical King, degenerating from the gallantries of ſo worthy a Father; by whom he was beſieged in Siam with 900000 fighting men. Unable to reſiſt his Army if he had preſently declared ſuch a reſolution, he entertained the King with Treaties, and promiſes of delivering the City to him, till the third month after, (which was March;) when ordinarily the River was to overflow all the Countrey, for 120 miles about: by which ſudden and violent inundation and the Sword together (the Siamites waiting diligently for the opportunity) there periſhed all of this great Army, except 70000. After this blow, the conquering Siamite, Anno 1600. beſieged and endangered the City of Pegu, of which more anon; and dying in the year 1605 left his Eſtate unto his Brother. Whoſe Son ſucceeding, ſettled a Factory in Siam of the Engliſh Merchants, Anno 1612, and was in a fair way of obtaining the Soveraignty of Pegu, then deſtroyed and waſted; if the violent and unreſiſtable coming of the King of Barma had not croſſed him in it: to whom now ſubject with the reſt of the Indian Princes, on that ſide of the River.

6 PEGU.

PEGU is bounded on the Eaſt, with Jangoma, and a part of Siam; on the North, with the Kingdoms of Brama; on the Weſt and South, with the Kingdom and Gulf of Bengala. So called from Pegu the chief City, as that by the name of the River upon which it ſtandeth. Divided commonly into the Kingdoms and Eſtates of 1 Verma, 2 Macin, 3 Orachan, 4 Martavan, and 5 Pegu, ſpecially ſo called.

1. VERMA is the name of a ſmall Kingdom bordering upon Bengala; and ſo denominated from Verma, the chief Town thereof. A Kingdom which hath no Port or Haven at all; and therefore wholly freed of Moors and Mahometans, which can be ſaid of no other of theſe Indians Kingdoms.

The People black, naked above the Waſte, and covered beneath it only with a Veil of Cotton; in matter of Religion, Gentiles; and in war right valiant. This laſt apparent by the long and frequent Wars which they had with the Peguans; to whom made tributary in concluſion, but not fully conquered.

2. MACHIN, ſo called from Macin the chief City thereof, is another of theſe Peguan Kingdoms. Of ſmall eſteem, but for the great quantity of the Sweet-wood, by the Latines called Lignum Vitæ, by the Natives Calamba, ſo much in uſe for Funerals and Bathes, (as was ſaid before) held alſo by the Indians for a ſoveraign and unparallell'd Medicine againſt many dangerous diſeaſes; great quantities whereof are brought hence yearly by the Merchant. One of the firſt Kingdoms which was conquered by the King of Barma, (upon whom it bordereth) in the begining of his Fortunes.

3. ORACHAN, or Arrachan, lieth on the Weſt of Macin, and the South of Verma; environed round with with Mountains, and impaſſable Woods. Chief Towns whereof, 1 Dianga, taken and deſtroyed by the Portugals, in the quarrels betwixt them and the King of Arrachan, Anno 1608. 2 Sundiva, ſituate in an Iſland unto which it giveth name, ſix Leagues off from the Continent of Bengala, to which it formerly belonged. Subdued by the Portugals, Anno. 1602. and from them taken by this King about two years after, and made a member of his Kingdom. The Iſland 30 Leagues in compaſs, very ſtrong, fruitful, and the Town well fortifyed. 3 Arrachan, the head City, which gives name to all, diſtant from the Sea 45 miles, but ſeated on a large and capacious River. The King and Kingdom of no note, till the ruins of Pegu, to the Crown whereof it once pertained. In the Deſolation of which State the King hereof combining with him of Tangu, beſieged the ſecond Peguan King in the Caſtle of Mecao; and had betwixt them the whole Pillage of that wealthy City, together with the poſſeſſion of the beſt Towns of it. After this victory, he returned to Arrachan in triumph, leading with him the White Elephant of the King of Pegu, ſumptuouſly adorned; the Brother and two Sons of the Peguan following in the Pageant. A ſolemn and magnificent entry. The better to aſſure himſelf of his new Dominions, this King beſtowed upon the Portugals the Fort of Siriangh, on the River Pegu. For which favour, ill-requited by the Portugals, who had taken his Son, and put him to a grievous ranſom, they brake out into open Wars. In the purſuit whereof, after many loſſes, the King recovered from them the Iſle of Sundiva; and manning out a Fleet of 1200 ſail (of which 75 were of ſo great burden, as to carry every one twelve Pieces of Ordnance) and in that Fleet 30000 Souldiers, 8000 hand-guns, and 3500 greater Pieces, beſieged the Fortreſs: aſſiſted in that Action alſo by the King of Tangu. And though he failed in his deſign, yet like enough he had prevented the King of Ava, who took it in the year 1613. as before is ſaid, had he not been outed in the mean time of his own Kingdom by the King of Barma: of whoſe great riſe, the conquering of the Realms of Macin and Arrachan were the firſt foundation.

4. MARTAVAN, the richeſt of theſe Kingdoms, lieth South to Arrachan, a little turning towards the Weſt. The ſoyl ſo fertile, that it yieldeth three Harveſts in a year; and ſent annually fifteen Ships to Cochin, and as many to Malaca, laden with Rice. Rich alſo in Mines of Iron, Lead, Steel, Braſs, Silver, Gold, and Rubies, and very liberally provided of Springs and Rivers. The Forreſts well-ſtored with Harts, Bores, and Buffoles; ſtore of Pines and Palms: the Woods with Sugar-Canes, many excellent fruits; the ordinary herbs and ſhrubs either Medicinal or Odoriferous. The principal City of it called alſo Martavan, ſituate on an Haven open at all times of the year, and not choaked with Sands, as uſually other Havens are in the Indian Winter: of great trading, much ſplendour, and a temperate air. Faithful unto the laſt to the Crown of Pegu, to the Kings whereof their own were ſubject; and in that conſtancy they twice repulſed the King of Siam, who then had conquered the moſt part of the Kingdom of Pegu. Angry whereat, the Siamite cauſed two of his cowardly Captains to be caſt into a Caldron of ſcalding Oyl; and at the third Aſſault became Maſter of it. Bannalaius the old King hereof (99 years old) with his heir apparent, and 200000 of his Subjects being compelled to hide themſelves in the Woods and Deſarts.

5. PEGU, the moſt predominant Kingdom, lieth like a Creſcent or half-Moon on the Gulf of Bengala; extending on the coaſt from Negrais unto Tavan, the next Town of Siam, for the ſpace of three hundred miles, and upwards, but little leſs in breadth, if not quite as much. So called from the River Pegu, which runs through the midſt of it, and gives this name alſo unto Pegu the moſt noted City.

The Soyl hereof exceeding fruitful, by reaſon of the annual overflowings of the River, which do yearly fatten it, fit to bear Wheat, and of Rice yielding an incredible quantity. It affordeth alſo many Rubies, great numbers of Civet-Cats, plenty of Lacca, (a Gum there made by Ants, as here Bees make Wax) ſtore of Elephants, and abundance of Parrots, which ſpeak plainer, and are much fairer than in any place elſe.

The people of a mean ſtature, ſomewhat corpulent, and naturally beardleſs. If any ſtragling hair thruſt forth, they always carry Pinſers with them, to pull them out. Nimble and ſtrong, but yet not very fit for War; ſpending too much of their ſtrength in the love of women, to which moſt paſſionately addicted. They black their Teeth, becauſe they ſay that dogs teeth be white; and wear no cloaths but on their heads and about their nakedneſs. Said by the Jews to be deſcended from ſome of the Tribes of Iſrael, confined hither by Solomon: but by the Peguans themſelves, to be begotten of a Dog and a China woman, which were ſaved here upon a Shipwrack. By Religion for the moſt part Gentiles, imagining innumerable Worlds one after another, and a determinate number of Gods for every World: more Orthodox, in aſſigning after this life according to the merits of the party deceaſed, one place of Torments, and another of Delights and Pleaſures, if they had not added a third alſo for ſatisfaction.

Chief Cities of this Kingdom, 1 Coſmi, ſeated in a Territory full of woods, as thoſe Woods of Tigers, Wild Bores, Apes, and Parrots; the houſes made of Canes, which ſerve here for Timber, (ſome of them being as big as Hogſheads) covered over with Thatch. 2 Jocabel, a great City on the River Pegu. 3 Dian, on the ſame River alſo, where they make Barks or Veſſels as big as Galeaſſes; which ſerve both for Trade and Habitation. 4 Coilan, a City four-ſquare, and each ſquare four miles. 5 Lanagon, a pleaſant Town, and full of Palm-trees. 6 Dala, in which were the Kings Stables for his ordinary Elephants: his four White Elephants (for ſo many he had) being always kept about the Court, not ſeen abroad, but in great ſolemnities, when trapped in Furnitures of Gold; and no leſs honoured by the people, than the King himſelf; called therefore King of the White-Elephant by the neighbouring Princes. 7 Silvanpede, where many victualling Barks are made to ſerve for dwelling on the Sea. 8 Meccao, where they uſe to unload ſuch goods, as are to paſs by Land to Pegu. Neighboured by the ſtrongeſt Caſtle in all this Kingdom, and therefore choſen by the King for his place of Retreat, when diſtreſſed by the Kings of Arrachan, and Tangu. To the laſt of which making choice to yield up his Perſon, with his Wife and Children, becauſe he had marryed him to his Siſter, he was by him perfidiouſly and baſely murdered. 9 Siriangh, a ſtrong piece on the mouth of the River, given by the King of Arrachan to the Portugals, and by them committed to the keeping of Philip de Britto, in the year one thouſand ſix hundred, or thereabouts. Who having made it good againſt him, and the King of Tangu his aſſociate for the ſpace of thirteen years together, was at laſt forced to yield himſelf Priſoner to the King of Ava, by whom cruelly tortured on a Spit. 10 Pegu, the glory of theſe parts, great, ſtrong, and beautiful: Divided into two Towns, the Old and the New; the Old inhabited by Merchants, the New by the King and his Nobility. The Houſes made of Wood, but covered with Tiles: a Coco-Tree before every houſe, yielding a comfortable ſhade, and a pleaſant ſhew. The ſtreets as ſtraight as any line, and ſo broad that ten or twelve men may ride abreſt in the narroweſt of them. In figures ſquare, each ſquare having five Gates, beſides many Turrets; all of them beautifully gilded. The whole well walled with Walls of ſtone environed on all ſides with great Ditches; and in the midſt the Royal Palace, walled and ditched about, moſt ſumptuouſly gilded; but eſpecially the Temple or Idol-chappel, the walls whereof were hid with Gold, the Roof tiled with Silver.

In this magnificent Palace lived the Peguan Kings, in as much pomp and pleaſure as the World could yield: his Empire not extending only over theſe Kingdoms now deſcribed, but over all the Provinces or Kingdoms of the Bramines alſo; which he governed by his ſeveral Vice-Roys, or rather TRIBUTARIE Kings. A happineſs too great to continue long. For in the year 1567. the Vice-Roy or Tributary King of Tangu, by the aid of his Faction, and reputation of his Vertues, entred into rebellion; and ſlaying the Nobles of the Land, uſurped that Kingdom. After this he ſubdued the Cities and Kingdoms of Calam, Melintay, Prom, Miranda, and Ava, inhabited all of them by the Brames or Bramines; and therefore taking to himſelf the Title of the King of Brama, becauſe his fame and fortunes took their riſe from his victories over them. Following the courſe of his ſucceſſes he firſt aſſayled the Cities of Odia, and Siam, but repulſed with loſs. To make amends for which misfortune, he beleaguered Pegu, and ſubdued it; and by the reputation which he got in that action, returning to the ſiege of Siam, had it yielded to him. Dying he gave the Kingdom of Ava unto one of his brothers; that of Prom, to one of his Grand-ſons; the Kingdom of Jangoma to a younger Son, but born after the time of his obtaining the Crown of Pegu; and finally that of Pegu, with the Soveraignty over all the reſt, to his eldeſt Son, a Prince of a vicious and tyrannical nature: and not more cruel to his Subjects, than they diſobedient to him. Whereupon preparations are made on both ſides, the people, to defend their liberty; the King, to preſerve his Royalty. During theſe civil diſcords, the titular King of Siam, whoſe late overthrow was not yet fully digeſted, came violently into the Countrey of Pegu; burning Corn, Graſs, and fruits, killing Man, Woman, and Child: and having ſatisfied his Fury, returned to his home. This ſpoil of the Fruits of the Earth, was but a prologue to an unſupportable Famine, which conſumed all the Inhabitants of this flouriſhing Kingdom, except ſuch whom the Granaries of the City of Pegu preſerved, Anno 1598. For here the Fathers devoured their Children, the ſtronger preyed upon the weaker, not only devouring their more fleſhy parts, but their entrails alſo: nay they broke up the skuls of ſuch as they had ſlain, and ſucked out their brains. This calamity incited another Tributary Prince of Tangu, to make his beſt advantage out of his neighbours affliction; though made his Brother-in-Law, and advanced to great honours by his Father. For juſtly fearing the diſpleaſure of his angry Prince, towhoſe aid he had refuſed to come, when ſent for by him, he joined himſelf with the King of Arrachan, beſieged his Lord and Sovereign in the Fort of Meccao. Brought to extremities, the unfortunate Prince, thought beſt to put himſelf into the hands of his Brother of Tangu, who aſſaulted and entred Pegu: where he found as much Treaſure as 600 Elephants, and as many Horſes, could conveniently carry away. This havock being made, he villanouſly murdered the King, Queen, and their Children, and departed; leaving the gleaning of his ſpoyl to the King of Arracan: who, Anno 1600. was expelled by the King of Siam, who enjoyed it not long. For the King of Barma having with an Army of an hundred thouſand fighting men, and forty thouſand Elephants, ſubdued the Kingdoms of Macin, and Arrachan, followed the currents of his victories; conquered Siam, drove the King thereof from PEGU, where he hath built a moſt magnificent Palace: and is now the ſole Monarch of the twelve Kingdoms of this India.

A more particular relation of this King, and his new-ſetled eſtate, we cannot yet underſtand: what his Revenues are, what his Government, what his Forces. Merchants, whoſe inquiſitiveneſs into the State-Matters of other Princes, is dangerous to their trading, cannot give us any full ſatisfaction: Scholars and Statiſts are not permitted to obſerve; and ſuch of the Natives as could give us the moſt light, are not ſuffered to travel. Only we may conjecture by the great wealth of thoſe ſeveral Princes, and the vaſt Armies by them raiſed in their ſeveral Territories; that his Annual Revennes, Caſualties, and united Forces muſt be almoſt infinite.

The Oriental Islands.

THE ORIENTAL ISLANDS, so called from their situation in the Oriental, or Eastern Seas, may be divided into the Islands of 1 Japan, 2 the Philippinæ, and Isles adjoyning, 3 the Islands of Bantam, 4 the Moluccoes, 5 those called Sindæ, or the Celebes, 6 Java, 7 Borneo, 8 Sumatra, 9 Ceilan, and 10 certain others of less note.

1 JAPAN.

JAPAN is an aggregate body of many Islands, separated by small Gulfs, Streights, and turnings of the Sea; but taking name from Japan, the chief of all. Some reckon them to be 66. in all; others ascribe that number to so many Kingdoms, into which these Islands (be they in number more or less) use to be divided. But whatsoever the number be (the certainty whereof I can no where find) there are three only of accompt, to which the several petit Kingdoms are now reduced: that is to say, 1 Japan specially so called, which containeth 53 Kingdoms, of which 26 are under the King of Meaco, 12 under the King of Amagunce, the other 15 under other Princes of inferiour note. 2 Ximo, which containeth in it nine Realms, the principal whereof are those of Bungo and Figen. 3 Xicoun, which comprehendeth four only of these petit Seigneuries.

JAPAN, the chief of all these Islands, to which the residue may be accompted of but as Appurtenances, is situate over-against the Streights of Anian (if such Streights there be) towards which it looketh to the North: distant from New Spain on the East 150 Leagues, or 450 English miles; and 60 Leagues from Cantan, a Province of China, opposite to it on the West. On the South it hath the vast Ocean, and those infinite sholes of Islands which are called the Philippinæ, and the Isles neighbouring upon them. Extending in length from West to East 200 Leagues, but the breadth not proportionable thereunto: in some places not above ten Leagues over, and in the broadest parts but thirty.

The Country Mountainous and barren, but of a very healthy air, if not too much subject unto cold: yet in some places they have Wheat ripe in the Month of May; but their Rice, which is their principal sustenance, they gather not before September. The surface of the Earth, cloathed with Woods and Forrests, in which some Cedars of so tall and large a body, that one of them only is sufficient to make a Pillar for a Church: the bowels of it stored with divers Metals, and amongst others with such inexhaustible Mines of Gold, that Paulus Venetus reporteth some of the Palaces of their Kings to be covered, in his time, with sheets of Gold, as ours in Europe are with Lead. But I find no such matter in our latter Travellers. Their Fields and Meadows full of Cattel, but hitherto not made acquainted with the making of Butter; their Fens much visited by wild Ducks, as their house-yards with Pigeons, Turtles, Quails, and Pullen.

The People for the most part of good understanding, apt to learn, and of able memories; cunning and subtile in their dealings. Of body vigorous and strong, accustomed to bear Arms until 60 years old. Their complexion of an Olive-Colour, their beards thin, and the one half of the hair of their heads shaved off. Patient they are of pain, ambitious of glory, uncapable of suffering wrong, but can withal dissemble their resentments of it till opportunity of revenge. They reproach no man for his poverty, so it come not by his own unthriftiness, for which cause they detest all kinds of gaming, as the ways of ill-husbandry; and generally abhor Slandering, Theft, and Swearing. Their mourning commonly is in white, as their feasts in black; their teeth they colour black also, to make them beautiful: they mount on the right side of the horse, and sit (as we are used to rise) when they entertain. In Physick they eat salt things, sharp, and raw; and in their salutations they put off their shoes. The very Antipodes of our world in customs, though not in site, and the true Type or Figure of the old English Puritan, opposite to the Papists in things fit and decent, though made ridiculous many times by that opposition. In other things they do much resemble those of China, if not the more ceremonious of the two: washing their Infant-children in the neatest River, as soon as born; and putting off their shooes when they go to meat.

The People have but one Language, but that so intermingled with the words of other Nations, that it seems rather to be many Languages than one. They have long used the Art of Printing, which probably enough, they might have from China: the Characters whereof are a kind of Brachygraphy, and signifie not only Letters, but some whole words also. In matters of Religion, Gentiles, adoring anciently the Sun, Moon, and the Stars of Heaven; and giving divine honour to wild beasts, and the Stags of the Forrests: but specially worshipping some of their deceased Priests and Princes, by the names of Fotoques and Cames; to the first of which they use to pray for goods of the other World, and to the last for Temporal blessings. Their Priests they call by the name of Bonzes, settled in goodly Convents and endowed with very large Revenues: who though divided into eleven different (if not contrary) Sects, do well enough agree in denying the Providence of God, and the Immortality of the soul. Of late times by the care and diligence of the Jesuites, Christianity hath begun to take footing here; whether with such a large increase as their Letters called Epistolæ Japanicæ have been pleased to tell us, I am somewhat doubtful. They tell us there of some Kings of these Islands, whom they have converted and baptized, that within 50 miles of Meaco they had 50 Churches, 200 at the least in all; and that in the year 1587. the number of their Converts were two hundred thousand. Of this, if the one half be true, we have great cauſe to praiſe God for it, and to give them the commendation of their pains and induſtry: not letting paſs the memory of the firſt Adventurer, who was Father Xavier, one of the firſt foundation of this Society, (imployed in this buſineſs by Ignatius, the firſt founder of it) who landed here about the year 1556.

Rivers of note I find not any, though the Iſland be generally well-watered, more memorable for two Mountains in it, than for all the Rivers. One of which called Figenoiama, is ſaid to tranſcend the clouds in height; the other (but without a name) uſeth to caſt forth dreadful flames, like Sicilian Ætna: on the top whereof the Devil, environed with a white and ſhining cloud, doth ſometimes ſhew himſelf unto ſuch of his Votaries, as live about this hill an abſtemious life, like the ancient Hermits.

Chief Cities of the whole Iſlands, 1 Meaco, ſeated in Japan, and the chief of that Iſland, formerly 21 miles in compaſs, but now by reaſon of their wars, ſcarce a third part of it: The ordinary reſidence of the Triumviri, or three principal Magiſtrates, which ſway the affairs of all theſe Iſlands: of whom the firſt, entituled Zazo, hath the chief care in ſacred matters; the ſecond, named Voo, doth preſide in Civil; and the third, called Cabacama, manageth the concernments of Peace and War. At this time it is uſed for the common Empory of the trade of China; that people not permitting Merchants to come amongſt them, but bringing to this place their Merchandize, as the common Staple; where they are ſure to meet Chapmen to buy it of them. 2 Oſſacay, a great and renowned City, conceived to be the richeſt in all the Eaſt; of ſo great trade, that every ordinary Merchant is ſaid to be worth 30000 Crowns. 3 Fenoiama, or Figenoiama, at the foot of the hill ſo called, and about nine miles from Meaco. An Univerſity of Bonzes, for whoſe convenience and ſtudy, one of the Kings of Japan is ſaid to have founded in this Town, and about that Mountain 3800 Convents, and to endow it with the third part of the Revenues of the Kingdom of Vorn. Theſe Colledges or Convents now reduced to 800 only: but ſtill the Univerſity of ſuch fame and credit, that they give not the command or government of it unto any but the King's Son, or his neareſt Kinſman. 4 Banoum, another of their Univerſities, where they give degrees; affirmed to be as big as Paris. 5 Bongo, the chief of all that Province, in which the Jeſuites have a Colledge; the Japonites learn the Portugal Language; and the Europæan that of Japan. 6 Coia, the Sepulture of their Princes, or ſome part of them: it being anciently ordained, that if their whole bodies be not here interred, they muſt at leaſt ſend one of their Teeth. 7 Fiongo, about 18 Leagues from Meaco, the ſubject of many great misfortunes. Deſtroyed in part by Nabunanga, one of the Kings of this Iſland, who lived Anno 1550. that which he left, terribly ſcattered by an Earthquake, Anno 1596. moſt of the ruines of it ſince conſumed by fire. 8 Amangaſaqui, five Leagues from the Sea. 9 Surungo, as big as London with the Suburbs. 10 Edoo, much fairer than that, and the chief ſeat of one of their Kings. 11 Firando, a Seat-Royal alſo of ſome other King, where, in the year 1613. there was a Factory eſtabliſhed for the Engliſh Merchants. 12 Ochinoſamanus, one of their moſt noted Havens. 13 Toſa, or Touſa, giving name to one of the Iſlands.

Theſe Iſlands utterly unknown to the Ancients, were firſt diſcovered by Antonio Mota, a Portugal, in the year 1542. I know Mercator taketh it for the Aurea Cherſoneſus, ſpoken of by Ptolomy; and I cannot chooſe but wonder at it: The ſituation of it ſo far diſtant from that of the Cherſoneſe, that either Mercator muſt be groſly out in his conjecture; or Ptolomy as much miſtaken in his informations; which no man hitherto can juſtly accuſe him of. But paſſing by the improbability of Mercator's fanſie, we are to know, that in former times theſe Iſlands were ſubject to one Prince, whom they obeyed and reverenced with great affection: which government continued, as themſelves report, 1600 years in great State and Majeſty. But in the end, the Dairi, (ſo they call their King) addicting himſelf wholly unto pleaſures, and laying the burden of Government upon other mens ſhoulders; his Deputies, or other inferiour Officers, uſurped Regal power, plumed themſelves with the Eagles Feathers, uſed in their ſtyle the name of Jucatus, or Kings, and in a word, left nothing but the name of Dairi to their Lord and Soveraign. His Iſſue to this day do enjoy that Title, but little elſe: the Princes bordering on Meaco, once his Royal Seat, hardly allowing him ſufficient means to find himſelf Victuals and Apparel; but otherwiſe befooling him with as glorious Titles, as if he were poſſeſſed ſtill of his ancient power. Only they let him excecute the place of an Herald, in giving Arms, and ſetling Dignities and Honours; which brings him in the greateſt profit he hath to truſt to. Of all theſe Kings, he which can make himſelf Lord of Coquinai (which are the five Realms about Meaco) is called Prince of Tenza, and eſteemed Soverain of the reſt. Which height of dignity, Nabunanga, before mentioned, in his time attained to; after him Faxiba, and ſince him Taicoſuma: that Soveraignty being now in a likely way to become hereditary. For Faxiba having brought under his command moſt of theſe ſmall Kingdoms, tranſported the vanquiſhed Kings, and the chief of their Nobles out of one Country into another: to the end that being removed out of their own Realms, and amongſt ſtrange Subjects, they ſhould remain without means to revolt againſt him: a merciful and prudent courſe. Having reduced into his power at leaſt 50 of theſe petit Kingdoms, he divided the greateſt part of the conquered Territories amongſt his own faithful friends and followers, binding them to ſupply him with certain numbers of men upon all occaſions. By which, and other politick courſes, he ſo ſettled himſelf in thoſe Eſtates, that Taicoſuma his Son ſucceeded without oppoſition, who, had he lived, would have aboliſhed the vain title of the Dairi, or took it to himſelf, as he had the power; ſolicited thereto by the King of China. But dying in or about the year 1607. Fereiciſuma his Son ſucceeded, and may be ſtill alive for ought I can learn.

What the Revenues of this King are, it is hard to ſay. I gueſs them to be very great, in regard he maketh two millions of Crowns yearly, of the very Rice which he reſerveth to himſelf from his own Demeſne. The ſtore of Gold and precious Stones which theſe Iſlands yield, being wholly his, muſt needs add much unto his Coffers. And for his power, it is ſaid that Faxiba was able to raiſe ſo good an Army out of the Eſtate demiſed by him to his faithful followers, that he reſolved once on the Conqueſt of China: and to that end cauſed Timber to be felled for 2000 Veſſels for the tranſporting of his Army. And had he lived a little longer, 'tis probable enough he might have ſhaken that great Kingdom, the Japonois being ſo much the better Souldiers, that a ſmall party of them would defeat a good Army of Chineſe. The fear whereof made the King of China, after his deceaſe, correſpond ſo fairly with his Succeſſour.

2. The PHILIPPINÆ, and Iſles adjoyning.

SOuth of Japan, lieth a great fry of Iſlands, which are now called PHILIPPINÆ, in honour of Philip the Second, King of Spain; in whoſe time diſcovered by Legaſpi, a Spaniſh Captain, Anno 1564. Strangely miſtaken by by Mercator for the Barussæ of Ptolomy, those being placed by him in the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala, five degrees South of the Æquator; these situate on the East of China, in 13. or 14. degrees of Northern Latitude: those being only five in number, these reckoned at above ten thousand.

The Air in all of them generally very milde and temperate, especially in the mid-land parts; that on the shores somewhat inclining unto heat. The soil abundantly fruitful of all Commodities both for necessity and delight; that is to say, Rice, Pulse, Wax, Honey, Sugar-Canes, many pleasant Fruits, the fairest Figs of all the world, plenty of Fish, variety of Birds and Beasts, as well wild as tame, great store of Cotton-Wooll, some Mines of Gold, and of other Metals great abundance.

Of all these Islands there are only forty in possession of the King of Spain, belonging properly to Asia, but by him placed under the Government of New Spain in America; because discovered by Legaspi at the instigation or procurement of Don Lewis de Velasco, who was then Vice-Roy of that Province. In these forty Islands there are thought to be at the least a million of people, subject to that Crown; many of which have been converted by the Friers and Jesuites unto Christianity. Of these the principal in account are, I. LUSSON, affirmed to contain in compass 1000 miles; beautified by the Spaniards with a fair City, seated on a commodious haven, which they call Manilla: in which resides the Deputy or Lieutenant Governour for all these Islands, and the Bishop of the Philippines for ordering all affairs of those Churches. II. MINDANAO, 380 Leagues in compass; in which are many good Towns, as 1 Cailon, 2 Pavados, 3 Subut, 4 Dapiro, and some others. III. TANDAIR, more fruitful than any of the rest, and of good extent, 160 Leagues in circuit, more specially called Philippina; because first discovered and so named. IV. PALLOHAN, as much mistaken by Mercator for the Bazacata of Ptolomy.

These, with the rest, subject in former times to the Kings of China, till they did voluntarily abandon them; and confine their Empire within the Continent. On this relinquishment the people fell into Civil Wars, every man getting what he could for himself, and the stronger preying on the weaker: which factions and divisions gave great help to the Spaniard, in the conquest of those few which are under their power. Islands of more importance to the Spaniards, than is commonly thought; and therefore furnished by them at their first Plantations, with Bulls, Kine, Horses, and Mares, which before they wanted, and do now reasonably abound with. For besides the abundance of victuals, and some plenty of Gold, which they find therein, the situation is very fit to subdue the rest of the neighbouring Islands, to settle the commerce betwixt China and Mexico, to bring on a continual Trade betwixt the Islands of this Sea, and of those of America; and finally, to prevent the Moors or Arabians from planting their Mahometanism any further Eastwards.

Nor far from these, on the South of Japan bending towards the West, is another great heap of Rocks and Islands. Some of them rich in Gold, and furnished with very choice fruits, and other necessaries; and peopled with a stout and warlike breed of men, well skilled in Archery. The chief whereof have the names of 1 Lequin Major, 2 Lequin Minor, 3 Hermosa, 4 Reix Magos, &c. of which little memorable, but that Hermosa, as the Spaniards, or Formosa as the Latines call it, hath lately got the name of New-Holland; because not long since taken, planted, and strongly fortified by some Adventurers of that Country. And not far off are those called 5 Ciumbabon, in which is said to a Plant-animal or sensible tree. 6 Mattan, unfortunately remarkable for the death of Magellanus, slain there in a battel with the Natives, in favour of the King of 7 Sebat, an adjoyning Island; by the King whereof he had been kindly entertained; and who by his perswasions he had gained to the Christian Faith, and baptized him by the name of Charles, in honour of Charles Emperour and King of Spain, under whom he served in this present voyage. But long this miscreant King (Hamabar he was called before his Baptism) continued not in this good opinion; treacherously killing John de Serran chief Pilot of Magellanus's small Navy, with about 70 of his men, and probably relapsing to his former Gentilism.

3. The Isles of BANDAN.

THE Isles of BANDAN are in number seven, that is to say 1 Mira, 2 Rosalargium, 3 Aii, 4 Rom, 5 Nerra, 6 Gannape, the last of all, continually burning; and for that cause deserted of its inhabitants: and 7 Bandan, bigger than any of the rest, and therefore giving name to all. Situate South of the Philippines in the seventh degree of Southern Latitude. More fruitful of Nutmegs, than any other of all these parts; for which cause never without the concourse of forein Merchants from Java, Malaca, and China: and of late times from these Northern Countries of Europe also. Where by the way, the Nutmeg-tree is like a Peach, or Peach-tree, the innermost part whereof is the Nutmeg it self, covered over with a thin film or coat, which we call by the Arabian name of Maciz, or Mace; and over that the fruit it self, as it is in Peaches, Malacotoons, and such fruits as those.

The People barbarous and rude, slothful, of weak bodies, and dull of wit; living confusedly together without rule or order. Some of them still continue in their ancient Paganism; but the greatest part are thought to be Mahometans: in which Religion very zealous, and so devout, that they will not go unto their work or worldly businesses, till they have visited the Mosquits, and done their devotions. A shame or Pattern shall I say in this, unto many Christians! All of them bloody and revengeful; but yet so far from wronging the body of a Dead Enemy, that they use to bury it with sweet Odours.

Some Towns they have, of which the principal, 1 Nera, and 2 Lontore, joyned in a League against the rest; the quarrel rising from the cutting down of certain trees, proceeding to the butchery of one another, and ending in the loss of their common liberty. Subject in shew to the King of Botone, one of the Moluccoes, but too much at their own disposing. They had not else entered into quarrels with one another. Which opportunity being taken by the watchful Hollanders, they did not only settle four Factories there; but for the security of their Trade, and to awe the Natives, they have built three Forts. They had also turned one of their Mosquits to a Fortress; whereat the people were so incensed that they promised liberty to their Slaves, to get them out of it, who falling desperately on, fired it over their heads, and killed every man of them. The English Merchants have some trading also in these Islands, more acceptable than the other; because not so insolent, and grounding their possession on a better title: the people of Lantore, voluntarily submitting themselves to the protection of King James, the first Monarch of the British Islands, and to his use giving possession of their Country to Captain Robert Hayes, Novem. 24. 1620. The like done at the same time by the Inhabitants of Wayre, and Rosingen, two other Islands; which, if they be not the same with those of Mira, and Rosalargium, spoken of before, are probably some lesser Islands, neighbouring to Poleron and Poolaway, of which more hereafter.

There is not far off another Island, not in this accompt, called Timor, situate in the tenth degree of Southern Latitude; the chief of many little Islands which lie round about it: but not else observable, except it be for that abundance of Sanders both white and yellow, which growing there, is greedily exchanged by the Inhabitants for Iron, Hatchets, Swords, Knives, and the like commodities.

4. The MOLUCCOES.

THE MOLUCCOES are in number many; the King of Terenate which is one of them, being said to have dominion over 70 Islands: but the determinate number of them I do no where find. Situate on both sides of the Æquator, and consequently of an hot and intemperate air: the soyl so dry and spongious, that it sucketh up the greatest shower of Rain that doth fall amongst them, before it can pass into the Sea. Not very well furnished with necessaries for the life of man; but that defect supplied with the abundance of Spices which are growing here, Cinnamon, Ginger, Nutmegs, Mastick, Aloes, Pepper, and the like commodities; for which, the Merchants bring them all things that the Country wants. But 'tis the Clove, which is the great Riches of these Islands, and peculiar in a manner to them. A Spice, which groweth on Trees, like Bay-trees yielding blossoms, first white, then green, (at which time they yield the pleasantest smell in the world) and last of all red and hard, which are the Cloves. Of nature so extreme hot that if a Pail of water should only stand in the room in which they are cleansed and sorted, the Cloves in two daies would dry it up. Of which nature the unspun Silks of China are affirmed to be.

The People for the most part Idolaters, intermixt with some Mahometans dwelling on the shores; and of late times with Christians in their several Factories. Of several Originals, and different Languages, but all in general fraudulent, perfidious, treacherous, inhumane, and of noted wickedness. Few of them cloathed, nor much caring to hide their shame. Not civilized by the cohabitation of more modest and civil Nations. Pity such ill conditions should be lodged in such handsome bodies: the people being said to be better proportioned than the other Indians; and for strength and valour not fellowed by any of them.

Of all the Islands which pass under this name, there are not above five or six of any reckoning: that is to say, 1 Terenate, 2 Tidor, 3 Macir, 4 Rachian, 5 Machian, and 6 Botone: None of them above six Leagues in compass, many not so much; the whole cluster of them thronged together in a girdle of no more than 25 Leagues in the Circumference: yet of such consequence and importance, that the two famous voyages of Americus Vesputius, and Ferdinand Magellanus, the first employed by Emanuel King of Portugal, the other by Charles the Emperour, and King of Spain, were undertaken only to find out the next way unto them.

Of the rest, Machian and Tidore have their proper Kings; so hath Botone also, if that be one of them: the King whereof had anciently some title and authority over those of Bandon. Macir, and Machian, are subject to the King of Terenate, who is a Mahometan in Religion; and said to be the Lord of 70 Islands. This the most puissant Member of this scattered body; and for that cause most aimed at by all Competitors, the Spaniards having here one Fortress, and the Hollanders three. Both Nations hated by the Natives, whom they consume and waste in the wars betwixt them; but of the two the Spaniard looked on by the people as the more a Gentleman; the other stomached and despised for their sordid dealings. Nothing else memorable in the story of Chorography of them, but that they were discovered by the conduct of Magellanus, in the Reign of Charles the Fifth, who employed him in it, Anno 1519; And that there is in Terenate a Prodigious Mountain, in height above the Clouds of the Air, and in nature agreeing with the Element of Fire, which it seems to mount to: huge flames whereof, with dreadful thunders, and a dark smoak, it sends forth continually. Reckoned by some amongst these Islands, but how soever neighbouring near them, are those of Polerone, and Poolaway; the first more plentiful of Cloves, the second more proper for the Nutmeg, but both acknowledging the Soveraignty of the Kings of England; for Polerone, by the general and voluntary Act of all the chief men of the Country, was surrendred into the power of King James, the possession of it being given for his Majesties use to Captain Courtop, Decemb. 23. Anno 1616. no other Nation at that time having any interest in it, or Pretensions to it: which notwithstanding it was not long after seized on by the insolent and ungrateful Hollanders, who being to restore it upon composition, cut down all the Clove-trees, so to deprive the English of the benefit of them. Poolaway made the like surrender at the same time also, declared by setting up the English Colours on the top of their Castle, giving to Courtop a green turf (whereby as by Livery and Seisin) to take possession of the Country, promising the annual tribute of a branch of Nutmegs; and that they should sell neither Mace nor Nutmegs to any, but to those of the English Nation. The like done at or near the same time, by Wayre and Rosingen, two other Islands of these Seas; which if they be not those two of Bandon, pointed at before, must needs be brought within the number of this scattered Company.

5. The SINDÆ or SELEBES.

NEar the Moluccoes, and almost intermingled with them, are a set of Islands which Ptolomy calleth SINDÆ, and the Moderns, SELEBES; many in tale, but not above four of any weight; that is to say, 1 SELEBES, 2 Gilolo, 3 Amboina, 4 Macassar; of which the two first are situate under the Æquator, and the last somwhat on the South of it: all of them in the time of Ptolomy inhabited by Anthropophagi, and a long time after; insomuch as the Kings of the Moluccoes did use to send their condemned persons into these Islands, there to be devoured. Which said in general, we will take a more particular view of them, as they lie before us.

1. SELEBES, which gives name to the rest, and hath under it many lesser Islands, is large and rich. The soyl thereof exceeding fertile, the people tall and comely, and of colour, not so much black as ruddy. Much given to Piracy, and all Idolaters till of late. Governed by many Kings or petit Princes, the cause of much contention, and many quarrels: three of which are said to have been converted to Christianity; and for that cause much hated by their heathenish Subjects, who thereupon rebelled against them. It is situate West of the Moluccoes, and hath therein a Town called Sion, honoured with the abode of one of their Christian Kings: but possibly not so called until their conversion; the proper name thereof being Cian. 2 Nibon, in the South, and 3 Terolli in the North parts of it.

2. GILOLO, called also Batachina, is one of those Islands, which our late Navigators include under the name of Del Moro. Of large extent, conceived to be half as big as Italy. By that accompt (the truth whereof I do very much doubt) greater than Zeilan is in compass, though of less reputation: That being governed by its own Princes; This subject for the most part to the King of Terenate.

Terenate. Situate East of the Moluccoes, exceeding plentiful of Rice, well stored with wild Hens; and on the shores provided of a kind of Shell-fish, which in taste much resembleth Mutton. A tree they have which they call by the name of Sagu, of the pith whereof they make their bread; and of the sap or juyce of it they compose a pleasing drink, which serveth them instead of Wine. The air intemperatly hot; the people well proportioned but rude and savage; some of them Gentiles, some Mahometans, of which last Religion is their King. The chief Town of it is Batchame, or Batachina, (whence the new name unto the Island) in which the Hollanders have a Fort to defend their Factory.

3. AMBOINA, South of the Æquator, and the third of the Sindæ, hath many Islands of less note, which depend upon it, and do communicate in the name. In compass about five hundred miles, said by Maginus to be extremely rough and barren; which must be understood with reference to some kinds of Grain. For otherwise it is very fertile, abundantly productive of Rice, Citrons, Limons, Oranges, Coco-nuts, Sugar-Canes, and other fruits, and very plentiful of Cloves. Which last, as it makes some to reckon it amongst the Moluccoes; so may it be a reason why the Island is defective in such fruits as require much moisture: the Clove being of so hot a temper, as before was noted, that it draweth to it all the moisture of the Earth, which is near unto it.

The people much given to Piracy, wherewith they do infest all the neighbouring Islands, Defamed for Caunibals, or Man-eaters: it being here a constant custome, that when their Parents were grown old, or sick of any incurable disease, they give them to one another to be eaten by them. They have one Town of more note than other, which they call Amboina, by the name of the Island. First, taken by the Portugals, and by them secured with a strong Fortress: during whose power here, the Jesuites, who had in it their several Residences, converted many to Christianity. But in the year 1605. the Island and the Fort both were conquered by Stephen of Hagan, for the States of the United Provinces: who having cleared the Country of the Portugal Forces, possessed themselves of it. Received by the Natives at their first coming with Joy and Triumph: but they go little by the change, as they found soon after: their new Masters being more burdensome, and insufferable, than the old had been. For claiming in the right of Conquest, they think they may oppress the Natives by the Law of Arms; and ingross all trade unto themselves as the true Proprietaries. Infamous even amongst the rude and savage Indians for their barbarous inhumanity executed upon some of the English (the greatest Patrons under God which they have in the world) whom in the year 1618 they most cruelly tortured, and most wickedly murdered; under colour of some plot to betray their Fortress: but in plain truth for no other reason but because they were more beloved by the Inhabitants, and began to gain upon their trade.

4. West of Amboina, and South-West of Selebes, lieth the fourth of these Islands, called MACASSAR, said to contain from East to West 600 miles; plentiful of Rice, Flesh, Fish, Salt, and Cotton-Wooll; not destitute of Gold and Pearls, and well stored with Saudar (Sandalum it is called in Latine) a medicinal wood, growing like a Nut-tree; of several colours, white, red, yellow, but the red, the best: the fruit in making like a Cherry, but of no esteem. In some parts overgrown with woods, in which certain fiery Flies make nightly such shining light, as if every twig or bough were a burning Candle. In the middle covered with high Mountains, out of which flow many navigable Rivers.

The people for the most part Gentiles, intermixt on the Sea-coasts with some Mahometans. Chief Towns hereof, 1 Senderem, the King's Seat, situate near a large Lake, very commodiously for traffick. 2 Macassar, an English Factory, so called according to the name of the Island.

Near to these Islands, and somewhat North to Batachina are some other Isles, plentiful of all things necessary for the life of man; but inhabited by a thievish and Piratical people: the principal of which 1 Terrao, 2 Sanguin, 3 Solor, 4 Moratay, in which last they eat Battata Roots instead of bread; besides some others of less note. Most of the people Gentiles, except those of Sanguin, the King whereof being gained to the Christian Faith, by some of the Jesuites, hath brought many of his subjects to the same Religion.

6. BORNEO.

WEst of these Selebes, lieth BORNEO, of more note and greatness, than any hitherto described, in these Indian Seas. In compass, after their accompt who speak most sparingly, 2200 miles; but as some say, no less than three months sail about. Situate under the Æquator, which parteth the Dominions of the King of Borneo, and the King of Laus: opposite on the North to Camboia; on the South, to Java; on the East, to Selebes; on the West, unto the Isle of Sumatra.

The Country said to be provided naturally of all things necessary; yet said withal to be unfurnished of Asses, Oxen, Herds of Cattel, except only Horses, and these but of small stature neither: the greatest riches of it being Camphire, Agarick, and some Mines of Adamants, erroneously conceived by Mercator to be the Insulæ bonæ Fortunæ, spoken of by Ptolomy; that being seated opposite to the out-lets of Ganges, in the Latitude of a hundered forty five Degrees, and fifteen Minutes; this Eastward some degrees of the Golden Chersonese, and consequently twenty Degrees distant at the least from that Island in Ptolomy.

The people generally more white than the rest of the Indians, of good wits, and approved integrity, though all Mahometans, or Gentiles. Divided betwixt two Kings, and two Religions; the King of Borneo and his Subjects being all Mahometans; those of Laus still remaining in their ancient Gentilism. These think the Sun and Moon to be man and wife, and the Stars their children; ascribing to each of them divine honours, to the Sun especially; whom they salute at his first rising with great Reverence, saying certain Verses. Their publick businesses are treated of commonly in the night, at which time the Counsellors of State meet, and ascend some tree, viewing the Heavens till the Moon rise, and then go to the Senate-house. The same Apparel generally of both Religions; but thin, by reason of the great heat of the Air: a shirt of Silk, or of Calicute, or some such slight stuff, worn more for modesty than for warmth.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Borneo, situate in the North-West part of the Island, near a goodly bay, but in the middle of the Fens like the City of Venice, and seated as that is, on Piles; the building sumptuous, of hewed stones, covered with the leaves of the Coco-tree. The Town so large as to contain 25000 Families. 2 Taiopura, 3 Tamavratas. 4 Malano, all of them noted for fair Cities, or commodious Havens. 5 Sagaduna, a Factory of English. 6 Lavi on a large Bay in the South-East part of the Island, the ordinary Seat of the King of Laus. 7 Para, on another capacious Bay, not far from Lavi, and directly opposite to Borneo: that being seated on the North-West, and this on the South-East of the Island. Betwixt these two Kings is the whole divided; but so, that he of Borneo hath the greatest part of it, and therefore keeps the the greater State: not to be ſpoken with, but by the mouth of ſome of his own Interpreters; and in his Palace ſerved by no other Attendants, than Maids or Women.

7. JAVA.

OPpoſite to Borneo towards the South lie the Iſles of JAVA, two in number; both ſituate South of the Æquator, both of great Circumference, and commonly diſtinguiſhed into Major and Minor, or the greater and the leſſer Java.

1. JAVA MAJOR, the more Northward of the two, and by much the bigger, is ſaid to be in compaſs 3000 miles; and that by them who elſewhere reckon Borneo for the biggeſt of theſe Seas. But the truth is, that the South-parts of this Iſland not being perfectly diſcovered, make the ameaſurement thereof to be very uncertain. Conceived moſt probably to be the Jabadiu of Ptolomy, the moſt Northern part whereof is placed by him in the eight degree of Southern Latitude: ſaid by him to afford much Gold and Silver, to be exceeding fruitful of all other neceſſaries; and finally, that the name did ſignifie κριθῆς νῆσος, or the Iſland of Barly. All which agreeth punctually with the preſent Iſland, the word Jabad, ſignifying a kind of grain much like our Barly; and Diu in the Perſian and Indian Tongues ſignifying an Iſland. And ſo in Jabadiu, we have found the Iſland of Java, the mutation of B. into V. being ordinary.

Then for the riches and fertility of it, it is ſaid to yield great plenty of Fruits, and Corn, but of Rice eſpecially; fleſh of all ſorts, ſalted and ſent from hence into other Countries; great ſtore of Fowl, both wild and tame, plenty of Gold, ſome precious Stones, and the beſt kind of Braſs; Silks in abundance, and great quantities of Pepper, Ginger, Cinnamon, and ſome other Spices. In a word, ſo befriended by the bounty of Nature, that Scaliger calleth it Epitome Mundi, or the whole World contracted in a leſſer Volume. But withal it is much expoſed unto ſtorms and tempeſts, from which ſeldom free.

The people of a middle Stature, corpulent, and of broad Faces, moſt of them naked or covered only with a ſlight ſilken ſtuff, and that no lower than the knee; accompted the moſt Civil people of all the Indians, as fetching their deſcent from China: but withal treacherous, very proud, much given to lying, and very careleſs of their words, to which ſo uſed, that they count it not amongſt their Faults. And therefore when a King of theirs had broke promiſe with the Hollanders, and was challenged for it, he anſwered, that his tongue was not made of bone. Cruel they are alſo ſaid to be, and implacable, if once offended: accuſtomed of old to eat the bodies of their friends: accounting no burial ſo honourable, nor obſequy ſo applauſive. This alſo a cuſtome amongſt many of the reſt of the Indians, and ſo hath it been ever ſince the beginning of the Perſian Monarchy. Herodotus reporteth how Darius Hyſtaſpes underſtanding of this cuſtome; and withal knowing how the Græcians uſe to burn their dead, ſent to the Greeks, that it was his pleaſure they ſhould eat the bodies of their dead: But they uſed all means of perſwaſion and entreaty, not to be forced to ſo brutiſh and barbarous a cuſtom. Then commanded he the Indians to conform themſelves to the faſhion of the Græcians; but they all more abhorred to burn the dead, than the Greeks did to eat them. So impoſſible it is for a cuſtom either to be ſuddenly left off, or to ſeem undecent and inconvenient if once thorowly ſettled.

In matter of Religion they are all Mahometans, or Gentiles, according to the fancy of their ſeveral Kings, whereof in this Iſland there are very many; one for every great Tribe, or more powerful Family. Zealous in their Religion which ſo ever it be, as appears by the ſad ſtory of the Daughter of the King of Ballambua, murdered by her Husband the King of Paſſarva, the ſecond night after her Wedding, with all her Attendants; becauſe they would not be Mahometans, which was his Religion. Yet in ſome common Principles they agree well enough, puniſhing Adultery with death; in which caſe the woman chooſeth her neareſt Kinſman for her Executioner: but otherwiſe ſpending the Day and Night in much Sloth and Dalliance. Of the two, Gentiliſm is the more diffuſed, becauſe moſt ancient; the Sect of Mahomet not being introduced till the year 1560. though of a very ſwift growth, and of a great increaſe for ſo ſhort a time.

Their chief Towns, 1 Panarucan, near a burning hill, which in the year 1586. brake forth exceedingly oppreſſed infinite numbers of men, and caſt great ſtones into the City for three daies together. 2 Jortam, a Town of 1000 Houſholds, the Inhabitants whereof are Gentiles, and have their Temples in the Woods: the Chief-Prieſt of whoſe ſuperſtition hath his dwelling here, of great authority and power over all the Iſland. 3 Ballambua, 4 Paſſarva, 5 Taban, 6 Matara, 7 Daunia, 8 Taggal, 9 Surrabia, 10 Gatabaon; the ſeats of ſo many of their Kings: ſome of them alſo furniſhed of convenient Havens. 11 BANTAM, the Seat alſo of a King, but of moſt trade in all the Iſland, ſeldom without the company of Engliſh, Portugals, and Hollanders; the principal Factory of the Engliſh in all the Indies, though they have many beſides this. The Town unwholſomely ſeated in a mooriſh ground, and much ſubject to fire. 12 Sunda, ſituate in a place abounding in Pepper. 13 Agracan, a convenient Port; Here was alſo in the time of Ptolomy a Town called 14 Argyropolis, or the Silver City, long ago deſtroyed. And now here is, 15 Sura, a new Town in the Territories of the King of Bantam, built by ſome of the Subjects of the King of Paſſarva; who being oppreſſed by their own King, came into this part of the Country, where they got leave to build this City. The people whereof live quietly according to their own Laws, follow their Husbandry abroad, but never marry; and yet do not want a conſtant Succeſſion, adopting ſome of the other Javans into their Society, as they find their number to diminiſh.

Of the ſtory of this Iſland I can ſay but little. Divided into many petit and inconſiderate Kingdoms; and thoſe divided too by Mountains, croſſing the Iſland in the middle from Weſt to Eaſt, which cut off all commerce and correſpondence betwixt one another. Some of theſe Kings Mahometans, ſome Gentiles, as before was ſaid; all ſubject or homagers at leaſt to one of the Kings of the Gentiles, who hath his dwelling in the midſt of the Iſland. Next him, the King of Tuban was conceived to be richeſt, and the King of Ballambua of the greateſt Territory; whoſe Family after long war and bloud-ſhed, begun in the murder of his Daughter, is ſaid to be wholly rooted out by the King of Paſſarva. Theſe Kings much reverenced by their ſubjects, and ſo well obeyed, that whatſoever they command, is done, be it never ſo dangerous.

2. JAVA MINOR, ſituate on the South of the other, is ſaid to be 2000 miles in compaſs, and to be very near the firm Lands of Terra Auſtralis Incognita, or the Southern Continent. Not very well known to any of our late Adventurers; but generally affirmed (not ſo much on certain knowledge as uncertain conjecture) to be of the ſame nature and condition with the greater Java. The Inhabitants hereof in the time of Paulus Venetus, who had travelled in it, reported to be Cannibals, Idolaters, devourers of their Parents and deareſt friends; and to worſhip all day whatſoever they ſaw firſt in the morning. Divided then into eight Kingdoms, diſtinguiſhed

by

by the names of their principal Towns. Six whereof he had ſeen, which are theſe that follow. 1 Feleeh, where the Townſmen were Moors, and the Peaſants, Gentiles. 2 Baſma, which did acknowledge the Great Cham of Tartaria for Lord in chief; but without paying of any tribute. 3 Samara, where none of the North-ſtars could be ſeen. 4 Sambri, in which ſome men were ſaid to have tails like Dogs. 5 Fanſur, in which they have a Tree, the wood whereof put in water, will ſink like Iron; of which they uſe to make Launces that will pierce an Armour. And 6 Dragorian, of which there is nothing memorable or prodigious, but that the people of it uſe to eat their neareſt Kinſmen; and that no Prodigie at all, becauſe uſed by others.

To theſe two we may joyn MADURA, on the North of the greater Java, fertile of Rice, but otherwiſe of ſo wateriſh and moiſt a Soil, that the men and Cattel uſe to go knee-deep when they ſow it. The chief Town whereof is called Arosbay. And on the Eaſt the ſame Java the Iſland Baly, exceeding populous for the bigneſs, ſuppoſed to contain 600000 Inhabitants; and very well provided of Buls, Buffals, Goats, Horſes, Swine, many kind of fruits, and ſome ſtore of metals.

8. SUMATRA.

SUMATRA lieth on the North of the greater Java, betwixt it and the Streight of Sincapura, the moſt Southern Town of Golden Cherſoneſe. The Streight in that place ſo ſtreight and narrow, not above a Musket-ſhot in breadth, that ſome conceive this Iſland to have been formerly joyned unto it by ſome little Iſthmus; ſince worn away by the violence and working of the Sea: and that this Iſland, and not the Land of Malaca, was that Golden Cherſoneſe, which we find in Ptolomy. More probably by far, than that we ſhould run after it to the Iſle of Japan, ſituate on the Eaſt of China, ſo far from any part of India, where it is placed by the Author of the Atlas Minor.

The length hereof, extended from the North-weſt to the South-eaſt, is ſaid by ſome to be 900. by others but 700. miles the breadth 200. and the whole compaſs 2100. Strangely affirmed by ſome Writers to be the biggeſt of all the Eaſt; who yet aſſign a greater circuit unto Java, and as great to Borneo. Situate under the Æquator, which divideth it into two parts, very near an equality: that on the North-ſide reaching unto five degrees, that on the South-ſide but to ſeven degrees from the line it ſelf. By which account there is little difference betwixt the length of a day and a night; both much at one in all times of the year whatever.

The air hereof by conſequence muſt be very hot, but withal unwholſom: not ſo much in regard of the extreme heats, as by reaſon of the groſs vapours drawn from the many Fens and Rivers, which are found to be in it; and the thick Woods which intercept the free courſe of a purging wind. The ſoil not capable of ſuch grain as in other places, except Rice and Millet (for I know not otherwiſe how to render the Latine, Milium) but yielding Ginger, Pepper, Camphire, Agarick, and Caſſia, in great abundance. It affordeth alſo great plenty of Wax and Honey, ſtore of Silks and Cottons, rich Mines, not only of Tin, Iron, Sulphur, and other Minerals; but of Gold ſuch quantity, that ſome conceive this Iſland to be Solomon's Ophir. And if Pedrunka Sirie, one of the Kings of this Iſland, in a Letter written to King James did not brag too impudently; it may be probable enough. For by that Letter it appeareth that all the furnitures of his houſe, and trappings of his Elephants and Horſes, with all his Armour, were of pure Gold, and that he had in his Dominions a whole Mountain of Gold; King of which Golden Mountain he entituleth himſelf in his Regal Stile.

The Inhabitants are many of them good Artificers, cunning Merchants, or expert Mariners. All of them Gentiles till about two hundered and thirty years ſince, at what time by the diligence of ſome Arabian Merchants trading to this Iſland, Mahometaniſm began to ſpread upon the Coaſts. But in the Inland parts of the Country they are Gentiles ſtill, and ſtill retain amongſt them their old barbarous cuſtoms. The moſt loving men unto their Enemies that were ever known; for otherwiſe they would never eat them. Having eaten, they uſe their ſkuls inſtead of money, which they exchange or barter for ſuch neceſſaries, as their wants require: and he is thought to be the wealthieſt man amongſt them, who hath moſt of this coyn. Thoſe of the other Religion, though in moſt points and cuſtoms they agree with the reſt of the Mahometans, have this one ſingular to themſelves: which is, that once every year on a certain day they go ſolemnly unto their Moſquits to ſee if Mahomet be come, leading a ſpare Horſe for him to ride upon: which (miſſing him) is mounted, at their coming back, by the beſt man in the company. Of any great Progreſs that Chriſtianity hath made here, I have no good evidence.

That here are many and great Rivers, hath been ſaid before, but their names I find not. Here are alſo many Mountains, and thoſe great and high; that of moſt note called Balalvanus, ſaid to burn continually. Out of which, or not far off do ariſe two Fountains, of which the one is ſaid to run pure Oyl, and the other the beſt Balſamum: which I bind no man to believe, but ſuch as have ſeen it.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Achen, the Seat-Royal of that Kingdom, beautified with the Regal Palace, to which they paſs thorow ſeven Gates one after another, with green Courts between the three outtermoſt; thoſe three continually guarded with women expert at their weapons, and uſing both Swords and Guns; the only ordinary guard that he hath for his perſon. The materials of this Palace mean, but the furniture coſtly, the Walls thereof being hanged commonly with Velvet and Damask, and ſometimes with cloth of Gold. 2 Pedir, 3 Pacom, 4 Cambar, 5 Menantabo, 6 Aura, and 7 Andragide, the ſeats of ſo many of their Kings. 8 Paſſaman, a Town of great Trade, but ſituate in a Mooriſh and unhealthy place; found ſo experimentally by too many of the Engliſh, who have there their Factory. 9 Priamon, and 10 Tecoo, of a more healthy air, but not ſo commodious in their Havens as is that of Paſſaman: theſe three Towns ſtanding in that part of the Country where the Pepper groweth.

All that we know touching the ſtory of this Country, is, that the Portugals when they firſt came hither, found in it nine and twenty Kings; reduced ſince to a ſmaller number. For Abraham, ſometimes a Slave, afterwards King of Achen, having turned Mahometan, by the help of the Turks and Arabians ſubdued the Realms of Pedir and Pacem. Aladine who ſucceeded him, being once a Fiſherman, and grown famous for his exploits at Sea, was by this King preferred to the marriage of one of his Kinſwomen, made his Lord Admiral, and by him truſted with the protection of his Son and Heir: of whom inſtead of a Protector he became the murtherer, and uſurped the State unto himſelf. When King, he added to his Crown the Kingdom of Aru, or Aura, and Manucabo; and almoſt all the reſt in the North part of the Iſland. In this King's time, the Engliſh were firſt ſettled in their Factory there. Grown old (an hundred years at leaſt) he was impriſoned by his eldeſt Son, impatient of a longer ſtay; alledging that his age had made him unfit for Government,

Government, Anno 1604. The name of the New King Sultan Pedrucka Sirie, who in his Letter to King James, ſpoken of before, ſtiles himſelf the ſole King of Sumatra: either with greater brags than truth, or elſe becauſe the Kingdoms of Tecoo, Priaman, and Baronſe, being conquered by him, all the reſt were become his Tributaries. Aſſociated with the Forces of the King of Jor, or Johor, who had married his Siſter, he beſieged Malaca, and diſtreſſed it: But being beaten from it by the Portugals, he turned the tide of his diſpleaſure upon his Confederate, and ſubdued that Kingdom; who with the King of Siak (ſome other petit Prince near Jor) and two of their brethren, were in the year 1613 brought Priſoners to Achem.

The Government of this King is abſolute, and meerly arbitrary, executing what he hath a mind to, without form of Law. So cautelous, that without his Placard no ſtranger can have Ingreſs into his Dominions, or free Egreſs out of them. Nor is admittance to his preſence granted unto any whom he firſt ſends not for by an Officer with a Gilded Staff. He is conceived to be ſtrong both by Sea and Land, his Country populous, his Elephants many and well trained, able to put to Sea 120 or if need be 200. Gallies and Frigots fit for any ſervice, moſt of which carry Demi-Cannon, Culverin, Sakar, Minion, and other the like Ordnance of Braſs. So great a Maſter of his Subjects, that in 21 daies he had a goodly Channel drawn about his Palace, from a River which was eight miles off. Off his Revenues, I am able to make no conjecture, but think him to be full of Gold, by that great quantity of Golden Furnitures which he hath about him.

And now I am fallen on this King's Gold, I cannot but take notice of ſome Iſlands on the Weſt of Sumatra, called Aureæ Inſulæ, or the Golden Iſlands; the chief of which named Andramania, is poſſeſſed by Cannibals, or Man-eaters. Oppoſite unto which on the Eaſt ſide of this Iſland, are thoſe called Linga, Banca, and Bintam; which laſt is ſaid to be very woody, well watered, and to afford a commodious Station for ſhipping. The houſes built of Stone, but tharched, except that of the King (for even theſe ſorry Iſlands love to have a King of their own) whoſe houſe more eminently ſeated, is more handſomely covered.

9 ZEILAN.

WEſt of Sumatra, ſomewhat inclining to the North, is the Iſland of ZEILAN, ten degrees diſtant fro the Æquator, and near adjoyning to the Promontory in the hither India which Ptolomy calleth by the name of Cory. The length hereof computed at 250 miles, the breadth at 150 miles only, the whole circumference at 700 or 800 miles. Conjectured by the ſituation, and other probable inducements, to be the Taprobane of the ancient Writers. Ortelius and moſt other intelligent men of theſe later times are of that opinion. Only Mercator, who hath carried the Golden Cherſoneſe to the Iſle of Japan, and fixed Taprobane in that of Sumatra, (in which laſt I muſt confeſs he hath many Partners) will have this Iſland to be that which Ptolomy calls Nanigeris, though that be four Degrees more Weſt than the Promontory of Cory, to which this Iſle in former times ſeems to have been joyned.

Taking it therefore for an evident and undoubted truth, that this Zeilan or Ceilan is the Taprobane of the Ancients, we will a little look on the ſtate of that Iſland, with reference to the times when thoſe Authors lived. By Ptolomy affirmed to be plentiful in Rice, Honey, Ginger, Gold, Silver, Precious Stones, and all kind of Metals. By Pliny, that the Gold is purer, and the Gems fairer than any in India; that there were alſo Groves of Palm-trees, and great ſtore of Elephants, is declared by Ælian, and ſome others. Watered with many fair and pleaſant Rivers, viz. 1 Soana, 2 Azanus, 3 Baracus, 4 Gandes, 5 Phaſis: the Hills in many places having a full proſpect over the adjoyning Valley; the chief of which were Malea, and thoſe called Calibi, the Vales perpetually enriched with the choiceſt fruits. Exceeding populous for the bigneſs, and ſtored with many Towns of note. Of which Magrammum only hath the name of a Metropolis. 1 Margana, 2 Jogana, 3 Sindocanda, 4 Hodoca, 5 Nabartha, 6 Dogana, 7 Dionyſiopolis, 8 Bocana, 9 Abaratha, 10 Procurum, 11 Nagadiba; and 12 Anubingara, have the name of Cities. 13 Meduttum, and 14 Talacorum, noted for the Towns of Traffick. 15 Priapæ, 16 Mardus. 17 Rhizala, 18 Spatana, and 19 that of the Sun, for commodious Havens. 20 Anurogrammum being honoured with the title of Regia, or the Royal City. As for the name, it is ſaid by Ptolomy to have been firſt called Taprobane, then Simondi Inſula, and finally in his time Salice, and the People Salæ; from whence the name of Selan or Seilan ſeems to be derived.

To take a view of at the preſent, I find it ſaid to be of an Oval form, divided from the main Land by a narrow Channel, the Heavens refreſhing it with their dews, the Air with a fragrant freſhneſs, and the waters with their many Rivers and Fountains; the Earth diverſified into lofty hills, and lowly valleys; her inward Chambers filled with Metals, and Jewels, her outward Coat of the pleaſanteſt colour, ſtored with whole Woods of Cinnamon, beſides Fruits, Limons, Oranges &c. bettering thoſe of Spain. Of Fowls and Beaſts great plenty both wild and tame; and the beſt breed of Elephants in all the world. Deſtitute only of the Vine, the want of which ſupplied with a pleaſant drink made of the juyce of fruits, more natural to them then the other, and ſo preſervative of life that the people are reported to be longer lived than in any other parts. In a word, ſo abounding in all contentments, that the Indians hold it to be Paradiſe, and take upon them to point out ſome of Adam's footings, left for a memorial in ſome parts of it. And to confirm them in their Errour, they have an Hill there which the Spaniards call by the name of Pico de Adam, affirmed to be ſeven Leagues in height, from whence Adam aſcended into Heaven: for that cauſe viſited by the Moors or Arabians, with continual Pilgrimages.

The people for the moſt part tall and ſtrait of body, naked from the girdle upwards, unwarlike, and much given unto eaſe and pleaſures; So queaſie ſtomached that the pooreſt of them will not eat that meat which another hath touched; inclined to bravery, and therefore make wide holes in their ears, which they ſtretch out with Jewels to their very ſhoulders. Cunning Artificers in all Metals, one of them making a Crucifix of ſuch exquiſite workmanſhip, that it ſeemed to give life to the dead; and was ſent by the Archbiſhop of Goa to the King of Spain, as the rareſt Jewel which had ever graced his Royal Cabinet. They are alſo very active, and well skilled in Jugling, both men and women, travelling thorow India with their tricks and Hobby-horſes, by which they get themſelves both delight and money. In matter of Religion, they are generally Idolaters, eſpecially the Natives, whom they call Cingalas, which live in the In-lands; the Sea-coaſts (as in other Iſlands) being filled with Mahometans. No Chriſtians that I hear of but in Columbo, a Town of the Portugals.

Cities of moſt repute amongſt them, 1 Candie, the ſeat of one of their Kings, ſuppoſed to be the Sindocande of Ptolomy, memorable for the Statue of their ſuppoſed Adam, moſt artificially wrought, of five or ſix Fathoms high, Symmetrically proportionable to the print of his foot, which which they conceive to have amongſt them. 2. Ventane, of great renown for an Idol-Temple, in compaſs 130 paces, of great height, and all white except the top, which hath the Spires thereof ſo gilded, that when the Sun ſhines, men are not able to look upon them, 3. Janaſipatan. 4 Triqui Lemale, (ſuppoſed to be the Tarichi of Ptolomy) 5. Ratecolom. 6. Vilaſſem. 7. Tanamaca. 8. Laula. 9. Galle, the ſeats of many of their Kings, 10. Nagavita, conceived to be the Nigari; as 11. Agena, the Iogana of Ptolomy. 12. Colmuchi, the ſeat Royal of the chief King of this Iſland, ſituate on a capacious Bay in the Southweſt of it, and of moſt trade in all this Country: many great Ships laden with Cinnamon, Gems, Elephants, and other Indian Commodities going yearly hence. Fortified by the Portugals (by whom called Columbo) with a very ſtrong Caſtle built with the King's leave at firſt, to ſecure their trading; but ſince us'd by them as a curb to hold him in with, and to compel him to pay Tribute.

This Country firſt diſcovered to be an Iſland by Oneſicritus, Admiral of Alexanders Fleet, was in the time of Ptolomy inhabited by ſeveral Nations. The principal of which were the Galibi, and *Mudutt*æ dwelling in the North, the Rhogandani and Nanigiri in the South; the *Sindocand*æ in the Weſt, and the Tarachi in the Eaſt, the middle parts being taken up by the Anurogrammi, Magabdi, Suani, Semni. But little or nothing is ſaid of them in the way of ſtory, but that they were good Mimicks, did imitate the tunes of Birds, and could ſpeak to two at once, as if double tongued; that they were very ſtudious of Aſtrology, and worſhipped the Sun and the Hoſt of Heaven; that ſome of their Embaſſadors coming to Rome, in the time of Claudius Cæſar, Solem à Lævâ oriri mirati ſunt, &c. admired to ſee the Sun riſe on the wrong ſide of them; and finally, that the King was choſen by the people with reſpect had to his age and clemency; who being enthroned, appointed thirty Judges to adminiſter Juſtice to the Subject, without the Major part of whom, ſentence of Death was to paſs on no man. In following times this Monarchy (for ſuch it was in the time of thoſe Authors) was broken into many Pieces: the Portugals finding nine Kings in it, at their firſt coming hither, all Homagers or Tributaries to the King of Colmuchi. After that, this their chief King was wickedly murdered by his Barber, who drove the other Kings out of the Country, and for a while uſurped the Monarchy to himſelf. Since which time, having once again recovered their Kingdoms, ſix of them (as I have ſomewhere read, but remember not where) put themſelves under the protection of the Great Mogul, and became his Feudataries.

Near hereunto on the Coaſts of Malabar, are the Iſlands which they call Maldivæ, many in number, but ſo called from the principal of them, as that from Maldiva, a noted and well-traded Empory, where the King reſideth: Not very plentiful of neceſſaries for the uſe of man, did not the Palm alone ſupply them in all other wants. Inhabited by an induſtrious and ſober people, who make themſelves long Garments of Silk or Flax, brought from other places, wherewith more modeſtly adorned than the reſt of the Indians: and by their Fiſhing draw up ſhells of ſuch mingled colours, that they ſerve amongſt the Siametes inſtead of mony.

10. ISLANDS of leſs note.

BEſides theſe Iſlands repreſented to us by their ſeveral names, and ſome who have nothing but their names to take notice of; there be many thouſands of leſs note which we find in groſs: theſe Indian Seas being ſo prodigiouſly full of Iſlands, that it is almoſt impoſſible to believe there ſhould be ſuch multitudes; but utterly impoſſible to credit what is told us of them. Some of the moſt remarkable of them we have touched upon, as Acceſſories or Appurtenances to ſome greater Iſlands. The reſt we ſhall preſent only in the general Muſter, together with a taſte of ſome of thoſe ſtrange reports, with which ſome men have fouled their Papers, and abuſed their Readers. Of the Philippines there are ſaid to be 11000. though but 40 of them in poſſeſſion of the King of Spain. More South, but over againſt China, is another Frie of them, affirmed by Mariners to be no fewer than 7448. and (as if nature had delighted to diſport her ſelf by ſowing Iſlands in theſe Seas) another Shoal of them about India, no fewer in number than 127000. all which laid together would make a Continent as large as three or four parts of Europe; and are ſtill groaning under the burthen of Heatheniſm. Theſe Iſlands ſtand ſo nigh unto one another, that they ſeem only to ſuch as are afar, to be all but one firm Land; but whoſoever alſo paſſeth between them, may with his hands touch the Boughs of the Trees on the one ſide, and on the other. Of theſe and the other Indian Iſlands, Travellers relate many incredible Fables, viz. That there be Hogs that have two teeth growing out of their ſnouts, and as many behind their ears, of a ſpan and a half long; a Tree whoſe Weſtern part is rank poyſon; and the Eaſtern part an excellent preſervative againſt it. They tell us alſo of a Fruit, that whoſoever eateth, ſhall for the ſpace of twelve hours be out of his Wits; and of a Stone, on which whoſoever ſitteth, ſhall ſuddenly have a rupture in his body. We are told alſo that hereabouts are taken Tortoiſes of that bigneſs that ten men might ſit and dine within one of the ſhells; and that there is a Tree, which all the day-time hath not a flower on it, but within half an hour after Sun-ſet, is full of them. All huge and monſtrous lyes, and not fit for credit. Galuano reporteth alſo, that in ſome of theſe Iſlands there is a Fruit, of which if a Woman that is with child eat, her Child will preſently move; that there is a River plentifully ſtored with Fiſh, whoſe water is yet ſo hot, that it doth immediately ſcald off any skin of the Beaſt that is caſt into it; that ſome of the men have tails; and moſt of their Swine horns; that they have Oyſters which they call braſs, the ſhells whereof are of ſo large compaſs, that they Chriſten Children in them; that in the Sea there are ſtones which grow and increaſe like fiſh, of which the beſt Lime is made: that there is a bird called Monicodiata, which having no feet is in a continual motion: and that there is a hole in the back of the Cock, in which the Hen doth lay her eggs, and hatch her young ones. I bid no man to believe theſe Relations: for my part I ſay with Horace,

Quodcunque oſtendis mihi ſic, incredulus odi.
Whatever thus thou tell'ſt me, I
Will always hate it as a lye.

And ſo much for theſe EASTERN ISLANDS.

An Advertiſement to the Reader touching the ERRATA of this PART.

IN the firſt place the Reader is to be advertiſed that Fol. I have adventured to prove the Alamatha of Ptolomy to be the Chamath, or Hamath-Sobab, of the Holy Scriptures, The place ill pointed, but the judicious Reader will eaſily find out the ſcope and meaning. Yet if this ſhall not be approved of, I ſhould then think it to be that Elam or Helam where David diſcomfited the Army of the Meſopotamians; mention whereof is made 2 Sam. 10. 16, 17. In the next place he is to know, that Fol. within the compaſs of five lines, the Victory which Aſa King of Judah obtained againſt the numerous Army of Æthiopians, is twice repeated: in the firſt place aſcribed to Jethir, in the next to Mareſha, (though the other alſo hath good Authors) let that of Jethir be ſupplied in this manner following. 5. Jethir or Jetthir, in the North Border of this Tribe towards Eleutheropolis: a City anciently of the Levites in St. Hieroms time called by the name of Jethira, and then repleniſhed altogether with Chriſtians: now nothing but the name remaining. 6. Mareſa, &c. And finally, whereas Ajalon, p. is placed in the Tribe of Ephraim, and p. in the Tribes of Dan, the reaſon is, becauſe being ſituate in the Borders of both Tribes, it is by ſome Writers aſcribed to Dan, and by others to Ephraim. The like may be alſo ſaid of Michpas, mentioned alſo in two Tribes according as it is diſpoſed on by ſeveral Authors.

CONTAINING THE

CHOROGRAPHY and HISTORY OF AFRICK,

AND ALL THE

Principal Kingdoms, Provinces, Seas, and Isles thereof.

Of AFRICK.

AFRICK is bounded on the East by the Red-Sea, and Bay of Arabia, by which parted from Asia; on the West, by the main Atlantick Ocean, interposing betwixt it and America; on the North, by the Mediterranian Sea, which divides it from Europe and Anatolia: and on the South, with the Æthiopick Ocean, separating it from Terra Australis incognita, or the Southern Continent. Parted from all the rest of the World, except Asia only, to which joyned by a narrow Isthmus, not above 60 miles in length, and memorable for the great design which Cleopatra the last Queen of Egypt had upon it, which in brief was this, when Mark Anthony was encountred by Augustus in the Naval battel of Actium, Cleopatra fearing the success, fled through the midst of all his fleet, with the 60 Gallies which were appointed for her Guard. Being come to the North part of this Isthmus, she gathered together all her portable treasures, and intended to hoist her shiping out of the Mediterranian, and hale them over the Land to the Red-Sea, from whence she had purposed to take sail, and together with her sweet-heart Anthony, and some other choicest Friends, to seek out some other place of dwelling far enough from the Romans: But from this, Anthony who fled after her, and vainly hoped for a change of fortunes, did at last dissuade her.

The Form hereof is like a Pyramis reversed; the Basis of which, from Tanger on the Strait of Gibraltar, to the point where it joyneth unto Asia, is reckoned at the breadth of 1920 Italian miles, the Conus of it very narrow. But from the Conus or Pyris to the most Northern part of the Basis, it extendeth it self the space of 4155 miles, being much less then Asia, and far bigger then Europe.

By the Grecians it is called most commonly Libya, (of which more hereafter) part of it taken for the whole: by the Ethiopians, Alkebu-lan; by the Indians, Besecath. But the most noted name thereof is Africa, which Josephus out of Cleodemus and Polybistor, deriveth from Epher or Apher, one of the Nephews of Abraham, by Midian the son of Keturah. The Arabians, by whom it is called Ifrichea, derive it from the Verb Faruch, signifying to divide; because more visibly divided both from their own Countrey, and the rest of the World, than any other part thereof which was known unto them. Some of the Greek Fablers fetch it from one Afer, a Companion of Hercules, whom he attended unto Spain, some fetch it out of Apher, an Hebrew word, signifying Dust, agreable to its sandy and dusty soil: Festus an old Gramarian, from A Privativum, and the Greek word φρίκη which imports a Countrey void of cold, as suitable to the fiery temper of the Air. By Bochartus, who brings all from the old Phœnician, it is said to be derived from Peruc, Spica, an ear of Corn, which mollified into Feric, came at last to Africa, that is to say, a Countrey plentiful in Corn. Which Etymoligy of his may receive some countenance from that great plenty of Corn which was bred in this Country: especially in those parts hereof which the Romans called the Proper Africk, whereof we shall speak more when we come to Barbary: the whole Continent taking from that Province the name of Africk. But in my mind, (if that from the Hebrew Epher or Aphar, be not worth accepting) I should prefer the Etymon of Festus before any other unless we might be sure that Carthage anciently was called Africa, as Suidas telleth us it was; for then without all peradventure we would seek no further. For other more particular names by which it hath been called in some elder Writers, i. e. Olympia, Oceanica, Eschatica, Coryphe, Ammonis, Hesperia, Ortygia, and perhaps some others, it is enough to our design to take notice of them.

It is situate for the most part under the Torrid Zone, the Æquator crossing it almost in the very midst: and for that cause supposed by many of the Ancients not to be inhabited at all, or but very thinly, in the middle and more Southern parts of it; or if at all, with such strange people, as hardly did deserve to be counted men. Pomponius among others was of this opinion, guessing the inward parts thereof to be taken up by such strange Brutes as the Cynophanes, who had heads like dogs; 2 The Scyapodæ, who with the shadow of their foot, could and did hide themselves from the heat of the Sun; 3 The Gamosaphantes, a naked people, ignorant of the use of weapons, and therefore fearfully avoiding the sight of men; 4 The Blemmyæ, who being without heads, had their eyes and mouths in their Brests; The Æripani, who had no other humane quality to declare them to be men, but the shape and making of their bodies. These people (as they thought) possessed some small portion of the mid-land parts of this great Countrey; the rest they knew not, or conceived to be unhabitable, in regard of the great heats thereof. But late discoveries and navigations have found the contrary; the Countrey proving in most parts to be well inhabited; and the coolness of the nights, by mists, dews, and gentle gales of wind, to mitigate the heat of the day.

Quodque die Solis vehementi excanduit æstu,
Humida nox reficit, paribusque refrigerat horis.

That is to say,

What the Sun burns by day, the Night renews,
And doth as much refresh with moistning dews.

For notwithstanding that it be in some places full of sandy deserts, a disease incident to some parts of Arabia, Persia, and other Countreys of a more Northernly situation: yet it is said by some, who speak it upon knowledge, that the greatest part of those Regions which lie under the Line or near it, (both in America and here) have so many goodly Fountains, Rivers, and little Brooks, such abundance of Cedars and other stately Trees of shade, so many sorts of delicate Fruits ever bearing, and at all times beautified with blossoms; as may make them hold comparison with any others, supposed to be of a more temperate situation.

But as was said before, the Ancients knew not much of this Countrey, and therefore spoke upon conjecture, or more doubtful here-say. For though Hanno a noble Carthaginian imployed by that State, discovered much of the Western Shores of this great Peninsula, yet he ventured not so much into the Land: nor did his Journal (either suppressed by the Romans, or not much took notice of) give any great light to other Nations to pursue those Voyages; being writ in the Carthaginian Tongue, but since translated into Greek, and published at Basil by Sigismund Gelenius, Anno 1533. As little credit did it find in former times, that some Phœnicians in the days of Pharao Neco, passing down the Red-Sea, should sail about the Coasts of Africk to the Straits of Gibraltar, and so return again to Egypt by the Mediterranean; as we find in Herodotus, that they did. But what those ages disbelieved or esteemed impossible, is now grown ordinary; the Circumnavigations about this Countrey being very frequent, since first performed by Vasques de Gama, an adventurous Portugal, in the year 1647. being 80 years after, or thereabout, from the time that the Portugals first attempted the discovery and circumnavigation of the Coasts of Africk, which at the last, to the no small glory of their Nation, was accomplished by them. For so it happened that having extended their dominions as far as they could upon the Continent of Spain; and having withal a large Sea-coast, and fit for shipping, they turned their Forces on the Moors which dwelled in Africk, from whom they took many of their best towns which lay along upon the shores of the main Atlantick. Encouraged by this good success, Henry Duke of Visco, one of the younger Sons of King John the first, resolved to spend his purse and credit upon new discoveries. And to that purpose, having had some conference with some persons of knowledge and experience in Cosmography, he draweth together the best men of Action, both in Spain and Italy. By their means, and his own good fortune, he first discovers the Isle of Madera, An. 1420. The Isle of Holy Port, Anno 1428. The Islands of Cape Vead, Anno 1440. the Maritine parts of the Land of Guinea, Anno 1452. which fair foundations being laid, and the way opened to those great discoveries which after followed; that glorious Prince deceased in a good old Age, Anno 1463. leaving this Character behind him, that he was the first that made the Portugals in love with the Sea; discontinued after his decease above 20 years, it was resumed again by King John, the second of that name, who by the conduct of Diego Con, Anno 1486. discovered the Realms of Angola and Congo, with the Isle of St. George, and thereupon resolves in the next year following to try his fortunes for compassing the whole Costs of Africk, thereby to find a way to the wealth of India, in which he employed Captain Bartholomew Diaz, who passing beyond Cape Verd, discovered first the Princes Island, and sayling from thence Southward to the furthest Promontry (since called the Cape of good Hope) returned home again; either discouraged by cross Winds, or unruly Seas, or the untractableness of his Mariners, or by altogether. The man to who the honour of this enterprize was reserved, was that Vasques de Gama above mentioned, employed in this service by King Emanuel, Anno 1597. who having in his way discovered the Islands of St. James and St. Hellen, and after doubled that terrible Cape, which Bartholomew de Diaz durst not pass, gave it the name of Cabo di Buena Esperonza, or the Cape of good Hope, because of the good hope it gave him of finding the desired way to the Trade of India; and having so doubted this Cape, and got Africk on the left hand of him, he kept his course on towards the North, till he discovered the Countreys of Quiloa, Mosambique, Mombaza, and Melinde, with the King of which last he contracted an especial friendship, and by his favours and directions, found the Port of Calicute in East-India, from whence with infinite joy and honour, he returned to Lisbon, Anno 1500. The design followed followed the next year by Alvarez Capralde, furniſhed with 12 ſhips 1500 Souldiers; but he being caſt upon the Coaſts of Braſil, and diverting wholly in a manner on the diſcovery of that large Countrey, it was purſued the next year with greater ſtrength, by Vaſques and his Brother Stephen, afterwards by Ferdinand de Olmeda, and Alphonſo de Albuquerque, and divers others of that Nation, and finally by the Engliſh, Hollanders, Merchants almoſt of every Country which have any Trade upon the Ocean. By means whereof the latter Ages are better inſtructed in the particulars of it, than the former were; who knew not much beyond the limits of the Roman Empire, and ſome parts adjoyning upon Egypt, more than the ſtrange beaſts and more ſtrange reports which they had from hence; occaſioning hereby the By-word, Africa ſemper aliquid apportat novi.

Touching the State of Chriſtianity in this great Continent, it is very weak; moſt of thoſe Regions which Chriſtian Religion had once gained from Idolatry, Mahometaniſm having ſince regained from Chriſtianity: inſomuch that not onely the North part of Africk near the Mediterranean, from Spain to Egypt, where the Goſpel once ſo exceedingly flouriſhed, that three hundred Catholick Biſhops were at one time baniſhed thence by Genſericus King of the Vandals, is at this preſent utterly void of Chriſtians, (except ſome few Towns belonging to the King of Spain:) but even in all this vaſt Countrey, thrice as big as Europe, there is not any one Region entirely Chriſtian, but the Kingdom of Habaſſia onely, and perhaps not that; none where the Chriſtians are intermingled with Mahometans, but onely Egypt; nor where mingled with Idolaters, but in Congo and Anloga, and ſome few Towns upon thoſe Coaſts in the hands of the Portugals. So little benefit have thoſe Nations gotten by our late Diſcoveries; it being Gain, not Godlineſs, which the Merchant aims at.

The Nations inhabiting this Countrey, or diſperſed in it, may be reduced to Africans properly ſo called, Egyptians, Habaſſines, Arabians, Jews, and ſome European Chriſtians only in their Forts and Garriſons; the Jews in all the good Towns, where Trading is ſtirring; the Arabians chiefly on the Sea-Coaſts bordering on the Red-Sea; but wandring in great hords or companies all about the Countrey with their wives and Children: the Habaſſines and Egyptians in their ſeveral Kingdoms: The Africans again ſubdivided into Moors and Caferes; of which the Moors are wholly under the Law of Mahomet, the Caferes dwelling in the in-land and more Southern parts, not diſcovered anciently in their wonted Gentiliſm. Accordingly, the Languages herein ſpoken are different alſo; The Portugal or Spaniſh being uſed by the Europeans; 2 The Chaldee or Syriack by the Jews; 3 The Arabick by thoſe of that Nation, and in all Barbary except Morocco onely; 4 The Habaſſine, and 5 The Egyptian in thoſe Kingdoms: 6 That called Aquel-amarig, or the Noble Language, ſuppoſed to be the natural and original language of the Roman Africans, intermixt with ſome Arabian words, and ſpoken generally in Morocco, and ſo amongſt ſome of the Inhabitants of Barbary, neareſt to Mount Atlas: 7 That named Sungai, uſed in Tombutum, Guinea, and others of the people of the Land of Negroes; and 8 That called Gubeo, ſpoke by thoſe of Æthiopia inferior, and ſuch of the Land of Negroes as lie next unto it.

In reference to the State of the Roman Empire, it contained only the Dioceſs of Egypt, Africk, and part of the Dioceſs of Spain. The Dioceſs of Egypt ſubdivided into the Provinces of, 1 Lybia ſuperior, 2 Lybia inferior, 3 Thebais, 4 Auguſtanica, 5 Arcadia, and 6 Ægyptus, eſpecially ſo called, diſtinguiſhed by other names in the Nicene Council: That of Africk, Tripolitana, 2 Byzacena, 3 Zeugitana, 4 Numidia, 5 Mauritania Cæſarienſis, 6 and Mauritania Sitifenſis; the other part of Mauritania, called Tingitana, being laid to the Dioceſs of Spain. The reſt of this Peninſula, as they never conquered, ſo it never was much taken into conſideration. But being more perfectly diſcovered now than in former times (though not ſo perfectly as that I can be able to promiſe an exact accompt of it) it is divided commonly into theſe ſeven parts; 1 Egypt, 2 Barbary, or the Roman Africk, 3 Numidia, 4 Lybia, neither of which the ſame with thoſe of the ancient Romans; 5 Terra Nigritarum, 6 Æthiopia ſuperior, and 7 Æthiopia inferior. Such of the Iſlands as do not properly belong unto any of theſe, ſhall make up the eighth. In the Deſcriptions whereof we will follow the Method of Plantatreus, and begin with Egypt, as being peopled and poſſeſſed before all the reſidue.

OF EGYPT.

EGYPT is bounded on the Eaſt with Idumæa, and the Bay of Arabia; on the Weſt with Barbaria, Numidia, and part of Lybia; on the North, with the Mediterranean Sea; on the South with Æthiopia Superior, or the Habaſſine Empire.

This Countrey in the holy Scriptures is called Miſraim, from Miſraim the ſon of Chus, and Grandſon of Cham, by whom firſt planted after the Flood, the Footſteps of which name do remain amongſt the Arabians, who ſtill call it Miſre. Named in the ſame regard in the Book of Pſalms, the Land of Ham: a name retained in ſome of the ſacred Offices of the old Egyptians where (as Plutarch witneſſeth) it was called Chemia, for Chamia no doubt; as that from Cham or Ham, the firſt ſtock of their Nation. In prophane Authors, it hath had the ſeveral names of 1 Aeria, from the ſerenity of the Air, which is never clouded; 2 Potamia, from the propinquity of the Sea, waſhing two ſides of it; 4 Ogygia, from Ogiges a ſuppoſed King thereof; 4 Melampodus, from the black colour of the ſoyl; 5 Oſiria, from their God Oſiris, here in high eſteem; 6 and finally it was called Egyptus, which in the end prevaild over all the reſt, either from Egyptus the Brother of Danaus once King hereof (in the ſtories of this Nation better known by the name of Rameſes;) or from Ægyptus the old name of the River Nilus, by whoſe annual over-flowings made both rich and famous; and of the ſoil and rubbiſh which that River brought with it from the higher Countrys, it was by ſome ſuppoſed to have been raiſed into firm land, and gained out of the Sea. Called therefore in ſome Writers by the name of Nili donum, or the gift of Nilus. Yet ſome there be who would have it called Ægyptus for Aiguphtus, and that derived from Ai Coptus, which ſignifieth the Land or Countrey of Coptus, that being ſuppoſed to have been anciently the chief City of it. And ſome again will have the name derived from Chioth, by which the Ægyptians call themſelves to this very day.

It containeth in length from the Mediterranean to the City of Aſna, or Syene, bordering on Æthiopia, 562 Italian miles: in breadth (excluſively of Cyrene and Lybia) from Roſetta unto Dimiata, or from the moſt Weſterly branch of Nilus to the fartheſt Eaſt, 160 of the ſame miles; to which the adding of thoſe two Provinces makes a great aſſeſſion: Situate under the ſecond and fifth Climates, ſo that the longeſt day in Summer is but 13 hours and an half.

By reaſon of this Southernly ſituation of it, the Air is here very hot and offenſive; ſo that to avoid the inſupportable heats thereof, and to have the benefit of ſome freſh wind, the inhabitants are accuſtomed to build high Towers ers in all their Towns, on which they use to solace and refresh themselves. The soil made fruitful by the overflowings of Nilus (whereof more anon) is so exceeding plentiful of all sorts of Grain, that it was called Horreum Populi Romani, the Granarie or Store-house of the People of Rome: which City it did annually furnish with four months provision, insomuch that it was said by Pliny, that the greatness of the Roman Empire could not long continue without the Corn and Wealth of Ægypt, the plenty or famine of that City depending wholly on this Countrey. It abounds also with rich Pastures, in which they feed great store of Camels, Horses, Asses, Oxen, Sheep, and Goats, greater of growth than usually in most places else, and by reason of the moorishness of the Countrey, they have great store of Fowls. Of Poultry they have also good numbers about their houses, hatched in a different manner from all other Countreys, not by the sitting of the Hen, but the heat of Furnaces, or Ovens; in which their eggs are orderly laid in dung, and by a gentle heat brought to animation. It is also liberally furnished with great plenty of Metals, some precious Stones, good Wines, and the choicest Fruits, as Leamons, Oranges, Pomgranates, Citrons, Figgs, Cherries, and such as these, excellent both for taste and colour. Of Palm-trees also great abundance; of which though we have spoke before, yet we shall here more fully declare the nature and strange poperties of them. They grow in couples, Male and Femal, both thrust forth Cods full of seed, but the Female is only fruitful, and that not except growing by the Male, and having his seeds mixt with hers. The pith of these Trees is an excellent Sallad, better than an Hartichoke, which in taste it very much resembleth. Of the branches they make Bedsteads, Latices, &c. of the leaves, Baskets, Mats, Pans, &c. of the outward husks of the Cod, Cordage; of the inner Brushes. The fruit it bears best, known by the name of Dates, are in taste like Figs: and finally, it is said to yield whatsoever is necessary to the life of Man. It is the nature of this Tree, though never so ponderous a weight were put upon it, not to yield to the burthen; but still to resist the heavines of it, and to endeavour to lift and raise it self the more upwards. For this cause planted in Church-yards in the Eastern Countreys, as an Emblem of the Resurrection: in stead whereof we use the Eve-Tree in these cold Regions. For the same reason, given to Conquerours as a token of Victory; it being the Emblem or Hieroglyphick of a Souldiers life. Hence figuratively used for precedency, as Huic equidem consilio palmam do, in Terence; sometimes for the victory it self, as Non auferent tamen hanc palmam, in Pliny; & Plurimarum palmarum homo, for a man that had won many prizes in the Fence-School, as in Tully, pro Roscio: more naturally for the sign of Victory, as in that of Horace;

——— ——Palmaque nobilis
Terrarum Dominos evehit ad Deos.

That is to say,

The Palm, of Victory a sign,
Equals men to the Powers Divine.

The People though the Countrey lye in the same Clime with Barbary, are not black, but tawny, or Olive-coloured, affirmed by Pomponius Mela to weep and mourn over the bodies of their dead, daubed over with dung; to have held it a great impiety to burn or bury them, but having imbalmed them, to lay them in some inward Room of their Houses: the men to keep themselves at home, for the houshold business, the women to follow Merchandise and affairs abroad; the men to carry burthens upon their heads, and the women theirs upon their shoulders: Antipodes in these last, to most other Nations. But certainly they were a witty and ingenuous people, the first Inventers of Geometry, Arithmetick, Physick, as also of Astronomy, Necromancy, and Sorcery. The first taught the use of Letters to the neighbouring Phœnicians, by them imparted to the Greeks. Accustomed at the first to express their conceits in the shape of Birds, Beasts, Trees, &c. which they termed Hieroglyphicks; of which, two or three Examples out of Orus will not be impertinent. For Eternity they painted the Sun and Moon, as things which they believed to have had no beginning, nor were likely to have any end: For a Year, they painted a snake, with his tail in his mouth, to shew how one year succeeding another, kept the world still in an endless circle. For a Moneth, they painted a Palm-Tree, because at every new Moon it sendeth forth a new branch. For God, they painted a Falcon; as well for that he soareth so high, as that he governeth the lesser Birds. For Integrity of life, they painted fire and water, both because these Elements are in themselves most pure, and because all other things are purified by them. For any thing that was Abominable to the Gods, they painted a Fish, because in their Sacrifices the Priests never used them; and the like. From this manner of expressing ones self, the invention of Letters is thought to have had its original (though learnt by them no question of the children of Israel, when they lived amongst them:) "the History whereof take briefly, and "word for word, out of Tacitus. Primi per formas animalium Ægyptii, &c. The Egyptians first of all expressed the conceptions of the mind, by the shapes of "Beasts; and the most ancient Monuments of mans "memory, are seen graven in stones; and they say, that "they are the first inventers of Letters. Then the Phœnicians, because they were strong at Sea, brought them "into Greece; and so they had the glory of that which "they received from others: For there goeth a report, "that Cadmus sailing thither in a Phœnician ship, was the "Inventer of that Art among the Greeks, when they were "yet unexpert and rude. Some report, that Cecrops the "Athenian, or Livius the Theban, and Palamedes the "Grecian, did find out sixteen Characters at the time of "the Trojan War; and that afterward Simonides added "the rest. But in Italy the Etrurians learned them of "Demaratus the Corinthian; and the Aborigines of E-"vander the Arcadian: So far Tacitus. That the Phœnicians were the first Inventers of Letters, I dare not affirm; and as backward am I to refer the glory hereof to the Egyptians; for certainly the Hebrews were herein skilled before either: yet that the Phœnicians were herein School-masters to the Greeks, I think I may with safety maintain, having Lucan in consent with Tacitus.

Phœnices primi (famæ si creditur) ausi
Mansuram rudibus vocem signare figuris.

Phœnicians first (if fame may credit have)
Dar'd in rude Characters our words ingrave.

Of this mind also is Isidore of Sevil in the first Book of Originations, who also addeth, that for that cause the Fronts of Books, and the Titles of Chapters were written in Red-letters, as it is by some still in use. Hinc est quod & Phœnicio colore librorum capita describantur, quia ab ipsis literæ initium habuere, cap. 3. As for this less vulgar Letters, which the Latines call Cyphræ, and whereof every exercised State's-man hath peculiar to himself; they were first invented by Julius Cæsar, when he first began to think of the Roman Mornachy: and were used by him in his

his Letters to his more private and tried Friends, that if by misfortune they should be intercepted, the contents of them should not be understood; ὅπως ἀγνοεῖσθαι τοῖς πολλοῖς τὰ γεγραμμένα, ne oliva literarum lectio cuivis esset. Augustus one of the greatest Politicians of the World had another kind of obscure writing; for in his Letters of more secrecy and importance, he always used τὸ διάστημα τοῦ στοιχείου, to put the Letter immediately following in the order of the Alphabet, for that which in ordinary Writing he should have used. As for Brachigraphy, or the Art of Writing by short Characters, so useful for the taking of a Speech or Sermon as it is spoken: I find in Dion, that Mæcenas that great Favourite of Augustus Cæsar, and favourer of Learning, did first invent them, ad celeritatem scribendi, for the speedier dispatch of Writing; ὑφ' ἡμῶν σημεῖα γραμμάτων τινὰ (they are the very words of my Author) οὐδὲ πάνυ ἐξευρέθη. Isidor in the second Chapter of this Book above mentioned, ascribeth it to Aquila, the Libertus or Freed man of his Mæcenas; and to Tertius Persannius, and Philargius, who added to this invention. Yet had all they their chief light in it from Tullius Tiro, a Freed man of Cicero's; who had undertaken and compassed it in the Prepositions, but went no further. At the last it was perfected by Seneca, who brought this Art into order and method; the whole Volume of his contractions consisting of 5000 words. Deinde Seneca contracto omnium digestoq; & aucto numero, opus efficit in quinque millia.

So eminent in Arts and Learning were the old Ægyptians, that from them Pythagoras and Democritus learnt their Philosophy; Lycurgus, Solon, and Plato, their forms of Government; Orpheus and Homer their Poetical fictions of the Gods. Particularly here flourished Aristarchus the famous and learned Gramarian; 2 Herodian a diligent Student and searcher into curious Arts; 3 Ammonius, the Master of Plotinus; 4 Didymus sirnamed alceuteres, for his indefatigable Industry in several Sciences; 5 Marethon, an old Historian, of whom we have nothing but some fragments; 6 Appianus, an Historian of a later date, whose works are extant; 7 Didymus the Grammarian; 8 Cl. Ptolomæus the Geographer; 9 Achiles Statius the Poet; 10 And before all the profound Philosophers Mercurius, sirnamed Trismegistus. And after their Conversion to the Faith of Christ, 1 Pantonus the first Reader of Divinity in the Schools of Alexandria; 2 Origen, and 3 Clemens Alexandrius, both skilled in the Universality of Learning; 4 Dyonisius; 5 Athanasius, and 6. Cyril; all three Bishops of Alexandria, and the glories of their several times.

This notwithstanding their Religion before the embracing of Christianity was the worst of Gentilism; these people not only worshiping the Sun, Moon, and the Stars of Heaven, Creatures of greatest Use and Glory; nor only sacrificing to Jupiter, Hercules, Apollo, and the rest of the Gods, (many of whom were Authors in their several times of some publick benefit to mankind) as did other Gentiles; but attributing Divine honours to Crocodiles, Snakes, Serpents, Garlick, Leeks and Onions. For which, as worthily condemned by the Christian Fathers, so most deservedly exposed unto publick scorn, by the Pens of the Poets;

Porrum & cepe nefas violare, & ladere morsu;
Felices populi, quibus hec nascuntur in Hortis
Numina! —— Quis nescit quidlia demens
Ægyptus portenta colat, &c.

Which may be rendred to this purpose;

To bite an Onion or a Leek, is more Than deadly Sin. The Numen they adore
Grows in their Gardens. And who doth not know What monstrous Shapes for gods in Egypt go?

But the god most esteemed by them, and by all sorts of the Egyptians the most adored, was Apis, a coal-black Oxe, with a white star in his forehead, the Effigies of an Eagle on his back, and two hairs only in his tail. But it seemeth his godship was not so much respected by strangers. For Cambyses when he conquered Egypt, ran him with his sword thorow the Thigh, and caused all his Priests to be scourged: And Augustus being here, would not vouchsafe to see him, saying, Θεὸς ἀλλ' οὐχὶ βοῦς πρόσκυνεῖται ἄνδρα, that the Gods and not the Oxen of Egypt were the object of his devotions. A speech most truly worthy so brave an Emperour.

But it is time we should proceed to a survey of these Egyptians, as they stand at the present, much differing from the ingenuity and Abilities of their predecessors; nothing but ignorance and Barbarism to be found amongst them. For such as have observed the nature of the Modern Egyptians, affirm them to have much degenerated from the worth of their Ancestors; prone to Innovations, devoted to Luxury, Cowardly, Cruel, addicted naturally to cavil; and to detract from whatsoever is good and eminent. In their dealing with other men, more observant then faithful, of a wit much inclining to craftiness, and very eager on their profit. Of person, of a mean stature, Tawny of complexion, and spare of body, but active and quick of foot. Such as inhabit in the Cities, apply themselves to Merchandice, grow rich by trading, reasonably well habited, and not much differing from the Turks in dress and fashion. Those in the Countrey, who betake themselves to Husbandry, affirmed to be a savage and nasty people, crusted over with dirt, and stinking of smoak; fit company for none but those of their own condition. Nothing now left amongst them of the Arts of their Ancestors, but an affectation which they have unto Divinations; to Fortune-telling great pretenders; by which, and some cheating tricks in which very well practised, great numbers of them wander from one place to another, and so get their livelyhood; occasioning the Vagabonds and straglers of other Nations, who pretend unto the same false Arts, to assume their names. The whole body of the Inhabitants now an Hochpot or Medley of many Nations Moors, Arabians, Turks, the natural Egyptian making up the least part of the reckoning.

The women of the same complexion with the men, but well formed and featured, did they not too much affect a seeming Corpulency; which if they cannot get in Flesh, they will have in Cloths. Very fruitful in Child-bearing, and quick of dispatch when they are in labour: some of them having three or four children at a Birth; those that are born in the eighth moneth living to good Age, and not in danger of death, as in other Countreys. Such of them as dwell in Cities cover their faces with black Cypres bespotted with red; their arms and ancles garnished with bracelets and hoops of Gold, Silver or some other Metal. Those in the Countrey for a Vail, use some dirty clout, having holes only for their eyes, which little is too much to see and abstain from loathing. Both in the City and the Countrey, contrary to the custom in all places else, the women use to make water standing, and the men couring on their knees.

The Christian Faith was first here planted by S. Mark, whom all Antiquity making the first Bishop of Alexandria.

His

His Succeſſors, till the time of Heraclius and Dionyſius, choſen continually out of the Presbytery or Cathedral-Clergy; afterwards out of the Clergy at large. Their Juriſdiction ſetled by a Canon of the Council of Nice, over all the Churches in the whole Dioceſs of Egypt, (taking the word Dioceſs in the civil Notion) containing Lybia, Pentapolis and Egypt ſpecially ſo called: to which, though Epiphanius adds Thebais, Mareotica and Ammoniaca, yet he adds nothing in effect; Thebays and Mareotica being parts of Egypt, as Ammoniaca was of Lybia. Afterwards the Æthiopian or Abaſſine Churches became ſubject to this Patriarch alſo, and do acknowledge to this day ſome relation to him. By the coming in of the Saracens, and the ſubjugation of this Countrey, Chriſtianity fell here into great decay; languiſhing ſo ſenſibly ſince thoſe times, eſpecially ſince the conqueſt of it by the Turks: that whereas Borchardus in his time reckoned three hundred thouſand Chriſtians; in the laſt eſtimate which was made of them, they were found to be fifty thouſand. This ſmall remainder of them, commonly called Cophti, either from the Greek word κόπτω Scindo, becauſe they retained the uſe of Circumciſion with their Chriſtianity; or from Coptus a chief Town in Egypt, in which many of them did reſide; or finally by Abbreviation from Ægopthi corrupted from Ægyptii, their own National name. They are all Jacobites in Sect, from whom they differ notwithſtanding in ſome particulars, in ſome from all Chriſtians Churches, in many from the Church of Rome. The points moſt proper to them, 1 Uſing Circumci on with their Baptiſme, but rather as a National than Religious cuſtome; though in that ſenſe alſo laid aſide, as is ſaid by ſome, by the perſwaſion of ſome Legates from the Pope of Rome, in a Synod held in Caire, Anno 1583. 2*ly*. Conferring all ſacred Orders under the Prieſthood, on Infants immediately after Baptiſm; their parents, till they come to ſixteen years of age, performing what they promiſed in their behalf, viz. Charity, faſting on Wedneſday and Friday, and four Lents of the year. 3*ly*. Reputing Baptiſm not to be of any efficacy, except miniſtred by the Prieſt, in the open Church, in what extremity ſoever. 4*ly*. And yet not baptiſing any children till the fortieth day, though they dye in the interim. 5*ly*. Giving to Infants the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, aſſoon as Chriſtned; 6*ly*. Contracting Marriages even in the ſecond Degree of Conſanguinity, without diſpenſation; 7*ly*. Obſerving not the Lords day, nor any of the Feſtivals, except only in Cities. 8*ly*. And in their Liturgies, reading the Goſpel written by Nicodemus. The points wherein they differ from the Church of Rome, 1 Adminiſtring the Sacrament of the Lords Supper under both kinds; 2*ly*. Adminiſtring in leavened bread; 3*ly*. Admitting neither Extreme unction, nor the uſe of the Euchariſt, to thoſe that are ſick; 4*ly*. Nor Purgatory, nor Prayer for the dead: 5*ly*. Nor uſing Elevation in the Act of adminiſtring: And 6*ly*. Reckoning the Roman Church for Heretical, and eſteeming no better of the Latine, then they do of the Jews. In theſe Opinions they continue hitherto againſt all Opponents and perſwaſions. For though Baronius in the end of the ſixth Tome of his Annals, hath regiſtred an Ambaſſage from Marcus, the then Patriarh of Alexandria, to Pope Clement the 8; wherein he is ſaid to have ſubmitted himſelf and the Churches of Egypt to the Pope of Rome; yet upon further ſearch made, it was found but a Cheat, deviſed to hold up the reputation of a ſinking cauſe. The Patriarch of Alexandria ſtill adhereth to his own Authority: though many of late, by the practice and Solicitation of ſome buſie Friars, have been drawn to be of the Religion of the Church of Rome, and to uſe her Liturgies.

Among the Rarities of this Countrey, ſome were the works of Nature, and ſome of induſtry and magnificence. Of this laſt kind I reckon the Labyrinth, the Pyramides, and the Pharos; all of them admirable in their ſeveral kinds, the envy of the Ages paſt, and the aſtoniſhment of the preſent. Look we firſt on the Pyramides, many in number, three more celebrated, and one the Principal of all; ſituate on the South of the City of Memphis, and on the Weſtern banks of Nilus. This laſt, the chief of the Worlds ſeven wonders, ſquare at the bottom, is ſuppoſed to take up eight Acres of ground. Every ſquare 300 ſingle Paces in length, aſcended by 255 ſteps, each ſtep above three foot high, and a breadth proportionable; growing by degrees narrower and narrower till we come to the top, and at the top conſiſting but of three Stones only, yet large enough for 60 men to ſtand upon. No Stone ſo little in the whole as to be drawn by any of our Carriages, yet brought thither from the Arabian Mountains. How brought, and by what Engine mounted is an equal wonder. Built for the Sepulcre of Cheops, an Egyptian King (as were the reſt for others of thoſe mighty Princes) who imployed in it day by day twenty years together, no fewer than 366000 men continually working on it. The charges which they put him to, in no other food than Garlick, Radiſhes, and Onions, being computed at a thouſand and eight hundred Talents. The next to this in bulk and beauty, is ſaid to be the work of a Daughter of Cheops, enabled (as Herodotus writeth) both to finiſh her Fathers undertaking, and raiſe her own unto the height, by the proſtitution of her body, requiring but one ſtone towards the Work from each one of her Cuſtomers; but the Tale unlikely. Nor is it of a greater Truth, though affirmed by Joſephus, and ſuppoſed by many good Divines, that the drudgery put upon the Iſraelites did concern theſe Pyramides: the Materials of theſe works being Stone; their imployment Brick. But paſt all doubt, advanced by thoſe conſiderate Princes upon good advice, and not for oſtentation only of their power and glories. For by this means they did not only eternize their memory to ſucceeding Ages, but for the preſent kept the Subject from ſloth and idleneſs; who being a people prone unto Innovations, were otherwiſe like enough to have fed that ſin in the change of Government, if not thus prudently diverted.

As for the Labyrinth it was built by Pſammiticus on the banks of the River Nilus, ſituate on the South of the Pyramides, and North of Arſinoe, or the City of Crocodiles. It contained within the compaſs of one continued Wall a thouſand Houſes, and twelve Royal Palaces, all covered with Marble; and had only one entrance; but innumerable turnings and returnings, ſometimes one over another; and all in a manner invious to ſuch as were not acquainted with them; the buiding more under ground, then above: the Marble ſtones laid with ſuch Art, that neither Wood nor Cement was employed in any part of the Fabrick; the Chambers ſo diſpoſed, that the doors upon their opening, did give a report no leſs terrible then a crack of Thunder. The main entrance all of white Marble, adorned with ſtately Columns, and moſt curious Imagery. The end at length being attained, a pair of ſtairs of 90 Steps conducted into a gallant Portico, ſupported with Pillars of Theban ſtone, which was the entrance into a fair and ſpacious Hall, (the place of their general Conventions) all of poliſhed Marble, ſet out with the Statues of their Gods. A work which afterwards was imitated by Dædalus, in the Cretane Labyrinth; though that fell as ſhort of the glories of this, as Minos was inferior unto Pſammiticus in Power and Riches.

Next unto theſe, I place the Iſle and Tower of Pharos, the Iſland oppoſite unto Alexandria, once a mile diſtant from the Land, but joyned to the Continent by Cleopatra, on this occaſion. The Rhodians, then Lords of the Sea,

Sea, uſed to exact ſome tribute or acknowledgment out of every Iſland within thoſe Seas, and conſequently out of this. Their Ambaſſadors ſent unto Cleopatra to demand this Tribute, ſhe detained with her ſeven days, under colour of celebrating ſome ſolemn Feſtivals; and in the mean time, by making huge dams and banks in the Sea, with incredible both charge and ſpeed; united the Iſland to the ſhore; which finiſhed, ſhe ſent the Rhodians away empty-handed, with this witty Jeer, telling them, That they were to take Toll of the Iſlands, and not of the Continent. A Work of great Rarity and Magnificence, both for the bigneſs of it, taking up ſeven furlongs of Ground, and for that cauſe called Heptaſtadium; and that incredible ſpeed wherewith it was finiſhed. As for the Watch-Tower, called in Greek and Latine Pharos, by the name of the Iſland; it was built by Ptolomy Philadelphus, for the benefit of Sailers, (the Seas upon that coaſt being very unſafe, and full of Flats) to guide them over the Bar of Alexandria. Deſervedly eſteemed another of the Worlds ſeven Wonders; the other five being, 1 the Mauſolæum, 2 the Temple of Epheſus, 3 the Walls of Babylon, 4 the Coloſſus of Rhodes, and 5 the Statue of Jupiter Olympius. This Watch-Tower, or Pharos was of wonderful height, aſcended by degrees, and having many Lanthorns at the top, wherein Lights burned nightly, as a direction to ſuch as ſailed by Sea. The Materials were white Marble; the chief Architect, Soſtratus of Gnidos, who ingraved on the Work this Inſcription: Soſtratus of Gnidos, the Son of Dexiphanes, to the Gods Protectors, for the ſafeguard of Sailers. This Inſcription he covered with Plaiſter, and thereon ingraved the Name and Title of the King, the Founder: to the end that the Kings Name being ſoon waſted and waſhed away, his own, which was written in Marble, might be eternized to Poſterity as the Founder of it. Nigh unto this Pharos, Cæſar purſuing Pompey into Egypt, and having diſcontented the King thereof, by demanding pay for his Souldiers, had his Navy which here lay at Anchor, aſſaulted by Achilles, one of young Ptolomies Servants, Cæſar himſelf being then in Alexandria. Hearing of the Skirmiſh, he haſted to the Pharos, meaning to ſuccour his Navy in perſon: but the Egyptians making towards him on all ſides, he was compelled to leap into the Sea, and ſwim for his life. And though (to avoid their Darts) he ſometimes ducked, yet held he ſtill his left hand above the water, and in it divers Books, which he carried ſafe unto his Ships, and animating his men, got the Victory. It is ſaid that Egypt hath only two doors; the one by Land, which is the ſtrong Tower of Peleuſium, or Damiata; the other by Water, which is this Pharos: Tota Ægyptus maritimo acceſſu, Pharo; pedeſtre vero, Peluſio, velut clauſtris munita exiſtimatur, ſaith Oppius.

Amongſt the Rarities of Nature, we may reckon thoſe ſtrange Beaſts and Fiſhes, proper almoſt unto this Country, i.e. the Crocodile, the Ichneumon, the Hippopotamus (or Sea-horſe) the Ibis, the Aſpe, and many ſeveral ſorts of Serpents. To ſpeak of which particularly were a Work more proper to a Natural Hiſtory, than a Geographical. And yet the Crocodile, more proper unto Egypt than all the reſt, cannot be parted with in ſilence: A Creature of a ſtrange nature, hatched of an Egg no bigger then that of a Turkie, and yet increaſing to the length of thirty foot; his tail as long as all the reſt of his Body, with which he is accuſtomed to inchain his prey, and draw it into the River; his Feet armed with Claws, and his Back with impenetrable Scales; his Mouth ſo wide (of which he moveth only the upper Jaw) that he is able to ſwallow a Heifer; equally uſed to both Elements, but better ſighted in the Water, then on the Land; Cowardly, though a Creature of prey, and ſuch as uſually flies from thoſe which dare ſet upon him; and eaſily vanquiſhed by the Dolphin, who ſwimming under the water woundeth him in the belly, where aſſaultable only. Whether ſo eaſily deſtroyed by the Ichneumon (a kind of Water-Rat) skipping into his mouth, and gnawing his way out again, as old Writers ſay, hath of late been queſtioned.

Of leſs diſpute, but not leſs Rarity in Nature, are theſe that follow: 1 That in all this Country it never raineth; or if a Cloud do ſometimes happen to diſſolve upon them, it bringeth on their Bodies innumerable Sores, and ſtrange Diſeaſes. 2 The annual overflowing of the River Nilus, and the many memorable things which are ſaid to follow on the ſame. Of which it is thus ſaid by Lucan;

Terra ſuis contenta bonis, non indiga Mercis,
Aut Jovis; in ſolo tanta eſt fiducia Nilo:

The Earth content with its own Wealth, doth crave
No Forreign Mart, nor Jove himſelf; they have Their hopes alone in Nilus fruitful Wave.

This Nilus from the 15 day of June, ſwelleth above his Banks, for the ſpace of 40 days; and in as many more, gathereth his waters again to their proper bounds. If it flow not to the height of fifteen Cubits, then the Earth is deficient in her abundance of increaſe, for want of moiſture: and if the waters ſurmounted the ſuperficies of the Earth, more than ſeventeen Cubits, then like a drunken man, it cannot produce its natural operation, as having his ſtomach (as it were) overlaid and ſurcharged with too much Liquor: but if the Mean be granted, there is no Country which can brag of the like Fertility; the Corn being all houſed before the 20th of May. During this Inundation, they keep their Beaſts and Cattel on the tops of ſuch little hills, which either the Providence of Nature, or the Induſtry of Man, hath prepared for them; where they abide till the decreaſe of the Waters: and on theſe Hills alſo ſtand moſt of their Towns and Villages, appearing in the time of the Flood like ſo many Iſlands; and holding a Commerce and continual Traffick by the entercourſe of Boats and Shallops, by which they do tranſport their Marketable Commodities from one place to another. And if it chance at any time, that the River doth not thus over-flow the Country, it is not onely the Fore-runner to a following dearth, but prognoſticateth ſome enſuing miſchief to the Prince and State: Confirmed by the teſtimony of good and creditable Authors, who have told us that in the 10th and 11th years of Cleopatra, the River increaſed not at all: and that it was noted as a Fore-teller of the Fall of thoſe two Great, but Unfortunate Princes, Cleopatra and her Sweet-heart Antonius. A ſecond Commodity which ariſeth from the overflowings of Nilus, is health, which it bringeth with it in moſt parts of the Countrey; the Plague, which oftentimes miſerably rageth upon the firſt day of the Flood, abating inſtantly: inſomuch that whereas 500 may die of that Diſeaſe in the City of Caire but the day before, there dieth not one of it on the day following. A third wonder in this River is, that keeping its waters united in a Body together, after it falleth into the Sea, it changeth the colour of the Mediterranean, further than any part of it can be ſeen from the ſhore. Add unto theſe, the many living Creatures which the ſlime thereof engendereth, on the withdrawing of the River to its natural Channel: whereof Ovid thus;

Sic ubi deſeruit madidos Septemfluus agros
Nilus, & antiquo ſua flumina reddidit alvo;
Plurima Culturæ verſis Animalia glebis
Inveniunt.

Which I English thus:

So when the Seven-mouth'd Nile the fields forſakes,
And to his ancient Channel him betakes;
The Plough-men many living Creatures find,
By turning up the Mud that's left behind.

Amongſt which Creatures ſo engendred, are ſaid to be ſuch innumerable heaps of Frogs, that if Nature, or Divine Providence rather, did not furniſh this Country with a proportionable number of Storks, by whom they are greedily devoured, the Plague of Frogs would come a ſecond time upon them to their utter deſtruction.

On the Banks of this River alſo grew thoſe ſedgy Weeds called Pspyri, of which Paper was made in former times, which I reckon amongſt the Rarities of Egypt alſo, but a Rarity of Art and Nature mixed. They divided it into thin flakes, (into which it naturally parteth) then laying them on a Table, and moiſtening them with the glutinous waters of the River, they preſſed them together, and after dried them in the Sun. By means of which invention, Books being eaſier to be tranſcribed and reſerved then formerly, Ptolomy Philadelphus made his excellent Library at Alexandria: and underſtanding how Attalus King of Pergamus, by the benefit of this Egyptian Paper, ſtrived to exceed him in that kind of Magnificence, prohibited the carrying of it out of Egypt. Hereupon Attalus invented the uſe of Parchments, made of the Skins of Calves and Sheep; from the materials called Membranæ, and Pergamena from the place where they were invented. The convenience whereof was the cauſe, that in ſhort time the Egyptian Paper was worn out of uſe; in place whereof ſucceeded our Paper made of Rags; the Authors of which excellent Invention, our Progenitors have forgotten to commit to memory. Before the uſe of theſe Papers and Parchments were firſt made known, I obſerve three ways of Writing amongſt the Antients, (I hope I ſhall be pardoned this ſhort digreſſion.) 1. On the inward ſide of the Bark of a Tree, which is in Latine called Liber; and whence Books have the name of Libri. 2*ly*. On Tables framed out of the main body of a Tree, which being called Caudex, gave the Latines occaſion to call a Book Codex. 3*ly*. They uſed to cover their Tables over with Wax, and thereon to write what they had to ſignifie; from whence a Letter-carrier was named Tabellarius. The Inſtrument wherewith they wrote, was a ſharp-pointed Iron, which they called Stylus; a word now ſignifying (the Original derived from hence) the peculiar kind of Phraſe which any man uſeth; as Negligens ſtylus, in Quintilian; and Exercitatus ſtylus, in Cicero. I ſhould have alſo noted, that they uſed ſometimes to write in Leaves; That the Sybils Oracles being ſo written and ſcattered abroad, had the name of Sybillæ Folia; and that from thence we have the phraſe of a Leaf of Paper. But of this Argument enough.

Now to theſe Rarities of Nature, and Magnificent Induſtry, moſt of them near the River Nile, or relating to it, we are to add another of far greater moment, and ſuch as plainly ſeemeth to be ſupernatural, which is, that above five miles from the City of Caire, there is a place, in which, on every Good Friday yearly, there appear the Heads, Legs, and Armes of Men riſing out of the Ground, to a very great number: which if any man draw near unto them, or touch any of them, will ſhrink again into the Earth. Suppoſed by ſome to be an Impoſture of ſome Water-Men only; who ſtick them over-night in the Sands, and keeping them ſecret to themſelves, obtain thereby the ferrying over of many thouſands of people to behold the ſight. But Stephen Duplеis, a ſober and diſcerning man in the opinion of Goulartius, who reports it from him, conceived otherwiſe of it: affirming ſoberly that he was an Eye-witneſs of the wonder, that he had touched divers of theſe riſing Members; and that (as he was once ſo doing to the head of a Child) a man of Caire cried out unto him, Kali, Kali, ants materaſde; that is to ſay, Hold, hold, you know not what you do. A ſtrange Forerunner (if it be of undoubted credit) of the Reſurrection of the whole Body, preſented yearly, in the Riſing of theſe ſeveral parts.

Having thus done with the Rarities concerning Nilus, and that great increaſe of wealth which accrued thereby to all the Country, in the improvement of the natural Commodities of the Earth: let us next look on the Red-Sea, and the great Riches which that brought unto this Kingdom, in the way of Trading. A Sea whereof we have ſpoken already, as to the reaſon of the name, the extent thereof, and the ſeveral Iſlands contained in it, and therefore ſhall not need to repeat it here. That which is proper to to this Country, and to this alone, is the fame it hath for the miraculous paſſage of the Iſraelites through it as upon dry-land, and the drowning of Pharaoh Cenchres and all his people, at large commemorated in the Books of Holy Scriptures: as alſo for that through it the Spices of India and Arabia, were brought to Alexandria; and thence by the Venetians diſperſed through all Europe, Africa, and Aſia. I ſuppoſe I ſhall not do amiſs to ſet down Hiſtorically out of Galuano, a relation of the beginning, continuance, and period of the Traffick through this Sea, by which all Europe formerly received ſo great Commodity. Know then (ſaith he) that Ptolomy Philadelphus, 277 years before the Incarnation, was the firſt that ſet on foot this Navigation: Coſir (of old called Myos, Hormos*) on the Sea-ſide being the ordinary Haven out of which they hoyſed Sail for* India; and into which they returned, full fraught with their Commodities. From hence they were by Land conveighed to Coptus, and ſo down the Nile to Alexandria, by which Traffick the City grew exceeding Rich; inſomuch that the Cuſtom-houſe there yielded Ptol. Auletes 7 Millions and an half of Gold yearly. The Romans being Lords of Egypt, enhanſed the Cuſtoms to double that ſum: they ſent into India every year (as Pliny witneſſeth) 120 Ships, whoſe lading was worth 1200000 Crowns; and there was made in return of every Crown 100. When the Vandals, Lombards, Goths and Moors had torn in pieces the Roman Empire, all Commerce between Nations began to ceaſe. At laſt perceiving the inconvenience, they began anew; conveighing the Indian Commodities partly by Land, partly by Water, unto Capha in Taurica Cherſoneſus, belonging to the Genoeſe. Next Trabezond was made the Mart-Town, then Sarmachand in Zagataie, where the Indian, Turkiſh, and Perſian Merchants meet to barter Wares: the Turks conveighing their Merchandiſe to Damaſcus, Barutti, and Aleppo; from whence the Venetians tranſported it to Venice, making that the common Emporium of Chriſtendom. Once again, viz. Anno 1300. the Soldans of Egypt reſtored the Paſſage by the Red-Sea; which having continued more than 200 years, is now diſcontinued by the Portugal, Spaniards, Engliſh and Dutch, which bring them to their ſeveral homes by the back-ſide of Africk: So that not only the Traffick of Alexandria is almoſt decayed, and the Riches of the Venetians much diminiſhed; but the Drugs and Spices have loſt much of their Vertue, as impaired by too much moiſture in ſo long a Voyage. So much ſaith he, touching the courſe and alteration of this Trading: to which I ſhall take leave to add, that for the better and more quick return of ſuch Commodities as were uſually brought into this Sea; ſome of the Kings of Egypt attempted formerly to cut a main Channel from it to the River Nilus, paſſable by Ships of greateſt burden; the marks of whoſe proud attempts are remaining ſtill. Seſoſtris was the firſt who deſigned the work, having before with good ſucceſs cut many Trenches from the River, and ſome Navigable, into many places of the Country; by which unprofitable Mariſhes were drained, the Country ſtrengthened, Trade made eaſie, and the People better furniſhed with water than in former times. Darius the great Perſian Monarch, ſeconded the ſame Project; ſo did one of the Ptolomies; The like is ſaid of a Capricious Portugal in theſe latter times. But they all gave it over on the ſame conſideration; which was a fear, leſt by letting in the Red-Sea they might drown the Country, and perhaps make a ſecond Deluge in the parts of Greece and Aſia Minor which lay neareſt to them: that Sea being found to be much higher than the Mediterranean, and the flats of Egypt.

But here we are to underſtand, that all which hitherto hath been ſpoken concerning Egypt, relates to Egypt ſtrictly, and ſpecially ſo called; containing only ſo much of the County of Egypt as lieth upon the Banks and Channels of the River Nilus: and not to all that tract of ground which lay betwixt the Red-Sea and the borders of Lybia, which was reckoned in the compaſs of the Kingdom of Egypt, much leſs as comprehending Lybia and Cyrene alſo, though now accounted Members of that Body, and anciently parts or Provinces of the Dioceſs of it. For Egypt, in the largeſt ſenſe and acception of the word, may be, and generally is divided into theſe three parts, viz. 1 Egypt, in the general Notion, or the Kingdom of Egypt, extended on the Mediterranean, from the borders of Idumea to the Roman Lybia, or Marmarica, lying Weſtward of the mouth of Nilus, called Heracleoticum: and on the borders of Æthiopia Superior, from the ſaid Red-Sea, to the Country of Lybia Interior. 2 Lybia or Marmarica, lying betwixt Egypt properly ſo called, and the Province of Cyrene or Pentapolis. And 3 Cyrene or Pentapolis, reaching from that Lybia to the greater Syrtis; where it bordered with that part of the African Dioceſs, which is now called the Kingdom of Tunis. And in this firſt acception of it we ſhall now proceed to a Survey of the Mountains and chief Cities; which done, we ſhall deſcribe the other in their proper places; and then unite them all in the General Story.

As for the Mountains of this Country, there are very many: there were no living elſe for the people in the time of the overflowings of the River. The principal of thoſe, 1 Thoſe called Montes Lybici, lying in a long Chain on the Weſt of Nilus; 2 Alabaſtrinus; 3 Prophyritus; 4 Troicus; 5 Baſanitus on the Eaſt thereof. Betwixt theſe Hills the courſe of the River is ſo hemmed in on both ſides, that at the upper part of the ſtream, where it firſt entreth into Egypt, the ſpace betwixt the Mountains, is not above four miles broad; enlarging afterwards to eight, then about Caire to thirty ſeven; then opening wider and wider, till we come to the breaches of the Delta, as the Country doth increaſe in breadth. On theſe and other of the Mountains and leſſer Hills, ſtand moſt part of the Towns, the receptacles of the Country-people in the time of the Flood, riſing when leaſt, to fifteen Cubits, or ſeven yards and an half.

Rivers of Note here are none but Nilus, not indeed any one but that; that being ſufficient of it ſelf to enrich this Country, which otherwiſe would be nothing but a Sandy Deſart. The Head thereof not in the Mountains of the Moon, as was once ſuppoſed, but in the Lake Zembre in Æthiopia interior; paſſing from thence through the Higher Æthiopia, or Habaſſine Empire, till it falls at laſt into this Country; and running in one continual Channel (excepting where it brancheth into little Iſlands, as it ſometimes doth) before its influx into the Sea, is divided into ſeven great ſtreams, opening into the Sea with ſo many mouths. Namely; 1 Heracleoticum; 2 Bolviticum; 3 Sebaniticum; 4 Patinicum; 5 Mendicum; 6 Canopicum; 7 Peluſiacum. The firſt and laſt of theſe Currents (which are the only two now left) being far diſtant from the other, and growing into one at the firſt point of the Rivers diviſion, make that part of Egypt which is called Delta, becauſe to ſuch as come to this Country out of Greece, Italy, or Anatolia, it reſembleth that Letter in the Greek Alphabet. Now becauſe Nilus runneth in its certain Channels, that the People have no other water to make uſe of for all neceſſities; there are many bye-trenches and deep Ditches cut in convenient places (by the Care and Magnificence of their Kings) to receive its Waters, and to communicate them to the people, who know almoſt no other drink then the Waters thereof, and indeed they need not; the Waters of this River being of ſuch excellent, both taſte and virtue, that when Peſcennius Niger ſaw his Souldiers murmur for want of Wine; What (ſaid he) do you grumble for Wine, having the Waters of Nile to drink?

But beſide the Waters of this River, and the Trenches of it, the people are ſupplied with that Commodity by Lakes and artificial Channels, which ſerve for watering their Cattel, tempering of Mortar for their Buildings, and other ſuch inferior uſes; ſometimes perhaps for drink for the poorer ſort, who cannot be conveniently furniſhed with the waters of Nile. Amongſt the Trenches (which were many, as before was ſaid) thoſe of moſt eſtimation were the Works of Ptolomy, and the Emperour Trajan: the firſt falling into that branch of the Nile, which maketh the Iſle called Heracleotis: the other into the main body of it not far from Caire. Theſe two, by reaſon of the many freſh Springs which fall into them, have the name of Rivers in old Authors: and betwixt theſe was ſeated the Land of Goſhen, extending from Nilus to the Red-Sea on the Eaſt and Weſt. The chief of Note amongſt the Lakes, were thoſe called, 1 Mareotis, not far from Alexandria, by Pliny called Arapotes, Maria by Ptolomy; all which names are now loſt, and changed into that of Lago di Antacon, from a Town of that name near unto it. 2 Lacous, ſuppoſed to be the ſame which in the Book of Maccabes is called Aſphar, lib. 1. cap. 9. And 3 Moeris, now called Bucharia, more memorable than the reſt. In compaſs 3500 furlongs, 50 fatham deep, in the midſt whereof were two Pyramides, 50 fathams above the water, and as much beneath in: the fiſh of this Lake for one ſix months in the year, is ſaid to be worth twenty of their pounds a day to the Kings Exchequer; for the other ſix, each day a Talent. 4 The Lakes called Amari, into which the Trench, or River called Ptolomeus, doth diſcharge its waters, conveyed from thence into the Red-Sea.

The whole divided anciently into two parts onely. 1 That called Delta, betwixt the two extream branches of the River Nilus, the form of which Letter it reſembleth to him who ſtanding on the Sea-ſhore, could take a view of it, as before was ſaid. 2 That called Thebais from Thebe, the principal City of it, comprehending all the reſt of the courſe of that River, ſhut up on both ſides with the Mountains ſpoken of before. But this Diviſion leaving out all thoſe parts hereof, which lay on the Eaſt-ſide towards the Arabian Gulfs, and on the Weſt, as far as to the borders of Lybia Marmarica: the Macedonians laying it all together, divided it into 18 Cantreds, or Diſtricts, by them called Nomi; increaſing in the time of Ptolomy the Geographer, to 46. Ortelius out of divers Authors hath found 20 more. When conquered by the Romans, and made a Dioceſs of the Empire: it was divided into four Provinces, (not reckoning Marmarica and Cyrene into the accompt) that is to ſay, 1 Ægyptus, ſpecially ſo called, containing all the Delta, and the Diſtrict or Nomus of Mareotica, bordering on Marmarica. 2 Auguſtanica, ſo called from Auguſtus Ceſar, on the Eaſt of the Delta, betwixt it and Arabia Petræa. 3 Arcadia, ſo called from the Emperour Arcadius, in whoſe time it was taken out of Thebais, lying on both sides of the River, from the Delta to the City of Antinous. 4 Thebais, extending on both sides of the River from the borders of Lybia Marmarica to the Red-Sea, (as the other doth) from Antinous unto Æthiopia. Divided otherwise by some into Superiorem, reaching from Æthiopia to the City of Antinous, Mediam, stretching thence to the point of the Delta; and Inferiorem, which comprehendeth all the rest. But at this time, that part hereof which lieth on the South and East of Caire, is called Saud, or Salid; honoured heretofore with the dwelling of the ancient Pharaohs, because neerest unto Æthiopia, their most puissant Neighbour. 2 That betwixt Caire, Rosetta, and Alexandria, hath the name of Errifia, wherein the Ptolomean Princes did most reside; because most convenient for receiving Supplies of Men from the States of Greece. And finally, that from Caire, to Tenese and Damista, is now called Maremna, in which the Turks and Mamalucks made the seat of their Empire; because more neighbouring to the Christians, whom they stood in fear of, as likeliest to invade them upon that side. In the whole Country there was reckoned in the time of Amasis the Second, no fewer then 20000 Cities: but if the Towns and Villages be not reckon'd in, I should much doubt of the accompt. By Diodorus Siculus, it is said, that there were 3000 in his time: but Ortelius on a diligent search, finds 300 only.

Those of most note in the Province of Augustanica, 1 Pelusium, the most Eastern City of Egypt towards Idumæa, situate on the most Eastern Channel of Nilus, called hence Pelusiacum; by Ammianus to be the work of Peleus the Father of Achibes, commanded by the Gods to purge himself in the Lake adjoyning, for the murder of his Brother Phocus. Accounted for the chief door of Egypt towards the Land, as Pharos was to those who came thither by Sea; the Metropolis of the Province of Augustanica, the birth-place of Ptolomy the Geographer, and the Episcopal Sea of St. Isidore, surnamed Peluseotes, whose eloquent and pious Epistles are still extant. Out of the ruines hereof (if not the same under another Title) arose, 2 Damiata, memorable for the often Sieges laid unto it by the Christian Armies; for none more then that under John de Brenne, the Titulary King of Jerusalem, and the Princes of Europe, Anno 1220. During which (being of 18 months continuance) the Famine and the Pestilence so extreamly raged, that the Town in a manner was dispeopled, before the Besiegers knew any thing of their condition: till in the end two ventrous Souldiers, admiring the silence and solitude of so great a City, in a Bravado scal'd the Walls; but found no man to make resistance. The next day the whole Army entred, where they found in every house, and every corner of the streets, whole heaps of dead bodies, none to give them burial: A lamentable and ruthful spectacle! 3 Heroes, or Civitas Heroum, in the Arabian Isthmus; at the very bottom of the Gulf; remarkable for the first interview betwixt Jacob and Joseph after his coming into Egypt. 4 Heliopolis, or the City of the Sun, now called Betsames in the Scriptures: On, of which Potipher the Father of Arsenath (whom Pharaoh married unto Joseph) was Priest, or Prince, as is said, Gen. 41. 45. Given (as Josephus telleth us) for an habitation to the Sons of Jacob; by consequence one of the chief Cities of the Land Rameses, or Gosben: and memorable in times succeeding for a publick Temple built for the Jews, with the consent of Ptolomy, surnamed Philadelphus, by Onias the High-Priest, then dispossessed of his Authority and Office by the power of Antiochus: a Temple much esteemed by the Hellenists, or Greekish Jews; and though Schismatical at the best in its first original, yet not Schismatical and Idolatrous too, as was that of Mount Garizim. 5 Bubastis, somewhat more North then Heliopolis, by some of the ancients called Avaris, by the Scriptures Pibeseth, another City of that tract; now better known by the name of Zioth: supposed to be the same which the Notitia calleth Castra Judæorum; memorable in times of Paganism, for a famous Temple of Diana. 6 Arsione, on the shore of the Red-Sea, so called in honour of Arsinoe, Sister of Philadelphus, and Wife to Lysimachus King of Thrace; afterwards called Cleopatris in honour of Queen Cleopatra; now better known by the name of Sues. Of great commerce and trading in the time of the Ptolomies: Now almost abandoned; and would be utterly deserted, were it not made the station of the Turkish Gallies, that command the Gulf: which being framed at Caire of such Timber as is brought thither by Sea from the Woods of Cilicia, and sometimes from the shores of the Euxine Sea; are again taken in pieces, carried from Caire unto this City on the backs of Camels, and here joyned together. Conceived to be the same which in former times was called Baal-Zephon (of which see Exod. 14. 9.) the last incamping place of the Tribes of Israel, who from hence passed through the Red-Sea, as upon dry Land. 7 Gleba Rubra, by the Greeks called Hiera Bolus, and sometimes Erythra Bolus also, more near the Latin; the redness of the soil giving name unto it: situate on the River or Trench of Tralon: more memorable for a misfortune that befel it than for any thing else; purposely burnt by Amenophes the fifth, upon this occasion. Being blind, he was assured by some of his Wizzards, that if he washed his eyes with the Urine of a Woman, which had never known any but her own Husband, he should be restored unto his sight. After a long search and many vain trials, he met with one whose water cured him; whom he took to Wife: and causing all the rest whom he had made trial of, to be brought together to this Town, he set fire on the City, and burnt both it and all the women there assembled; which Tale, if true, is little to the honour of the Dames of Egypt.

Places of most note and observation in the Province of Egypt, strictly and specially so called, are 1 Alexandria, situate Westward of the Delta, over against the Isle of Pharos, and built upon a Promontory, thrusting it self into the Sea; with which on the one side, and the Lake Maretis on the other, it is exceeding well defended: the Work of Alexander the Great, and by him peopled with Greeks, immediately after his Conquest of Egypt. The Regal Seat of the Ptolomies, whilst Egypt did maintain the State of a Kingdom: and afterwards the Metropolis of it, when a Roman Diocess. Adorned with many stately Buildings; of which most memorable the Serapium, (or Temple of their God Serapis) for sumptuous workmanship, and the magnificence of the Fabrick, inferiour to none but the Roman Capitol: and next to that, the Library erected by Philadelphus, who had storied it with 700000 Volumes; unfortunately burnt in the War against Julius Cæsar. A City of great Trading, and infinite Riches: μέγιστον ἐμπόριον ἁπάντων the greatest Empory of the World, as is said by Strabo. Wanton with which, the Citizens so abounded in all licentiousness both of life and speech, that they spared not the Emperor himself if he came in their way. But they paid dearly for their folly. For Caracalla not so patient of a Contumely as some wiser Princes, having felt the lashes of their tongues, when he was amongst them, assembled all the youth of the City, as if out of them he would have chosen some to attend his Person: and suddenly gave command to his Souldiers, to put them all to the Sword. A slaughter so great and universal, that the River Nilus coloured with the blood of the slain, might not improperly at that time be called a Red-Sea. In this City, Anno 180. Dantenus read both Divinity and Philosophy to all such as would come to hear him: which as it is conceived to give the first hint to the instituting of

Univer-

Universities in the rest of Christendom; so from that small beginning the Schools of Alexandria grew so great and eminent, that Nazianzen calleth them πανδεκτας και δημιουργους ἐπιστημων, the Shop, or Work-house, as it were, of all kinds of Learning. Much short of what it was even in point of Trading, especially since the diversion of the Spice Trade from the Bay of Arabia; and utterly divested of those beauties which once it had. Inhabited at the present by a mixture of Nations, Moors, Jews, Turks, Greeks, and Christian Cophtives; more for some little gain which they reap by Traffick, than any pleasure in the place. Now called Scanderia by the Turks, remarkable only for the house of the Patriarch (though he dwell for the most part in Caire) and a Church in which St. Mark their first Bishop was said to be buried. 2 Canopus, situate East of Alexandria, and on the principal branch of the Nile, called Heracleoticum; so called from Canopus the Pilot of Menelaus, who having suffered shipwrack upon this Coast, was there interred by his Master. A Town so branded in old times, for varieties of all kind of beastliness, and Luxury, that as Seneca very well observed, he that avoided the viciousness and debauchery of it, could not scape the infamy: the very place administring matter for suspicion. 3 Rosetta, on the same branch of the River, and not far from Canopus, out of whose ruines it arose; built by a Slave of one of the Egyptian Caliphs; unwalled, and destitute of all Fortifications, but plentifully accommodated with all sorts of Commodities, and well frequented by the Merchant. 4 Nicopolis, now called Munia, the Monument of some eminent Victory, and probably of the Conquest of Egypt by the Macedonians; the name being Greek, and the Town standing within 30 Furlongs of Alexandria. 5 Aphrodites and Aphroditopolis, so called from Venus, who was here worshipped: situate betwixt the two middle branches of the Nile. 6 Sais, betwixt the same branches of the River also: whence that Nomus or Division had the name of Saites. It is now called Sibnit, or Signiti. 7 Plinthine, on the Sea-side; and 8 Hieras, more within the Land: the chief Towns of the Region called Maræotica.

In Arcadia, called also Heptanomus, because it contained seven of the Nomi or Divisions, into which Egypt was distributed by the Macedonians, and the places of most note were and are, 1 Memphis, on the Western banks of Nile, not far from the sharp point of the Delta, where the River first beginning to divide it self; the Regal City of the old Egyptian Pharaohs: by one of which who removed the Seat-Royal from Thæba hither, it is said to be built, and called thus by the name of his Daughter. In compass, when it flourished about 20 miles; great, populous, and adorned with a world of Antiquities; amongst others with the Temples of Apis, Venus, and Serapis, beset with Sphynxes: now nothing left of the Ruines of it, but the Statutes of some monstrous Resemblances, sufficient to shew what it hath been formerly. The Pyramides before described, stood not far from hence; to which the Poet relateth, saying, Barbara Pyramidum sileat miracula Memphis.

Let barbarous Memphis brag no more
Of her Pyramides, as before.

2. Babylon, called for distinctions-sake, Babylon Ægyptiorum, built on the other side of the River, and somewhat more unto the North: said to be founded by Cambyses the Persian Monarch, the first that made this Kingdom stoop to the yoke of a Foreigner; and by him peopled with some Babylonians or Chaldæans transplanted hither. Great, as appeareth by the ruines; amongst which, many of the Christian Temples and Monasteries do lie there in rubbish; the Castle whereof served long after for the Garrison of the three Legions, appointed to defend this Country in the time of the Romans. This, thought by some to be the Babylonian mentioned by Saint Peter, in his first Epistle Chap. ult. which the following words, and Mark my Son, (Saint Mark being the first Bishop of the Alexandrians, and the Apostle of Egypt) may make somewhat probable, but the truth and reality hereof, I dispute not now. Out of the ruines of this City arose three Caire, now, and for many Ages past, the chief of this Country: raised from the ashes of old Babylon by the Chaliphs of Egypt, and by the Mamalucks made the Seat-Royal of their Kingdom. In compass not above eight miles; but full of Streets, the number of which said to be 18000. every one of them fortified with a Gate at each end; which being well barred, made every several street an impregnable Fortress. Found so by Selymus the first, when he conquered Egypt, who spent three days in forcing his way through it with his numerous Army. The private buildings very mean; the publick, especially the Mosques, beyond thought magnificent. Visited every seventh year with a dreadful Pestilence; yet still so populous, that it is conceived to be in good health, if there die not above a thousand in a day, or three hundred thousand within that year. Adorned with many delicate Orchards both within the City and without; full of variety of contentments, and neighboured by a pleasant Lake; but made more pleasant by the company which meet there in Boats, for their mutual solace and delights. Fortified at the South end with a stately Castle (the Palace of the Mamaluck Sultans) situate on the top of a Mountain; overlooking the City, and a great part of the Country also. So large, that it seemeth a City of it self, immured with high walls, divided into many partitions of several Courts, in times past the places of exercise; and entred by doors of Iron. Destroyed for the most part by Selimus, for fear of giving opportunity to some rebellion; or envying the Mamalucks the glory of having been the Masters of so brave a Mansion: that which is left, now serving for the habitation of the Turkish Bassa, who hath the Government of this Kingdom. 4 Metared, or Matarea, not far from Caire; the soil whereof is said to be so rich and fertile, that the People are fain to cover it with Sand or Gravel, so moderating the extream rankness of it. 5 Arsinoe, on the West-side of the Nile, and somewhat South of the famous Labyrinth before described; called also (to difference it from another of the same name on the shore of the Red-Sea) the City of Crocodiles, in regard of the divine honours there done that Monster. 6 Nilopolis, or Nili Civitas in the Island called Heracleotis, made by the imbracements of the River; most memorable for being the Episcopal Sea of Chæremeon, a right godly Prelate; of whom see Eusebius in the 6 Book, and 34 Chapter of his Ecclesiastical History. 7 Troia, on the Eastern stream which makes that Island not much observable, but for giving name to the Montes Troici lying near unto it; out of which were digged the Stones which made the Pyramides. 8 Cinopolis in a little Island upon the water. 9 Hermopolis, or the City of Mercury; called also Hermoplis magna, to difference it from another of that name not far from Alexandria, to which they give the Adjunct of Parva. 10 Antonius, now Antius, founded by Adrian the Emperour, in honour of Antinous his especial Favourite; the most Southern City of this Province, on the banks of the Nile. 11 Dionysias, or the City of Bacchus, situate on the Southern end of the Lake of Moeris, in the Nomus or Division called Oasis parva. 12 Clysma, upon the shores of the Golf, a Roman Garrison.

Cities

Cities of most note in the Province of Thebais, 1 Panopolis, the Panos of Antoninus, one of the greatest of this part. 2 Ptolomais, the foundation of one of the Ptolomies, and the goodliest City of this Province, succeeding unto Thebe both in power and greatness. 3 Saiet, a fair and large Town, six days Journey from Caire, going up the water; but by what name called amongst the Ancients, I do no where find. Affirmed (erroneously, I think) to be the dwelling-place of Joseph and Mary, when they fled with CHRIST our Saviour from the fury of Herod. Beautified with a goodly Temple, but now somewhat ruinous, of the foundation of Helena the Mother of Constantine. This City much resorted to (on the strength of this Tradition only) by many aged Christian Cophties, who desire to die there. 4 Diospolis, or the City of Jupiter; all of them on the banks of the River. 5 Tentyra, in a little Isle so called, made by the circlings of the Nile: The Inhabitants whereof were the only men who durst encounter the Crocodile; A Creature of a terrible name, but a cowardly nature; of which it is said by Ammianus Marcellinus, that it assaulteth those which flie from it, and flieth from those who do assault it: In that point very like the Devil, of whom it is said by the Apostle James 4. 7. that if he be resisted, he will flie from us; Or as the good old Poet hath it, Est Leo, si fugias; si stas, quasi Musca recedit.

Give ground, a Lyon he will be;
Stand to it, and away flies he.

6 Coptos, upon the head of a Trench or Water-course, which falleth into the Nilus, on the South of Tentyra, but on the other side of the River; in old times, a most noted Empory for Indian and Arabian wares: from whence not only the Christians of this Country are thought to have the name of Cophties, but the whole Country to be originally called Ægyptus, from Ai-Coptus, or the Land of Coptus.

7 Thebæ the residence and foundation of that great Tyrant Busiris, in compass 140 furlongs, or 17 miles and an half; called also Hecatompylæ, from the number of an hundred Gates which were said to be in it. So beautified with Colosses, Temples, Palaces; the Sepulchres of the old Egyptian Pharaohs, and other Ornaments of State, that it was thought ἀνδρίαν τῆς ὑπὸ τὸν ἥλιον ὅλου κακοσμίας, to be the Nonesuch of the World. Decayed on the removing of the Court of Memphis, it became a ruine so long since, that there was nothing left of it in the time of Juvenal; as he telleth us, saying,

Atque vetus Thebe centum jacet obruta portis.

Old Thebe, yielding to the Fates,
Lies buried with his hundred Gates.

8 Abydus, now called Abutick, once the Seat-Royal of Memnon, from thence called Memnonium, renowned for the Temple of Osiris; more for the Statute of Memnon, which though made of stone, did at the rising of the Sun yield a vocal sound. 9 Elephantis, on the banks of Nile; neighbouring by Crophi and Mophi, two sharp Rocks, betwixt which the River falling down with a violent current, makes the Lesser Cataract; of which, and of the greater, we shall speak more fully in Æthiopia. The City seated in an Island of the River Nile, on the borders of Æthiopia sub Ægypto, (as the Ancients called it) known unto Ptolomy by the name of Elephantina, but to our Ecclesiastical Writers by the name of Tabenna. Memorable in times of Heathenism for the Town and Temple of Onuchis, wherein stood the Nilometrium or standing Pillars, by which they did observe the increase of the River; removed since to the Castle of Michias, two miles from Caire: in times of Christianity, for the dwellings of infinite numbers of Monks and Hermits, called from this place Tabenisiotæ. 10 Syene, (now Asina) a little North of Elephantes, situate directly under the Tropick of Cancer, and memorable for a deep Well there digged by some Astronomers; which when the Sun entred into that Sign, was wholly enlightned with his beams, without any shadow: so perpendicularly did the body of it stand over the pit. This the last City of Egypt towards Æthiopia.

And now I should proceed, according to my Method in other places, to the Story of Egypt: but being that Lybia and Cyrene, are now accompted Members of it; the fortunes whereof they have also followed in all or most of the mutations of State and Government; I shall first take a view of them as the limbs of this body, and shew you how they were united under that one Head, by which now directed.

2 MARMARICA.

2. LYBIA or MARMARICA, hath on the East, Egypt, properly so called; on the West Cyrene, on the North, that part of the Mediterranean Sea, which was hence called Mare Lybicum, and sometimes Parthenium; and on the South, some part of Æthiopia Superior.

It had the name of Lybia, from the old Greek word λίβυς, signifying Black, agreeable to the complexion of the people, which is black and swarthy; λίβυς, antiqua lingua Græca niger, saith a learned Writer: or possible enough from Lub, an Arabian word signifying Thirst, as sutable unto the nature of the soil, which is dry and Sandy, in which respect called by the Greeks, Xero-Lybia, or Lybia ficca. From hence the South-wind, blowing from these Coasts towards Greece and Italy, had the name of Lybs, and the Promontory in Sicily opposite unto it, that of Lilybeum. It was also called Marmarica, perhaps from the Marmaridæ, a chief people of it, though placed by Ptolomy in Cyrene; and sometimes Barca, from Barce a chief City in it; of late times Barca Marmarica, by both names united.

The Country for the most part very dry and barren, and but meanly peopled; insomuch as Alexander passing thorow part of it towards the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, in the space of four days, saw neither Man, Beast, Bird, Tree, nor River. Covered over in most places with a thick light sand, which the winds remove up and down continually, turning Vallies into Hills, and Hills into Vallies. Found by Cambyses to his cost, who as basely esteeming of the Gods as he did of his Subjects, sent part of his Army into this Country to destroy the Temple above-mentioned: but in the passage towards that prohibited place, fifty thousand of them were overwhelmed and smothered in a storm of Sand; the rest with much ado escaping. Called therefore Xero-Lybia, or Lybia Sicca, as before was noted; and Lybia sitiens, thirsty Lybia, (—per calidus Lybiæ sitientis arenas) in that verse of Lucan.

The people, Neighbours unto Egypt, and consequently much of the same condition. Said by Herodotus (by whom they were called Adyrnachidæ) to be governed by the like Laws and Customs as the Egyptians were; but do differ from them in their habit. Of colour dark, and black; of constitution, lean and dry, and inclining to Melancholy; angry on every little occasion, very litigious, and eager prosecutors of their dues. By an old Obſervation among themſelves, they abſtained both from Beef and Hog-meat. So obſtinate in denying their accuſtomed Tributes, that he who could not ſhew the marks of his ſufferings for it, either Black or Blew, was accompted no body: And ſo reſolved to conceal any thing diſgraceful to them, that if any of them were apprehended for a Robbery, no torment could compel him to tell his name. At this time little differing in perſon, temper, or condition, from the Egyptians, Moors, and Arabes, intermixt amongſt them.

Converted to the Faith of Chriſt, with, or not long after the reſt of Egypt, of which then reckoned for a Province, it became part of the Patriarchate of Alexandria; whoſe Juriſdiction over it was confirmed by the Council of Nice: to the calling of which famous Council, this Country occaſionally concurred, by bringing into the World that wretched Arius; who with his Heterodoxies and contentious Cavils, had diſturbed the Church. His Hereſie condemned in that famous Council; but his Perſon, by the Divine Juſtice of God, reſerved to a more remarkable puniſhment. Being ſent for by the Emperour Conſtantine to make a Recantation of his former Hereſies, he firſt writ out a Copy of his own Opinions, which he had in his Boſom; and then writing out the Recantation expected from him, took Oath that he did really mean as he had written: which words the Emperour referred to the Recantation, he to the Paper in his Boſome. But God would not be ſo cozened, though the Emperour was. For as he paſſed in Triumph through the ſtreets of Conſtantinople, he drew aſide into a private houſe of eaſe, where he voided his Guts in the Draught, and ſent his Soul as an Harbinger to the Devil, to make room for his Body.

Not more infamous for the Birth of this Miſcreant, who denied the Divinity of Chriſt; then famous for the Birth of one of the Sibyles, hence ſirnamed Lybica, by whom the ſame had been fore-ſhewn. Which Sibyles ſeem to have taken denomination from Διὸς βύλαι, i.e. Jovis conſiliorum conſciæ. They were in number Ten, viz. 1 Perſica, 2 Lybica, 3 Delphica, 4 Cumæa, 5 Samia, 6 Helleſpontiaca, 7 Tiburtina, 8 Albunea, 9 Erythræa, and 10 Cumana; which laſt is affirmed to have written the nine Books of Sibyls. They were all preſented by an old Woman to Tarquinius Superbus; but he not willing to pay ſo great a ſum of Money as was demanded, denied them; whereupon the old Woman burnt three of them, requiring as much money for the other ſix, as for all: which being denied, ſhe alſo burnt another three, asking as much for the three remaining, as for the reſt; which Superbus amazed gave, and the old Trot vaniſhed. Theſe Books contained manifeſt tokens of the Kingdom of Chriſt, his Name, his Birth and Death. They were burned by the Arch-Traitor Stilico. So that thoſe Prophecies of theirs, which are now extant, are for the moſt part only ſuch as had been extracted out of other Writings, where their Authority had been quoted. Concerning which, though Cauſabon, and ſome other of our great Philologers, conceive them to be piæ fraudes; compoſed of purpoſe by the Fathers of the Primitive Times, to win credit to the Faith of CHRIST: yet dare I not ſo far diſparage thoſe moſt godly Men, as to believe they would ſupport ſo ſtrong an Edifice with ſo weak a Prop; or borrow help from Falſehood to evict a Truth. Or if they durſt have been ſo impudently venturous, how eaſie had it been for their learned Adverſaries, Porphyrie, Julian, and the reſt of more eminent note, to have detected the Impoſture, and ſilenced the Chriſtian Advocates with reproach and ſcorn? But of this enough here, more at large elſewhere.

Rivers of Note I find not any. 'Tis well, if in a Country ſo full of Sands, there be any at all: ſome Lakes I meet with in my Authors; the principal of which, 1 Lacus, 2 Lacus Lacomedis, now Linxamo, 3 Clzertus; ſufficient to preſerve their few Cattel from the taint of thirſt. The Mountains of moſt note, thoſe called Anogambri, 2 and that named Azar; this laſt extended Weſt and Eaſt in a ſtrait line, from the 51 degree of Longitude, to the 53. 3 Aliphus, 4 Ogdomus, 5 Tmodes, 6 Alpis, not much obſervable, but that they ſerve for Land-marks to diſcover the Country.

Towns of note there are none now in it. Of moſt eſteem in former times, 1 Batrachus, by ſome called Menelaus, an Haven-Town, 2 Phthia, and 3 Aneſisphyra, two Port-Towns alſo. 4 Tetrapyrgia, ſo called from its four Towers, the Antipyrgus of Ptolomy. 5 Meſuchis, more within the Land, 6 Mazacila, another midland Town. 7 Chæreola, mentioned amongſt the chief Cities of this Tract, by Ammianus. 8 Paratonium, now Porto-raſſa, which with Peluſium are by Florus called the two Horns of Egypt; which whoſoever held faſt, would be ſure to maſter it. By ſome old Writers it had formerly been called Ammonia, as we read in Stephanus and Strabo; from the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, ſeated very near it. So anciently honoured with an Oracle, (if that were any honour to it) that Semiramis is ſaid to have come hither to enquire of her death; Perſeus and Hercules, touching their adventures. The like, but not long after, was done by Alexander the Great: but the Oracle by that time had learnt to flatter, and puffed him up with a proud conceit of being the Son of that God whom he came to worſhip. The Temple ſeated in the middle of a vaſt ſandy Deſart, environed with a pleaſant and delightful Grove, about ſix miles or more in circuit; watered with wholſome Springs, refreſhed with a temperate Air, and ſhaded with fruit-bearing Trees, which carried in their leaves a perpetual Spring. Fortified with a Tripple-Wall, within the firſt whereof was a Royal Palace of the Kings, within the ſecond a Seraglio for his Women, in the third Lodgings for the Officers of Court; The Oracle fitly placed (ſo the Prieſts would have it) near the Seraglio of the Ladies; Before the entrance a fair Fountain, wherein the Oblations were firſt waſhed, then offered. A place of great repute in ſacred and civil eſtimate; all the adjoyning Country taking hence the name of Ammoniaca, and by that name reckoned amongſt the Provinces of the Patriarchate of Alexandria. 9 Antiphra, on the Eaſt border of it towards Alexandria. 10 Barce, called afterwards Ptolomais, by the name of one of the Ptolomies, by whom repaired and beautified. Of ſuch accompt, that from hence the whole Country had the name of Barca, and the Inhabitants of Barcæi, (——Lateque furentes Barcæi) as in that of Virgil.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Libyarchæ and Baſſachitæ, in the North; the Ogdoni, Buzes, and Adyrmachidæ, in the South; the Goniatæ and Proſaditæ, in the midland parts; the Libyægyptii, bordering neareſt unto Egypt, with the people whereof ſo intermingled, as to make up betwixt them but one Name and Nation. Others there were of leſs, or as little note, but all deſcended properly of Naphtuhim, the Son of Miſraim; from whom the Name of Neptune, originally a Libyan Deity, ſeems to be derived: yet ſo that Lehabin his Brother muſt come in for a ſhare; the Founder, as it is conceived, of the Libyægyptii before-mentioned. Being then of the ſame original with thoſe of Egypt, they followed the ſame fortunes alſo, till the times of the Ptolomies; by whom ſometimes given for portion, with the title of a Kingdom, to their younger Children. By the laſt Will and Teſtament of Apion, the laſt King hereof, a Baſtard-Son of Ptolomy ſirnamed Euergetes, the ſeventh King of that Houſe; bequeathed unto the Senate and People of Rome. By whom first suffered to live under them, as a Free-Estate, till the Conquest of Egypt; then reckoned as a part of that, and so accordingly described by Ptolomy: where Libya, Marmarica, and Ammonica, occur amongst the Nomi, or Divisions of it. Afterwards made a distinct Province of that Diocess, and governed by a Lord Prefident, under the Præfectus Augustalis, or Supream Commander for the Emperours.

3. CYRENE.

CYRENE is bounded on the East, with Marmarica; on the West, with Africa Propria, or the Realm of Tunis, and some part of the Mediterranean, and the Greater Syrtis; on the North, with the Mediterranean wholly; on the South, with Libya Inferior, or the Desarts of Libya.

It took this name from Cyrene, the chief City of it, from whence sometimes also called Cyrenaica; by Pliny and some other Roman Writers it is called Pentapolis, from five chief Cities which were in it, viz. 1 Cyrene, 2 Ptolomais, 3 Arsione, 4 Darnice, 5 Berenice: by Ammianus for the same reason Libya Pentapolis, the name of Libya extending over many of these Roman Provinces. And finally, at the present, it passeth with that last described by the name of Barca, or Barca Marmarica: the whole extent whereof in length from the Greater Syrtis unto Egypt, is no less than 1300 miles, but the breadth not above 200.

The Country in the South parts desolate and barren, stored with few Towns, and not many Villages; the people living up and down in scattered houses, and at such a distance, as if it were in so many Islands. Destitute not of Springs and Rivers only, but of Rain-water too, the Clouds not very often dropping: if any fell, it was dried up presently by the Sands. But within fifteen miles of the Sea, indifferently fruitful and well inhabited.

The people in old times were said to have been utterly ignorant of buying and selling, of fraud and stealing, not knowing, or not caring for the use of Money; content with little, not superfluous in their Coths or Buildings; their Houses for the most part (except only in their greater Cities) made of Osier-Twigs. Much altered in the first part of their Character, since the coming of the Arabians hither; now a Thieving Nation, given wholly to Robbery and Spoil. So lazy, that they will not Manure or Till their Land, but provide themselves with Corn from Sicily; laying their Children to pawn for it, or till by their Thieving they can raise a sufficient sum to discharge the Debt.

One only River I find in it, but of fame enough to serve for many; By Ptolomy called Lubon, by Pliny Lethon, by the Poets Lethe. Swallowed by the Earth not far from its first original, it riseth up again about Berenice; fained therefore by the Poets to come from Hell, and to create forgetfulness in all them that drink of it; it being the condition of the dead to remember nothing. Thence the occasion of the fancy. Some Lakes I find also in it, whereof one occationed by this River, not far from the Sea; another more within the Land (where indeed more necessary) near Paliurus. With Mountains better stored (though not much better for them) the principal whereof, 1 Those called Hercules Arenæ, the Sands of Hercules, thwarting the Country East and West, 2 Bucolicus, on the South of those; and 3 Volpus, a long ridge of Hills, bordering upon Africa Propria.

Cities of most note in it, 1 Apollonia, in the East parts, near the Promontory called Zephyrium, in the Confines of Libya, or Marmarica. 2 Cyrene, in the West of that; once of such power, that it contended with Carthage for some preheminencies: Then the chief Lady of this Tract, which it gave this name to. The birth-place of Eratosthenes the Mathematician, Callimachus the Poet, and of that Simon of Cyrene, whom the Jews compelled to carry our Saviours Cross. 3 Ptolomais, betwixt Cyrene and Arsione, built or repaired by Ptolomy Philadelphus; the Episcopal City of Synesius, a learned and religious Bishop of the Primitive times, as appears by his Epistles extant. 4 Arsione, on the East-side of the River Lathon; so called in honour of Arsinoe, the sister of Philadelphus, and Wife of Magus, once King of this Country. 5 Berenice, on the Western Bank of the said River, so called from Berenice the Mother, or (another of the same nature) the Daughter of Magus: The furthest Town of all this Country, bordering on the Promontory called Boreum, and the Greater Syrtis. This last a Quick-sand very dangerous to Mariners, in compass 635 miles, and by them carefully avoided. 6 Paliurus, more within the Land, but on the borders of Libya or Marmarica, South to Apollonia. 7 Aptungis, now Lungisari, by Ptolomy called Aptuchi Fanum. 8 Herculis Turris, the Tower of Hercules near the Greater Syrtis; erected in the honour of Hercules, his killing of the Dragon, and robbing the Orchards of the Hesperides of their golden Apples. Those Hesperides said to be Aegle, Arethusa, and Hesperethusa, the three Daughters of Atlas: their Orchard placed by Ptolomy betwixt this Tower and Paliurus; by Pomponius, in the Atlantick Islands; by Virgil, in Mauritania Tingitania; by Pliny, both in Mauritania and this Cyrene; and possibly in all alike. 9 Zemythus. 10 Acabis in the mid-lands; all worn out of memory. 11 Fessan, of greatest name now, though scarce worth the naming.

The old Inhabitants of this Country, were the Asbetæ on the East, the Barcitæ near the Greater Syrtis, the Macatutæ and Leganici, near the Mountains of Hercules; all probably descended from Naphtuhim the Son of Mizraim, of whom there still remain some foot-steps in Aptuchi Fanum, the Fane or Temple of Aptuchus. This Aptuchus, by some mistakingly called Antuchus, and by the Grecians said to be the Son of Cyrene, and the Brother of Aristæus: who being sent out to seek their Fortunes, Aristæus fell into the Isle named Ceos; and Aptuchus, or Antuchus, into Libya, both by them first planted. Neptune, the Deity of this Country, by the Egyptians called Neptitim, seems to come from Naphtuhim; most highly worshipped by this People, because he first taught them τὴν τῶν ἁρμάτων ἐλάζευξιν, the Art of training Horses to the Coach or Chariot; in which the Cyreneans after grew so expert, that they could drive their Chariots in a round, or circle, and always keep their Chariot-wheels in the self-same tract. Of no great power, till Battus a noble Spartan, landing in this Country, had built the City of Cyrene; and founded it in so good a course of Life and Discipline, that in short time it came to have Dominion over the most part of this Country; and to contend with Carthage about their Territories. Warred on by Apryes King of Egypt, they sued unto the Greeks for aid, and by their assistance overcame him. Long after which, falling at odds among themselves, they craved aid of Ptolomy the first of that Race, by whom they were finally subdued. Left by him at his death to Magus, a Son of his last Wife by a former Husband, whom he had married to Arsinoe, one of his Daughters; it came again to the Crown of Egypt, by the marriage of Berenice, the Daughter and Heir of Magus, with the Son of Ptolomy Philadelphus. Alienated from which Crown again, for the preterment of some of the younger Princes; and in the end given by one of the Ptolomies, the last King hereof, to the people of Rome. Reduced into the form of a Province by Augustus Cæsar, by whom united in one Government with the Isle of Crete:

but made a Province of it ſelf by the following Emperors never ſince ſeparated from the fortune and affairs of Egypt, to which now we halten.

That the Kingdom and Nation of Egypt was of great Antiquity, is not a matter to be doubted; the queſtion in this point, betwixt them and the Scythian, being not eaſily decided. Whether it were ſo ancient, as the Egyptians ſay, may perhaps be controverted. By them it was affirmed, that they had the memory and ſtory of 13000 years; and a ſucceſſion of 330 Kings in the time of Amaſis the ſecond, who was Contemporary with Cyrus. Which number of years, if underſtood of Solary years, meaſured by the courſe of the Sun, muſt not be allowed of; becauſe it maketh them many thouſand years older than the Creation: but if of Lunary, which is moſt agreeable unto the accompt of the Egyptians, who reckoned their years by moneths; it will amount unto no more than to 1000, or 1100 years, and ſo fall anſwerably to the times following after the Flood. But for their Kings, 330 in their reckonings, and thoſe of 24 or 25 ſeveral Dynaſties; the matter is not ſo ſoon made up. For either thoſe Kings, muſt not be all Kings or Supream Lords of Egypt, as the Pharaohs were, but their ſeveral Regents, or Viceregents, armed with Regal power; thoſe Dynaſties not the ſucceſſions of ſo many Regal Families, but of their Subſtitutes and Lieutenants, many of which might live ſucceſſively under one Supream: or elſe we muſt needs look on Egypt as diſtracted in thoſe times, into ſeveral Kingdoms, amongſt the Princes of thoſe Dynaſties before remembred; or finally, we muſt look for ſome of thoſe Kings and Princes before the Flood. By either of theſe ways, the buſineſs may be well agreed. For if that moſt of them were but the names of ſeveral Regents, (as probable enough it is) their might be many ſuch in the Reign of one King; according to the Kings fancy, the merit of particular perſons, or the neceſſities of State: Changes of great Officers, eſpecially if grown too great, are not new nor ſtrange. If they were all Kings, or Supream Rulers, (as is alſo probable) we find not any thing of moment to perſwade the contrary, but that many of them lived and reigned in their ſeveral parts (as in other Countreys in thoſe times) till the greater had devoured the leſs. Or if they were the names of ſuch Soverein Princes, as had the ſole Command of Egypt before the Flood, (as ſome think they were) they might amount in all to ſo great a number, and ſo many Dynaſties; the iniquity of thoſe times, the ambition of great perſons, and conſequently the ſhort lives of the Kings being duely pondered. That Egypt, and moſt part of the World, was peopled before the Flood, hath been already proved in our General Preface: If peopled, then no queſtion under ſome form of Government: the names of which Governours (call them Kings or Rulers, or what elſe you pleaſe) might be preſerved in Egypt on pillars of braſs or ſtone; or otherwiſe tranſmitted by tradition unto Cham the Father of Miſraim, by whom this Countrey was firſt planted after the Confuſion of Babel. But that old ſtock of Kings and people being deſtroyed in the general Deluge, the Children of Mizraim ſucceeded next in their deſolate dwellings: yet ſo, that the poſterity of Chus and Lehabim, two others of the Sons of Cham, had their ſhares therein. From the firſt of which deſcended the Inhabitants of thoſe parts of Egypt, which lay along the ſhores of the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia: in which reſpect, not only one of the Nomi, or diviſions bordering on the Iſthmus, had the name of Arabia: but the people dwelling on thoſe ſhores, were called Arabes; divided into the Arabes Azarei, and Arabes Adei. And from the other came that mixture of Nations, called Lybi-Egyptii, or Lybians and Egyptians intermixt together, inhabiting in Maræotica and the Weſtern parts. But though theſe people were derived from ſeveral Anceſtors, they made one Nation in the total: Subject to Mizraim as their chief, and after his deceaſe, unto his ſucceſſors in the Kingdom of Egypt. Concerning whom we may obſerve that in Cham, our greateſt Antiquaries find the name of Jupiter Hammon: Mizraim they gueſs to be Oſiris, the great God of Egypt. To him ſucceeded Typhon, not by right of Blood, but by Uſurpation; who diſpoſſeſſed by Lehabim, the brother of Mizraim (whom the Greeks call Hercules Egyptius) the Kingdom was reſtored to Orus, the Son of Oſiris. During the time of theſe few Princes, happned all thoſe things which are recorded in the Scriptures concerning Egypt; from the firſt going down of Abraham in the time of Oſiris, to the advancement of Joſeph in the Reign of Orus: in which there paſſed the 15, 16 and 17. Dynaſties of Regal Vice--Roys; Lieutenants only, as I take it, to thoſe mighty Princes. The Kings themſelves called generally by the name of Pharaoh, though they had all their proper and peculiar names: as afterwards their Succeſſors here had the name of Ptolomy, and the Roman Emperours, that of Ceſar. Few of them famous in the ſtories of other Nations, or of renown for their Atchievements and Exploits abroad, contenting themſelves with the Revenues of their own Dominions, and ſpending the ſurpluſage thereof in building Cities, draining the Mariſhes of the Nile, or other works of Oſtentation and Magnificence. Only Seſoſtris is of fame for his undertakings; though when he had caſt up his accompt, he got nothing by them: Of whom it is reported, that being a King of great wealth and puiſſance, he had brought under ſubjection all his neighbouring Princes; whom he compelled in turns to draw his Chariot. It hapned that one of theſe unfortunate Princes caſt his eye many times on the Coach-wheel: and being by Seſoſtris demanded the cauſe of his ſo doing, he replyed: That the falling of that Spoke loweſt which but juſt before was the higheſt in the wheel, put him in mind of the inſtability of Fortune. The King deeply weighing the Parable, would never after be ſo drawn in his Chariot. He alſo was the firſt that encountred the Scythians in Battail; having already in conceit conquered them, before he led his Army againſt them. The Scythians much marvailed that a King of ſuch great Revenues would wage war againſt a Nation ſo poor, with whom the fight would be doubtful, the Victory unprofitable; but to be vanquiſhed, a perpetual infamy and diſgrace. For their parts they reſolved to meet him, as an Enemy whoſe overthrow would enrich them. When the Armies came to joyn, the Egyptians were diſcomfited, and purſued even to their own doors by the Enemy. But the Scythians could not enter the Countrey, becauſe of the Fenns, with whoſe paſſage they were unacquainted; and ſo they returned. Which ſaid, without troubling our ſelves with their many Dynaſties, we will lay down the Succeſſion of their Kings, as well as we can; the diſagreement of Hiſtorians and Chronologers, touching this Succeſſion, being irreconcileable.

2777	26	Thuoris 7. After whose death succeeded a Race of twelve Kings, called the Diospolitani, who held the Kingdom for the space of 177 years. Their names we find not, but that one of the latest of them, whose Daughter Solomon married, was called Vaphra; and perhaps Ogdoos, who removed the Royal Seat from Thebes to Memphis, might be another, and the eighth, as his name importeth.
2561	39	Smendes, the Sisac of the Scriptures, who made War upon Reboboam the Son of Solomon; conceived to be the Sesostris of Herodotus and others of the ancient Writers, of whom sufficiently before.
2987	40	Pseucenes conceived to be the Cheops of Herodotus, Founder of the vast Pyramis before described. 41.

3252	55	Taracon, falsly supposed to be the Zerah of the Scriptures, 10.
3270	56	Stephinates, 7.
3277	57	Nielupses, after whose death followed an Aristocraty of 12 Princes, who having governed 15 years, were divested of their Authority by one of their own number called
3288	58	Psamniticus who first made the Græcians acquainted with Egypt, whom he invited to his aid against the Syrians: the Founder of the famous Labrynth before mentioned, and no less memorable for his prudent preventing of the Scythians from breaking into his Countrey, of which we spake before, when we were in Tartaria, 54.
3335	59	Necho, who slew Josiah at the battail of Megiddo, 25.
3360	60	Psamnis II. 44.
3366	61	Apries, called Hophra, Jer. 44. subdued by Nebucadnezzar, and deposed by Amasis, 25.
3391	62	Amasis II. 44.
3435	63	Psamnitas or Psamniticus II. a King of six moneths only; vanquished by Cambyses the second Monarch of Persia, who united Egypt to that Empire, under which it continued till the time of Darius the sixth King of the Medes and Persians: in the 2d. year of whose Reign it revolted from him, and became a Kingdom of it self, as in former times.
3555	64	Amyrtæus the first King after the Revolt, 6.
3561	65	Nepherites, 6.
3567	66	Achoris, 12.
3579	67	Psamnites III. 1.
3580	68	Nepherites II. a King of two moneths only.
	69	Nectanebos, 18.
3598	70	Teos or Tachos, deposed by
3600	71	Nectanebos II. the last King of the natural Egyptian Race, that ever governed Egypt by the name of a King. For in the 18th. of the Reign of this King, Egypt was again recovered by the valour of Ochus the eighth Emperour of Persia. And when Alexander had overthrown Darius, he came, and without blows won this fertile Kingdom; which yielded him him during his life the yearly value of 6000 Talents. After his death this Kingdom fell to the share of Ptolomeus the Son of Lagus, from whom all the subsequent Kings of Egypt were called Ptolomies.

The Second DYNASTY, or the PTOLOMEAN Kings of Egypt.

A. M.
3461	1	Ptolomy, one of Alexanders Captains, reputed the Son of Lagus; but supposed to be the Son of Philip of Macedon, half-brother to Alexander, 40.
3481	2	Ptol. Philadelphus, who filled the Library of Alexandria with 700000 Volumes, and caused the 72 Interpreters to translate the Bible.
3717	3	Ptol. Euergetes the Son of Philadelphus, vanquished Seleucus Callinicus King of Syria, and probably had subdued that Kingdom, if not called back by Domestick dissentions, 26.
3743	4	Ptol. Philopater, a cruel voluptuous and incestuous Prince; cruelly slew Cleomenes the last King of Sparta, who had fled to his Father for relief, in the time of his exile, 17.
3760	5	Ptol. Epiphanes, at the age of five years succeeded his Father; protected by the Romans against Antiochus the Great of Syria, who had an aim upon his Kingdom, 28.
3784	6	Ptol. Philometor, the Son of Epiphanes, by Cleopatra Daughter of the Antiochus; protected in his nonage by the Romans also: caused himself to be Crowned King of Syria, but again relinquished it. 35.
3829	7	Ptol. Euergetes II. for his deformity called Physcon the Brother of Ptol. Philometor, a wicked Prince, and one that spent the greatest part of his Reign in a causless war against Cleopatra, his Wife and Sister, 29.
3858	8	Ptol. Lathargus reigned 16 years with Cleopatra his Mother, by whom dispossessed of his Estate for the space of ten years; after her death was sole Lord of Egypt. His Brother Alexander being taken by the Queen-mother as her Associate, in the time of his deprivation, and passing in the accompt of the Kings of Egypt.
3892	9	Ptol. Auletes, the Son of Lathurus, sirnamed also Dionysius, whose Brother being setled by him in the Isle of Cyprus, was most unjustly stripped of it by the power of the Romans: and he himself outed of Egypt by his own Subjects, but restored by the aid and love of Pompey.
3922	10	Ptol. Dionysius, called also Junior, or the younger, together with Cleopatra his Wife and Sister, succeeded Auletes in the Throne, which they held together by the space of three years. In the last of which, Pompey was barbarously slain on the shores of Egypt, by the command of Achilles the young Kings Governour; and the young King himself unfortunately slain in the Alexandrian tumult against Julius Cæsar.
3945	11	Cleopatra, the Wife and Sister of Dionysius, restored to the Crown of Egypt by the bounty of Cæsar; of whom exceedingly beloved for her wit and beauty. After which she governed Egypt 19 years in her own sole right, with great pomp and splendor: when being imbarqued in the bed and fortunes of Marc. Anthony, she killed her self not long after his fatal Overthrow at the Battel of Actium, that she might not be led in triumph through Rome.

A. M.

These Ptolomean Princes of Egypt, were for the most part in wars with the Kings of Syria, in which they were by turns Victorious, and vanquished; neither Prince having cause to boast of his bargain. After the death of Cleopatra, whose life and love with Marcus Antonius I will not now relate, this Countrey fell to the share of the Roman Emperours, and was by them highly prized, and warily looked into. The Governour hereof was but a Gentleman of Rome; no Senator being permitted to come into it; it being a maxim of State, not to suffer men of great Houses to come into that Country, whose revolt may endanger the whole Empire. Of this nature was Egypt. For besides the natural situation of the place, very defensible; and besides the abundance of Money with which it was stored; this Countrey alone furnished the City of Rome with Corn, for four Moneths yearly. Whence Vespasian being chosen Emperour by the Syrian Legions, and hearing of the defeat of his concurrent Vitellius, hastened hither: to this end only, that detaining the ordinary provision of Victuals, he might by famine compel the City of Rome to stand at his devotion: Ut urbem quoque externæ opis indigam fame urgeret, as the Historian hath observed. When made a Province of that Empire, it was counted as the Emperours sole Peculiar: afterwards made (as well it might) an entire Dioceſs of it self, subordinate to the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis. In the division of the Empire allotted to the Constantinopolitants, whose Government being thought to be insupportable by this wanton people, they called in the Saracens, by whome the Greek Garrisons were cast out, and the Countrey made subject to Haumar the third of the Caliphs. Afterwards, weary of them also, they would have a Caliph of their own, revolting totally from the Caliph of Bagdat. So that from this time forwards we shall meet with two Caliphs at a time; the one residing at Cair in Egypt, to whom the Saracens, or Moors of Spain and Africk did submit themselves: the other at Bagdat, who Lorded it over all the rest, at least as to the Supream title, and some chief Prerogatives; though the main power was cantoned and disposed of among their Sultans.

The Third DYNASTY, or the CALIPHS of EGYPT.

1135	512	14	Elhapit Ladin Illahi.
		15	Etzahar.
		16	Elphaiz.
		17	Etzar Ledin Illahi, the Son of Elphaiz, the last Caliph, or King of Egypt, of the race of Phatime: the Turkes succeeding after his death in this opulent Kingdom. Concerning which we are to know, that Elphaiz the Father of Etzar, being overpowered by Almericus King of Hierusalem, craved aid of Norradine the Turkish Sultan of Damascus; which he received under the conduct of Sarracon, or Shirachoch, a right valiant and stout Commander: who taking his advantages, not only cleared the Countrey of Almericus, but got the whole Kingdom to himself; dashing out the brains of Elphais with his Horsemans Mace. And though Etzar his Son assumed for a while the Title of Caliph; yet the destruction of himself, and the whole Phatimean Family rooted out by Sarracon, soon put an end to that claim; and left the Kingdom in the peaceable possession of the Turkish Sultans.

The Fourth DYNASTY, or the Race of the TURKISH KINGS or CALIPHS of EGYPT.

1163	1	Asereddin, sirnamed Shirachoch, called Sarracon, by the Christian Writers; the first of the Turks which reigned in Egypt: of the Noble Family of Aiub.
1186	2	Zeli-heddin, called Saladine by the Christian Writers, the Son (or as some say, the Nephew) of Sarracon or Shirachoch; confirmed in his Estate by the Caliph of Bagdet, under whose jurisdiction he reduced the Egyptian Schismaticks. He obtained also the Kingdom of Damascus, conquered Mesopotamia and Palestine; and in the year 1190. regained the City of Hierusalem. A Prince who wanted nothing to commend him to succeeding ages, nor to glorifie him in the Kingdom of heaven, but the saving knowledge of CHRIST JESUS.
1199	3	Elaziz, the second Son of Saladine, succeeded in the Realm of Egypt; which he exchanged afterwards with his Brother Eladel for the Kingdom of Damasus.
	4	Eladel, or El-Aphtzel, by the Christian Writers called Meledine, succeeded upon this exchange, in the Kingdom of Egypt: and overcame the Christians, without the loss of a man, at the siege of Caire, by letting loose the Sluces of Nilus; which drowned their Army, and forced them to covenant with him at his own pleasure.
1210	5	Elchamul.
1237	6	Melech Assalach, by the Christian Writers called Melechsada, the Son of Elchamul, who overcame Lewis the 9th. of France: and going with that King towards Damiata, was slain by the Souldiers of his Guard, called Mamalucks.
1242	7	Elmutan, the Son of Malech Essalach, succeeded for a time in his Fathers Throne. But the Mamalucks being resolved to obtain the Kingdom for themselves, inforced him to flie to a Tower of Wood, which they set on fire; the poor Prince, half burned, leaping into a River (which ran close by it) was their drowned: and the Mamalucks setled in the Kingdom, An. 1245.

These Mamalucks were the Off-spring of a People on the banks of the Euxine Sea, vulgarly called the Circassians: whom Melechsala either bought of their Parents, or (at the second hand) of the Tartars, then newly Masters of those Countreys, to supply the want of valour in the idle and effeminate people of Egypt; and out of them selected a choice Band of Men, for the Guard of his Person. Knowing their strength, and finding their opportunity, they trecherously slew Melechsada their Lord and Master; appointing one Azeddin Ibek, a Turcoman by Nation, and therefore by most Christian Writers called Tarquimenicus, (one of their own number) a man of great spirit and valour, to succeed in the Throne. Unwilling to re-give the Supream Authority into the hands of the Egyptians; and not permitting their own sons to enjoy the name and priviledge of Mamalucks; they bought yearly certain numbers of Circassian slaves, whom they committed to the keeping of the Egyptians, by them to be instructed in the Egyptian Language, and the Law of Mahomet. Being thus fitted for Employment, they were taught the Discipline of War, and by degrees advanced unto the highest Offices of Power and Trust; as now the Janizaries are in the Turkish Empire: in choice and ordering of whom, as the Ottoman Turks were Precedented by those of Egypt, so it is possible enough that the Janizaries may make as great a Change in the Turkish Empire, as the Mamalucks did in the Egyptians. So unsafe a thing it is for a Prince to commit the sole guard of his Person, or the defence of his Dominions, to the hands of such, whom not the sence of natural Duty, but the hopes of Profit or Preferment, may make useful to him. For thus we find, that Constantinus, a King of the Britains, was murdered by his Guard of Picts: most of the Roman Emperours, by the hands of those whom they intrusted, either with the guard of their Persons, or the command of their Armies: And I think no man can be ignorant, how many times the Princes and Estates of Italy have been brought into the extreamest dangers, by trusting too much to the honesty of mercenary Souldiers and Commanders. Take we for instance the proceedings of Giacopo Picinino, who with his Followers first took pay of Ferdinand the first of Naples; left him, to fight for his vowed Enemy, John Duke of Calabria, the Son of Rene Duke of Anjou; whom he also forsook in his greatest need. The like we find of Francisco Sforza, first entertained by the Duke of Millain, from whom he revolted to the Florentines, from them to the Venetians; and being again received into the Pay of the State of Millain, made use of their own Army to subdue that City. Nor can I speak better of the Switzers, or their dealing in this kind with the French Kings, the Sforza's Dukes of Milan; and with whom not, (to say the truth) that ever trusted or employed them.

Now as it is unsafe for a Prince to commit the custody of his Person, or the defence of his Estates to the Faith of Forciners; so is it dangerous to him to call in such aids, and to commit his Fortunes either wholly, or principally, unto their Fidelity. A moderate supply of men, Money, or Munition, from a confederate King, is, I confess, in most cases convenient, in some necessary: as well to save their Natives from the Sword; as to try a Friend, and interest an Ally in the same cause. But to invite so great a number of Succours, as from Helpers may become Masters, and oppress the people whom they came to defend; is that Rock on which many Realms have suffered shipwrack, and which a good Pilot of the State should with all care avoid. For as in the sickness of the body natural, it is hurtful to a mans health and life, to take more Physick than it may (after the effect thereof be wrought) either digest, or put out again; so in the body Politick, it is a perilous matter to receive more succours, than what (after they have done the deed they were sent for) we may either with conveniency reward and settle with us, or at liberty expel. Of all surfeits, this of Foreign supplies is most uncurable; and Ne quid nimis, if in nothing else true, is in this case oracle. There is no Kingdom (I am verily perswaded) under the Sun, which hath not been by this means conquered; no Common-wealth, which hath not been by this means ruined. To relate all examples, were infinite and tedious; to infer some, pleasing to the Reader, and to illustrate the point, not unnecessary. To begin with former times, Philip of Macedon, called into Greece to assist the Thebans against the Phocians, brought all that Countrey, in a manner, under his command. The Romans by aiding the Sicilians against the Carthaginians, possessed themselves of that flourishing Island; by assisting the Hedui against the Sequani, mastered Gallia; by succouring Androgeus against Cassibelan, seised on Britain; by siding with the Ætolians against Perseus, united to their Empire all the Kingdom of Macedon; and by the same course what not? In after-ages, the Britains called in the Saxons, and were by them thrust out of all; the Irish called in the English, by whom they were in process of time totally subdued; and the Indians called in the Mongul-Tartars, who now Lord it over them. These forreign Supplies are invited, or let into a Countrey, commonly in four cases. First, when some one man upon discontent, or desire of revenge, openeth them a way into a Countrey: upon which motives, Narses invited the Lombards into Italy; and Count Julian brought the Moors into Spain; the one to be revenged on the Empress Sophia, who had despitefully reviled him; the other to revenge himself on King Rodorick, who had ravished his Daughter. Secondly, when a weaker Faction makes way for them, to maintain their cause against a stronger. On which ground, the Duke of Burgundy being oppressed by the faction of Orleans, made way for Henry the fifth to pass into France; and the Leaguers drew the Spaniards in, to hold up their declining cause against Henry the 4th. Thirdly, when an ambitious Prince makes use of a forein power, to usurp upon the rights of another man. And for that cause Ludowick Sforze perswaded Charles the 8th. to undertake the Conquest of the Realm of Naples; that by the countenance of his Arms, he might appropriate to himself the Dukedom of Millain. Fourthly, when a King overburthened by a forein, or domestick Force, which he is not able to resist, requires the help of a forein Friend: in which case, Plus a medico quam a morbo mali, the Physick proves many times worse than the Disease. For thus the Kings of Naples of the house of Aragon, being in danger of the French, drew in the Aids of Ferdinand the Catholique, the Cousin-German once removed of the King then being; And the Caliphs of Egypt, not able to withstand the Forces of Almericus, craved aid of the Turks: by which means, both those Kingdoms were made a prey to their forein Friends, and by avoiding Scylla, fled into Charybdis. Nay many times it so happeneth, that these forein Succours join in design with those, against whom they were called, and divide the conquered State between them. And so we find that the Burgundians being called by Stilico into Gaul, to prevent the breaking of the Franks, or French, joined with them in a common League against the Romans, whom they dispossessed at last of all that Countrey. Only amongst so many examples to this purpose, we find the Low-Countrey-men to have prospered by these forein aids; who by the assistance of the English, ransomed themselves from that yoke of bondage which was intended to be put upon them by the King of Spain. This I acknowledge to be true, and look upon it as a great Argument of the integrity and honesty of the English Nation; although it be as true withal, that the English never had such an Army there, as to be able to subdue them. But give me such another instance, I will quit the cause: for the same Low-Countrey-men found it otherwise with the Duke of Anjou, Brother to Henry the 3d. of France, whom they created Duke of Braband, and their Governor-General; permitting him to bring in as many of the French, as either his Authority, or their own Moneys were able to raise: who was no sooner setled in that command, but he made it his chief business to seize upon their strongest Holds, and to be a more absolute Prince amongst them, than ever the Spaniards, or Burgundians had been before. So that I think I may conclude, that these forein Succours are the last to be tried, and the least to be trusted, of any remedies in State. But it's now more than time to return to the Mamalucks; and in them to

The Fifth DYNASTY of the EGYPTIAN KINGS, or the Race of the MAMALUCKS.

A. Ch.

1255 1 Turquimenius, who being promoted to the Kingdom, releaſed King Lewis, whom Melechſala his Predeceſſor had taken Priſoner, but performed not half of the conditions agreed upon.

2 Clothes (by ſome called Elmutahaz) taking advantage of the Miſeries of the Turks, then diſtreſſed by the Tartars; ſeized on the greateſt part of Syria and Paleſtine.

12[illegible]0 3 Bandocader perfected the begun Conqueſts of Cloths, and took from the Chriſtians the ſtrong City of Antioch; carrying on his Armies as far as Armenia, where he did much ſpoil.

4 Melechſait, or Melechſares, reſtored the power of the Mamalucks in Syria and Paleſtine; where it had been much impaired by Edward the Son of Henry the 3d. of England, and Henry Duke of Mecklenburgh, &c.

1286 5 Elpis, or Alphix, recovered from the diſſenting Chriſtians the ſtrong Cities of Tripolis, Berytus, Tyre, and Sidon; all which he razed to the ground, that they might not be any more ſerviceable to the affairs of the Chriſtians.

1291 6 Araphus, or Euſtrephus, by birth a German, releaſed Henry Duke of Mecklenburgh, after he had been Priſoner 26 years. He rooted the Chriſtians out of Syria, took Ptolomais the laſt Town they there held: and ſo razed it; that he made it fit to be ploughed.

7 Melechneſar, when he was Lieutenant to Araphus, was diſcomfitted by Caſſanes, a great Prince of the Tartars, with the loſs of 40000 Egyptians: but Caſſanes being departed, he recovered again all Syria, and deſtroyed Hieruſalem; for which Service he was afterward made Sultan of Egypt.

8 Melechadel, who I ſuppoſe to be that Sultan that governed Egypt when Tamberlane with unreſiſtable violence conquered it; but of this I am not certain: neither can I meet with any conſtant and continued ſeries (which I dare rely on) of his Succeſſors in this Kingdom, till I come to 9 Melechaella, or Melechnaſar, who in the year 1423. ſubdued the Iſle of Cyprus, and made the Kings thereof to be from thenceforth Tributaries to the Mamaluch Sultans.

1465 10 Cathbeyus, who much reformed the State of Egypt, and was a profeſſed Enemy of Bajazet 2d. the 8th. King of the Ottomans.

1499 12 Campſon Chiarſeſius, ſucceeded on the depoſing of Mahomet.

A. Ch.

13 Zanballat, who dethroned Campſon, and not long was depoſed by 1500 14 Tonombeius; outed of his Eſtate by the joynt-conſent of the Mamalucks, ſo to make way for Campſon Gaurus.

1501 15 Campſon II. ſirnamed Gaurus, reformed the diſordered and factious Eſtate both of Court and Countrey; and for the ſpace of 16 years governed very proſperouſly. But ſiding at the laſt with Hyſmael the Perſian Sophy, againſt Selimus the firſt of that name the 3d. Emperour, and tenth King of the Ottoman Family; he drew his Kingdom into a War, in which his Armies were overthrown, and himſelf ſlain in battel.

1517 16 Tonombeius II. ſucceeded Campſon Gaurus, both in his Kingdom and misfortunes: vanquiſhed in his firſt year by the ſaid Selimus the firſt, An. 1517. Who having conquered this rich Kingdom, was uſed to ſay, That he had gotten a Farm to feed his Gemoglans, or young Souldiers. So Egypt became a Province of the Turkiſh Empire, as it ſtill continueth.

What the Revenues of it were in the time of the Pharaohs, I am not able to affirm. Great they muſt be, beyond the proportion of belief, or elſe they could never have been Maſters of ſufficient Treaſure to finiſh thoſe vaſt Structures which they undertook. Twelve thouſand and five hundred Talents they amounted Annually unto, in the time of the Ptolomies; which of our Money makes the ſum of two Millions and 347750 pounds. Which ſum Auguſtus Cæſar (appropriating this Province to himſelf) is ſaid to have doubled: But whether he had it all in Money, or part hereof in Money, and the reſt in Corn, I determine not. Certain it is, that there was yearly ſhipped hence for Rome, in the time of that Emperour, Two hundred thouſand Meaſures of Wheat, every Meaſure weighing Twenty hundred pound weight; which cometh to Seven Millions and an hundred forty thouſand of our Engliſh Buſhels; ſold by him, or diſtributed gratis amongſt the Poor, as he ſaw occaſion. So that there might be very well ſome abatement in Money, conſidering that the Corn amounted to ſo great a ſum. Nor were they much leſs, if ought at all, when the Mamalucks ruled in this Countrey. For Campſon Gaurus, at his coming to the Throne, gave no leſs than Ten Millions of Duckats, at one clap, amongſt his Souldiers. But the Turks at this day, partly through their Tyranical Government, and partly through the diſcontinuance of the uſual Traffick through the Red Sea, receive no more than Three Millions of Crowns; one of which is hoorded in his own Coffers; the ſecond is appropriated unto his Vicegerent Baſhaw; for ſupport of this Charge; the third is diſtributed among his Garriſon-Souldiers, and ſuch of them as by Land guard his own Million to Conſtantinople; for by Sea he dareth not venture it, for fear of the Florentine, who with a few Ships Lordeth in it the Mediterranean.

And ſo much for Egypt.

Of

OF BARBARY.

BARBARY is bounded on the East, with Cyrenaica; on the West, with the Atlantick Ocean; on the north, with the Mediterranean, the Straits of Gibraltar, and some part of the Atlantick also; on the South, with Mount Atlas, by which separated from Lybia Inferior, or the Desarts of Lybia.

It containeth in it the whole Dioceſs of Africk, and part of the Dioceſs of Spain: subject in former times to the Commonwealth of Carthage, and the great Kings of Mauritania, and Numidia. When conquered by the Romans, they gave to that part of it, which they won from the Carthaginians, the name of Africa; calling that Province by the name of the whole Peninſula, and afterwards extended it over all the rest of the Countrey, on the North of Atlas. Which name it held till the subjugation of it by the Saracens, by whom called BARBARY: either from Barbar, signifying in their Language an uncertain murmur, such as the speech of the Africans seemed to them to be; or from the word Bar, signifying a Desart, which doubled, made up first Barbar, and after Barbary.

It is situate under the third and fourth Climates: so that the longest Summers day in the parts most South, amounteth to thirteen hours three quarters, increased in the most Northern parts to fourteen hours and a quarter. In length extended from the Atlantick Ocean to the greater Syrtis, for the space of 1500 miles; in breadth from Mount Atlas to the Mediterranean, where narrowest, 100 miles; but towards the Straits, where broadest, almost three hundred.

The Countrey in such parts as lie neerest to the Mediterranean, is full of Hills, covered with Woods, and stored with plenty of Wild-beasts; provided reasonably well of most sorts of Fruits, but unfit for Wheat, insomuch that most of the Inhabitants live of Barley-bread. Betwixt which and Mount Atlas is a Champain Countrey, watered with many pleasant Rivers issuing from that Mountain, and liberally furnished with Cheries, Figgs, Pears, Plumbs, Apples of all kinds; abundance of Oyl, Honey, Sugar; some Mines of Gold, and that for purity and fineness no where to be bettered. Here are also besides large Herds of Cattel, some Elephants, Lyons, Dragons, Leopards, and others of the like savage nature, and of Apes great multitudes; Horses good store, of excellent both strength and beauty. But taking it in the best parts, it falleth extremely short of that infinite fertility, which is ascribed to it by the Writers of elder times. For besides the miracle of five hundred Ears of Corn growing on one stalk, (whereof more anon) Pliny reporteth, that not far from the City of Tacape, in the way to Leptis, a man might see a great Date-Tree overshadowing an Olive, under the Olive a Fig-Tree, under that a Pomgranate, under that a Vine, and under all, Pease, Wheat, and Herbs, all growing and flourishing at one time. It is affirmed also by the same Author, that the Vine beareth twice a year, that some fruits or other are gathered in it at all times of the year; and that a piece of ground of four cubits square, was usually rented out at so many Denarii: by which accompt, (as the learned Budæus doth compute it) an Acre of that ground must be worth yearly, 1280c of the Roman Sestertii, which make 320 Crowns. An infinite and unparrallel'd increase of the Fruits of the Earth, if the Author were not out in his valuation.

The people are of a duskish colour, but inclining to blackness: much of the same nature with the Arabians, by whose numerous Families formerly they were overspread; but the Africans of the two the better: active of body, well skilled in Horsemanship, but impatient of labour, covetous of honour, inconstant, crafty, and unfaithful: studious in matters of their Law, and in some of the Liberal Sciences, especially Philosophy and the Mathematicks, of which in many parts of the Mahometan Countreys they are admitted to be Readers: They are also said to be stately of gate, exceeding distrustful, in their hate implacable, and jealous of their Women beyond all compare. The Women of a comely body, and well featured, beautiful in blackness, of delicate soft skins; and in their habit and apparel beyond measure sumptuous: so dress't, to make themselves more amiable in the eyes of their Husbands; for otherwise not permitted to stir abroad, and seldom to see any body but those of their own houses.

The Language spoken at the present in most of the Maritime Towns, except those of Fesse and Morocco, is the Arabick Tongue. In those two Kingdoms, and most part of the Countrey-Villages, the Punick or old African, the ancient languages of the Countrey: the Punick spoken in all places where anciently the Carthaginians were of any power; the African (whatsoever it was) in the parts of Mauritania, not subject to them. Of the Latine there is no remainder, which though it was the Language of the Roman Colonies, yet never could it spread so far as to extinguish or suppress the old natural Tongues: and in the Colonies themselves so much degenerated in short time, so barbarously and imperfectly spoken; that a Sister of the Emperour Severus, who lived in Leptis, a Roman Colony, coming to Rome to see her Brother, spoke it so incongruously, that the Emperour was ashamed to hear it. And though the Sermons of S. Augustine, an African Bishop, were preached in Latine, because preached in Hippo his Episcopal See, which was then a Colony of the Romans; yet he confesseth, that he was sometimes fain to use such words as were not Latine, to be the better understood of his Congregation.

The Christian Faith was first planted in that part hereof, which was called Africa Propria, by Epanetus, one of the 70 Disciples; by Dorotheus in his Synopsis, affirmed to be the first Bishop of Carthage: In Mauritania, by S. Simon the Apostle, surnamed Zelotes. Metaphrastes addeth, that S. Simon Peter preached here also, when by the Decree of Claudius Cæsar he was forced from Rome; and and at his going hence, left Crescens his disciple to promote the work. But by whomsoever planted first, it found good increase, and was so propagated in short time over all this Countrey, that in the year 250, or before, there were in it above 90 Bishops; for so many were assembled in the Synod of Labestum: and in the year 398. when the faction of the Donatists was of greatest power, we find no fewer than 214 Catholick Bishops met together in the Council of Carthage. Which as it is an argument of the great increase of Christianity in those parts of Africa; so it shews also, that the Church was in ill condition; so overpower'd by the violence of that mighty faction, who had at least 270 Bishops of their own Opinion; that the Orthodox party was necessitated to encrease the number of Bishops for fear of being over-balanced by the contrary side, if ever the difference should come to be examined in a publick Meeting. These Bishops ranked into six Classes, according to the number of the African Provinces: the Bishops of each Province subject to their own Metropolitan, who in this Dioceſs (contrary to the usage of all other Churches) had the name of Primates: but all of them subordinate to the Primate of Carthage, originally invested with Patriarchal jurisdiction over all these parts. Latius fusa est nostra Provincia; Habet enim Numidiam, & Mauritanias duas sibi cohærentes, are S. Cyprians words. Which shew, that Leo Africanus was a better Geographer, than an Historian or Divine. He would not else have told us in such positive terms, that those of Barbary remained in their old Idolatry, till 250 years before Mahomets birth; at what time they received the Gospel, and not before. But the good man mistook the reviving of the Orthodox Faith, in the time of Justinian, after it had been long suppressed by the Vandals of the Arian faction (who at one time banished hence 300 Catholick Bishops) for the first planting of the Gospel: Otherwise not to be excused. But after this Reviver, it held not long, when suppressed by the Saracens, and so suppressed, that except it be in some few Towns possessed by the King of Spain, and the Crown of Portugal, there is no tract of Christianity to be discerned in all this Countrey; Mahometanism being elsewhere universally embraced amongst them.

Amongst the men of most note for Souldery, which have been born in this Countrey, we may reckon Amilcar the Carthaginian, and his three Sons: 2 Annibal, 3 Asdrubal, and 4 Mago; men hardly to be parallel'd in any Ages: 5 Masinissa, King of the Numidians, one of their Cotemporaries: and in the following times, 6 Septimius Severus, the Roman Emperor. Amongst those addicted to the Muses, those of most note, 1 Terence, 2 Apuleius. But for Divines, no Region in the World afforded men of more eminent note, nor better deserving of the Church. 1 Tertullian, 2 Cyprian, 3 Julius Africanus, 4 Arnobius, 5 Lactantius, 6 Victorinus Afer, 7 Optatus, Melevitanus, 8 Victor Uticensis, 9 Fulgentius, 10 Primasius. And above all, the most learned and divine S. Augustine; a man of such admirable abilities, and indefatigable industry, so constant a Defender of all Orthodox Doctrines against the *Heretick*s of those times, that he deservedly got the name of Malleus Hæreticorum.

Principal Mountains of this Countrey besides Mount Atlas, (of which hereafter by it self) 1 Pborca, 2 Heptadelphus, and 3 Atlas minor in Mauritania Tingitana; 4 Cinnaba, 5 Garas, 6 Madethubadus, and 7 those called Gariphi, in Cæsaraensis; 8 Thambes, 9 Mampsarus, 10 Usaletus, and 11 Zuchabarus, in Africa Propria. Of which, and others, we may speak more, if occasion be, in our discription of the Provinces, in which they are. And for the Rivers of most note, though none of any long course in so narrow a Countrey; we have in Tingitana, 1 Sala, falling into the Atlantick, out of Atlas minor; 2 another of the same name, and the same exit also, but far more to the North, towards the Streit of Gibraltar; 3 Melochath, mollified by Salust the Historian into Mulucha, and by him placed betwixt the Numidians and the Moors, 4 Malva, the boundary at this day, betwixt the Kingdoms of Fesse and Algiers; 5 Phthuth, of more fame than any, of which more anon: in Cæsariensis, 6 Nasabath, 7 Sisaris, and Sorbetos: in Africa Propria, or the Kingdom of Tunes, 8 Rubicatus, which issuing out of Mount Thambes, falleth into the Mediterranean near Hippo Regius; 9 Triton, which issuing out of the Hill called Usaletus, and making the great Fenn called Tritonia Palus, endeth its course also in the Mediterranean; and finally, 10 Bagradas, the greatest in all this tract, which rising out of Mount Atlas, first runeth towards the East, and then receiving from the Hill called Mampsarus, the addition of another Stream, passeth directly Northward to the City of Utica, and there ends his course.

Having thus laid together the chief Metes and Landmarks, I should now proceed to the description of the several Provinces hereof, as in other places. But because each part almost hath had for these later times its particular History, and that it is divided at the present into several Governments, and under the command of several Princes: I will here lay down so much of the Story of it as concerns the whole, before such division; and afterwards pursue the History and Chorography of the several parts. And for the whole we are to know, that this Country was first peopled by Phut the third Son of Cham: who leaving his Brother Mizraim well setled in the Land of Egypt, passed towards the West; and leaving Lehabim his Nephew betwix him and Mizraim, possessed himself of all the rest from the greater Syrtis to the Ocean. Remainders of whose name we find in the River Phut, (by Ptolomy called Phthuth, with but little difference, save that it savoureth more of the African roughness) near which Josephus findeth a Region called the Countrey of Phut, a Nation called the Phuteans: seconded herein by S. Hierom, who speaking of this Regio Phutensis in Mauritania, (where the River Phuth is placed by Ptolomy) voucheth in general terms the testimony of old Writers, both Greek and Latine. So that of this there is no question to be made. Such Nations as descended of this Plantation, shall be hereafter spoke of in their several Provinces. Governed at first by the Chiefs of their several Families; but in the end, reduced under the Command of the Kings of Mauritania and Numidia, and the State of Carthage. The two first, Natives of this Countrey, of the Race of Phut; the last descended also of the Seed of Cham, their common Parent, by the line of Canaan: who on the Conquest of their Countrey by the Children of Israel, forced to seek new Dwellings, and having store of Ships to transplant themselves and their Families; setled in the maritime parts of Mauritania, and Africa, properly so called. For, that the people of those parts, though lost into other Namet and Families, were anciently of a Canaanitish, or Phœnician Race, may be made apparent, 1 By the nearness of their Language, the Punick, or Phœnician, and old Hebrew Tongue, differing only in the Dialect and Pronunciation. 2*ly*, By the name Pœni, or Phœni, little differing from that of the Phœnices. 3*ly*, By this testimony of S. Augustine, who telleth us in the Comment on St. Pauls Epistle to the Romans, begun, but not finished by him; Interrogati Rustici nostri quid sint, respondent Punici Chanani; that is to say, that when any of

of the Inhabitants of this Country (he himself was one) were asked what they were, they answered, Chananites. 4ly, We find in Herodotus, how Cambyses had totally conquered Egypt, intending a War against the Carthaginians, who were then a State (it seemeth) of some power: But the Phœnicians, being the only Sea-faring men Cambyses then had, absolutely denied to be employed in that Service; they being sprung from the same Tree that the Carthaginians were. 5ly, We read in Procopius, (out of which it is cited by Evagrius Scholasticus) how on two Marble-Pillars, situate nigh unto Tingis, or Tanger, there was in the Phœnician Language and Character engraved, Nos fugimus a facie Joshuah prædonis, filii Nave; that is to say, We flie from the face of that Robber Joshuah, the Son of Nun. The setling of this people there, a great incitement questionless unto Dido to come thither also: who feared as much danger from her Brother Pygmalion King of Tyre, whose hands had been imbrued in the bloud of her Husband; as the others did from the Sword of Joshuah. Gathering together all her Treasures, which were very great, accompanied with her Brother Barca, and her Sister Anna, she set sail for Africk; and landing in the Bay, where after stood the City of Carthage, she obtained leave to build a Fort of no greater bigness than she could compass round with an Oxes hide. This the beginning of that City; hence the name of Byrsa, which at first it had. First founded in, or about the year of the World 3070, which was about 144 years after the building of Solomons Temple; 143 years before the building of Rome, and about 290 years from the destruction of Troy. By which accompt (I note this only by the way) it is impossible that Dido, or Elisa (for by both these names we find her called) should ever see the face of Æneas, unless it were in picture, or imagination; and therefore as impossible she should either fall in love with him, or be got with Child by him, or finally kill her self on her being forsaken. All which being delivered by Virgil in his excellent Poem, did for long time obtain a general belief with most sorts of men. Hereunto consenteth Ausonius, who honouring the Statue of this abused Princess with an Epigram of 18 Verses, among others, gives us these four.

Invide cur in me stimulasti Musa Maronem,
Fingeret ut nostræ damna pudicitiæ?
Vos magis Historicis (Lectores) credite de me,
Quam qui furta dicm, concubitusque canunt.

Why didst thou stir up Virgil, envious Muse,
Falsly my name and honour to abuse?
Of me let Histories be heard, not those,
Who to the World Joves thefts and lusts expose.

Credible it is, Æneas being driven on the Coast of Africk, was by some Prince there courteously entertained, as a man whose fame had been his Harbinger: but why the story should be fastned on Dido, I see not. Perhaps the unfortunate death of this Queen, who laid violent hands on her self, gave occasion to the Poet to fain, that it was for the love of Æneas: Whereas it was indeed to avoid the lust and fury of Iarbas, a potent King of the Getuli, a powerful Nation neighbouring those parts of Africa in which Carthage stood, who violently desired to have his pleasure on her.

But to proceed; This City thus founded in a place commodious for Trade and Merchandise, in short time grew exceeding wealthy. And having wealth enough to hire Mercenary Souldiers (of which the needy Mauritanians, and Numidians, did afford good store) they conquered all the Sea Coasts from Cyrene to the Streits of Hercules (now called the Srteits of Gibraltar:) and so much also towards the South, as was worth the conquering; within which space possessed of 300 Cities. Grown to such height, that all the African Kings and Princes, and amongst them the Kings of Numidia and Mauritania were at their devotion: They began to cast their eyes on Sicily, a wealthy Iland, lying near unto their Coast; which questionless they had possessed, if the Romans, envious of their greatness, and fearing their Neighbourhood, had not took upon them the defence of the Mamertines, and under that pretence got some footing in it. The end of this War, after many brave exploits on both sides, was the driving the Carthaginians out of Sicily; their abandoning all the Islands betwixt them and Italy, and the payment of 3200 Talents, amounting to about two Millions of Crowns. And such end had the first Punick War, managed for the most part in Sicily. During which time, and the first War there managed by the Carthaginians, Africk it self was twice invaded; first, by Agathocles Tyrant of Syracuse, (or so commonly called) and afterwards by Regulus a Roman General, but with no other great success than the spoil of the Country. The second followed not long after, but the Scene was altered; begun in Spain, prosecuted in Italy, and ended in Africk. Begun by Annibal the Son of Amilcar; descended from Berca the Brother of Dido or Elisa: who having conquered a great part of Spain, and thereby both increased his reputation and experience, conducted his victorious Army through Gaul, and over the Alpes, into Italy it self; defeated the Armies of the Romans, and slew some of their Consuls: So prosperous in the Battel of Canna, where the whole strength of Rome was broken, that had he followed his good fortune, and made use of his Victory, he might within four or five days after have dined in the Capitol. Having for 18 years together held them work in Italy, he was called home to defend Africk from the Forces of Scipio; who having driven the Carthaginians out of Spain, had very prudently translated the War to Carthage. The issue was, that on the loss of the battel of Nadagara, the Carthaginians were necessitated to submit themselves to the will of the Conquerour: that is to say, to deliver up all their Elephants, together with all their Ships and Gallies excepting ten; to make no War without leave of the Romans, to pay for the Charges of the War 10000 Talents; and such other extremities. So ended the second Punick War, An. V. C. 602. And the third followed not long after, not any way occasioned by those of Carthage, but out of the inveterate hatred of the People of Rome, who would not think themselves safe whilst that City stood: and therefore sent another Scipio to lay siege unto it. By whom, after a long and stout resistance, it was at last taken and destroyed: The Treasure which was found in it, notwithstanding their former losses, and the low estate it was reduced to, besides what was consumed by fire, and reserved by the Souldiers, amounting to 470000 pound weight of Silver, which cometh to a Million, four hundred and ten thousand pounds of our English Money.

Such end had Carthage, and therewith all the rest of the States of Africa, who though in hatred to the Carthaginians they had armed against her, and aided the Romans in these Wars; yet they soon found their own Fortunes buried in the self-same Grave. Subverted one after another, as occasion was, they became all subject unto Rome; their Kingdoms and Estates turned to Roman Provinces. Of these were reckoned seven in all, that is to say, 1 Africa Propria, called also Zeugitana, and Proconsularis, 2 Byzacena, 3 Tripolitana, 4 Numidia, 5 Mauritania Cæsariensis, 6 Sitifensis, and 7 Tingitana. Of which the last (I know not why) was laid to the Diocess of Spain, called therefore Hiſpania Transfretana, Spain on the other ſide of the Sea, by ſome elder Writers: the other ſix made up the Dioceſs of Africk, ſubordinate to the Præfectus Prætorio for Italy, who had here his Vicarius, or Lieutenant. In this condition it continued, till ſubdued by the Vandals, a German Nation, inhabiting beyond the Elb, on the Coaſt of the Baltick; where now lie the Dukedoms of Mecklenbourg and Pomerania. Their memory ſtill retained there in the ſtile of thoſe Princes, who call themſelves Duces Vandalorum; and in the Confederacy of the Hanſe-towns, called by ſome Latine Writers, Civitates Vandalicæ. A Nation of great power, and numbers, (the Burgundians being only a part of theſe) one of the five into which Pliny doth divide the Germans. In the 11th year of the Empire of Arcadius and Honorius, they were invited into Gaul, by the treacherous practices of Stilico, Lieutenant of the Weſtern Empire; and after an abode of three years, paſſed into Spain, together with the Suevi, and Alani, their Aſſociates. But after 18 years, the Goths made that place too hot for them alſo. So that they could not but willingly accept the offer of Bonifacius, the Emperours Vicegerent in Africa: who ſtomaching to ſee his Office beſtowed on Caſtinus, an unworthy man, and his enemy, betrayed the Country to theſe Vandals, in the laſt year of the life and reign of Gundericus, an Arian in Religion, as were the reſt of the Nation, to which induced by their Neighbourhood and acquaintance with the Goths: Which Hereſie as they brought with them into Africk, driving thence all the Orthodox Chriſtians, ſo they continued in it till their extirpation.

412	1	Gundericus, who firſt invaded Gaul, Spain, and Africk. 16.
428	2	Genſerius, who at the requeſt of Eudoxia, the Widow of Valentinian, invaded Italy, and ſacked the City of Rome, the Spoil whereof for fourteen days he gave to his Souldiers: but at the requeſt of Eudoxia, whom he afterwards married, he did not burn it. This Eudoxia was Wife to the Weſtern Emperour Valentinian; who having a mind to a Lady of Rome, the Wife of one Maximus, he cunningly ſlipped the Ring of Maximus off his finger, and by that token ſent for the Lady to the Court, and when ſhe was come, raviſhed her. To revenge this diſgrace, Maximus ſlew Valentinian, made himſelf Emperour and forced Eudoxia to be his Wife. But ſhe ſtomaching a Match ſo unequal to her high Birth, and having ſome incling of her Huſbands death, ſent for Genſericus into Italy. This Genſericus conquered Carthage, and Hippo, and reigned 48 years.
476	3	Honoricus Son of Genſericus. 7.
484	4	Gundebundus, Son to Genzo, the Brother of Honoricus. 15.
499	5	Traſimundus, Brother to Gundebundus. 24.
523	6	Hildericus, the Son of Honoricus, depoſed by
530	7	Gilimir, the Son of Genzo, one of the Deſcendents of Genſericus; overcome by Beliſarius a worthy and politick Leader, whom the Emperour Juſtinian employed in that Service.

And thus ended the Kingdom of the Vandals, (having continued in Spain and Africa 146 years) by the valour of Beliſarius. Who after this good Service, was employed by Juſtinian againſt the Goths, then reigning in Italy; againſt whom he proceeded very fortunately: but being, on I know not what envy, called to Conſtantinople, his eyes were put out, and he was forced to beg his Bread at the Gate of the Temple of S. Sophia. A bad reward for ſo good a Servant. But to go on, Juſtinian having regained Africk, to honour his new Conqueſt, exempted it from the command of the Prætorio-Præfectus of Italy, to which formerly ſubject; and encreaſing the number of the African Provinces by the addition of the Iſle of Sardinia, made it a Præfecture of it ſelf: appointing his Præfectus Prætorio Africæ to recide in Carthage, as the chief City of his Charge; which he then alſo raiſed to a Conſular Province, having in former times been Proconſular only. But long it held not in this ſtate: For in the year 647. the Romans were finally expulſed by Hucba, a famous Leader, whom Oſmen, the third Caliph of the Saracens, had deſigned to this Service. Africk, from that time forwards, reckoned amongſt the Provinces of the Saracenical or Mahometan Empire. But in the end, the Authority of the Caliphs growing leſs and leſs, and every one of their Sultans or Provincial Officers, getting what he could for himſelf; this Country was diſtracted in many Kingdoms and Principalities, but all at laſt reduced to four of moſt conſideration: that is to ſay, the Kingdoms of 1 Tunis, 2 Tremeſen or Algiers, 3 Feſſe, and 4 Morocco. To the Chorography and Hiſtory whereof we do now proceed; adding hereto in the fifth place, the Iſles of Barbary.

1. TUNIS.

THE Kingdom of TUNIS (in Latine called Regnum Tunitanum) hath on the Eaſt, Cyrene; on the Weſt, the Kingdom of Algiers, or Tremeſen; on the North, the Mediterranean; on the South, Mount Atlas. So called from Tunis, the chief City of it; extended all along the Coaſt of the Mediterranean for the ſpace of 800 miles or thereabout, but the breadth not anſwerable.

The Country towards the Eaſt, barren and deſtitute of water; but in the Weſtern parts, ſufficiently plentiful of Corn and other Fruits, and generally well ſet with Trees. The People more patient of labour than the reſt of Barbary, and for that cauſe perhaps more healthy: but queſtionleſs of ſo good conſtitution, that they live commonly to great age, unleſs a violent death prevent them; and are not much afraid of Sickneſs, or much troubled with it.

It contains in it the two whole Provinces of Africa Propria (or Africa Minor, as ſome call it) and the Numidia of the Romans; called ſince Numidia Antiqua, to difference it from the preſent Numidia, lying on the other ſide of Mount Atlas. The principal Mountains of which Countries, beſides thoſe ſpoken of already, were 1 Audas, 2 Buzara, 3 Cinna, 4 Dios, or the Hills of Jupiter, 5 Gillius, by ſome named Gigion, and 6 thoſe called Thizibi. Rivers of moſt eſteem with them, though not much with others, beſides thoſe mentioned before before. 1 Ampſage, now called Collo, and by ſome Sat Gemar, which divideth this Kingdom from that of Tremeſen; 2 Catuda; 3 Cyniphat, iſſuing from the Hills called Zuchabarus, and falling into the Sea, not far from Tripolis. Beſides which, there were ſome great Lakes; the chief whereof, 1 Hipponites, near Mount Cinna; 2 The Lake of Pallas, or that called Palus Tritonia, where Minerva was ſaid to have ſhewed her ſelf the Inventreſs of Spinning and of Oyl, and for that much worſhipped by this people; 3 Sylura, another great Lake; but not ſo famous as the former, becauſe not honoured by a Goddeſs.

The whole divided by the Romans into theſe four parts, viz. 1 Africa eſpecially ſo called, lying on the Sea, from the River Ampſage to the leſſer Syrtis; 2 Tripolitana, from the leſſer Syrtis to the greater; 3 Numidia, lying on the Weſt of Zeugitana, or Africa Propria: And 4 Byzacena, ſo called from Byzacium, or Byzacina, a chief City of it; the Territory whereof ſo extremely fruitful, that 400 Ears of Corn were ſent to Rome in the time of Auguſtus, and 360 in the time of Domitius Nero, growing on one ſtalk. But this diviſion being long ſince worn out of memory, it is divided at the preſent into the Provinces of 1 Ezzab, 2 Tripolis, 3 Tunis, 4 Conſtantina, 5 Bugia.

1. EZZAB, is that part of this Kingdom which lieth next to Cyrene: A ſmall Region, and not very fruitful; yet the Inhabitants hereof are conceived to be rich, (the richer, in regard they are free from Tributes:) their wealth not riſing from the Commodities of their own Country, which affordeth them little elſe beſies Dates and Olives; but from ſuch Merchandice which they buy of the Venetians, and ſell to the Numidians. The richeſt, thoſe of Meſrata, (a little Province of this Tract) which lieth near the Sea. Towns it hath ſome, but none of note: the chief of which, 1 Meſurata, 2 Sibeca, both upon the Sea; of which the firſt gives name unto that little Province ſpoken of before. Of more note in former times was Phileni Villa, ſituate on the greater Syrtis, near the Promontory then called Hippi, but now Cabo de Surta; memorable for the adjoyning Altars called Phileni Aræ, erected by the Carthaginians upon this occaſion. Some Controverſies being grown betwixt thoſe of Carthage and Cyrene, about their Bounds; it was agreed, that two men at a ſet hour ſhould be ſent out of each City towards the other; and where they met, there to be fixed the Meer-ſtone of their ſeveral Territories. The Phileni, two Brothers nominated for Carthage, were ſo quick of foot, that they had gotten a good way into the Country of the Cyrenenſes before they were met; wherewith the Cyrenians, much enraged, put to them this choice, either to go ſo much back again, or to die in the place. This laſt accepted by the Phileni, who preferred the common good of their Country before their own, for preſervation of whoſe name and honour to ſucceeding Ages, the grateful Carthaginians did erect theſe Altars.

2. Weſt of the Province of Ezzab, lieth that of TRIPOLIS, which together with Ezzab, made that Province which the Romans called Tripolitana. Not much more fruitful than the other, except in Barley, but more commodiouſly ſeated in regard of the Sea, which is here more ſafe for Navigation; the former lying wholly on the greater Syrtis. Chief Towns hereof, 1 Leptis Magna, ſo called, to diſtinguiſh it from another, but of leſs note, and therefore called Leptis Parva, ſituate in the (now) Province of Tunis. A Town of ſo great wealth and Trade, that it was worth a Talent daily to the Carthaginians. 2 Euphranta, called alſo Pyrgos Euphrantia; from ſome ſtrong Tower in it on the Weſtern bank of the greater Syrtis. 3 Cinſterna, on the Eaſtern ſide of the River Cyniphus. 4 Cabis, the utmoſt City of this Province Weſtward; the ſame which Ptolomy calls Tacapa, ſituate at the fall of the River Triton into the leſſer Syrtis. 5 Sabratha; and 6 Hœa; not elſe obſervable, but that together with Leptis Magna they made up that one City, which the Romans called from thence Tripolis. 7 Tripolis, founded by the Romans, and by them peopled with Colonies from thoſe three Cities before mentioned. A City of great Name and Riches, till deſtroyed by the Saracens. By whom rebuilt, adorned with many fair Temples, Colledges, and Hoſpitals; and flouriſhing in much Wealth and Luſtre; it became a Kingdom of it ſelf, but ſubject to the Kings of Tunis, till taken by the Genoes with a Fleet of 20 Sail, and by them ſold to the King of Feſſe. Recovered not long after by the King of Tunis, it came once more to have a King of its own; till by the valour of Peter of Navarr, it was conquered for Ferdinand the Chatholick, the firſt Monarch of Spain: whoſe Nephew Charles the 5th. conferred it on the Knights of St. John of Hieruſalem, then expelled from Rhodes: whom the Turks under Sinan Baſa General of Selimus the Second, diſpoſſeſſed by force, An. 1551. Since that the ordinary Reſidence of the Turkiſh Beglerbeg, for theſe African Provinces; and made an uſual retreat for Pyrats, who infeſt theſe Seas, and do much miſchief to the Coaſts of Sicily, Italy, and others of the Chriſtian Countries.

3. The Province of TUNIS, lying Weſtward to that of Tripolis, taketh up ſo much of this Kingdom, as anciently contained the Province of Bizacena; and ſo much of the Roman Africk, as lyeth on the Eaſt of the River called Gaudilbarbar, the Hipponites Lacus of the ancient Writers. The Country anciently ſo fruitful, that it yieldeth uſually an increaſe of an hundred and fifty fold: For proof of which, beſides the teſtimony of approved Authors, the wonderful, if not prodigious Ears of Corn, which before we heard of, may ſerve ſufficiently. Now indigent, and ſo unprovided of all Grain for the uſe of their Families, that they are fain to furniſh themſelves of other places: the people not daring to manure or ſow their Land, for fear of the Arabians, who ever and anon fall into theſe parts, and ſpoil what they meet with.

Places of moſt note in it, in the elder times, 1 Adrumetum, or Adrumyſtus, now called Machometta, once a Roman Colony, and the Metropolis of the Province of Byzacena; by conſequence, in the times of Chriſtianity, an Archbiſhops See: walled and repaired by the Emperour Juſtinian, and by his Command called Juſtiniana. 2 Zama, the incamping place of Annibal, before his battel with Scipio. 3 Nadagara, memorable for the great battel betwixt the two renowned Generals of Rome and Carthage; not parallel'd ſince their own times, nor in thoſe before them. In which the great Controverſie between thoſe Cities being to be tried, the fortune of the day fell unto the Romans: For though Annibal ſhewed his ſingular judgment in ordering his Souldiers, as Scipio could not but acknowledge; yet being far the weaker in Horſe, and by an Order of the Senate of Carthage, conſtrained to fight in a place of diſadvantage, he could do no marvels: The Romans, with the loſs of no more than 1500 of their own men, killing 20000 of the Carthaginians in the Fight and Chaſe. 4 Salera, the firſt place took by Scipio, after the landing of his Army. 5 Utica, a Tyrian Colony, beautified with an Haven capable of the greateſt Ships; much ſpoke of in the Wars of Carthage, and memorable for the death of Cato (hence ſirnamed Vtican) who here ſlew himſelf, for fear of falling into the hands of Cæſar. It is now called Biſerta. 6 Byzacium, ſeated in a liberal and fruitful Soil, as was ſhewn before; whence the Province had the name of Byzacena. 7 Ruſpinum, made by Cæſar the Seat of his War in Africk, againſt the Sons and Faction of Pompey; as memorable in the times ſucceeding, for being the Epiſcopal See of St. Fulgentius. 8 Thyſtrus, remarkable for the Tragedy of the Gordiani: Of which the Father in this City was ſaluted Emperour by the Souldiers, in hatred to Maximinus then their Emperour, whoſe Procurator they had ſlain in a tumult: but his Party being diſcomfited by Capellianus, whom Maximinus ſent againſt him, and his Son killed in the defeat; but upon the hearing of the News, he here hanged himſelf. 9 Hippagreta, on a great Lake betwixt Carthage and Utica; one of the Towns which held out longeſt for the Mercenaries, in their deſperate Rebellion againſt the Carthaginians; by which the Eſtate of that great City was in danger of ruine, at the end of the firſt Punick War. 10 Carthage, once the Lady and Miſtreſs of Africk, ſituate in the bottom of a ſafe and capious Bay, the entrances whereof were very ſtrongly fortified both by Art and Nature, environed with the Sea, except upon one ſide only, where joyned unto the Land by a narrow Iſthmus, about two miles and an half in breadth, in compaſs 24 miles, but meaſuring by the outward Wall, it was 45. For without the Wall of the City it ſelf there were three Walls more, betwixt each of which there were three or four Streets, with Vaults under ground of 30 foot deep; wherein they had place for 300 Elephants and all their Fodder, with Stables over them for 4000 Horſe, and all their Provender, and Lodging in thoſe out-ſtreets for the Riders of the ſaid Horſe, and for 20000 Foot beſides, which never came within the City to annoy or peſter it. On the South-ſide ſtood the Caſtle called Byrſa, which took up two miles and an half in compaſs: Firſt built by Dido, on that ground which ſhe obtained of the Lybians, when ſhe got leave to buy only ſo much Land of them, as ſhe could compaſs round about with an Oxes Hide. In that, the ſumptuous Temple of their ancient Dieties, Juno Apollo, Æſculapius, Belus, On the Weſt-ſide, a ſtanding Pool made of the Sea-water, let into it by ſo narrow a paſſage, that there was but 70 foot open for the Sea to enter: On which they had a ſtately Arſenal, with their Ships and Gallies riding by it. Of the Foundation and Affairs of this mighty City we have ſpoke already. The Government of it firſt by Kings, thoſe abſolute enough at firſt, afterwards limited by the Senate; and finally made meerly titularly by the power of the People: which unproportionable mixture is much condemned by Ariſtotle, in the 2. of his Politicks. Their Territories, before the ſecond Punick War, when they were at the greateſt, extended on the Sea-coaſts of the Mediterranean, from the Greater Syrtis to the Streits, and ſo unto the River Iberus, for the ſpace of 2000 miles in length: their Revenues anſwerable, and readily brought in, by reaſon of their infinite Trading. Which made the Roman People think themſelves unſafe, whilſt this City ſtood. Reſolved on the deſtruction of it, they ſent againſt it L. Martius, and M. Manlius, their two Conſuls, with a puiſſant Army: to whom the Carthaginians willingly delivered up their Arms and Shipping, contracting only for the preſervation of the City it ſelf, which was faithfully promiſed. But when they had withal given up the Sons of their Principal men, to be ſent to Rome for Pledges of their future Loyalty; they were told, that a City conſiſted not in Walls, but in Laws and Government. Theſe, with the Corporation, ſhould remain as formerly, the Town to be removed ten miles further off, where there was no Sea to thrive and grow rich upon. Enraged herewith, it was reſolved to abide the utmoſt: but they wanted neceſſaries for reſiſtance. That want ſupplied for want of Iron to make Arms with Gold and Silver; the Houſes pulled down to furniſh them with Timber to build a Navy; the noble Ladies cutting off the hair of their heads, to make Ropes and Cordage; 25000 Women liſted to defend the Walls. But the fatal moment being come, a ſecond Scipio is ſent thither to diſpatch the Work; by whom at laſt the Town was taken, and for 17 days together conſumed with fire: The Queen and multitudes of the People burning themſelves in the Temple of Æſculapius, becauſe they would not fall into the hands of the Romans. Re-edified by Julius Cæſar, and made a Colony, it recovered ſome part of her former luſtre; but ſo, that her chief glory was rather to be ſought for in her ancient, than her preſent Fortunes. Populi Romani Colonia, olim Imperii ejus pertinax æmula, & priorum exidio rerum, quam ope præſentium clarior, was her Character in the times of Pomponius Mela. But in the laſt eſtate, accompted for the Metropolis of the Dioceſs of Africk, the Reſidence of the Vicarius or Lieutenant-General, and the See of the chief Primate of the African Churches; who had 164 Biſhops under him in that one Province wherein Carthage ſtood. Deſtroyed in the ſucceeding time by the Vandals, and after that by the Saracens; it revived again, and had the reputation of a City of no mean importance, till the year 1270. at what time being forced by the French, under Lewis the 9th. and thereupon deſerted by its old Inhabitants, it began to languiſh, and was at laſt reduced to nothing but a few ſcattered Houſes, not above five and twenty Shops, one Temple; all the reſt a ruine. So truly ſaid the ancient Poet:

Sic patet exemplis Oppida poſſe mori.

Thus by Examples do we ſee,
That Towns may dye as well as we.

Of chief note at the preſent, 1. Tunis, ſuppoſed to be the Themiſa, or Thuniſa of Ptolomy; of ſmall accompt till the laſt deſtruction of Carthage, by whoſe fall it roſe. Situate not far from the Ruines of that famous City, in compaſs above five Miles, and in that compaſs ſaid to contain 10000 houſholds. Of great Traffick, and well frequented by the Merchants of foreign Nations; chiefly from Genoa and Venice. Remarkable in the Story of the Holy Wars, for the Sieges and Succeſſes of two of our Engliſh Princes; that, namely, of King Edward the Firſt, in his Fathers time; and that of Henry the Fourth, then but Earl of Darby: by both which (though the laſt ſerved only under the Command of the French) the City was compelled to a Compoſition; Lewis the 9th. commonly called S. Lewis, dying at the firſt Siege of it. 2 Goletta, a ſtrong Fort, built for defence of the Haven of Tunis, in a Demy-Iſland, divided from the main Land by two narrow paſſages, but ſo that it commands them both. Taken, but not without extreme difficulty by Charles the 5th. An. 1535. together with the Turkiſh Navy riding in the Lake laſt by it; but again recovered by the Turks about 40 years after, An. 1574. 3 Cairoan, built by Hucbar who firſt conquered Africk for the Saracens, in a ſandy Deſart, about 100 miles from Tunis, and 36 from any part of the Sea, to ſecure himſelf from any invaſion, which the commodiouſneſs of the Sea might bring upon him. Adorned by the firſt Founder of it, with an admirable Temple raiſed on Pillars of Marble: who placed alſo in it a Colledge of Prieſts, and made it the chief Reſidence of his Poſterity for the ſpace of 170 years, who reigned here under the great Caliphs at the Sultans of Africk. Deſtroyed ſtroyed by the Arabians, in the 424 year of their Hegira, but regained from them by the King of Morocco, and ſtill of ſuch eſteem amongſt theſe Mahometans, that their chief men are brought hither to be buried from all parts of the Country, hoping by the Prayers of thoſe Prieſts to find a ſhorter way to Heaven, than in other places.

4. More Weſtward yet lies the Province named CONSTANTINA, ſo called from Conſtantina the chief City of it. Extended from the Lake Hipponites, now named Guadilharbar, to Conſtantine a Mountain bordering on Bugia, which I conceive to be the ſame with Mons Audus in Ptolomy. The ſoyl hereof ſaid to be very rich and fruitful both for Corn and Cattel, yielding abundance of Fruits, and great ſtore of Butter. Rubricatus, by Oroſius called Ordalio, now Ludog, the chief River of it.

Principal Cities of this Province, 1 Tabraca, on the Eaſt; and 2 Hippo Regius, on the Weſtern bank of Rubricatus: both Roman Colonies, but this laſt moſt famous, in being the Epiſcopal See of renowned St. Auguſtine. 3 Bona, the birth-place of that Father, built by the Romans about an hundred miles from the Sea; but ſituate in a large Plain, containing 40 miles in length, 25 in breadth: ſo Rich and Fertile, that the Town flouriſheth to this day; adorned with a ſumptuous Moſque, and never without the Company of Merchants coming from Genoa, Tuxis, and the Iſle of Zerby, for their Fruits and Butter. 4 Thuburnica, another Colony of the Romans. 5 Sicca Veneria, another Town of the ſame nature; by Solinus called Veneria only, and by Pliny, Sicca. 6 Culcua, another of the Roman Colonies, by the Moors now called Cucutina, but Conſtantina by the Latines, and moſt Nations elſe, now the chief City of this Province, ſituate near a Mountain of the ſame name, near the edge of Bugia. An ancient City, but containing ſtill 8000 Families, many ſumptuous Buildings; amongſt which a large Temple, two Colledges, and three or four Monaſteries: frequently viſited by the Merchants, every Trade having here its peculiar Street; their chief Commodities, Wool, Cloth, Silks, Oyl, and ſome ſorts of Fruits, which they exchange for Dates, or Slaves, who are here good Merchandiſe. The City for the moſt part fenced about with high craggy Rocks; and where thoſe want, with ſtrong walls, of a great height, and moſt exquiſite workmanſhip, declaring the antiquity of it. A further Argument whereof may be a fair Triumphal Arch not far from the City, and ſome Hot Bathes, after the manner of the Romans.

5. Moſt Weſtward lieth the Province of BUCIA, extended from Mount Conſtantine to the River Ampſa, now called Chelif, or Sef-Gemar: which with ſo much of Conſtantina, as lieth on the Weſt ſide of Rubricatus, made up that Province which the Romans called by the name of Numidia. The length hereof 150 miles on the Mediterranean, the breadth not above half ſo much. Narrower than Mauritania, as is ſaid by Pliny; Sed ditior & magis culta, but the richer of the two, and the better peopled. The Country of a fat ſoyl, plentiful both in Fruits and Corn, but moſt fit for Paſturage: to which the people were ſo addicted, that many of them cared not for building Houſes, (inſtead whereof they uſed the Hold of a Ship with the Keel turned upwards) but removed from one place to another, as their Paſtures failed them. From thence called Nomades by the Grecians, ἀπὸ τῆ νέμειν, ſignifying to feed or graze. The people of good metal, ſwift of Foot, and well skilled in Horſemanſhip: but better in the Onſet, and to give a Charge, than in ſtanding to it; ſuch as the wild Arabians are now ſaid to be.

Chief Towns hereof (beſides Thurburnica, Culena, Bono Hippo, ſpoken of before, belonging to Numidia, though not to Bugia) 1 Bugia, built by the Romans on the ſide of a lofty Mountain looking into the Sea; by ſome conceived to have been the Thebuaca of Ptolomy, now the chief City of this Province; adorned with many ſumptuous Moſques, ſome Monaſteries and Colledges for Students in the Law of Mahomet, and many fair Hoſpitals for relief of the Poor; fenced alſo with a ſtrong Caſtle. Secured by the ſtrength whereof, and growing rich by the fruitfulneſs of the ſituation, the Citizens began to grow proud and wanton, working much miſchief to the Spaniards by their Gallies, which they had at Sea; till taught more modeſty by Peter of Navarr a Spaniſh Captain, An. 1508. by whom the Town was taken, and the people plundered. 2. Cholla, upon the Sea-ſide, the Chollops Magna (as I take it) of Ptolomy; reported for a wealthy City. 3 Nicaus, ſeated towards Mount Atlas, in a pleaſant and delightful Country: which though interſperſed with many Hills, yet being thoſe Hills are clothed with Woods, yield them good ſtore of Goats and Horſes, and feed the Vallies with freſh Springs, which do iſſue from them; they rather add than detract any thing from the pleaſures of it. 4 Madaura, by ſome called Madurus, the birth-place of Apulcius. 5 Tunudromum, another of the Roman Colonies. 6 Cirta, or Cirta Julia, the Metropolis of Numidia, when a Roman Province, and formerly the Seat-Royal of Syphax King of the Maſæſyli, within whoſe Country it was reckoned in former times, though afterwards laid unto this Province. Situate near the mouth of the River Ampſaga, and memorable for the Tragedy of Sophonisby, the Daughter of Aſdrubal of Carthage; a Lady of moſt exquiſite beauty, and yet carried more Charms in her Tongue than in her Eyes. Eſpouſed firſt unto Maſiniſſa King of the Numidians, but after, upon the Reaſon of State, married unto Syphax; who being took Priſoner by his Rival, and brought to Cirta, the Lady upon hopes of liberty and honour both, beſtowed her ſelf on her firſt Lover: but Scipio fearing leſt that marriage might withdraw Maſiniſſa from the Roman party, cauſed the Lady to be ſeized on; which Maſiniſſa not being otherwiſe able to prevent or remedy, ſent her a Cup of Poyſon, which ſhe drank, and died.

Of theſe Numidians there is much mention in the Stories of Rome and Carthage; imployed by this laſt City in all their Wars, both in Spain, Italy, and Sicil. Siding at laſt with Scipio againſt that State, they did good Service to the Romans in the weakning and deſtruction of that City, whoſe fall they did not long ſurvive: firſt conquered in the War of Jugurth; after the death of Juba, made a Roman Province. Their Kings, as far as I can trace the ſucceſſion of them, follow in this Order.

The

The Kings of the NUMIDIANS.

1 Gala, the Father of Maſiniſſa.

2 Deſalces, the Brother of Gala; according to the Laws of the Country, which gave the Crown unto the Brother, not the Son of the former King, (like the Law of Taniſtry in Ireland) ſucceeded Gala.

3 N. N. a Son of Deſalces, in the abſence of Maſiniſſa, then ſerving under the Carthaginians in the Wars of Spain, poſſeſſed himſelf of the Throne: ſlain not long after by a Rebel.

4 Maſiniſſa, Son of Gala, recovered the Kingdom of his Father; but again outed by Syphax and the Carthaginians, betwixt whom and Maſiniſſa, touching Sophoniſba, there was deadly feud. Aided by Scipio and the Romans, with whom aſſociated againſt Carthage, he not only recovered his own Kingdom, but was gratified with the greateſt part of that which belonged to Syphax. A profeſſed Enemy to Carthage, (the final ruine whereof he lived to ſee) till the time of his death, being then ninety years of Age.

5 Micipſa, the Son of Maſiniſſa, of whom nothing memorable.

6 Jugurth, the Son of Maſtanabalis, one of the brethren of Micipſa, having wickedly made away the two Sons of Micipſa, uſurped the Kingdom, and manifeſtly withſtood the Romans, whoſe attempts ſometimes by force, ſometimes by ſubtilty, but chiefly by money and bribes, he overthrew and made fruſtrate: Et fuit in Jugurtha (ſaith Florus) quod poſt Annibalem timeretur. At laſt being broken by Metellus, vanquiſhed by Marius, and by Bocchus delivered into the hands of Sylla, he was by Marius led in Triumph to Rome. In this Triumph was carried 3700 pound weight in Gold; in Silver-wedges, 5775 pound weight; and in ready Coin, 28900 Crowns: it being the cuſtom of the Romans in their Triumphs, to have carried before them all the Riches and Money, which they had brought out of the conquered Countries, to put into the common Treaſury.

7 Hiempſal, Son of Bocchus King of Mauritania, gratified for his Fathers treachery in betraying Jugurth, with the Kingdom of Numedi; Relieved Marius in his exile.

8 Hiarbes, another of the Maurian faction, preferred to the Numidian Crown, but vanquiſhed and deprived by Pompey, at that time one of Sylla's Captains.

9 Hiempſal II. preferred by Pompey to this Kingdom.

10 Juba, the Son of Hiempſal the ſecond, who ſiding with Pompey againſt Cæſar in the Civil Wars, gave a great Overthrow to Curio, one of Cæſar's Lieutenants; Curio himſelf ſlain, his whole Army routed, ſuch as were taken Priſoners murdered in cold Blood. But being diſcomfited by Cæſar, after Pompey's death, Numidia was made a Province of the Roman Empire.

Thus by the Fall of Carthage, and the death of Juba, came the whole Provinces of Africa Propria, and Numidia (containing the now Kingdom of Tunis) into the power of the Romans. Of which, the Nations of moſt note were the Nigitimi, on the Eaſtern parts of the Mediterraneau; the Machyni, near the leſſer Syrtis; the Lybiæ-Phœnices, and Medini, bordering upon Carthage; the Jonii, Navatræ, and Certeſii, taking up all the Sea-coaſts of Numidia. Such as inhabited more Southwards on the back of theſe, not ſo much conſiderable: None of them to be ſtaid upon, but the Lybiæ-Phœnices, a mixt people of the old Lybians, and new Phœnicians, as the Lybi-Egyptii were of the ſaid Lybians and the neighbouring Egyptians. The memory of all them ſo defaced by the violent inundation of the Arabians, that there is ſcarce any tract, or footſteps of them in all the Country. When conquered by the Saracens, they were at firſt ſubject to the Caliph, or Sultan of Cairoan: after the ſpoil whereof by the Arabians, ſubdued by Abdul Mumen King of Morocco, and by him added to that Kingdom. In the diſtractions of that State, made a peculiar Kingdom by ſome one of the Relicts of the Stock of the Almobeads, who took unto himſelf the Title of King of Tunis, that City being his chief Seat. By him tranſmitted unto his Poſterity, till the days of our Grand-Fathers; when Muleaſſes, one of the youngeſt Sons of Sultan Mahomet, having firſt murdered Maimon his eldeſt Brother, and put out the eyes of twenty of the reſt, uſurped the Soveraignty. Roſetta, the only one of thoſe Princes who eſcaped this Maſſacre, upheld a while by the Arabians, and by them deſerted, was feign to put himſelf into the hands of Barbaroſſa, King of Algiers, and Admiral of the Turkiſh Navy; by whom he was carried to Conſtantinople, and ſo preſented to Solyman, who under colour of reſtoring him to the Throne of his Fathers, conquered that Kingdom for himſelf; outed thereof not long after by Charles the Fifth, appearing in favour of Muleaſſes, An. 1535. But the Tyrant did not long enjoy his Ill-gotten Soveraignty, when his eyes were alſo put out by his own Son Amyda, and ſo committed to cloſe Priſon: Nor did Amyda enjoy it long, diſpoſſeſſed by Abdamelech his Fathers brother. To Abdamelech Mahomet his Son ſucceeded; who being a Child, and his Affairs ill governed by his Tutors, and other Miniſters of State, gave opportunity to Amyda to regain the Kingdom. During which broils the Turks again recovered footing, poſſeſſed themſelves of a great part of the Country, and forced Amyda into exile, who flying to Don John of Auſtria, then newly victorious at Lepanto, invited him to the Conqueſt of Tunis, but he got little by the bargain; for Don John having ſubdued the Kingdom, conferred the ſame on Mahomet the Brother of Amyda, and carried Amyda in bonds to the Iſle of Sicily, where he after died. Nor did Mahomet enjoy it long; for the next year the Turks beſieged and took the City of Tunis, with the ſtrong Fort of Galetta, with all the other Forts and Holds of that Kingdom, made ever ſince a Province of the Turkiſh Empire; The poor King being carried priſoner to Conſtantinople at the end of the War, which was in the year 1574. and the laſt of Selimus the Second.

2. TREMESEN, or ALGIERS.

THe Kingdom of TREMESEN is bounded on the Eaſt with the River Amſaga, (now called Major) by which parted from the Kingdom of Tunis; on the Weſt, with the Kingdom of Feſſe and Morocco, from which ſeparated by the River of Malutha, or Malva. So called from Tremeſen, or Teleuſine, the chief City of it. Called alſo the Kingdom of Algiers, from the City ſo named, ſometimes the Seat-Royal of their Kings.

In

In the flouriſh of the Roman Empire, it had the name of Mauritania Cæſarienſis: Mauritania, becauſe of the Kingdom of Juba King of Mauritania, of which more anon; Cæſarienſis, from Cæſarea the chief City of it, as that ſo called in honour of Auguſtus Cæſar, on whom the Kings hereof depended. More anciently the Kingdom of the Maſæſylia, one of the moſt powerful Nations in all this tract, over whom reigned Syphax before-mentioned, called therefore by Strabo, Maſæſylia, with good propriety; and corruptedly, Maſſylia,

The Kingdom extended in length from Eaſt to Weſt, for the ſpace of 380 miles, but of breadth not anſwerable; is generally of the ſame nature (as to the Soyl and Air) with the reſt of Barbary: ſufficiently fruitful towards the Sea, more barren and uncomfortable in the Southern parts. But meanly peopled, by reaſon of the continual ſpoils made by the Arabians, who poſſeſs the Deſarts; and the Cities of it much waſted by continual Wars. Nor have the People any peculiar Character, but what belongeth to others of theſe Africans alſo.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Guagyda, inconveniently ſeated, as paying their accuſtomed Tributes to the King of Tremeſen, their natural Prince; and contribution to the Arabians, who are here ſo numerous and powerful, that the Kings themſelves of this ſmal Kingdom were fain to buy their peace of them at exceſſive rates. 2 Tigedent, ſometimes famous, and abounding with men of learning; now almoſt forſaken, by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of theſe Arabians. 3 Tebocrit, inhabited for the moſt part by Weavers. 4 Breſch, the Inhabitants whereof uſe to paint a black Croſs on their Cheek, and another on the Palm of their hands: the reaſon of which Cuſtom they are ignorant of, but ſome conceive it to be a remembrance of their Chriſtianity. 5 Ned-Roma, built, as the people do pretend, by the ancient Romans, as an Epitome, or Abridgment of that mighty City, to which it is ſaid to have ſome reſemblance; and that imported by the name, which ſignifieth in their Language, Like to Rome. Perhaps the ſame which Ptolomy calleth Novum Oppidum, or the New-Town, then a Roman Colony. 6 Batha, once a great City, ſince decayed by Wars. 7 Oran, a noted Haven on the Mediterranean, ſaid to contain no fewer than 10000 Families. Powerful at Sea, and much infeſting with their Gallies the Coaſts of Spain; till taken from Ferdinand the Catholick by Peter of Navarr, An. 1506. ſince which time peopled and poſſeſſed by the Spaniards: In vain beſieged by the ſaid Turks, An. 1562. 8 Maſalquiver, a fair and ſpacious Haven on the ſame Sea alſo, and taken by the ſaid Peter of Navarr about the ſame time. 9 Harcſgol, in former times of much eſteem amongſt the Moors; but being deſtroyed by the King, or Sultan of Cairoan, it bequeathed its greatneſs unto Tremeſen, which after grew into renown. 10 Tremeſen, once adorned with many beautiful Moſques, and five ſumptuous Colledges, curiouſly wrought with Moſaick work. So populous, that there were reckoned in it 16000 Families; and ſo well fortified, that it held out ſeven years againſt Joſeph the great King of Feſſe: not taken after that, though they were very much weakned by Abulthaſen, or Albohacen his Son and Succeſſor, under a ſiege of 30 Months. By thoſe, and the ſucceeding Troubles it hath undergone, exceedingly impaired both in ſtrength and beauty. More ancient, 11 Siga, an African City, and a Roman Colony; the retiring place of Syphax and Bocchus, ſometimes Kings of this Country. 12 Arſenaria, another Colony of the Romans. 13 Jol, the Seat-Royal of King Bocchus, after ſuch time as this Country was conferred upon him by the Romans, on the taking of Jugurth: called afterwards Cæſarea, in honour of Auguſtus Cæſar, whoſe Fendatories the Kings hereof were then accounted; or as ſome ſay, in honour of Claudius Cæſar, by whom made a Colony: the Metropolis of it alſo when a Roman Province, which from hence was called Cæſarienſis. Situate in, or near the place where Oran now ſtands, which ſeemeth to have riſen out of the ruines of it. 14 Saldæ, a Roman Colony alſo, out of whoſe ruines roſe Algiers. 15 Algiers, by the Arabians called Gezeir, now the chief City of this Kingdom, ſituate near the Sea, in the form of a Triangle, with an Haven to it; but neither great, nor ſafe from the North-winds, which do much annoy it. The buildings very beautiful; the publick Inns, Bathes, and Moſques, exceeding ſumptuous; every Trade having a ſeveral place, or Street by it ſelf. But that which is the greateſt grace of it, is the ſituation of the Houſes ſtanding in even ſtreets one above another, upon the riſing of a ſteep Hill; ſo that the Windows of one Street, or row of houſing do all along over-look the tops of the other next beneath, which yieldeth to the Sea a moſt pleaſant Proſpect. A City not ſo large, as ſtrong; and not ſo ſtrong, as famous. Famous for being the receptacle and retreating place of the Turkiſh Pirats, who domineer ſo infinitely over the Mediterranean, to the great damage of the Merchants of all Nations that frequent thoſe Seas. Famous alſo for the Shipwrack which Charles the Fifth here ſuffered, who beſieged this Town, loſt in the Haven of it at one Tempeſt, beſides an infinite number of Karvals and ſmall Boats, divers ſtrong Gallies, 140 Ships, a great many excellent pieces of Ordnance; ſuch a number of gallant Horſes, that in Spain the race of Horſes for Service had like to have been loſt for ever; and above half his Men. It long enjoyed the benefit of proprietary Princes, (but Homagers, or Tributaries to the Kings of Tremeſen) till ſuch time as Selimes and Mahomet, falling out, made the firſt, and that an irrepairable Breach in the Government. Fo Selimes, to ſtrengthen his ſide, implored the aid of Hairaccius Barbaroſſa, a noble Pirate; who taking his beſt advantage, ſlew the disjoynted Brethren, and ſetled himſelf in the Kingdom: which he had ſcarce made warm, when he left it to Hairadine Barbaroſſa his Brother, An. 1514. This Hairadine drove the Spaniards out of Bugia, and was ſo renowned for Martial proweſs, that Solyman the Magnificent made him Lord High-Admiral of his Fleet: Which Office, when to the prejudice of Chriſtendom he had fortunately and for long time undergone, he died lamented, and made the Turk the Heir of his Kingdom; the Kingdom of Tremeſen being made ſubject to the Turk much about that time. 16 Tetuan, and 17 Sargel, ſituate Weſtward of Algiers; Towns of Trade and Pyracy.

The old Inhabitants of this Kingdom, when a Roman Province, were the Herpiditani, Taladuſii, Thaluſſii, Malchubii, Maccurebi, Chituæ, and others of as little note; the moſt predominant Nation being the Maſæſyli, over whom (and in that over all the reſt) reigned Syphax, ſpoken of before, unfortunately famous for his tragical love to Sophoniſba: For whoſe ſake, ſiding with the Carthaginians againſt the Romans, he was vanquiſhed and ſent Priſoner to Rome. His Kingdom given to Maſiniſſa King of the Numidians, continued in his Line till the death of Jugurth, and then beſtowed upon the Kings of Mauritania; part of whoſe Kingdom it was reckoned in the following times, till made a Province of the Empire by the Emperour Claudius. Won from the Romans by the Vandals, and then by the Saracens; it followed the fortunes of theſe laſt, while they ſtood and flouriſhed: But growing into many Diſtractions, and every Sultan, or Provincial Governour ſhifting for himſelf, it became a Kingdom, under the ſtile and title of the Kingdom of Tremeſen. The Majeſty of it much impaired by Abulthaſen, or Albohacen King of Feſſe, who brought it not long after under his Com-

Command. Recovering after ſome ſhort time its former liberty, it became a Kingdom once again, and ſo continued till the time of Abuchemen: who incurring the hatred of his People, becauſe by his ſupine neglect the Spaniards had ſurpriſed and taken Oran and Maſalquivir, their two beſt Havens, made an eaſie paſſage for his Brother Abuzeiden to the Regal Diadem. Abuzeiden ſcarce well ſetled loſt it to Hairadine Barbaroſſo, An. 1515. and he to Charles the Fifth, by whom Abuchemen was reſtored, becoming Homager and Tributary to the Crown of Spain. But his Succeſſour Abdulla, weary of the Spaniſh Servitude, put himſelf under the protection of Solyman the Magnificent, as a Prince of his own Religion; to whom at his deceaſe, he left the poſſeſſion of his Kingdom alſo; ever ſince ſubject to the Turks: whoſe Beglerbeg or Supreme Officer for theſe African Provinces, reſides for the moſt part in Algiers, and hath 40000 Timariots under his Command.

3. FESSE, and 4 MOROCCO.

THeſe Kingdoms I have joyned in title, becauſe united for the moſt part in the ſtory and affairs thereof, and of late times making but one entire Eſtate under the Xeriffes of Morocco: and therefore handled both together in the point of Hiſtory, though of a different conſideration in the way of Chorography.

They contain in them the whole Country of Mauritania, truly and properly ſo called; divided anciently into Tingitana and Sitifenſis; Cæſarienſis being naturally a Numidian Region, the Maſæſyli and the reſt of the Inhabitants of it of Numidian breed; not laid to Mauritania, nor accompted any part thereof, till the death of Jugurth; when given to Bocchus King hereof, in regard of his Treaſon, for betraying that unhappy Prince into the hands of the Romans.

It took this name from the Mauri, the Inhabitants of it, when that name was firſt given; the word Tania, ſignifying a Nation, being added to it; as in Britania, Luſitania, Aquitania, and perhaps ſome others; and the name of Mauri given them ἀπὸ τῆς Μαυρώσεως, which ſignifieth amongſt other things obſcure or black, by reaſon of the darkneſs of their Complexion. Accompted in their times an hardy, but a bloudy people; careleſs of life, fearleſs of death; implacable if once offended, their thirſt of Revenge not to be quenched but by Bloud. Mauri ſunt genus hominum ſuâpte natura cædis avidiſſimum, nihilque non facile audent, & deſperatis ſimiles, contemptu, viz. mortis & periculorum. A Character given of them in Herodians time, and it holds good ſtill: notwithſtanding the intermixture of Goths and Saracens incorporated into the ſame Nation with them, and paſſing by the ſame name in the Writers of the middle time. Poſt hæc Mauri totam Hiſpaniam & Provinciam Burgundiam, &c. Dominio ſuo mancipârunt, as my Author hath it; where by Moors we are to underſtand the Saracens, which came out of Africk.

Chief Mountains of this Country, 1 Atlas Minor, ſo called, to difference it from the greater Mountain of that name, from which it is ſeven degrees more North, but ſhooteth, as that doth, with a Point or Promontory into the main Atlantick Ocean, on the South of Salla. 2 Durdus extended alſo into Cæſarienſis. 3 Diur. 4 Phocra, of which little memorable. Rivers of moſt note, 1 Sala. 2 Salur. 3 Zilia. 4 Phuth. 5 Diur. 6 Cuſa; all falling into the Atlantick: This laſt the ſame, as I conjecture, which our Modern Writers call Ommirabili. And for the reſt, we muſt find amongſt them, 1 Sifelmel, 2 Tenſift, 3 Niffis, the names of the chief Rivers, as at this time called.

The old Inhabitants hereof in the time of the Romans, were the Metagonitæ near the Streits, giving name unto Metagonitis an adjoyning Promontory, the Succoſii, Verbicæ, Nectiberes, Vacuatæ, Voli; and on the Eaſt-ſide the Maureſii: Theſe laſt participating of that common name, in which all united. Called by the Latines, Mauri; by the Greeks, Mauruſii: The Etymology as before. Their deſcent originally from Phut, the Son of Cham: whoſe memory preſerved here in the River Phut. To that, the coming of the Chanaanites, of the ſame extraction, ſerved but as an Acceſſory. From thoſe two Fountains ſprang the whole Nation of the Mauri. Governed by Kings; the moſt conſiderable of which, when firſt known to the Romans, was that Bocchus, who betrayed Jugurth his Friend and Son-in-law, into the hands of the Romans: gratified for that Treachery with the Country of the Maſæſyli, (reckoned for part of Mauritania from that time forwards) as Hiempſal one of his Sons was, not long after, with the Kingdom of Numidia. The whole eſtates of Bocchus, Syphax, and Maſiniſſa, united by this means in the perſon of Juba, one of his Poſterity, the moſt potent Prince of all theſe parts: who falling in the African War againſt Julius Cæſar, Numidia was forthwith made a Province of the Roman Empire; Criſpus Saluſtus being made the firſt Governour of it. But Mauritania, extending at that time from the Ocean to the River Ampſagus, he gave to Bocchus and Bogud, two of his Confederates, but deſcended of the old Regal Family. Bogud unluckily, taking part with Mark Anthony againſt Auguſtus, was by Bocchus, who declared for the other ſide, diſpoſſeſſed of his part, (that which now makes the Kingdom of Feſſe) in which confirmed for his good Service, by the conquering Emperour. Juba, the Son of the former Juba, grown famous for his eminent learning, was of a Priſoner made a Prince: inveſted after the death of Bocchus in all the Dominions of his Father, except Numidia: and by the bounty of Auguſtus, a great Patron of Learning, advanced to the marriage of Selene, Daughter of Anthony and Cleopatra. After whoſe death, and the death of Ptolomy their Son, murdered by Caligula, Mauritania was by Claudius added to the Patrimony of the Roman Empire: divided into two Provinces, viz. Cæſarienſis, betwixt the two Rivers Malva and Ampſaga, now the Kingdom of Tremerſen; and Tingitana, from the River Malva to the Weſtern Ocean. This laſt divided into Tingitana and Sitifenſis, (the River now called Ommirabili being the boundary betwixt them) by the Emperour Conſtantine: who leaving Sitifenſis to the Dioceſs of Africk, laid Tingitania (why, I know not) unto that of Spain. Gained from the Romans by the Goths, after by the Saracens, they became Members of thoſe Empires; in the declining of the laſt, divided into the two Kingdoms of Feſſe and Morocco, to the Deſcription and Hiſtory whereof, we now proceed.

3. MOROCCO.

THe Kingdom of MOROCCO hath on the Eaſt, the River Malva, by which parted from Tremeſen; on the Weſt, the Atlantick Ocean; on the South, Mount Atlas; and on the North, the Kingdom of Feſſe; So called from Morocco, the chief City of it; in former times known by the name of Mauritania Sitifenſis, from Sitiphis, in thoſe times the principal City, as Procopius telleth us.

The Country ſaid to be fruitful of all things neceſſary to life, pleaſing to the ſight, and ſweet to ſmell to: particularly, well ſtored with Grain and Pulſe, plentiful of Oyl, Honey, and Sugar, liberally furniſhed with Dates, Grapes, Figs, Apples, Pears, and all ſorts of Fruits: exceedingly exceedingly well ſtocked with Cattel, but with Goats eſpecially; whoſe skins afford a very excellent kind of Leather, and of their fleece materials for the fineſt Chamlets, which are here made in moſt of their Cities. The whole Countrey divided commonly into theſe ſeven parts, viz. 1 Guzzula, 2 Sus, 3. Morocco ſpecially ſo called 4 Hea, 5 Haſcora, 6 Duccala, and 7 Tedles.

1. GUZZULA, the moſt Southern Province of this Kingdom, hath on the Eaſt, ſome part of Tremeſen; on the Weſt, Sus or Suſa, from which parted by a ridge of Mountains called Ilda; on the South, Mount Atlas; and on the North, part of the Territory of Morocco, and the reſt of Suſa. The Countrey rich in Mines of Braſs, Iron and other Metals, of which are made many Utenſils for domeſtick uſes, exported hence into other places.

The People Barbarous and rude, not eaſily acknowledging ſubjection to the Kings of Morocco, and at continual Wars amongſt themſelves, except only for two moneths in the year; which being the time of their publick Marts, and then much viſited with Strangers from other Countreys, they lay aſide their private quarrels, and chearfully entertain ſuch Merchants as repair unto them. Walled Towns here are not any, but ſome very great Villages: the chief whereof, 1 Guzzula, on the Northern bank of the River Sus, whence the name of the Province. 2 Tagreſſa, not far off, but on the other ſide of the water, towards the foot of Mount Atlas. 3 Tedza, inclining towards the borders of Morocco. Of theſe nothing memorable.

2. Weſt of Guzzula, lieth the Province of SUS or SUSA, ſo called from the River Sus, (with which well watered) or giving name to it. Rich in Gold-Mines, the cauſe of continual Wars amongſt the people: well ſtored with Sugar-Canes, which the inhabitants know neither how to boil nor purifie; and on the Sea-ſhores, furniſhed with great plenty of Amber, bought by the Portugals of the people at an eaſie rate. Chief Towns hereof, 1 Cape D' Aguer, on a Promontory ſo called; a place of ſuch importance to the Portugals, that the taking of it by Mahomet then King of Sus (after of Morocco alſo) made them quit all the Forts which they had in this Countrey. 2 Tagavaſt, a rich and wealthy Town; the greateſt in the Province, and ſituate in a large Plain near the foot of Mount Atlas. 3 Teijent, ſituate in a ſpacious Plain alſo, but on the Banks of the River Sus: divided into three parts, each a mile from the other; which joyned together, make the exact figure of a Triangle. 4 Meſſa, or Maſſa, ſeated at the influx of the ſaid River on the Promontory called Cape Gilon; three Towns in one: not much the better for the Sea, and but ill befriended by the Land, as ſeated in a barren and unpleaſing ſoyl; remarkable for a fair Temple, the Beams and Rafters of which are made of the bones of Whales, which uſually are left dead on the ſhore. 5 Taradant, a large Town, built by the Africans, before the conqueſt of this Countrey by the Goths or Saracens: the Reſidence of the Vice-Roy for the Kings of Feſſe, when the Lords of this Kingdom; but more enriched of late by the Merchants of France and England, who have here a Staple for their Sugars. By this Commerce, the people made more civil than in other parts of this Province: the whole number of them thought to amount to 3000 Families. 6 Tedza, more within the Land, bigger than Taradant, but leſs wealthy; the chief Ornament of it being a fair Mahometan Temple, liberally furniſhed with Prieſts and Readers of that Law, at the common charge. Not far from hence the Hill Anchiſa, where it ſnoweth at all ſeaſons of the year, and yet the people go extream thin in the ſharpeſt Winter. Nothing elſe memorable of this Province, but that a little before the Xeriffe made himſelf King of Morocco, it had the title of a Kingdom; and gave the title of King to Mahomet the ſecond Xeriffe, made King of Taradant or Sus, before he diſpoſſeſſed his Brother of the Crown of Morocco.

3. Northward of Sus, lieth the Province of MOROCCO, ſpecially ſo called, the moſt fruitful and beſt peopled part of Barbary; not much unlike to Lombardy in wealth and pleaſures; the very Hills thereof as fruitful as the Vallies in other places. To which fertility of the ſoyl, the Rivers, 1 Tenſift, and 2 Aſifinuad, give no ſmall advantage; though much defaced by frequent incurſions of the Portugals, who have extreamly ſpoiled this Countrey. Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Delgumba, built upon a very high Mountain, and environed with many other Hills, at the foot whereof the Fountain of Aſifinuad. 2 Elgiumba, a ſmall, but ancient Town, on the River Siſſeva. 3 Tefraſt, a ſmall Town upon Aſifinuad. 4 Inizzemi, ſituate on a Rock, ſpacious and ſeated near the entrance of a narrow way leading into Guzzula. 5 Tenezze, an old Town but very well fortified. 6 Agnet, upon the River Tenſift, all ruined except the Fort, and ſome ſcattered houſes: formerly ſecond unto none but Morocco (from which diſtant 24 miles) the Hills and Valleys about it adorned with pleaſant Gardens fruitful Vinyards, a fair River, and Fields ſo fertile, that they yield a fifty-fold increaſe. 7 Sceſſina, where they have ſnow at all times of the year. 8 Temnella, an Heretical Town, differing in opinion from the reſt of the Mahometan Sect, and ſo well-grounded in their Tenets, that they challenge all their Oppoſites to a Diſputation. 9. Hanicra, very full of Jews. 10 Morocco, the principal of this Province, and of all the Kingdom, ſituate in or near the place where once ſtood the Bocanum Memerum of Ptolomy. Once reckoned amongſt the greateſt Cities of the World, at what time it was ſaid to contain 100000 Families: ſince ſo defaced and waſted by the depredations of the Arabians, and the removal of the Sea-Royal to Feſſe, when that Kingdom was in the Aſcendent, that it is hardly a third part ſo great as formerly. The Founder of it Joſeph, ſirnamed Teleſſum, the ſecond King of the Houſe of the Almoraſides; but much enlarged and beautified by Abdul-Mumen, one of his Succeſſors. The principal Buildings in it, are the Church and the Caſtle: the Church or Moſque, one of the greateſt in the World, adorned with many ſumptuous Pillars brought out of Spain, when the Moors had the poſſeſſion of that Countrey: and beautified with a ſtately Steeple, in compaſs at the bottom an hundred yards, and of ſo great height, that the Hills of Azati (one of the branches of the leſſer Atlas) being 130 miles diſtant, may be thence eaſily diſcerned: the Caſtle very large and ſtrong, on a Tower whereof ſtand three Globes made of pure Gold, weighing 130000 Barbary Ducats: which divers Kings have gone about to take down, and convert into money but all deſiſted in regard of ſome croſs accident or other which befell them in it; inſomuch that the common people think them to be guarded with Spirits.

4. North of Morocco, on the further ſide of Tenſift and Aſifinuad, is the Province of HEA: rough, Mountainous, and Woody, yet watered with many pleaſant Rils, and would be plentiful enough in all commodities, if the Induſtry of the people were not wanting to it. A ſort of people little better than meerely barbarous, without all Arriſts, either Ingenious or Mechanick; except ſome Chriſtians, whom they keep to circumciſe their Children; and ſome few Teachers of their Law, which can hardly read. Their Food a Pap, made of Barley-meal, which in ſtead of Spoons, they claw with their Fingers; the Ground they eat on, ſerving for Table, Stools and Napkins. At endless feud with one another; yet so kind to Strangers, that in one of their chief Towns, called Tedneſt, the Gentlemen used to cast lots who should entertain them. A Town of good esteem in former times, situate in a large Plain on the River Tensift: but in the year 1514. almost wholly abandoned, upon a rumor, that the Arabians had a purpose to sell it to the Portugals. 2 Teculeth seated on a good Port, and once very well traded, there being in it at that time 1000 Families, some Hospitals, and a beautiful Mosque; in the year 1514. destroyed by the Portugals. 3 Tenent, a Sea-Town in the hands of the Portugals. 4 Elmuridin, a strong piece, as the name importeth, the word signifying the Disciples Fort, so called, because a certain Heretick in the Law of Mahomet (whereof this Kingdom yields good plenty) retired hither with his Disciples, fortified it, and defended it against the King of Morocco. 5 Iguillingiguil, seated on the top of all, and fortifyed by the Countrey-people (or old African Moors) against the Arabians. 6 Tefetbone, beautified with a pretty Haven, but not capable of any great shipping. 7 Tagleſs, a den of Thieves and Cut-Throats. 8 Teſsegdelt, as courteous and civil, as the other barbarous. At the Gates whereof a Guard is set for entertainment of Strangers: whom if they have no acquaintance there, they are to provide of Accommodation in some Gentlemans house, where it costs them nothing but thanks, and some kind acknowledgement.

5. Northwards of Hea, stands the Province of DUCALA, bounded on the West, with the main Atlantick; and on the North, with the River Omnirobili, by which parted from the Kingdom of Feſſe. Of three days journey long, about two in bredth; thrusting into the Ocean with a craggy Promontory, which some of the Ancients called Vlagium, others the Promontory of the Sun; but by the Christians of Europe called the Cape of Cantin; by the Moors, Gebelelbudie. Populous enough, the quality of the men considered, ignorant both of Letters and all good manners: Yet not so populous as it hath been in former times, much of the Country being abandoned for fear of the Portugals, who have taken all their best Towns on the Sea-coasts, and destroyed the rest. Amongst these, 1 Azaſi, at the foot of the Hills so called, surprised by the Portugals, under colour of making a Storehouse for their Merchandise. 2 Azame, seated at the mouth of the River Omnirobili, the furthest Town of this Kingdom towards that of Feſſe; the people whereof were extremely addicted unto Sodomy, till subdued by the Portugeze. 3. Elmedina, once the Metropolis of this Province; but now for fear of those Invaders, in a manner desolated. 4 Conte, of the foundation of the Gothes. 5 Tic, built by the old African Moors, but Possessed by the Portugals. 6 Subeit, 7 Tenracoſt. 8 Centipain. 9 Terga. 10 Culahuan; all sacked and ruined by the same people, when they took Azamor (the Key of this Province) which was in the year 1513. At which time it is said, that Mahomet King of Feſſe passing through this Province with an Army, to repress these insolencies, at every Altar (whereof here are many in the Roads) kneeled, and said unto this effect; Lord, thou knowest that the cause of my coming into this wild place, is only to free this people of Duccola from the rebellious and wicked Arabians, and their cruel Enemies the Christians, which purpose, if thou doest not approve of, let the punishment fall upon my Person, but not upon my Followers, who deserve it not. With greater piety than could be looked for from a blind Mahometan.

6. Eastward of Duccala, along the banks of Omnirobili, lieth the Province of HASCORA, a fruitful Countrey, intermixt of rich Fields and pleasant Gardens: furnished with most sorts of choicest fruits; and amongst others, Grapes of such extraordinary greatness, that they are said to be as big as a Pullets Egg. Good store of Honey it hath also, and some Mines of Iron: Inhabited by a more civil people than any of the rest, and consequently more deserving so rich a soyl. Places of most importance in it, 1 Exo, an old town, situate on a lofty Mountain. 2 Elvinina, of a later erection. 3 Alemdine, conquered for the King of Feſſe by a Merchant, whose Paramour the Prince or Governour hereof had taken from him: Situate in a pleasant, but little valley, but begirt with Hills, and well inhabited by Gentlemen, Merchants, and Artificers. 4 Togadaſt, on the top of an Hill, environed with four others of equal height.

7. More East, betwixt Hascora and the River Malva, is the Province of TEDLES, bounded on the East with the Kingdom of Tremeſen; and on the North, with that of Feſſe, from which last parted by the River Sebu which on the North-east border of it meets with Omnirobili. The whole Province in form Triangular, of no great either length or breadth, but sufficiently fruitful, and well inhabited for the bigness. Some Towns it hath, and those not meanly populous for so small a Province; the chief whereof, 1 Teſza, built by the old African Moors, and beautified with many Mahometan Mosques; the Walls of which made of a kind of Marble, which they here call Teſza, whence the name of the Town. 2 Eſza, seated on the River Omnirobili, where it receiveth that of Deyme; which rising out of Atlas Minor, and passing by Teſza last mentioned, doth here lose its name. 3 Cheybite, renowned for the stout resistance, which it hath made from time to time against those of Feſſe. 4 Ethiad, abounding in all sorts of Victual.

These Provinces make up the Kingdom of Morocco: infested miserably while it remained subject to the Kings of Feſſe, by the Portugals on the one side, and the wild Arabians on the other. Concerning which last people we are to know, that when the Saracens conquered Affrick, they contented themselves with the Command, and left unto the Natives the possession of it, forbidding the Arabians (with whose course of life they were well acquainted) to pass over Nilus. Elcain, the last of the Successors of Hucha in the Kingdom of Cairoan, having subdued the rest of Affrick, and added it unto his Estate, passed forwards into Egypt, which he had conquered also, assuming to himself the title of Caliph; But in his absence, the Lieutenant, whom he left in Affrick, rebelled against him, and acknowledging the Caliph of Bagdet for his lawful Lord, received of him for his good Service, the Kingdom of Africa. Elcain thus dispossessed of Affrick, despairing to recover his lost Estate, and yet not willing that it should be useful unto his enemies, licensed the Arabians for a Ducat a man, to pass over the Nile with their Tents and Families. On which agreement, almost half the Tribes of Arabia Deserta, and many of Arabia Felix, went into Africa; where they sacked Tripolis, Cairoan, and the rest of the principal Cities: tyrannizing over all Barbary, till restrained at last by Joſeph the Founder of Morocco, (of whome more hereafter.) Since which time, though they lost their unlimited Empire, yet they still swarm like Locusts over all the Countrey, and neither apply themselves to Tillage, or building Houses, or any civil course of life, nor suffer those to live in quiet, who would otherwise manure and improve the Countrey. The rest of the Story of these Kingdoms we shall have anon, when we have taken Survey of the Kingdom of Feſſe.

4. FESSE.

THe Kingdom of FESSE is bounded on the South, with the Realm of Morocco; on the North, with parts of the Atlantick and Mediterranean; on the East, with Malva, parting it from the Kingdom of Tremesen; and on the West, with the Atlantick wholly.

It takes this name from Fesse, the chief City of it. Known to the ancients by the name of Mauritania Tingitana, so called from the City of Tingis (now Tanger) then of greatest note. Called also Hispania Transfretana, Spain on the other side of the Sea, because a part of that Diocess: and by some (Pliny amongst others) Bogudiana, from Bogud one of the Kings hereof, to whom given by Cæsar; by others Ampelusia, from its abundance of Vines. The Inhabitants of it, by the Spaniards, now called Alarbes.

The Country of good temperature in regard of the Air, if not in some places of the coldest: but very unequally disposed of in respect of the Earth; here being in it many Desarts and large Forests, not well inhabited; but intermixt with many rich and delightful Fields. So that taking the estimate in the gross, it may be said to be a rich and flourishing Country, hardly inferiour unto any. The particularities of which are to be considered in the Characters of the several Provinces, into which it now stands divided, that is to say, 1 Temesna. 2 Fesse, specially so called, 3 Elchaus, or Chaus. 4 Garet. 5 Asgara. 6 Erriffe, and 7 Habat.

1. TEMESNA hath on the South, the River Ommirobili; on the West, the Ocean; extended in length from West to East 80 miles, and in breadth 70. A Champain Country, very level; and once so populous, that it contained 40 Cities, and 300 Castles; most of them ruined by the Wars, and the wild Arabians, the greater destroyer of the two. The principal of those remaining, 1 Teyeger, near the River Omirobili, once of greater note, but now inhabited only by poor people, and a few Smiths compelled to live there for the making of Iron-Instruments to manure the Land. 2 Thagia, on the course of the said River; much visited by those of Fesse, for the Sepulchre of an holy Prophet, who was there interred; the Fessans going thither in Pilgrimage with such numbers of Men, Women, and Children, that their Tents seem sufficient to lodge an Army. 3 Adendum, more towards the Sea, but on a small River called Guirla; well walled, and fenced on one side by a Lake or Pool. 4 Amsa, on the shore of the Atlantick, once of great Trade, and well frequented, both by the English and the Portugals, by which last destroyed. 5 Munsor, destroyed in like manner by the wild Arabians. 6 Nuchaida, situate in so fertile and rich a soyl, that the Inhabitants would have given a Camels burden of Corn for a pair of Shooes. Nothing now left of it but one Steeple, and a piece of the Wall. 7 Rabat, or Rubat, built by Mansor, or Almonsor, a King of Morocco, near the mouth of the River Burugrug; and by him made one of the best peopled Towns in Africk: built after the model of Morocco, but now so wasted, that there are not in it above 500 Families; most of the ground within the Walls being turned into Meadows, Vineyards, and Gardens. 8 Fanzara on the River Subu, the Subur of Ptolomy, falling not far off into the other. Mahmora, in the same tract also, once possessed by the Spaniards; near which the Portugals received a great defeat by the King of Fesse, for want of good intelligence betwixt them and the Castilians. 10 Salla, the Sala of Ptolomy, by the Inhabitants called Zale, or ordinary Maps by mistaking, Cale; at the mouth of the River Rebato, which the ancient Writers called Sala, as they named the Town. Beautified by King Almansor (who is here interred) with a stately Palace, a goodly Hospital, a fair Temple, and a Hall of Marble, cut in Mosaick works: intended for the burial-place of his Posterity. A Town much traded formerly by the Christian Merchants of England, Flanders, Genoa, and the Gulf of Venice. Took by the Spaniards, An. 1287. and within ten days lost again: and of late times made a nest of Pirates, as dangerous to those which sailed in the Ocean, as the Pirates of Algiers to the Mediterranean. Whose insolencies the King of Morocco not able to suppress for want of shipping, desired the aid of his Majesty Charles, King of Great Britain: by whom the Town being blocked up by Sea, and besieged to the Landward by the King of Morocco, it was at last compelled to yield; the works thereof dismantled, the Pirates executed, and 300 Christian Captives sent unto his Majesty, to be by him restored to their former liberty; to the great honour of his Majesty, and the English Nation, An. 1632.

As for the Fortunes of this Province, they have been somewhat different from the rest of this Kingdom: trained by a factious Prophet to revolt from the King of Fesse and Morocco, whose estate they very much endangered; sending an Army of 50000 men to the Gates of Morocco. But being discomfited by Joseph, surnamed Telephinus, he followed them into their own Country, which he wasted with great cruelty for ten months together; consuming above a Million of them, and leaving the Province to the mercy of Wolves and Lions. Repeopled afterwards by Almansor with Arabian Colonies: Given about fifty years after that, by the Princes of the Marine Family, to more civil Inhabitants; by whom the Arabians were expelled, and the Province consequently reduced into some good order.

2. Westward of Temesna lieth the Province of FESSE, properly and specially so called. Extended in length from the River Burugrug to the River Inavis, for the space of 100 miles. A very fruitful Province, well stored with Cattel, and exceeding populous; the Villages hereof as big as the better sort of Towns in other places; but contrary to the custom of other Countries, better inhabited on the Hills than among the Vallies; the people making choice of the Mountains for their habitation, as places of Defence and Safety, but husbanding the Vallies which lie nearest to them. Places of most consideration in it. 1 Macarmeda, on the River Inavis, in a goodly Plain, but in a manner all ruined, except the Wall. 2 Gualili, memorable for the Sepulchre of Idris, the first Founder of Fesse. 3 Peitra Rossa, where they have some Lions so tame, that they will gather up bones in the Streets like Dogs, without hurting any body. 4 Agla, where they have brought their Lions to so strange a cowardise, that they will run away at the voice of a Child; whence a Bracchadochio is called proverbially a Lion of Agla. 5 Pharao, by reason of the name, thought by the vulgar to be founded by some King of Egypt; but the Latine Inscriptions therein found, declare it to have been some work of the ancient Romans. 6 Maquille, of more antiquity than note. 7 Fesse, the Metropolis of this Province, and the chief of the Kingdom, supposed to be the Volubilis of Ptolomy, but much enlarged and beautified by some new Accessions. Situate for the most part upon little Hillocks, and watered by a pleasant and gentle River (derived by Aqueducts and Conducts, into all parts of the City) which they now call the River of Fesse, conceived by some learned men to be that which was anciently called Phuth, from Phut the first Planter of the African Nations. A City so beautiful and well seated, as if Nature and Art had plaid the Wantons, and brought this forth as the fruit of their Dalliance. The Founder, or enlarger of it, one of the Race of the falſe Prophet Mahomet, his name Idris, who built on the Eaſt-ſide of the River; that on the Weſt-ſide, being the Work of one of his Sons; both ſo increaſing, that at laſt they were joyned together. To theſe the Suburbs being added, have made a third. The whole called Feſſe, from Fez, an Arabick word, ſignifying Gold; whereof great quantity was found, when they digged the Foundations. Divided into three parts by the River, all of which contain 28000 houſholds, and 700 Moſchees, or Saracenical Temples: the chief of which is Carne, or Carnven, being a mile and a half in compaſs. It hath 31 Gates, great and high; the Roof 150 yards long, and 80 broad: round about, divers Porches, containing 40 yards in length, and 30 in breadth; under which, the publick ſtore-houſes of the Town. About the Walls are Pulpits of divers ſorts, wherein the Maſters of their Law read unto the people ſuch things as they think to pertain to their Salvation. The Revenue hereof is 200 Ducats a day of the old Rents; for ſo it was, An. 1526. when Leo Afer wrote. The Merchants have here a Court, or Exchange, incloſed with a ſtrong Wall, with 12 Gates, and 15 Streets. There is alſo a Colledge called Amarodoc, a moſt curious and delicate Building. It hath three Cloyſters of admirable beauty, ſupported with eight ſquare Pillars of divers colours: The Roof curiouſly carved, and the Arches of Moſaique work, of Gold and Azure. The Gates of Braſs, fair wrought; and the doors of the private Chambers of inlayed work. This Colledge did coſt the Founder, King Abuchenen, or Abu Henen 380000 Crowns. Here are finally ſaid to be in it many Hoſpitals, little inferiour to the Colledges in building and beauty, all very liberally endowed; and about an hundred Hot Bathes well built, with four Halls to each, and certain Galleries without, where they put off their Cloaths when they go to bathe themſelves: and beſides theſe 200 Inns, built three ſtories high, each of them having 120 Chambers in it, with Galleries before all the doors for their Gueſts to walk in.

3. Eaſtward of the Territory of Feſſe, lieth the Province of CHAUS, extended in length from the River Gurngrut, or Gurgugarn, by which parted from Tremeſna and Feſſe, to the borders of Tremeſen, for the ſpace of 190 miles, and 170 miles in breadth. So that it is thought to contain one third part of the whole Kingdom: but meanly populous for the bigneſs, the Country being poor and barren, and the Inhabitants fierce and warlike; more given to proſecute their quarrels, than to Trade, or Tillage. Chief Towns hereof, 1 Ham Liſnan, a Town built in the more Mountainous parts of the Country, by the old Africans. Famous for the Temple of an Idol here worſhipped; to which at certain times men and women reſorted in the night; where, after their devotions ended, and the Candles put out, every man lay with the woman he firſt touched; the extract platform of the Family of Love, if all be true which is told us of them; and anciently, but falſly, charged on the Primitive Chriſtians. 2 Tezza, adorned with three Colledges, many Baths and Hoſpitals, and ſome beautiful Temples; one of them larger, though not fairer than that of Feſſe; in both Towns men of the ſame Trade have a Street by themſelves, for greatneſs, wealth, and numbers of people, eſteemed the third City of this Kingdom. 3 Dubdu, an ancient Town, but not much obſervable. 4 Turert, ſeated on the top of an Hill, in the midſt of a Plain, but compaſſed about with Deſarts. 5 Beni Jeſſeten, neighboured by Iron Mines, in which their greateſt bravery and wealth conſiſteth: the women here wearing Iron-Rings for Ornaments to their Ears and Fingers. 6 Tezergui, ſubject to the Arabians. 7 Adaggia, the moſt Eaſtern Town of all the Region; ſituate in a Peninſula, made by the confluence of Muluia, and Malva. In this Country is the head of the River Subur, which riſing out of a great Lake in the Woods of the Mountain Seligus, and receiving many leſſer waters, with a large and Navigable ſtream falleth into the Ocean.

4. Northwards of Chaus lieth the Region called GARET, extended thence as far as the Mediterranean; and reaching Eaſt and Weſt, from the River Malva, where it bordereth on Tremeſen, to that of Nochor, where it toucheth on Erri and Aſgara. The length hereof 25 Leagues, the breadth but twenty. The ſoyl in moſt places dry and deſart, like the Sands of Numidia: eſpecially all along the banks of the Malva; near unto which from the Mediterranean to Chaus, it is wholly Deſart and unpeopled, not well inhabited in the moſt fruitful parts of it, being full of Mountains; the worſe for the ill neighbourhood of the Spaniards, poſſeſſed of 1 Cheſuſa, and 2 Medela, two chief Towns hereof. 3 Pennon de Veles, by ſome called Velez de Gomera, ſituate on the ſhore of the Mediterranean, betwixt two high Mountains; built by the Africans or Goths; but now in the poſſeſſion of the Spaniards alſo. 4 Jafferin, ſituate on the Sea alſo, founded by the Mahometans of the Marine Family. 5 Tezzora, ſtanding on an Hill, to which there is but one paſſage only.

5. Weſtward of Garet lieth ASCARA, extended from thence unto the Ocean: Shut up on the South-Eaſt-ſide with the great Mountains Zalaga, Zaron, and Gomara, out of which laſt runneth the River Luccus, called Lix by Ptolomy. The Air hereof very temperate, and the ſoyl as fertile; ſupplying with the over-plus of its Commodities the Mountainous parts of Feſſe, and the Deſarts of Garet. Once full of Towns, till ruined and deſtroyed by the wars. A Monument whereof, 1 Gumba, built by the ancient Africans, of which remains nothing but the Ditches. 2 Larache, in Latine Lariſſe, the Lixa of Ptolomy, ſituate at the mouth of the Lix or Luccus, and furniſhed with a good Port, but of difficult entrance; garriſoned when poſſeſſed by the Moors with 300 light Horſe, and 300 Harcabuſiers; but better fortified than before, ſince poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, into whoſe hands it was put by Muley-Sheck King of Morocco and Feſſe, when worſted by Muley Sidan his younger Brother, in the beginning of the Civil Wars betwixt them. 3 Cæſar Elcabir, given by Almanſer to a poor Fiſher, who had entertained him unknown, one night in his Cottage, when he loſt his Company in hunting: Adorned with many Temples, one Colledge of Students, and a ſtately Hoſpital.

6. On the North of Aſcara is the Province of ELHABAT, or HABAT coaſting along the Atlantick Ocean to the mouth of the Streits, in length 100 miles, about 80 in breadth. The Country very plentiful of all manner of neceſſaries, and very well peopled; the Mountains which are here of a great height, being well inhabited. In former times repleniſhed with many Cities, both of the Foundation of the Goths, Romans, and old African Moors, now much diminiſhed by the Wars. Thoſe of moſt note, 1 Azaggen, the Inhabitants whereof by an ancient priviledge granted by the Kings of Feſſe, were licenced to drink wine, though prohibited by the Law of Mahomet. Situate on a Mountain near the River Guarga, about 35 Leagues from Feſſe; and garriſoned with 400 Horſe for fear of the Portugals, who ſometimes make their excurſions thither. 2 Baſra, once a walled Town, and the walls ſtill ſtanding, but very little or no Town in them. 3 Homar, ſometimes well peopled, but now little inhabited, by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of the Portugals, who command that Coaſt. 4 Bauirendo, in a manner deſerted for the ſame reaſon. 5 Alcazar, to diſtinguiſh it from another of this name, called Alcazer Ghir, taken together with Arzilla and Tangier by Alfonſo the fifth of Portugal, Anno 1470. Nigh to which Town the three Kings, Sebastain of Portugal, Mahomet and Abdemelech, Competitors for this Kingdom, were slain in a day. There was also slain at the same time, the great English Rebel Stuckley, who fled out of Ireland to Rome, Anno 1570. Where he was lovingly entertained by the Pope then being, as a good Son of the Church: by whom appointed for the Conquest of Ireland, and for that end furnished with 800 Souldiers paid by the King of Spain; and by his Holiness created Marquiss of Leinster, Earl of Wexford and Carterlogh, Viscount Marraugh, and Baron of Ross. Thus furnished, he began his Journey towards Ireland, Anno 1578. but hearing of these Wars, and desirous to make a party in them, he lost all his honour with his life. 6 Arzilla a Sea-Town, 70 miles distant from the Streits, now possessed by the Portugals. 7 Tanger, a great Town, and very ancient, distant from the Streits about 30 miles, belonging to the Portugals also. In former times it was called Tingis, a Colony of the Canaanites, and by them built at their first coming thither, when they fled from the Sword of Joshuah; testified by the two Pillars erected near this City, which before we spoke of: and from that name caused all this part of Mauritania to be called Tingitana. Made afterwards a Colony by the Emperour Claudius, who named it Traducta Julia; but the old name prevailed, and out-lived the new. Near to this Town, it is said, that Hercules overcame Antæus, a monstrous Giant of 64 Cubits high, as his Legend telleth us. And not far off was an high Mountain called Abyla, opposite to which in the Coast of Spain, was another called Calpe, on which the said Hercules placed his so famous Pillars. 8 Septa, or Seuta, situate on, or near that Mountain, unfortunately memorable for giving the title of an Earl to Julian, who first brought the Saracens into Spain; beautified in the following times with many Temples, Colledges, and Learned men: taken by the Portugals with the help of the English, An. 1415. and now in the possession of the King of Spain. The only Town of all the Estates of Portugal, which in the late revolt of that Kingdom doth remain unto him. 9 Julia Constantia, so called, and made a Roman Colony by Augustus Cæsar. 10 Laxus, a Roman Colony of the Plantation of Claudius, in old times said to have been the Court or Palace of the Giant Antæus. Not far from whence (that Antæus might not dwell alone) the old Geographers have placed the habitation of Gerion, as proper a Gentleman as himself, in a small Island of the Streits, called Gerionis Insula, and by some Erythia.

Kings,

7. Eastward of Habat is the Province of ERRIF, extended from the mouth of the Streits, where it joyneth to Habat, as far as to the River Nocbor (supposed to be the Melochath of the Ancient Writers) by which parted from Garet: A Mountainous and cold Country in respect of the rest of Barbary, full of Woods and Forrests; but plentiful enough of Vines, Figs, and Olives; and not without some herds of Goats, though otherwise not well stored with Cattel. In length 140 miles, in breadth 40 only; inhabited by a race of valiant men, but excessive Drunkards. The Towns hereof not many, though full of Villages: The chief of which, 1 Mazagan, near unto the Streits; a very strong Town, and of great importance, but possessed by the Portugals: in vain besieged by Abdalla the first, with an Army of 200000 men, An. 1562. 2 Mezemme, seated on a Mountain. 3 Beni Jerso, of like situation, once beautified with a goodly Colledge for the Professors of the Mahometan Law, who here publickly taught it, as in an University; the Inhabitants whereof were in that regard freed from all exactions. Destroyed together with the Library of it, by some wicked Tyrant, An. 1509. the books therein being valued at 4000 Ducats. 4 Terga, 5 Togasis, 6 Gebbe; of which little memorable.

Thus having looked over the particular Provinces of these two Kingdoms, we must next look upon them also in the general story, from the time of the Saracenical conquest; First let into this Country by the Treason of Julian, and for a while subject to the great Caliph, or Successor of Mahomet: afterwards to the King, or Caliph, of Cairoan, who extended his Empire to the Ocean. But that Kingdom being overthrown by the coming in of the Arabians, these Provinces with the rest were afflicted by them till the rising of the Kingdom of Fez; begun in the person of Idris, of the bloud of Mahomet, by Hali, and his Daughter Fatima, commonly called the Family of Alaveci; who persecuted by the opposite Faction, fled into Mauritania; where he grew into such reputation, that in short time he got both Swords into his hands. Dying about the 185 year of the Hegira, he left his Power unto his Son, of the same name with his Father, the first Founder of Fesse. Opposite whereunto on the other side of the water, one of his Sons (but his name I find not) built another City, which in time grew into emulation with it; and raising by that means a faction in the house of Idris, which occasioned the subversion of the Kingdom of Fesse, after it had continued in the Family of the Alavecy, for the space of 270 years. The estate hereof first weakned by Abu Tesin, or Texifien, of the house of the Almoravides, or Lantunes, and so weakned, that he thereby gave an opportunity to Joseph Aben, Teisin, or Telephine, his Son and Successor, then famous for bridling the Arabians, and founding the City of Morocco, to suppress that Family: Who killing the Princes of that Line, and 30000 of their Subjects, brake down the Walls which parted the two Cities from one another, united them by Bridges, and so made them one. Drawn into Spain by the dissention of the Saracens there amongst themselves, he added all which they held in that Kingdom unto his Dominions, held by his Successors, as long as they were able to hold Morocco: the Catalogue of which Princes, called the House or Family of the Almoravides, with that of the Race of the Almobades is this which followeth.

The Kings, or Miramomolins of MOROCCO.

A.Ch.

1068 1 Teisin, Texifien, or Telephine, the first of the Almoravides that reigned in Africk.

2 Joseph, sirnamed Telesinus, the Son of Teisin, founded Morocco, subdued the Kingdom of Fesse; and added the Estate of the Moors in Spain unto his Dominions, An. 1091.

3 Hali, the Son of Joseph.

4 Albo-Halis, the Son of Hali, supposed to be the Publisher of the Works now extant in the name of Avicenne, compiled at his command by some of the most learned Arabian Doctors: vanquished and slain by

5 Addelmon, or Abdel-Mumen, the first of the Almobades; of obscure Parentage, but raised to so great power by the practises of Almohad, a juggling Prophet of those times, that he overthrew the King, and obtained the Kingdom of the Almoravides both in Spain, and Africk, An. 1150. to which he also added the Realm of Tunis and Cairoan. 6 Jo-

6 Joſeph II. or Aben-Joſeph, the Son of Abdelmon.

7 Jacob, or Aben-Jacob, ſirnamed Almonſor, a puiſſant and prudent Prince, of whom much before: Son of Joſeph II.

8 Mahomet, ſirnamed Enaſer, or the Green, the Brother of Almanſor. Diſcomfited by the Chriſtians of Spain, at the Battel of Sierra Morena, An. 1214. loſt his Dominions, there being ſlain in this Battel 200000 of the Moors, as ſome Writers ſay; who add, that the Spaniards for two days together burnt no other Fewel but the Pikes, Lances, and Arrows of their ſlaughtered Enemies, yet could not conſume the one half of them.

9 Caid Arrax, Nephew of Mahomet Enaſer, by his Son Buxaf: ſlain at the Siege of Tremezezir, a Caſtle of Tremeſin, which was held againſt him.

10 Almorcada, a Kinſman of Caid Arrax, outed of his Eſtate, and ſlain by Budebuz, of the ſame houſe of the Almohades.

11 Budebuz, the laſt of the houſe of the Almohades, ſetled in his eſtate by the aid and valour of Jacob Aben-Joſeph the new King of Feſſe: but dealing faithleſly and ungratefully with him, he was warred on by the ſaid Jacob Ben-Joſeph, vanquiſhed and ſlain in battel; the ſoveraignty by that means tranſlated unto thoſe of the Marine Family, An. 1270. or thereabouts.

But before I do proceed further with this Marine Family, I muſt again look back upon Mahomet Enaſer, whom I conceive (the computation of the time being ſo agreeable) to be the Admiralius Murmelius mentioned by Matthew Paris, to whom our King John, An. 1214. is ſaid to have ſent ſuch a degenerous and unchriſtian Embaſſage. Which ſtrange name of Admiralius Murmelius, was by that good Writer unhappily ſtumbled at inſtead of Miramomolim (which alſo is corrupted from Amir Elmumenim, that is to ſay, Princeps Fidelium:) An Attribute which the great Kings of the Saracen-Moors did much affect, and retained it long time amongſt them. The Story this, King John being overlaid by his Barons Wars, and the invaſions of the French, ſent Embaſſadors to this great Prince (then ruling over a great part of Spain and Barbary) for aid againſt them: offering to hold his Kingdom of him, and to receive withal the Law of Mahomet. The Moor exceedingly offended at it, told the Embaſſadours, that he had lately read the Book of Paul's Epiſtles; which he liked ſo well, that were he now to chooſe a Religion, he would have imbraced Chriſtianity before any other: But every man (ſaith he) ought to die in his own Religion; the greateſt thing which he diſliked in that Apoſtle, being (as he ſaid) the changing of the Faith in which he was born. This ſaid, he called unto him Robert of London Clark, one of the Embaſſadours (a man ill choſe for ſuch an Errand, if the Tale be true,) of whom he demanded the Form of the Engliſh Government, the ſituation and wealth of the Country, the manners of the People, the life and perſon of the King: in which being ſatisfied, he grew into ſuch a diſlike of that King, that ever after he abhorred the mention of him. This is the ſubſtance of the ſtory in Matthew Paris: But you muſt know he was a Monk, to which brood of men King John was held for a mortal Enemy, and therefore this Relation not to paſs for Goſpel.

But whatſoever opinion King John might have of the power of this King (to whom 'tis poſſible enough he might ſend for aid) certain it is, that he was grown ſo low in his Reputation, after the loſs of that great Battel in Sierra Morena, that not only the Spaniſh Moors withdrew their Obedience from him (as a Prince unable to ſupport them, but thoſe of Africk did revolt alſo from the Crown of Morocco (extremely weakned by that blow) after his deceaſe. For Gomoranca Aben Zein of the houſe of Abdalnad, ſeized upon Tremeſen, in the time of Caid Arrax his Succeſſor; as Bucar Aben Merin of the noble Marine Family (deſcended from a Chriſtian ſtock) did the like at Fez. Setled in his eſtate by the vanquiſhment of Almorcada the Miramomolim, he left it to Hiaja his Son, under the Governance and protection of a Brother of his called Jacob Ben-Joſeph. But the young Prince dying ſhortly after, left his new Kingdom to his Uncle: who aiding Budebuz (before mentioned) diſpoſſeſſed Almorcada of the Realm of Morocco: and afterwards having juſt cauſe of quarrel againſt this Budebuz, invaded his dominions, overcame and ſlew him; and once again transferred the Imperial Seat from Morocco to Fez. In him began the Empire of the Marine Family, who held their Reſidence in Fez, as the firſt Seat of their Power; Morocco being governed by an under-King, the reſt of the Provinces of that Kingdom Cantoned into ſeveral States; the Sea-coaſts in ſome tract of time being gained by the Portugals. And in his Line (but with great confuſions) the Royal Dignity remained till the year 1500, and ſomewhat after. Three only were of note in the courſe of buſineſs, that is to ſay, 1 Jacob Ben-Joſeph, the Advancer of the Marine Family to the Realm of Morocco; the Eſtabliſher thereof in that of Feſſe; and of great power and influence in the affairs of the Moors in Spain, where he held Algazir and Tariffe, Towns of great importance: ſlain treacherouſly by one of his familiar Friends, at the ſiege of Tremeſen. 2 Aben-Joſeph the ſecond, a younger Son of the firſt Joſeph (the iſſue of Bucalo his elder Brother being quite extinct) ſucceeded after Abortade, the ſixth of the Marine Family, in the Throne of his Father; and had added thereunto the Realm of Tremeſen, if not diverted by the revolt of Alboali his eldeſt Son, continually in Arms againſt him. 3 Alboacen, the Son of this Aben-Joſeph, and the eighth of the Marine Family, who after a ſiege of 30 months took the City of Tremeſen, and with that the Kingdom. But not ſo fortunate in his Wars againſt the Chriſtian Kings of Spain; againſt whom he led an Army of 400000 Foot, and 70000 Horſe, with all other neceſſaries: but vanquiſhed by the two Kings of Caſtile and Portugal, with far leſſer Forces; (their Army conſiſting but of 25000 Foot, and 14000 Horſe) at the River of Salado, not far from Tariffe, An. 1340. Depoſed ſoon after his return by his Son Alboanen, who loſt all which his Father and the firſt of the Aben-Joſephs had gained in Spain; their Empire after this declining even in Africk it ſelf: the Kingdom of Tremeſen, and the greateſt part of the now Kingdom of Tunis, withdrawing themſelves from their obedience in the Eaſt parts of Barbary, as the Portugals prevailed upon them in the Weſt. The Kingdom of the Marines thus approaching near its fatal Period, it fortuned about the year 1508. that Mahomet Ben-Amet, a Native of Dara, in the further Numidia or Bilodulgerid, pretending a Deſcent from their Prophet Mahomet, cauſed himſelf to be called Xeriffe, the name by which the Kindred and Succeſſors of that Impoſtor uſe to call themſelves; and being a poor Hermite only (with which Mountebanks and the high opinion of their Sanctity, this people have from time to time been extremely fooled) plotted to make his Sons the chief Princes of Mauritania. To this end he ſent them in Pilgrimage to Mecca, whence they returned with ſuch an opinion of Sanctity, that Mahomet King of Feſſe, made Amet the ſecond of them Governour of the famous famous Colledge of Amadorach; the youngeſt called Mahomet, Tutor to his Children; the eldeſt named Abdel, ſtaying at home with his Father, to expect the iſſue; ſlain afterwards in the War undertaken by the other two againſt the Portugals. In thoſe days the Portugals grievouſly infeſted the Provinces of the Realm of Morocco; to repreſs whoſe inſolencies, Mahomet and Amet obtained Commiſſion: though much oppoſed therein by Muley the Kings Brother, who told him how unſafe to truſt to an armed hypocriſie; aſſuring him, that if they once came unto any power (which under colour of Religion they might quickly raiſe) it would not be eaſie to ſuppreſs them. But this good counſel was rejected, and the War went forward. Furniſhed with an Army, they diſcomfit Lopes Barriga, Commander of the Portugal Forces under King Emanuel; compel that King to abandon all his footing there; they ſubdue Ducchila, Sus, and Hea, three Provinces of the Realm of Morocco; enter that City, poyſon the tributary King, and ſalute Amet King thereof by the name of the Xeriff of Morocco, inveſting Mahomet the other Brother in the Kingdom of Sus. In the carreer of their Succeſſes died the King of Feſſe; and Amet his Succeſſor, an improvident young Prince, confirms his Quondam Tutors in their new Eſtates, conditioned they ſhould hold of him as the Lord in chief, and pay him the accuſtomed Tributes.

The Xeriffs of MOROCCO.

A. C. 1 Amet denied both Tribute and Superiority to the King of Fez, whom he overthrew in a ſet Field; and was after vanquiſhed and diſpoſſeſſed of his Kingdom, (upon ſome quarrel breaking out) by his Brother Mahomet.

1544 2 Mahomet King of Sus, having got the Kingdom of Morocco, united Feſſe unto it alſo by the vanquiſhment of Amet the King thereof; ſlain after all his Victories by the Turks of his Guard.

1557 3 Abdalla, the Son of Mahomet.

1572 4 Abdalla II. Son of the former, had twelve Brothers, of which he ſlew ten: Hamet being ſpared by reaſon of his ſuppoſed ſimplicity, and Abdelmeleeh eſcaping to the Turks.

5 Mahomet II. Son of Abdalla the Second, expelled by Abdelmeleeh and the Turks, fled to Srbaſtian King of Portugal; who together with the two Competitors were ſlain in one day at the battel of Alcaſar Quer, Anno 1578.

1578 6 Hamet II. the Brother of Abdalla the 2d. who added parts of Lybia and Numidia to the Realm of Morocco, not abſolutely ſubdued before.

1603 7 Muley Sheek, the eldeſt Son of Hamet, oppoſed in his Succeſſion by Boferes and Sidan, his two younger Brethren; in which War he died; as did alſo Boferes his Brother. From whom Abdalla, the Son of Muley Sheek had regained Morocco.

1607 8 Sidan the third Son of Hamet, immediately on the death of his Father, cauſed himſelf to be proclaimed King of Fez (where he was with his Father when he died) and having won Morocco from Abdalla, the Son of Muley Sheek, became Maſter of that Kingdom alſo. Stripped afterwards of Feſſe and Morocco both, by the oppoſite Factions, diſtreſſed by Hamet Ben Abdelis a Religious Hermit, who hoped to get all for himſelf, and aided by Side Hean one of like hypocriſie, who ſeemed to him but a ſtalking-horſe of that great Eſtate, by whoſe aſſiſtance he was once more poſſeſſed of Morocco. Theſe tumults on the Land being pacified in long tract of time, and the Countrey brought to ſome degree of peace and quietneſs, (though never abſolutely reduced under his Command, as in former times) a Rabble of Pyrats neſt themſelves in Salle, a Port-Town of the Realm of Feſſe; creating thence great miſchief to him both by Sea and Land; and not to him only, but to all the Merchants of other Countreys, whoſe buſineſs led them towards thoſe Seas. Unable to ſuppreſs them for want of Shipping, he craved Aid of King Charles of England: by whoſe aſſiſtance he became Maſter of the Port, deſtroyed the Pyrats, and ſent Three hundred Chriſtian Captives for a Preſent to his Sacred Majeſty, An. 1632. Nor ſtaid he there; but aiming at the general good of Trade, and Mankind, he ſent a Letter to his Majeſty to lend him the like Aid againſt thoſe of Algiers, who did as much infeſt the Mediterranean, as the Pirates of Salle did the Ocean. The tenor of which Letter, as ſavouring of more piety than could be poſſibly expected from a Mahometan; and much conducing to the honour of his Sacred Majeſty, I have hereſubjoyned.

The

The Letter of the King of MOROCCO to the King of ENGLAND.

WHen these our Letters shall be so happy as to come to your Majesties sight, I wish the Spirit of the righteous God may so direct your mind, that you may joyfully imbrace the Message I send; presenting to you the means of exalting the Majesty of God, and your own Reward amongst men. The Regal power allotted to us, makes us common Servants to our Creator; then, of those People whom we govern: So that observing the duties we owe to God, we deliver Blessings to the World; in providing for the Publick good of our States, we magnifie the honour of God, like the Celestial Bodies, which though they have much veneration, yet serve only to the Benefit of the World. It is the excellency of our Office, to be Instruments, whereby happiness is delivered unto the Nations. Pardon me Sir; This is not to instruct, (for I know I speak to one of a more clear and quick sight than my self) but I speak this, because God hath pleased to grant me a happy Victory over some part of those rebellious Pyrats, that have so long molested the peaceful Trade of Europe; and hath presented further occasion to root out the Generation of those who have been so pernicious to the good of our Nations: I mean, since it hath pleased God to be so auspicious, to our beginnings in the Conquest of Salla, that we might join and proceed in hope of like success in the war against Tunis Algier, and other places (Dens and Receptacles for the inhumane Villanies of those who abhor Rule and Government.) Herein whilst we interrupt the perception of malignent Spirits of the World, we shall glorifie the great God; and perform a Duty that will shine as glorious as the Sun and Moon, which all the Earth may see and reverence: A work that shall ascend as sweet as the perfume of the most precious Odours, in the Nostrils of the Lord; A work grateful and happy to man. A work whose memory shall be reverenced so long, as there shall be any that delight to hear the Actions of Heroick and magnanimous Spirits; that shall last as long as there be any remaining amongst men that love and honour the piety and vertue of Noble minds. This Action I here willingly present to you, whose piety and vertues equal the greatness of your power, that we, who are Servants to the Great and Mighty GOD, may hand in hand triumph in the glory which this Action presents unto us. Now because the Islands which you govern, have been ever famous for the unconquered strength of their Shipping, I have sent this my trusty Servant and Ambassador, to know whether in your Princely wisdom you shall think fit to assist me with such Forces by Sea, as shall be answerable to those I provide by Land: which if you please to grant, I doubt not but the Lord of Hosts will protect and assist those that fight in so glorious a Cause. Nor ought you to think this strange, that I, who much reverence the Peace and accord of Nations, should exhort to a War. Your great Prophet CHRIST JESUS was the Lion of the Tribe of JUDAH, as well as the Lord and Giver of Peace: which may signifie unto you, that he which is a lover and maintainer of Peace, must always appear with the terror of his Sword, and wading through Seas of blood, must arrive to Tranquility. This made JAMES your Father, of glorius memory, so happily renowned amongst all Nations. It was the most noble fame of your Princely vertues, which resounds to the utmost corners of the Earth, that perswaded me to invite you to partake of that blessing, wherein I boast my self most happy. I wish God may heap the Riches of his Blessing on you, increase your happiness with your days, and hereafter perpetuate the greatness of your Name in Ages.

Such was the Letter of that King; whose motion in all probability might have took effect, had not the Troubles, which not long after brake out in Scotland, put off the design. And therefore laying by the thoughts of his future purposes, let us take a view of the Revenues and Forces of this mighty Empire; before the late distractions made it less considerable. And first for the Revenues of it, the Xeriffes are the absolute Lords of the whole Estate, and of his Subjects Goods and Bodies. The tenth and first Fruits of all sorts of Fruits, Corn and Cattel, he demands of course; though many times contented in the name of the first Fruits, with one in twenty. The fifth part of a Ducat he receiveth for every Acre of Land throughout his Dominions; the other four parts for every Fire, and as much for every Head, whether Male or Female, which is above fifteen years of age. In Merchandise he receiveth of every Native two in the hundred, of an Alien ten; and hath a large Impost also upon every Mill. When any of his greater Officers or Judges die, he is sole Heir of all their Goods; and yet advanceth great sums by the sale of those Offices. And in the levying of such Taxes as are extraordinary, he useth to demand more than he means to take; that the People finding him content to abate somewhat of his Due, may think themselves to be fairly dealt with.

As for their Forces, it is evident in matter of Fact, that Abdulla the first, at the siege of Mazagon, a Town held by the Portugals, An. 1562 had no less then 200000 men; and that Abdel-Melech at the Battel of Alcazar Quez, against King Sebastian, had 40000 Horse, and 80000 Foot; besides Voluntaries, and wild Arabians; it being supposed that he might have raised 30000 Horse more (notwithstanding the strong part which was made against him) had he thought it necessary. It is said also that Abdalla kept in constant pay 60000 Horse, of which 15000 were quartered in the Realm of Sus, 25000 in Morocco, and the other 20000 in the Kingdom of Fesse: out of which he called 5000 of the best and ablest for the guard of his person, well mounted, and as richly furnished. Besides these he hath bodies of Horse in continual readiness, maintained according to the manner of the Turks Timariots: and by Pensions given amongst the Chiefs of the Arabians, who live like Outlaws in the Mountains, and up and down in the Skirts of this Countrey, is furnished at his need with Supplies from them. Well stored with Ammunition also, there being 46 Quintals of Gunpowder laid up monethly in his famous Arsenal at Morocco: and yet not able to stay long (not above 3 moneths) upon any action, in regard that all his Souldiers live on his daily allowance; which maketh them, when his Provisions are consumed, to dissolve and scatter.

The ISLES of BARBARY.

THE ISLES of BARBARY, which make up the fifth and last part thereof, are situate near the African shores of the Mediterranean, assigned by Ptolomy to the Province of Africa Propria. In number sixteen: 1 Hydras, 2 Calathe, 3 Draconitis, now called Chelbi, 4 Ægymnus, by Strabo called Ægynarus, and now Guietta, 5 Laruneſia, now Mollium, 6 Lapeduſa, now Lampedoſa, 7 Meſyrus, 8 Pontia, 9 Gaia; all of little note. 10 Inſula Glauconis, with a City of the ſame name in it, now called Goza, and ſubject to the Knights of Malta. 11 Æthuſa, by ſome called Ægnſa, and conſequently miſtaken for Ægates, which lieth near Sicily. Of more note are the five that follow: Viz.

1. COSYRA, now called Pantalaria, equally diſtant from Africk and the Iſle of Sicil, 60 miles from each. In length about thirty miles, and in breadth not above ten: Mountainous for the moſt part, and full of a black kind of Stone; the Soil not very proper for Corn, and void of Rivers; but plentiful of Figs, Melons, and Cotton-Wool; well ſtored with Kine and Oxen, but without Horſes. The people poor; by Religion Chriſtians, and ſubject to the King of Spain: very good Swimmers of both Sexes, and in their ſpeech and habit coming near the Moors. It hath a Town in it of the ſame name with the Iſland, ſituate on the Sea-ſide in the Northern part of it; defended with a very ſtrong Caſtle.

2. CERCINA, now with little difference called Carchana, ſituate near the Coaſt of Africk, at the entrance (as it were) of the leſſer Syrtis: in length twenty five miles, in breadth half as much, but in ſome places not above five. Exceeding fruitful in old times, able to furniſh (as they did) the wants of Cæſar and his Army, when he warred in Africk; Magno frumenti numero Cercinæ invento, naves onerarias, quarum ibi ſatis magna copia, complet, atque in caſtra ad Cæſarem mittit, are the words of the Hiſtory. It hath a Town of the ſame name. Of no great note in way of Story, but for an handſome piece of Wit here ſhewed by Hannibal; who flying from Carthage, met here ſome Merchants of that City, who had there ſome ſhipping in the Haven; and ſtanding in ſome doubt, leſt by their diſcovery of his flight, he might be purſued, pretended a Sacrifice to Hercules the Tyrian Deity, to which he invited all the Sailers, and borrowed all their Sails to ſet up a Tent for their Entertainment; which having got into his hands, and leaving them aſleep, he made on for Aſia; ſecure enough not to be purſued, until out of danger.

3. LOTOPHAGITIS, now called Zerby, and by ſome Gerbe, is ſituate in the bottom of the Bay of Tripolis, divided from the Main Land by a narrow Ford. The Iſland full of Bogs and Mariſhes, without other Water, and in the midſt of it ſomewhat hilly; indifferently fruitful, yielding Dates, Olives, Barley, Mill, and the like Commodities; inhabited by 30000 men, dwelling in low Cottages, and but ſimply apparelled: It had in it anciently two Cities, 1 Meninx, which ſometimes gave name unto the Iſland, called Meninx by ſome elder Writers. 2 Gerrapolis, both now deſtroyed: inſtead whereof there is now one of more note than the reſt, called by the ſame name with the Iſland, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle. Subject unto the Turks, but governed by a poor King of its own. Both Fort and Iſland taken by the Chriſtian Fleet, in the year 1559. for the King of Spain, to whom Caravanus the King thereof did ſubmit himſelf; conditioning to pay the yearly Tribute of 6000 Crowns, one Camel, four Oſtriches, four Sparrow-Hawks, and four Faulcons. But the Chriſtians were ſcarce warm in their new poſſeſſion, when beſieged in the Caſtle by Pial Baſſa, to whom after ſome extremities they were fain to yield; there periſhing in this unfortunate Action, by Sword, Famine, and Sickneſs, 15000 Chriſtians.

4. GAULOS, or GAUDUS, by the Inhabitants called Gaudica, is diſtant about five miles from the Iſle of Malta; to the Knights whereof it doth belong: given to them by the bounty of Charles the Fifth. The Iſland 30 miles in compaſs, well watered, and very fruitful. So great an Enemy to Serpents, and all venomous Creatures, that they neither breed here, nor will live here, brought from other places. The People Chriſtians, but they ſpeak the ſame Language with the neighbouring Saracens. The chief Town is of the ſame name with the Iſland, beautified with a capacious Haven, lying betwixt the Weſt and South, and ſtrongly fortified. Cruelly pillaged by the Turks in the year 1551. who carried hence 3000 Souls into endleſs Thraldom.

5. MALTA, the chief of the African Iſlands, lieth betwixt Tripolis in Barbary, and the Iſle of Sicil; diſtant from this laſt about 60 miles, and from the other 180. In circuit about 60 miles, in length 20, and in breadth 12. Situate in the beginning of the fourth Clime, and eighth Parallel; ſo that the longeſt day in Summer is but 14 hours.

Anciently it was called Melite, and by that name occurreth not only in Ptolomy and other Writers, but alſo in the Book of the Acts, in the Story of St. Paul's Shipwrack; this being the place where he and all his company were caſt on Land; in memory whereof was built a little Chappel in the place of his Landing. So called moſt probably, ἀπὸ τοῦ Μέλιτος, from the abundance of Honey which it yielded in former times; Cicero charging it on Verres, that he came home loaded with 400 meaſures of Honey, and ſtore of Melitenſian Rayments; Jam non quæro unde 400 amphoras mellis habueris, unde tantum Melitenſium Veſtium, ſaith that famous Orator. The joyning of which two together, declare that he had robbed the ſame place for both; this Iſland being a near Neighbour of Sicil, which Verres governed then as Prætor. Nor is it ſtrange, that an Iſland of the Coaſt of Africk, and uſing for the moſt part the Phœnician or Punick Language, ſhould borrow its Appellation from the Greek: many of that Nation coming hither from the Iſle of Sicil, and inhabiting here; and the whole Iſland ſometimes ſubject to the power of Sicilian Greeks, though for the moſt part under the command of the State of Carthage.

It is ſituate wholly on a Rock, being not above three foot deep in earth; by conſequence of no great fertility, the want of which is ſupplied with the plenties of Sicil. Yet have they here no ſmall ſtore of Pomegranates, Citrons, Oranges, Melons, and other excellent Fruits, both for taſte and colour. They have alſo great abundance of Cotton-Wooll (Goſſypium the Latiniſts call it) which they ſow as we do our Corn; the growth and ordering of which Wooll, hath been ſhewn already, when we were in Syria. For the commodity of this Wool, and the Cloth made of it, the Romans had this Iſland in great eſteem, thinking themſelves happy when they gained it from the Carthaginians.

The natural Inhabitants of it are ſaid to be churliſh and uncivil; of the African Language and complexion, but followers of the Church of Rome, the Religion whereof theſe Knights are ſworn to defend. The Women fair, but hating company, and going covered. The whole number of both Sexes, ſuppoſed to be 20000, poſſeſſed of 90 Villages, and four Cities. Places of note, 1 Malta, ſo called by the name of the Iſland, in the middle of which it is ſituate; built on an hill, but counted of no great importance, the ſtrength and ſafety of the Iſland lying in defence of the Shores and Havens. 2 St. Hermes, a ſtrong Caſtle at the point of a long Languet, or tongue of Rock, thruſting out betwixt the two beſt Havens, both which it notably defendeth. Took by the Turks, Anno 1565. but at no cheaper rate than 20000 ſhot of Cannon, and the loſs of 100000 of their men. 3 Valette, ſituate on the ſame Languet, not far from the Caſtle of S. Hermes, (or rather lying cloſe unto it) extended the whole breadth of the ſaid Languet, from the one Sea to the other; and ſo commanding both the Havens. Built ſince the departure of the Turks, impregnably fortified, and called thus by the name of Valette the Great Maſter, who ſo gallantly repulſed their Fury. In this Town the Great Maſter hath his Palace, and the Knights their ſeveral Alberges or Seminaries; all very fair and handſome Buildings. 4 Burgo, a little Town or City on another Languet, lying in the Eaſtern Haven; at the extremity of which Promontory in a Demy Iſland ſtands the ſtrong Caſtle of S. Angelo, built on a Rock, oppoſite to Valette, on the other ſide of the Haven, and found impregnable by the Turks; who in vain beſieged it. 6 Iſola, a ſmall City, and better deſerving the name of a Town, ſituate in another Promontory on the South of the other, defended on the Weſt-ſide by a ſtrong Platform, at the point of the Foreland; and on the Eaſt-ſide, by the impregnable Caſtle of S. Michael; in vain aſſaulted by the Turks, who on their ill ſucceſs at the Siege hereof, gave over the Enterprize, and ſailed home.

The People of this Iſland originally were a Tyrian or Phœnician Colony, but intermixt in tract of time with ſome Greek Plantations, coming hither out of Sicil, as before was ſaid. For the moſt part dependant on the Fortunes of Carthage, afterwards of Rome, till ſubdued by the Saracens: by the Spaniards taken from the Moors, and by Charles the Fifth given to the Knights of Rhodes, not long before expelled thence by Solyman the Magnificent, An. 1522. Theſe Knights are in number 1000; of whom 500 are always to be reſident in the Iſland. The other 500 are diſperſed through Chriſtendom, at their ſeveral Seminaries in France, Spain, Italy, and Germany; and at any Summons, are to make their perſonal appearance. Theſe Seminaries (Alberges they call them) are in number ſeven, viz. one of France in general, one of Auvergn, one of Provence, one of Caſtile, one of Aragon, one of Italy, and one of Germany; over every one of which, they have a Grand Prior, who in the Country where he liveth, is of great reputation. An eighth Seminary they had in England, till the ſuppreſſion of it by Henry the Eighth; yet they have ſome one or other, to whom they give the title of Grand Prior of England. Concerning the original and riches of theſe Knights, we have ſpoken when we were in Paleſtine; novv a vvord or tvvo only of their places, and the Election of their Great Maſter. None are admitted into the Order, but ſuch as can bring a Teſtimony of their Gentry for ſix Deſcents: and vvhen the Ceremonies of their admiſſion (vvhich are many) are performed, they ſvvear to defend the Church of Rome, to obey their Superiors, to live upon the Revenues of their Order only, and withal, to live chaſtly. Of theſe there be 16 of great Authority, (Counſellors of State we may fitly call them) called the Great Croſſes; out of whom the Officers of their Order, as the Marſhal, the Admiral, the Chancellour, &c. are choſen: and who, together with the Maſter, puniſh ſuch as are convict of any Crime, 1. By degrading him. 2. By ſtrangling him. And 3. By throwing him into the Sea. Now when the Great Maſter is dead, they ſuffer no Veſſel to go out of this Iſland till another be Elected, leſt the Pope ſhould intrude on their Election; vvhich is performed in this manner: The ſeveral Seminaries nominate two Knights, and two alſo are nominated for the Engliſh: theſe 16 from amongſt themſelves chooſe eight; theſe eight chooſe a Knight, a Prieſt, and a Frier-ſervant; and they three, out of the 16 Great Croſſes, elect the Great Maſter. The Great Maſter being thus choſen, is ſtiled (though but a Frier) The moſt Illuſtrious and moſt Reverend Prince, the Lord Frier N. N. Great Maſter of the Hoſpital of S. John of Jeruſalem, Prince of Malta, Gaules, and Goza. Far different I aſſure you, from that of the firſt Maſters of this Order, who called themſelves only Servants to the poor Servitors of the Hoſpital of Jeruſalem; or that of the Maſter of the Templers, vvho vvas only entituled, The humble Miniſter of the poor Knights of the Temple.

This Iſland is conceived to yield to the Great Maſter the yearly Rent of 10000 Ducats, the greateſt part vvhereof ariſeth out of Cotton-wool; beſides vvhich, he hath towards the maintaining of his Eſtate, the tenth part of the prizes vvhich are vvon from the Turks; and certain thouſands of Crowns yearly out of the Treaſure of the Order, vvhich is great and rich; and one of the beſt Commanderies in every Nation. And for the ſcovvring of the Seas, and ſecuring of their Harbours, they have many good Gallies, each of them able to contain 500 Souldiers, and to carry 16 pieces of Ordnance, vvith vvhich they make Excurſions many times to the Coaſts of Greece.

And ſo much for BARBARY.

MOUNT ATLAS.

IN our way from Barbary to Lybia Interior, we muſt paſs over Mount Atlas, a ridge of Hills of exceeding great heighth, and of no ſmall length. So high, that the top, or Summit of it is above the Clouds, at leaſt ſo high, that the eye of man is not able to diſcern the top of it. Extat in hoc Mari mons cui nomen Atlas, (ſaith Herodotus) ita ſublimis, ut ad illius verticem oculi mortalium pervenire non poſſint. Yet notwithſtanding, it is always covered with Snow in the heats of Summer. Difficult of aſcent, by reaſon of the ſharp and craggy precipices, which occur in many places of it; the reſt were plainer and more even, of ſuch wondrous ſteepneſs, that the precipices of the Rocks ſeem the ſafer way. Full of thick Woods, and yielding to the Countrys on the North ſide of it, the greateſt part of the Rivers which refreſh and moiſten them: and vvhere it bordereth on the proper, or Roman Africa, of ſuch ſelf-fertility, that it affordeth excellent fruits of its natural growth, not planted, graffed, or innoculated by the hand of man. The beginning of it is on the ſhores of the Weſtern Seas, which from hence have the name of the Atlantick Ocean; in the 26 Degree and 30 Minutes of the Northern Latitude: and paſſing on directly Eaſtward, draw near unto the Borders of Egypt, part of Marmarica, or the Roman Lybia, onely interpoſing. It is now called Anchiſa, and Montes Clari: And took the name of Atlas, from Atlas King of Mauritania, who dwelt at the bottom of this Mountain; fained by the Poets to be turned into this Hill by Perſeus, and the head of Meduſa. Of the Daughters of this King, their golden Fruit, and the famous Gardens of the Heſperides, we have ſpoke already, though ſome remove the place of their habitation more into the Weſt (then by us diſpoſed of) and others into certain Iſlands of the Weſtern Ocean, which we ſhall meet withal hereafter. He was ſaid to have been a man of ſuch wondrous height, that the Heavens reſted on his Shoulders; of which, when weary, he diſcharged his burden on the Shoulders of Hercules; the ground of the fiction is either taken from the height of the Mountain, the top whereof ſeemeth to touch the Sky; or from his extraordinary knowledge in Aſtronomy (as the times then were) whereby he came to be acquainted with the motions of the Stars and Planets; in which Knowledge he inſtructed Hercules, when he came unto him. But for the more Authentick deſcription of it, take it thus from Virgil:

—Jamq; volans apicem & latera ardua cernis
Atlantis duri, Cœlum qui vertice fulcit.
Atlantis, ciuctum aſſidue cui nubibus atris
Piniferum caput, & vento pulſatur & imbri.
Nix humeros infuſa tegit, tum flamina mento
Præcipiant ſenis, & glacie riget horrida barba.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words:

Then flying, he the top and ſides deſcries
Of Atlas, whoſe proud head ſupports the Skies.
Atlas, whoſe Piny head with Clouds incloſed,
Is to the ſtorms of Wind and Rain expoſed.
Now hides the Snow his Arms, now tumbleth down Upon his Chin; his Beard with Ice o'er-grown.

Of LYBIA INTERIOR.

LYBIA INTERIOR is bounded on the North, with Mount Atlas, by which parted from Barbary and Cyrenaica; on the Eaſt, with Lybia Marmarica, interpoſed betwixt it and Egypt, and part of Æthiopia Superior, or the Habaſſine Empire; on the South with Æthiopia Inferior, and the Land of the Negroes; and on the Weſt with the main Atlantick Ocean.

The reaſon of the Name we have ſeen before, given to this Country in regard of its contiguouſneſs and reſemblance to the other Lybia; or elſe becauſe deſcended from the Children of Lehabim, by which that Country was firſt planted. For of King Lybs, or Queen Lybia (the Daughter of Epaphus, and Caſſiopea) and other the like fictions of the Greeks, I ſhall take no notice. Diſtinguiſhed from the other by the addition of Interior, as lying more within the main Land of Africa, the other being partly a Maritine Country.

Of the nature of the Soyl and People we ſhall ſpeak anon, when we come to take a view of its ſeveral parts. Look we now on it as it ſtood in the time of the Romans: when, though not ſo well travelled, or diſcovered, as in theſe laſt times: yet have we more particulars of it, as to the names and ſituation of the Rivers, Mountains, and chief Towns, than any of our late Writers have preſented to us. The Rivers of moſt note, 1 Salathus, 2 Chuſarus, 3 Ophiodus, 4 Noiu, 5 Maſſa, 6 Sobus, 7 Daradus, 8 Stachiris, and 9 Mathiſolus; all of them paying tribute to the Weſtern or Atlantick Ocean. Mountains of moſt note, 1 Mandrus, out of which floweth the River Salatus, 2 Sagapola, which gives being to the River Sobus, 3 Ryſſadius, from whence Stachiris, 4 the Mountain called Deorum Currus (of which more anon) whence Maſſitholus, and Mount Capus, out of which Daradas have their firſt Originals. Then there are, 5 Mount Uſurgala, and 6 Mount Girgiris, from the firſt of which the River Bagradas, and from the laſt that of Cynyphus do derive their waters: and paſſing through the breaches of Atlas (of which theſe Mountains ſeem to be ſome diſmembred Limbs) croſs the whole breadth of the Roman Africk, to make themſelves a way to the Mediterranean. Beſides theſe, more within the Land, we find the famous Rivers of Gir and Niger: of which the firſt maketh the two great Lakes of Nubia and Cheloindas; the ſecond thoſe as great, or greater, called Nigritis, and the Lake of Lybia. Which makes me wonder by the way, that in a Country ſo well watered as this ſeems to be, our Modern Writers ſhould complain of ſuch want of water: as if there were neither Spring, nor River, nor Pond, nor Lake, nor any thing to moiſten and refreſh the Earth, but the dews of Heaven, or ſome Pits of ſalt and brackiſh water not worth the taſting. Ptolomy muſt either be miſtaken, which I hardly think; or our late Travellers not ſo punctual in their obſervations, which I rather credit: or elſe the Rivers which were here in the time of my Author, In his arenarum vaſtitatibus diſperduntur, muſt be dried up and ſwallowed in theſe ſandy Deſarts, as Maginus telleth us; or finally there hath hapned ſome later conflagration than that of Phaeton, to which the want of water may be better attributed than it was to his. Of which thus the Poet:

Hinc facta eſt Lybiæ; rapiis humoribus eſtu,
Arida. —— Which Geo. Sandys thus rendreth;
A Sandy Deſart Lybia then became,
Her full veins emptied by the thirſty flame.

Places of note and name in thoſe elder times, 1 Salathes, on the River ſo named, 2 Bagaxi, 3 Jarzitha, and 4 Babiba, all honoured with the name of Cities. 5 Gamara, 6 Gira, and Nigira, the Metropoles of their ſeveral Nations. Then there were two Havens of ſome good eſteem, the one called Magnus Portus, the other Portus Perphoſius, beſides 43 other Towns and Cities (twelve of theſe on the banks of the River Niger) whoſe names and ſituation do occur in Ptolomy, which ſhews the Countrey not to be ſo unhabitable and void of people, as was pretended by ſome other (but leſs diligent) Writers.

Nations of moſt note in it in the former times, were the Getuli, on the back of Mauritania, a reſolute and unconquered people, Genus inſuperabile bello, as we find in Virgil: 2 the Garamantes, dwelling South of Cyrenaica, and giving name to a large and ſpacious Terrirory, called Vallis Garamantica, ſuppoſed to be the moſt remote Nation towards the South, as the Indians were towards the Eaſt; whence we have ultra Garamantas & Indos, in another Poet. 3 the Pyrrhæi, an Ethiopick Nation, on the South of the River Gir: 4 the Nigritæ, originally Ethiopians alſo, inhabiting on the North of the River Niger; 5 the Odranguli, of the ſame original extraction, poſſeſſing the Country between the Mountains Capha and Thala; 6 the Perorſori, dwelling near the Hills called Deorum Currus; 7 the Mcinaci, at the foot of Mount Thala; 8 the Nabæ, on the Weſt of Vallis Garamantica; 9 the Derbici, dwelling on the Weſt of the Hill Aranga: and 10 the Pſyli, placed by Ptolomy amongſt the Inhabitants of Cyrene: but ſo near the Borders of this Country, and ſo far from the Civilities of thoſe Nations which converſed either with Rome or Carthage; that they may more properly be thought to belong to this. Of a Nature ſo venomous, that they could poyſon a Snake. Inſomuch, that when their Wives were delivered, they would throw their Children amongſt a Bed of Serpents, ſuppoſing that child to be born of an adulterate bed, the very ſmell of whoſe Body would not drive away a whole brood of the like poyſonous Vermine. Others there were of leſs note, which that Author calleth Minores Gentes; many in number, of ſmall fame, and therefore not material to be here inſerted; thoſe of moſt note, the Africerotes, (whom ſome Authors call the Gampſaphantes) honoured with the Attribute of Gens Magna, the greateſt as it ſeems of thoſe leſſer Nations. None of them of much note in the way of ſtory, except they were theſe Lybians, which are ſo famouſed in Herodotus for an expedition they made againſt the South-Wind. For when this Wind blowing abroad the Hills and Deſarts of Sand, had dried up thoſe many pools and waters they had among them; they to revenge this injury, by common conſent armed themſelves, and went to fight againſt him. But they took not the South-Wind unprepared. For he muſtered up his forces, and encountred them with ſuch a brave volley of Sand, that he overwhelmed and ſlew them all. A better Friend was the North-Wind to the Citizens of Rhegium in Italy, and better was he rewarded for it: for having ſcattered a mighty Fleet, which Dionyſius prepared againſt them, he was by the Common-Councel made free of their City. That part of Cæſars war which was managed here, we ſhall hereafter meet with on another occaſion.

Thus having took a view of the ſtate of this Country, as it ſtood of old; we will next look upon it in its preſent condition; as comprehending the whole Provinces of 1 Biledulgerid or Numidia; 2 Lybia Deſerta, or Sarra: and 3 a great part of that Country which is now called Terra Nigritarum. But becauſe the greateſt part of this laſt Country is to come under another Accompt; we will here only take the two firſt into conſideration.

1. NUMIDIA.

1. NUMIDIA, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Egypt; on the Weſt, with the Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with Mount Atlas, which parteth it from Barbary and Cyrene; on the South, with Lybia Deſerta.

It was thus firſt called by John Leo, an African Writer, to whoſe deſcription of all Africk we are much beholding; becauſe of that reſemblance which the people of it have to the old Numidians; which is after the cuſtom of the Nomades, living without Houſes, under their Wagons and Carts, as Lucan teſtifieth of them, thus:

Nulla domus, plauſtris habitant, migrare per arva
Mos, atque errantes circumvectare Penates.

They dwell in Wains, not Houſes; and do ſtray
Through Fields, and with them lead their Gods each way.

And worthily may they owe their Names to them, from whom they borrow ſo much of their Nature: for the People to this day ſpend their lives in hunting, and ſtay but three or four days in a place, as long as the graſs will ſerve the Camels. This is the cauſe why this Country is ſo ill peopled, the Towns ſo ſmall in themſelves, and ſo remote from others. An example hereof is Teffet, a great City in their eſteem, which yet containeth but 400 houſholds, and hath no neighbours within 300 miles of it.

The Country aboundeth with Dates, whence it is called Dactylorum regio, and in the Arabick Biledulgerid, which ſignifieth alſo a Date-Region. Theſe Dates (to ſpeak properly) the fruit of the Palm-Trees, uſually growing in hot Countries, of which ſome are male, ſome female; the firſt bringing forth only flowers, the other fruit: and yet the male ſo beneficial to the increaſe of the Dates, that unleſs a flowred bough of the male be ingrafted into the female, the Dates never prove good, in caſe they bear any Dates at all, as before was noted. This fruit is the chief diet of the people: but this ſweet Meat hath ſowr Sauce, for it commonly rotteth their Teeth betimes. As for the Stones of theſe Dates, they feed their Goats with them, whereby they grow fat, and yield ſtore of Milk. The Air hereof, of ſo ſound a nature, that if a man be troubled with the French Diſeaſe, he ſhall there, without any courſe of Phyſick find a preſent Remedy.

The natural Inhabitants of this Country are ſaid to be a baſe and vile people, Thieves, Murderers, treacherous, and ignorant of all things; feeding moſt commonly on Dates, Barley, and Carrion; accounting Bread a Diet for their Feſtival days. But the Arabians, who are intermingled with them, in moſt part of the Country, affirmed to be (comparatively with the Natives) ingenious, liberal, and civil. The Garments of theſe Numidians, of the courſeſt Cloth, ſo ſhort, that they cover not half the Body: the richer ſort, diſtinguiſhed by a Jacket of Blue Cotton with wide Sleeves. Their Steeds are amels, which they ride on without ſtirrop, or ſo much as a ſaddle; a leather, thruſt through through an hole made in the nose of the Camel, serves them for a Bridle; and to save the charge of Spurs, they make use of a goad. Their Religion, Mahometism, to which perverted (Christianity having once had some footing here) in the year 710. the Azanaghi and other people of those parts then subdued by the Saracens: who held them for a Nation of so little reckoning, that no man of accompt amongst them would descend so low as to be their Prince; but left them to be ruled as in former times, by the Chiefs or Heads of their several Clans.

The chief River which is left, hath the name of Dara, and possibly enough may be the Daradus of Ptolomy. The rest which are mentioned in that Author, rising out of Mount Atlas, and falling headily this way, finding these barren Wildernesses to afford them the readiest Channels, are trained along by the allurements of the Sands; and are either swallowed up in great Lakes; or being too liberal to the thirsty Sands in their way to the Sea, die at the last for thirst in the midst of the Desarts.

The Principal of their Provinces (if capable of a distinction into better and worse) 1 DARA; more cultivated than the rest, because of the River running thorow it, whence it hath its name: 250 miles in length, indifferently fruitful, where the River doth overflow and water it; and of so different a nature from all the rest, that here the country people have some scattered Villages, the better sort their several Castles. 2 PESCARA, so called from the chief Town of it: exceedingly infested with Scorpions; the sting whereof is present death. 3 FIGHIG, so called from the chief Town also, inhabited by an industrious and witty people (in respect of the rest) some of which betake themselves to Merchandise; some to the study of their Law, which they study at Fes, and grow rich upon it. 4 TEGORARIN, a large Region, and well inhabited, better than any except Dara; as having in it 50 Castles or Gentlemens Houses, and 100 Villages. The People wealthy, in regard of the great Trade which they drive with the Negroes; and pretty good Husbands in manuring their land, on which they are forced to lay much soil; and will therefore let some of it Rent free to strangers, reserving only the dung of themselves and their Camel. 5 BILEDULGERID, specially so called, abundantly fruitful in Dates, whence it had the name; but destitute of Corn, by reason of the extream driness of the soil: and yet hath in it many Towns of good note among them. Of less note, 6 Tesset, 7 Segelmes, 8 Zeb, 9 Tebelbeti, and 10 Fessen, so called from the chiefest of their Towns and Villages.

Towns of most note both now and in former times, besides those spoken of before, 1 Timugedit, in the Province of Dara, the birth-place of Mahomet Ben Amet and his three Sons, the Founders of the Xeriffian Empire. 2 Taffilete, in the said Province, to which place Mahomet the second of these Sons, and second King of Morocco, of that Family, confined his elder Brother Amet, having took him prisoner, Anno 1544. 3 Teffet, a great Town of 400 houses, but so poorly neighboured, that there is no other inhabited place within 300 miles of it; but of that before. 4 Techort, the Inhabitants whereof are very courteous to strangers, whom they entertain at free cost; and choose rather to marry their daughters to them, than to any of the Natives. 5 Eboacah, the most Eastern Town in all this Country, distant about 100 miles from the Borders of Egypt 6 Debris, one of the chief Cities of the Garamantes, of great renown in former times for the Wells or Fountains of the Sun: The Water whereof being lukewarm at the Sun rising, cooled more and more till noon, and was then very cold, and so continued until midnight; afterwards by degrees growing hotter and hotter; as if it had a natural Antipathy with the Sun, hottest when that was furthest off; and cold when nearest. 7 Masuche, seated on a Rock, garisoned by Jugurth for a place of refuge, but taken by Marius in the prosecution of that War. 8 Cupsa, the chief City of all this Tract, said to be built by Hercules; but questionless of very great strength; anguibus areniſque vallata, made inaccessible (saith the Historian) by the thick Sands, and multitude of Serpents which were harboured in them; but easily forced by Marius in his wars with Jugurth, and utterly destroyed by Cæsar in his war against Juba.

It seems by this, that those people neighbouring Mount Atlas, were much at the disposal of the Kings of Mauritania, in the times foregoing, and so they have been also in these latter times. For though neglected by the Romans, who thought it an high point of wisdom not to extend their Empire beyond that Mountain; yet the Saracens had not long possessed themselves of those parts of Barbary, which was in the year 698; but within twelve years (An. 710.) they subdued this Country, and planted their Religion in it, though not themselves. Nor was Amet, the first Xeriffe of Morocco, warm in that estate, when he thought it best for him to secure himself in it by the conquest of this: to whose Successors, the Chiefs of the Tribes hereof render some acknowledgments.

2. LYBIA DESERTA.

2. LYBIA DESERTA, is bounded on the North with Numidia, or Biledulgerid to which the South, with the Land of Negroes wholly; and on the West with Gulata, another Province of these Negroes, interposed betwixt it and the Atlantick.

The reason of the name of Lybia we have had before. To which Deserta was added upon very good reasons, as well to difference it from the other Lybia, a Province of Egypt, as to express the barren and sandy condition of it: in which respect by the Arabians called Sarra, signifying in their language a rude and inhabitable Desart, as this Country is. So truly such, that men may travel in it eight days together without finding Water, or seeing any tree, and no grass at all. The water which they have is drawn out of Pits, exceeding brackish; and many times those Pits so covered with the Sands, that men die for thirst: the Merchants therefore carrying their water with them on the backs of Camels; which if it fail, they kill their Camels, & drink a water which they wring out of their guts. And yet as dangerous and uncomfortable as these Deserts be, they are very much travelled by the Merchants of Fes and Tremesen, trading to Agades and Tombutum, in the Land of Negroes.

The People differ not much from the Numidians in shape or qualities; but if a worse quality, it must be the Lybian. They did once worship a God called Pasaphon, who when he lived, taught divers Birds which he caught, and then set at liberty, to say these words, viz. Pasaphon is a great God; which the simple people hearing, and admiring at it, afforded him Divine honours. Converted at last to the Christian Faith, they remained a while in the profession of the Gospel: exterminated by the Saracens, about the year 710. who having added Numidia or Biledulgerid to their former conquests, planted their Superstitions in this Country also.

This Country is divided (as others into Provinces) into five great Deserts, to which those of less note are to be referred.

1. ZANHAGA, beginning at the Borders of Gualata, (interposed betwixt it and the Atlantick Ocean) and extending Eastward to the Salt-pits of Tegaza; having on the South, Gualata and Tombutum in the Land of Negroes; so destitute of water, that there is one pit only at the end of each hundred mile, brackish and unwholesom; and in the Desarts of Azaoad and Araoan, which are parts of this, but one in an 150 or 200 miles riding.

2. ZUENZIGA, extended from the Salt-pits of Tegaza Eastward, to the Desart of Targa: bounded on the North with Segelmess and Tebelbaty, Numidian Provinces; and on the South, with the Desarts of Ghir and Guber. So void of water, (especially in that part thereof which is called Goguden) that in Nine days Travel there is not so much as one drop to be seen, but what they carry on their Camels.

3. TARGA, extended East-ward to the Desart of Ighidi, and reaching from Tegerarin in the North, to the Desart of Agadez in the South, the best conditioned part of all this Country, well watered, of a temperate Air, and a Soyl reasonably fruitful. In length from North to South 300 miles, and liberally stored with Manna, which they gather into little Vessels, and carry to Agadez to sell. Mingled in water, or with Pottage, it is very cooling; and drank of in their Feasts, as a special dainty.

4. LEMBTA, extendeth from the Desarts of Ighidi, unto that of Bordea.

5. BORDEA, which reacheth to the borders of Nubia. Of these two there is little to be said in several, but that this last was lately discovered by one Hamar, a guide to a Caravan of Merchants; who blinded with the Sands, wandered out of his way, and causing Sand to be given him at every twenty miles end, found by the smell at last that they begun to draw nigh some inhabited place; and told them of it forty miles before they came to it.

Cities of Note we hope for none, where we find no Water. Of such as go for Cities here, the most considerable, 1 Tegaza, rich in veins of Salt, resembling Marble; which the Inhabitants, being twenty days distant from any habitation, and consequently many times in danger to die for famine, exchange Victuals with the Merchants of Tombutum, who come hither for it. Much troubled with the South-Wind, which doth so drive the Sands upon them, that it causeth many of them to lose their sight. 2 Huaden, or Hoden, a known resting place, and a great refreshment to the Merchant in the midst of these Desarts. 3 Guargata, on the brink of a Lake, fed by a River of hot Water; affirmed to be a Town of elegant building, and inhabited by a wealthy people. 4 Toberaum, of little note, but that it serveth for a Stage or baiting-place to the weary Traveller. Of which kind there are said to be others at the extremities or ends of each several Desart; the Havens of such men as sail in those Sandy Seas; but not else observable.

Nor is there much, if any thing observable of them in the way of Story, but that not looked after by any of the great Conquerours, either Greeks or Romans, much of the Country was possessed by Arabian Colonies, (men fit enough to plant in such barbarous Nations) at such time as the Saracens planted their Religion here. The Government of the Country since, as it was before, by the Chiefs of their several Clans or Families, who as they know no Law themselves, so do the People shew as much ignorance of it in their lives and actions, differing but little from brute Beasts, more then in shape and speech.

And so much for LYBIA INTERIOR.

OF TERRA NIGRITARUM.

TERRA NIGRITARUM, or THE LAND OF NEGROES, is bounded on the East, with Æthiopia Superior; on the West, with the Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with Lybia Deserta; and on the South, with the Æthiopick Ocean, and part of Æthiopia Inferior. So called from the Nigritæ, the chief of the Nations here inhabiting in the time of Ptolomy, and they so named from the River Niger, of which more anon.

The Country very hot by reason of its situation under the Torrid Zone; yet very well inhabited, full of people, and in some places always green: well watered, and exceeding fruitful, specially in those parts which lie within the compass of the overflowings of the River Niger; and on the further side of the River Sanaga: abundantly well stored both with Corn, Cattel, and Garden-ware for the use of their Kitchins; well Wooded, and those Woods well furnished with Elephants and other Beasts, both wild and tame. Their greatest wants (but such a want as may be born with) is the want of Fruit-Trees; few of which they have; and those they have, bear one kind of Fruit onely, which is like the Chesnut, but somewhat bitterer. Rain here doth neither hurt nor help; their greatest welfare consisting in the overflowings of Niger; as that of Egypt in the Inundations of Nile. In some parts liberally enriched with Mines both of Gold and Silver; very fine and pure: so that had not the Portugals affected the honour of discovering New Worlds, as much as Wealth, they might have made as rich a Factory here, as at the Indies.

The Inhabitants, till the coming of the Portugals thither, were for the most part so rude and barbarous, that they seem to want that use of Reason which is peculiar unto Man; of little Wit, and destitute of all Arts and Sciences; prone to Luxury, and for the greatest part Idolaters, though not without some small admixture of Mahometans. When the Portugals first sailed into these Coasts, the People hereof took the Ships for great Birds with white Wings: and after, upon better acquaintance, they could not be brought to believe, but that the Eyes which were casually painted on the Beaks of the Ships, were the Eyes by which they saw how to direct themselves in their course. Guns seemed to them, for their hideous noise, to be the work of the Devil; and for Bag-pipes, they took them to be living creatures; neither when they had been permitted to feel them, would they be perswaded but that they were the work of Gods own hands. The very ry Nobles (if ſo noble a name may without offence be given to ſuch blockiſh people) are ſo dull and ſtupid, that they are ignorant of all things which belong to Civil Society: and yet ſo reverent of their King, that when they are in his preſence, they never look him in the face, but ſit flat on their buttock, with their elbows on their knees, and their hands on their faces. They uſe to anoint their hair with the fat of Fiſhes, which makes them ſtink more wretchedly than they would do otherwiſe. Of Complexion they are for the moſt part Cole-black, whence the name of Negroes; but on the South-ſide of the River Senaga, they are only Tawny: the Blacks ſo much in love with their own complexion, that they uſe to paint the Devil White; which I find thus verſified:

The Land of Negroes is not far from thence,
Never extended to th' Atlantick Main;
Wherein the Black Prince keeps his reſidence,
Attended by his Jetty-coloured Train:
Who in their Native Beauty moſt delight,
And in contempt do paint the Devil White.

They have tried all Religions, but agree in none. Idolaters at the firſt, as others the Deſcendants of Cham: Afterwards it is ſaid, that they received the Rites and Religion of the Jews, (but the time and occaſion of it I do no where find) in which they continued very long: But that being worn out at the laſt, Chriſtianity prevailed in ſome Kingdoms of it. In the year 973. Mahometiſme began to get ground amongſt them, by the diligence and zeal of ſome of the Preachers of that Law: the firſt who were ſeduced that way, being thoſe of Melli: after which Tombuto, and then Gualata, were infected with the ſame poyſon alſo. In the end, all the reſt of this Countrey followed their example, except the Kingdom of Borneo, ſome part of Nubia, and the Coaſts of the Atlantick Ocean, which continue in their ancient Gentiliſm: Chriſtianity being confined to a corner of Nubia (if ſtill there remaining) and ſome few Garriſons belonging to the Crown of of Portugal. And as they are of different Religions, ſo are they alſo of ſeveral Languages: thoſe of Gualata, Guinea, Tombutum, Melli, and Gogonsi, ſpeaking the Language called Sungai; the Guberio, Comonei, Cheſene, and Gangretes, &c. that called Guber: Gualata, a language of its own: and thoſe of Nubia, once reſembling the Arabick, Chaldean and Egyptian.

Mountains of moſt note in it, in the former times, were thoſe of 1 Arvalites, and 2 Arangus, and 3 that called Deorum Currus; this laſt ſuppoſed to be the ſame which is now called Puntæ de Lopes Gonſales, but that more probably, which they now call Cabo de Sierra Leona, a large Promontory, thruſting it ſelf into the Sea; diſcerned afar off by the Sailer and the Country people, as well by reaſon of his height, reaching to the Clouds, as the continual Lightnings and Thunders which do iſſue thence.

Rivers of moſt note, beſides Nile, which watereth it on the Eaſt, 1 Senaga, or Canaga, which riſeth out of the Lake of Guoga, ſuppoſed to be the ſame which Ptolomy calleth Lacum Chelonidem. And if ſo, then muſt this be the River Gir, of which he ſaith, that having fallen into that Lake, and there ſwallowed up, it thence produced another River, whoſe name he telleth not; little inferiour unto Nilus, for the length of its courſe, the variety of ſtrange Creatures which are bred therein, or the diſtinction which it maketh in the face of this Country: the people on the one ſide of it being Black, on the other Tawny; the ſoil on the one ſide very barren, on the other fruitful. In the end, having run his race, he falleth into the Atlantick by two great Out-lets. 2 Niger, a River better known to Ptolomy by name than nature; now found to have its riſe from a great Lake, within two degrees of the Æquinoctial; whence running Northwards for a time, he hideth himſelf under ground for the ſpace of 60 miles together: when riſing up again, and making a great Lake called the Lake of Borneo, he bendeth his courſe directly Weſtward; and taking in many leſs Channels, he teareth the Earth into many Iſlands, and at laſt falleth into the Sea. Of as long courſe, and the ſame wondrous nature as the River Nilus. For from the fifteenth day of June it over-floweth all the adjacent fields, the ſpace of 40 days together; and in ſo many more, recollecteth his Waters into their proper Channels: the whole Country being indebted to theſe inundations for its fertility, which otherwiſe could be but ſmall, ſince the drineſs of the Soil can afford no exhalations, whereby Clouds may be generated, and the Earth refreſhed with moiſtures, or revived with dews.

Chief Cities of this Country in the time of Ptolomy, 1 Nigira, the Metropolis of the Country, 2 Panagra, 3 Malachath, 4 Anygath, 5 Thumondacana, 6 Sulnce, and others, to the number of 17 in all; ſituate all along the courſe of the River Niger: Of all which we have nothing now remaining but the ſituation and the names, which that Author giveth us. So that the memory of all the ancient Towns and People being quite defaced, we muſt look upon it now as it ſtandeth divided at this time into ſeveral kingdoms, 25 at the leaſt, in all, (ſome ſay many more) the chief of which are theſe that follow.

1 ORA ANTEROSA, a large Tract of Ground on the Weſtern Ocean, extended from Cape Blanco to the River Carnuga, ſandy and barren, but reaſonably well peopled. The Inhabitants hereof called Azanhagi, were accounted formerly very rude and barbarous, much civilized ſince the Portugals and other Chriſtian Nations began to trade there; of middle ſtature, complexioned between black and aſh-colour; great liers, very treacherous, poor, and parſimonious, and very patient in extreams both of heat and hunger. The chief Towns, 1 Porto di Dio (we may call it Gods Port) and 2 Porto del Riſcatto, two frequented Havens, thus named occaſionally by the Portugueze, at their firſt coming thither. 3 Arquin, a ſtrong Fortreſs of the Portugals, ſituate on or near the Promontory now called Cape Blanco; and giving name unto ſome Iſlands, five or ſix in number, lying near unto it, called the Iſles of Arquin; inhabited by a barbarous people, named the Azanhays, but of no great note. Theſe Coaſts diſcovered firſt by the Portugals, Anno 1452. under the Conduct of Prince Henry, Son of John the Firſt, or by his encouragement and directions.

2 GUALATA, diſtant from the Ocean 100 miles, (the Province of Ora Anteroſa being interpoſed) is but a ſmall Country, though a Kingdom; containing in it but three Burrough-Towns, with ſome Territories of ground and perty Hamlets belonging to them. Fruitful only in Dates, Mill, and Pulſe; but of theſe two laſt no great abundance. The Inhabitants Coal-black, hoſpitable towards Strangers to their power, but poor and miſerable; without Laws, ſetled form of Government, Gentry and Judges.

3 AGADEZ, bordering on Targa, one of the five Deſarts of Lybia; the people of it generally given to grazing: their Houſes made of green Boughs, which upon every change of Paſture they carry with them. So that we are to look for few Towns among them, but theſe movable Villages. One of good note it hath, called Agadez, by the name of the Country, inhabited for the moſt part by Merchants Strangers, who drive a great Trade betwixt this and Tremeſen. The Town well walled, the Houſes of a better building than the Countrey promiſeth; the people people civiler, and more fair conditioned than the reſt of the Negroes; ſeated commodiouſly on a River which falleth into the Senaga, and by that means hath correſpondence with the Ocean alſo. The King hereof a Tributary to the King of Tombuto, payeth him 15000 Crowns of Annual Tribute.

4 CANO, a large Province on this ſide of the River Canaga, full of Woods, Mountainous, and in ſome parts Deſart; but plentiful enough of Corn, Rice, Citrons and Pomegranates, with good ſtore of Cotton-Wooll. Well watered, beſides that great River, with ſome leſſer Streams. Sufficiently populous, and ſtored with good Towns and Villages, the habitations of the Shepherds and Husbandmen, as the chief Town called Cano is of wealthy Merchants. This the Seat-Royal of their King, a Tributary alſo unto him of Tombuto, environed with a Wall, built of a Chalk-ſtone, as moſt part of the Houſes are.

5 CASENA, on the Eaſt of Cano, but leſs fruitful far; the Country over-grown with vaſt Woods, and the ſoil untractable, affording only Mill and Barley, but of that good plenty. The people as black as any Coal, with great Noſes, and moſt prominent Lips. Their Houſes very poor and mean, and their Towns accordingly, none of them numbring more than 300 Families.

6 SANAGA, lying on the other ſide of that River, from which thus named; extendeth to the Atlantick Ocean, as far as to the Promontory which by Ptolomy named Arſinarium, is now called Cape Vert, or Caput Viride. The Country full of rich Paſtures, goodly Trees, and moſt ſorts of Fruits; plentiful enough of Mill and Pulſe, but ill provided of other Corn, and no Grapes at all. Well watered both with Lakes and Rivers. No tame Beaſts about their Fields, but Goats, Cows, and Oxen; of Lyons, Leopards, Wolves, and Elephants, too great a plenty. The people extream black, much given to lying, treacherous, very full of talk, exceſſively venerous, and extream jealous. A King they have, but ſuch a one as holdeth but by Courteſie onely, having no certain Rents or Revenues, but what is given by his Nobles.

7 GAMBRA, or GAMBEA, a ſmall Kingdom on the River ſo named, but bordering in ſome places on the Atlantick. In thoſe parts very pleaſant, the Trees always flouriſhing, the Air very hot; in other parts of the ſame nature with Sanaga, but that this affords good ſtore of Rice, which the other doth not.

8 TOMBUTUM, on the further ſide of the River Sanaga: exceeding plentiful of Corn, Cattel, Milk, and Butter. Deſtitute of Salt, but what they buy of foreign Merchants at exceſſive rates; and ſmall ſtore of Horſes. Well watered by a Branch alſo of the River Niger, and many Wells of purpoſe made to receive ſuch Waters as by Artificial Dikes and Channels are derived from both. The people courteous, rich and pleaſant, ſpending whole days and nights in ſinging and dancing. Their food, Fleſh, Butter, Milk, and Fiſh, which they mingle together, and make it neither toothſome nor wholſome. The chief Towns, 1 Tombuto, which gives name to this Kingdom, ſituate about twelve miles from a branch of the Niger, and founded by the Saracens or Arabians in the 610 year of their Hegira. The Houſes all of mud and thatch, except one fair Church, and the Kings Palace, both of Lime and Stone. Inhabited by wealthy Merchants, who manage a great Trade betwixt this and Feſs. 2 Gago, the reſidence of the King, large, without Walls, the Buildings very poor and mean, except ſuch as belong unto the King, or the chief Nobility. The Merchants rich, and their Wares ſumptuous and precious, but exceſſive dear. The Town about 400 miles diſtant from Tombuta, ſituate in a fruitful Country for Rice, Fruits and Fleſh, and well repleniſhed with freſh water. 3 Cabra, a large Town, but unwalled, and of no better building than the other two.

9 MELLI, lying on the Eaſt of Tombutum, is a ſpacious and fruitful Province, ſituate all along on a Branch of the River Niger, in breadth 300 miles, and abundantly fertile, eſpecially in Corn, Cattel, and Cotton-Wooll: the people generally very wealthy, of greater wit, civility and induſtry, than the reſt of the Negroes. The chief Town of it is called Melli, unwalled, but large, as containing in it 6000 Families; furniſhed with many Temples, Prieſts, and Readers of the Mahometan Law, which thoſe of this Country did firſt unhappily admit of. This the Seat-Royal of their Kings, who are very courteous unto ſtrangers; but Homagers and Tributaries to the King of Tombutum.

10 GHENEOA, ſituate betwixt Gualata, Tombutum, and Melli, but ſo, that it bordereth in one place on the Ocean alſo; is a wealthy Country: but hath neither Town or Caſtle in it, except that wherein the King reſideth, who is a Vaſſal alſo to the King of Tombutum. That Town the reſidence alſo of their Prieſts, Doctors, and Merchants; of which the Prieſts and Doctors are apparelled in white, but all the reſt in black or blue Cotton. The people have great Traffick with the Merchants of Barbary; and though made very rich by the overflowings of Niger, and the wealth of the Country, they have great ſtore of Gold uncoined; yet in buying and ſelling at home, they uſe iron money.

11 GUBER lieth on the Eaſt of the former Provinces; of the ſame length, and naturally well fenced with lofty Mountains. Exceeding populous, and thick ſet with Villages; in which dwell their Husbandmen, and Shepherds; rich in their numerous herds of all ſorts of Cattel, as alſo great quantities of Rice and Pulſe: The people very induſtrious, and good Artificers. Their principal Town is called Guber alſo, a Town of 6000 Families, the uſual reſidence of their King; full of wealthy Merchants, and rich in Manufactures.

12 GIALOFI lieth betwixt the two great Rivers of Sanaga and Gambia. The people whereof are of ſuch admirable dexterity, that they can leap upon an horſe when he is in his full Gallop, ſtand in the Saddle when he runneth faſteſt; turn themſelves about upon his back, and ſuddenly down. Of their Country I find little, of their Story nothing, but that Bemoin one of their Kings, being overlaid with Civil Wars, in the year 1489. went for Aid to the King of Portugal, and gave great hopes of his converſion to the Chriſtian Faith. But being ſhamefully murdered by Petro de Vaz, the Portugal General, the hopes of Chriſtianity in theſe parts fell together with him.

13 GUINEA, is a Sea-Coaſt Country, extended from Siera Leona, (ſo called from the Lyon-like roaring of the Waves beating on that Promontory) in the 10 degree of Longitude, to the Borders of Benin in the 30. But the Portugals comprehend under this name the whole Sea-Coaſt of Africk from Cape Blanco and the Country of Ora Anteroſa, to Angola and Congo, incluſively, in the Lower Æthiopia. But take it in the proper ſenſe, as before-limited, and we ſhall find it to be rich in Gold, Ivory, Rice, Barley, Cotton-Wooll, and a ſort of Pepper, which the Portugals call Pimienta del Rabo, the Natives Melegneta, and we Guiny-Pepper, of double the efficacy of the Pepper which comes from India; and therefore forbidden to be ſold by the Kings of Portugal, for fear their Indian-trade ſhould be diſcontinued. Well ſtored with Sheep and Poultry, and of Dates good plenty. All other Fruits which which they want, or care for, are brought thither from Gualata. Birds in abundance, and of Elephants and Apes too many. A Tree they have, by them called Mignolo, the Bark whereof being cut, doth afford a most excellent Liquor, more pleasant, strong and nourishing then the choicest Wines, which they drink of in their great Feasts even to drunkenness. The people of both Sexes very rude and barbarous, as well in their habit as their manners; yet amongst many barbarous customs, they have one most commendable, which is the breeding of their Maidens. When marriagable, they place them in an house severed from the rest of their Cities, like a Cloyster, or Monastery, where for a space they are trained up by some old man of best estimation. At the years end they are brought out well apparrell'd with Musick and Dances; where the young men please themselves in the choice of their Wives: for whom having bargained with their Parents, they satisfie the old man for his care and pains in their Education. They keep one day of rest weekly, but therein differ from all Nations in the World besides, that they keep their Sabbath upon the Tuesday. Distracted into as many Kingdoms as great Tribes or Families; the Kings thereof subordinate unto one another, as they lie more within the Land, till they end all in a subjection to the King of Mandinga. Places of most note, 1 Songus, the principal of Mandinga, about 100 Leagues Eastward from the Cape of Palmes. 2 Budomel, the chief Town of the Kingdom so called. 3 Uxoo, in the Center of all the Countrey. 4 Mina, a strong hold of the Portugals, situate near the Cape called Cabo de Trois pontas, the three pointed Cape; named sometimes also S. George de Mina, by the name of the Cappadocian Martyr, and the Mines of Gold, which they hoped to find there. By which, and by the Fort of Arquin, which they have upon Cape Blanco, in the North part of this Land of the Negroes, they command all the Countreys which they call by the name of Guinea. This Town not built until the year 1486, in the beginning of the reign of John the Second, though the discovery of these Coasts had been made before, Anno 1452, under the Conduct of Prince Henry Duke of Viseo, Son of John the first. By whose encouragement the Portugueze did first imploy themselves in foreign discoveries, and became enamoured of the Seas. For in this interval, the Portugals being more covetous of new discoveries, than of fortifying and securing the old, gave opportunity to the Castilians to look after this Countrey, who having took a view of it, in the year 1477. pursued the Enterprize the next year with a Fleet of 35 Ships, under the command of Pedro de Cobides, who brought thence great quantity of Gold: but in the year 1479. by an agreement or capitulation between those Princes, the Trade hereof was again left free to the Portugals; who thereupon discovering the Isle of St. George, and finding it a fit place to secure and command the rest, built in it the strong Fort or Castle of Mina, which before we spoke of.

14 BENIN, lieth directly East of Guinea, by the Portugals reckoned for a Province, or Kingdom of it: the King whereof is said to have 600 wives, with all which twice a year he goeth out in Pomp. The Gentlemen (if I abuse not the name) have most of them 80 wives, some more; he that is poorest, ten or twelve, and the more the merrier. The people thereof do cut and raise their skin with three lines drawn to the Navil, esteeming it necessary to salvation. They use all, both men and women, to go naked till they are married; and then to be cloathed only from the waste to the knees; so that had our Sir Thomas Moor lived in these parts, he had in some measure had his desire. For he among other strange plots in his Utopian Common-wealth, telleth us, how there it is the custom for some reverend old Sire to bring in naked the young man; and some hoary old Matron to present naked the young woman, between whom a marriage is propounded. For, saith he, in buying a Horse, the Chapman not only vieweth his naked carcase, but taketh off all his trappings and saddle, lest under them some blain or ulcer might be hidden: why then in chusing of a Wife should we take one, of whom we see no more than the face (unius Palmæ spatium) and perhaps scarce that. The learned and ingenuous Author of the New Atlantis, though he dislike of Marriages made upon such uncertainties yet he would have this discovery made by some friends of the parties, not by them themselves: it being, as he saith, very inconvenient that after such a plain and familiar sight of each others person, there should be a refusal upon either side. But these new Projects I refer to your modest censures.

15 GUANGARA, lieth on the North of Benin, a wealthy and well peopled Country, but their Towns and Villages very mean; except that called by the same name with the Countrey, where the King resideth, which is somewhat better then the rest, well traded and full of rich Merchants. The King hereof of so great Revenues, that he keepeth seven thousand Archers, and five hundred Horse in continual pay; but Homager and Tributary to the King of Bornum.

16 BORNUM, a large and opulent Countrey on the West of Guangara, is there extended to the length of 500 miles. Distinguished equally in manner into hills and valleys: the hills inhabited by Neat-heards and Shepherds, breeding great flocks and heards of Cattel, with Mill, and many other fruits to us unknown; the Valleys repleniſhed with many Market Towns, and as full of Corn. The people are of no Religion, but live like Beasts; without propriety so much as in their wives, or Children: nor are they differenced by names, as in other places but by some Mark upon their bodies. Which though it seem strange to us of this present age, yet was it thus in part with our Saxon Ancestors. Whence have we else the names of White, Brown, Black, Grey, Green, and Tawny; or those of Long, Short, Low, Curl, Crisp, and others, but from such Originals? not to say any thing of the names of Trades, and Occupations, so familiar with us. The name of their chief City is Borneo, where the King resideth. A potent Prince, who keepeth in continual pay three thousand Horse, and great numbers of Foot, and yet is said to have no other Revenue, than what he getteth by strong hand from his Enemies. Which if it be true, those Kings must needs be good Warriours, and have great succels also in their undertakings: it being also said of these Kings of Borneo, that all the Furniture of their Horses, all the Dishes, Cups, and Platters which they eat or drink in, yea the very chains for his Dogs, were of finest Gold.

17 GAOGA lieth betwixt Borneo and the Desarts of Nubia: the Countrey almost square, each side thereof extended 500 miles. The people ignorant, rude, uncivil, but specially those which dwell in the Mountains: their houses built most of boughs and leaves, which once dry, easily take fire; but the best is, they are soon repaired: their greatest wealth is in their Cattel, which they keep most tenderly. About the year 1420. they were brought into subjection by a Negro Slave, who having slain his Master, by the help of his wealth grew strong enough to encroach on his Neighbours; and selling such Captives as he took, for horses of Egypt became King of Gaoga, and in fine very gracious with the Mamaluck Sultans. His Successors have since so enlarged their Territories, that they are second unto none but the Kings of Tombutum.

18 NUBIA hath on the West Gaoga, bounded on the North with Egypt, extended Eastward unto Nilus, by which parted from Æthiopia Superior, or the Habassine Empire, so called from the Nubæ, an ancient and potent

People of this Tract, ſpoken of by Ptolomy: the great Lake, anciently called Nubæ Palus, being hence denominated. A diſtinct people from thoſe of the ſame name, dwelling on the ſhores of the Red-Sea, near unto Sinus Avalites, who from the ſhortneſs of their ſtature paſſed in accompt for Pygmies: Νύβαι Πυγμαῖοι ſaith Heſychius an old Gramarian: theſe being a ſtrong and potent Nation, and well skilled in Wars. Inſomuch, as Cyriacus once a King hereof, underſtanding of ſome preſſures laid upon the Chriſtians of Egypt, is ſaid to have raiſed 100000 Horſe for their aid and ſuccour; but by the perſwaſions of the Patriarch of Alexandria, went back unfought with. For at that time the Countrey was wholly Chriſtian, and had been ſo from the very days of the Apoſtles; but are now fallen off again to their former Idolatries, or become Mahometans, for want of Miniſters to inſtruct them. It is recorded by Alvarez, the Writer of the Æthiopick Hiſtory, that at his being in the Court of the Abaſſine Emperour, there came Ambaſſadours out of Nubia to intreat a ſupply of Paſtors to inſtruct their Nation, and repair Chriſtianity amongſt them; but were unchriſtianly rejected.

Here is a Poyſon in this Countrey, of which the tenth part of a grain will diſpatch a man in a quarter of an hour, and is ſold for ten Ducats an ounce; the Cuſtome for which unto the King, is as much as the price unto the Merchant. But for this one ill Commodity they have many good; that is to ſay, Corn, Sugar, Civet, Sanders, Ivory, all in great abundance; ſome ſtore of Gold, and other Metals. The Countrey naturally ſandy, but well refreſhed with Lakes and Rivers which do much enrich it; inſomuch as the people generally are very wealthy, and manage a great trade with the Merchants of Caire and Egypt. Their chief City is called Dangala, large and well frequented; ſaid to contain no fewer than 10000 Families, but their houſes built of nothing but Thatch and Mortar. In other parts, eſpecially towards the River Nilus, they have many Villages; few or none of them worth the naming.

There are many other Kingdoms in this Land of Negroes, beſides theſe in Guinea, but of leſſer note; as 19 BITO, 20 TEMIANO, 21 ZEGZEG, 22 ZANFARA, 23 GOTHAN, 24 MEDRA, 25 DAUM, Of which there is nothing to be ſpoken, but of their Poverty or Riches, Bleſſings or Curſes, common to them with the reſt of theſe Nations, and therefore I purpoſely omit them.

This Countrey, or a great part of it, was anciently accounted part of Lybia Interior, inhabited beſides the Nubæ and Nigritæ ſpoken of before, by the Nabathræ dwelling about the hill Arvates, the Aroncæ, near the hill Arangus, the Agarginæ, Xylinces, and Alchalinces, Æthiopick Nations. Not much conſiderable in the buſineſs of former times; not much diſcovered (not very perfectly at this day) till the year 973. at what time certain Mahometan Preachers, out of a ſuperſtitious zeal to propagate their Sect, firſt opened the way into theſe Countryes: the people then living like bruit beaſts, without King, Law, or any form of Government, ſcarce knowing how to ſow their Lands, clad in the skins of as very beaſts as themſelves, and challenging no propriety in Wives or Children. Firſt conquered by Joſeph King of Morocco, of the race of the Almohades; and after that by the Five Nations of Lybia Deſerta, who divided them into fifteen parts, every one of thoſe Five Nations poſſeſſing three of them. One of the Kings of theſe Lybians, named Soni Heli, being ſlain by Abuaci Iſchia, General of his Forces, and the reſt terrified with that blow, Anno 1526. the Negroes once again recovered their long loſt liberty, and inſtituted divers Kings of their own. Amongſt them, Iſchia was moſt deſervedly made king of Tombutum, who managed his Affairs ſo well, that he conquered the Kings of Guber, Agadez, Cano, Melli, Zanfora, Zegzeg, Cheuæoa, Gambea, and Caſena, which he made his tributaries. So that his ſucceſſors are now the greateſt of thoſe five Kings who have the ſupreme power over all the reſt. The other four, 1 the King of Mandinga, lording it over the Realms of Benin, Gioloſi, and the Kings of Guinea; 2 the King of Borneo, the only one that is diſcended of the Lybian race, in greatneſs of command next to him of Tombuto; 3 the King of Gualata, whoſe Kingdom is confined within that one Province, but therein abſolute and ſupreme; and 4 the King of Goaga, Paramount over all the reſt of theſe Provinces

But becauſe the greateſt power is in the hands of the King of Tombuto, who poſſibly enough may in ſhort time bring all the reſt under his command, we will take a more particular view of his Eſtate: affirmed to be the richeſt Prince in theſe parts of Africk, and to have many Plates and Scepters of Gold, ſome of which weigh 1390 pound weight. When any of his Subjects do appear before him they kneel on both their knees, and bowing their heads unto the Ground, caſt ſand over their ſhoulders and upon their head, going forwards ſtill upon their knees. His Court he keeps in a royal manner, continually guarded with 3000 Horſe, but with many more Foot, all armed with Bows and empoyſoned Arrows. To the Jews a very bitter Enemy, whom he admitteth not to trade in his Kingdoms, and confiſcateth the goods of all ſuch of his Subjects as hold traffick with them. Zealous of the Mahometan Law, and liberal in ſtipends to the Doctors and Profeſſors of it. Of greater power than any other beyond Atlas, but the Habaſſine Emperour. And though Amet the Xeriffe of Morocco, in the year 1589. had ſome hand upon him, and conquered a great part of this Kingdom, even as far as Gago, extending his Empire ſix moneths Journey, by Camels, beyond Morocco, yet it held not long; this King again recovering what was taken from him; and being ſince that time in as eminent power, as ever in any times before.

And ſo much for TERRA NIGRITARUM.

ÆTHIOPIA SUPERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA SUPERIOR is bounded on the East with the Red Sea, and the Sinus Barbaricus; on the West with Lybia Interior, the Realm of Nubia, in the land of the Negroes, and part of the Kingdom of Congo in the other Æthiopia; on the North with Egypt, and Lybia Marmarica; and on the South with the Mountains of the Moon, by which parted from the main body of Æthiopia Inferior.

It was first called Ætheria, and afterwards Atlantia, as Pliny telleth us. In the end, the Grecians gave it the name of Æthiopia, from the Greek words Αἴθω, signifying to burn, and ὄψ a Countenance; because the violent heats of the Sun had so scorched the Countenances of the Inhabitants. The additions of Sub Ægypto, Superior and Interior, serve only to distinguish it from the other Æthiopia, which lyeth further off from Ægypt, on the outside of this. It is called also Regnum Abyssinorum, from the Abaseni, or Abyssini, a people of Arabia Felix; who passing over the Red Sea, (not above seven miles broad in the narrowest place) came and setled here. And in the Scripture it is stiled by the name of Ludim, from Lud the son of Mizraim, who first planted it, as hath been proved by many strong and concluded Arguments in our General Preface.

It is situate on both sides of the Æquinoctial, extending from the South Parallel of seven Degrees, where it meeteth with some part of the other Æthiopia, to the Northern end of the Isle of Meroe, situate under the fifth Parallel on the North of that Circle. And though by this accompt it fall short of the dimensions assigned by some, who extend it from one Tropick unto the other; yet is it of a very great length, no less than 1500 miles; the breadth about half as much, the whole circumference amounting to 4300 miles. Yet so, that all this vast Tract of ground, is not to be understood of that part of the Countrey which is under the command of the Abassine Emperour, commonly but mistakingly called Prester John: but of the whole Countrey of Æthiopia, as before limitted and extended; containing besides his Estate, the Kingdoms of Adel and Adea, and the provinces of Quiloa and Melindi; which two last are now reckoned of as parts of Æthiopia Inferior. The Isle of Meroe in the North is possessed by Mahometans, the most bitter Enemies of this King: all on the West of Nilus, betwixt it and the South-east of Nubia, inhabited by the Anzichi, an Idolatrous and man eating Nation, subject to a great Prince of their own: and all the Coasts of the Red-Sea, as well within the Streights of Babel Mandel, as without, except the port of Erocco only, enjoyed by Arabians and Moors, who do acknowledge no subjection unto his Commands but are under the Kings of Adel and Adea, before mentioned.

But taking in the largest signification and extent hereof (according unto which we must here describe it) it comprehendeth the three Countreys called anciently Æthiopia Sub Ægypto, Trogloditica, and Regio Cinnamomifera. of these, the two last are by some reckoned but as parts of the first; though certainly the Troglodites were a different Nation from the Æthiopians. For past all doubt the Troglodites were originally an Arabian People, so called quia τρώγας subeunt, from their living in Caves and Dens, in which respect their part of this Countrey had the name of Arabia Troglodidica, in Dioscorides, and some others of ancient Writers. Of these it is affirmed by Pomponius Mela, that they were not the Masters of any wealth, and that their speech was rather a gnashing of the teeth, than any articulate and intelligible Pronunciation. Nullarum opum Domini sunt Troglodítæ, strident magis quam loquuntur. As for their houses, they were (saith he) no better than Caves, and their food than Serpents. With whom concurreth Pliny also for their dwelling in Caves, and consequently for the reason of the name, saying positively, Troglodítæ spelúncas excavant, Called for the same reason in the holy Scripture, 2 Chron. 12. 3. by the name of Succhæi, the word Succoth (whence that name derived) not only signifying in the Hebrew, Tents, or Tabernacles, but Caves and Dens; and so translated Psal. 10. v. 9. and Job 38. v. 40. As for that part hereof which was called Regio Cinnamomifera, taking up the southern parts in the time of Ptolomy, it took that name from the abundance of Cinnamon, which was then growing in it; now not a tree of it to be found in all this Countrey, as the Portugals, who have looked narrowly for it, have affirmed unto us. Shipped at Mosylon, a noted Emporie, placed by Ptolomy in the ninth degree of Northern Latitude; it was thence transported into Egypt, and other Countries; as is said by Pliny, Portus Mosylitus quo Cinnamomum devehitur: the Spice in some Authors being called Mosulum, by the name of the Town. ἄειρει δὲ τὸ λεγόμενον Μόσυλον, τὸ καὶ Μοσύλη πόλεως. Of Cinnamon the best is that which is called Mosulon, because brought from the City of that name in Æthiopia, saith Simeon Sethi in his Tract de Facultatibus Ciborum. As for this Cinnamon (I note this only by the way) it is the inner Bark of a Tree as big as an Olive, with Leaves like Bay-leaves: the drying of which maketh it roll together, and every three years is renewed, and stripped off again. Some think it came first from the Sinæ or the Countrey which the Romans called Sinarum Regio, the Moderns China; and that it was so called, quasi Sinæ Amomum the Amomum of the Sinæ; Amomum being the name of a sweet perfume growing in Assyria and Armenia. But then it should be written Sinamomum, and not Cinnamomum: yet to give the greater credit to the former opinion, they of Ormus call it Bar-Chinæ, or the wood of China. But of this enough.

To go on therefore unto Æthiopia it self; The people of it in old times were said to have been great Astrologers; the first ordainers also of sacred Ceremonies, and in both to be Tutors to the Egyptians. They were also noted to be very good Archers, and to draw the longest and strongest Bows of any Nation: the Persian Bow (though those the greatest of all Asia) being only three cubits long; but these of Æthiopia four. Utuntur etiam Æthiopes quatuor cubitorum torum arcubus, as we read in Strabo; the like is said also by Herodotus and Diodorus. Their Arrows small, but strong, for the most part poysoned; Æthiopium geminata venenis Vulnera, as we find in Claudian; and for that inhumanity very much condemned. But not to spend our time too much upon these particulars, Pliny reciteth two strange things of this Countrey: 1 that the air and Ground are so parching hot, that the people not only dare not go out of dores without shoos, but that they roast their meat also by setting it in the Sun. 2 That there is a Lake whose waters are thrice a day, and thrice a night, exceeding salt and unpleasing; but at all other times most sweet and delicate to the Palate.

This Countrey being as big as Germany, France, and Italy laid together, is but meanly populous, the distemperature of the Climate, and the dry barrenness of the ground, not admitting a multitude. For this cause Africk is by Strabo compared to a Leopards skin, the distance of whose Spots sheweth the dispersedness of the Towns and habitations in those torrid Countreys. A countrey scarce in Wheat, but sufficiently plentiful in Rice, Barly, Beans, Pease, and the like; they have abundance of Sugars, Minerals of all sorts, and infinite herds of Oxen, Sheep, Goats. Finally, there is no Countrey under Heaven fitter for encrease of Plants, and Living Creatures, if industry were not deficient. But in regard of this defect, they are destitute of many necessary things, which otherwise the natural commodities of the Country would supply them with. For they have here great store of Flax, but make no Cloath; plenty of Vines, yet make no Wine, except it be to serve the Palaces of the King and the Patriarch; abundance of Sugar-Canes, and mines of Iron, but know not how to make use of either unto any advantage. Rivers and Brooks in many places, but will not take the pains to dig Channels or trenches, to drive their waters to the rest of the land which want them; those Rivers almost choaked with Fish, their Woods crammed with Venison, which they trouble not themselves to catch.

By this we may conjecture somewhat of the people also; Lazie and given vnto their ease, ill cloathed and not much better housed; extreamly inclined to Barbarism, destitute of all learning; not to be credited unless they swear by the life of their Emperours; they hate a Smith equally with the Devil: their colour is generally Olive-tawny, excepting only their King himself, who is always of a white complexion; a wonderful prerogative, if true. This blackness of their bodies, by the Poet attributed to the burning of the world by Phaeton.

Sanguine tum credunt in corpora summa vocato,
Æthiopum populos nigrum traxisse colorem.

Which may be Englished thus.

Their blood (it's thought) drawn from the outward part,
The Æthiopians grew so black and swart.

But the true cause hereof, whatsoever it be, may perhaps be looked upon hereafter, when we come to America.

The Christian Faith was first made known in this Countrey, by the Eunuch of Queen Candace, who was baptized by Philip the Evangelist, and one of the Seven; more generally embraced by the pains and preaching of St. Matthew the Apostle hereof, but not totally propagated over all this Empire, till the reign of Abraham, Anno 470. who in his life entituled himself the Defender and Propagater of the Religion of CHRIST, and after his death was generally honoured as a Saint. Suppressed in part by the coming in of the Abassines and other Arabians, it was again revived and more universally received than in former times, in the reign of David King of the Axumite Æthiopians: who in a War against Dunmus King of the Homerites in Arabia Felix, solemnly vowed to the God of the Christians to become one of his Followers, if he got the victory: and so accordingly he did, sending his Ambassadours to the Emperour Justinian, for some Bishops and other learned men to instruct his people. The particulars of those Opinions wherewith they have since corrupted the purity of the true Religion, I find thus registred. 1 They use to circumcise their Children, both males and females; 2 They baptise the males 40, and the females 80 days after their circumcision; 3 After the receit of the Sacrament, they are not to spit till Sun-set; 4 They profess but one Nature and one Will in CHRIST: 5 They accept only the three first General Councils; 6 Their Priests live by the labour of their hands, for they allow them nothing, and permit them not to beg; 7 They baptise themselves every Epiphany day in Lakes and Ponds, because that day they suppose Christ to have been baptized by John in Jordan; 8 They eat not of those Beasts, which in the old Law are reckoned for unclean. 9 They keep the Saturday or Jewish Sabbath, equally solemn with the Lords Day; 10 They administer the Eucharist to Infants presently after Baptism 11 They teach, that the Reasonable soul of man is derived from their parents by seminal propagation; 12 That Infants dying unbaptized, are sanctified in the womb, by virtue of the Eucharist received by the Mother after her Conception. And finally, they shew a Book of eight Volumes, writ, as they say, by the Apostles at Hierusalem for that purpose, the Contents whereof they observe most solemnly. These are the most material points in which they differ from the Tendries of the Catholique Church. And there are other Points in which they differ only from the Church of Rome, as viz. 1 Administring in both kinds; 2 Without either Elevation, or Reservation; 3 Rejecting massie Images; and 4 Extream Unction; 5 Allowing the first marriages to their Priests and Bishops; and 6 In renouncing all relation to the Church of Rome; who to the business of these Churches is a very stranger, and so hath been from the very first foundation of them. For it appears by the Canons of the Nicene Council, extant in the Arabick, and translated into Latine by Pisanus, that the Patriarch (or Abuna, as they called him) of these Abassine Churches, was in those times subordinate to the Alexandrian, confirmed in that Supremacie by the Fathers, which were there assembled; and constantly ever since approved and practised by these Churches: in the Liturgies whereof, the name of the Alexandrian is remembred before their own. To this Patriach, by an ancient priviledge belongeth the seventh place in the Sessions of all General Councils; the Archbishop of Seleucia (or Babylon) only interposing betwixt him and the Patriarch of Hierusalem. Elected by the Abassine Monks of St. Antonies Order remaining in Hierusalem, and confirmed by the Patriarch of Alexandria, (of which Order, and of whose jurisdiction he must always be) he is sent into this Countrey to take his charge: where in some points of Civil nature, he hath equal priviledge with the Emperour himself; and in Spiritual, hath the sole power of excommunicating an obstinate sinner. All other Ecclesiastical Dignities, from the Bishoprick to the lowest Benefice, are conferred by the Emperour only.

The principal Mountains of it in the former times, had the names of 1 Prinotus, 2 Isius, 3 Monodactylus, 4 Gaurus, and 5 Mons Satyrorum, all of them in that part which was called Troglodítica: 6 Garbale. 7 Elephas, and 8 Maste, in the Isle of Meroe: the rest of the Countrey flat and level, or the hills not eminent. Rivers of most note, 1 Astapus, (now Abanni) arising out of a great Lake called Coloe, now the Lake of Barcena, 2 Astaborus, now

Tacasse;

Tacaſſie; both falling into the River Nilus. 3. Nilus, of which before when we were in Egypt; whoſe Spring unprofitably ſought for in the elder times, it is now ſaid to be out of the Lake Zembre in the other Æthiopia, eleven Degrees beyond the Æquator; whence paſſing through ſpacious Deſarts, large Lakes, and many great Kingdoms, he at laſt entreth into this. Here in ſome places ſtrughng amongſt broken Rocks, and leſs free paſſages, he falleth with ſuch a wonderful noiſe into the Vallies beneath, that a Colony planted by the Perſians near one of theſe Cataracts, (ſo they call thoſe huge falls of his) were ſo dulled and deafned with the noiſe, that they were fain to abandon their habitations. Nor doth it only dull and deafen the neighbouring people, but the very hills do ſeem to tremble at the noiſe it maketh. Of which thus the Poet,

Cuncta tremunt undis, & multo murmure montis,
Spumeus invictis albeſcit fluctibus amnis.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words;

The noiſe the Mountains ſhakes, who roar for ſpite
To ſee th' unvanquiſh'd Waves cloath'd all in white.

Of theſe Cataracts here are two moſt noted: the one called Cataractes Major, in the borders of this Countrey towards Egypt, but South of both the Cities of Philæ, and Pſelcis, Æthiopian Cities; the other called Cataractes Minor, not far from Elephantis a City of Egypt, neighbouring to Syene the laſt City of that Countrey towards this. So turbulent is this River amongſt the Hills. And yet as terrible as theſe Falls are ſuppoſed to be, one may divers times ſee the Countrey people in a little Boat not able to contain above two perſons, to venture down them without fear; appearing after they have been long toſſed in the water, a great diſtance off, as if they had been ſhot out of an Engine. Nor is he of ſuch quiet paſſage in the open Countreys, but that the Inhabitants of this Kingdom are fain to cut many Ditches, Sluces, and By-channels to receive his waters, which if not curbed and leſſened by ſuch ways as theſe, might by ſome ſudden overflowing much endanger Egypt: in reſpect whereof the Sultans of Egypt have paid for a long time to the Abaſſine Emperours, an annual tribute. Which when the Great Turk, ſuppoſing it a needleſs charge, had once denyed: this people, by the command of their Emperour, did open their Sluces, and brake down the Dams: whereby the water fell ſo violently and ſo faſt into Egypt, that the Turk was not only glad to continue tribute, but to give them great ſums of money to make up their works. But others ſay, that this acknowledgment was paid by the Egyptian Kings, not ſo much for keeping up the waters from drowning Egypt, as for fear the Abaſſine Emperours ſhould divert the Stream, and ſo deprive that Countrey of the benefit of it. But I incline rather to the former. Here are alſo ſaid to be ſome Lakes of that poyſonous nature, that whoſoever drinketh of them, doth either immediately fall mad, or elſe is troubled for long time with continual drowſineſs. Of which thus Ovid:

Æthiopeſque Lacus; quos ſiquis faucibus hauſit,
Aut furit, aut patitur mirum gravitate ſoporem.

Which may be paraphraſed in theſe words:

Who doth not know the Æthiopian Lake?
Of which whoever drinks, his thirſt to ſlake,
Either grows mad, or doth his ſoul oppreſs
With an unheard of drowſineſs.

To look upon the State as it ſtood in the former times, we find in it beſides the Lakes and Rivers before mentioned, three capacious Bays; that is to ſay, Sinus Adulicus, 2 Sinus Avalites, and 3 Sinus Barbaricus; the two laſt neighboured by the now Countrys of Adel and Melinde. Havens of note and Rodes for Shipping, there were five in all, viz. 1 Bathus, or the deep Haven; 2 Dioſcorum Portus, or the Haven of Caſtor and Pollux; 3 Theon Soterum, or the Haven of the Saviour-Gods; 4 Portus Evangeliorum, Goſpel-Port, or the Port of Good News; and 5 Serapionis, the Port of Serapion, with a Promontory of the ſame near adjoyning to it. For other Promontories, which in ſo long a tract of Sea muſt needs be many; the Principal were, 1 Baſium, 2 Myemium, 3 Dimetris 4 Aſpis, 5 Ara Amoris, 6 Colobon, 7 the Promontory of Saturn, 8 Moſylon, with a noted Empory of the ſame name; 9 Aromata, near another well frequented Empory of the ſame name alſo; and 10 that of Noticornu. Then for the Towns of greateſt Trading, beſides thoſe laſt mentioned, we have, 1 Avalites, 2 Malao, 3 Mundi, 4 Cube, and 5 Acane, in the Bay of Avalites; 6 Opone, in the Bay of Barbaria, 7 Eſſina, on the South of the Æquinoctial. Then for their Cities, we have amongſt many others, the names of 1 Epitheria, by Ptolomy called Ptolemais Ferarum, 2 Adulis, and 3 Avalites, giving names unto their ſeveral Bays; 4 Rapta, the Metropolis of that part of this Countrey which was called Barbaria, lying along the ſhores of the Sinus Barbaricus; which as it taketh name from the River Raptus, upon which it is ſituate; ſo they do both agree in communicating it to the Promontory called Raptum; 5 Meroe, the chief City of the Iſle ſo called; 6 Sabath in the Bay of Adulis, which poſſibly might be ſome Colony of the Sabæans, in Arabia Felix; 7 Coloe, by Pliny called Tolen, not far from the great Lake ſo named 8 Cambuſis, by Ptolomy called Cambyſi Æravium, from ſome treaſures laid up here by Cambyſes the Perſian, in his invaſion of this Countrey. 9 Auxumi, the chief City of the Auxumites, a moſt potent people of theſe parts, and the Seat Royal of the old Æthiopian Kings, 10 Napata, as Ptolomy; but by moſt others called Tanape: of old the reſidence of the Æthiopian Emperours, ſacked and ruined by Petronius, Preſident of Egypt. For when Candace (the Predeceſſor, I believe, of her whoſe Eunuch was baptized by Philip) had ranſacked and waſted Egypt with Fire and Sword; Petronius Lieutenant to Auguſtus, drave them home, harried the whole Countrey, put this City to the ſpoyl; and to prevent the like inroads, fortified the Frontiers of his Province. 11 Philæ, upon the borders of Egypt, Garriſoned by the Romans till the time of Dioclefian, and by him abandoned. Of ſome of theſe, and others not here mentioned, we may have oppertunity to ſpeak more hereafter, in the ſurvey of ſome of theſe particular Provinces, into which this Countrey ſtands divided at this preſent time.

And for the Provinces comprehended at this time within the bounds and limits of this Æthiopia, as before laid down, they are ſaid to make up 70 Kingdoms; moſt of them ſubject to the Abaſſine Emperour. The principal of which are, 1 Guagere, 2 Tigremaon, 3 Angote, 4 Amma, 5 Damut, 6 Goijami, 7 Bagamedrum, 8 Barnagaſſum, 9 Adel, 10 Adea, 11 Danſali, 12 Dobas, 13 Fatigar, 14 Xoa, 15 Barus. Concerning which I muſt premiſe, that I find the Relations of them to be very imperfect, many times diſagreeing, ſometimes falſe: So that I muſt profeſs my ſelf to be leſs ſatisfied in the diſcription of this Countrey, than in any of the reſt which have gone before. Such as it is, I here preſent it to the Reader.

1 GUAGERE.

GUAGERE containeth only the Iſland of Meroe, an Iſland of much note and fame amongſt the Ancients; made by the confluences of Nilus and Aſtaborus, the two chief Rivers of this Countrey. The length hereof 350 miles, the bredth 125. abundantly plentiful of Gold, Silver, Braſs, Iron, Ivory, Precious Stones, and an excellent kind of Mineral Salt. Well ſtored with moſt ſorts of Beaſts, both tame and wild, and of the laſt ſort with Lyons, Leopards, Rhinocerots, Elephants, and Dragons.

The people are of the ſame nature and complexion with the reſt; Mahometans by Religion, and the profeſſed Enemies of the Abaſſine Emperour againſt whom they do no not only defend themſelves, by the advantages and benefit of their ſituation; but confederating with the Turks and Arabians, fall many times with great Forces into his Dominions. It is ſaid by Pliny of the Inhabitants of this Iſland, that twice a year, viz. when the Sun is in the 16 degree of Taurus, and the 14 of Leo, they have the Sun ſo perpendicular above their heads, that he caſts no ſhadow. More anciently memorable for their long lives, than their great exploits, attaining ordinarily to 120 years of Age; and therefore called Macrobii by the old Greek writers The women ſaid to be of ſuch great breſts in the former times, that they did ſuckle their children over their ſhouldiers (as ſome women are now ſaid to do near the Cape of Good Hope:) the Dug being bigger than the child. Of which thus Juvenal,

In Meroe, craſſo majorem Infante mamillam.

In Meroe the Mothers Pap
Is bigger than the child in lap.

The Principal Cities hereof. 1 Meroe, which gave that name unto the Iſland, but took the ſame from Meroe, a ſiſter of Cambyſes King of Perſia; or as Euſebius ſaith, from Merida, the mother of Chenephris, a King of Egypt. Joſephus telleth us, that in former times it had been called by the name of Saba; on authority of whoſe miſtake it hath been made the Regal City of that Queen of Sheba (the Queen of Egypt, and Æthiopia, as Joſeph calleth her) who came to Solomon. An opinion ſo received amongſt theſe Iſlanders, that the name of Meroe being laid by, they have reſtored the name of Saba to this City, as of greater eminence. The City ſaid by ſome to contain about 5000 houſes, great and ſumptuous; the ſtreets thereof to be large and ſpacious, with Galleries on each ſide before the doors of their houſes, where men walk ſafe from all extremities of heat, or rain. Beautified with four chief Gates, (beſides others of inferiour note) built of Alabaſter and Jaſper, wrought with Antick works: the doors belonging to thoſe Gates of Cedar, curiouſly wrought; the ways which lead unto them, for the ſpace of two leagues, beſet with Palms, Orange trees, Cedars, Cypreſſes, and others no leſs uſeful both for ſhade and fruit. In the place where the four ſtreets going from theſe Gates, do croſs each other, a goodly Arch erected upon ſtately Pillars, fairly wrought and gilded, with the Statue of St. Mathew made of braſs, but gilded, on the top thereof. Such it is ſaid to be by ſome. Others think there is no ſuch City; it may be not ſo beautiful, as ſome have made it. The other Towns of note and name in it, in former times, 2 Sacolche. 3 Darorum Vicus. 4 Eſer, of which we have little but the names.

This Iſland was once a peculiar Kingdom; he being choſen for their King, who excelled the reſt in ſtrength, perſon, or in ſtock of Cattel; but thoſe Kings ſo ſubject to their Prieſts, that by a Meſſenger, or Herald, they were ſentenced by them unto death, and others advanced unto the Throne. And thus it ſtood till one of the more provident Kings, forcing the Temple with his Armed Souldiers, ſlew all theſe Prieſts; and freed himſelf and his ſucceſſors from ſo great a ſlavery. Afterwards made a Province of the Kingdom of Æthiopia; honoured for the moſt part with the Seat of thoſe Kings, and memorable in thoſe times for the Table of the Sun: which was a place near the City of Meroe, always furniſhed with variety of roaſted meats, ſet there by night at the charge and command of the King (much taken as it ſeemeth with this coſtly vanity) and eaten in the day time by all that would; called therefore the Table of the Sun, becauſe aſcribed unto his bounty by the ignorant people. In the declining of this Kingdom, occaſioned by the inundation of the Saracens and other Arabians, this Iſland was ſeized on by that people, and hath been ever ſince kept by them; together with the reſt of the Countrey, lying betwixt it and Egypt, in which are contained, as ſome write, the Kingdoms of Damote, Sua, and Faſculum, anciently belonging to this Empire, now diſmembred from it: not much obſervable, but for being a thorow-fare to great troups of Pilgrims, which every Lent paſs by them out of the Abaſſine Dominions, to the Sepulcre and other like places in and near Jeruſalem.

2. TIGREMAON.

TIGREMAON, hath on the North, Guagere and the River Marabo, by which laſt parted from Barnagaſſo; on the South, the Realm of of Angote; on the Weſt, Nilus. On the Eaſt it is ſaid to extend to the Red-Sea; but the Sea-parts thereof poſſeſſed by the Turks, and the adjoyning Coaſt by the Moors and Arabians; the In-land parts promiſcuouſly inhabited, eſpecially more towards the Sea, by Chriſtians and Ethnicks. Divided into many inferiour Regions, the principal whereof, 1 Sabian, 2 Torrates, 3 Balgada, ſo called perhaps from the chief Towns of them, and 4 Tigrai, the moſt large and ample of all theſe ſubordinate Provinces; as containing in it 17 great Tracts under ſo many Lieutenants, which rule all affairs both of Peace and War. The people black of colour, deformed of ſhape, in condition miſerable, of conditions wicked. Some Rivers they have, but dried up in Summer; yet ſo, that with a little digging they find water in them. Their chief City Caxumo, or Caſſumo, ſuppoſed to be the ſame which Ptolomy calleth Auxume; Stephanus, Axomites; Procopius, Auxomide: by all of them eſteemed the Metropolitan City of Ethiopia, and the Seat Royal of their Kings. In witneſs whereof are many ancient buildings yet remaining, ſome Pillars which reſemble the Egyptian Obeliſks, admirable for their height and workmanſhip: 60 foot high and full of Characters, or Letters engraven on them, which now none can read. The Æthiopian Auxumites, the moſt potent Nation of this Countrey, had their name from hence; more probably conceived to be the regal Seat of Candace, (mentioned in the Acts) than any other in the Kingdom; and ſtill affirmed to be honoured with the Court of their Emperours. Others I know have fixed his Court in Beimalechi, but I know not in what part to find it: ſome in a Royal Palace near the lake of Zembre, built in the year 1570. by ſome European Architects ſent hither by Francis Duke of Florence: and many will allow him no fixed Seat at all, but tell us that he moveth with his Tents in a Royal Progreſs from one place to a nother; which wandring Court, or moving City, is ſaid to be no leſs than ten miles in compaſs, when the

Pavilions

Pavilions which belong to it, are disposed of into ranck and order.

This Kingdom is governd by a Prince of its own, but one who is an Homager and tributary to the Abassine Emperour: to whom he payeth yearly 200 horses of the best Arabian breed, infinite quantities of Silks, great store of Cotton-wool, and abundance of Gold; but the determinate proportion I have no where met with.

3 ANGOTE.

ANGOTE is bounded on the North, with Tigremaon, on the West, with Nilus; on the South, with the Kingdom of Amara; on the East, with Dancaly, and Xoa. Indifferently compounded of Hills and Vallies, both extreamly fertile, productive of the choicest fruits, and great herds of Cattel. The people eat but once in 24 hours, and for the most part make that meal in the night; their diet raw Venison, or smoked Beef: the money, most in use amongst them, Salt, Pepper, and Iron. Which custom of using Salt, Pepper, and the like, instead, of money, was in former times amongst most people the only bartery, or way of exchange. So in Homer, Glaucus golden Armour was valued at an Hundred Kine, and Diomedes Armour at ten only. Afterward in Justice Commutative, it was deemed convenient to have some common Judge, or valuation, of the equality or inequality of goods: the invention of which, the Jews attributed to Cain; the Grecians to Hermodice the wife of Midas; the Romans to Janus. It is called Nummus, or νόμισμα from νόμος, because it was ordained by Law: Pecunia, either because in elder times the chief of their wealth consisted in Cattel, as now among the Irish; or from a Cow (Pecus) which was stamped on it: and Moneta, a monendo, as Suidas saith, because when the Romans stood in need of money, Juno monebat, Juno admonished them that they should use Justice, and there should be no want of money. To this Goddess, Dea Pecunia, the Romans erected a Temple, and worshipped it in the figure of a Woman holding a pair of Scales in one hand, and Cornucopia in the other: by the Poet called Regina Pecunia, and not unfitly, the greatness of her power considered.

But to return again to Angote, I find not much spoken of the Countrey in the way of story; nor meet I with the names of any of their Towns, or Cities; unless that 1 Angote it self, as also 2 Abugana, 3 Giannamora, two of the principal Provinces of it, may possibly be so called from their principal Towns, as perhaps they are.

4 AMARA.

AMARA hath on the North, Angote; on the South, Damut; on the West, it stretcheth towards the Nile, and on the East, bounded with the Realm of Xoa. The Countrey very plain and champaign, little swelled with Hills, sufficiently fruitful, and well stored with all sorts of Cattel. The chief City of it called Amara, by the name of the Province, situate in the midst of the Empire, and though not much distant from the Æquator, if not plainly under it, yet blessed with such a temperate air, such a fruitful soil, such ravishing pleasures of all sorts, that some have taken (but mistaken) it for the place of Paradise: So strangely Heaven, Earth, Nature, and humane industry, have joyned their helps together to enrich and beautifie it.

But that which is the greatest Ornament of this Province, and indeed of the whole Empire of Æthiopia, is the Mountain Amara, situate in a large and delightful plain: the bottom of the Hill in circuit 90 Miles, and a days journey high; the Rock so smooth and even (but lesser and lesser towards the top) that no wall can be more evenly polished: the way up to it is cut out within the Rock, through which are divers holes forced to let in the light; so easie of ascent, that one may ride up with great pleasure, and in the midst of the Ascent a spacious Hall, as it were to rest in: the top it self is a large plain, 20 leagues in circuit, compassed with an high wall, to the end that neither man nor beast fall down upon any chance; beautifyed towards the South with a rising Hill, out of which issueth a sweet spring, which watering the several Palaces and Gardens of it, uniteth it self into a Lake for the use of Cattel: the plain enriched with all sorts, both of fruit and grain; adorned with two magnificent Monasteries, in each of which are found 1500 Knights of the Order of St. Anthony, a Religious Militia; and honoured with 34 Palaces, in which the younger sons of the Emperour are continually enclosed, to avoid sedition. They enjoy there whatsoever is fit for delight, or Princely education; and from hence some one of them, who is most hopeful, or best liked, is again brought out, if the Emperour die Son-less, to be made Successor. This Mountain hath but one ascent up, as before was said, which is impregnably fortified; and was destinate to this use, Anno 460. or thereabouts, by the Emperour Abraham Philip, advised hereunto as he gave out, by an heavenly vision. In one of these Palaces is a famous Library, wherein are said to be many Books, which with us are either in part or totally lost; as the Oracles of Enoch, with the mysteries which escaped the flood, being by him engraven on Pillars; the whole works of Livi, and others. Which being heretofore translated by the Saracens into the Arabick Tongue (when having plundred all the most famous Libraries of the East and West, they burnt the Originals, out of a Plot to make that Language as renowned and as generally studied, as the Greek or Latine) are said by some good fortune to be here preserved.

5 DAMUT.

DAMUT hath on the North, Amara; on the West Bagamedrum; on the South, Goiamy; and on the East, the great Lake of Barcena, and some part of Zanguebar, one of the Provinces of Æthiopia Exterior. The Countrey plentifully furnished with Gold, Ginger, Grapes, Fruits and living Creatures of all sorts. For none more famed than for their Slaves, sold in great numbers into Arabia, Egypt, Persia, India; and much esteemed by them who buy them, for their abilities in War, dexterity in business, but specially for their fidelity in all things which they undertake. For this cause placed in Offices of great trust and power, by many of the Eastern Princes: who using a tyrannical form of government, and not daring to trust the Sword into the hands of their Subjects, or to advance them unto places of Court, or Council; do for the most part arm these Slaves, and trust them also with the conduct of their chief affairs. A trust, in which they never falsified, or failed in a true discharge, but when presumeing on their power, and those advantages which so great a trust and power had presented to them; they got into their hands the Kingdom of Bengala; and kept it many years in a succession of the Abassine Slaves, wherewith they still made up their numbers, till outed not long since by the Great Mongul.

The Oxen of this Country are said to be near as great as Elephants, their Horns so large that they serve as Tankards to carry, and as Barrels to keep either wine or water. Here is also said to be a kind of Unicorn, very fierce and wild, fashioned like an Horse, but no bigger than an Ass; but we must think these Unicorns to be but Rhinocerots, or else we shall very much mistake the truth of the matter. And for the

the people (to go them both over once again) they are for the most part Gentiles; some Christians intermixt amongst them, who have sundry Monasteries.

To this Kingdom belongeth the principality of Couche, said to have more Gold in it than all Peru; a Mountain all of Gold, if the Friers say true. The people Gentiles, but the prince not long since gained to the Christian Faith; into which he was baptized by the Abbot or chief Governour of the Monasteries on the hill Amara: Gradeus the Emperour being his Godfather, by whom named Andrew. And here they have an hill of great height, and very difficult assent; from the top whereof they use to cast headlong such of the Nobility, as by the emperours sentence are condemned to dye. What Towns they have either in that Kingdom or their Principallity, I am not able to resolve, unless, 1 Damut, and 2 Couche may be two, and the two most eminent, as giving name to those Estates.

GOIAMY hath on the North, Damut; on the West, Bagamedrum; on the South and East, some Provinces of the other Æthiopia. The Countrey in the North parts full of Desarts and Rocky Mountains, in the residue plentifully furnished with all things necessary. Great store of Gold they find, but drosse; the people not knowing how to refine and purifie it; or loath here (as in other places of this Empire) to take pains that way; for fear of drawing the Turks and Arabians, to pertake of the Booty.

It containeth in it many Rivers, or rather Torrents, which come tumbling down the hills with a mighty violence, and a terrible fall, making a noise, not much inferiour to a clap of Thunder: and amongst other Lakes two of special note, which for their greatness seem to be Seas; in which as some report, Mermaids and Tritons, or Men-fishes use to shew themselves; and out of which it is thought by others, that the Fountains of Nilus do arise; and both true alike. But past all doubt the Abassines themselves are of this opinion; and therefore in the stile of Negaz, (so they call their Emperour) he is termed King of Goiamy, with this addition, In which are found the Fountains of Nilus. Deceived alike in their opinion touching this particular, the Springs, or Fountains of that River being further South: though possibly having lost himself in these vast Lakes, and issuing hence into a more contracted Channel, he may be said to have a second birth from hence, though not the first. And these I take to be the Lakes which were discovered by the Romans in the time of Nero. Who following the design of some other great Potentates, Sesostris, Cambyses, Alexander, and Philadelphus, in discovering the true Original of this famous River; imployed the Centurions in that service; who aided in it by the then King of the Æthiopians, are said to have come at last unto certain great Marishes (most probably the lower and sedgy parts of these Lakes now mentioned) of whose extent the inhabitants themselves were ignorant, not possible to be discovered any further, the Weeds having so overgrown the water, that there was no further passage to be made by Boat, and less by wading.

Betwixt this Country and Damut, which we last passed thorow, is said to be a Province of Amazons warlike and fierce, and very expert at the Bow; whose Queen knoweth no man, and by the rest honoured as a Goddess. These, they say, were first instituted by the Queen of Saba; as true, as that which some have added of the Phœnix visible in this Countrey, of Griffons, and of Fowls so big, that they make a shadow like a Cloud. Which strange reports I have here added, to supply the defect of Towns and cities, of which I meet not with so much as the naked names, as undiscovered places in our Maps and Charts, are filled up with Monsters.

7 BAGAMEDRUM.

BAGAMEDRUM, or SAGAMEDRUM, (for I find both names) lieth on the West of Goiamy, betwixt the Northern parts thereof, and the River Nilus: and keeping all along the course of that River, as far as Guagere, or Meroe, encountreth with the Southern point of Barnagasso; Some do extend it also beyond that Island, but making the whole length thereof but 600 miles, do confute themselves. The greatest Province of this Empire it may probably be, Cæteris hujus Æthiopiæ amplissimum, as they say it is; but if extended the whole length of it, it must be 1500 miles, not 600 only.

The Countrey plentiful in Mines of the purest Silver, which they cannot draw thence but by fire, which makes it run like long rods, or ropes of Metal. And yet as large and as wealthy as they say it is, I am more to seek for Towns and rich Cities in it, than in the Desarts of Lybia, or the sands of Arabia. Merchants and Travellers for the most part go no further than the Sea-coasts of the Countrey, of which they give us more exact and full informations, knowing but little of the In-lands; and of the Natives, such as have travelled abroad into other Kingdoms, rude and ignorant men, know little more of their own Empire than the place they lived in. Or probably their best Cities not containing above 2000 houses, few of them so many, and those patched up of thatch, dirt and hurdles, (unless some of the Nobility, or wealthier Merchants are provided better) they may have no greater reason to speak much of them; or to acquaint us with the names of such sorry places, as are indeed not worth the naming. Which I conceive to be the true condition of most, or all the Inland Towns in this large Estate.

8 BARNAGASSO.

BARNAGNES, or BARNAGASSUM, hath on the West Guagere, or the Isle of Meroe; on the Southwest as some say a point of Bagamedrum; on the South, Dangali and Adel; on the East, the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia; on the North it stretcheth towards Egypt; the Kingdoms of Jasculum and Sua, possessed by the Mahometans, being interposed.

The Countrey very fertile, full of Towns and Villages, and exceedingly well stored with pleasant Rivulets, besides the neighbourhood of the Red-Sea on the one side, Nile and Abanhi on the other. Remarkable for a Mountain in the Western part of it, which being spacious in the begining groweth streight by little and little, and then enlargeth it self again to a League in circuit. On the top thereof a Royal Palace, a Church, a Monastery, and two very large Cisterns, with a piece of ground able to entertain and keep 500 men. To be ascended one way only, and that but to a certain mark; to which being come they are drawn up with Cords and Baskets, to the top of all; not to be took by force, by reason of the impossibility of ascent; not by long siege, or any extremity of Famine, in regard it yields provision enough to maintain it self. Accounted therefore the chief Hold of all this Province against Turks and Moors.

It containeth besides Barnagasso it self, the two Provinces of Canfila, and Dafile; though rather subject to the Governour, or Vice-Roy of it, than parts and members of the same. Towns of most moment in the whole, 1 Beroa, or Barua, conceived by some to be the Colony of Ptolomy, the residence of the Vice-Roy, situate on a pleasant and fishful River. 2 Zameta, honoured sometimes also with the Vice-Roys presence; but rather as a retiring place in times of leisure, than a Town of strength. 3 Suachen, situate in an Island of the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia, one of the richest Cities of the Eastern parts, and beautified with a goodly and capacious Haven, secured by Nature from all storms, of smooth Tides, sure Anchorage, and able to receive 300 great Ships of Burden. Situate in a little Island, the whole circumference whereof it taketh up; insomuch that Vessels of all sorts, both within the Haven and without, do usually unlade themselves at the doors of the Merchants, to which the Ship-beaks serve for bridges. A wealthy and well-traded Town, both by Sea and Land, to which from the more In-land parts of the Abassine Empire, the Mountains open a safe passage for the carriage and re-carriage of their Commodities. Taken by the Turks long since, with all the rest of the Countrey lying betwixt it and Egypt, and made the seat of a Turkish Beglerbeg, or Bassa; whom in imitation of the Romans, they call the Beglerbeg of Abassia; as if by the possession of this small part of that Empire, they would entitle the Grand Seignior unto all the rest. The Town conceived by some, to be that which Ptolomy calleth Ostium Sebasticum, or rather Sebaiticum, as called by Strabo. Others will have it to be the Ptolomais Ferarum, or the Epitheras, as Pliny calleth it, of the Ancient Writers. And some again will have it to be the Succha of Pliny, by whom reckoned among the Cities of the Troglodites (who are called Succhæi in the Scriptures, as before was noted) in whose part of the Countrey it is seated; and to which name it hath some resemblance. 4 Bisam, not far from Erocco, remarkable for a Monastery situate on the top of an high Rock, environed with dreadful Precipices upon every side; in which live 3000 Monks, eating by three and three together, in a common Refectory: this being the chief of six others in this Province of Barnagassa, the furthest not above 30 miles distant. For maintenance of whom, and a great number of poor Children which they daily feed, besides the tithes of all the Mountain in which it standeth (fruitful and rich, and at least 30 miles in compass) they have many good Farms at the foot of the said Mountain, and an hundred small Villages appertaining to them, out of which they raise yearly great provision of Corn, and above 2000 head of Cattel; their Revenues out of Tigremaon being reckoned in. A Revenue able to maintain them and their Hospitality, in regard their Novices, or young Monks are sent abroad to earn their living, or to manure their Lands, and attend the Husbandry of the House: the Elder only being found at the charge of the Monastery, though all alike bound to the performance of Religious Offices. 5 Erocco, another noted Port on the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia, to which a passage openeth through the Streights of the Mountains, as it doth to Suachen, conceived to be the Adulis of Ptolomy, the Aduliton of Pliny, now in possession of the Turks, or at their command. 6 Santar, 7 Giabel, 8 Laccari, and 9 Abarach; these four last in the Province of Dafila.

This Country at the present, and for long time past, is subject both to the Great Neguz, or the Prestigian of Æthiopia, and the Grand Siguior of the Turks; naturally subject to the one, and tributary to the other. Governed by a King of their own, whom they call Barnagassus, by the name of his Province, a Vassal and an Homager to the Æthiopian; to whom he payeth the yearly Tribute of 150 of the best breed of Horses, besides some quantities of Silk, and some other Commodities: but so ill-neighboured by the Turks, that he is fain to pay also to the Beglerbeg or Bassa resident at Suachen, 1000 ounces of Gold yearly for a Composition. For the Turks having by the Conquest of Egypt made themselves Masters of those Countries towards Æthiopia, which formerly were allied to, or confederate with the Mamuluck Sultans; within short time (viz. An. 1558.) possessed themselves also of the Town of Suachen and the parts adjoyning; made it the residence of one of their Beglerbegs or Bassa's, and gave him the title of Beglerbeg of Abassia, as before was said: Forgot by the industrious Collector of the Turkish History, in his enumeration of the Beglerbegs or Bassa's of Africk. To this they added not long after all the rest of the Sea-Coasts, and the Port of Erocco; and not content therewith, after some short breathing made a further inrode; in which they did so waste the Country, that in the end they compelled the Barnagassian (not being aided by the Neguz) to this composition.

9. DANGALI, and 10. DOBAS.

SOuth and South-East of Barnagasso, lie the two Kingdoms of DANGALI and DOBAS; that of Dangali bordering on the Red-Sea, the other more within the Land: both of them held by the Mahometans, or Arabian Moors, both in continual enmity with the Abassine Emperours, and both of like nature, in regard of the soil and people.

DANGALI hath on the North, Barnagasso; on the South, some part of the Kingdom of Adel; on the East, the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; on the West, Dobas before-mentioned. It taketh up some part of the Arabick Bay, within the Streights of Babel-Mandel; and without those Streits, the greatest part of that spacious Bay, which anciently was called Sinus Avaliticus, as far as to the Promontory then called Mosylon, (neighboured by a noted Empory of the same name) now the Cape of Docono; near unto which the Sea makes a little Gulf, and suddenly streitneth it self again; so as the Channel cannot be above ten or twelve Leagues broad. And in this Channel are five or six Islands, which hinder the passage; so as Sailers must have good experience to avoid the Rocks which lie near those Illands.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Bebul or Babel, which gives name to the Streits of Babel-Mandel, a narrow Frith, opening out of the Bay of Arabia into the Æthiopian or Indian Ocean. 2 Vella, a well-frequented Port, conceived to be the same which Strabo calleth Antiphila; not found by that name in Ptolomy. 3 Zagnani, and 4 Zama, in a Province of this Kingdom called Lacca. 5 Docono, near the Cape so called, and therefore probably the Mosylon of the ancient Writers. 6 Dandali, not far from the Sea-side, which gives name to the Kingdom. Nothing else memorable of this Kingdom, but that there are in it two great Lakes, wherein live Crocodiles; as in Nilus.

On the South-west of Dangali lieth the Realm of DOBAS, extended on the West to the borders of Angote. The Country large, containing twelve, or as some say, 24 several Prefectures: Of so good Pasturage, that the Kine hereof are of greater size than in other places, and those for number not easily matched in all this Empire. The people such professed Enemies of the Christian Faith, that they suffer not any man to marry, till he hath killed 12 Christians. Some reckon them for Tributaries to the Prete, or Negruz; but it is onely when they list: so far from being Contributioners towards the support of his Estate, that they take from him what they can. The chief of their Towns, 1 Dobas, which gives name to the whole Kingdom. 2 Bally, upon the same River on which Dobas standeth, but more near the head.

11. ADEL.

ADEL is bounded on the North, with some parts of Dangali, and the Red-Sea; on the South, with Adea; on the East, with the Red-Sea, and the Indian or Arabian Ocean; on the West, with Fatigar: extended on the Sea-Coast from the Cape of Docono, to the Cape of Guardafu, conceived most probably to be the Aromata of Ptolomy, a noted Promontory in his time.

The Country plentiful of Flesh, Honey, Wax, Corn, Gold, and Ivory; great flocks of Sheep, and many of those Sheep of such burdensome Fleeces, that their tails weigh 25 pounds: some Kine they have, which have horns like a Stag: others but one horn only, and that in the forehead, about a foot and an half long, but bending backwards. The people inhabiting on the Sea-Coasts are of Arabian Parentage, and of the Mahometan Religion: Those towards the Inland Countries, of the old Æthiopick Race, and wholly Gentiles.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Zeila, a noted Port-Town, situate in or near the place where Ptolomy placeth Avalites: stored with variety of Merchandise, and yielding some representation of Antiquity in the building thereof, being Lime and Stone; materials not much used amongst them in these latter times. Of great both beauty and esteem, till the year 1516. when sacked and burnt by the Portugals; before that time the most noted Empory of all Æthiopia for the Indian Trade. 2 Barbora, seated on the same Sea-Coast, well frequented by Merchants, and possibly may be the Mundi or Malao of Ptolomy; neighboured by a lofty Promontory, which they call Mount Fellex. 3 Mette, another of the Sea-Towns near the Cape of Guardafu, supposed to be the Acane of the Ancient Writers. 4 Assam, 5 Selir, and 6 Bidar, on the Sea-Coasts also. 7 Arar, the principal of the Kingdom, more within the Land, and about 38 Leagues from Zeila.

This Country, formerly a Member of the Æthiopian Empire, is of late grown to so great strength and reputation, that the Kings hereof have freed themselves from all signs of subjection to that Crown, and think themselves the mightier Princes of the two. Advanced to this repute and power by Gradogma, or Gradameth, who reigned here in the year 1540. by whom Claudius the Negus was so overlaid, and his Country so destroyed by continual Incursions, that he was forced to abandon his Frontiers, retire himself into the heart of his Estates, and crave Aid of the Portugals. And though by their assistance, and the help of their shot, he was twice victorious; yet in the third battel he was vanquished, and in the fourth, Anno 1559. slain upon the place. This King accounted for a Saint by the Moors and Saracens, in regard of his continual Wars against the Christians, did so establish the Affairs of his little Kingdom, and left it so well setled unto his Successors, that the Abassine Emperour hath ever since left it out of his Titles; though many other of those small Kingdoms are reckoned in the Imperial Stile, in which he hath as little power as he hath in this. It is said also, That in the battel wherein Claudius was slain, and his Army routed, consisting of 60000 Foot, 5000 Horse of his own Subjects, besides the Portugals, the King of Adel got into his possession the greatest mass of Coin and Treasure that was ever seen. A Victory obtained as well by Policy as force: the Abassines being seldom fought with, or their Countrey wasted and depopulated by the Kings of Adel, till by the strict observance of their Lenten Fast, they were grown so weak, that they were not able to discharge their domestick businesses, and therefore most unable to resist a prevailing Enemy.

12. ADEA.

ADEA, or ABEX, as some call it, hath on the North, the Kingdom of Adel; on the South and West, some parts of the Abassine Empire; on the East, the Sea. Extended from the Cape of Guardafu, where it joyneth with Adel, along the greatest part of the Bay, called of old Sinus Barbaricus; of the reason of which name hereafter.

The Country plentifully fertile, shaded with Woods and spacious Forrests, and those Woods liberally furnished both with Fruits and Cattel; the Champagn Countrey not less fruitful in Wheat, Barley, and other necessaries, besides a great store of Horses. The people of an Olive-colour, in some places more inclined to black: Not cloathed, but from the Girdle downward; nor very well armed in time of War, but with poysoned Arrows; Mahometans in Religion, Arabians by original Extraction, whose language they retain with some little difference in pronunciation.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Adea, which gives name to the whole Kingdom, because the old residence of the Kings. 2 Carfur, upon the Sea-Coast, sometimes called Opone, then a noted Empory, and situate near the Promontory called Zingis extrema. 3 Azun, and 4 Zazelle, supposed to be the Essina and Toxica, of the Ancient Writers. 5 Magadazo, a pettit Kingdom of it self; a wealthy and well traded Town, situate in a fruitful and delightful soil, and neighboured by a safe and capacious Haven: much traded by the Portugals, who bring from Adere in Arabia Felix, and Cambaia in India, their Spices, Silks, and other Indian Commodities; which here they barter and exchange for Honey, Wax, Gold, and Abassine Slaves, which last they value as the chiefest Merchandize which this Country yieldeth. First built by some Arabian Moors, who flying from the King of Laza their Mortal Enemy, under the Conduct of seven Brethren, came into these parts, where they founded this City, and that of Brava in the Province of Barus, of which more hereafter.

The Inhabitants are originally of Arabia, as before was said; who many hundred years ago became Lords of all the Sea-Coasts of both Æthiopia's, as far as to the Cape Dos Corrientes, which is somewhat to the South of the Tropick of Capricorn. The Kings hereof in former times Vassals to the Abassine Emperour, to whom they paid an yearly tribute; this Kingdom still remaining amongst his Titles: but since the taking of Magadazo, made so obnoxious to the power and command of the Portugals, that the Estate of the Abassine in it is but meerly titular.

13. FATIGAR, and 14. XOA.

FATIGAR hath on the East Adel, and some part of Adea; on the West, the little Realm of Xoa; on the South, Barus, another Province of this Empire. The Country Champagne, sufficiently fruitful of Corn and Cattel, not meanly furnished with pleasant & delicious Fruits. Most memorable for a Lake of twelve miles in compass, on the top of a Mountain, well stored with Fish; from whence and from the rest of the Mountain issue many Rivers, which much enrich the Vallies and Fields adjoyning. The chief Town hereof, (if any one be better than another) I conceive to be Fatigar, giving this name unto the Kingdom, or so called from it.

Westward of Fatigar, lieth the little Realm of XOA, bordering West on Amara; Southward upon Damut; furnished with great store of Corn and Cattel, but not much much beautified with Towns of any consideration. Nothing observable in the History or Description of it, but that together with Fatigar, and others of the Mid-land Provinces, it hath continued constant in obedience to the Abassine Emperors, notwithstanding all those misadventures which have hapned to that Empire in these latter days.

15. BARUS.

ON the South-East of Adea lieth the Province of BARUS, extended Eastward to some part of Sinus Barbaricus; and touching at the Western Point, upon that of Fatigar. The soyl and people much of the same condition with the rest of Æthiopia. Mahometans upon the Shores, but Christians for the generality in the Mid-land parts. Those Christians subject (as the rest) to the Abassine Emperour; but he hath neither place of strength or consideration in all the Country; those of most note, 1 Brava, once a Free Town, and governed after the manner of a Commonwealth, by Twelve Aldermen or Common-Counsellours, descended from the Seven Arabian Brethren, by whom first built; the Founders of Magadora also, as before was said. But now, together with 2 Pate, and 3 Gogia, all upon the Sea, made subject to the Portugals; by whom taken under the Conduct of Tristran de Cugua.

Besides these, there are many other Kingdoms mustered in the Stile Imperial, (the swelling vanity whereof, we shall see anon) but of so little observation in the course of business, and so obscure in the esteem of such as have spoken of them, that it is enough to tell you where to find their names: and having found their names, to bid you not to seek for more; there being nothing else in them which is worth the knowing.

As for the Body aggregated of these several Members, it was first planted, as is noted and proved elsewhere, by Ludim the Son of Mizraim, and the Nephew of Cham: from whence this Nation in the Scripture hath the name of Ludim. A Nation not much taken notice of in the first Ages of time, but by an Error of Josephus: who giving too much credit to some Talmudical Tales, or willing to advance the reputation of the Jews to the highest pitch, telleth us a story, how the Æthiopians invaded and endangered Egypt, how they were beaten back by Moses; the City of Meroe besieged and taken by him, or rather delivered to his Hands by Tharbis, the Daughter of the King, who had fallen in love with him, and on the betraying of the City was married to him. All this not only questioned, but rejected by discerning men, as a Jewish Fable, that hath no ground to stand upon in true Antiquity. With little better fortune, and as little truth do the Æthiopians tell the story of their own Original. By whom we are informed that Chus the Son of Cham, first reigned in this Æthiopia; to whom succeeded his Son Regma, and next after Dedan, that from the death of Dedan, till the reign of Aruch (the certain time whereof they tell not) the people lived in Caves and holes digged under the ground; as did the Troglodites, an antient Nation of this Countrey, in the times long after: that Arac first built the City of Aruma, and by that Pattern taught them the use of Towns and Cities. But the main part of the Legend, is the story of Maqueda a Queen hereof, and fourth from Aruch; whom they will have to be the Queen of Sheba, famous in both Testaments, for the Royal Visit which she bestowed upon Solomon. Of whom they tell us, that being got with Child by Solomon when she was in his Court, she was delivered of a Son, whom she caused to be called Melech, or Melilech; and at the age of 20 years, to be sent to his Father. By whom instructed in the Law, and circumcised, and called by the name of David; he was returned into his Countrey, with Azarias the Son of Zadok the Priest, who had stollen the two Tables of the Law, and carried them with him into Æthiopia; where the old Queen resigned the Empire to her Son. His Successors afterwards called David, till Indion (as they call him) the Eunuch of Queen Candace, returning home, baptized the young Prince by the name of Philip. This is the substance of the Legend, as related by them in their own Chronicles (but we know that they are no Gospel.) That Chus planted in Arabia, hath been shewn already, as also what absurdities must needs arise from supposing the Land of Chus to be this Æthiopia. Therefore most probable it is, that this Country was first peopled by the Children of Ludim, as before was said. To whom the Abassenes coming out of Arabia Felix, might be after added; and in some tract of time be of such great power as to put their name upon the Countrey. For that the Abassenes were originally an Arabian people, appears by Stephanus, one of the old Chorographers, who out of Uranius (an ancienter Author than himself) hath told us this, Ἀβασηνοὶ ἔθνος Ἀραβικόν. Another Stephanus, and he a very learned Grammarian and Lexicographer, hath, as he thinks, decided the Controversie, by making Sheba the Son of Chus, the Progenitor of the Arabians; and Sheba the Son of Regma, the Father of the Æthiopians: and for this cause hath fitted us with this pretty Criticism, that Sheba when it is written with Samech, must be rendred Æthiopia; and Arabia, when writ with Shin. But this by no means will be found to agree the controversie, it being evidently clear, that both Sheba the Son of Chus, and Sheba the Son of Regma, were originally setled in Arabia, as hath there been shewn; though I deny not but that some of the posterity of Chus in those elder times, (before the coming over of the Abassine Nations) might either out of too much Populosity, or desire of Change, cross over the Arabian Gulf, and take up such part of this Countrey as the Ludims had not fully peopled, with whom conjunct at last, both in name and government. And for Maqueda (supposing that to be her name) she was doubtless Queen of the Sabæans in Arabia Felix, not of the Æthiopians in the waste of Africk. For besides the longsomness of the way, too much for a Woman and a Queen to travel; it is very probable, that the Son of Solomon by this Lady, would never have suffered Egypt to have lain in quiet, whilest Sesac the King thereof made war upon Reboboam, the Son of Solomon also, and so by consequence his half Brother. But to leave these uncertain Fables, the first action of moment which we meet with in unquestioned Story, touching these Æthiopians, is that which hapned betwixt them and Cambyses the Persian Monarch; who having by force of Arms united Egypt to Persia, conceived it to be worth his labour to unite Æthiopia unto Egypt also. Upon this resolution, he sent Embassadors to that King, to search into the passages of his Countrey, and discover his strengths; and by them sent a Tun of Wine, some Bracelets, a Purple Habit, and a Box of sweet Ointments, to present him with. Which Presents being tendred to him, he looked upon the Unguents and the Purple Robe, as too slight and effeminate: the Bracelets he conceived to be Bonds, or Fetters, and openly laugh'd at them, as too weak to hold in a Prisoner: but with the Wine he was very well pleased, and sorrowed that his Countrey yielded no such Liquor. But understanding well enough what this Visit aimed at, he gave the Embassadors at their parting (amongst other Gifts) an Æthiopian Bow of great length and strength; requiring them to tell their Master, That until every Persian could bend that Bow (the Æthiopian Bows being a foot longer than the Persian, as before was noted) it would be no safe warring upon his Dominions; and that he had good cause to thank the Gods for giving the Æthiopians so contented minds, as not to think of conquering their Neighbours Kingdoms. Lying far off, and parted from Egypt by vaſt Mountains, we find them not looked after by the Macedonians. Nor had the Romans medled with them, had they not been provoked by Candace, the Queen hereof, during the Empire of Auguſtus: who having made a War on Egypt, was by Petronius, Governour of that Province, brought to ſuch conformity, that ſhe was fain to ſue for peace, and to purchaſe it with the loſs of ſome part of her Countrey. To keep them quiet for the future, Philæ an Æthiopian City, but on the borders of Egypt, is made a Garriſon by the Romans, and the Seat of their Deputy for theſe parts: held by them till the Empire of Dioclesian, and by him abandoned, becauſe the charge of keeping it did exceed the profit. After this, growing into power and reputation, the Æthiopian Kings were reckoned of as friends to the Roman Empire: inſomuch as Juſtinian ſent unto Heliſtheus, as Juſtin his Succeſſor did unto Archetus, the then Kings of this Country; to crave their brotherly aſſiſtance againſt the Perſians.

Of their Converſion to the Faith in the Reign of a ſecond Candace, (unleſs as Pliny thinketh, Candace was the general Name of all their Queens) we have ſpoke already. To which the Æthiopians add, that after the baptizing of their firſt Philip (the Son of that Candace) by the hands of the Eunuch, the Emperors ſucceeding had the name of Philip; Till the religious Life of John, a Contemporary of the Emperour Conſtans, honoured as a Saint after his deceaſe, made them take his name. Some building upon this Tradition, have to the name of John, prefixed that of Presbyter, becauſe (as they affirm) he executeth as well the Sacerdotal as the Regal Office; Rex idem hominum, Divumque Sacerdos, the very Anius of the Poet: And this ſo commonly received, that he is vulgarly called by the name of Preſter John, and his Eſtate the Empire of Preſter John, with no truth at all. Others more probably conceive, that this vulgar name of Preſter John, is but a corruption, or miſtaken for Prætagian or Precious John, and that the word Prete (by which his Subjects call him) importeth no leſs. And yet I more incline to thoſe, who finding that the Word Preſtegan ſignifieth an Apoſtle, in the Perſian tongue, and Preſtegani an Apoſtolical man; do thereupon infer, that the title of Padeſcha Preſtigiani, an Apoſtolick King, was given unto him for the Orthodoxy of his Belief. Which not being underſtood by ſome, inſtead of Preſtegian, they have made Prieſt John, in Latin Presbyter Johannes: as by a like miſtake one Pregent (or Prægian as the French pronounce it) Commander of ſome Gallies under Lewis the XII. was by the Engliſh of thoſe times called Prior John. Preſtegian then, not Prieſt John, is his proper adjunct; contractedly, but commonly called the Prete, by the Modern French, who uſually leave out ſ before a conſonant. Their Empire greater heretofore, than it is at the preſent, ſhrewdly impaired of late times by the Turks and Arabians: of which the firſt have taken from him all his Country, from the Iſle of Mero unto Egypt, with all the Sea-coaſts of Barnagaſſo; the latter as much encroaching on them, on the reſt of the Maritime parts of his Dominions. But from none have they ſuffered more, than the Kings of Adel; who have divers times laid waſte their Country, diſcomfited ſome of them in the open Field, and in the year 1558. ſlain their King in battel: Not cured of thoſe wounds to this very day. For Adam, who ſucceeded Claudius that was ſlain in battel, was ſo far from being able to revenge the death of his Predeceſſor, that being ſuſpected to incline to Mahometaniſm, he was defeated by the under-King of Barnagaſſo. Since which time they have ſo languiſhed by inteſtine diſſentions, that though Alexander the Third (if there were ever ſuch a King, which I find much doubted) is ſaid to have ſettled his affairs by the aid of the Portugals; and that ſome ſtrange ſucceſſes have been ſince reported of a later Emperour: yet the truth is, that the Eſtate hereof hath been ſo imbroiled in Civil Wars, and ſo many of their Emperours ſucceſſively murdered, that the power and reputation of it is exceedingly weakened, and the Country made a prey to impuiſſant Enemies. For in the year 603. the Emperour Meleh Gogad, who ſucceeded in the Throne by the depoſition and impriſonment of his Predeceſſor, (under colour of Baſtardy) was not long after ſlain by one Zezelezeus: and James, or Jacob, advanced unto the Empire: James not long after vanquiſhed, & ſlain in the Fields of Guera, by one Sazinoſius (contractedly by ſome called Suſneus) his three Sons being forced to fly to provide for ſafety. What became of the two Eldeſt, I have no where found. The youngeſt called Zaga Chriſtos, after many hazardous wandrings and accidents, arrived at laſt into Italy, and thence he came to Paris, Anno 1638. where he was entertained in the quality of a Prince, but without hope of being reſtored to the Throne of his Fathers; for Sazinoſius, or Suſneus, immediately upon the victory had poſſeſſed himſelf of the whole Empire; though for a time ſo terribly diſquieted with Treaſons and Conſpiracies, that in the year 1607. he was fain to ſue for aid to the King of Spain, and tender a ſubmiſſion of the Abaſſine Churches to the Pope of Rome. But the ſpirit of Rebellion being conjured up, could not ſo eaſily be laid down (though there followed a long calm between) but that it brake out again within few years after (that is to ſay, about the year 1628.) more violently than it did before: a powerful Rebel ſtarting up, who followed by an Army of 50000. had queſtionleſs diſpoſſeſſed the Prete of his whole Dominions, if not prevented & diſcomfited beyond expectation. For it happened that one Vermeile, a Frenchman, a Jeweller by Trade, but exerciſed in the Wars of Holland, underſtanding that the Abaſſine Empreſs was much delighted with the Rarities and Jewels of France, found means to conveigh himſelf into the Court, where underſtanding the great danger which that great Emperour was in, and the ignorance as well of the good Subjects, as of the Rebels, in the Arts of War, he got leave to have the diſciplining or training of 8000 men, with which ſmall Army, he utterly diſcomfited and routed that vaſt body of Rebels, and was thereupon deſervedly made Commander in Chief of all the Forces of the Empire. This is the laſt News of any certainty that hath come from thence: (it being An. 1634. in which that Victory was obtained) but that there hath been a report of ſome new Commotions, An. 1648. the particulars and truth whereof, muſt be ſought elſewhere.

Yet notwithſtanding theſe diſaſters, theſe later Emperors have ſtill preſerved their Majeſty amongſt their Subjects whom they hold in Servitude enough, though they keep not ſuch a diſtance as in former Ages, when the Prete was honoured as a God, and uſed to ſhew himſelf but thrice in a year, viz. on Chriſtmas, Eaſter, and Holyrood-day: by which retiredneſs it was thought that he made his preſence more acceptable; ſome holding nothing to be more derogatory from the Majeſty of a King, than to make himſelf too common an object for the eye of the Vulgar. The like kind of ſtate was once kept by thoſe Kings of France of the firſt Merovignian line; who withdrawing themſelves from all publick affairs, uſed onely to ſhew themſelves (as we have already ſaid) on May-day. A greater retiredneſs than this, was that which Velleda Queen of the Tenſteri, (a People of the Rhene) is reported by Tacitus to have uſed; for when the reſt of the Germans then in arms, ſent Ambaſſadors to her to inform her of their victory againſt the Romans, they were prohibited either to ſpeak to her, or to ſee her; Arcebantur aſpectu, quo venerationis plus ineſſet. Such a keeping of ſtate the politick Prince Tiberius uſed, when the German Legions mutined; for he daigned not himſelf himself to see them pacified, but sent his Son; the reason was, quia majestati major e longinquo reverentia. And no doubt the same keeping of distance swayed much with him, when he forsook Rome, and kept Court privately at Caprea: though I deny not, but a propension to follow his unnatural pleasures the more securely, together with his deformities on his face, had also their powers upon his resolution.

The Title of this great and mighty Emperour, (but neither so great or mighty in power as title) runneth thus: N. N. Supream of his Kingdoms, and the beloved of GOD, the Pillar of Faith, sprung from the Stock of Judah, the Son of David, the Son of Solomon, the Son of the Column of Sion, the Son of the Seed of Jacob, the Son of the hand of Mary, the Son of Nahu after the flesh, the Son of St. Peter and Paul after the Spirit; Emperour of the Higher and Lesser Æthiopia, and of the most mighty Kingdoms, Dominions and Countries of Xoa, Goa, Cassates Fatigar, Angote, Baliguazo, Adea, Vangne, Goyami, where are the Fountains of Nile, Amara, Banguamedron, Ambea, Vangucum, Tigremaon, Sabaim, the birth-place of the Queen of Saba, Barnagassum; and the Lord of all the Regions unto the confines of Egypt.

It seemeth by this Title, that these Æthiopian Emperors, however the truth of Story goeth, conceive themselves to be sprung from Solomon and Maqueda, (or Nizaule, as Joseph nameth her) the Queen of the South. For better confirmation whereof, it is by some reported, that the Arms of this Kingdom are the same with those of the Tribe of Judah which are a Lyon Rampant in a Field Or: and that the Motto of them is to this effect, viz. The Lyon of the Tribe of Judah shall overcome. But Bara, an expert Herauld, giveth this Prince no such Coat-Armour; his Arms, according to him, being Luna, a Cross portate Mars, charged with a Crucifix Sol, between two Scourges of the second. And yet not altogether to discredit the old Tradition so generally received amongst them; it may be probable enough, that when the Abassens came into Æthiopia, some of the Sabæans their next Neighbours, came along for company, and amongst them some of the Royal Race of the Queen of Sheba; with some of which, by reason of their great Nobility, some of the Abassine Emperours might think fit to match. Nor is it any matter of impossibility, but that Solomon (considering his course of life) might get a Son upon the Body of that Queen, from whom the Æthiopian Princes might be thus descended.

As for the Government of these Emperours, it is absolutely Regal, or to say better, perfectly Despotical: the people being treated by them more like Slaves than Subjects; taking away Seignories, and giving them unto whom he pleaseth, the deprived party not daring to express the least discontent. By them so reverenced, that it was anciently a custom, if the King were blind, or lame, or maimed, for the Subject to inflict on his own Body the like impression: still had in so much honour by the greatest Subject, that at his bare name they bow their bodies, and touch the ground with one of their fingers; and reverence his Pavilion as they pass by, though he be not in it. He on the other side seldom appeareth to his Subjects, but with his Crown upon his head, and a Silver-Crucifix in his hand; his face then covered with a piece of Watchet-Taffata, which he lifteth up and putteth down, according as he is minded to grace the party with whom he talketh.

As for his Forces and Revenues, some of our late Observators speak nothing but wonders. Some say his Empire reacheth from the Red-Sea to the Atlantick Ocean, and from one Tropick to the other: Some, that he is of so great Riches, that he is able to purchase a moyety of all the world, if it were to be sold; others, that he is able to raise for any present service a Million of Men. And he himself is said to have offered to the Portugals one million of Money, and another of Men, if they would imploy it in a war against the Infidels. But notwithstanding these great brags, I cannot think this Emperour to be such a Miracle as some of these Reports have made him. For they that speak most knowingly of his Revenue, affirm, that the ordinary expences of his Court and Army being discharged, he coffereth up but three millions of Crowns per annum; which is no great matter: and upon extraordinary emergencies of War and Trouble, will be easily wasted, or brought into a narrower compass. And yet to make up this Revenue, besides the Crown Lands, or Demain Imperial, he layeth some Tax or other upon every house, receiveth the Tenth of all that is digged out of their Mines, and levieth on the great Lords the Revenue of any one of their Towns, which he pleaseth to chuse, so it be not that in which the Lords themselves inhabit.

This though it be no great Intrado, considering the large extent of his Dominions, and Form of his Government; yet it is greater in proportion than his Forces are. For notwithstanding the report of Alvarez, and his own great brag, of raising a Million of Men for present service; it is well known, that he was never able to advance half that number in his greatest necessity; and amongst those whom he can raise, there are but few who can deserve the name of Souldiers. For the People being poor and beggerly, and brought up in a servile and base condition, are naturally destitute of that courage and alacrity of spirit which should be in men professing Arms, or fit for Noble Undertakings; and are besides, on certain jealousies of State, so disused from War, that they know not how to use their Weapons, when there is occasion. So that for my part, I consider him as a weak and impuissant Prince, of no authority or influence out of his Dominions; nor able to defend himself from the continual Incursions of his Neighbours (some of them mean and petit Princes) which lie neareſt to him. Land-locked on every side from Traffick and Commerce with the Seas; incroached upon Northward by the Turks; confronted on the West, by the King of Borneo, who possesseth not a tenth part of the Land of Negroes; on the East, continually bearded and baffled by the King of Adel, sometimes a Vassal of his own; and on the South with the Galla, a barbarous Nation of the other Æthiopia, who lay all waste before them whersoever they come; and finally in these later times by his own Subjects. Injuries not to be endured, had he power to help it.

But the chief Stay of this Estate, is an Order of Knighthood, entituled by the name of St. Anthony, to which every Father that is of the Degree of a Gentleman, is to destinate one of his Sons, if he have above two, but not the eldest. And out of these they cull about 12000 Horse, which are to be the standing Guard of the Emperours person: their Oath is, To defend the Frontiers of the Empire, to preserve Religion, and to make head against the Enemies of the Faith. The Abbots of this Order (for it is partly Religious, partly Military) live in the Mountain of Amara, where they have two Monasteries, as well for the training up of these Knights in the time of their youth, as their retirement when grown old, and discharged from service.

The Arms of this Empire we have seen before.

And so much for ÆTHIOPIA SUPERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR is bounded on the East with the Red-Sea, (that name extending from the bottom of the Gulph of Arabia, to the Southern Ocean) on the West, with the Æthiopick Ocean; on the North with Terra Nigritarum, and the Higher Æthiopia; and on the South, where it endeth in a point or Conus, with the Main Ocean, parting it from the Southern undiscovered Continent.

It was called Æthiopia for the reason before delivered; Inferior was added for distinction sake, because somewhat of a lower situation than the other is. By Ptolomy called Æthiopia Interior, because lying more within the Land, and remote from knowledge, than the nearer did: and by late Writers, for the contrary reason, called Æthiopia Exterior, because situate without and beyond the other.

It comprehendeth all Ptolomies Æthiopia Interior, part of his Æthiopia sub Egypto, and all those Lands to him unknown, which he giveth us under the name of Terra Incognita. The Country so little discovered in those elder times, that we find mention onely of some eminent Mountains, as 1 Canchis, 2 Lon, 3 Ziphia, 4 Barditis, 5 Moschi; one only Region known by name, called Agisimba, and of that nothing but the name, and that it was a Province of a large extent. The People not distinguished here as in other places, by their Tribes and Families; but onely by their kind of diet; some of them being called Anthropophagi, from their eating of men; and others Ichthyophagi, from their living on fish. Of these, the first inhabited on the Eastern shores, near the Bay of Barbaria; the principal of which had the name of Rapsii: the last on the shores of the Western Ocean, near Magnus Sinus, or the Great Bay; called also from their Western situation, by the name of Hesperii. Nothing else told us of these parts by the Ancient Writers, but that the Lakes or Fens of Nilus were occasioned by the great abundance of Snow, which fell from the Mountains of the Moon: and that in many parts hereof, there were Rhinocerots, Tygers, Elephants, but these last all white.

Such was the face of this Countrey in those elder days. The Character of it at the present, generally and in brief, is thus given by Aubanus, viz. That it is Mountainous in the West, Sandy in the midst, and Desart towards the East. But for the several qualities of the soyl and people, being of very different tempers; we shall give the better description of them in their several Inclosures, then as presented thus in common. In the mean time to take a view of the Hills and Rivers of most reckoning in it; the principal of their Mountains are, 1 those called Cantaberes in the Province of Angola; 2 Lunæ Montes, formerly accounted for the boundary of both Æthiopia's, now found to belong to this alone. A Chain of Hills, but known by no particular name, lying under the Tropick of Capricorn; full of sharp Rocks, of an incredible height, and inhabited by a barbarous & savage people: the Valleys underneath of so great a depth, that they seem to emulate the Mountains.

In this Country is the Lake of Zembre, so much renowned for giving birth to the greatest Rivers of the World; though it self but 50 miles in compass. For out of the abundance hereof flow the famous Rivers, 1 Nilus, which passing through some part of this Country, and traversing the whole length of the Abassian and Egyptian Empires, endeth its long course in the Mediterranean. 2 Zaire, the greatest of all Africk, but unknown to the Antients, which running Westward through the Kingdoms of Manicongo, and taking in the lesser Streams of 1 Vamba, 2 Barbela, 3 Coanza, 4 Lelunda, makes many Islands in his way, and at the last by a mouth of 28 miles wideness disgorgeth his full stomach in the Western Ocean. 3 Cuama, which making his passage towards the East, and much increased by the addition of six great Rivers, after a long course of 700 miles (in all which it is Navigable) loseth it self in the Indian or Arabian Ocean; and 4 Fluvius Spiritus Sancti, or the River of the Holy Ghost, which shaping a course opposite unto that of Nilus, endeth it in conclusion in the Southern Seas. It is divided most properly into these four parts, that is to say, 1 Zanguebar, 2 Monopotapa, 3 Cafraria, 4 Manicongo. Some also add the Country of Aian, subdivided into the two Kingdoms of Adel and Adea. But these we have ascribed with better reason to the other Æthiopia, within the Bounds whereof they are wholly situate.

1. ZANGUEBAR.

ZANGUEBAR, or ZANZIBAR, is bounded on the East with the Red-Sea, or the Indian Ocean, on the West with the Kingdoms of Manicongo, and part of the other Æthiopia; on the North with the Higher Æthiopia only; on the South with Monomotapa. The reason of the name I find not.

It containeth in it the great Province of Agisimba, placed by the old Writers in Æthiopia Interior, and in so much of the other also as lieth on the South of the River Raptus; now called Quilimanci, by which parted from the Kingdoms of Adel and Adea. The Country on both sides of that River, known in old times by the name of Barbaria, giveth to a large adjoyning Bay the name of Sinus Barbaricus, and was much famed in those Elder Times for the best sort of Myrrhe: the Myrrha Troglodities, and Myrrha Barbara, or Barbarica, being used for the same by some of the Ancients, because the Troglodites, and the people of this Barbaria joyned on one another. Here was also in those Elder Times a good Race of Ginger, of which saith Dioscorides, Μάλιστα φύεται ἡ ἀμωμίτις ἐν τῇ Βαρβαρίᾳ, that it is the Bark of a Tree brought out of Barbaria. Where by the way, the Scholiasts upon that Author, and Pliny in the 12. Book, have been much mistaken; of which the first takes this Barbara or Barbaria for some part of the Indies; the other thinketh, that the Myrrha of these parts had the name of Barbara, from the drossiness and coursiness of it, as if so called led only becauſe unrefined. The principal Town hereof called Rapta, by the name of the River, ſeated not far from the Sea; aud by reaſon of the great Trade of it, eſteemed the Metropolis of Barbaria in the time of Ptolomy. A noted Promontory of the ſame was not far from hence.

To come again to Zanzibar, as it is now called; The Country is affirmed to be low and fenny, and very much overflown with unruly Rivers; and withal ſo full of Woods and Forreſts, that for want of paſſage for the wind, the air is generally (as in all Fenny Countries of the like obſtruction) exceeding peſtilent. The People of Complexion black, and of curled hair; Mahometans on the Sea-Coaſts; in the Inland-parts Idolaters; extreamly given to Witchcraft and Divinations. Naked above the waſte, and beneath covered only with the skins of Beaſts, or ſome ſuch mingled colour ſtuff, as the Scottiſh Plad. The Moors which dwell on the Sea-Coaſts, uſe to adventure on the Seas in little Veſſels, ſowed together with leathern thongs, and calked with Gum; having no other Sails in them than the leaves of Palm-Trees. Boats of as ſlight making as thoſe uſed anciently by the Britains, whereof thus the Poet:

Primum cana ſalix, madefacto vimine parvam
Texitur in puppim; cæſoque induta juvenco
Vectoris patiens, tumidum ſuperenatat Æquor.

Which I find thus rendred to my hand:

The moiſtned Oſier of the hoary Willow
Is woven firſt into a little Boat;
Then cloath'd in Bullocks Hides; upon the Billow
Of a proud River lightly doth it float.

It containeth in it to the number of 15 Provinces, that is to ſay, 1 Melinde, 2 Mombaza, 3 Quiloa, 4 Moſambique, 5 Sofala, all along the Coaſts; 6 Moembemage, 7 Corova, 8 Calen, 9 Anzuga, 10 Monzalo, 11 Badin, 12 Mombra, 13 Mombizo, 14 Embroe, and 15 Macaos, more within the Land. Of the nine laſt, not being perfectly diſcovered, and therefore likely to yield nothing of note and credit, we ſhall now be ſilent. But the firſt ſix lying upon the Shores, or near it, and conſequently better known to Merchants, Travellers, and the like Adventurers, ſhall be ſurveyed in order as they lie before us.

1. MELINDE is the name of a little Kingdom, on the South of the Realm of Adea, in the Higher Æthiopia, from which parted by the River Raptus, now called Quilimancy: ſo named from Melinde, the chief City of it, well walled, and ſeated in a fruitful and delightful Soil; abundantly productive of Rice, Mill, Fleſh, Limons, Citrons, and moſt ſorts of Fruits; but not well furniſhed with Corn, the greateſt part whereof is brought out of Cambaia, a Province of India. The houſes built of Lime and Stone, after the manner of Europe. The Inhabitants on the Sea-Coaſts, of Arabian breed, and of that Religion; thoſe of the In-lands, which are of the original Natives, for the moſt part Heathens. Moſt of them of an Olive-colour, but inclining to white; the Women generally of as white complexions as in other places; but they have ſome black people alſo: And all of them more civil in their habit, courſe of life, and entertainment in their houſes, than the reſt of this Country. Great Friends unto the Portugals, and befriended by them, ever ſince the kind entertainment which they gave unto Vaſques de Gama; whom they furniſhed with Pilots to direct him in his way to India, when firſt diſcovered by that people, An. 1497.

2. MOMBAZA is the name of another of theſe petit Kingdoms, of the ſame nature for the temper of the ſoil and people, that Melinde is. So called from Mombaza the chief City of it, ſituate from Melinde about 70 miles, in a little Iſland of 12 miles compaſs; but of good influence on ſome part of the Continent alſo. The Iſle and City ſaid to have ſome reſemblance unto the Rhodes. The Town about a league in circuit, environed with a Wall, and fortified with a Caſtle; the ſtreets thereof very narrow, but well built, moſt of the Houſes being Brick, and the Moſques capacious. The King hereof a Mahometan, as are moſt of his Subjects, and a bitter Enemy of the Chriſtians. For which cauſe, and upon ſome diſcourteſies received from them, the Town was taken by Vaſques de Gama, An. 1500. but abandoned again by reaſon of the unhealthy air, not well agreeing with the conſtitution of the Portugals. Afterwards, having taken in Alibeg and five Turkiſh Gallies, the better to enable themſelves againſt the Portugals; the Town was taken and ruinated by Thomas de Cotigno, ſent thither, Anno 1589. by the Portugal Vice-Roy reſiding in Goa, there being taken at that time (beſides the ſpoil of the City) all the Turkiſh Gallies, and in them 23 greater, and as many leſſer Pieces of Ordnance. Such of the Turks and Citizens as eſcaped the Slaughter, and had the opportunity of coming to them, yielded themſelves into their power, to avoid the fury of the Imbians, a man-eating people, who had before beſieged the City; and gathering up ſuch gleanings as were left by the Portugals, devoured the King, and as many of the principal Citizens as they could get into their hands. 2 Ampaza, the ſecond Town of note, was taken by the Portugals about two years after.

3. QUILOA lieth on the South of Mombaza. The Country rich and pleaſant, the Inhabitants for the moſt part of Arabian Anceſtry; of Complexion near unto a white: their Women comely, ſumptuous in attire, and of civil carriage; neat in their houſes which are generally well built, and richly furniſhed. Touching the ordering of this Sex (of whoſe honour they are very tender) the people of this Quiloa are ſaid to have a ſtrange cuſtom amongſt them, more to be mentioned for the rarity than the decency of it: which is the ſowing up of the private paſſages of Nature in their Female Children, leaving onely a ſmall vent for their Urine. Thus ſowed, they keep them carefully at home, till they come to be married. And ſhe that is by her Husband found to want this ſign of her perpetual Virginity, is with all kind of ignominy ſent back to her Parents, and by them as diſgracefully received.

It took this name from Quiloa, the chief Town thereof, ſituate in a little Iſland, but near the ſhore, from which parted by a narrow Fryth, oppoſite to the mouth of the River Coova, by ſome called Quiloa. Firſt built in the 400 year of the Hegira, by Ali, the Son of Soltan Hiſchen; who not agreeing very well with his other Brethren, becauſe their Mothers were Perſians, and his an Abaſſine, ſought new Adventures in theſe parts, and bought this Iſland. His Succeſſors grown rich and powerful by the trade of Sofala, extended their Dominions far within the Land: and ſo adorned Quiloa, the chief Town of their Kingdom, that for ſumptuous and magnificent buildings, there were few like it in thoſe parts. Proud of their many good Succeſſes, they provoked the Portugals, by whom under the Conduct of Vaſques de Gama, An. 1500. the City it ſelf was taken, the King made a Tributary, and with his leave ſome Fortreſſes erected by them in convenient places. Secure and wanton by this means, they pick a Quarrel with Abraham, then the King of this Countrey; whom in the year 1505. they depoſed from his Kingdom and placed another in his Throne, under colour of not paying paying the conditioned Tribute. For which the Arabians roſe in Arms, diſplaced their new King, demoliſhed their Fortifications, and ſent them to learn better moderation in their proſperous Fortunes, An. 1509. The buſineſs coming after to a compoſition, the Quiloan covenanted for the yearly Tribute of 1500 Marks of Gold paid unto the Portugals, to live in Peace, and quietly enjoy his own without further trouble.

4. MOSAMBIQVE lieth on the South of Quiloa. So called of Moſambique the chief City of it, ſituate in a little Iſland, the principal of three; oppoſite all of them to the mouth of the River Moghincats: and bordering on the Promontory of old called Praſſam, ſpoken of by Ptolomy, and by him made the furtheſt known place of all this Coaſt. In the Iſland there are ſaid to be Sheep whoſe Tails are 25 pound weight, as in other places of theſe Countries, and ſome parts of Syria; Hens, black in Feathers, Fleſh and Bone; & if ſodden, make the water as black as Ink, but yet ſweeter in taſte than any other. Of Pork good ſtore, the more, becauſe the people are for the moſt part of the Law of Mahomet, by which all Hog-meat is forbidden. The in-land parts more barren, but very populous: ſo ignorant and rude when the Portugals firſt came among them, that for a Shirt, a Razor, and a little Bell, they ſold fifteen Kine; and then fell out among themſelves, who ſhould have the Bell. The Town conveniently ſeated on a large and capacious Haven, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle, in the hand of the Portugals; who in their going to the Indies, and returning back, uſe to call in here, and fit themſelves with all things neceſſary to purſue their Voyage. A Town of ſo great wealth and trading, that the Captain of the Caſtle in the time of his Government (which continueth onely for three years) is ſaid to lay up 300000 Ducats for his Lawful Gains, out of the Gold that cometh from Sofala. A gain ſo great, that at the end of his three years, he is to ſerve for three years more at ſome place or other of the Eaſt-Indies, at his own charge, without any allowance from the King or State of Portugal, and then permitted to return into his native Countrey. Such of that Nation as are ſuffered to inhabit here, are enjoyned to be married, to the end the Iſland ſhould be well peopled, and as well maintained; which otherwiſe perhaps might have few elſe in it but the Garriſon-Souldiers, and the Factors of particular Merchants.

5. SOFALA lieth on the South of Moſambique, from which parted by the River Cuama, the greateſt River of thoſe parts, and thence extended to the Mountains which they call Manica, by which ſeparated from Monomotapa. So called from Sofala, the chief City of it, ſituate in a little Iſland (as the former are) but with great influence on the Land adjoyning. Both Town and Iſland ſubject unto the power of the Portugals; who have a Fort, the better to ſecure the Factory by them here erected, one of the richeſt in the World; the People bringing in hither great quantity of Gold, of which they have moſt plentiful Mines, which they exchange with them for their Cloth and other Commodities. It is ſuppoſed that the Gold brought into this Town amounteth to two Millions yearly. The ſuppoſition ſo agreeable to all other circumſtances, that little queſtion need be made of the truth thereof. Inſomuch as this Country for its abundance of Gold and Ivory, is by ſome thought to be that Land of Ophir to which Solomon ſent: And of this Opinion Ortelius in his Theſaurus was the firſt Author; but in my mind, upon no probable conjectures, and againſt very ſtrong preſumption; For firſt, Ophir the ſon of Jocian, of whom mention is made Gen. 29. verſ. 10. and from whom the Land of Ophir, in all likelyhood took its name, is inthe next verſe ſaid to have planted in the Eaſt; whereas this Sofala is ſituate South-weſt from Chaldea, in which the confuſion of Tongues, and diſperſing of the People began. And ſecondly, it is impoſſible for the Navy of Solomon, which lay at Ezion-Geber, in the Bay of Arabia, to have ſpent three years in coming hither and returning: which we find to have been the uſual time of finiſhing the Voyage to Ophir, 1 Kings 10. Ophir then is ſome part of India; But whether it were the Iſland of Sumatra, or that of Zeilan, or one of the Moluccoes, or the Land of Malaca, called by the Ancients Aurea Cherſoneſus, I dare not determine; conſidering what worthy men maintain theſe ſeveral Opinions.

6. MOENHEMAGE, or MONOEMVG, the only In-land Province of any note, hath on the Eaſt Mombaza and Quiloa; on the Weſt, the famous River Nilus; on the North, ſome part of the Dominions of the Abaſſine Emperors; on the South, Moſambique. The Country very plentiful of Mines of Gold, yet the people uſe it not for Money; but barter it in exchange with the Portugal Merchants for Silks and Taffataes, with which they uſe to cloath themſelves from the Girdle downwards. Inſtead of Money, they make uſe of Red Counters, much reſembling Glaſs. Governed by a King of their own, who holds Confederacy with the Kings of Mombaza and Quiloa, for the better ordering of their Trade. To whom are alſo ſubject a wild and cruel people, called Agag, inhabiting on the Lake Zembre, and the Banks of the Nilus; diſperſed about the Fields in their homely Cottages, black, Cannibals, and of an horrible aſpect; more horrible than otherwiſe they would be, by drawing lines upon their Cheeks with an Iron-Inſtrument, and forcing their Eye-lids to turn backwards. By the aſſiſtance of this people, the King of Moenhemage hath hitherto preſerved his Eſtate againſt the King of Monomotapa: and they themſelves by ſome of their own Leaders did ſo diſtreſs the King of Congo, that they forced him to retire to a ſmall Iſland, where he hardly eſcaped a violent and untimely death, moſt of his people being ſtarved. Of which, more hereafter.

Touching the reſt of theſe Provinces, we can ſay but little; and that little of no great note or certainty; but that they differ for the moſt part from one another, both in ſpeech & behaviour; each Village under a ſeveral King, and each in continual quarrel with its next Neighbours; whom if they overcome, they eat. At leiſure times they live by hunting, and the fleſh of Elephants. And amongſt theſe, but more upon the Borders of the Abaſſine Empire, I place the Galla, a Nationleſs Nation as it were, without houſe or dwelling, without Law or Government, as barbarous and horrid as the Agags (whom ſome call Jagge or Giacqui) are affirmed to be, who watching their advantages, and joyned together in ſome Arts of doing miſchief, have made of late ſuch Deſolations in the Countries of the Preſter-John.

2. MONOMOPATA.

MONOMOTAPA, BENOMOTANA, or BENOMOTAXA (for by all these names it is called) is bounded on the North, with the River Cuama, by which and the Mountain of Magnice, it is parted from Zanzibar; on the West, and South, by the River of the Holy Ghost, by which separated from Cafraria; and on the East, by the main Ocean. So that it is almost an Island; said to contain in compass 750 Spanish leagues or 3250 Italian miles.

The Air hereof is said to be very temperate, and the Countrey very good and pleasant, yet full of Forrests. Well watered, besides the two great Rivers before mentioned, with the Streams of 1 Panami, 2 Luanga, 3 Arruga, 4 Mangeano, and certain others, which carry gold with them in their sands. By means whereof it hath not only abundance of Corn, but great store of Pasturage; on which they breed infinite Herds of Cattel, and other Beasts very large and great, such store of Elephants, that they kill 5000 yearly for no other reason, but to make Merchandise of their Teeth: their Gold-Mines great and small, reckoned to 3000; some in the hills of Magnice, others in the Province of Matuca and Boro: the places where the Mines are, known without further art in the discovery of them, by the dryness and barrenness of the soil; as if Nature could not hoord up gold in her spacious bosom, but she must needs be barren of all good works.

The People are of mean stature, and black complexions, but strong and active, couragious, and of such footmanship, that they out-run Horses. Their apparel Cotton-Cloth, which they make or buy from some other place: their Diet Flesh, Fish, Rice, Mill, and an Oyl called Susiman. Their Religion, Paganism for the most part; yet they worship not Idols, but believe in one God only, which they call Mozimo; and seem not much averse from the Christian faith, to which one of their Kings was once converted. They punish nothing more severely than Witchcraft, Adultery, and Theft: and in the punishment of Delinquents they use no Prisoners, but execute them as soon as apprehended; which is the reason that the Vulgar have no doors to their houses, that being a priviledge for the Nobles. They may have as many wives as they will, but the first the principal, and her Children only to be heirs: the women here very much respected (as a second England) the Emperour himself, if he meeteth any of them in the streets, he giveth them the way. Not to be married, till their Menstrua or Natural purgations testifie their ability for conception; and therefore they solemnize the first Flux thereof with a liberal Feast.

Provinces of most note in it, and adjoyning to it, but reckoned as Members of this Empire, are

1. Matuca, rich in Mines of Gold, the Inhabitants whereof are called Botonghi; who though they dwell between the Line and the Tropick, have in the winter such deep snows on the tops of their Mountains, that if they come not speedily down, they are frozen to death.

2. TORRA or BUTUA, extended from the mouth of the River of the Holy Ghost, or di Spirito Santo, to Cabo Corrientes (Caput Curventium in the Latines) wealthy in fat pastures, and great herds of Cattel; more in her unexhaustible Mines of Gold. Mines memorable for a large, and in those times an impregnable Fortress, built formerly by some forrein Prince to secure the Mines; built of square stone, and every stone of marvellous greatness, without any sign of cement or other mortar; the walls hereof 25 spans thick, but the height not answerable; over the Gate certain characters written, which the most learned of the Moors could never read. Perhaps the work of some of the Æthiopian or Abassine Emperours, when their power and Empire was at the highest. By the Inhabitants who conceive it to be a work beyond humane power, it is thought to have been built by Devils: but by those who take Sofala for the Land of Ophir, ascribed to Solomon, though situate 510 miles more Westward than Sofala, by their own accompt. The Air here very cold, by reason of the sharp blasts coming from the Pole-Antartick; so much the colder, in that they have no wood, or other fewel, but what they make themselves of the dung of their Cattel.

3. BORO, and 4 QUITICUI, both furnished with Gold also in their Mines and Rivers, but not so pure as that of Torra and Matuca; yet such as serves their turn so well, as to spoil all industry: the people here being very careless in providing necessaries, which they presume the Moors (I mean the Arabian Moors) will bring them in exchange hereof.

5 INHABAN, governed by a King of its own, but Vassal and Tributary to the Emperour of Monomotapa, the King whereof in the year 1560, was Christned by Gonsalvo Silveria a Spanish Jesuite, by the name of Constantine; his Queen baptized by the name of Mary: but I find nothing of the further progress of Christianity. Touching 6 Matana, 7 Melemba, 8 Buinbebe, 9 Berteca, and 10 Bavagul, five other Provinces of this Empire, I can meet with little but their names.

Cities of note here are not many, hardly Towns or Villages; the houses being here so thin, that from the border of Sofala to the Fort of Torra, being 510 miles, as before is said, there is no sign of any building either old or new. The principal of those that be, 1 Tongum in the Province of Inhamban, and the Seat-royal of those Kings; memorable for the baptism of the King and Queen, which was there performed. 2 Simbus, supposed to be so called from the Agisymba of Ptolomy, the chief Town of the Province of Torre, or Banet; distant from Sofala one and twenty days journey, and neighboured by the remains or ruines of the old Fortress before described. 3 Benomotaxa, where the King or Emperour makes his usual residence, giving this name to the whole Kingdom, but taking it from the King himself, whom they call Benomotaxa or Monomotapata, the word in their language signifying a King or Emperour.

The King hereof accounted one of the greatest of Africk, hath under his command, besides the Provinces described, some part of Cafraria. Of great Riches in regard of his Mines of Gold, which so abundantly supply all the Royal occasions, that he exacteth no kind of Tribute from his Subjects, but some certain days service in his Works; and from his Nobles Gifts and Presents, without which none of them are to come before him. His Forces great, the multitudes of men considered; but weak for want of skill to train them, and Arms wherewith to fit them for Modern service; the Arms they most use being only Darts and Targets. For which cause, (and in regard the people of the subject Kingdoms are so prone to Rebellions, that he is fain to keep the Heirs of the Tributary Kings as Hostages of their Fathers Loyalty) he wageth mercenary Souldiers of other Nations, whom he distributeth abroad in his several Provinces: and amongst these it is affirmed, that he hath a strong Battalion of Amazons, a Warlike Race of Women, who inhabit about the Lake of Zambre, and the out-skirts of Zanzibar, compared by ſome for their fidelity and proweſs, to the Turkiſh Janizaries. And yet not truſting wholly to the faith of theſe Mercenaries, it is ſaid that he keeps 200 Maſtives for the Guard of his perſon. Much reverenced by his Subjects, by whom he is ſerved upon the knee; and when he cougheth or drinketh, all thoſe that are about him make ſuch a ſhout, that the Town rings of it. In one particular they differ from moſt Nations elſe, which is, That ſuch as are admitted into his preſence, are bound to ſit down, in token of reverence; to ſtand before him, being a ſign of the greateſt Dignity which can be afforded unto any. Once in a fair way to have advanced Chriſtianity in his Dominions, when in the year 1560. the King hereof was baptized by Gonſalvo the Jeſuit, by the name of Sebaſtian, that being the name of the King of Portugal then reigning. But afterwards on the ſuggeſtions of ſome Arabians then in great place about him, having cauſed the Jeſuite to be ſlain, he was warred upon by the King of Portugal with an Army of 1600 men, under the conduct of Franciſco Barretio; to whom he offered very honourable amends for the injury done: But Barretio having in hope ſwallowed all the Gold in the Countrey, would not admit of any peaceable agreement; but referred the buſineſs to a battel; in which being overcome himſelf, and his whole Forces not long after conſumed by ſickneſs, the hopes of Chriſtianity, and the Portugals intereſt in that Kingdom, fell together with him.

3. CAFRARIA.

CAFRARIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Rio di Spirito Santo, or the River of the Holy Ghoſt; on the South and Weſt, with the main Ocean; on the North, extended to ſome parts of Manicongo, and the Province of Zanzibar. So called from the word Cafras, which in the Arabian tongue ſignifieth an Heretick; a name by them given to Chriſtians, Heathens, and thoſe of their own Religion alſo, which differ in Opinion from them; but given to this Region by ſome late Writers, becauſe deſtitute of another name.

The Country, for ſo much of it as hath been diſcovered, is ſaid to be full of great Herds of Cattel, and flocks of Sheep, abundance of Deer, Antilopes, Baboons, Foxes, Hares, Oſtriches, Pelicans, Herons, Geeſe, Ducks, Pheſants, Partridges; in a word all things neceſſary for the life of man, were it ſomewhat better ſtored with Corn. Exceedingly well watered, and as liberally ſtored with Woods and Forreſts: the Hills thereof intermixt with glaſſie Vallies, that pity 'tis ſo beautiful and rich a Country ſhould be inhabited by ſo barbarous and rude a people; who being utterly unprovided of Towns and Houſes, live in Woods like Beaſts. Of colour black, thick lips, flat noſes, long ſhaped heads, and moſt monſtrous ears, extended far beneath their ſhoulders, by hanging in them Iron-chains, Glaſs, Bullets, Bells, and ſuch ponderous baubles. Theſe Ornaments common to both Sexes, who alſo uſe (for their greater beauty) moſt hideouſly to ſlaſh themſelves in all parts of their bodies, even their very bellies; as if no lace could better ſort with their naked skins; with which only, except ſome flap of an Hide or other leather to hide their privities, they are here apparelled.

Their beſt habits for the moſt part are the Hides of Beaſts, undreſſed, unfaſhioned, juſt as they tear them from the fleſh; but when they cloath themſelves with Sheep-skins, they have ſo much wit as to wear their fleece next to their bodies in cold weather, which at other times they expoſe (with no ſmall pride and glory) to the open view. Their voice ſo inarticulate, that it is hard to be diſtinguiſhed into words and ſyllables; which being compared with that bruitiſhneſs, which commonly appeareth in all their actions, makes it hard to ſay, whether the people generally may be thought to be men in the skins of beaſts, or beaſts created in the likeneſs and ſhape of men. But they make a greater uſe of their Cattle, than for Garments only, their raw fleſh ſerving them for food, and the Guts for Ornament, which hang about their Necks uncleanſed, and with all the filth in them, in as great a bravery as Ropes of Pearl, or Chains of Gold in more civil Countreys. Gold here ſo vilified, that they exchange it gladly for Braſs, or Iron, and that not only quantity for quantity, and weight for weight, but in ſuch ſenſeleſs diſproportion, as rendreth Braſs and Iron the more excellent metals.

But amongſt all the ſeveral Nations which inhabit this moſt flouriſhing Countrey, none are more barbarous than thoſe whom they call the Imbians, dwelling not far from the Cape of Good Hope; tall, ſquare, and ſtrong, addicted always to War and Rapine, and feeding on the fleſh both of their conquered Enemies, and their dying Friends, whoſe death they haſten for the Shambles; The Sculls of whom they uſe for their drinking Cups. Their Weapons poyſoned Arrows, and Poles burnt at the end: And in their Wars they always carry Fire before them, menacing thereby to roaſt or boyl all ſuch as they overcome. Their King (if ſuch a ſacred Name become ſuch an impious Monſter) they account for Lord of all the Earth; as the Portugals, of all the Seas: and he with the old Giant-like Arrogance, not only threatneth the deſtruction of Men, but ſhooteth his poyſoned arrows againſt Heaven it ſelf, as often as the rain or heat offends him. In the year 1589. about 80000 of them made an inrode into Zanzibar, laid deſolate all the Countrey as far as Mombaza, which City they beſieged, ſacked and devoured the people of it; which Tragedy we have heard before, in our deſcription of Mombaza, a Realm of Zanzibar.

Towns here are none, ſcarce ſo much as Houſes; and thoſe ſo mean, that they deſerve not to be ſo called: except it be ſome ſheds on the Sea-ſides, for the uſe of Saylors. Of moſt note in it, is Soldania, a large and capacious Road, about fifteen or ſixteen Leagues on the North-Weſt from the Cape of Good Hope: not ſo much noted for the buildings adjoyning to it (if there be any ſuch) as the bay it ſelf; environed on all ſides with a pleaſant Countrey, enriched with variety of Herbs, not only pleaſing to the ſence, but very Medicinal for many diſeaſes, eſpecially for thoſe that are troubled with the Scorbute (or Scurvy, as we uſe to call it,) the Hills adjoyning, ſtored with great multitudes of Cattel, both Sheep and Cows, though leſs in ſize than thoſe in theſe Northern parts: great helps unto our Sea-men in their Eaſtern Voyages; for here ſuch as are to ſayl towards the Indies, uſe to take in freſh water, and make proviſion of things neceſſary for ſo long a Voyage. I have heard that ſome of our Engliſh ſhips in their return from the Eaſt-Indies, ſeized on two Savages, living near this Bay, whom they brought on Ship-board, with an intent to carry them into England, to the end that having learned the Engliſh tongue, we might be more particularly informed by them of the Eſtate and Affairs of this Countrey. One of theſe who was called Goore, being brought to London, (for the other died upon the way) was dieted and cloathed according to the Engliſh faſhion, gratified alſo with braſs Rings, Beads and ſuch other things, by which they thought they might moſt gain upon him to affect the change of his condition. But home is home, though it be but homely, as the ſaying is. For this poor wretch having learned ſo much Engliſh as to bemoan his own misfortunes, would throw himſelf upon the ground, and cry out with great anguiſh and vexation of ſpirit, Goore home go, Soldania go, Goore home home go; out of which unquietneſs of humour, when they could not get him, they ſent him back in the next Ships which were bound for the Indies. After which time, as oft as he ſaw any Ship with Engliſh Colours, he would joyfully make towards the Bay with Guts and Garbage hanging about his neck (as their cuſtom is) and readily perform all good offices towards them; yet ſo, that it was found withal, that by diſcovering to the Natives how low eſteem the Engliſh had of Braſs and Iron, they thenceforth raiſed the value of thoſe richer Metals, which formerly they had parted with for ſuch ſorry trifles, as have been ſpoken of before.

But that which is of moſt conſideration in all this Country, is the Cape it ſelf; diſcovered by the Portugals, under the Conduct of Bartholomew Diaz, in their firſt Indian undertakings; by whom, for the continual Tempeſts which he found about it, was firſt called Tormentoſa. But afterwards the Portugals having doubled the Cape, and thereby finding good hopes of a proſperous voyage, they cauſed it to be called Cabo di Bunna Sperauza, or the Cape of good Hope: Vaſques di Gamma, the firſt diſcoverer of this way to the wealth of India, being then their Admiral, Anno 1597. It conſiſteth of three great points or headlands, of which that which is neareſt us, is the Cape of good Hope: the middlemoſt hath the name of Cabo Falſo, becauſe miſtaken for the other, by ſome of the Portugals, returning homewards; the third called Cabo della Guglia or the Cape of Needles, by reaſon of thoſe ſharp points which ſhoot towards the Sea. On the top of the Cape, a large and pleaſing Plain, adorned with great variety of flowers, and covered with a Carpet of graſs; it is called the Table of the Cape, and yieldeth a large proſpect over the Sea on all ſides. The Sea here is very rough and tempeſtuous, and hath to the Spaniards proved oftentimes very unkind: whereupon a Spaniſh Captain being ſore vexed with a ſtorm, expoſtulated with GOD, why he ſuffered his good Catholicks to endure ſuch torments; and permitted the Engliſh Heretieks, and Blaſphemers, to paſs ſo eaſily.

The Countrey is not ſubjected to any one Prince, the Natives being governed by the Chiefs of their ſeveral Clans; nor find I hitherto that either the Portugals or Spaniards, have took poſſeſſion of any one part of it, in the name of the whole. So that for ought I know, the beſt title to it doth belong to the King of England; for whom poſſeſſion was taken of it in the Reign of King James, by one Captain Fitz-Herbert, who called the Aſcent unto the Table King James his Mount. But whether this Act of his beget any good title, or whether the title of a Countrey lying ſo far off be held worth the owning, I leave to be determined of by Lawyers and Stateſmen.

4 MANICONGO.

MANICONGO is bounded on the South with Cafraria, and the Mountains of the Moon; on the Weſt with the Æthiopick, or Atlantick Ocean; on the North with the Realm of Bein, and other parts of the Land of the Negroes; and on the Eaſt with Zanzibar, and ſome part of the Abaſſine Empire. So called from Congo or Manicongo, the principal of thoſe many Kingdoms which are united in this Name.

The Air hereof ſo temperate, that their Winter, is like the Autumn in Rome; inſomuch as the people do not uſe to change their garments, or to make more fire then than at other times: the tops of the Mountains free from cold, and the nights ſo equal to the days, that for the greateſt part of the year there is little difference; the Countrey being ſituate under the Æquator, though more of it on the North than the South thereof. Not over-hot notwithſtanding in the heats of ſummer, by reaſon of the cool winds which then blow continually; and the great dews; which falling in the night make ſome compenſation for the extream fervour of the day. The ſoyl ſo exceeding fruitful in the production of herbs, plants, fruits, and ſuch ſtore of Paſturage; that they have here great herds of Cattel, large flocks of ſheep, plenty of Goats, Stags, Deer, Hares and Conies: Elephants of that bigneſs, that their teeth weigh 200 pounds; and Serpents of ſo vaſt a bulk, that they will eat a whole Deer at once; not to ſay any thing of their Fowl, both wild and tame, which they have here in great abundance.

The people of mean ſtature, black of complexion, thick lips, and having the apple of the eye of divers colours, which makes them ghaſtly to behold; ſtrong and long-lived, with very little hair on their heads, but that all naturally curled. In Religion for the moſt part Heathens, ſome worſhiping the Sun and Moon, others the Earth, as the Mother and Nurſe of all things; and ſome again, wild Beaſts and Serpents. So populous, that without any ſenſible diminution of their infinite numbers, it is ſuppoſed that they ſell 28000 Slaves to the Portugals yearly; by whom they are ſent into Braſil, there to work in the Mines and Sugar-houſes. The Chriſtian faith admitted in ſome few of their Provinces, but ſpecially in that of Congo; where firſt preached, in the reign of John the 2d, King of Portugal, An. 1490. by Gonzalvo de Suſa; who having converted and baptized the Kings Uncle, and one of his Sons, prevailed ſo far upon the King, that in the end he and his Queen, and many of his principal Subjects, did embrace the Goſpel. Received there by the people with ſuch infinite joy, that when their firſt Biſhop came to live amongſt them, they cauſed the ways from the Sea-ſide to the City of Banza (being 150 miles) to be covered with Mats; and offered to him all the way as he went, Lambs, Chickens, Kids, Partridges, Fiſh, Veniſon, and other neceſſaries, to teſtify their rejoycings in that happy change. And though many of the Subjects, in the other Provinces were baptized accordingly, and for a time embraced the Faith; yet after ſome ſmall trial of it they relapſed to their former Heatheniſm; either unable, or not willing to conform to ſo ſtrict a Rule.

Principal Rivers of this Countrey. 1 Bengo, 2 Coanza 3 Dande, 4 Barbela, 5 Ambrizi, 6 Lana, 7 Zaire. This laſt the greateſt of them all, if not of all Africk alſo: Of which, though we have ſpoke already, we ſhall add this here, That it falleth into the Æthiopick Sea with ſo great a violence, that for ten miles commonly, for fifteen ſometimes, the waters of it do retain their natural ſweetneſs; not intermingled nor corrupted with the ſalt Sea-waters. Nor can the people ſayl above five miles againſt the ſtream, by reaſon of the Cataracts, or huge falls which it hath from the Mountains; more terrible and turbulent than thoſe of Nile. And for the Mountains of moſt note, they are 1 Sierre Complida, or the long Mountain; 2 Mons Cryſtalli, or the Cryſtalline Mountain, ſo called from the abundance of Cryſtal, which is found therein, 3 Sierra de Sol, the Mountain of the Sun, of exceſſive height: 4 Montes Sal Nitri, ſo called from the abounding in that kinde of Mineral; and 5 the Mountains of Cabambe, rich in Mines of Silver.

It containeth in it many large and ample Provinces, of which we have this general muſter in the ſtile Imperial; wherein their King, calleth himſelf King of Congo, Bamba, Sango, Samdi, Bangu, Batti, Pemba, Abundi, Motana, Quiſſomo, Angola, and Cacango; Lord of the Congimes, Amoxale, Languelungi, Anxuichi, Cucchi, and Zoanghis. Many of theſe not ſo well diſcovered, as to afford us any matter fit for our diſcourſe; the principal of thoſe that be are,

1. ANGOLA, bounded on the South with Cafraria; on the North, with the Provinces of Bamba and Pemba; on the Eaſt, with ſome part of Zanzibar; on the Weſt, with the main Atlantick Ocean. The Countrey rich in Mines of Silver, and moſt excellent Copper; ſome ſtore of Kine and Horſes brought out of Europe, which they kill rather for their tails, (the wearing whereof is held for a ſpecial ornament,) than keep for any other uſe: their chiefeſt diet being Dogs, which they fat for the Shambles; and to that dainty ſo affected, that at the firſt coming of the Portugals thither, they would give 20 ſlaves and upwards for a good large Dog. By this we may conjecture ſomewhat at the nature of the people, who beſides this, are ſaid to be much given to ſorcery, and divinations by the flight of Birds; Skilful in medicinal herbs and poyſons, and by familiarity with the Divil, able to tell things to come. Permitted as moſt Pagans are, to have as many wives as they will; who with the reſt of the women, whether maids, or widows, uſe at the firſt ſight of every New-Moon to turn up their bare bums in defiance of her, as the cauſe of their troubleſome purgations.

In this countrey are the mountains called Cantabaries rich in Mines of Silver; but thoſe Mines not ſuffered to be digged, for fear of drawing ſome unneceſſary war upon them: ſo that they uſe Glaſſe beads for Money, and therewith alſo do adorn the perſons of greateſt eminence. Their principal City called Cabazza, is about 150 miles from the Sea, and the Royal reſidence of their Kings; but not elſe obſervable.

This Countrey was firſt diſcovered by the Portugals, under the conduct of Diego Can, Anno 1486. the King hereof at that time Vaſſal unto him of Congo, and ſo continued till that King did embrace the Goſpel: whereupon they revolted from him, and have ſince ſubſiſted of themſelves without ſuch dependance. At firſt they held good correſpondency with the Portugals, and allowed them free Traffick in their Dominions: But after ther revolt from the King of Congo, with whom the Portugals, were in league, they put to death as many as they found in Cabazza, An. 1578. under colour of ſome pretended treaſon. To be revenged of this foul murder, Paul Diaz, Governour of theſe parts for the King of Portugal, arming ſuch people as he had, with two Gallies and ſome other Veſſels paſſed up the River of Coanza, waſting the Countrey on both ſides. Againſt whom the King of Angola raiſed an Army of a Million of men (as ſome Writers tell us;) but amongſt thoſe multitudes of men, there were ſo few Souldiers, that an handful of the Portugals, aided with ſome of the Forces of the King of Congo, gave him a notable defeat, An. 1582. Since that, the Trade with Portugal was revived again, and the King hereof hath expreſſed ſome good affections unto Chriſtianity, ſending unto the King of Congo for ſome Prieſts to inſtruct him in it, but obtained them not; the ſtate of Religion in that Kingdom being then declining. The Portugals having thus gotten the uper hand, built, or repaired a ſtrong Fort, ſituate near a convenient Bay, by which they did not only ſecure their Trade, but command a great part of the Countrey, till diſpoſſeſſed thereof by the treachery and falſhood of the Hollanders, An. 1640. or thereabouts: For the Portugals having withdrawn themſelves from the Crown of Spain, a Ceſſation from all Hoſtility, with them was proclaimed in Holland, and not long after a firm peace made between the Nations; in the Articles whereof it was conditioned, that this peace ſhould not begin in the Eaſt-Indies, till the end of the year, nor in Braſil, till the end of half a year from the making thereof. Which being obtained, they gave order to their Fleets and Forces which were abroad, to make themſelves Maſters of any thing then belonging to the Portugals, which they could lay hold on, who following theſe inſtructions, and Anchoring near the Fort of Angola, were by the Portugals received with joy into the Caſtles as their ſpecial friends, which preſently they poſſeſſed themſelves of, turning the poor Portugals in a very weak Bark to ſeek new adventures. But of this more hereafter in the Iſle of St. Thomas.

To this King belong alſo the two Provinces of Matana, and Quiſoma, though both uſed in the titles of the King of Congo: of which the firſt lying towards the Sea, is ſaid to be of a wholſome air, and a fertile ſoil; outwardly furniſhed with fruits, and inwardly with Mines of Chriſtal and other metals; but not very rich, for want of ſome convenient Haven to bring on commerce. The other lying towards a great Lake called Aque Lunda, was once governed after the manner of a Common-wealth; but tributary at that time to the King of Congo, as of later times to the Kings of Angola, by whom brought under this new yoke by reaſon of the aid they had given the Portugals in their wars againſt him.

2. BAMBA hath on the South the River of Coanza, by which parted from Angola; on the North, the River Ambrize, by which divided from Sorgo; on the Eaſt, Pemba; on the Weſt, the Æthiopick, or Atlantick Ocean. The Countrey rich in Mines of Silver, well ſtored with Beaſts and Birds, as well tame as wild. Amongſt the Birds, Parrots both green and gray, and many which are taught to ſing; not much inferiour for their muſick to the birds of Canaries. Amongſt the Beaſts of moſt note, is that called the Zebra, ſhaped like a Mule; but from the ridge of the back to the belly ſo ſtreaked with lines of white, black, and yellow, and thoſe ſtreaks ſo naturally ſet in ſuch even proportion, as yieldeth to the eye a moſt pleaſing object. But wild, and of ſo ſwift a foot, that velox ut Zebra, to be as ſwift as a Zebra, is grown into a Proverb amongſt the Portugals. The men ſo ſtrong, that it is ſaid of them, that at one blow they will cut off the head of an Ox, or ſtrike a Slave quite thorow the middle, into two pieces; and to be able to carry in their arms a Veſſel of wine, weighing 325 pound weight, containing the fourth part of a But; and hold it ſo till it be quite drawn out. It containeth in it many Signiories, moſt of them called by the names of their principal Towns. The chief of which, 1 S. Paul, ſituate on the Sea-ſide, oppoſite to the Iſle of Loanda; inhabited for the moſt part by Portugal Families. 2 Bamba, which giveth name to this Province, and is ſituate about 100 miles from the Sea, betwixt the Rivers of Loſe and Ambrizi.

3. PEMBA hath on the Weſt, Bamba; on the Eaſt, the Lake Zombre, and the River Barbela; on the North, Batta; and on the South, Angola. Eſteemed to be the richeſt and moſt pleaſant Countrey of all Manicongo; the Fields in all parts thereof beſet with Palm-trees, but intermixt with other fruit-trees, which are always green. The water of ſo good a nature, that it never hurteth any that drink of it: the Air exceeding wholſom, and the earth as fruitful; productive of all ſorts of grain, but ſpecially of that which they call Luco, in form like muſtard-ſeed, but bigger, which they grinde in an hand-mill, and make thereof a Bread not inferiour to Wheat. The people much reclaimed from their ancient Barbariſm ſince the coming of the Portugals thither; whom they imitate both in behaviour and apparel. So well skilled in the vertues of Medicinal herbs, that every one is his own Phyſician, Chyrurgion, and Apothecary. Anciently cloathed with Mats, and trimmed up with Feathers; retained ſtill by the Villagers and poorer sort, in some part of the Countrey. Their chief City formerly had the name of Banza, so called, because the Kings Court (as the word doth signifie,) but since the receiving of the Gospel it is called S. Saviours: distant from the Sea 150 miles, beautified (since it became Christian) with a Bishops See, and a fair Cathedral, in which are 28 Canons, with other Officers, and Ornaments accustomably belonging to the like Foundations. The Town it self situate on the side of a large and lofty Mountain; on the top whereof is a spacious Plain, two Dutch miles in compass, full of Villages, Burroughs, and scattered houses; which are thought to have 100000 persons, most of them Portugals, and their Servants.

4. BATTA hath on the West and South, Pemba; on the East, the Mountains of the Sun, and those called Salnitri; on the North, Pango. Of the Soil and People there is nothing singular to be said, but that the Inhabitants hereof are more Military, and better furnished for the Wars than the rest of these Provinces: necessitated thereunto by the ill neighbourhood of a fierce and savage people, dwelling about the spurs and branches of the Mountains before mentioned, whom they call Jagges or Giacchi. These naturally and originally of the Land of Negroes, abandoned the parts about Sierra Leona, where before they dwelt, and to the number of 12000 fell into the Mountainous parts of this Region, under the Conduct of one Elembe, where they are since grown into a people, and become a terrour to their Neighbours. Greedy devourers of mans flesh, which they prefer before that of Beeves or Mutton; not yet so qualified by the change of their Countrey, as to build houses, sow or plant, or to breed up Cattel; finding it far the easier life, to maintain themselves by the labour and spoil of others. And which is yet most strange of all, though they have each of them many Wives, ten or twenty a peece, yet they have no Children, but strangle them as soon as born, lest they should be an hinderance to their often wandrings. But as Pliny once said of the Esseni, Gens æterna est in qua nemo nascitur; so we may also say of these, that they do not want succession, though they breed no children: selecting out of their Captives and stollen Children, some of either Sex, (but neither steal nor take them captive, under twenty years old) to the Seminary (as it were) of a new posterity. Against these Monsters those of Batta are armed continually, not otherwise able to defend themselves, their Wives and Children, from their hands and teeth: insomuch as this one Province, though none of the biggest, is able to raise 70000 men, well armed, and fit for any service. The principal of their Towns is Batta, which gives name to the Province situate on the Banks of the River Lelanda, and the Seat of the Vice-Roy, who is always of the Blood Royal, honoured sometimes with sitting at the Kings own Table, which none else may do; and of so great authority in all Consultations, that no body dares to contradict him.

5. PANGO, is bounded on the South with Batta; on the East, extended to the Mountains of the Sun, which close up this Countrey: on the North with Sunda: and on the West, with parts of Pemba, and Sango. Of the people, little singular, of the Countrey less. Neighboured on the North-East towards Sierra de Christal, with the Languelungi, supposed by some to be the Æthiopes Hesperii, spoken of by Ptolomy: a barbarous Nation, but of so considerable power, that they are found amongst the rest in the Stile Imperial. This once a Kingdom of it self not subject till of late times to the Kings of Congo. The chief Town of it called Pango, is seated on the Western Bank of the River Barbele, the ordinary residence of the Vice-Roy, and the name-giver to the whole Province.

6 SUNDA, is bounded on the South with Batta: on the North with the great River Zaire: on the East with Barbele: and on the West with part of Songo. The Countrey rich in several Metals, but the Inhabitants prefer Iron before any other, because it doth afford them Materials for Swords, Knives, and Armour; well furnished also with Martrons, Sables, and other Furrs of great esteem among Foreign Merchants. This is the best Region of this Kingdom, not above 40 miles in breadth, betwixt Batta and the River of Zaire: nor much more in length. Their chief City hath the name of Sunda, which it communicateth to the whole.

7. SONGO, is bounded on the East with Batta and Anzichana: on the West with the Æthiopick, or Atlantick Ocean: on the North with the Kingdom of Loango: and on the South with the River Ambrizi, by which parted from the Realm of Bamba. It lieth on both sides of the great River Zaire, which is here so turbulent and broad, and so full of Islands, that the one part of it hath little or no commerce with the other. The chief Town hereof called Songo, gives this name to the Countrey; in which is nothing singular for the Soil or People.

8. ANZICHANA, hath on the West, part of Songo and Loango; extended thence into the East, as far almost as the Lake of Zembre; on the North, some part of the Land of Negroes: on the South, the Zaire. So called from the Anziqui, the Inhabitants of it: The cruellest Caunibals in the World; for they do not only eat their Enemies, but their Friends and Kinsfolk. And that the may be sure not to want these Dainties, they have Shambles of mans flesh, as in other parts of Beef or Mutton. So covetous withal, that if their Slaves will yield but a penny more when sold joynt by joynt, than if sold alive; they will cut them out, and sell them so upon the Shambles. Yet with these barbarous qualities they have many good. Affirmed to be so cunning at the Bow and Arrows, that they will discharge 28 Arrows (for so many do their Quivers hold) before the first of them falls to the ground: and of so great fidelity to their Masters, and to those which trust them, that they will rather chuse to be killed, then either to abuse their trust, or betray their Master: for that cause more esteemed by the Portugals, than their other Slaves. And for the same, and that only, worthy of so good a Countrey; said to be rich in Mines of Copper, and very plentiful of Sanders both red and gray, which tempered with Vinegar, is found by the Portugals to be a certain remedy against the Pox; as the smoak thereof against the Head-ache. Towns they have none, or none at least of any reckoning, which deserve place here.

9. LOANGO hath on the East Anziebana; on the West the Æthiopick, or Atlantick Ocean; on the North Benin, one of the Realms of Guiena, in the Land of Negroes; and on the South, the Province of Songo, from which parted by the River Loango, whence it hath its name. The Countrey very hot, as lying under the Line, but well peopled, indifferently fruitful, and more stored with Elephants, than any other of these parts; stretching in length 200 miles within the Land, and for the most part very well watered. The Inhabitants, whom they call Bramaes, by Religion Heathens, but of old accustomed, as the Anziqui and others of these barbarous Africans) unto Circumcision. Governed by a King of their own, once subject to the Kings of Congo: but of late times, both he and the King of the Anziqui (for they are also under the command of one Soveraign Prince) have freed themselves from that subjection; though still the King of Congo be called King of both. Their King they call by the name of Mani Loanga. Their Towns of note, 1 Penga, the Haven to the rest. 2 Morumba. 30 Leagues more Northwards, and within the Land; the Inhabitants of which Towns, being more civil than the Rest, apparel themselves with the leaves of Palm-Trees; but not so well skilled in the nature of that excellent Tree, as the more civilized people of the Realms of Congo, who out of the leaves thereof well cleansed and purged, draw a fine long thred, of which they make Velvets, Damasks, Sattans, Taffaties, Sarcenets, and the like fine Stuffs.

and

10. Having thus looked upon the chief Provinces of this Kingdom seated on the Continent, let us next look upon the Islands. The principal of which LOANDA, situate over against the Town of S. Paul, in the province of Bamba, said to be first made out of the sands of the Ocean, and the mire of Coanza, cast into an heap, and at last made into an Island. Now beautified with a very fair Haven, of the same name with the Island, possessed by the Portugals. The Island destitute of Rivers, but so well furnished with waters, that every where within less than half a yard digging, they find sweet and good Waters, so contrary to the Sea from whence they come, that when the Sea ebbs from it, they be salt and brackish; when it floweth towards the Island, then most fresh and sweet. But most remarkable is this Island for the Cockle-fishing, which the Women going a little into the Sea, take up together with the sands, in baskets, and part them from the sand, as they lye on the shore; the shells of which being naturally distinguished into divers colours, serve over all the Kingdom of Congo, instead of money; which is a matter of such moment unto this King, that he entertains a Governour in the Island for no other reason, but to take care about this fishing.

Besides this, there are many Islands in the River of Zaire, now subject to the Kings of Congo, but heretofore in continual Wars against them: fighting in Boats which they made of the bodies of a Tree, by them called Licande. The Tree so big, that two or three men or more are not able to fathom it: insomuch that many times a Boat is made of one of the largest of them, able to contain 200 men. Upon the shores of these Islands, and in others of their Bayes and Creeks, they have so great numbers of Anobieves, that in Winter time they will leap upon the Land of their own Accord.

Compacted of these several Members, and of the rest expressed in the Stile Imperial, is the Realm of Congo: so called from Congo the chief Province, but now distinguished from the rest by the name of Pemba; which being of more power, or of better fortune, than any of the other, or of all together, hath given both Law and name unto them. Discovered by the Portugals, under Diego Chan, An. 1486. at what times these Kings were at the greatest: called by their Subjects Mani Congo, or the Kings of Congo, the word Mani, signifying in their Language a Prince or Lord; the name communicated since to the Kingdom also. Of their affairs before this time there is nothing certain. What hath since hapned in this Kingdom, may best be seen in the ensuing Catalogue of

The KINGS of CONGO.

1486. 1 John, not so called till converted to the Faith of Christ; and then Baptized by this name, in honour of John the Second, King of Portugal, Anno 1490. in whose Reign this discovery and Conversion hapned.

2 Alphonso, eldest Son of John, zealous in the advancement of the Christian Faith, and for that opposed by Panse Aquitine his younger Brother: whom with a very small Army, zealously invocating the assistance of Jesus, he is said to have vanquished. A Prince, who during his long Reign of 50 years did seriously promote the Gospel, and caused all Idols in his Kingdom to be overthrown: and Churches to be built, and furnished in convenient places.

3 Pedro, the Son of Alphonso, in whose time was founded the Colledge of 28 Canons, in the Cathedral Church of S. Crosse, in the Town of S. Saviours.

4 Francisco the Son of Pedro, who reigned not long.

5 Diego, or James, one of the Kinsmen of Francisco, in whose time Religion growing into discredit, by the scandalous lives of some of the Secular Clergy; John the Third, King of Portugal, sent four Jesuits thither; who are said to have converted in five moneths 5000 persons, and to build three Churches.

6 Henry, the brother of Diego, after a sharp War touching the Succession, in which were slain all the Portugals of S. Saviours, except the Priests, at last succeeded: not long after slain in battel against the Anziques.

7 Alvarez, the Son of Henry, forced by the Jagges or Giacchi to abandon Congo, and betake himself, together with the Portugal Priests, to an Island of the River Zaire: where he continued, till restored to his Crown by the Aid of Sebastian King of Portugal, after by Famine he had lost almost all his company.

8 Alvarez II. Son of Alvarez the first, who much solicited Sebastian and Henry Kings of Portugal, to send him a new supply of preachers; the old store being wasted in the Islands of Zaire.

9 Alvarez III. Son to Alvarez the Second, not being born in Lawful Wedlock, was opposed by one of his Sisters and a younger Brother, both of Lawful birth; whom he overthrew, Anno 1587. and in the place of the Victory founded a Church in honour of the Virgin Mary.

Touching the Forces and Revenues of these Kings of Congo, I am able to say nothing certain; but that he is a Prince of great Power and Riches. His Riches visible by the great Treasures which he draweth from the Mines of Silver Silver, and of other Metals in his Kingdom; from the Trade of Cockle-shells, the only Money of his Realm, which he keeps wholy to himself; the great gain which he makes by Slaves, and from Elephants Teeth; the Presents which he hath in way of Tribute from the King of Angola. And though it be not easie to say what he layeth up yearly, because he hath not his Revenue in Coin, as most Princes have; yet it is thought that he is as rich and well furnished with all things, as any Monarch in Africk.

As for his Forces, they consist most in the multitudes of his Subjects; which were they well armed and used to the Wars, would make him formidable to the rest of the African Princes. And though he hath no Garrisons or Towns of War, but must trust, if once invaded, unto Castles of Bones; yet he doth rest secure enough from all fear of danger, except out of Europe: being able to raise against his Rebels, or any of his invading Neighbours, 400000 men out of Bamba only; all armed according to their manner, and 70000 men at least, well exercised in Wars against the Jagges, from the Province of Batta: besides what may be drawn from his other Provinces.

The Arms of this King are Mars, five Swords meeting in Base Sol: Which Coat was taken by Alphonso, the second King in this Catalogue, because in the Battel which he fought against Panse Aquitine, he and his Souldiers saw (or supposed they saw) such a number of shining Swords hanging in the Air, with their points turned directly upon the Enemy.

And so much for ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR.

The ISLES of AFRICK.

IN tracing out the Isles of AFRICK, we must observe another course than that which we have taken in Europe and Asia: these Islands not belonging to any part of the Continent, nor under the command of any great Prince in Africk, in the accompt of whose Estates they might be considered; but being all of them independent and sui juris, and therefore to be handled by themselves apart. In our Chorography of which, and the stories of them, (as far forth as my Authors will direct me in it) I am now to travel; beginning first with those that lie in the Red Sea, or Indian Ocean, and so proceeding by the Cape of Good Hope, through the main Atlantick Ocean, to the Streits of Hercules: that from thence we may have the shorter passage into America, and there σὺν Θεῷ ἡ πᾶς Μῶσις conclude our journey. These then we will consider either joynt, or separate, as delivered to us by the names of 1 The Æthiopick Islands. 2 Socotara. 3 Madagascar. 4 Mohelia. 5 Mauritius. 6 St. Hellens. 7 Ascention. 8 St. Thomas. 9 The Princes Island. 10 The Island of Annobon. 11 The Gorgades, or Islands of Cape Vird. 12 The Canaries, or the Fortunate Islands. 13 Madera. 14. The Island of Holy Port, and 15. The HESPERIDES; of all which, the four first only are dispersed in the Red-Sea, or Indian Ocean, all the rest scattered up and down in the main Atlantick, on this side of the famous Promontory, called the Cape of Good Hope.

1. THE ÆTHIOPICK ISLANDS.

1. THE ÆTHIOPICK ISLANDS, so called, because they lie upon the Coast of Æthiopia Superior, together with all those which lie on the further side of the Cape of Good Hope, or scattered, or dispersed in the Red Sea, or Indian Ocean, (for by those names these mighty Oriental Seas are most commonly known) of which we have spoke more at large when we were in Arabia, and therefore shall say nothing here which concerns the same, but for the Islands of those Seas, such as we comprehend here under the name and notion of Æthiopick Islands, which were only known unto the Ancients, they are more in number than in weight: some of them situate within the Streits of the Red Sea, or the Gulf of Arabia: others without those Streits, in the open Ocean.

1. Of those within the Streits, not reckoning such as lie upon the shores of Arabia Felix, of which we have already spoken; there is 1 Asiarte, or Astrata, now called Caiussa. 2 Ara Palladis, so called from some Altar of that Goddess which was there erected. 3 Gypseris, by Pliny called Cyris, but Gypsus in Justinians Code, renowned in former time for its plenty of metals. 4 Macaria, or the Fortunate Islands, so called from the fertility and pleasures of it. 5 Orneon, or the Isle of Birds, from the great plenty of Birds which was found therein. 6 Daphnis, by Ptolomy called Daphnine, opposite to a famous Port-Town of the same name in the Continent. 7 Bacchias, so called from Bacchus, unto whom consecrated. 8 Anti-Bacchias, so named, because opposite to it. 9 Acanthine, supposed by some to be now called Anghotina. 10 Insula Diodori, conceived by the Learned to be the same which is now called Babel Mandel, and giveth name unto the Streits, or entrance of the Bay of Arabia, now called the Streits of Babel Mandel. 11 Isidis Insula, memorable for a Temple dedicated to the Goddess Isis; and for a well frequented Port called Portus Isidis; the same which is now called Pascua, as Bel-Forest thinketh. 12 Mundi, an Island in the Bay of Avalites, opposite to a noted Empory of the same name on the shores of that Bay. Besides all which, we find in Ptolomy two Islands by the name of Thrisitides; two more, called Chelonitides, or Chabrate, two others passing by the name of Gomadeo; together with the Isles of Myron, Pan, and that called Insula Magorum: which make up one and twenty in all, but of no note or observation in the course of business, or the conduct of humane affairs.

Those of most Note in the open Ocean, which still preserveth the name of the Red Sea, and is sometimes called the the Indian ſometimes the Arabian Ocean, and by a particular name Pelagus Hypadis; are but Four in number, that is to ſay, 1 Myrica, by the Tranſlator of Ptolomy called Myrſiaca; 2, 3, two Iſlands called by the name of Menan, a degree more Northwards than the other: and 4 Amicuſia, as Stephanus; or Amici Inſula, as called by Ptolomy, the moſt North of all; which I conjecture to be that which is now called by the name of Socotara, the moſt noted Iſland of this Sea. I know that many Learned men will have this Iſland to be that, which Ptolomy and others of the Ancients call Dioſcoridis: but becauſe Dioſcoridis, by all thoſe Ancients, is made to be an Iſland of Arabia Felix, and Socotara by all the Moderns affirmed to be an Iſle of Africk; I can by no means yield unto it. Again, it is affirmed by our beſt Modern Geographers, that Socctara lieth over againſt Cape Guardafu, (the Aromata of Ptolomy, as before is ſaid) from which diſtant not above 30 leagues: which ſite and diſtance ſort well with Amicuſia, but can by no means be applyed unto Dioſcoridis: Amicuſia being placed but two Degrees on the Eaſt of that Promontory, in the Longitude of 85. whereas Dioſcoridis is ſituate from it almoſt four degrees, in the Longitude of 86. and 40 Minutes; beſides as great, or greater difference in their ſeveral Latitude. So that ſuppoſing for granted, that Socotara is that Iſland which was anciently called Amicuſia; and having cleared my way ſo far, I now proceed to the Deſcription and affairs thereof.

2. SOCOTARA.

2. SOCOTARA, the greateſt Iſland of theſe Shores, is ſituate, as before was ſaid, againſt Cape Guardafu, from which diſtant about 30 Leagues, Abadalenry a ſmall Iſland lying in the midſt, that is to ſay, 15 Leagues from the Cape, and 14 from the Iſland. The length hereof 60 miles, 25 the breadth; divided in the middle by craggy Mountains of great height, the top of which are for the moſt part covered with ſands. The Iſland extreamly vexed with Winds, and moleſted with dryneſs, inſomuch as it is deſtitute of moſt things neceſſary for the life of man; affording nothing towards it of the growth of the Earth, but ſome ſmall quantity of Mill, Dates, and ſome kind of Fruits. Provided notwithſtanding of ſome good Paſtures for the breed of Cattel, and liberally furniſhed with Medicinal Drugs, as Cinnabar, Dragons Blood, which is a red Gum iſſuing from the bark of a Tree; and the beſt Aloes in the World, from hence called Aloes Socotrina.

The people of an Aſh-colour, very rude and barbarous; their bread for the moſt part of Dates; the reſt of their food being milk and butter, their hair long, and their cloathing only enough to hide their nakedneſs. The Women as good Souldiers as the men, countenancing, or occaſioning the tradition of the Arabians, that they came from the Amazons: And the better Husbands of the two, governing all affairs both within and without. All of them by profeſſion Chriſtians, governed by a Biſhop of their own, with ſome few Prieſts; but ignorant enough of all things which concern Religion. More generally Circumciſed than Chriſtned, though both uſed among them. Jacobites in Sect, as the Abaſſines their Neighbours are; and zealous worſhippers of the Croſs, which they always hang about their Necks. So pertinaciouſly addicted unto Magick and therein ſo expert, that they bring incredible things to paſs: not to be weaned from thoſe black Arts, though the Biſhop excommunicate all ſuch as uſe them. They hold opinion, That St. Thomas ſuffered ſhipwrack upon their Coaſts, as he ſayled towards India; and that his Ship being drawn to land, was turned into a Church: but it appeareth neither by their life, or Doctrines, that any Apoſtolical man hath ſet foot amongſt them.

They live for the moſt part in Caves or Cabbins, of no other ſtuff than the boughs of Trees; ſo that we are to look for new Towns among them. The principal, 1 Zocotara, giving name to the Iſland, the place of the Kings reſidence, and a Biſhops See. 2 Tamarind, and 3 Deliſha, two Port-Towns, and reaſonably well traded, in the hands of the Natives: as 4 Coro, and 5 Benin, two other Ports, poſſeſſed and garriſon'd by the Portugals. The King hereof a Vaſſal to the King of Fartac, one of the petit Princes of Arabia Felix, not far from Aden: in Habit and Religion Turkiſh: Attended on when the Relater was there, Anno 1614. by five Camels and five Horſes only, yet thoſe all in the Iſland.

Nigh hereunto are two Iſlands, (thoſe poſſibly which Ptolomy calleth Menan) the one inhabited by men only, and the other by women, who do meet at their accuſtomed times to preſerve their kind, but make no long ſtay; the Air of the one being found unhealthy for the conſtitution of the other Sex. The other Iſlands of theſe Coaſts, ſcattered up and down in the Bay of Barbaria, (but not known by any name in the time of Ptolomy) as 1 Don Garcia. 2 The Three Brethren. 3 St. Brandon. 4 Francis, 5 Maſcadenna. 6 Comoro, and many others of as ſmall note, are not worth the ſpeaking of.

3. MADAGASCAR.

3. MADAGASCAR, the greateſt of the world, is ſituate over againſt Moſambique in Æthiopia Inferior ſuppoſed to be the Menuthias of Ptolomy, the only Iſland by him named on the Coaſt of that Countrey; but by the Portugals called the Iſle of St. Lawrence, becauſe diſcovered by them on the day of that Saint, An. 1506. The length hereof affirmed to be 1200 miles, (which is longer than Italy) and 4000 in compaſs: the middle part hereof oppoſite to the Promontory, which Ptolomy calleth Praſſum, now the point of Moſambique, from which diſtant 170 miles: in reference to the Heavenly bodies, ſituate from the 17 Degree of Southern Latitude, to the 26th.

The Countrey plentiful of all things neceſſary for the life of man, particularly of Mill, Rice, Honey, Wax, Cotton-wool, Sugars, Stags, Goats, Deer, and other Creatures both wild and tame; Limons and other cooling Fruits, ſome ſtore of Ginger, Cloves, but little different from thoſe of India, red Sandors, Saffron, Amber, and ſome Mines of Silver, Iron, Gold, and Copper: not to ſay any thing of their Beeves and Muttons, ſo large and good, and ſo good cheap, that for a two-penny Bead, or ſome ſuch trifle, they will ſell beeves and Sheep of good taſte and bigneſs: ſuch numbers of Elephants, that they ſend thence yearly great ſtore of Ivory. And amongſt other rare Fruits, they have plenty of thoſe which they call Cocos, or Coconuts; a kind of Date as big as a Cabbage: the liquor in it, about the quantity of a pint, taſtes like Wine and Sugar; the Kernel big enough to content two men: and like good Ale, it affords not only meat and drink, but cloathing; as alſo furniture for their houſes, tackle for their ſhips, fewel for the fire, and timber for building; the body of the Tree being ſtrait and high, and towards the top diverſified into many branches. A Countrey far too good for ſo bad a people.

For they, as Travellers report, and Moſt Writers teſtifie, are treacherous, inhoſpitable, ignorant, both of Prayers and Feſtivals; deſtitute of the diſtinction of time into years and moneths, not knowing any proper names for the days of the week, nor able to reckon above ten; naked, except their privities, which they cover with Cotton; Idolaters in the mid-land parts, and Mahometans upon the Shores. Commendable only for their hate to Polygamy, and restraining themselves to one Wife; the defiling of the Marriage-bed severely punished: but otherwise so eager upon copulation, that their Boys at the age of twelve years, and their Girls at ten, think they stay too long, if they keep their Virginities any longer: some of them, like Quartilla in Petronius Arbiter, begin so early, ut nunquam meminerint se Virgines fuisse, that they remember not the time when they lost their Maidenheads. Of colour they are black, and of strong composition; their Breasts and Faces cut and pinkt, to appear more beautiful. Much given unto the Wars, well armed according to their Country manner, and exceeding good Archers. Amongst them there are some white people, said to come from China.

It hath in it many fair Rivers, but their names I find not: and at the mouths of those Rivers some convenient Havens, into which they admit the Foreign Merchants, but suffer none to come on Land; which the Merchant hath no cause to be sorry for, finding himself not safe on Shipboard from their treacherous practices. So that we can give but small account of their Towns and Cities, except it be the bare recital of their names: as, viz. 1 S. Augustines, on a fair Bay in the South-west point, as 2 Gangomar in the North-east of it. 3 Antabosta. 4 Point-Antogil. 5 Santo-Jacobo. 6 Matatana. 7 Angoda. 8 Herendo. 9 Andro-arco; and 10 Roma, or New-Rome, so entituled by some zealous Romanist, in hope to have it thought that the Popes of Rome have got some footing in this Island.

This Island known, but very imperfectly, in the time of Marcus Paulus Venetus, who telleth us many strange things of it: but none more strange than that of the Bird called Ruck, of such incredible strength and bigness, that it could snatch up an Elephant as easily as a Kite doth a Chicken. Discovered by the Portugals in the year 1506. as before was said; and since frequented by the English and Holland Merchants: by whom we are informed no further touching the Estate and Affairs thereof, but that it is divided into four parts, under so many Kings, each of them in continual Wars against one another, but well enough agreed to defend themselves against the coming in of Strangers. Yet, as some say, they would be well enough content with an English Plantation: either in love to our Nation, whom they acknowledge to be more courteous than the Portugals, and not so covetous as the Dutch; or else by the strength of our Shipping, and the reputation of our interest in it, to keep off all others.

4. MOHELIA, & 5 MAURITIUS Island.

ADjoyning to Madagascar, and as it were attending on it, I find divers Islands; some on the North-west we have 1 Meottey. 2 Chamroe. 3 Mohelia. and 4 Joanna Island; on the East, 5 the Island of Mauritius, and 6 Englands Forrest. Of these Mauritius is the greatest, but Mohelia the best inhabited.

4. MOHELIA, situate on the North-west of Madagascar, is about 20 miles in length, and 16 in breadth: abounding in Goats, Hens Coconuts, Limons, Oranges, Pom-Citrons, Pulse, Sugar-canes; store of Fish taken on the Shores, and other necessaries. The people of complexion black, of composition large and strong; couragious, affable, less treacherous than their Neighbours of Madagascar. Of the same Language and Religion with those of Arabia, from whence they seem to have descended; but by reason of their commerce and intercourse with the Portugals, they speak that Tongue also. The Women of the like complexion, to amend which, and seem more lovely, they pink their arms and faces in several shapes. Both Sexes no otherwise apparelled than their natural garments, with some Plantane leaves about their middle to hide their shame.

Their Religion that of Mahomet, as before is said, their Priests in great esteem amongst them; so their Temples also: which they keep clean and neatly matted, not suffering any man to enter with his shoes on his feet. Their chief Town Meriangnea, at the West end of the Isle, strong and well garrisoned. Heretofore under the command of one King alone; of late divided into two Principalities; one of the last Kings leaving two daughters, the one married to a Native, the other to an Arabian Lord.

5. Larger than this, on the East of Madagascar, is the Isle of MAURITIUS, so called by the Hollanders in honour of Maurice Prince of Orange, in whose time they first set footing in it; but by the Portugals called De Cerne, and by some Cygnæa. In compass about 100 miles; well stored with Beeves, Hogs, Goats, most sorts of Fish: and liberally endowed with all the blessings of Nature, sweet Waters, most delicious Fruits, Woods fit for any use both of food and building; plenty of Ebony of all colours, but the best coal-black. Yet altogether destitute of humane Inhabitants: insomuch as we may say of this, as the Poet of the World, before Man was made:

> Sanctus his Animal, mentisque capacius altæ, > Deerat adhuc, & quod dominari in cætera posset.

Which may be Englished in these words:

> But yet the Chief, with Supream power possest,
> Was wanting, he that should command the rest.

Of the ATLANTICK OCEAN, and the Isles therein.

HAving thus looked upon such Islands as lie on the Eastern side of Africk in the Indian Ocean, let us come homeward by the Cape of good Hope, into the main Atlantick, the greatest body of Waters, which is given to us by one name in any of our Cosmographers, either old or new: A name peculiar to that part of the Western Ocean, which lieth between the Streights of Gibralter and the Land of Negroes, to which Mount Atlas sheweth it self with a cloudy top, and gives name to the Seas adjoyning, but generally communicated to all that vast Region of waters which lieth between Spain and Africk on the one side, and the New World, or America on the other side: Extended further by Strabo, and some other of the ancient Writers, who not knowing any thing of the interposition of America, carry the name of the Atlantick to the shores of India, which they make to be terminated by this Sea on the East and South. Macrobius goeth farther in it, affirming positively, omnem terram, quæ à nobis colitur, Atlantico mari (quod Oceanum appellamus) circumfundi, that the whole habitable World (so far as it was then known and peopled) was compassed round about with the Atlantick Ocean. The like affirmed by Julius Firmicus also, by Aristotle in his Book De Mundo, and by others, who have took it upon their Authority. And though some parts hereof, which wash the Western shores of Æthiopia Inferior, be called the Æthiopick Ocean; yet that doth derogate no more from the great extent that is given formerly to the main Atlantick, than that some parts of the Mediterranean should be called Mare Siculum, Sardoum, Tyrrhenum, Creticum, according to the shores of those several places which it passeth by; which having said in general of the Sea it self, according to our method in other places, we next proceed unto the rest of the African Islands, which we named before, but could not meet with but in this Sea, and this side of Africa.

6. St. HELENS, and 7. the Isles of ASCENSION.

AND the first Isle we meet with in this side of Africk is, 6. the Isle of St. Helens, situate on the West of the Cape of Good Hope, and in the 16 degree of the Southernly latitude, no other Island interposing betwixt Madagascar and it, except those of Don Alvarez, and of Tristram de Acugna, near the Cape it self; but of so little note, as not worth the naming. The Island very high and hilly, and mounting from the Sea with so steep an ascent, that the Mariners have amongst them a merry saying, that a man may choose whether he will break his heart going up, or his neck coming down.

It was thus called, because discovered by the Portugals on St. Helens day; not then inhabited, nor since; the King of Spain suffering none to dwell there, because it had been an unlawful Receptacle for uncustomed Goods; whereby he lost exceedingly both in Power and Profit. Stored by the Portugals at the first discovery, with Goats, Hogs, Hens, and other Creatures: as also with Figs, Limons, Oranges, and the like Fruits, which there thrive exceedingly, and grow all the year long. Intended by them for a Stage in their going and coming to and from the Indies: in which they might refresh themselves, and bestow their sick, whence they are taken off by the next years Fleet. Used for the same purpose by the English and Hollanders, who so domineer about the Island, that the Portugals dare not Anchor near it, or own their Property, if they see any shipping in the Rode. No buildings in it but the ruines of a little Chappel, destroyed by the Hollanders; and some fragment of a little Village begun by some Portugal Mariners, but demolished by the King of Spain.

7. North-west from hence is the Isle of Ascension, so called, because discovered on Ascension day, but not inhabited, nor any use at all made of it for ought I can find. Of the same bigness with St. Helens, 30 miles in compass, and about 700 English miles distant from it.

8. St. THOMAS, 9. The PRINCES Island, and 10. The Isle of ANNIBON.

8. THE Island of St. THOMAS is situate directly under the Æquator; of Orbicular form, the Diameter being 60 miles, by consequence the Perimeter or compass 180, and just so many from the shore of the Realm of Congo. At the first discovery nothing but a continual Forest, now very well inhabited both by Portugals and Negroes; these last brought hither from the opposite Continent: with whom the Air agrees so well, that they attain generally to 110 years of Age, few of the Portugals unto fifty. The Air so vehemently hot, that it sorteth not with the constitution of the Europæans.

The Country destitute of Wheat, which if sown here, turneth all to blade, and brings forth no Ear: nor will any Fruits here prosper, that have any stone in them: but so abundant in Sugar-canes, and well stored with Sugars, that 40 Ships are hence loaded yearly with that one Commodity; for making which, they have here 70 Ingenios, or Sugar-houses, and in each of them 200 Slaves, in some 300, which belong to the Works. Six days in seven these Slaves work for their Masters, and the seventh for themselves; which they spend in sowing and planting their Seeds, Fruits, and Provisions. Where, by the way, these Sugar-works, or Ingenios are a late Invention; the boiling and baking of Sugar (as it is now used) not being above 200 years old; and the refining of it more new than that: first found out by a Venetian in the days of our Fathers, who is said to have got above 100000 Crowns by this Invention, and to have left his Son a Knight; who (though he was no Knight of the Post) in very little time brought it all to nothing. Before which Art of boyling and refining Sugars, our Ancestors not having such luxurious Palates, sometimes made use of rough Sugar, as it came from the Canes; but most commonly pleased themselves with honey, more wholesome, because more natural than these forced inventions. But to proceed in the description of this Island, in the midst thereof there is said to be a woody Mountain, over-shadowed continually with Clouds: which so moisten the Trees that grow there in a great abundance, that from thence falleth a sufficient quantity of waters to refresh their fields, and feed their Sugar-canes, notwithstanding the extream heat of the Clime and Air.

The Religion here allowed of, is the Christian only, first preached here by the Portugals, or brought hither with them. The Church hereof governed by a Bishop, his Title, the Bishop of St. Thomas; but his charge extendeth also over all the Churches in the Realm of Congo. The principal City of it hath the name of Pavoasan, a Colony of Portugals, consisting of 700 Families, or about that number: situate on a fine River, and a pleasant Haven: seldom without the company of Portugal Merchants, who bring hither in exchange for Sugars, Wheat, Wine, Cheese, Hides, and other things more necessary than those Sugars for the life of Man. Took by the Hollanders in the year 1599, but again recovered, or abandoned; and since possessed again by the Hollanders, not as before by force of Arms, but by fraud and falshood, at the same time, and by the same dishoneſt Arts by which they made themselves Masters of the Castle of Angola, before mentioned. And though the Portugal Ambassador presented his injurious dealing to the States of Holland, yet all the answer he could get at the present, was, that their people had done nothing but what was justified by that clause of the Article, that both sides might take and keep whatsoever they could within such a time: and though the Ambassadour replied very rationally in behalf of his Country, and pressed the restitution both of this Island, and that Castle, by all honest arguments yet he could then get no reason from them: and whether they have done the Portugals any Justice since, as to those particulars, I am not able to determine.

9. THE PRINCES ISLAND, (Insula Principis in the Latine) so called, for that the Revenues of it were allotted to the Prince of Portugal; is situate in three degrees of the Northern Latitude. The Country very fruitful for the bigness of it; but not much observable, except it be for being taken for the Hollanders by Julian Clerehagen, Anno 1598. abandoned not long after to the former Owner. Attended as is fit for a Princes Island, by a Mess of Chaplains, viz. 1 the Isles of St. Matthew. 2 St. Cross. 3 St. Paul, and 4 St. Conception.

ception: and waited on by seven ſervants (ſo many Iſlands near Cape Verd) all in Coats of Green, called by one common name, Barbacene. But becauſe the former four yield no matter of Hiſtory, and theſe laſt ſeven have no other Inhabitants but Birds; we may be thought, having ſaid thus much of them, to have ſaid enough.

10. South-weſt hereof, but on the other ſide of the Line, lieth the Iſle of Annobon, (Inſula Annoboni as the Latines call it.) So named, becauſe diſcovered upon New-years-day. Inhabited, and of very good fiſhing all along the Coaſts of it; but that fiſhing made unſafe by Crocodiles, and other venomous and hurtful Creatures, which are ſaid to be about the ſhores in great abundance.

11. The GORGADES, or Iſles of CAPE VERD.

11. THe GORGADES, or Iſlands of Cape Verd, (Inſulæ Capitis Viridis, as the Latines call them) are nine in number; called by the laſt name, becauſe ſituate over againſt Cape Verd (Promontorium Capitis Viridis) in the Land of Negroes. Their names, 1 Saint Anthony. 2. Saint Vincent. 3. Buenaviſta. 4. Saint Lucies. 5. Inſula Salis, the Iſle of Salt. 6. Del Fogo, or the Iſle of Fire. 7. Saint Nicholas. 8. Maggio, or Majo. 9. Saint Jago. Some add to theſe a tenth, called Brava. Diſcovered all in the year 1440. by a Genoeſe called Antonio de Noli, imployed therein at the charges and direction of Henry Duke of Viſe, one of the younger Sons of King John of Portugal, the firſt of that name. Of the moſt, little to be ſaid. The principal, and indeed the only ones which are now inhabited, are Majo, Del Fogo, St. Jago. 1 Majo, is of moſt repute for a Lake of two Leagues long; the Waters whereof are by the heat of the Sun turned into Salt, which is here made in great abundance. 2. Del Fogo, is called from the flakes of fire which it ſends forth uſually; and fell ſo thick upon the Ship of Sir Anthony Sherley when he took the Iſland, Anno 1596, that one might have writ his name in the aſhes on the upper Deck, with the top of his finger. 3. The principal of all, St. Jago, yet but 7. miles long: Rocky and Mountainous, but full of very pleaſant Valleys, and well inhabited. The chief Town of it called Riblera, or Ribiera la Grande, a Colony of Portugals; ſituate on a fine River and a beautiful Haven: taken and ſacked by Sir Francis Drake, in the year 1585. and after by Sir Anthony Sherley, Anno 1596.

The names of Gorgades, as the more ancient of the two, is almoſt forgotten. Given to thoſe Iſlands, as ſuppoſed (but I cannot ſee upon what grounds) to be the ſeat of the Gorgons; the proper habitation, or dwelling place of Meduſa and her two fair Siſters. This Meduſa, ſaid or rather fabled by the Poets to have been a Woman of great beauty; who either for ſuffering her body to be abuſed by Neptune, in one of the Temples of Pallas, or for preferring her ſelf before Pallas, had by the ſaid Goddeſs, her hair turned into Snakes: and this property annexed unto them, that whoſoever looked on her, ſhould be turned into Stones: which quality was retained after ſhe was ſlain, and beheaded by Perſeus. Thus and far more fabulouſly the Poets. The Hiſtorians (for as ſome think, omnis fabula fundatur in hiſtoria) relate how this Meduſa was indeed a Lady of ſuch exceeding beauty, that all men that ſaw her were amazed: and of ſuch a wiſe and ſubtile brain, that for that cauſe only men attributed unto her a Serpents head. She abounding in wealth, and by Piracy moleſting the Seas of Europe, was invaded by an Army of Grecians, under the leading of Perſeus, who in a ſingle combat ſlew her. Perſeus when he plucked off her Helmet, admiring that beauty which he had deſtroyed, cut off her head, and carried it into Greece: where the people beyond meaſure wondred at the rare compoſure of her face, and the exceeding beauty of her hair; and are therefore ſaid to have by her head been metamorphoſed into Stones. Pauſanias in his Corinthiacks ſo reports the Story.

12. The CANARIES.

THe CANARIES are in number ſeven, ſituate over againſt the Coaſt of Lybia Interior; ſo called from Canaria, one of the principal of the number. By Pliny, Ptolomy, and other of the ancient Writers, they were called Inſulæ Fortunatæ, the Fortunate Iſlands: and amongſt them of greateſt note, for being made the fixed place of the firſt Meridian; removed ſince to St. Michaels one of the Azores. But thoſe Ancients knew but ſix of them by name, and in the naming of thoſe ſix do not well agree. By Pliny, whom Solinus followeth, they are ſaid to be, 1 Ombrio, 2 Junonia Major, 3 Junonia Minor, 4 Capraria, 5 Nivaria, and 6 Canaria. By Ptolomy thus reckoned. 1 Aprofitus, 2 Hera, (or Junonia) 3 Pluitania, 4 Caſperia, 5 Canaria, and 6 Pinenria. Where we may note alſo to our purpoſe, that though theſe Authors diſagree in all the reſt of the names (Junonia being added by the Tranſlator unto Ptolomies Hera) yet they agree in making Canaria to be one: which ſheweth that one to be of eminence enough, to give the name of Canary Iſlands unto all the reſt. Called Fortunate, from an opinion which the ancients had of their fruitfulneſs and other excellencies; in which reſpects ſeveral Countries in thoſe times had the names of Macaria, Felix, Fortunate. Now better known by the new names of 1 Canary. 2 Palma. 3. Teneriffe. 4 Gomero. 5 Ferro. 6 Lanſerotte, and 7. Fuerte Ventura.

1. CANARIA, or Canaria Magna, becauſe the biggeſt of the Cluſter is ſaid to be 90 miles in compaſs, and to contain 9000 perſons: Plentiful in Barley, Honey, Wax, Sugar-canes, Goats, Kine, and Camels; of which, and of their Cheeſe, and the skins of Beaſts they raiſe great profit: but from nothing more than from their Woad (whereof they have very great abundance) uſed by the Clothier for the well-colouring of his Cloath. From hence and from the other of theſe Iſlands which bear this name, come the fine ſinging Birds called Canary-birds; and ſo do alſo thoſe rich Wines, (the fruit of the Rheniſh Grape tranſplanted) which we call Canaries. A ſort of Wine, if not ſophiſticated and abuſed, which is ſaid to fume leſs into the head, pleaſe the palate more, and better help the natural weakneſs of a cold ſtomach (if moderately and diſcreetly uſed) than any other Wines whatſoever. Brought hence in ſuch abundance to ſupply our luxury, that no leſs than 3000 Tuns hereof are vended yearly into England and the Netherlands only.

2. PALMA, one of the leaſt in circuit, but as rich as any; fruitful in Wine and Sugars, abundantly well ſtored with Cattel, and great plenty of Cheeſe; and therefore made the victualling place of the Spaniſh Fleets as they paſs to Braſil and Peru. This Iſland together with Canary and Teneriffe, make up the Biſhoprick of the Canaries. One of the Biſhops whereof was that Melchior Canus a Dominican Frier; whoſe works now extant in defence of the Church of Rome, ſhew him to have been a moderate and learned man, and Maſter of a perfect Ciceronean ſtile. The reſidue of the Iſlands are of the Dioceſs of Madera.

3. TENARIFFE, ſomewhat leſs than the Grand Canary, but of the ſame fertility and condition with it, is moſt remarkable for a Mountain of ſo great an height, that it may be ſeen 90 leagues at Sea, in a fair clear day. Some reckon it 15 miles high, others 15 leagues, and ſome advance it to 60 miles, but with little credit. With truth enough moſt of our Travellers and Geographers hold it to be the higheſt in the whole world. The Form Pyramidal, in ſhape agreeing to thoſe Prodigies of Art and Wonder, the Egyptian Pyramids. The top whereof ending in a ſharp point, called the Pike of Tenariffe, is ſaid to be ſeldom without Snow; and therefore probably conceived to be the Nivaria of Pliny.

4. HIERO, or FERRI Inſula, ſo called from the Iron Mines therein, is by ſome thought to be the Pluitalia, by others the Aproſitus of Ptolomy; and ſome again more probably the Ombrio of Pliny, if this and Ptolomies Pluitalia be not one and the ſame, as for my part I think they be. And it might poſſibly have thoſe names in the Greek and Latine, becauſe it hath in it no freſh waters but what they do receive in ſhowers, and preſerve in Ciſterns: it being added by late Writers (which the Ancients knew not) that theſe ſhowers do daily fall upon them from the Leaves of a Tree, which alwayes covered with a Cloud doth diſtill theſe waters; preſerved in a large Ciſtern underneath the Tree, for the uſe of Man and Beaſt throughout the Iſland.

5. GOMERA, now as civil and well cultivated as any of the reſt, was the moſt barbarous of all, when firſt diſcovered: it being here and here only, the ordinary ſign and evidence of their Hoſpitality, to let their friends lie with their wives, and receive theirs in teſtimony of reciprocal kindneſs: for which cauſe here as in ſome places of the Indies, the ſiſters Son did uſe accuſtomably to inherit.

6. LANSAROTE, the firſt of theſe Iſlands which was made ſubject to the Crown of Caſtile, diſcovered by ſome adventurous Biſcains, An. 1393. by whom ſpoiled and pillaged, and the poor King and Queen thereof, and 170 of their Subjects of better quality, brought away Priſoners into Spain. On this diſcovery the Kings of Caſtile challenged a propriety in all theſe Iſlands; of which more anon. In this of Lanſarote there was an Epiſcopal See erected by Pope Martin the fifth, removed unto the Iſle of Canary in the time of Ferdinand the Catholick.

7. FUERTE VENTURA, of the ſame nature with the reſt, ſuppoſed to be the Capraria of Pliny, and the Caſperia of Ptolomy; but not elſe obſervable. Near unto theſe, but not within the name and notion of the Fortunate, or Canary Iſles, are certain others of leſs note; that is to ſay, 1 Gratioſa. 2 St. Clara. 3 Roca. 4 Lobos. 5 Alegranco; and 6. Infierno, ſmall and of no accompt, nor yielding any matter of obſervation.

The knowledge of theſe Iſlands being loſt with the Roman Empire, they lay concealed and undiſcovered till the year 1330. or thereabouts, when an Engliſh, or as ſome ſay, a French Ship, diſtreſſed by tempeſt, did in that misfortune fall upon them. Notice whereof being given in the Court of Portugal, in the Reign of King Alphonſo the Fourth, Lewis de Ordo was deſigned for the Conqueſt of them. Who being repulſed at Gomera, Anno 1334. gave the enterprize over, though on this ground the Portugals build their firſt claim unto theſe Iſlands. But the news ſpreading by degrees to the Court of Rome, Clement the Sixth thought fit to make a grant of them to Prince Lewis of Spain, Son of Alphonſo de la Cerde the right heir of Caſtile, by the old name of the Fortunate Iſlands; and to aſſiſt him in the Conqueſt, cauſed Levies of Souldiers to be made both in France and Italy. Which coming to the Ears of the Engliſh Ambaſſadours in the Popes Court, they feared that ſome tranſport had been made of the Britiſh Iſlands, (than which they thought that none could better deſerve the name of the Fortunate Iſlands) and in all haſte diſpatched a Poſt to the Court of England, for the preventing of the danger.

The people at the time of this firſt diſcovery, were ſo rude and ignorant, that they did eat their fleſh raw for want of fire; and tilled, or rather turned up the Earth with the horns of Oxen for want of Ploughs, or tools of Iron, their Beards they ſhaved with a ſharp Flint, and committed the care of their children to the nurſing of Goats. To kill a Beaſt was conceived to be the baſeſt office that could be poſſibly put upon them, and therefore commonly impoſed on Priſoners and condemned perſons; who being thus made the common Slaughter-men, were to live ſeparate from the reſt. Their Government by Kings, in each Iſland one; whom at their deaths, they ſet up naked in a Cave, propped againſt the Wall with a Staff in his hand, and a Veſſel of Milk faſt by him, the better to enable him for his Journey to the other World; and leaving him in the Grave with theſe ſolemn words, Depart in peace, O thou bleſſed Soul. The like Funeral they beſtowed alſo on the chief of their Nobles. Yet was not the Government in thoſe times ſo purely Regal, but that they had a Common-Council (as it were) out of all the Iſlands, conſiſting of 130 perſons: who did not only direct in Civil matters, but in Sacred alſo, preſcribing to the people both their Faith and Worſhip; and for their pains were priviledged with the firſt nights lodging with every Bride, which the Husband was to offer to ſome one of them.

But to return unto the Story, nothing being done by Lewis de la Cerde, in purſuance of the Popes Donation, it happened in the year 1393. that ſome Adventurers of Biſcay, ſetting out certain Ships from Sevil to ſeek their Fortunes at Sea, fell amongſt theſe Iſlands. And having pillaged Lanſarote, as before was ſaid, and obſerved the number, greatneſs and ſituation of all the reſt, returned into Spain with great ſtore of Wax, Hides, and other commodities, with which thoſe Iſlands did abound: extreamly welcome to King Henry, who then reigned in Caſtile, and did intend from that time forwards to poſſeſs himſelf of them. By Katharine one of the Daughters of John Duke of Lancaſter, the Dowager of this King Henry, during the minority of John the Second, the conqueſt of them was committed to John of Betancourt, an adventurous French man, (conditioned he ſhould hold them under the Soveraignty of the Crown of Caſtile) by whom four of the Iſlands were ſubdued, though he himſelf periſhed in the Action, Anno 1417. Young Betancourt the Son, not able to ſubdue Canary, to which moſt of the Iſlanders had retired, fortified himſelf as well as he could in the Iſle of Lanſarote, and took unto himſelf the Title of King; which he left not long after to one Menault; in whoſe time the Iſlands under his command command received the Goſpel, and had a See Epiſcopal in the Iſle of Lanſarote. But this new King making money by the ſale of his Subjects, (as well of the new Chriſtians, as the old Idolaters) complaint was made of him in the Court of Caſtile; and Pedro Barvade Campos with three Ships of War is ſent againſt him: with whom unable to contend, with the good leave and liking of the King of Caſtile, he ſold his intereſt in theſe Iſlands to one Fernando Peres a Knight of Sevil, who by the wealth and power of that City made good his purchaſe, and left it unto his Succeſſors. But we muſt know, that the poſterity of this Peres enjoyed the four leſſer Iſlands only; Canary it ſelf, Tenariffe, and the Iſle of Palms, being under the command of their own Kings. And ſo continued till the reign of Ferdinand the Catholick, who in the year 1483. under the conduct of Alphonſo of Mexica, and Pedro de Vera, two noble Captains, became Maſter of them; and tranſlated the Epiſcopal See from Lanſarote to the great Canary. So that although the Portugals claim theſe Iſlands in right of the firſt diſcovery, yet the poſſeſſion hath gone always with the Crown of Caſtile. Divided at the preſent into two Eſtates, (but the one ſubordinate to the other) Gomera, Lanſarote, and Hierra, being in the hands of ſome private Subjects; thoſe which belong unto the Crown, being Canaria, Palma, Tenariffe, and Fuerte Ventura, are ſaid to yield yearly to the King 50000 Ducats; the Seat of Juſtice being fixed in the Iſle of Canaria, unto which all the reſt reſort as they have occaſion.

13. MADERA, and 14. HOLY-PORT.

13. MADERA, the greateſt Iſland of the Atlantick, is ſituate in the Latitude of 32. over againſt the Cape of Cantin in Morocco; in compaſs 140 miles, ſome add 20 more. So called of the Wilderneſs of Trees there growing, when firſt diſcovered; the Portugals naming that Madera, which the Latines call Materia, and we Engliſh Timber: with which the Iſle was ſo over-grown, that the beſt way to clear it and make it habitable, was by conſuming them with fire; which raged ſo horribly for the time, that the people imployed in it were fain to go far into the Sea to refreſh themſelves. But the Husbandry was well beſtowed, the Aſhes making ſo good compoſt to enrich the Soil, (as burning the Turff of barren Lands, and ploughing the Aſhes of it, on ſome grounds with us) that at the firſt it yielded ſixty-fold increaſe. And though the firſt vertue of that experiment be long ſince decayed, yet ſtill it yieldeth thirty-fold in moſt places of it; fruitful withal of a kind of Plant uſed in dying Clothes, which is hence called Mader; and of Sugarcanes in ſuch a wonderful manner, that for a time the fifths of the Sugars herein made amounted yearly to 60000 Arrobes; now not half ſo much. The Iſle wonderfully fruitful alſo of Honey, Wax, rich Fruits, and the choiceſt Wines; the Slips whereof were brought from Candy, bringing forth here more Grapes than leaves, and Cluſters of two, three, and four ſpans long. The Hills well ſtored with Goats, the Plains with numerous Herds of Cattle; the Woods with Peacocks, Thruſhes, Pigeons: theſe laſt ſo ignorant of the injury which Man might do them, that at the firſt coming of the Portugals thither, they would ſuffer themſelves to be taken up; but now have wit enough to keep out of danger.

The whole Iſland in all parts well watered, having beſides many pleaſant Springs, eight handſom Riverets, wherewith the Earth refreſhed and moiſtned, yields the ſweeter Herbage; which otherwiſe by reaſon of the heat of the Air (never very cool) might not be ſo nouriſhing. The chief City of it hath the name of Fonchial, the See of an Archbiſhop, and the Seat of Juſtice: known to the Romans by the name of Junonis, or Antolala, as many learned men conceive, and again forgotten; it was of later times diſcovered by one Machan, an Engliſh man, who was caſt upon it by a tempeſt, An. 1344. who burying there his wife, or ſome other woman which he had in his company, writ on her Tomb his name, and coming thither, with the cauſe thereof; which gave the Portugals occaſion to look further after it. Deſolate, and unpeopled at the firſt diſcovery, now exceeding populous: and of no ſmall advantage to the Crown of Portugal, to which firſt united, An. 1420. under the conduct of Prince Henry before mentioned.

14. INSULA PORTUS SANCTI, or the Iſle of HOLY-PORT, is diſtant from Madera about 40 miles; neighbouring the Coaſts of Mauritania Tingitana, and therefore probably conceived to be the Cerne of Ptolomy. So called, becauſe diſcovered by ſome Portugal Mariners (by the direction and encouragement of the ſaid P. Henry) on Allhallows day, An. 1428. Deſolate and unhabited at the firſt diſcovery, but now very well peopled. In compaſs about 15 miles; well ſtored with Corn and Fruits, great ſhoals of Fiſh upon their ſhores, plenty enough of Beeves and Goats: but ſuch abundance of Conies (bred of one Doe Coney brought thither when great with young) that the Inhabitants were no leſs peſtered with them in theſe later times, than the Baleares were of old; inſomuch that they were out of hope to withſtand the miſchief, or repair the damages ſuſtained by them. A little Iſland not far off, breedeth nothing elſe.

The chief Town of it Porto Santo, or Holy-Port, ſeated on a convenient Rode, but a ſorry Haven, was taken by Sir Amias Preſton, in our Wars with Spain, An. 1596. but being ſacked and ſpoiled, was again abandoned. In former times called Cerne, as before was ſaid, and reckoned for the moſt remote Colony which the Carthaginians or Phœnicians had in the Weſtern Ocean; beyond which they conceived the Sea to be unnavigable, (proved otherwiſe by Hanno's Voyage) choaked with mud and weeds. Called therefore Cerne ultima (Æthiopum populos alit ultima Cerne) by Feſtus Rufus, and others of the Ancient Writers.

15. THE HESPERIDES.

15. THe HESPERIDES, by Pliny and Pomponius Mela, are ſaid to be two in number, ſituate in the Atlantick Seas, but we find not where. Much memorized and chanted by the ancient Poets, for giving a ſafe and pleaſant habitation to the Daughters of Atlas (which they call by the name of Heſperides alſo;) the curious Gardens by them planted, and the Golden Apples of it which were kept by a Dragon, and took hence by Hercules. But the Hiſtorians remove theſe Gardens out of the Sea, into the main Land of Africk, and fix them in Cyrene, where already ſpoken of. Which notwithſtanding, it is granted that there were anciently ſome Iſlands in the Atlantick Ocean, noted by this name, and ſaid to be exceeding fruitful of their own accord: and therefore probably the ſame which Plutarch in the life of Sertorius calleth Inſulæ Atlanticæ, and deſcribes them thus: Αἱ δὲ μάλ' εἰσὶ, λίψῳ πνεύματος πρὸς μεσημβρίαν διαχωρούσαι, &c. They are (ſaith he) two Iſlands parted by a narrow Streit of the Sea, diſtant from the main Land of Africk 10000 furlongs, which in our accompt cometh to 1250 miles) called alſo the Iſles

"Isles of Blessed Souls, and the Fortunate Islands. They "have rain there very seldom, but a fine sweet Dew, "which makes the Earth exceeding fruitful both for til-"lage and planting Fruits, which sometimes grow with-"out any care or labour of the Husbandman; sufficient "by their plenty and sweetness to maintain the people, "much given to ease, and hardly troubling themselves "with any business. The Air for the most part very "temperate, never extream in any changes of the Sea-"son; the rigour of the Northern and Eastern Winds, "being by so long a passage thither very much abated; "as on the other side the Western and South-Eastern "Winds, do much refresh it with such Mists as they bring "from the Sea, to the great comfort of the people. A "place so generally sweet, that the Barbarous people in "it have a constant and approved opinion, that these "should be the Elysian Fields, the seats of the blessed "Souls departed, described by Homer: with the re-"port whereof Sertorius was so highly taken, that he in-"tended to have given over the pursuit of the Civil "Wars, and there to spend the rest of his days in peace "and happiness; which he had done, if the Cilicians, "men accustomed unto spoil and rapine, had not took "him off. So far and to this purpose Plutarch. But what these Islands are, and where now to be found, (for in regard of their great distance from the Coast of Africk, they cannot be the Fortunate Islands spoken of before) I cannot easily determine: unless we should conjecture, as Ortelius doth, that they are the Islands of Cuba and Hispaniola, on the Coasts of America; to the Story and Chorography whereof we are now to hasten.

And so much for the Isles of AFRICK.

PART II.

CONTAINING THE CHOROGRAPHY and HISTORY
AMERICA,
AND ALL THE
Principal Kingdoms, Provinces, Seas, and Islands of it.

Of AMERICA.

AMERICA, the fourth and last part of the World, is bounded on the East with the Atlantick Ocean and the Vergivian Seas, by which parted from Europe and Africa, which Seas the Mariners call Mare del Noordt; on the West, with the Pacifick Ocean, by the Mariners called Mare del Zur, which divides it from Asia; on the South, with some part of Terra Australis Incognita, from which separated by a long but narrow Streight, called the Streights of Magellan: the North bounds of it hitherto not so well discovered, as that we can certainly affirm it to be Island or Continent.

It is called by some, and that most aptly, THE NEW WORLD: New, for the Late Discovery; and World, for the vast greatness of it. The most usual, and yet somewhat the more improper name, is that of America; because Americus Vespusius, an adventurous Florentine, discovered a great part of the Continent of it. But since the first light he had to find out those Parts came from the Directions and Example of Columbus, who first led the way; and that Sebastian Cabot touched at many places which Americus Vespusius never saw, it might as properly have been called Columbana, Sebastiana, or Cabotia. The most improper name of all, and yet not much less used than that of America, is the West-Indies: West, in regard of the Western situation of it from these parts of Europe; and Indies, either as mistook for some part of India, at the first Discovery, or else because the Seamen used to call all Countries, if remote and rich, by the name of India.

Many are of opinion, but rather grounded on conjectural Presumptions, than demonstrative Arguments, that America was known long before our late Discoveries. Their Reasons drawn, 1. From the Doctrine of the Antipodes, which being maintained by many of the Ancient Writers, inferreth (as they think) a knowledge of these parts of the World which are opposite to us. But unto this it may be answered, that the knowledge of the Antipodes amongst the Ancients was by Supposition, at the best by Demonstration only, & not in fact: or thus, that it was known that there were Antipodes, but the Antipodes were not known. 2. It is said that Hanno, a Noble Carthaginian, discoverd a great Island in the Western Ocean, and after a long Voiage returned home again, not wanting Sea-room, but Victuals, as he told the Senate. But he that writ the actions of Hanno in this famous Voiage, (which some conceive to be Hanno himself) informs us that he sailed not West-wards, but more towards the South: and therefore this Great Island, whatsoever it was, (whether Madera, or some one of the Fortunate Islands, I determine not) could not be America. 3. It is alledged that Plato in his Timæus speaks of a great Island of the Atlantick Ocean, Lybiam & Africam adæquans, (as out of him Tertullian hath it) as big as Lybia and Africk, properly so called: which he confesseth to be drowned long before his time, and therefore possibly never extant but in some mens fancies. 4. That Aristotle in the Book de Mundo (if that Book be his) speaks of an Island very fruitful, and full of Navigable Rivers, discovered by the Carthaginians, and by them forbidden to be planted upon pain of death. Which Island being affirmed by that Author to be Multorum dierum itinere à Gadibus remota, hath made some men conceive it to be this America, or some of the great Islands of it. As if it might not as well be one of the Azores, or perhaps Madera, or some other of the Islands in the Road of Hanno's Voyage. Certain I am, that one of the best Friends the Phœnicians have, who would not gladly lose such an opportunity of ennobling their performances in Navigation, (could any thing be built upon it) doth wave the whole Relation as of doubtful credit; and knoweth of no such place as is there described by that Author, whosoever he were. 5 Some have produced these Verses of Seneca, to infer a knowledge of this Country amongst the Ancients, viz.

Veniet annis sæcula seris,
Quibus Oceanus vincula rerum
Laxet, & ingens pateat Tellus,
Novosque Typhis detegat Orbes,
Nec sit Terris ultima Thule.

Which may be Englished in these words:

In the last days an Age shall come
Wherein the all devouring Foam
Shall lose its former bounds, and shew
Another Continent to view.
New Worlds, which Night doth now conceal,
A second Typhis shall reveal;
And frozen Thule shall no more
Be of the Earth the farthest Shore.

But this Argument can bring no necessary, nor so much as a probable inference, of any such Continent as this, then known to Seneca: the Poet in that Chorus shewing as well the continual dangers as the possible effects of Navigation; that there might be, not that there were, more Lands discovered then those formerly known. 6 Some hold this Country to be the Land of Ophir, to which Solomon is said in the holy Scriptures to have sent for Gold. But Ezion-Geber, which is there also said to be the station where his Navy lay, was situate in the bottom of the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia: whereas if he had sent this way, his shipping must have lain at Joppa, or some other Port of the Mediterranean, and from thence set forwards through the Streights of Gibraltar, and so plainly Westward. 7 Finally, in the History of Wales, writ by David Powel, it is reported that Madoc the Son of Owen Gwinedth Prince of Wales, of purpose to decline engaging in a Civil War raised in that Estate, in the year 1170. put himself to Sea, and after a long course of Navigation came into this Country: where after he had left his men, and fortified some places of advantage in it, he returned home for more Supplies, which he carried with him in ten Barks; but neither he nor they looked after by the rest of that Nation. To which some add, that here is still some smattering of the Welch or British tongue to be found amongst them; as that a Bird with a white head is called Pengwin, and the like: in which regard some sorry States-men went about to entitle Queen Elizabeth unto the Soveraignty of these Countries. Others, more wise, dissuaded from that vain Ambition, considering that Welch-men, as well as others, might be cast upon those parts by force of Tempest, and easily implant some few words of their own among the People there inhabiting. And though I must needs say for the honour of Wales, that they have more grounds for what they say, then those which look for this New World in the Atlantis of Plato, the Atlantick Islands of Aristotle and Plutarch, or the Discoveries of Hanno the Carthaginian: yet am I not so far convinced of the truth thereof, the use of the Mariner's Compass being not so ancient, (without which such a Voyage could not be performed) but that I may conclude with more satisfaction, that this Country was unknown to the former Ages.

But now, as Mela the Geographer said once of Britain, then newly conquered by the Romans, Britannia qualis sit, quakque progeneret, mox certiora & magis explorata dicentur; quippe jam diu clausam aperit ecce Principum maximus, (he means Claudius Cæsar) nec indomitarum modo sed & incognitarum ante sæ Gentium Victor: so may we say of America, on these late Discoveries. What kind of Countrey it is, and what men it produceth, we do and shall know more certainly then in former times; since those puissant Kings of Spain have laid open almost all the parts thereof, inhabited not onely by unvanquished, but even unknown Nations. For God remembring the promise of his Son, that his Gospel before the end of the World should be preached to all Nations, stirred up one Christopher Colon, or Columbus, born at Nervy, in the Seigniory of Genoa, to be the Instrument for finding out those parts of the World, to which the sound of the Gospel had not yet arrived. Who being a man of great abilities, and born to undertake great matters, could not perswade himself (the motion of the Sun considered) but that there was another World to which that Glorious Planet did impart both his Light and Heat, when he went from us. This World he purposed to seek after, and opening his Design to the State of Genoa, Anno 1486. was by them rejected. On this repulse, he sent his Brother Bartholomew to King Henry the Seventh of England; who in his way hapned unfortunately into the hands of Pirats, by them detained a long while, but at last inlarged. As soon as he was set at liberty, he repaired to the Court of England; where his Proposition found such a chearful entertainment at the hands of the King, that Christopher Columbus was sent for to come thither also. But GOD had otherwise disposed of his rich purchase. For Christopher, not knowing of his Brothers imprisonment, nor hearing any tidings from him, conceived the offer of his Service to have been neglected; and thereupon made his desires known at the Court of Castile: where, after many delays, and six years attendance on the business, he was at last furnished with three Ships onely, and those not for Conquest, but Discovery. With this small strength he sailed on the main Ocean more then 60 days, yet could see no Land, so that the discontented Spaniards began to mutiny; & partly out of scorn to be under the Command of a Stranger, partly desirous to return, would not go a Foot forwards. Just at that time it happened that Columbus did discern the Clouds to carry a clearer colour than they did before: and probably conceiving that this clearness proceeded from some nigh habitable place, restrained the time of their expectation within the compass of three days, passing his word to return again, if they did not see Land within that time. Toward the end of the third day, one of the Company, called Rodrigo de Triane (he deserves to have his name recorded, being no otherwise rewarded for such joyful News) descried Fire, an evident Argument that they they drew near unto some Shore. The place discovered was an Island on the Coast of Florida, by the Natives called Guahanani; by Columbus, S. Saviours; now counted one of the Lucaios. Landing his men, and causing a Tree to be cut down, he made a Cross thereof, which he erected near the place where he came on Land; and by that Ceremony took possession of this NEW WORLD for the Kings of Spain, Octob. 11. Anno 1492. Afterwards he discovered and took possession of Hispaniola; and with much Treasure and Content returned towards Spain. Preferred for this good Service by the Kings themselves, first to be Admiral of the Indies, and afterwards to a Coat of Arms with this Inscription, For Castile and Leon Columbus hath gotten a NEW WORLD; and in conclusion unto the Title of Duke De La Vega, in the Isle of Jamaica. News of this fortunate Discovery being sent to Pope Alexander VI. by the Kings of Castile, he very liberally bestowed upon them all those Countreys which they already had, or should afterwards discover in the Western World; advising them to use their Diligence and Endeavours for converting those People to the Faith: which was done accordingly. For the next year Columbus being furnished with 18 Ships for more Discoveries, and his Brother Bartholomew made Governour of the Countreys discovered by him, they took along with them one Buyl, a Benedictine Monk, as the Popes Vicar-General, accompanied with the learned Clerks which were to be Assistants to him in the converting of that People to the Christian Faith. In this second Voyage, he discovered the Islands of Cuba and Jamaica, and built the Town of Isabella (afterwards better known by the name of Domingo) in Hispaniola; from whence, for some Severities used against the mutinous Spaniards, he was sent Prisoner into Castile, but very honourably entertained, and absolved from all the Crimes imputed to him. In the year 1497. he began his third Voyage, in which he discovered the Countreys of Paria and Cumana, on the firm Land, with the Islands of Cubagna and Margarita, with many other Islands, Capes, and Provinces, which shall be touched upon particularly in their several places. In the year 1500 he began his fourth and last Voyage, in the course whereof, coming to Hispaniola, he was unworthily denied entrance into the City of Domingo, by Nicholas de Ovendo, the then Governour of it: after which, scouring along the Sea-coasts as far as Nombre de Dios, but adding little to the fortune of his former Discoveries, he returned back to Cuba and Jamaica, and from thence to Spain, where about six years after (that is to say, Ann. 1506.) he departed this Life, and was honourably interred at Sevil, where to this day remaineth this Epitaph on his Tomb, bald in it self, and otherwise exceeding short of so great a Merit. Of which I must tell you by the way, that the Philip whom the Versifier (I do not say the Poet) called Philippus Hispanus, should rather have been called Philippus Austriacus, or Philippus Burgundus, as being meant of that Philip of Austria, Duke of Burgundy, who had then married Joan, sole Daughter and Heir of the King of Spain, and after the death of Isabella succeeded in the Realm of Castile: or else the Epitaph must be written long after his death, and meant of Philip the II. Son of Charles the Fifth, who was not born until the year 1527. and came not to the Crown above twenty years after. Now for this Epitaph, such as it is, it is this that followeth:

Christophorus genuit quem Genoa clara Columbus,

Litora detexit, Hispano parentia Philippo;
Addenda hinc aliis plura & majora relinquens.

Which may be Englished in these Words:

I Christopher Columbus, whom the Land
Of Genoa first brought forth, first took in hand,
I know not by what Deity incited,
To scour the Western Seas, and was delighted
To seek for Countreys never known before,
Crown'd with Success, I first descry'd the Shore
Of the NEW WORLD, then destin'd to sustain
The future Yoke of Philip Lord of Spain.
And yet I greater matters left behind,
For Men of more Means, and a Braver Mind.

Dying he left two Sons behind him: of which the youngest, called Ferdinand, died unmarried; the eldest, called Diego, succeeded his Father in the Admiralty of the Indies, and the Dukedom of Vega, and married Mary of Toledo, Daughter of Ferdinand Duke of Alva; but having (as it seemeth) no Issue by her, he spent the greatest part of his Estate in founding the Library at Sevil, spoken of before, which he furnished with 12000 Volumes, and endowed with a liberal Revenue to maintain the same. But though his Family be extinct, yet his Fame shall live, renowned to all Posterities, as the first Discoverer of this New World, and consequently the greatest and most fortunate Advancer of the Spanish Monarchy; though in his life-time so maligned by most part of the Spaniards, that Bobadilla, being sent into those parts for redress of Grievances, loaded him with Irons, and returned him Prisoner into Spain. Nor did they onely stick after his death to deprive him of the honour of this Discovery, (attributing it to I know not what Spaniard, whose Charts & Descriptions he had seen) but in his life would often say that it was a matter of no such difficulty to have found these Countreys; and that if he had not done it when he did, some body else might have done it for him. Whose peevishness he confuted by this modest Artifice, desiring some of them, who insolently enough had contended with him touching this Discovery, to make an Egg stand firmly upon one of its ends. Which when they could not do upon many Trials, he gently bruising one end of it, made it stand upright; letting them see without any farther reprehension, how easie it was to do that thing which we see another do before us.

But to proceed, Columbus having thus led the way, was seconded by John Cabot a Venetian, the Father of Sebastian Cabot, in behalf of Henry the Seventh of England; who in the year 1497. discovered all the North-East Coasts hereof, from the Cape of Florida in the South, to Newfound-Land, and Terra di Laborador in the North, causing the Royelets to turn Homagers to that King, and the Crown of England. Next after him succeeded Americus Vespusius, an adventurous Florentine, employed therein by Emanuel King of Portugal, Anno 1501. on a design of finding out a nearer way to the Molucca's than by the Cape of good Hope, who though he passed not farther than the Cape of S. Augustines in Brasil, without so much as having a sight of the Great River de la Plata, which washeth the South parts of that Country; yet from him (to the great Injury and Neglect of the first Discoverers) the Continent or Main Land of this Countrey hath the name of America; by which it is still known, and most commonly called. Followed herein by divers private Adventurers and Undertakers out of all parts of Europe bordering on the Ocean. Ferdinand Magellanus was the first that compassed the whole World, and found the South passage, called Fretum Magellanicum to this day: followed herein by Drake and Cavendish of England. Frobisher and Davis attempted a Discovery of the North-west passage; Willoughby and Burroughs of the North-east.

east. So that, according to that elegant saying of the learned Verulam in his Advancement of Learning, this Great Building, the World, had never through-Lights made in it, till these our days: by which, as almost all parts of Learning, so in especial this of Navigation, and by consequence of Cosmography also, hath obtained an incredible Proficiency in these later times.

For in the Infancy and first Ages of the World, (pardon me, I beseech you, this short but not unprofitable Digression) men lived at home, neither intent upon any forreign Merchandise, nor inquisitive after the Lives and Fortunes of their Neighbours; or in the Language of the Poet,

Nondum cæsa suis, peregrinum ut viseret Orbem, Montibus, in liquidas Pinus, descenderat undas.

The Pine left not the Hills on which it stood,
To seek strange Lands, or rove upon the Flood.

But when the Providence of God had instructed Noah how to build the Ark, for the preservation of himself and his Children from the general Deluge, the Posterity which descended from him, had thereby a pattern for the making of Ships and other Vessels (perfected in more length of time) whereby to make the Waters passable, and maintain a necessary intercourse betwixt Nation and Nation. 'Tis true, the Heathen Writers, which knew not Noah, attribute the invention of Shipping to sundry men, according to such Informations or Traditions as they had received: Strabo to Minos King of Crete; Diodorus Siculus to Neptune, who was therefore called the God of the Seas; and Tibullus to the people of Tyre, (a Town indeed of great Wealth and Traffick, and the most famous Empory of the elder times) saying,

Prima Ratem ventis credere dicta Tyrus.

The Tyrians first the Art did find
To make Ships travel with the Wind.

And questionless the Tyrians, and the rest of the Phœnicians, enjoying a large Sea coast, and many safe and capacious Havens, being in these times most strong at Sea, and making so many fortunate Navigations into most parts of the then known World, might give the Poet some good colour for his affirmation. From the Phœnicians, the Egyptians (their next Neighbours) might derive the Art of Navigation; though being an ingenious people, they did add much to it. For whereas the first Vessels were either made of the body of some great Tree, made hollow by the Art of Man, or else of divers Rods or Twigs fashioned into a Boat, and covered with the Skins of Beasts, (which we have spoken of before, when we were in Sanguebar, and which are still in use amongst these Americans) the Phœnicians brought them first into strength and form; but the Egyptians added Decks unto them. By Danaus King of Egypt, when he fled from his Brother Rameses, the use of Shipping was first brought amongst the Græcians, who before that time knew no other way of crossing their narrow Seas, but on Beams or Rafters tied to one another. Nave primus ab Egypto Danaus advenit; antè enim Ratibus navigabatur, as it is in Pliny: where we may see the true and genuine difference betwixt Ratis and Navis; though now both be used indifferently for all sorts of Shipping. Amongst the Græcians, those of Crete were the ablest Sea-men; which gave occasion to Aristotle to call Crete the Lady of the Seas; and to Strabo, to make Minos the Inventor of Ships. In following times the Carthaginians, being a Colony of Tyre, were most considerable in this kind, and by the benefit of their Shipping much distressed the Romans. But so it hapned (as all things do and must concur to Gods publick purposes in the alteration of Estates) that a Tempest separating a Quinqueremis, or Gally of five banks of Oars, from the rest of the Carthaginian Fleet, cast it on the Shore of Italy; by which accident the Romans learning the Art of Ship-wrights, soon became Masters of the Sea. That France and Spain were taught the use of Shipping by the Greeks and Phœnicians, is a thing past questioning; Marseilles in the one being a Phocean, and Gades in the other a Tyrian Colony. As for the Belgians and the Britains, it is probable that they first learnt it of the Romans, (though formerly they had some way to transport themselves from one Shore to the other) for Cæsar telleth us of the Belgæ, Ad eos Mercatores minimè commeant, that they were not at all visited by foreign Merchants. And the same Cæsar found the Seas betwixt France and Britain so ill furnished with Vessels, that he was fain to make Ships to transport his Army: Singulari militum studio circiter sexcentas & duodetriginta Naves invenit, as his own words are.

Having thus brought Navigation to the greatest height which it had in those days; let us look back again on the Inventors of particular Vessels, and the Tackle unto them belonging. That the Phœnicians first invented open Vessels, and the Egyptians Ships with Decks, hath been said before: and unto them also is referred the Invention of Gallies, with two Banks of Oars upon a side; which kind of Vessels grew so large in the course of time, that Ptolomy Philopater is said to have made a Gally of Fifty Banks. Great Ships of Burthen called Circerus, we owe to the Cypriots; Cock-boats, or Skiffs, (Scaphus) to the Illyrians, or Liburnians; Brigantines, (Celoces) to the Rhodians; and Frigots or light Barks, (Lembos) unto the Cyrenians. The Phaseli and Pamphyli (which we may render Men of War) were the Invention of the Pamphylians, and the Inhabitants of Phaselis, a Town of Lycia, in Asia Minor. As for Tackle, the Bœotians invented the Oar; Dædalus, and his Son Icarus, the Masts and Sails: Which gave occasion to the Poets to feign, that flying out of Crete, they made Wings to their Bodies; and that Icarus soaring too high, melted the Wax which fastened his Wings unto his Shoulders, and thereby perished: the truth being, that presuming too much on this new invention, he ran himself upon a Rock, and was cast away. For Hippagines, Vessels for transporting of Horse, we are indebted to the Salaminians; for Grapling-hooks, to Anacharsis; for Anchors, to the Tuscans; and for the Rudder, Helm, or Art of Steering, to Typhis, the chief Pilot in the famous Argo, who noting that a Kite when she flew, guided her whole Body by her Tail, effected that in the devices of Art, which he had observed in the Works of Nature. By these helps some great Voiages were performed in the elder times; the greatest, those of Jason, Ulysses, and Alexander, with the Fleets of Solomon and the Egyptian Kings. Of these, Jason and his Companions sailed in the Ship called Argo, through the Euxine Sea, and part of the Mediterranean; Ulysses, through the Mediterranean onely; small Gullets, if compared with the Ocean. Alexander's Journey, so famous, and accounted then so hazardous, was but sailing down the River Indus, and four hundred furlongs into the Ocean. And for the Fleets of Solomon, and the Kings of Egypt, it is very apparent that they went with great leisure, and crawled close by the Shore-side: otherwise it had been impossible to have consumed three whole years in going from Exion-Geber into India, and returning again; which was the usual time of these Voyages, as appeareth in 1 King. 10. 22. After the fall of the Roman Monarchy, the most potent States by Sea in the Mediterranean were the Genoese and Venetians, in the Ocean the English and the the Hanse-Towns, neither of which ever attempted any great Discoveries.

But in the year 1300, one Flavio of Malphi in the Realm of Naples found out the Compass, or Pyxis Nautica, consisting of 8 Winds only, the four principal, and four collateral: and not long after, the people of Bruges and Antwerp perfected that excellent Invention, adding 24 other subordinate Winds or Points. By means of this excellent Instrument, and withal by the good success of Columbus, the Portugals Eastwards, the Spaniards Westwards, and the English Northwards, have made many glorious and fortunate Expeditions: which had been utterly impossible to have been performed, and had been foolishly undertaken when that Help was wanting. I know there hath been much pains taken by some Learned men to prove the use of the Mariner's Compass to be far more ancient than is now commonly pretended. Fuller, a very learned and industrious man, but better skilled in the Hebrew Tongue than the Philologie of the Greeks and Latines, will have it known to Solomon, and by him taught unto the Tyrians and Phœnicians, (the most famous Sea-men of old times:) but he brings no Argument of weight to make good the cause. Nor is it possible that such an Excellent Invention, so beneficial to the common Good of all Mankind, should have been forgotten and discontinued for the space of more than 2000 years, if ever the Tyrians and Phœnicians had been Masters of it; who could not possibly conceal it (had they been so minded) from the common Mariners, or they not have communicated it for Gain, or desire of Glory, to the Greeks and Romans, under whom successively they lived. As little moment do I find in some other Arguments; as that the Lapis Heraclius of the ancient Writers, or the Versoria of Plautus, should be by them intended of the Mariner's Compass. For plainly the Versoria of Plautus is no other than that piece of Tackle which our Mariners now call the Bolin; by which they use to turn their Sails, and fit them to the change of every Wind. And so much doth appear by the Poet himself, in the Comedy which he calls Mercator, saying, Hinc ventus nunc secundus est, cape modo Versoriam. So called from Verso, to turn often; or from Versum, the first Supine of Verto: whence Velum vertere is a common phrase amongst the Latines, used for the shifting of the Sail as the Wind doth vary. As for the Load-stone, it is called indeed Heraclius Lapis, Ἡρακλεια λίθος by the Greeks: not because Hercules Tyrius, whom the Phœnicians invocated when they were at Sea, had first found out the Virtue of it, as our Fuller thinketh but because first found near Heraclea, a City of Lydia; Κέκληνται δ' ὅτως ἀπὸ Ἡρακλείας τῆς ἐν Λυδίᾳ πόλεως, saith Hesychius, the old Grammarian. Called for the same reason Magnes, by the Writers both Greek and Latine; because first found in the Territory of Magnesia, a City of Lydia also, whereof Heraclea was a part. So Suidas telleth us of the Greeks, Ἡρακλειαν λίθον τινὲς τῆς Μαγνησίας ἀπὸ χώρας, διὰ τὸ τὴν Ἡράκλειαν τῆς Μαγνησίας εἶναι, Heraclium Lapidem quidam Magnesiam reddiderunt, quia Heraclea pars est Magnesiæ. Called for the very same reason Lydius Lapis also, but by them known onely as a Touchstone. Thus old Lucretius for the Latines, > Quem Magneta vocant patrio de nomine Graii, > Magnetum quia sit patriis de finibus ortus.

>
> Which Stone the Greeks do Magnes name,
> Because it from Magnesia came.

But I have rambled farther than I did intend, drawn by the virtue of the Load-stone too much out of my way. It is time now to return again into America, where the Spaniards at their first arrival found the People without all manner of Apparel, nought skilled in Agriculture, making their Bread either of a Plant called Maize, or a kind of Root called Jucca: a Root wherein is a venomous Liquor, not inferiour to the most deadly Poysons; but having first squeezed out this Juice, and after dried and prepared the Root, they made their Bread of it. They worshipped Devillish Spirits, whom they called Zemes; in remembrance of whom they kept certain Images made of Cotton-wool, like our Childrens Babies; to which they did great Reverence, as supposing the Spirit of the Zemes to be in them: and to blind them the more, the Devil would cause these Puppets to seem to move, and to make a noise. They stood also in so great fear of them, that they durst not displease them: for if their wills were not fulfilled, the Devil straight executed vengeance upon some of their Children; so holding this infatuated People in perpetual Thraldom. So ignorant they were of all things which they had not seen, that they thought the Christians to be Immortal: wondring exceedingly at the Sails, Masts, and Tacklings of their Ships; themselves knowing no Ships or other Vessels, but huge Troughs made of some great-bodied Tree. But this opinion of the Christians Immortality (in the sense they meant it) did not long continue: for having taken some of them, they held their heads under the Water till they had quite choaked them; by which they knew them to be mortal, like other men. Quite destitute of all good Learning, they reckoned their time by a confused Observation of the course of the Moon: and strangely admired to see the Spaniards know the Health and Affairs of one another, onely by reading of a Letter. Of a plain and honest nature, for the most part, they were found to be; loving and kind in their Entertainments, and apt to do good Offices, both private and publick, according to their Understandings: encouraged thereunto by an opinion which they had, that beyond some certain Hill (but they knew not where) those which lived honestly and justly, or offered up their Lives in defence of their Countrey, should find a place of everlasting Peace and Happiness. So natural is the knowledge of the Souls Immortality, and of some Ubi for the future Reception of it, that we find some Tract or other of it in most barbarous Nations. And as for Gold and Silver, which the new-come Christians so adored, they esteemed them no otherwise then as dross: though many times they adorned themselves therewith for the colour's sake; as they did also with Shells, Feathers, and the like fine Gew-gaws.

Of Complexion most of these Americans were reasonably fair and clear, little inclining unto Blackness: notwithstanding that a great part of this Country lieth under the same parallel with Æthiopia, Lybia, and the Land of Negroes. So that the extraordinary heat of the Sun is not (as some imagine) the Cause of that Blackness, though accidentally it may turn the Skin into such a Colour; as we see in many Countrey-Lasses, even in colder Climates, whose Faces are continually exposed to the Sun and Weather. Others, more wise in their own Conceits, (but in no bodies else) will have the natural Seed of the Africans to be black of Colour; contrary both to Sense and Reason, Experience and true natural Philosophy being both against it. And some will have this Blackness laid as a Curse on Cham, (from whose posterity the African Nations do derive themselves) because, forsooth, he had carnal knowledge of his Wife when they were in the Ark: a Fancy as ridiculous as the other false. So that we must refer it wholly to Gods secret pleasure; though possibly enough the Curse of God on Cham and on his posterity (though for some cause unknown to us) hath an Influence on it.

Touch-

Touching the Original of this People, it is most probable that they descended from the Tartars; for which there are some Arguments of special weight. For first, it may be proved in the way of Negation, that they came not from Europe; as having no remainders of the Arts, Learning and Civilities of it. And secondly, that they came not from Africk; in regard they have no Black-men amongst them, except some few which dwell on the Sea-Coasts over against Guinea in the Land of the Negroes, from whence they are supposed to have been brought hither by some Tempest or other. Thirdly, that they have not the least token or shew of the Arts and Industry of China, India, or any civil Region on that side of Asia. The Affirmative Arguments prove first, That they came from Asia; next in particular from Tartary. That they came out of Asia, is more than manifest, in that the West side of the Country towards Asia, is far more populous then the East towards Europe: of which there can be no other reason assigned, than that these parts were first inhabited, and that from hence the rest was peopled. Next, the Idolatry of this People, and the particularities thereof, their Incivility and barbarous qualities, tell us that they are most like the Tartars of any. Thirdly, the West-side of America, if it be not Continent with Tartary, is yet disjoyned by a very small Streight, as may be perceived in all our Maps and Charts, as also in the Description of these Countreys: so that there is thence into these Countreys a very quick and easie passage. And fourthly, The People of Quivira, which of all the Provinces of America is the nearest unto Tartary, are said to follow, in the whole course of their Life, the Seasons and best pasturing of their Cattel, just like the Scythian Nomades, or Tartarian Hordes: an evident Argument of their Original Descent.

But from what Root soever they did first descend, certain it is, that they had settled here many Ages since, and overspread all the parts and quarters of this spacious Continent; there being no place which the Spaniards, or any other Adventurers, found desolate or waste, and without Inhabitants. But their numbers are much diminished since these late Discoveries; the Spaniards behaving themselves most inhumanely towards this unarmed and naked People, killing them up like Sheep appointed to the Slaughter, or otherwise consuming them in their Mines and Works of Drudgery. And had not Charles the Fifth ordained with most Christian Prudence, that the Natives should not be compelled to work in the Mines against their wills, but that the Spaniards should provide themselves of Slaves elsewhere; the Natives in a little longer time had been quite exterminated, to the great reproach of Christianity and the Gospel. For so exceeding barbarous and bloody were they at their first coming thither, that Hathny, a Nobleman amongst them, being perswaded to embrace the Christian Faith, demanded first what he should get by being of that Religion? and was answered, That he should get Heaven and the Joys thereof: Then would he know what place was destinate to such as died unbaptized; and was answered, That they went to Hell, and the Torments of it. Finally, asking unto which of these two places the Spaniards went, and being told they went to Heaven, he renounced his Baptism: protesting that he would rather go to Hell with the Unbaptized, than to live in Heaven with so cruel a People. The rest were driven unto the Font, like so many Horses to the watering place, and received into the Church of Christ without any Instruction: insomuch that one old Frier (as himself confessed to Charles the Fifth) had Christened 700000 of them, and another of that rank 300000; never acquainting them with any of the Articles of the Christian Faith, or points of Religious Conversation, (except it were to be obedient to their Pastors and Teachers.) Yet here I must confess, (for I am loth to defraud any man of his due) there hath been made a great Improvement of Christianity: the number of Christians in this Countrey being thought by some learned men of the Church of Rome, to equal all those of the Latine Churches in Europe. And though perhaps constrained at first unto it as a new Religion, and of a stricter Rule then that which before they had; yet by long time and Education it is now grown more plausible and familiar to them. The Church hereof is governed by the four Archbishops of, 1 Mexico, 2 Lima, 3 S. Foy, and 4 Dominico, who have under them 25 Suffragan Bishops, all liberally endowed and provided for.

When this New World came first acquainted with the Old, Isabel Queen of Castile would not permit any of her Husband Ferdinando's Subjects to be planted here, viz. Arragonians or Valentians, but licensed the Castilians, Andaluzians, Biscainers, and the rest of her own people onely, envying the Wealth hereof to the rest. When she was dead, Ferdinando licensed generally all the Spaniards, excluding onely the Portugals. But so rich a Prize could not so warily be fenced, but that the Portugals, French, English, and now of late the Low-Country-men have laid in their own Barns part of the Spaniard's Harvest; who well hoped to have had a Monopoly of so Wealthy a Region, and to have enjoyed without any Rival or Competitor the possession (I cannot say the Love) of a Countrey so abundantly fruitful. For though some of the Kings of Spain have been used to say, that they loved the East-Indies as their Mistress onely, in whose favour they could patiently enough endure a Rival; but esteemed America as their Wife, in whose love they could not brook a Competitor without a foul dishonour: yet by his leave (or without it rather) some of his Neighbours have made bold with his Wife in these later times, though in the affections of his Mistress they have greater Interest. But these Attempts of the English and Hollanders have been an occasion of great strength to the whole Country. For whereas in our first Wars with Spain, in Queen Elizabeth's time, our private Adventurers found the Sea-coasts almost naked of Defence, and thereupon made many a rich and prosperous Voyage to these parts: the Spaniards, upon sight of that weakness and disadvantage, so strongly fortified their Havens and Sea-Towns, that towards the later end of the Reign of that Queen we were not able to accomplish that with Great and Publick Forces, which before had been performed by Small and Private. Which caused our Captains and Adventurers, failing oftentimes in their Designs upon the Continent, to make up their Market on the Seas, in the return of the Spanish Navies, as they yet doe.

This New World is very plentiful of Spices, Fruits, and such Creatures which the Old World never knew; stocked with such store of Kine and Bulls, (brought hither out of Europe since the first Discovery) that the Spaniards kill thousands of them yearly for their Tallow and Hides onely; blest with such abundance of Gold, that they found in many of their Mines more Gold than Earth: a Metal which the Americans, not regarding it, greedily exchanged for Hammers, Knives, Axes, and the like Tools of Iron; for before they were wont to make their Canoes or Boats plain without, and hollow within, by the force of Fire. Other particularities shall be specified in the particular Descriptions of the several Countries. I shall now onely take a brief View of such of their Beasts and Fowls, as either this Old World did not know, or knew not in such shapes and qualities as are there presented. Their Lions less in greatness than those in Africa, are said to be of colour gray, and so nimble as to climb Trees; their

Dogs

Dogs ſnowted like Foxes, but deprived of that property which the Logitians call Proprium quarto modo, for they could not bark; their Hogs with Talons ſharp as Razors, and the Navil of their bodies on the Ridge of their Backs: their Stags and Deer without Horns; their Sheep (they call them Lamas) not only profitable, as with us, for Food and Rayment, but accuſtomed to the carrying of Burthens, ſome of 150 pound weight. Amongſt ſuch ſtrong Beaſts as this Old World knew not, we may reckon that deformed one (whoſe name I find not) whoſe fore-part reſembleth a Fox, the hinder-part an Ape, except the Feet only, which are like a man's: beneath her Belly a receptacle like a Purſe, where ſhe keeps her young, till they be able to ſhift for themſelves; never coming thence but when they ſuck, and then in again. The Armadilla is in form like a barbed Horſe, ſeeming to be armed all over, and that with artificial (rather then natural) Plates, which do ſhut and open. The Vicugne reſembleth a Goat, but greater and more profitable; of the Fleece whereof they make Ruggs, Coverings, and Stuffs; and in the Belly find the Bezoar, ſometimes two or three, a ſovereign Antidote againſt Poiſons and venemous Diſeaſes. A kind of Hare, reſembling a Want in his Feet and a Cat in his Tail; under whoſe Chin nature hath faſtned a little Bag, which ſhe hath alſo taught him to uſe as a Store-houſe; for in this, having filled his belly, he preſerveth the remnant of his Proviſion. The Pigritia, a little Beaſt, (not ſo named for nought) which in fourteen days cannot go ſo far as a man may eaſily throw a ſtone. Then for their Birds, they have them there in ſuch variety of Colours, that the Indians will perfectly repreſent in Feathers whatſoever they ſee drawn with Pencils: inſomuch as a Figure of S. Francis made of Feathers was preſented to Pope Sixtus Quintus; whoſe Eye could not diſcern them to be natural Colours, but thought them Pencil-work, till he made tryal with his Fingers. One called the Tominejo, of all Colours, ſo little, that it ſeems no bigger then a Bee or Butter-flie, the mouth thereof no bigger then the eye of a Needle, yet yielding not to the Nightingale in the ſweetneſs of its Note and Muſick; the Bird and Neſt, put into Gold-Scales, not weighing above 24 grains, yet beautified with Feathers of ſo many Colours, eſpecially in the Neck and Breaſt, that the Indians make great uſe of them in their Feather-pictures. Others as big, as theſe are little. The Condores of ſuch ſtrength and greatneſs, that they will fall upon a Sheep or Calf, open it, and eat it. Like Miracles of Nature have they in their Fruits and Plants, more proper unto natural Hiſtory then to this Diſcourſe; and many medicinal Drugs of rare operation, which I leave to the conſideration of the learned Herbaliſts. I am too much a Fool to be a Phyſitian, and therefore will not deal in ſuch things as are out of my Element. Yet ſomewhat of this kind we may chance to meet with in the Deſcription and Survey of the ſeveral Provinces into which this New World is divided.

The whole is naturally divided into two great Peninſula's; whereof that towards the North is called Mexicana, from Mexico the chief City and Province of it, ſuppoſed (for the moſt Northern parts of it are not yet diſcovered) to contain 13000 miles in campaſs. That towards the South hath the name of Peruana, from the great Countrey of Peru; the Circumnavigation whereof is reckoned to 17000 Italian miles. The Iſthmus which joyneth theſe two together is very long, but narrow; in ſome places not above 12 miles from Sea to Sea, in many not above ſeventeen. By the Spaniards it is called the Streight of Darien, from a River of that name in Peruana, near unto the Iſthmus; and is ſo ſmall a Ligament for ſo great a Body, that ſome have thought of turning theſe two Peninſula's into perfect Iſlands. Certain it is, that many have motioned to the Council of Spain, the cuting of a navigable Chanel through this ſmall Iſthmus, ſo to ſhorten their common Voyages to China and the Molucca's. But the Kings of Spain have not hitherto attempted it; partly becauſe if he ſhould employ the Americans in the work, he ſhould loſe thoſe few of them which his people have ſuffered to live; partly, becauſe the Slaves which they yearly buy out of Africa do but ſuffice for the Mines and Sugar-houſes; but principally, leſt the paſſage by the Cape of good hope being left, thoſe Seas might become a receptacle of Pirates. Which doubtleſs was a very prudent and politick conſideration. Many times I have read of the like attempts begun, but never of any finiſhed. Seſoſtris King of Ægypt, Darius of Perſia, one of the Ptolomies, and a late capricious Portugal had the like Plot, to make a paſſage from the Red Sea to the Mediterranean: ſo had Cæſar, Caligula and Nero, Emperours of Rome, upon the Corinthian Iſthmus. Another of the ſame nature had Charles the Great, to let the Rhene into the Danow: the like had Lucius Verus, to joyn the Rhene and the Rhoſne: all which, in their peculiar places, we have already touched. Nicanor alſo, King of Syria, intended to have made a Chanel from the Caſpian to the Euxine Sea, an infinite Project. But neither he nor any of the reſt could finiſh theſe works: God, it ſeemeth, being not pleaſed at ſuch proud and haughty Enterpriſes. And yet perhaps the want of Treaſure hath not been the leaſt cauſe why the like projects have not proceeded: beſides the dreadful Noiſes and Apparitions, which (as we have already ſaid) continually affrighted the Workmen.

Not leſs obſervable then this great, but unſucceſsful, Deſign of cutting a paſſage through the Iſthmus, from one Sea to the other, was that notable, but a like ſucceſsleſs Attempt of John Oxenham, an adventurous Engliſh-man, in a paſſage over it by Land. This man being one of the Followers of Sir Francis Drake, arriving in a ſmall Bark, with 70 of his Companions, a little above Nombre di Dios, the chiefeſt Town of all the Iſthmus, drew his Ship on Land, covered it with Boughs, and marched over the Land with his Company, guided by Negroes, till he came to a River. There he cut down Wood, made him a Pinnace, entred the South-Sea, went to the Iſle of Pearles, where he ſtayed ten dayes; intercepted in two Spaniſh Ships (who feared no Enemy on that ſide) 60000 pound weight of Gold, 200000 pound weight in bars of Silver, and returned in ſafty to the Land. And though by the mutiny of ſome of his own Company,, he neither returned into his own Countrey, nor unto his Ship: yet is it an Adventure not to be forgotten, in that never attempted by any other, and by the Spaniſh Writers recorded with much Admiration.

But to return to the Diviſion of this Countrey, and the two main parts thereof which this Streight uniteth. Mexicana, or the Northern Peninſula, may be moſt properly divided into the Continent, and Iſlands: the Continent again into the ſeveral Provinces of 1. Eſtotiland, 2. Nova Francia, 3. Virginia, 4. Florida, 5. California, 6. Nova Gallicia, 7 Nova Hiſpania, 8. Guatimala; each of them branched into many Subdiviſions and leſſer Territories. Peruana, or the Southern Peninſula, taking in ſome part of the Iſthmus, as before we did, hath on the Continent the Provinces of 1. Caſtella Aurea, 2. Nova Granada, 3. Peru, 4. Chile, 5. Paraguay, 6. Braſil, 7. Guiana, and 8. Paria; with their ſeveral Members, Parts, and particular Regions. The Iſlands which belong to both, diſperſed either in the Southern Ocean, called Mar del Zur; where there is not any one of note but, 1. thoſe called Los Ladrones, and 2. the Iſlands of Solomon: or in the Northern Ocean, or Mare del Noords, reduced unto 3. the Caribes, 4. Porto Rico, 5. Hiſpaniola, 6 Cuba, and 7. Jamaica, in the Survey of which particulars we will begin with thoſe which lie on the North-eaſt of this great Continent, not poſſeſſed by the Spaniards; and paſſing through the plantations of ſuch other Nations as have any footing in the ſame, come by degrees to the Eſtates of the King of Spain, that we may lay them all together without interruption: beginning with Eſtotiland, the moſt Northern part, and that which (as ſome ſay) was diſcovered firſt.

OF ESTOTILAND.

ESTOTILAND, as under that name we comprehend thoſe Regions of Mexicana which lie moſt towards the North and Eaſt, hath on the Eaſt the main Ocean: on the South, Canada, or Nova Francia; on the Weſt, ſome unknown Tract not yet diſcovered; and on the North, a Bay, or Inlet of the Sea, called Hudſon's Streights, and called ſo from Henry Hudſon an Engliſh man, who by this way endeavoured to find out a more commodious and quick paſſage to Cathay and China then had been formerly diſcovered. It comprehends, 1 Eſtotiland ſpecially ſo called, 2. Terra Corterialis, 3. New-found-Land, and 4. the Iſles of Bacalaos.

1. And firſt ESTOTILAND, ſpecially ſo called, is the moſt Northern Region on the Eaſtſide of America, lying betwixt Hudſon's Streights on the North, and Terra Corterialis on the South. The Soil, ſufficiently enriched with natural Endowments, is ſaid to have in it Mines of Gold, and other Metals: but I doubt it lyeth too much North for Gold, whatſoever it may do for Braſs and Iron. The people rude and void of goodneſs; naked, notwithſtanding the extreme cold of the Countrey; not having either the wit, or the care, to cover their bodies with the skins of thoſe Beaſts which they kill by Hunting, though their bellies teach them to keep life by the fleſh thereof: ſaid by the firſt Diſcoverers to ſow Corn, to make Beer, or Ale, and to have many Barks of their own with which they traded into Greenland; as alſo to have many Cities and Caſtles ſome Temples conſecrated to their Idols, where they firſt ſacrificed men, and after eat them. The Language which they ſpeak is expreſſed in Characters of their own; but ſome knowledge of the Latine Tongue there hab been amongſt them, and Latine Books in the Library of one of their Kings, underſtood by few.

Such were the Reports made of this Countrey by the firſt Diſcoverers, who were certain Fiſhermen of Freezland, caſt by a Tempeſt on this Coaſt about the year 1350. Six of them only got on Land, where all died ſave one; who after a long wandring from one Prince's Court to another, found means to return into his own Countrey: the King whereof, called Zichumi, being a great Adventurer in the feats of Arms, prepared for the farther Diſcovery and Conqueſt of it. Animated thereunto by the opportune coming of Nicolo and Antonio Zeni, two noble Gentlemen of Venice, who, deſiring to ſee the Faſhions of the World, furniſhed a Ship at their own Charges, and paſſing the Streights of Gibraltar held their courſe Northward, with an intent to ſee England and Flanders. But driven by Tempeſt on this Iſland, An. 1380, they were kindly welcomed by the King, then newly proſperous in a War againſt thoſe of Norway, who liked Nicolo ſo well, that he gave him a Command in his Navy, and under his good Conduct wone many Iſlands, diſcovered Greenland, and provided for the Conqueſt of Eſtotiland alſo. But Nicolo in the mean time dying, the buſineſs was purſued by his Brother Antonio, the King in perſon making one in the Undertaking: who liked the Countrey ſo well, being once poſſeſſed of it, that he built a city in it, and there determining to ſpend the reſt of his days, ſent back Antonio unto Freezland, with the moſt of his people.

This is the ſubſtance of the Story of the firſt Diſcovery, publiſhed long ſince by one Franciſco Marcellino, out of the Letters of the Zeni: which had they been conſidered of as they might have been, we had not ſo long wanted the acquaintance of this part of the world. But whether it were that their Reports were eſteemed as fabulous by the States of Europe, or that the time was not yet ripe for this great Diſcovery; there was nothing done in purſuance of it: Zichumi never going back to his own Countrey, and Freezland not long after conquered by the Kings of Norway. So that the knowledge of it was quite loſt again, till theſe later days. Said, in the letters of the Zeni, to be well ſtored with Fowl, and the Eggs of Birds, which they found there for there refreſhing; the Haven where they landed, to be called Cape Trin: the people to be of ſmall Stature, fearful, and to hide themſelves in Caves at the ſight of the Freezlanders: that there was a Mountain always burning, or caſting ſmoak; together with a certain Spring, whence iſſued a water as black as Pitch; but no ſuch Cities, Forts and Temples, as the Fiſhermen ſpeak of. The Countrey Weſt from Freezland 1000 miles.

To give you the Face of it as it ſtands at the preſent, it is ſaid to be well cultivated, fruitful of all Neceſſaries for the life of Man, and rich in Metals, but extreme cold; watered with four Rivers, which, riſing out of an high Mountain in the midſt of the Countrey, diſperſe themſelves over all parts of it. The people ſaid to be more ingenious, of better Judgments, and more skilled in moſt Mechanick Arts, then the reſt of the Americans were at the firſt Diſcovery; which argueth ſome more Civil people to have been formerly amongſt them. Their Garments of the skins of Beaſts, or Sea-Calves, with which alſo they covered the out-ſide of their Boats, to keep out the water, and make them able to endure the Sea. What Towns they have, and whether the name of Cape Trin be ſtill remaining, I am not able to diſcover; this Countrey lying ſtill for the moſt part hidden in a Northern Miſt. All we can ſay is, that ſome Engliſh names have been impoſed of late on ſome Capes and Promontories lying on the Northern Shores hereof towards Hudſon's Streights, by Hudſon and ſuch others of the Engliſh Nation who purſued that Enterpriſe. Of which ſort are Prince Henry's Foreland, towards the Eaſt, almoſt moſt at the Entries of thoſe Streights; and then proceeding towards the Weſt, Cape Charles, Kings Foreland; and laſt of all, Cape Walſingham, at the end thereof, where theſe Streights open into a large and capacious Bay, called Hudſon's Bay. But of theſe more particularly in another place, where we endeavour the Diſcovery of ſuch parts of the World as are yet unknown, and ſo within the compaſs of a Terra Incognita.

2. TERRA CORTERIALIS hath on the North Eſtotiland; on the South, Canada, or New-France. So called from Caſpar Corterialis; who in the year 1500 left his name unto it. It is called alſo Terra di Laboradore, both from the Pains required of the Husbandman, and the great Recompence which it gives him: in the ſame ſenſe as Campania in the Realm of Naples is named Terra di Lavoro. By the French, who ſucceeded in the poſſeſſion hereof after the Spaniard had forſook it, it was called New-Bretagne, with reference to Bretagne in France, their own natural countrey.

The people at the firſt coming of Corterialis were found to be barbarous enough, well coloured, ſwift of Foot, and very good archers: their Cloathing of Beaſts-skins; their Habitations Caves, or ſome ſorry Cottages; their Religion Paganiſm, or none; their Directions Sooth-ſaying. Not ſo forgetful of the Law which nature had planted in them, as not to know the neceſſary uſe of Marriage; but extremely jealous. Better conditioned at the preſent then in former times, by their near neighbourhood to the French, and Commerce with Foreiners: affirmed to be very well diſpoſed, to feed moſt generally on Fiſh, and to adorn themſelves with Bracelets of Braſs, or Silver. Their chief Towns, 1. Breſt, 2. Sancta Maria, 3. Cabo Marzo, of which little memorable.

The Countrey firſt diſcovered by Sebaſtian Cabot, the Son of John Cabot before mentioned: who in the year 1497, at the Charges and Encouragement of King Henry 7. ſetting ſail from Briſtol, firſt made the Diſcovery of theſe parts, as far as to the Latitude of 67 and an half, (which brings Eſtotiland within the compaſs alſo of his Diſcoveries.) The Land which he firſt ſaw he called Prima Viſta; and an Iſland lying before it he called S. John's, becauſe diſcovered on the day of S. John Baptiſt. They found upon the Countrey plenty of white Bears, Stags greater then ours, Scut-fiſhes of a yard long, and ſuch ſtore of Cod-fiſh (which the Inhabitants called Bacalaos) that their multitudes ſometimes ſtayed his Ships: hence the occaſion of their name. Returning home, he found great preparations for War in Scotland; ſo that nothing elſe was done in this Diſcovery by the Engliſh Nation. But three years after, Caſpar Corterialis a Portugueze, ſetting ſail from Lisbon, fell upon thoſe parts of Cabot's Diſcoveries, which ſince bear his name: from whence he brought the piece of a gilded Sword of Italian workmanſhip, left there moſt probably by one of the Cabots. Returning again the next year, he was no more heard of; drowned in the Sea, or ſlain by the Savages on the Land, as was his Brother Michael in the year next following. Neglected after this, till the French having planted in Canada, or Nova Francia, caſt an Eye upon it; who gave the name of Breſt to a Town hereof, (according to the name of a noted Port in Little Bretaigne:) but whether they ſetled any Colony in it, or only did reſort unto it in the way of Trading, I am not able to determine.

3. NEW-FOUND-LAND, (Terra Nova, as the Latines call it) is a great Iſland, lying on the South of Corterialis, from which parted by a Frith, or Streight, called Golfe des Caſteaux. So called from the late diſcovery of it, when diſcovered firſt, though it be ſome ſcores of years ago: as Wickham's Colledge in Oxford hath the name of New Colledge, though founded divers ages paſt; becauſe it was the Neweſt when that name was given.

The dimentions of the Countrey I have nowhere met with. But for the quantity hereof, it is ſaid to be better inhabited in the North-parts, then in the South; though the South the fitter of the two for Habitation. Furniſhed upon the Sea-coaſts with abundance of Cod-fiſh, as alſo with Herrings, Salmons, Thornbacks, Smelts, Oyſters, and Muſcles with Pearls in them. Within the Land a goodly Countrey, naturally beautified with Roſes, ſown with Peaſe, planted with ſtately Trees, and otherwiſe diverſified both for pleaſure and profit: the Air hereof never very extreme, more temperate in the depth of Winter then with us in England, the Brooks being never ſo frozen over, that the Ice is able to bear a Dog; and thoſe little Froſts but ſeldom holding three nights together. The people of reaſonabe Stature, full-eyed, broad-faced, but Beardleſs, their Faces coloured with Oker; their Houſes, Poles ſet round meeting together in the top, and covered over with skins, an Hearth, or Fire place, in the midſt: their Boats of Bark, twenty foot long, and four in breadth, not weighing above 100 pound weight; every of which will carry four men, and is by them carryed to all the places of their Removes.

Places of moſt importance in it are the ſeveral Havens (of which it is conceived to have more, and more commodious, then any one Iſland of the World for the bigneſs of it:) not beautified with Towns, or Buildings, but yielding very ſafe ſtations to the greateſt ſhips. The chief whereof, 1. Rennoſa, or Roignenſe, on the North of the Promontory called Cape de Raz, the South-eaſt Angle of the Iſland: of much reſort for Fiſhing, from ſeveral Countreys. 2. Portus formoſus, or Fair-Haven, three miles North of the other; capable of great Ships, and bearing into the main Land above 40 miles: ſituate in the Latitude of 40, and 40 minutes, 3. Thornbay, by the Portugals named Enſeada Grande. 4. Trinity Bay, on the North of Cape S. Francis, by the Portugals called Babiade de la Conception: a large Bay, five miles broad in the narroweſt place; yet ſafe withal, and of very good Anchorage. 5. Bona Viſta, the name of a Port and Promontory 6. White-Bay, or Say-Slanche, as the French call it, ſafe and capacious, on the North of the Promontory of S. John Betwixt which and Cape de Grat, on the North-eaſt Angle of the Iſland, is no Port of note. Then on the South-ſide of the Iſland, and the Weſt of Cape de Raz, is 7. Port Treſpaſſez, 8. Port Preſenza, and 9. Port des Baſques (or the Biſcains Heaven;) and on the Weſt-ſide, having doubled the Cape de Raye, in the South-weſt Angle of the Iſland, there is 10. S. George's Bay: all of them ſafe, capacious, and of great reſort.

4. Before the Iſland, at the diſtance of 25 Leagues from Cape de Raye, lieth a long Bank, or Ridge of Ground, extended in length many hundred Leagues, in breadth 24 Leagues where broadeſt, in other places but ſixteen: and all about it certain Iſlands, which Cabot by one common name called BACALAOS, (that name peculiar now unto one alone) from the great multitudes of Cod-fiſh (by the Natives called Sacalaos) which ſwarmed here abouts, ſo numerous; that they hindred the paſſage of his Ships, as before was noted; and lay in ſuch Shoals upon the Coaſts, that the Bears caught them with their Claws and drew them on Land. The Government at that time by Kings, before whom the people in the moſt formal expreſſions of Duty and Reverence uſed to rub their Noſes, or ſtroke their Foreheads: which if the King obſerved, or accepted of, and meant to grace the party which had ſo adored him, he turned his Head to his left Shoulder, as a mark of Favour.

The firſt Diſcoverers of this Countrey (but not known then to be an Island) were the two Cabots, John, and his Son Sebastian, employed herein by Henry the 7. 1497. as before was noted. The business being laid aside at his coming back, was afterwards revived by Thorn and Eliot, two of Bristol; who taking a more perfect view of it then was took by the Cabots, ascribed to themselves the Discovery of it, and animated King Henry the 8. unto the Enterprize: which was done Anno 1527, but with ill success. In the mean time the Normans, Portugals, and Britans of France had resorted to it, and changed the names which by the English had been given to the Bays and Promontories But the English would not so relinquish their Pretentions to the Premier Seisin. And therefore in the year 1583, Sir Humphry Gilbert took possession of it in the name of the Queen of England interdicted all other Nations the use of Fishing, and intended to have setled there an English Colony. But being wrecked in his return, the sending of the Colony was discontinued till the year 1608, when undertook by John Guy a Merchant of Bristol, who most successfully performed it; the Colony so prospering in a little time, that they had Wheat, Rye, Turnips, Coleworts, of their own sowing, some probability of Metals, a certainty of Sables, Musks, and other precious Commodities, besides their Fishing; though that the great occasion of their settling there. Such plenty is there found of Ling and Cod-fish all about the Coasts, that ordinarily our men take 200 or 300 of them within four hours space, which they convey from hence to all parts of Europe.

OF CANADA.

CANADA is bounded on the North with Corterialis; on the South, with New-England; on the East, with the main Ocean: the Countreys lying on the West either not yet discovered, or not perfectly known. So called from the River Canada, the greatest, not of this Province only, but of all this Peninsula. A River which hath its Fountain in the undiscovered parts of this Northern Tract: sometimes enlarged into great Lakes, and presently reduced to a narrower Chanel, with many great Windings and Reaches in it. Having emboscomed almost all the rest of the Rivers of this Countrey, it emptieth it self into the Great Bay of S. Laurence, over against the Isle of Assumption, being at the Mouth 40 Leagues in breadth, and 150 Fathom depp.

It is also called Nova Francia, from the French, who following the Tract of Cabot and Corterialis, made a further Discovery of these parts, and planted several Colonies in them. The Business first undertaken by Jaques Cartier, Anno 1534, received here gladly by the Natives with Singing, Dancing, and expressing much sign of Joy: pursued by Monsieur Roberval, sent thither in the year 1542 by King Francis the first, not only to discover the Countrey, but to plant some part of it, who built there a fair Fortress for his greater safety; followed therein by divers others of that Nation, in their several times.

The nature of the Soil, and People, we shall best discover in the several parts of it, each differing from one another, and so not easily conformed to a general Character. Look we now only on the principal Rivers of the whole. 1. Canada, of which before. 2. Pemtegouet, or Norumbegu, as some call it, of which more hereafter. 3. Quimbequi, falling into the Ocean as the others do, 4. Rio S. Johan, ending its course in a large Bay called Bay Francoise interposed betwixt Nova Scotia and the rest of this Countrey. 5. Les Trois Riviers, which rising far North, and passing through two great Lakes, falleth into the Canada. 6. Saguenay, of the same Original, Course, and Fall. A River of so strong a Current, that it suffereth not the Sea to flow up its Channel; so deep, that in many places it attaineth to 100 Fathoms; and though but narrow at the mouth, yet groweth it broader and broader upwards; and having received many lesser streams, loseth it self at last, where the other doth.

It containeth in it several Regions. 1. Nova Francia specially so called, 2. Nova Scotia, 3. Norembegue, and 4. the Isles adjoyning.

1. NOVA FRANCIA specially so named is situate on the South of Corterialis, and on the North of the great River of Canada, towards the East; but on both sides of it, in the Western and more In-land parts. The Countrey is naturally full of Stags, Beares, Hares, Martens and Foxes, whose flesh the people did eat raw (till more civilized) having first dried it either in the smoak or Sun as they do their fish. They have also store of Conies, Fowl and Fish great plenty; one Fish more memorable then the rest, which they call Adothuel, whose Body and Head is like that of a Grey-hound. But their greatest Jewels are their Chains of Esuguie; a Shell-fish of the whitest colour, excellent for the stanching of Bloud: which they fashion into Beads and Bracelets, and so wear, or sell them. Not very plentiful of Fruits, or fit for Tillage; yet it breedeth some Corn, and of Pulse good plenty. The Air more cold then in other Countreys of like height, partly by reason of the greatness of the River, which being wholy of fresh Water, and so large withall chilleth the Air on both sides of it; partly because of the abundance of Ice, and those hills of Snow which the North-wind passeth over in the way to this Countrey.

The People, when the French first discovered them, were very rude and barbarous; few of them furnished with Houses, but removing from one place to another, as their Food decayed; and carrying all their Goods with them (a thing easily done) upon those removes. Such as lived towards the Sea, or the greater Rivers, somewhat better housed. For in the day-time they fish in their Boats, which they draw unto the Land at night, and turning them upside down, sleep under them. As ill apparelled as housed; for they went all naked, except a little piece of skin before their Privities. Some of them had their heads quite shaven, excepting one Bush of hair on the top of the Crown, which they ſuffered to grow to the length of an Horſes Tail, tied up with Leather-ſtrings in a knot. Each man allowed his two or three wives a-piece; and they ſo conſtant to their Husband, that they never marry after his death, but keep themſelves continually in a mourning habit, a Vizard as it were, made of Greaſe and Coal-duſt, which they ſpread over all their bodies. The women labour more then the men, both in fiſhing and husbandry; digging the ground in ſtead of Ploughing, with certain pieces of wood, where they ſow their Maiz, (a Plant of which they make their Bread in moſt parts of America.) Idolaters in general before the coming of the French, as they are moſt of them at this day; the French and others which have planted in theſe Northern parts having added little more unto Chriſtianity, then by the Colonies they brought with them. Yet in the midſt of this darkneſs they ſaw ſo much light, as to believe that when they dyed they went immediately to the Stars; from thence conveyed to certain green and pleaſant fields, full of flowers and fruits. Plain Evidence that they believed the Immortality of the Soul, and that there was ſome place appointed for reception of it.

The chief Towns of it at that time, 1. Hochelaga round in figure, compaſſed about with three Courſe of timber Ramparts, one within the other; ſharp at the top, about two Rods high, with one Gate only to give entrance, and that well fortified (in their kind) with Piles and Bars. It had in it 50 great houſes, in the midſt of every one a Court, and in the middle of that Court a place which they made their fire on. Situate far within the Land, about ſix or ſeven Leagues from the banks of the River Canada, in the moſt pleaſant part of the Countrey; and therefore made the ſeat of their King, whom they highly reverenced and carried him on their ſhouldiers ſitting on a Carpet of skins. 2 Stadac, or Stadacone, and 3 Quebecque, which the French call S. Croix, on the courſe of the ſame River alſo; this laſt a Colony of the French. 4. Tadouſac, a ſafe but ſmall Haven, not capable of above, 20 ſhips, at the mouth of Saguſna. 5. Franco-Roy, a Caſtle built by Monſieur Roberval, when he came firſt into this Countrey. 6. S. Lewis, deſigned for a French Colony by Mounſieur de Champlain, Ann. 1611. but never came to great effect: yet ſo much Champlain got by the undertaking, that he left his name to a great Lake of this Countrey (full of little Iſlands) in the Lands of the Vroqueis, inhabiting on the South of the River Canada, into which it emptieth it ſelf at the laſt.

2. NOVA SCOTIA, containeth that part of the Countreys of Canada, or Nova Francia, which the French call Accadie, or Cadie, (being a Peninſula or Demy-Iſland;) with ſo much of the main land as lieth between the River Canada and the large Bay called Bay-Francoiſe, from the River of S. Croix upon the Weſt, to the Iſle of Aſſumption on the Eaſt. So called by King James, in the Grant of theſe Countreys to Sir William Alexander, after Lord Secretary of Scotland, and by King Charles, for his approved fidelity, moſt deſervedly created Earl of Sterling. The Letters-Patents of which Donation bear date Anno 1621. What time the French having been outed of their holds here by Sir Sam. Argal, Governour of Virginia, had abandoned the South-parts of Canada, and betook themſelves more into the North, and the higher parts of the Courſe of that River. And in purſuance of this Grant, the ſaid Sir William Alexander in the year 1622. ſent a Colony hither: and having procured a new Map to be made of the Countrey, cauſed the Peninſula, lying on this ſide of the Bay Francoiſe, to be called Nova Caledonia, that on the North thereof, to be called Nova Alexandria; giving new names alſo unto moſt of the Ports and Promontories. For the better accompliſhment of which buſineſs, he obtained alſo a Patent for advancing a certain number of perſons to the hereditary dignity of Baronets, or Knights of Nova Scotia, as we call them commonly, diſtinguiſhed from others by a Ribbon of Orange Tawny; the money raiſed upon which Patent was to be wholly imployed towards this Plantation. But being unable with thoſe helps, (as certainly Plantations are of too great burthen for a private perſon) or willing to imploy his money to more profit, he ſold Port-Royal to the French, and after diſcontinued in his endeavours in it.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Port-Royal, in Accadie or Nova Caledonia, on the Bay-Francoiſe; once made a Colony of the French by Monſieur de Monts, An. 1604. continued with much difficulty till the year 1613. when deſtroyed by Sir Samuel Argal then Governour of the Engliſh Plantations in Virginia, by reaſon that the Jeſuits, whoſe neighbourhood he liked not of, had begun to neſt there. Sold ſince again unto the French, as before is ſaid, by whom ſtill poſſeſſed. 2. S. Lukes Bay, by the French called Port au Monton. 3 Gaſpe, a noted Port in New-Alexandria, oppoſite to the Iſle of Aſſumption. 4. Gachepe, on a fair Bay in the ſame Coaſt alſo.

3. NORUMBEGA hath on the North-East Nova Scotia; on the South-Weſt, Virginia. The air is of a good temper, the ſoil fruitful, and the people indifferently civil; all of them, as well men as women, painting their faces. The men are much affected to hunting, and therefore never give their daughters to any, unleſs he be well skill'd in that game alſo. The Women are here very chaſt, and ſo well love their husbands, that if at any time they chance to be ſlain, the widows will neither marry, nor eat fleſh, till the death of their husbands be revenged. They both dance much; and for more nimbleneſs, ſometimes ſtark naked. The Sea upon the Coaſts ſo ſhallow and ſo full of Sands, that it is very ill ſayling all along theſe ſhores. The Towns, or habitations rather, ſo differently called by the French, Portugals, and Spaniard, that there is not much certainty known of them. Yet moſt have formerly agreed upon Norumbegue, or Arampec, as the Natives call it; ſaid to be a large, populous and well-built Town, and to be ſituate on a fair and capacious River of the ſame name alſo. But later obſervations tell us there is no ſuch matter; that the River which the firſt Relations did intend is called Pempegouet, neither large nor pleaſant; and that the place by them ment is called Aggancia, ſo far from being a fair City, that there are only a few Sheds or Cabins, covered with the barks of Trees or the Skins of Beaſts. Howſoever I have let it ſtand on the firſt reports, it being poſſible enough that the Town might fall into decay, deſerted on the coming of ſo many ſeveral Pretenders, and that the Sheds or Cabins which the laſt men ſpeak of may be only the remainders of it.

4. Adjoyning to theſe Countreys of Canada, are ſeveral Iſlands not joyned in any common name, but yet deſerving ſome conſideration in this place and time. The principal whereof, 1 NATISCOTEC, called the Iſle of Aſſumption, ſituate in the very mouth of the River, was firſt diſcovered by Jaques Carter, Anno 1534. in length 35 leagues, ſeven or eight in breadth. The Iſland very plain and level, of a fruitful Soil, beautified with Trees of ſeveral ſorts, repleniſhed with great plenty both of Fowl and Fiſh, and furniſhed with convenient Rodes, though with no good Havens. Not hitherto inhabitted, for ought I can find. 2. RAMEÆ, a frie of little Iſlands in the great Gulf of S. Lawrence on the South of Natiſcotec, firſt found out or frequented by the Citizens of S. Malo in Bretaigne, Anno 1590, of great reſort for the Morſe-fiſhing, uſed upon the Coaſts, which is here ſo gainful, that a French Bark in a very little time killed 1500 of them. Theſe Morſes (take this by the way) are a kind a kind of Sea-Horſes, or Sea Oxen; with two Teeth of a foot long growing downwards out of the upper Jaw, ſold dearer then Ivory, becauſe eſteemed a ſoveraign Antidote againſt poiſons. They have alſo four Feet, no Ears, the Horns about half an ell in length; the skin, when dreſſed, twice as thick as that of a Bull; their fleſh, when young, as ſweet and tender as Veal. So fat and unctuous, that with the bellies of five of them, there is made uſually an Hogs-Head of Train oil, as good as that of the Whale, 3. BRION, a ſmall Iſland on the South of the Ramea, about two leagues in length, and as many in breadth; of a rich ſoil, fat paſturage, well ſhaded with tall and lofty Trees; and neighboured by a ſmaller Iſland called Iſle Blanche, of the like fertility. 4. BRITON, (Inſula Britonum) ſo named from Jaques Briton a French-man, in the time of Francis the firſt, called alſo the Iſland of S. Laurence, is ſituate on the South-Eaſt of the Iſle of Brion: in form triangular, in compaſs about 80 leagues; pleaſant and fruitful, though for the moſt part ſwelled with Hills. Deſtitute of Rivers, but interlaced with great Arms of the Sea, well ſtored with ſhell-fiſh; and in the midſt thereof a great Lake full of little Iſlands: the Woods repleniſhed with plenty of Deer, black Foxes, and a Bird called Pengwin. Inhabited by the Natives only, though the Portugals did ſometimes endeavour a Plantation in it; but finding the Air too cold for them, they again deſerted it. The chief Haven is by the Engliſh called new Newport; by the French Port aux Anglois, from the great reſort of the Engliſh to it, in regard of their fiſhing. 5. ISLE DE SABEL, by the French ſo called from the Sands which lie high about it; diſtant from the Briton Iſle about 30 leagues to the South; 15 leagues in compaſs, but more long then broad, and of unſafe landing. The planting of it, in regard of the ſafety of the place, attempted twice by the French and once by the Portugals; but without ſucceſs. 6. Others of leſs note, as Menego, and Les Iſles des Oiſeaux, I paſs over purpoſely, there being nothing, or but little, to be ſpoken of them.

So it appears by this accompt, that though the French have given the name of Nova Francia to all theſe Countreys; yet they never had the honour of the firſt diſcovery, wherein the Engliſh and Portugueze had precedency of them: nor are poſſeſſed of any conſiderable part thereof, the Scots putting in for a large ſhare; the Engliſh Maſters of the beſt Ports, and all the Iſlands of the Countrey in the hands of the Savages. Of theſe ſome great and powerful Nations over-ſway the reſt. The chief whereof are the Iroquois on the North-Eaſt of Norumbegua, neighboured by the Ochataignins, the Albonmequins, and the Nebicerines, the Souriquois, and Etechimins of Accadie, and New Alexandria; the Montagnets, and the Attogovantans, on the banks of the Canada. All of them ſtout and hardy people, falſe of their words, treacherous in their practices, and mercileſs in their revenges. So well acquainted with the Factions and diviſions of Europe, that they know how to make uſe of one Nation againſt another; and by that means to keep themſelves in their firſt eſtate, without being ſubject to any. So that the footing which the Engliſh, French, or Scots have obtained amongſt them, ſerv's rather to ſecure themſelves in the way of their Trading, then to entitle them unto any poſſeſſion and command in the Countrey: the French being ſhut up in a few weak Forts on the North of the Canada; the Scots pretending only to a Bay or two in the South of Accadie; and the Engliſh being only Tenants at the will of the Natives, for ſuch conveniency of fiſhing as they have in the adjoyning Iſlands.

OF VIRGINIA.

VIRGINIA hath on the North Canada, on the South, Florida; on the Eaſt, Mare del Noort; the Weſtern boundaries not known, or not well diſcovered. So called in honour of Queen Elizabeth, that Virgin-Monarch; when diſcovered (to any purpoſe) by Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1584. By the natural Inhabitants called Apalchen, from a Town of that name, one of the chief in all the Countrey.

The Inland parts hereof are mountainous and barren, full of thick Woods, a Receptacle for wild Beaſts, and wilder Savages. Towards the Sea more plain and fruitful, as will appear by the Survey of its ſeveral Provinces; premiſing firſt, that Virginia in the full latitude thereof extendeth from the 34. Degree, where it joyns with Florida, unto the 44. where it quartereth on Norumbegua.

The firſt Diſcovery hereof by the two Cabots, Father and Son, An. 1497, did firſt entitle the Crown of England to this Countrey. The Deſign after ſeconded by Mr. Hare, bringing thence certain of the petit Kings, or Princes hereof, who did Homage to King Henry the 8. then ſitting in his Royal Throne in the Palace of Weſtminſter; but nothing farther done in purſuance of it. And though John Verazzani a noble Florentine, at the incouragement and charge of King Francis the firſt, Anno 1524, diſcovered more of the Countrey then Cabot did; yet the French too much in love with the pleaſures of France, or intangled in Civil wars amongſt themſelves, looked no farther after it: Inſomuch that the Countrey lying thus neglected, was re-diſcovered, by the charges and direction of Sir Walter Raleigh, then Captain of the Guard, and in great power and favour with Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1584, who ſending Maſter Philip Amadas and Maſter Arthur Barlow upon this employment, did by them take poſſeſſion of it in Queen Elizabeth's name; in honour of whom he cauſed it to be called Virginia. The next year he ſent hither a Colony, under the conduct of the noble Sir Richard Grenvile, who not ſupplied with neceſſaries for their ſubſiſtence, returned home again. In the year 1587, a ſecond Colony is ſent hither, but as ſucceſſleſs as the firſt: the buſineſs being undertaken only on a private Purſe, not owned as the Intereſt of the State, or of publick moment, till the year 1606, In the mean time the North parts of this Countrey being more perfectly diſcovered by Captain Bartholomew Goſnold Anno 1602. and the the middle parts being taken up by the Hollanders not long after, that is to say, in the year 1609. the whole became divided into these three parts; 1. New England, 2. Novum Belgium, 3. Virginia strictly and specially so called. To which the Isles of the Bermudas shall come in for a fourth.

NEW-ENGLAND hath on the North East Norumbegua; and on the South-West, Novum Belgium. So called by the Adventurers by whom first planted, not so much because opposite to Nova Albion, as some men conceive; as in imitation of the like adjuncts of distinction given by the French and Spaniards to Nova Francia, Nova Hispania, Nova Gallicia, Nova Granada, and the like.

The Countrey situate in the middle of the Temperate Zone, betwixt the degrees of 41 and 44, equally distant from the Arctick Circle, and the Tropick of Cancer; by consequence, naturally of the same degree of heat with France or Italy, But by reason of the thick mists which arise from the Seas adjoyning, those heats so moderated, that the Air is found to be exceedingly agreeable to an English body. The soil not only fruitful of such Commodities as grow there naturally, but also of all sorts of Grain which were brought from England. Great store of Woods and Trees, both for fruit and building; plenty of Deer within the Woods, of Salt and Fish upon the Shores; and as for Turkies, Partridges, Swans, Geese, Cranes, Ducks, Pigeous, such a full variety, as serves not only for necessity, but for Pride and Luxury. The Commodities of most note for maintaining of Traffick, rich Furs, and many sorts of Fish, some Amber, Flax, Linen, Iron, Pich, Masts, Cables, Timber fit for shipping: in a word, whatsoever comes to England by the way of the Sound, might at better rates, and with far less trouble, be supplyed from hence; at least if we believe the Relations of it, published in the year 1622.

The people for the most part well enough disposed, if not roughly handled; hospitable, and more civil then the rest of their Neighbours. So tractable and docile in matters of Religion, that liking well the Rites and Ceremonies of the English, at their first setling there, Anno 1608. they would use to say that King James was a good King, and his God a good God, but their Tanto naught. Which Tanto was an evil spirit, which did haunt and trouble them every Moon, and therefore they worshipped him for fear. Which notwithstanding, I find not any great increase of Christianity amongst the Natives: our English Undertakers thinking it sufficient if they and their houses served the Lord, without careing what became of the Souls of the wretched people, which hitherto have sate in darkness and the shadow of death, notwithstanding those New Lights which have shined amongst them. And as for those New-comers which have planted there, all English, though some immediatly out of Holland; I cannot better tell you of what strain they were, then in the words of John de Laet, Novi Orbis lib. 3. cap. 8. where he observeth, Primos hosce Colonos, uti & illos qui postea accesserunt, potissimum aut omnino fuisse ex eorum hominum Secta, quos in Anglia Browniſtas & Puritanos vocant, quales non pauci & in Belgium superioribus annis se receperunt, & hinc ad socios sunt profecti. They were (saith he) either for the most part, or altogether, of that Sect which in England are called Brownists or Puritans; many of which had formerly betaken themselves to Holland, but afterwards went thence to joyn with their Bretheren in New-England.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1. Tamesco, where our men found Oysters of nine inches long. 2. Nansick, a River of the Tarentines, one of the chief Nations of this Tract. 3. Sagahadock, of most note, and deservedly too, a mile and half broad at the mouth or influx, and so upwards for the space of a day's journey, where it maketh a large Lake three days journey broad, with six Islands in it; nourished with two large Chanels, the one from the North-East, the other from the North-West, each of them rising from a Lake; the least of which being four days journey long, two broad, the other doubleth it. Of less note, 4. Apanawapesk, 5. Ramassec, 6. Ashamahaga, &c.

The Countrey on the Sea-side full of notable Havens, populous, and very well inhabited, insomuch as Captain Smith reckoned in the space of 70 miles above twenty Havens, some of them capable of 500 or a 1000 sail; most of them sheltered from the furies of Wind and Sea, by the interposition of some Islands, of which about 200 lie upon that Coast. In the space of 70 miles he reckoneth 40 Villages of the Barbarous people; the chief of which are, 1. Macadacut, 2. Segocket, 3. Pemmaquid, 4. Nusconcus, 5. Kennebeque, &c. all being called by the name of some Brook, or water, upon which they were seated. Since added by the English, 1. S. George's Fort, the first Plantation of the English, built by them at the mouth of the River Sagahadoc, in a Demy-Island, Anno 1607. 2. New-Plymouth, seated in a large and capacious Bay; at the first building (Anno 1620.) consisting of nineteen families only, but in short time improved to an handsom Town; which as it was the first Town, so it was the first Church which was setled there, modelled according to the form of Mr. Robinson's Church in Holland, (that notorious Separatist,) and after made a pattern to the rest of these Churches: each absolute and Independent in it self, without subordination unto any superiour. For my part, I behold Episcopacy as the Primitive Government of the Church of Christ. But If there were no other Pretenders to it then Presbitery and Independency, I should as soon look for the Scepter and Throne of Christ (as they please to phrase it) in the Co-ordination of New-England, as in the Presbyteries of Geneva, or the Kirk of Scotland. 3. Bristow, upon the Seaside also, but more North then Plimouth. 4. Barnstaple, so called with reference to a noted Sea-Town of that name in Devonshire; as 5. Boston, with like reference to as noted a Sea-Port in Lincolnshire. 6. Quillipiack, on the Bay of Massachusets; a Town of an old name, but a new Plantation.

This part of Virginia, first discovered by Captain Gosnold, Anno 1602. and the next year more perfectly surveyed by some of Bristol, was by King James An. 1606. granted unto a certain Corporation of Knights, Gentlemen, and Merchants, to be planted and disposed of for the Publick: Sir John Popham, then Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, being one of the chief also in that Commission. By his encouragement, and principally at his charge, a Colony was sent thither, Anno 1607. under the presidency of Captain George Popham, and Raleigh Gilbert, who built the Fortress of S. George at the mouth of Sagahadoc. But the President dying the next year, and not long after him the Chief Justice also, the Colony, despairing of good success returned home again. Successlesly again attempted Anno 1614. the Undertakers were resolved to make farther trial of their fortune; and in the year 1626. sent out eight ships more: but it never setled into form till the year 1610. when by the building of New-Plimouth, and some encouragements sent thence to bring others on, it grew in very short time to so swift a growth that no Plantation for the time ever went beyond it. The growth of Old Rome and New-England had the like foundation; both Sanctuaries, Ad quæ turba omnis ex finitimis gentibus novarum rerum cupida confluxit, as Livy telleth us of the one; resorted to by such of the neighbouring Nations as longed for Innovations in Church and State.

2. NOVUM BELGIUM, or NIEU-NEDER-

DERLANT, hath on the North-East New-England, on the South-West, Virginia specially so called. So named from the Netherlanders, who began their Plantation in it Anno 1614. the Countrey being then void: and consequently open to the next Pretender, according to that Maxime in the Civil laws, Quæ nullius sunt in bonis, dantur occupanti. And yet they had some better title then a bare Intrusion, having bought Hudson's Charts and Maps, and otherwise contented him for the charge and pains of his Discovery, An. 1609. of which more anon.

This part of the Country extended from the 38. degree and an half, to the 41. 15' of a good temperature both of Air and soil: fruitful of those things which the earth brought forth of its own accord; abundance of wild Grapes, Nuts, and Trees of great height and bulk for shipping; plenty of Herbage, store of Plants, the effects of nature: and where the people did their part, such increase of Maize (a plant of which they make their Bread) as shewed their care and industry to be well bestowed. Since the planting of the Hollanders there, abundantly well furnished (within their command) with Wheat and other sorts of Grain; as also with Flax, Hemp, and such other Commodities as were brought hither out of Europe. The Woods replenished with Deer, and the Plains with Fowl; the Rivers not inferiour to any in Sturgeons, Salmons, and other the best sort of Fish which can swim in the water.

The people, though divided into many Nations, and of different Languages, are much of the same disposition with the other Savages; clad in Beasts-skins, for the most part without certain dwellings; dwelling together many Families of them under one poor roof, made of Poles meeting at the top, and covered with the bark of Trees. Their houshold-stuff a Tobacco-Pipe, a Wooden dish, and an Hatchet made of a broad flint; their Weapons, Bow and Arrows, but their Arrows made or headed with the bones of Fishes. Their Religion Idolatry, or worse; their chief God the Divil, whom they worship under the name of Menetto; but with less pomp and Ceremony then is used in Africk. Of manners, fearfull and suspicious, (not without good cause) wonderful greedy of revenge; but, if well used, tractable and obedient unto their Superiours; ficle, but very faithful unto those who trust them: conceived to be inclinable to the Christian Faith, if they had fallen into the hands and command of those who had studied godliness more then gain.

Rivers of note they have not many. That want is supplied by many large and capacious Bays, all along the Coast. The principal of those that be, 1. Manhattes, by some called Nassovius, but by the Dutch commonly Noordt River, which falleth into the Sea at May-port, so called by Cornelius May, the Master of a ship of Holland, at their first Plantation: another Channel of it, which from the noise thereof they call Hell-gat, emptying it self against an Island called the Isle of Nuts. The River about 15 or 16 Fathom deep, at the mouth thereof affordeth a safe Road for shipping, but of difficult entrance. 2. Zuid River, so called, because more Southerly then the other; as fair as that, but hitherto not so well discovered.

Towns here are few either of the old or new Plantations. The natural inhabitants live together in Tribes, many Families of those Tribes under one Roof, as before was said; but those families so remote from one another, that their Habitations are not capable of the name of a Town, and hardly of a scattered Village. Nor do I find that either the Hollanders or the English (who now divide the whole among them) are much given to building: The title of the Dutch being subject unto some disputes; and the Possession of the English not confirmed and setled. Hudson an English-man had spent some time in the Discovery of this Countrey, and given his name to one of the Rivers of it, With him the Hollanders, Anno 1609. as before is said, compounded for his Charts and Maps, and whatsoever he could challenge in the right and success of that his Voiage. But they were hardly warm in their new habitations, when Sir Samuel Argal, Governour of Virginia specially so called, (having dispossessed the French of that part of Canada now called Nova Scotia, Anno 1613.) disputed the possession with them; alledging that Hudson, under whose Sale they claimed that Countrey, being an English-man, and licensed to discover those Northern parts by the King of England, could not alienate or dismember it (being but a part or Province of Virginia) from the Crown thereof. Hereupon the Dutch Governour submits himself and his Plantation to his Majesty of England, and the Governour of Virginia for and under him. But a new Governour being sent from Amsterdam in the year next following, not only failed in paying the conditioned Tributes, but began to fortifie himself, and entitle those of Amsterdam to a just propriety. To which end, he gave unto the Country the name of New-Netherland, conferred new names on all the Bays and Rivers of it; and possessed himself of a little Island near that Branch of the Noordt River which themselves called Hell-gat: where he laid the foundation of a Town, called New-Amsterdam; and built a Fortress by the name of Orange Fort, which he garrisoned, and planted with five pieces of Canon. Complaint whereof being made unto King Charles, and by him represented to the States of Holland: it was declared by the said States in a publick Instrument, that they were no ways interessed in it, but that it was a private undertakeing of the West-Indian Company of Amsterdam; and so referred it wholly to his Majestie's pleasure. Which being declared, a Commission was forthwith granted to Sir George Calvert, Lord Baltimore, to plant the Southern parts thereof, which lie next Virginia, by the name of MARY-LAND: the like not long after to Sir Edmond Ployden, for planting and possessing the more Northern parts, which lie towards New-England, by the name of New Albion. And though the Hollanders did then seem willing to be gone, and leave all they had there for the sum of 2500 l. yet taking advantage of the Troubles which not long after followed in England, they have not only raised their demands to a greater height, but furnished the Native Indians with Arms, and taught them how to use their Weapons. A most mischievous and wicked Act; not only tending to the damage and discouragement of the present Adventurers, but even unto the extirpation of all Christians out of all these Countreys. But the best is, they were the first that smarted by it. The Savages, thus armed and trained, fell foul upon them, destroying their Farm-Houses, and forcing them to betake themselves to their Forts and Fastnesses. What hath been since done, (for the giving of new names to some of the old places, I look on as a thing of nothing) either in getting out the Dutch, or planting Colonies of the English, I can hardly say: but I fear that little will be acted, or to little purpose, till it be made a work of more publick interest.

3. VIRGINIA specially so called hath on the North-East Nieu-Nederlandt; on the South-west, Florida: the name restrained to this part only, since the two last Plantations, which before was common to the whole. The Countrey lieth extended from the 34. to th 38. degree of Northern Latitude: and by consequence the Air is inclined unto heats, if not refreshed and moderated by a constant Gale of Eastern winds, which they call the Brieze, and the blasts driving on it from the open Seas. Diversified most pleasantly into Hills and Valleys; the Mountains cloathed with woods, and the Fields with fruits. The soil so fruitful, that an Acre of Land well ordered will return 200 Bushels, or 25 Quarters of Corn. Said also to be rich in veins of Allom, as also Pitch, Turpentine, store of Cedars, Grapes, Oyl, plenty of sweet Gums, several sorts of Plants for the Diers use, some Mines of Iron and Copper, of Timber Trees almost infinite numbers; as also great abundance of Cattel, Fish, Fowl, Fruit, and of Maize no scarcity. Some Crystal is found amongst the Mountains, on the shore some Pearls. Nothing deficient either in the Soil, or Air, for the encouragement and reward of a thriving Nation.

The people are but few in number for so large a Country, and those as different in size as in speech or manners. Some of them, whom they call Sasques-hanoxi, of so vast a greatness, that in comparison of the English they seemed as Giants; clad with the skins of Bears and Wolves in so strange a manner, that the head of the Beast hung before their Breasts instead of a Jewel: their Arms, Bows, Arrows, and a Club. Some on the other side, whom they call Wigucomoci, of so low a stature, that in relation to the other they appear as Pigmies. But generally they are all of tall stature, well limbed, for the most part without Beards, and the one half of the Head kept shaven; cloathed in loose Mantles made of the skins of Deer, with an Apron of the same to hide their nakedness; the rest of their Bodies painted over with figures of Serpents, or of some other Creature of as horrid shape. Strong and accustomed to the cold, which they patiently endure, or feel not: wavering and inconstant, crafty, and somewhat more industrious then the rest of the Savages; but given to anger, and as greedy of Revenge as any. Gods they have many, for they Worship all things (and them only) which are like to hurt them; as Fire, Water, Lightning, Thunder, &c. So that it may be said of them, as once Lactantius said of the ancient Romans, (did not the ignorance of these poor Wretches render them excusable, and make them fitter objects for our Prayers and Pity, then our Scorns) Dignissimi homines qui Deos suos semper haberent præsentes. One Devil-God above all the rest, (they call him Oke) whom they worship, as themselves confess, more for fear then love. Not yet converted from these horrible and gross Idolatries by the long neighbourhood of the English; accused in that respect most justly by those of Rome.

No Country for the bigness of it can be better watered, or yield fairer Rivers. The principal of which are 1. Powhatan, (so called by the name of that petit Royelet, whose Territory it passeth through) which having run a course of a hundred miles, and navigable all that way by smaller Vessels, is at his fall into the Sea about three miles broad. 2. Apamatuck, 3. Nansamund, and 4. Chikahamania; all Tributaries to Powhatan. 5. Pamaunke, fourteen miles more North than Powhatan, but of lesser note. 6. Topahanock, navigable 130 miles. 7. Patawomeke, passable by Boat 140 miles, and six or seven miles broad where it falleth into the Sea; increased by many lesser streams which come out of the Mountains, and generally well stored with Fish. 8. Powtunxut, of a shorter Race, but a deeper Channel, then most of the former, (16 or 18 fathom deep) and of more choice of Fish then the others are.

Along the Banks of these Rivers dwell their several Tribes, scarce any one of which make up an hundred men, (that of Patawomeke excepted, which is able to arm after their manner 160) many not yielding above 30, and some not so many. Their habitations, not containing above ten or twelve houses apiece, but in those houses sundry particular families, are for the most part covered with the Barks of Trees; so placed, that the common Market-place standeth in the midst, at an equal distance: the houses of their Weroances, (or the Chiefs of their Tribes,) and that which serveth them for a Temple, being somewhat finer then the rest. And of these habitations some are presented to us by the names of 1. Ooanoke by the English called the Blind Town. 2. Pemeoke. 3. Shycoake, said by my Authors to be Civitas Ampla, a large City; but we must understand him with Relation to the rest of this Country. 4. Chowanoak. 5. Secatan. 6. Mattaken. 7. Weopomioke. 8. Pyshokonok, said to be inhabited by none but Women. 9. Chipano. 10. Muscamunge, both upon the Sea: most of them called by the name of those several Tribes which inhabit in them.

In reference to the English and their Plantations, we are to know that they made choice of the South-side of a large and goodly Bay for the place of their dwelling. A Bay which thrusting it self a great way up into this Country, and receiving into it many of the Rivers before mentioned, is by the Natives called Chesepoack, and yieldeth the only safe entrance into this part of the Country: the Capes thereof for that cause fortified by the English; that on the Southern point being called Cape Henry, and the other Cape Charles, according to the names of the two young Princes. Towns of most note, which have been either since built, or frequented by them, 1. James-Town, (Jacobipolis) so named in honour of King James, on the South-side of that Bay, not far from the River Chikahamania: first founded in the year 1606. at what time it was trenched about, and some Ordnance planted on the Works. 2. Henries Town, (Henricopolis) so named in honour of Prince Henry the eldest Son of King James, built in a convenient place more within the Land, 18 miles from James-Town. 3. Dales-gift, so called, because built and planted at the Charge of Sir Thomas Dale, An. 1610. 4. Bermuda, an open Burrough five miles from Henricopolis. 5. Ketoughtan, a noted and frequented Port in the Bay of Chesepoack, very much traded by the English. 6. Wicocomoco, the chief Town of Powhatan, one of the Royelets of this Country; much courted by the English at their first setting here, and a long time after: a Crown being sent him by King James, with many other rich Presents, the better to sweeten and oblige him; but for all that he proved a treacherous and unfaithful Neighbour.

The sum of the affairs of this last Plantation is, that the business being resumed in the year 1606, and a Commission granted to certain Noblemen and Merchants to advance the work; they fell in hand, by the Counsel and incouragement of Captain Smith, with the building of James-Town, (having first fortified Cape Henry) in which Town he fixed a Colony of 100 men. These, being almost consumed by Famine and other miseries, were the next year recruited with 120 more, brought by Captain Newport: but a Fire, having casually consumed their Houses, once again discouraged them. But the Houses being re-edified, and a Church added to the Houses, by the industry of Smith their Governour, the Colony began to flourish, and to increase in reputation among the Savages: especially having made (as they believed) a friend of Powhatan. In the year 1609. the Lord De la Ware was appointed Governour, and Smith commanded to return; who left here 490 persons, (and of them 200 expert Souldiers) 3 Ships, 7 Boats, 24 great Guns, 300 Musquets, with Victuals and Ammunition necessary; and 39 of their Weroances, or Petit-Kings, Tributaries and Contributioners to the English. Sir Thomas Gates, and Sir George Summers sent thither with 9 ships, and 500 men, lost a great part of their numbers in the Isle of Bermudas, the rest, not well according with the old Plantation, were at the point of returning home, when happily the Lord De la Ware arrived with three ships more, An. 1610. But falling into a desperate sickness, and come home to Eng- land, he recommended the estate of the English there to Sir Thomas Dale, who furnished them with Men, Cattel, and other necessaries; after whom came Sir Thomas Gates with 300 men, and some heads of Cattel. And then the Government hereof being conferred on Henry Earl of Southampton, the Affairs here began to settle in a prosperous way: when unexpectedly in the year 1621. the Savages falling on them (fearing no such treachery) killed 340 of their men; and had then also surprized James-Town, if one of the Savages who had received the Christian Faith, had not discovered their intention. Since that, recovered of that Blow, it went happily forwards, and might by this time have been raised to some power and greatness, if the English by diverting on some by-Plantations, and by imploying indigent and necessitous persons in so great a work, had not discouraged the design. For certainly one might say of this Plantation, as the Scripture doth of the Camp of David in the time of Saul, that few or none were sent unto it (except the Principals) but such as were in distress, or debt, or some way or other discontented; men never likely to advance and pursue a business of such publick Interest. Commendable howsoever in this particular, (though perhaps that commendation do belong to their Governours) that being here, they kept themselves constantly to those Forms of Worship which were established and observed in the Church of England.

As for the Natives of the whole, they were divided (as was said) into several Tribes, every Tribe under the command of their several Chiefs: which Chiefs, though many in number, and of little Power, knew well enough how to keep their State unto their Subjects, and to shew it also unto Strangers. For when Powhatan was pleased to give audience unto Captain Newport, and the rest of the English sent from Smith, they found him upon a Bed of Mats, his Pillow of Leather, imbroidered with white Beads and Pearl, attired with a Robe of Skins like an Irish Mantle: at his head and feet an handsom young woman; on each side of the room twenty others, with their necks and shoulders painted red, and about their necks a great Chain of Beads: his principal men sitting before them in like manner. Yet notwithstanding this great State, (and great it was indeed for such petit Princes) he and the rest became so subject to the English, that in Smith's time they did not only pay their Tributes, or Contributions, but at his command would send their Slaves and Subjects to James-Town, to receive correction for wrongs done to the Colony. And it is probable enough that those of New-England, being the greater and more powerful Plantation, (as followed with the stronger zeal, and carried on by the united purses of a prevalent Faction) were of like influence also among the Natives, though I find it not expressed in so many particulars.

4. The Isles of BERMUDAZ, many in number, (some say 400 at the least) are situate directly East from Virginia, from which they are distant 500 English miles; 3300 of the same miles from the City of London. So called from John Bermudaz a Spaniard, by whom first discovered. Called also the Summer Islands, from the Shipwreck of Sir George Summers upon that Coast; so much delighted with the sadness of the misadventure, that he endeavoured what he could to settle a Plantation in it.

That of more fame and greatness then all the rest, to which the name is now most properly ascribed, is situate in the Latitude of 32 and 30 minutes. Well stored, when first discovered, with plenty of Hogs, divers Fruits, Mulberries, Palmites, Cedars; as also of Silk-worms, Pearls and Amber, and such rich Commodities: of Fowl so infinite an abundance, that our men took a thousand of one sort, as big as a Pigeon, within two or three hours. The Air hereof very sound and healthy, found by experience (the best argument in such a point) to be agreeable to the body of an English-man; yet terribly exposed to Tempests of Rain, Thunder and Lightning. For which, and for the many shipwrecks happening on the Coasts thereof, and want of other Inhabitants to be said to own it, the Marriners have pleased to call it the Island of Devils. The soil affirmed to be as fertile as any; well watered, plentiful in Maize, of which they have two Harvests yearly: that which is sowed in March being cut in July; and that which is sowed in August being mowed in December. No venemous Creature to be found in all the Island, or will live brought hither. And besides these Commodities, of so safe a being, so fenced about with Rocks, and Islets, that without knowledge of the passages, a Boat of ten Tuns cannot be brought into the Haven; yet with such knowledge there is enterance for the greatest ships. The English have since added to these strengths of nature such additional helps, by Block-houses, Forts and Bulworks in convenient places, as may give it the title of Impregnable.

It was first discovered (but rather accidentally then upon design) by John Bermudaz, a Spaniard, about the year 1522. and thereupon a Proposition made in the Council of Spain, for setling a Plantation in it, as a place not to be avoided by the Spanish Fleets, in their return from the Bay of Mexico, by the Streights of Bahama. Neglected notwithstanding, till the like accidental coming of Sir George Summers, sent to Virginia with some Companies of English by the Lord De la Ware, An. 1609. Who being shipwracked on this Coast, had the opportunity to survey the Island; which he so well liked, that he endeavoured a Plantation in it at his coming home, Anno 1612. The first Colony was sent over under Richard More, who in three years erected eight or nine Forts in convenient places, which he planted with Ordnance. Anno 1616. a new supply is sent over under Captain Daniel Tucker, who applied themselves to sowing Corn, setting of Trees brought thither from other parts of America, and planting that gainful weed Tobacco, Anno 1619. the business is taken more to heart, and made a matter of the Publick, many great Lords and men of Honour being interested in it; Captain Butler sent thither with 500 men; the Isle divided into Tribes or Cantreds, to each Tribe a Burrough, the whole reduced to a setled Government both in Church and State, according to the Law of England. After this, all things so succeeded, that in the year 1623, here were said to be three thousand English, ten Forts, and in those Forts fifty pieces of Ordnance; their numbers since increasing daily, both by Children born within the Island, and supplies from England.

OF FLORIDA.

FLORIDA is bounded on the North-East with Virginia; on the East, with Mare del Noordt; on the South, and some part of the West, with the Gulf of Mexico; on the rest of the West, with part of New Gallicia; and some Countries hitherto not discovered. Extended from the River of Palms in the 25 degree of Latitude, to Rio de Secco in the 34, which evidently speaketh it for a Country of large Dimensions.

It was first discovered by the English under the Conduct of Sebastian Cabot, Anno 1497; afterwards better searched into by John de Ponce, a Spaniard, who took possession of it in the name of that King, Anno 1527, and by him called Florida: either because he landed there upon Palm-Sunday, which the Spaniards called Pascua di Flores, or Pascha Florida; or else quia Florida erat Regio, by reason of that fresh Verdure and flourishing estate in which he found it. But by the Natives it is said to be called Jaquasa.

This Country lying parallel to Castile in Spain, is said to be of the same temper both for Air and Soil, but that is abundantly more fruitful: the heart of the ground not being here worn out by continual Tillage, as perhaps it may be in the other. For here they have great abundance of Maize, (the natural Bread-Corn of the Country) which they sow twice a year: viz. March and June, and reap in the third month after, laying it in some publick Barns, and thence distribute it to the Necessities of particular persons. Well stored with several sorts of Fruit, as Mulberries, Cherries, Chesnuts, Grapes and Plums, of both excellent taste and colour: Beasts wild and tame, of all kinds which these Countries yield; and of like sorts of Fowl. The Woods and Forests full of the largest Oaks, and the loftiest Cedars; some Cypress Trees, and Bays, of a large proportion: with great plenty of that Wood, which the Inhabitants call Pavame, and the French name Sassafras, the Bark whereof is Medicinal against some Diseases; and another Tree which we call Esquine, affirmed to be a soveraign and present Remedy for the French Disease. It is also said to be enriched with some Mines of Gold and Silver; neglected by the Natives, till the coming of the Spaniards and French put a price upon them: and to have in it Emerals of great worth and beauty, with many Turquoises and Pearls. Others report, that all the Gold and Silver which they have amongst them came from some Ships which had been wrecked upon those Coasts: contrary whereunto it is said by the Natives, that in the Hills which they call Apalatei there are found great Veins of a reddish Metal, which the French concluded to be Gold, though they wanted time and opportunity to search into them.

The people are of an Olive Colour, great Stature, and well proportioned; naked, except their Privities, which they hide with the Skins of Stags: their Arms and Knees stained with divers paintings, not to be washed off; their Hair black, and hanging down as low as their Thighs. Cunning they be, and excellent in the Arts of Dissimulation. So stomachful, that they do naturally love War and Revenge; insomuch that they are continually in War with one or other. They are crafty also, and very intelligent, as appeareth by the Answer they gave to Ferdinando Soto, a Spaniard, who was here among them, Anno 1594. For when he went to perswade the people that he was the Son of God, and came to teach them the Law: Not so, replied a Floridan; for God never had thee to kill and slay, and work all kind of mischief against us. The Women, when their Husbands are dead, use to cut off their Hair close to their Ears, and strew it on his Sepulchre, and cannot marry again till their Hair be grown long enough to cover their shoulders. Hermophrodites are here also in great plenty, whom they use as Beasts to carry their luggage, and put them to all kind of Drudgery. They have all a gross belief of the Souls Immortality, but are otherwise Idolaters.

Mountains this Countrey hath not many, as being generally plain and level; the chiefest, those called Apalatei, before mentioned, supposed by the Inhabitants to be rich in Mines of Gold. Rivers of most note, 1. Rio Secco, 2. Rio Grande, 3. Serrevabi: the two first named so by the Spaniards, and the last by the Natives, 4. Garunna, 5. Ligeris, 6. Axona, 7. Sequana, and 8. Charente; so called by the French, according to the names of the best Rivers in France: both French and Spaniards having had severally and successively the possession of it. Here are also 9. Rio de Flores, or the River of Flowers, 10. Rio de Nieves, or the River of Snow; and 11. Rio de Spirito Santo, or the River of the Holy Ghost; all of them falling into the Bay of Mexico. A particular description of these Rivers, their Rise, Course, and Greatness, I find not in any of my Authors. Only Mercator telleth us of a twelfth River, called Porte Riale, reckon'd the chiefest of this Country, the Mouth whereof is three miles broad; where it openeth into the Sea betwixt two Promontories, the one towards the West, and the other pointing to the North. Some of these Rivers are affirmed to be haunted with Crocodiles; a Creature dangerous alike both by Land and Water.

The Countrey, not so well discovered and planted hitherto, as to be divided into Provinces, is commonly distributed into several Tribes, as were all Nations of the World at their first Discovery. The principal of these they reckon the Quevenes, Marianes, Canagadi, Camoni, Avanares, and Malicones, the Susolas, Quitones, and other names not usual unto us of Europe; though these more passable then many which have gone before; mollified perhaps, by the French and Spaniards, and not presented to us in their natural toughness: all governed by their Patacouffi or several Chiefs, and those at deadly Feuds and continual Wars with one another. Some have adventured on the names of particular Provinces, as Panuca, Avanares, Abarduosia, Joguazia, Apalchia, Anthia, Samovia, Colas; but they acquaint us neither with their Site nor Bounds: except it be that Panuca lieth on the borders of Hispania Nova, beyond the large and spacious Bay of the Holy Ghost; and Calos near the Cape called Cabo di Florida. Others distinguish it by the names of the ſeveral Roylets; which varying with the change of the perſon, makes that diviſion to be very variable and uncertain alſo. But it is generally agreed that the Peninſula which pointeth on the Iſle of Cuba hath the name of Tegeſta, or Florida ſpecially ſo called; the name of Florida being firſt given by John Ponce unto this part only, though afterwards Communicated unto all the reſt of this Country. A Demy-Iſland, ſtretching in length, from the South to the North, 100 Leagues; in breadth, where broadeſt, 30 Leagues, and in ſome places 20 only. Well known by the Cape of Martyrs, looking into the Iſle of Cuba, the River of the Holy Ghoſt, and three goodly Bays, the chief whereof, that intituled to S. Joſeph, all opening into the Gulf of Mexico, or the Bay of New Spain. The whole environed about, ſave where it is joyned unto the Continent, with Bars of Sands, and ſcattered Iſlands, which ſerve unto it as the Outworks to ſome notable Fortreſs.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. S. Helens, on or near a Promontory ſo named, where this Country bordereth on Virginia, once fortified and poſſeſſed by the Spaniard, but not long ſince abandoned. 2. Fort de Charles, Arx Carolina in the Latine, built by the French upon the Banks of the River Maio; and ſo called in honour of Charles the Ninth, in whoſe time the Conqueſt of this Country was undertaken; but ruined by the Spaniard in the War between them. 3. Port-Royal, a well frequented Haven, on the mouth of the River of that name; but whether there be any Town now remaining, I am not able to ſay. More in the Land (for theſe lie all upon the Borders towards Virginia) Apalche, ſuppoſed to be a place of great conſideration, in regard of the opinion which was had of the Wealth thereof; (but found to be a ſmall Town, of but 40 Cottages:) and therefore firſt attempted and took in by the Spaniard, in their Invaſion of this Country under Pamphilus of Narvaez, Anno 1528: recovered by the Natives after his departure. 5. Ante, an open Burrough, nine days journey from Apalche, where the Savages gave the Spaniards a ſharp Encounter, and ſlew many of them; but being vanquiſhed at the laſt, they forſook the Town, of it ſelf not tenable. 6. Ocalis, an unwalled Town, but conſiſting of 600 Sheds (for I dare hardly call them Houſes) the chief of the Kingdom of Acuera. 7. Oſacbile, the chief Seat of the King ſo called; and 8. Vitacuchus, a Burrough of 200 Cottages, the principal of the Kingdom of Vitacuchus: both taken by the Spaniards at the ſame time alſo. 9. S. Matthews, on the Eaſtern Shore of the Demi-Iſland above-mentioned, poſſeſſed and fortified by the Spaniard. 10. S. Auguſtines on the ſame Shore, but more South then the other; ſituate at the mouth of a ſmall River ſo named, fortified by the Spaniard with many a ſtrong Caſtle: but for all that taken by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1585, there being found in the Fort of S. John, in which the ſtrength of the Town conſiſted, 18 Braſs Pieces, and 20000 Florens in ready Money, for the pay of the Garriſon. Repaired afterwards more ſtroegly then ever formerly. The Spaniards have alſo Garriſons in two other places of this Country, viz. S. Philip, and S. Jago; but I cannot ſay diſtinctly in what part they are.

The Government of this Country is of one kind only, though managed by ſeveral perſons: the Supreme Power reſiding in the Chiefs of their ſeveral Tribes; at ſuch continual Enmity with one another, that they very ſeldom joyn together in any Counſels wherein the publick is concerned. So that the Spaniards may affirm of the preſent Floridans, as the Romans did of the ancient Britains; Nec quicquam adverſus validiſſimas gentes utilius nobis fuit, quàm quòd in commune non conſulebant; The not communicating of their Counſels haſtned on their Bondage. Yet in the Government of theſe Chiefs there was ſomewhat of the Parliamentary way uſed with us in Europe: For as in all matters of Concernment thoſe Chiefs adviſed with their Council; ſo if it were a buſineſs which concerned the Publick, their Prieſts and others of moſt note for Gravity and Wiſdom were admitted to the Conſultation. But being ſeverally too weak for a ſtrong Invader, and never joyned together to defend themſelves, they made themſelves an eaſie prey to the French and Spaniards, Et ſic dum ſinguli pugnabant, univerſi vincebantur; by truſting to their ſingle Forces, they were all ſubdued. For in the year 1512, John Ponce, a Native of Leon in Spain, ſetting ſail with three Ships from the Iſland of Porto Rico, on Palm-Sunday fell on the Peninſula before deſcribed; and for that cauſe, or from the flouriſhing Verdure of it, called it Florida; but did no more then ſcour along upon the Coaſts, and give new names to ſuch of the Promontories and Rivers as he had diſcovered. and having only a ſlight Skirmiſh with ſome of the Savages, returned back again. The Buſineſs eight years after was again revived by Vaſques de Ayllon, who ſetting ſail from the Haven of Plata, in Hiſpaniola, attained unto the North-eaſt parts of this Continent, bordering on Virginia, where he left names unto the Promontory of S. Helen and the River of Jordan: and having treacherouſly enſlaved ſome of the Natives, (whom he had invited to a Feaſt) prepared for Spain; where he obtain'd the Kings Patent for a new Plantation. But his Perfidiouſneſs could not proſper. For in the year 1524, coming with his Ships upon this Coaſt, one of them periſhed on the Rocks, and 200 of his men being killed at their landing, he gave over the Enterprize: the Spaniards hitherto making no more uſe of theſe Diſcoveries, then wickedly to enrich themſelves by ſtealing men, whom as wickedly they ſold for Slaves. Nor had the Voyage of Pamphilus de Narvaez, Anno 1528, any better end; though undertaken with a Band of 400 Foot, and 80 Horſe. For having took poſſeſſion of the Countrey in the name of his Sovereign Charles the Fifth, finding ſome hopes of great Treaſures to be had at Apalche, (diſtant above a months Journey from the place of his Landing) he would needs march thither. In which Action, though he got that and ſome other Towns, yet he loſt himſelf, few of his men returning ſafe into their Country, and they not knowing what became of their General. As fruitleſs, but more famous, was the Enterprize of Hernandes à Soto, begun in the year 1538, and continued till 1543, who with a little Army of 350 Horſe, and 90 Foot overran a great part of the Countrey, and brought many of the petit Princes under the Command of Spain. But making only a depredatory War of it, to enrich himſelf, and waſte the Country, without ſetling any Colony, or building any Fortifications in it to make good his gettings; the Action ended with his Life, which he loſt by a Fever: the remnant of his Souldiers, whom the War had ſpared; under the Conduct of Ludovico Muſcoſo di Alvarado, recovering Mexico not without great difficulties.

And ſo the Spaniards leave the Stage, and the French enter; ſent on this Voyage by Gaſpar Coligni, Admiral of France, Anno 1562, under the Conduct of Ribault: who falling on that part of the Continent which lieth on the Eaſt-ſide of the Peninſula, gave the firſt Promontory which he touched at the name of Cape Francois; and after running Northward along that Coaſt, new-named the Rivers thereof by the names of the Seine, the Loire, the Somme, the Garunne, and others of moſt note in his own Countrey. Coming as far North as the great River of Porto Royal, he there built a little Fortreſs, which he called Fort Charles, where he left 26 of his men to keep poſſeſſion, and returned for France: his

Soul-

Souldiers following not long after, as well as they could; destitute of Supplies from home, and not able with so small a number to command them there. The Action Reinforced about two years after, under the Conduct of Landonier, who had accompanied Ribault in the former Voyage: by whom some farther progress was made in this Undertaking, and a little Town built on the Banks of the River Maio (so called by Ribault, because in that Month discovered by him) which he named Charles Fort, Arx Carolina in the Latine. But a mutiny happening amongst his men, and some Complaints made of him in the Court of France, he was called home, and Ribault sent again to pursue the Enterprize: who entring on his Charge in August, Anno 1565, was presently set on by the Spaniards, both by Sea and Land; his Ships forced violently upon the Rocks, the New Town sacked, the Colony put unto the Sword, very few escaping; Ribault himself murthered in cold blood by the Enemy, after Faith given him for his life. It was thought that above 600 French were slain in this Action. So ended the French hopes in Florida, the King being then preparing for a new Civil War, and loth to engage himself against the Spaniard, till the year 1627; when at the charge of Dominicus Gurgius, a private person, out of an honest zeal to the honour of his Country, and to cry quittance with the Spaniards for their treacherous Cruelty, it revived again. And though he found the Spaniards, after the defeat of Ribault, had repaired and fortified Arx Carolina, and raised two Castles more on the Banks of the Maio, which they had furnished with such Pieces as they took from the French, and garrisoned with 400 Souldiers: yet giving a couragious Onset, by the aid of the Savages, (to whom the name and neighbourhood of the Spaniards was exceeding odious) he forced them all, demolished the Works, and hanged all such of the Souldiers as the Sword had spared, and so returned into France; where, instead of honour and reward for so great a service, he was in danger of losing both his Life and Fortunes, compelled to lurk among his Friends till the times were changed. The Spaniard after this, to keep some kind of possession, though not finding it in Riches answerable to their greedy desires, fortified S. Matthews, and S. Augustines, on the East-side of the Demy-Island, with the Castles of S. Philip and S. Jago, in other parts of the Country towards the North-East: thinking himself so strong in the Gulf of Mexico, that no Forein Forces durst appear on that side of the Country. So that it seems he plays the part of Æsop's Dog in the Manger, neither resolved to plant there himself, nor willing that any others should.

Having thus taken a Survey of the Main-Land of Florida, let us next take a view of such Islands as lie dispersed and down in the Seas adjoyning; called by one general name LUCAIOS, or LUCALIÆ INSULÆ, many in number, but reducible to these three Heads: 1. The Tortugas. 2. The Martyres. And 3. The Lucaios specially so called.

1. The TORTUGAS are seven or eight little Islands, lying on an heap at the South-West point of the Peninsula, called the Cape of Florida, in the height of 25 Degrees; distant from the Port of Havana, in the Isle of Cuba (opposite unto which they lie) about six Leagues. Well known among the Sailors, because much avoided, or rather avoided because known; the danger of their Company making their farther Acquaintance shunned.

2. The MARTYRES, called also the Caios, are three great Rocks rather then Islands, covered with a white Sand, and full of Bushes; the middlemost of the three the greatest: situate over against the South-East Promontory of the said Peninsula, called from hence Cabeca de los Martyres, or The Cape of Martyrs. Denominated thus by John Ponce the Spaniard, in his first Discovery of this Country, because they seemed afar off to have some resemblance to men impaled upon Stakes, as many of the Martyrs were in the Primitive times. Infamous for the many Shipwrecks which have since there hapned; but of great observation amongst Sea-faring men, because they know by leaving these Rocks or Islands, on the left hand of them, that they are already entred in the Streights.

3. The LUCAIOS specially so called lie dispersed on the East of the Peninsula, many in number, and so called from Lucaioneque, the greatest and most Northern of them, situate in the 27 degree of Latitude; of more length then breadth, but hitherto known by name only. Of greater note, though not so big, is that called 2. Bahama, in the middle way betwixt Lucaioneque and the Peninsula; in length 13 Leagues, and eight in breadth; memorable for giving name to the violent Current interposing betwixt it and the Demy-Island, called the Streights of Bahama; yet not so streight, but that they are 16 miles in breadth, though of so forcible a Course, that many times neither Wind nor Oars can prevail against it. 3. Guanahani, the most famous of all these Islands, because the first that was discovered by Columbus, being then almost out of hope of proceeding farther; who thereupon caused it to be called S. Savieurs. Well shaded at that time with Trees, full of fresh Springs, and very plentiful of Cotton, now overgrown with Shrubs and Bushes. 4. Guanima, by Columbus, when first discovered, called S. Maria de Conception; begirt about with Rocks and Quick-sands, but otherwise of a pleasant and fruitful Soil, full of delicate Springs. Others there are, to the number of 24, or thereabouts, whose names occur in many of our larger Maps: but being we find nothing of them but their very names, I shall not trouble my self with the Nomenclature.

Of all in general it is said, that they obeyed their King so strictly, (for a King they had) that if he commanded them to leap down from a high Rock, they performed the same; though he gave no reason but his Will. The women of so perfect Beauty, that many of the bordering Nations forsook their own Countries to enjoy their Loves: their shape and Beauty the more discernible, in regard not suffered to wear any thing till their Purgations; nor after that, but Nets of Cotton filled with Leaves of Herbs. But now, and long since, there are neither Men nor Women to be found in any of them: the people being long since wasted by the Spaniards in the Mines of Cuba and Hispaniola, or consumed by Famine and Diseases, or otherwise made away in Prisons and by several Torments, to the number of a Million and 200000, as some have told us. And so we pass unto the other side of those Northern Countries, opposite to Nova Francia, Virginia, and the main Land of Florida; that when we fall into the Countries now possessed by the Spaniard, we may not wander out of them till this Work be finished, except it be to take a Progress into some of the Islands, which cannot otherwise be visited but by such a Start.

OF CALIFORNIA.

CALIFORNIA, in the large and general acception of it, containeth all those Provinces of Mexicana, which lie on the West-side of that Northern Peninsula beyond Nova Gallicia, and New Spain: though in the stricter, limited to that Province only which lieth on the other side of a long and spacious Gulf, called Mer Vermiglio, and from hence the Bay of California. But taking it in the largest sense, it hath on the West New Spain, and New Gallicia, and so on to those undiscovered parts which lie fartheſt North, to the Streights of Anian. So witnesseth John de Laet, lib. 6. cap. 11. CALIFORNIA communiter dicitur quicquid terrarum Novæ Hispaniæ atque Galliciæ ad Occidentem objicitur, ad extremos Americæ Septentrionalis terminos, & Fretum quod vulgo Anian vocant. Limited in the stricter sense and acception of it to an Island (as it is now generally conceived to be) extended in a full length from North to South, on the West hereof. So that for our more regular proceeding in the Chorography and Story of it, we must divide it into the Continent, and the Island: the Continent subdivided into the two large Provinces of 1. Quivira, and 2. Cibola; the Island into 3. California specially so called, and 4. Nova Albion.

And first the Continent of this part which we call California hath on the East some parts of Nova Gallicia; and besides that, those vast and undiscovered Countries which lie on the West-side of Canada and Virginia, on the opposite Shore: bounded on the North with the unknown parts of this Mexicana; on the North-west, with the Streights of Anian, if such Streights there be; on the West, with the Sea interposing betwixt it and the Island, called Mer Virmiglio; and on the South and South-west, with the rest of Nova Gallicia, from which parted by a great River called Rio del Noordt. A River which, rising in the 40 degree of Northern Latitude, first parteth Tignez, a Province of Quivira, from that of New Mexico, one of the Provinces of Nova Gallicia; and after a long course falleth into the Sea, called Mer Virmiglio, above Cinoloa, another of the Provinces of that Division. Divided, as before was said, into the two great Provinces of 1. Quivira, and 2. Cibola.

1. QUIVIRA, taking up the most Northern parts of this side of America, is said to be very plain and level; of few Trees, not many Houses, nor much stored of People; quite destitute of Fruits and Corn, and yielding nothing for Man's life but the flesh of Beasts, which they eat raw, and swallow down in great bits without any chewing. The men apparelled in Bulls skins from the head to the feet; the women, though in a cold Countrey, with no other Garment then their Hair, which they wear so long, that it serveth them instead of a Veil to hide their Nakedness. They live in Hoords and Companies, like the Hoords of the Tartars, not having any certain Dwellings, (except some chief men) but remove from one place to another, like the ancient Nomedes. Near Neighbours unto Tartary, from whence (not being much distant from it) it is supposed that the Inhabitants first came, and from hence by degrees peopled all America.

The Country, being full of Herbage, breeds great store of Cattel, differing not much in bigness from those of Europe, but that they have an high Bunch betwixt their shoulders; bristled upon the back like Bores, with somewhat which resembleth the Mane in Horses; and the Beard in Goats; their Legs short, and clad with Fetlocks, their Horns short, but sharp: the whole Beast of an aspect so horrid, that an Horse will not venture near them, till well acquainted. Yet in these Beasts lie all their Riches, these being to this People, as we say with us of our Ale to Drunkards, Meat, Drink, and Cloth, and more too. For the Hides yield them Houses, or at least the Covering of them; their Bones, Bodkins; their Hair, Thread; their Sinews, Ropes; their Horns, Maws and Bladders, Vessels; their Dung, Fire; their Calves-Skins Budgets to draw and keep water; their Blood, Drink, and their Flesh, Meat. There is thought to be some Traffick from China, or Cathay, hither: for when Vasquez de Coronado conquered it, he saw in the farther Sea certain Ships, not of common making, which seemed to be well laden, and did bear in their Prows the figure of Pellicans; which could not be conjectured to come from any Country but one of these two. I know, some place this Country more within the Land; and others are so far from letting it look towards any part of the Sea, that they have laid it close unto the back of Virginia. For my part, I have laid it along the Coasts, upon good Authority, though I deny not but that some parts hereof may be more remote. Or else to reconcile the difference, it may thus be ended; that the Maritime parts being known by other names, the Inlands might retain more specially the name of Quivira, as we have seen in many other Countries before described.

And this I am the rather inclined to think, because I find mention of three Provinces on the North of Cibola, but in the way unto Quivira; the one called Seio, the other called Cicuic, and the third Tiguez, which I look upon as the Maritime parts of the same one Country, but better peopled and frequented then the Islands are, because lying in the way of Traffick. The principal Towns of which Provinces, are. 1. Acus, or Acuco, a small Town, but situate in a strong and defensible place, about which groweth some store of Cotton, which from the place the Natives call by the name of Acuco. 2. Tiguex, on the Banks of a River so called; inhabited by a stout and couragious People; who being resolved not to fall alive into the hands of the Spaniards, when besieged by Vasquez de Coronado, after they had held out above six weeks, laid all their Housholds-stuff and Treasure in an heap together, which they set on fire; and taking their Wives and Children into the midst of their Ranks, made a desperate Sally on the Enemy. A Resolution worthy of a better Fortune, most of them being slain in the Fight, and the rest trod under the Horses feet, or drowned in passing over the River. Yet would not those few which were left give up the Town, till it was fired about their ears, and no longer tenable: the Spaniard buying this Victory (notwithstanding the great odds of their Arms) with the loss of most of their Horses, the death of seven of their men, and the wounding of eighty. 3. Cicuick, a small Burrough, but the chief of that Province, four days journey from Tiguex: from whence the whole way unto Quivira specially so called, being 90 miles, hath in it neither Stone nor Tree, nor any Land-mark; insomuch as the Spaniards were fain to make heaps of Cow-dung to serve for their direction in their coming back.

The first Discovery of this Countrey is to be attributed to the diligence of Antonio de Mendoza, Vice-Roy of Mexico, who, desirous to get Wealth and Honour by some new Adventures, employed in the discovery of these Northern parts Frier Marco de Nisa. By him, and by a Negro which he had for his Guide, there was some light gotten of Cibola, the next Province to this; but so disguised in lies, and wrapt up in Fictions, that that light was little more then darkness. Yet by that glimmering, Francisco Vasquez di Coronado, in the year 1540, undertook the business; and sped so well, that having made his way through Cibola, he took the Town of Tiguex, as we heard before, and laid his way open to Quivira. Moved to a farther journey by the Report of the Savages, (who desired to hasten him out of their Countrey) telling him of the Wealth of Tatarax, who reigned in the In-land parts of Quivira, a bearded man (those of this Countrey wearing none) of a white Complexion, and one who in his Chappel worshiped a Cross, and the Queen of Heaven; on went the Spaniards towards Quivira, and found out the Tatarax, a poor naked Prince, Master of no more Treasure then a Brazen Plate hanging on his Breast, and without any such sign of Christianity as they did expect. So frustrated of all their hopes, and having got nothing but their labour for their pains, and the Honour of a new Discovery, with the loss of many of their men, they returned to Mexico, Anno 1542. Some Friers made bold to stay behind, but were all slain by the people of Quivira, except only one, who like Job's Messenger was left to carry news of the Murther, the Spaniards never looking into these cold Countries, where nothing else was to be gotten but Blows and Hunger.

2. CIBOLA hath on the North Quivira; on the South and South-east parts, New Gallicia, from which divided by the River called Rio del Noordt, as before was said; the West-side of it washed with the Mer Vermiglio, interposed betwixt it, and the Island, or Californīa specially so called. By the Natives it is called Zuni.

The Air hereof indifferently temperate, if not too much subject in the Winter to Frosts and Snows. The Countrey for the most part level, rarely swelled with Hills, but those very Rocky. No Trees that bear them any Fruit; few Trees at all, except it be a Wood of Cedars, from which abundantly supplied both with Fewel and Timber. Plenty of Maize, and small white Pease, which they make their Bread of; great store of Venison, but they kill it only for the skin: some quantities of Sheep, known for such by their Fleeces only, but otherwise as big each of them as an Horse, or Ox, some of their Horns weighing fifty pounds. Of Lions, Bears, and Tigers, so great a number, that they have more then enough for themselves, and could well spare them to their Neighbours.

The people generally well limbed, and tall of Stature, ingenious in respect of some other Savages: and though naked except their Privities only, or covered only with a Mantle, yet those Mantles wrought in divers colours; which, with some quantity of Cotton which they have amongst them, (none of it growing in their Country) shew them to be an industrious Nation, and to maintain a course of Trade with some of their Neighbours. A farther Argument of which is those painted Skins which they have from Cicuick, or some other Country which lies towards the Ocean, my Author telling that they travel for them eight days journey towards the North: and probably enough may be some of those Commodities which the Inhabitants of the Maritime Provinces of Quivira do receive from Cathay, or China, with which they are supposed to Traffick, as before was said. Like industry is noted in the Women also, one of which will grind and knead more Maize in a day, then the Women of Mexico do in four. In other things not differing from the rest of the Savages.

This Country was first made known to the Spaniards by the Travels of Frier Marco de Nisa, employed on new Discoveries by Antonio de Mendoza, as before was said. Leaving Couliacan, the most Northern Province of Nova Gallicia, he overcame a tedious Desart four days journey long; at the end of which he met some people, who told him of a pleasant Country four days journey farther, unto which he went. And staying at a place called Vacapa, he dispatched the Negro, whom he took with him for his Guide, to search towards the North, by whom he was advertised after four days absence, that he had been informed of a large and wealthy Province called Cibola, a months journey thence; wherein were seven great Cities under the Government of one Princess, the Houses of which were built of Stone, many Stories high, the Lintels of their Doors adorned with Turquoises; with many other strange Reports of their Markets, Multitudes and Riches. But neither the Frier nor the Negro had the hap to see it; the Negro being killed on the very Borders and the Frier so terrified with the news, that he thought it better to return, and satisfie the Vice-Roy with some handsome Fiction, then put himself upon the danger of a farther Journey. To that end he enlarged and amplified the Reports which the Negro sent him, gave to the Desarts in his way the name of the Kingdoms of Tonteac and Marata; ascribed unto this last a great City called Abacu, once well inhabited, but at that time destroyed by Wars; to the other a more civil and well-cloathed People then in other places. Inflamed with which Reports, Vasquez de Coronado undertook the Action, but found the Frier to be a Frier; nothing of moment true in all his Relations: the Kingdom of Marata to be found only in the Friers brains; Tonteac to be nothing but a great Lake, on whose Banks had once been many Cottages now consumed by Wars. And as for the seven Cities of such Wealth and bigness, he found them to be seven poor Burroughs, all situate within the compass of four Leagues; which made up that so famous Kingdom which the Frier dreamt of. The biggest of them held about 500 Cottages; the rest of them not above half that number. One of them, lest he might be said to return without doing something, he besieged and took, but found it such an hot piece of service, that he was twice beaten down with stones as he scaled the Rampiers: but having taken it at the last, he found in it great plenty of Maize to refresh his Army, and caused the Town (consisting of 200 Houses, or thereabouts) to be called Granada, for some resemblance which it had to that City in Spain. Such as have since endeavoured the Discovery of these North-west parts, and sailed along the Shores hereof on Mer Vermiglio, have added hereunto the names of some Points or Promontories, known in the Maps by the names of 1. Porto de S. Clara, not far from the Mouth or Influx of Rio del Noordt, 2. Las Plaias, 3. S. Michael, 4. Rio de Teron, 5. Laques del Oro, bordering on Quivira, tira, and 6. Rey Coronado, on the East of that.

Betwixt this Region and Quivira, specially so called, lieth a Country, which the said Vasquez names Tucayan, memorable for the famous River of Hucux; on the Banks whereof for the space of 20 Leagues stand 15 Burroughs well built, and furnished with Stoves, (if he hath not in this part of the Story out-lied the Frier) as in other cold, but more civil Countries, against the extremities of Winter. This Region, stretching seven days journey to the River of Cicuick, I reckon to belong to the North-east parts of Cibola. As I do also the fruitful Valley of Aroia de Corazones, which they passed in their way hither from Couliacan; with the Town and Territory of Chichilticala, and the Valley of Nuestra Sennora, or our Ladies Dale, in the South parts of it: not knowing otherwise what Province to refer them to.

Proceed we now unto the Island, the other general part of this Division, parted from Cibola and New Gallicia by a narrow Sea called Mer Vermiglio, and by some the Gulf of California; environed on all other parts by the main Ocean. Extended in a great length from the 22 degree of Northern Latitude to the 42, but the breadth not answerable. The most Northern point hereof called Cabo Blance, of which little memorable. The most Southern, called the Cape of S. Lucas, remarkable for the great Prize there taken from the Spaniards by Captain Cavendish, in his Circumnavigation of the World, Anno 1587. Supposed in former times to have been joyned in the Northern parts of it, above the Latitude of 27, to the rest of the Continent; and so described in most of our later Maps, till the year 1626, and after that in the Chart or Map of John de Laet, Anno 1633: which I wonder at; himself affirming, that in many of the old Maps it was made an Island, lib. 6. cap. 11. and that he had seen a fair Map in Parchment, a very fair and ancient Draught, Quâ Californiam, in ingentis Insulæ modum, à Continente divideret, in which it was expressed for a spacious Island, lib. 6. cap. 17. The reason of the Error was, that those who first endeavoured the Discovery of it, sailing up the Sea of Mer Vermiglio, found it to grow narrower and narrower towards the North, till it seemed to be no bigger then some mighty River; but that of such a violent Current, that no Boat was able to pass upwards with Wind or Oar, unless haled up with Cords by the strength of men. And taking it to be a River, they gave it the name of Rio de Bona Guia; known by that name, and continued in the opinion of being a River, till the year 1620, or thereabouts. At what time some Adventurers, beating on these Coasts, fell accidentally upon a straight, but violent passage, on the North hereof, which brought them with a strong current into Mer Vermiglio: discovering by that Accident, that the Waters falling into that Sea was not a River, as formerly had been supposed, but a violent breaking in of the Northern Ocean; by consequence, that this part of California was not a Demi-Island, or Peninsula, but a perfect Island. And looking on it as an Island, we have divided it into Nova Albion, and California, specially so called.

And first, 3. CALIFORNIA specially so called containeth the Southern parts hereof, as far as to the Latitude of 38, where it bordereth on Nova Albion. Of which Country, though so near to New Spain and New Gallicia, and though discovered so long since, we yet know but little: the Spaniards either wanting men for new Plantations, or finding small encouragements here to invite them to it. Furnished on the Sea-coasts with great plenty both of Fish and Fowl, which they find in great Islands of Weeds floating on the Seas; and more within the Land, with a kind of Beast haired like a Goat, and with Teats like a Cow, but otherwise resembling Deer, which they kill with their Dogs. Some Mountains in it are said to cast Fire-ashes, which the Spaniards for that reason call Cacofogo. The people are numerous, and thick set, insomuch that on the Banks of the supposed River of Bona Guia were numbred three and twenty Nations, all of several Languages. In their persons like the rest of the Savages, but of different Dresses. Some of them painting their Faces all over, some half way only, others with painted Vizards, resembling Faces: Holes in their Nostrils for their Pendant; the tips of their Ears loaded, if not over-loaded with the bones of Fishes hanging at them; a Girdle about their Waste, to which they fasten a bunch of Feathers that hang down behind them like a Tail: the Women using the like Bunches before them also. Their chief God the Sun, (as that of Cibola is the Water) which they most affectionately Worship, as the cause of the increase of their Fruits and Plants. Joyned in Commission with which God, they were taught by Alarcon a Spaniard to Worship a wooden Cross (the more irrational Idolatry of the two) which he caused to be erected at his coming away, with instructions to kneel before it every morning, at the first rising of the Sun: so teaching them to worship their two Idols at once, or translate their Devotions from the Sun, a Creature of God, to a plain wooden Cross (of which they knew nothing but the form) the work of a Carpenter. It is also told us of this People, that each Family is ordered by the Father of it, without other Government: yet so well managed, that they allowed but one wife to a man, and punished Adultery with death; the Maids not suffered to converse or talk with men before their Marriage, but to abide at home and work: the Widows not to marry again, till they had mourned at least half a year for the death of their Husbands. Matters more savouring an Utopian Commonwealth, then a Californian.

Places of most observation in it, 1. the Capes of S. Clara and S. Lucas: the first on the South-east point of the Island, towards new Gallicia; the other on the South-west, towards Asia. 2. S. Crosses, (Sinus S. Crucis) a capacious and convenient Haven near the Cape of S. Clara; so called because discovered upon Holy-Rood-day. 3. Cabo di las Plaias, more within the Bay; so named, because the shore shewed in little Hillocks, without Grass or Shrubs; the Spanish word signifying as much. 4. Cabo Boxo, towards the bottom of the Gulf, (from whence the Land on the other side may be easily seen) in the Latitude of 29. 5. S Andrews, a convenient Haven, and not far off an Island of the same name, with some Cottages in it. 6. S. Thome, an Island of 25 Leagues in compass, at the mouth of the Gulf; rising towards the South in an high Mountain, under which is a convenient Road for Shipping, the Sea being thereabouts 25 Fathoms. Then on the other side towards the Sea, we have 7. S. Abad, a convenient Haven, surrounded with a Country which seemed rich and pleasant. 8. Cape Trinidado, a Promontory well known to Sea-men. 9. Cape de Cedro, so called from the Cedars growing near it, in the Latitude of 28 and 15 minutes; with an Island not far off of the same name also. 10. Cape Enganno, in the Latitude of 31. 11. Puebla de las Canoas, so named from the multitude of Boats (by themselves called Canoes) which the people used, four degrees more Northward then that Cape. And 12. Cabo de Galera, so named from the resemblance which it had to an Hat, in the Latitude of 36. But these two are placed by John de Laet within the Country of Seyo, one of the Provinces of Quivira. Understand here, that these are only the names of Places, not of Towns or Villages, (for whether there be any such, I am yet unsatisfied:) and that there are many other Promontories, Bays, Rivers and Islands on both sides of this Region, which I find no names for.

The

The first Discovery of this Countrey we owe to Ferdinando Cortez, (of whom more hereafter) who in the year 1534. furnished out two Ships from the Haven of S. Jago, on the Western Shores of Hispania Nova, to search these Seas: who making some small progress in it, encouraged him the next year to pursue it in person; and passing up the Gulf, as high as to the River of S. Peter, and S. Paul, (so called, because discovered on the 29 of June, the Annual Feast of those Apostles) for want of Victuals and other necessary Provisions, he returned back again. The business having slept a while, was in the year 1539. awakened by Francisco de Ulloa, one that had accompanied Cortez the time before: who did not onely search to the bottom of the Gulf, but having throughly canvassed all the Eastern Shores, he turned his course, and made as fortunate a Discovery also of the Western Coasts. Landing, he took possession of the Countrey with the wonted Ceremonies, for the King of Spain; and in the place set up a Cross to serve as a Remembrance of his being there. After him followed Ferdinando de Alarcon, who discovered many Leagues up the course of the supposed River of Buena Guia; where Nagnacatus, one of the Chiefs of their Clans or Tribes, did submit unto him: advancing so far towards the North, that at the last he heard news of Cibola; but was unprovided at that time for a Journey thither. And on the other side, Roderico Cabrillo, in the year 1642. coasting along the Western Shores of this Countrey, discovered two small Islands beyond Cape Galera; the one of which he called S. Luke's, and the other the Island of Possession: and beyond them a fair Haven, which he called Sardinas. But yet not finding what they looked for, which was Gold and Silver, and hungry Honour yielding but a poor subsistence; the farther Search of these Countreys was quite laid aside, almost as little known now, as before Columbus first set sail upon New Discoveries.

4. NOVA ALBION, formerly conceived to be a part of the Continent, hath of late times been found to have taken up but some part of this Island; lying about the 38 degree of Latitude, and so Northwards as far as to Cape Blanco, as they call it now. Discovered by Sir Francis Drake in his Circumnavigation of the World Anno 1577. and by him named Nova Albion, in honour of England his own Countrey, which was once called Albion.

The Countrey is abundantly replenished with Herds of Deer, grasing upon the Hills by thousands: as also with a kind of Conies, in their Feet somewhat like a Want, and on each side a Sack, where they keep such Victuals as they cannot eat. The Flesh of these Conies serves the people for Food; and of their Skins the Kings or Chiefs of their several Tribes make their Royal Robes. The Men go quite naked, the Women with a piece of Mat instead of an Apron; chaste, and obedient to their Husbands. Their Houses made of Turf and Osier, so wrought together, as serves to keep them from the cold: in the midst whereof they have an Hearth where they make Fire, about which they lie along upon Beds of Bulrushes. What Towns they have, or whether they have any or not, and by what names called, if they have any, must be referred to a farther Discovery; there being nothing to that purpose delivered hitherto. And yet not seated so far North, but that it may be capable of a farther light, if any Noble Undertakers would adventure on it.

The English were no sooner landed, but the Inhabitants presented themselves before the General with Presents of Feathers, and Cauls of Network made of Bull-rushes; which he received, and requited with great humanity. The News of their Arrival being carried farther, one of their Kings thought fit to bestow a visit on them: A Person of a goodly stature, attired in Cony-Skins, with many tall men attending on him; one going before him with a Mace, at which hanged three Crowns, with as many Chains; the Chains of Bone, but the Crowns of Knit-work, made of Feathers, very ingeniously composed. After him followed many of the common sort, every one having his Face painted white, black, and some other colours; and every one with some Present or other in their hands, even the very Boys. Being brought into the General's Presence, the Mace-Bearer made a long Speech, which might be well meant, though not understood: and that being ended, the King caused the Crown to be put upon the General's head, and the three Chains about his Neck; the common people offering Sacrifices about the Fields in great solemnity. Not to be interdicted those Superstitions, though the English (whom they took for Gods) seemed to be offended at them. Finally, after much kindness expressed on both sides, the General promising in the Name of the Queen of England to take them into his Protection, he caused a Pillar to be erected in the place; on which he fastned the Arms of England, the Queen's Name, and his own; and so returned unto his Ships. But the Country lying so far off, that no benefit could redound by it to the English Nation, but the honour of the first Discovery; the name of Nova Albion by little and little was forgotten, and at last quite left out of the Maps or Charts; only a Point or Promontory, by the name of Po. de Francisco Draco, being left unto us to preserve his Memory. And though we have caused the name of Nova Albion to be restored unto the Maps, as it was before; yet we must let the Reader know, that the name of New Albion hath been given lately with as much propriety, but more hopes of profit and advantage, to that part of Virginia which lieth betwixt Mary-Land and New-England, as before was noted.

Opposite to Cape Blanco, and the extream North parts of America, the supposed Kingdom of ANIAN, from whence the Streights of Anian, which are thought by some to part America from Asia, do derive their Name, is conceived to lie. Supposed, and supposed onely, for not certainly known: the very being of such a Kingdom, and such Streights, being much suspected.

OF NOVA GALLICIA.

NOVA GALLICIA is bounded on the East and South with Nova Hiſpania, or New Spain; on the Weſt, with Mer Vermiglio, better known heretofore by the names of the River Buena Guia, and the Gulf of California; the Countreys beyond it on the North not diſcovered hitherto. So called becauſe of ſome reſemblance which it was thought to have to Gallicia, a Province of Spain in Europe; the word Nova being added to it for diſtinction-ſake.

It is ſituate between the 18 and 28 degrees of the Northern Latitude, which meaſured from the Port of the Nativity, (by the Spaniards called Natividad, and contractedly Navidad) where it confineth on New Spain, to the moſt Northern border of Cinoloa, makes 300 Leagues: the breadth hereof, for ſo much as is poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, being but an hundred onely. But taking in New Biſcay and Nova Mexicana into the Account, the breadth will be greater than the length.

The Air hereof is generally very temperate, but more inclined to heat then cold; many times ſubject unto Thunders and great Storms of Rain, but for the moſt part of ſo ſound a Conſtitution, that the Inhabitants attain to a good old Age; contagious Diſeaſes ſeldom known amongſt them. The Ground by conſequence ſomewhat of the drieſt, if not moiſtened with the morning Dews, which fall very frequently; and whether by the temperature of the Air, or Soil, apt to produce a kind of Gnat, (which the Latines call Cimices) affirmed to be as big as a Bean, which by their ſtings do very often plague the people, and raiſe Bliſters on their Bodies as big as Wallnuts.

The Countrey more Mountainous than Plain, and in moſt parts Sandy. Quarries of Stone in many places, but little Marble, or any other Stone of value. Good ſtore of Mines of Braſs and Silver, few of Gold or Iron; and amongſt all their Metals a great mixture of Lead. The Soil ſo rich, that it yields 60 meaſures of Wheat for one; and for one of Maize, above two hundred: The Rivers plentiful of Fiſh, and the Woods of Beaſts: great ſtore of Bees without ſtings, which make their Honey in the Foreſts without other Hives. And as for Apples, Pears, Citrons, Figs, Malacatons, and other Europæan Fruits, they thrive better here than they do in Spain, except the Cherry and the Olive: of which the laſt is moſt an end undermined by Emmets; and the firſt thruſts out ſuch a Harveſt of Leaves, occaſioned by the natural Rankneſs of the ground, that they ſeldom come to their perfection.

The People are wavering and inconſtant, apt upon any diſcontent to forſake their Houſes, betake themſelves unto the Woods, and many times to return to their Ancient Barbariſm: Crafty, and docile even in matters which concern Religion; but ſlothful and impatient of any labour, to which not to be hired but for very great wages. Much given to ſinging, Dancing, and ſometimes to Drinking; and were it not that they loved their Liquor, few of them would betake themſelves to the cares of Husbandry. Of Stature reaſonably tall; their Garments for the moſt part a Shirt of Cotton, with a Mantle over it, faſtned with two Buckles about their Shoulders. They dwell in Villages and Towns, according to the greatneſs of their ſeveral Tribes: thoſe Tribes commanded by their Chiefs, who ſucceed hereditarily; but ſubject to the Judges and other Officers of the King of Spain. As for the Spaniards who here dwell, they betake themſelves generally to Merchandize, and the ſearch of Metals; ſome few to Husbandry and Grazing, but make not the beſt uſe which they might of the Country: for though here be great plenty both of Sugar-Canes and of Cochineel, yet they neglect to refine the one, or to attend the ordering of the other; finding perhaps an eaſier or a greater profit in the other Commodities.

The Mountains of moſt note in all this Countrey is that betwixt Guadalaiara and Zacatecas; a League in height, but of ſuch a Precipice withal, that no Horſe nor Cattel can aſcend it: their other Hills rocky, but cloathed with Woods full of vaſt Pines, large Oaks, and great ſtore of Wolves. The River of moſt name is that called Bazania, which, riſing out of the Lake of Mechuacan in Nova Hiſpania, falls down a Cataract about four Leagues from Guadalaiara of Ten Fathoms deep, and ſo tumbleth into Mare del Zur: in no place fordable, nor having any paſſage over it but on Reeds and Rafts, on which the Paſſenger ſitteth with his Commodities, his Horſe ſwimming by; not ſafe at any time, and at moſt times dangerous. Some Lakes here be of 20, ſom of 12 Leagues compaſs: environed with rich Paſtures on every ſide. Thoſe of leſs note ſhall be remembred in their proper places.

It comprehends the Provinces of 1 Cinaloa, 2 Couliacan, 3 Xaliſco, and 4 Guadalaiara, on the Weſtern Shores: 5 Zacatecas, 6 New Biſcay, 7 Nova Mexicana, more within the Land. Of all theſe ſomewhat ſhall be ſaid, though of each but little.

1. CINALOA is the moſt Northern Province of New Gallicia, bounded upon the Weſt with the ſuppoſed River of Buena Guia, and ſome part of the Bay of California; on the Eaſt, with a long chain of Mountains, called the Hills of Tepeeſuan; on the North, with the South parts of Cibola; on the South with Couliacan.

The Air for the moſt part clear and healthy, the Soil fat and fruitful, productive of Maize, Pulſe, a ſort of long Peaſe, which the Latines call Phaſeoli, but we have no proper Engliſh name for; of which abundantly plentiful. Great ſtore of Cotton-wool, wherewith both Sexes are apparelled. Well watered with the Rivers, 1 Petatlan, 2 Tamochala, 3 Paſchua, 4 Yaquim; of no long courſe, all of them riſing from the Hills of Tepeeſuan, and thoſe but 36 leagues diſtant from the Sea-ſhores. By reaſon of theſe Rivers, here are very rich Paſtures, which breed great ſtore of Kine, Oxen, and other Cattel.

The People are generally tall, higher than the Spaniards by an hand-breadth, warlike and ſtrong; not conquered by the Spaniard without great difficulty; their Arms a Bow and poiſoned Arrows, with Great Maſty Clubs. Their Garments for the moſt part of Cotton-wool; their Hair nouriſhed to a great length, which the men tie up in a Knot, Knot, but the Women ſuffer to hang down to the full length of it. Both Sexes, at the firſt coming of the Spaniards thither, without Cloaths at all, but to hide their ſhame; moſt miſerably poor; worſhippers of the Sun, and not a few Cannibals amongſt them.

Chief Towns hereof 1. S. Philip and Jacob, ſituate on the Bank of a River, about 42 Leagues from the Town of Couliacan, but of no great note. 2. S. Johns de Cinaloa, a Colony of the Spaniards, planted here long ſince, and re-inforced by a Supply brought thither in the year 1554. by Franciſco de Tharra; ſcarce able to defend themſelves from the old Inhabitants, who ever and anon diſturb them with a freſh Alarm. Beſides theſe, here are onely ſome ſcattered Villages, and thoſe not many: the Spaniards finding only 25 old Forts in all the Countrey, when they firſt made themſelves Maſters of it, under the Conduct of Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1542. People everywhere ſubmitting without any reſiſtance, or if they gathered to an Head, ſoon diſperſed again. For what could naked men do againſt an Army?

2. COULIACAN, or CULUCAN, lieth on the South of Cinaloa, coaſting along the Bay of California, which it hath on the Weſt, and part of New Biſcay on the Eaſt. The Countrey well provided of Fruits, inferiour unto none for all ſorts of Proviſions, and not without ſome Mines of Silver found out by the Spaniards. The chief Rivers of it, 1. Rio des Mucheras, or the River of Women, in the North part of the Province; ſo called, becauſe the Spaniards found there more Women than Men, occaſioning the opinion that it was inhabited by Amazons. 2. Rio de Sal, a goodly River, both ſides whereof are very well peopled. 3. Piaſtla, more towards Xaliſco.

The People not much different from the reſt of Gallicia; ſave that their Women were more handſome, both for Dreſs and Perſonage; all cloathed in Garments of Cotton-Wool, when firſt known to the Spaniards; and yet the men not free from the ſin of Sodom. Their Houſes neatly thatched with Straw, and over the Lintels of the Doors ſome Paintings, as ſhameleſs as the very fouleſt of Arctine's Poſtures. Ignorant of Gold, which they had no Mines of; but of late times acquainted to their coſt with Silver, which they are compelled to dig and refine for the Spaniards.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Piaſtla, on the River ſo called, about a days Journey from the Sea, well built, and artificially contrived in reſpect of others; never recovered of that blow that it had from the Spaniards, who in the Conqueſt of this Countrey waſted all before them. 2. Quinola, near Rio de Mucheras. 3. Quatrabarrios, an old Town, but new named by the Spaniards, becauſe it conſiſted of four parts. 4. El Leon, an old Burrough, which from a Lion there found had this new name alſo. 5 Couliacan, on a River ſo named, once the chief of this Province. 6. S. Michael, on the River of Women, built by Nonnez de Guzman, in the Latitude of 25. but afterwards deſerted, or removed rather to a fitter place; and now fixed in the Valley of Harroba, two Leagues from the Sea, in a flouriſhing and wealthy Soil both of Corn and Paſturage. The whole Countrey conquered by the Spaniards Anno 1531. under Nonnez de Guzman, moſt barbarouſly burning down the Towns, and deſtroying the people; as if they came not to ſubdue, but root out the Nation.

3. XALISCO, or GALESCO, as ſome Writers call it, hath on the North Couliacan; on the South, New Spain; on the Eaſt, the Province of Guadalaiara; on the Weſt, the large Bay of California. So called from Xaliſco, the chief Town of it, when ſubdued by the Spaniards.

The Soil hereof very fit for Maize, which it yields good ſtore of, but not often Herbage good for Cattel, which is reckoned for their greateſt want. The North parts, called Chiametla, of the two moſt fruitful, and better peopled; having in it ſtore of Wax and Honey, with ſome Mines of Silver. The people formerly Man-eaters, and much given to quarrel; from which reformed ſince their Converſion to the Goſpel. Tenacious ſtill of one of their ancient Cuſtoms, which is, to carry the ſmalleſt Burthen upon their Shoulders, and not under their Arms; which to do, they think very much miſ-becoming.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. S. Sebaſtians, 2. Rio de Spiritu Santo; and 3. the great and famous River of Barania, ſpoken of before. Upon the Banks of which are ſituate their moſt principal Towns, viz. 1. Xaliſco, giving name to the whole Province, and to a large Promontory, called by the Spaniards Sierra de Xaliſco, thruſting it ſelf into the Bay of California, over againſt the Iſlands called The Three Maries: the City taken and deſtroyed by Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1530. 2. Compoſtella, now the chief City of the Countrey, and a Biſhop's See, founded by the ſaid Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1531. when he had fully conquered the Countrey: by whom peopled with Spaniards, and by him called Del Spiritu Santo. But founded in ſo ill a place, and ſo bad an Air, deſtitute both of Food for Men, and Graſs for Horſes, as plainly ſhewed him to have better judgment in Souldiery than in Architecture. 3. Purification, a ſmall Burrough on the Sea-ſide, and in the extremity of this Countrey towards Nova Hiſpania, near the Port of Natividad. 4. S. Sebaſtian in Chiametla, on the River ſo called, firſt built by Franciſco de Tharra above mentioned; who having found hereabouts ſome rich Mines of Silver, brought hither in the year 1554. a new Spaniſh Colony, and building Houſes for his Miners in convenient places, occaſioned the whole Tract to be called de Tharra.

4. GUADALAIARA hath on the Weſt, Xaliſco; on the Eaſt and South, ſome parts of Nova Hiſpania; on the North, the Province of Zacatecas. Well watered with the River Barania, which runneth through the midſt thereof, ſome of his by-ſtreams moiſtening the other parts. The Countrey very wealthy in Mines of Silver, plentiful of Maize, and fortunate in the production of Wheat, and ſuch other Fruits as were brought hither out of Europe. The Character of the People we have before, applied in general to all the Natives of New Gallicia, but moſt peculiar unto theſe.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Guadalaiara, ſo called with reference to a Town of that Name in New Caſtile, and giving name unto the Province, ſituate on the Banks of the River Barania, or ſome branch thereof, in a ſweet Air, and a moſt rich and pleaſing Soil; there founded by Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1531. when he had perfected his Conqueſt: better adviſed in the choice of the place, then in that of Compoſtella before mentioned. A City of ſo good eſteem, that it paſſeth for the Metropolis of all New Gallicia; honoured with the Courts of Judicature, the Reſidence of the Kings Treaſurers, and a Biſhops See, removed hither from Compoſtella, Anno 1570. Beautified on this laſt occaſion with a fair Cathedral, a Convent of Franciſcans, and another of Auguſtine Friers. 2. Del Spiritu Santo, built by the ſaid Nonnez in that part of this Countrey which is called Tepique; but not elſe obſervable. 3. Santa Maria de los Lagos, built by the ſame Founder, 30 leagues on the Eaſt of Guadalaiara; and the beſt defence of all this Province againſt the Chichimicas, a barbarous and untamed people on the North and Eaſt parts of this Countrey, who harbouring themſelves in the thickeſt of the Woods, and ſome unknown Caves; do many times prey upon the Countrey; which they would utterly destroy, if they were not thus represſed.

5. ZACATECAS is bounded on the South with Guadalaiara; on the North, with New Biſcay; on the Weſt, with Culucan, and ſome part of Xaliſco; on the Eaſt, with Panuco, one of the Provinces of New Spain.

The Countrey is of a different nature. In the Weſt parts, called properly Los Zacatecas, rich in Mines of Silver (no one Province more) but deſtitute of Wheat, Maize, Water, and all other Proviſions; as if it were deſigned for ſome wealthy Miſer, who could live upon the ſight of Treaſure. The Eaſtern parts, properly called Uxitipa, not ſo well furniſhed with Silver, but moſt abundantly provided with all ſorts of Fruits; their Woods repleniſhed with Deer, their Fields with Corn, and every Tree giving Entertainment to ſome Bird or other: In a word, nothing wanting in it either for Neceſſity or Pleaſure. Of the people I find nothing ſingular, but that they are affirmed to be more induſtrious than the moſt of their Neighbours; whether by force or nature, (the Spaniards compelling them to drudge in their Silver-Mines) I determine not.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Los Zacatecas, neighboured by moſt wealthy Mines, 40 Leagues on the North of Guadalaiara; inhabited by about 500 Spaniards, who have here a Convent of Franciſcans. 2. S. Martins, 27 Leagues from Zacatecas, the Mines whereof were firſt opened by Franciſco de Tharra, before mentioned; who with many Slaves, and all things neceſſary for a War, was ſent upon that Errand by Lewis de Velaſco, then Vice-Roy of Mexico, Anno 1554. The Town inhabited by a Colony of 400 Spaniards, beſides Women and Children. 3. S. Lukes, and 4. De Avinnon, built amongſt Mines as wealthy as thoſe before, by the ſame De Tharra: as alſo was 5. Erena, a ſmall Town, but of the ſame Eſtate for Silver; diſtant from Zacatecas 25 Leagues towards the North-weſt. 6. Nombre di Dios, in the moſt Northern parts of this Countrey, 68 Leagues from Guadalaiara, the foundation of the ſame De Tharra. Who having conquered the Natives, and quieted them after ſome Rebellions by gentle uſage, built this Town in a pleaſant and fruitful Soil: and having got the Government of the Countreys which he had diſcovered, drew hither ſo many of the Spaniards and chief men of the Natives, by granting them the propriety of ſome Silver Mines, that it became the chief and beſt peopled Town of all this Province. 7. Durango, in the Valley of Guadiana, about eight Leagues diſtant from Nombre di Dios, peopled by a Colony of Spaniards, conducted thither by Alfonſo Pacheco, at the appointment of De Tharra, to whom the Spaniards are indebted for all this Treaſure. 8. Xeres de Frontera, firſt built for the repreſſing of ſome of the Savages, who uſed to infeſt the Borders towards Guadalaiara, during the Regency of the Marqueſs of Villa Manrique, who then commanded in New Spain.

As for UXITIPA, it belonged once unto the Province of Panuco, ſubdued by Lopez de Mendoza, employed therein by Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1529. at that time Governour of that Province. Diſmembred from it ſince the Conqueſt of Zacatecas, and made a Member of the Prefecture of New Gallicia. The chief Town of it is called S. Lewis, built in a pleaſant Valley by the ſaid Pacheco, and by him peopled with a Colony of Spaniards: The Town not diſtant from Panuco above twenty Leagues.

6. NOVA BISCAIA, or New Biſcay, hath on the South Los Zacatecas; on the Weſt, Cinaloa; on the North, Nova Mexicana; the Countreys towards the Eaſt not diſcovered hitherto. So called by Franciſco de Tharra, by whom firſt ſubdued, from the near Neighbourhood which it had unto Nova Gallicia, of which it hath been always ſince reckoned for a part.

The Countrey is ſubject in the Winter to great Froſts and Snows; but notwithſtanding well provided of all things neceſſary, and wonderfully enriched with Mines of Silver. They have alſo ſome of Lead, which ſerve very fitly for the melting and purifying of the other; uſed to this purpoſe not alone in theſe Mines of New Biſcay, but in thoſe alſo of New Spain. The people reſolute and ſtout, not conquered at the firſt Attempt, nor won ſo much by Force, as by fair Perſwaſions.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. S. Barbara, and 2. S. John's, about three Leagues diſtant; built onely for the benefit of the Mines adjoyning. 3. Ende, the fartheſt Town which the Spaniards have towards the North, of whom a Colony was there planted (by reaſon of the adjoyning Mines) by Roderico del Rio, who did alſo fortifie it by the direction of De Tharra, under whom a Colonel. Diſtant from S. Barbara and S. John's about 20 Leagues, and 120 Leagues from Los Zacatecas. More North by 70 Leagues at leaſt, and within this Region, but not within the power of the Spaniards, are ſaid to be thoſe four great Towns which the Spaniards call Las Quatro Cienegas: but I have nothing of them certain.

This Countrey was firſt ſubdued by Franciſco de Tharra, who after he had built Durango in the North parts of Los Zacatecas, & aſſured that Province, advanced with a Troop of 130 Horſe for the Diſcovery and Conqueſt of his Northern Neighbours. Encountred at the firſt more with hunger and thirſt, than with any oppoſition of the Inhabitants; inſomuch that they were fain to eat their Horſes: and afterwards by the Rebellion of the Natives, who killed the greateſt part of ſuch Horſes as were left uneaten. But not diſcourag'd herewith, nor with the many difficulties which he found in his way, being compelled to hew his paſſage through the Woods by the Swords of his Souldiers, he prevailed at laſt; and having ſettled it in peace, returned by the way of Cinaloa, which he alſo conquered, and planted there a Colony in the Town of S. Johns, as was ſaid before.

7. NOVA MEXICANA is bounded on the South with New Biſcay; on the Weſt, with Quivira; the Countreys on the North and Eaſt, not diſcovered hitherto, though ſome extend it Eaſtwards as far as Florida. Extended 250 Leagues from the Town and Mines of S. Barbara, and how much beyond that, none can tell; the Relations of this Countrey being ſo uncertain, and indeed incredulous, that I dare ſay nothing poſitively of the Soil or People, but much leſs of the Towns and Cities which are ſaid to be in it. So named by Antonio de Eſpeio, a Citizen of Mexico in New Spain, by whom diſcovered and ſubdued.

For firſt, they tell us of the People, that they are of great Stature, and that like enough; but not ſo probable that they have the Art of dreſſing Chamois and other Leather, as well as the beſt Leather-dreſſer in all Flanders: or that they have Shoes and Boots ſo well ſowed and ſoaled, that no Shoe-maker in all S. Martins could do it better. Then for their Towns, that they are very fair and goodly, the Houſes well built of Lime and Stone, ſome of them four Stories, and in moſt of them Stoves for the Winter ſeaſon. The Streets even and ordered in an excellent manner. Particularly, they tell us of a Town called 1. Chia, one of the five chief Towns of the Province of Cuames, which is ſaid to contain eight Market-places, and all the Houſes to be plaiſtered and painted in moſt curious manner. 2 Of Acoma, that it is ſituate on the top of a Rock, a great Town, yet no way unto it but by Ladders; and in one place a pair of Stairs, but exceeding narrow, hewn out of the Rock; exceedingly well for-fortified by Nature, (they ſay true in that, if any things are true which they tell us of it) and all their Water kept in Ciſterns, (but no body can tell from whence they have it.) 3. Of Conibas, on a Lake ſo called, the City ſeven leagues long, two broad; (a ſecond Ninive) but the Houſes ſcatteringly built amongſt Hills and Gardens, which take up a great deal of the Room: Inhabited by a People of ſuch ſtrength and courage, that the Spaniards onely faced it, and ſo went away. Much of this ſtuff I could afford you, but by this Taſte we may conjecture of the reſt of the Feaſt.

The Countrey was firſt diſcovered by Auguſtino Royaz, a Franciſcan Frier, Anno 1580. who out of Zeal to plant the Goſpel in the North accompanied with two other Friers of that Order, and eight Souldiers, undertook the Adventure. But one of the Monks being killed by the Savages, the Souldiers plaid the Poltrons, and gave over the Action. On their return, Beltram, a Frier of the ſame Order (from whoſe mouth we muſt have the former Fictions) deſirous to preſerve the Lives of his Fellows which ſtaid behind, encouraged one Antonio de Eſpeio, a Native of Corduba, but a Citizen of Mexico, to engage in ſuch an holy Cauſe: who raiſing a Band of 150 Horſe, accompanied with many Slaves and Beaſts of Carriage, undertook the buſineſs. I omit the many Nations of the Conchi, Paſnugates, Toboſi, Patarabyes, Tarrahumares, Tepoanes, and many other as hard names, which he paſſed through in his way. But coming at the laſt to a great River which he called Del Noords, there he made a ſtand; cauſed the Countrey on both ſides of it to be called Nova Mexicana, and a City to be built which he called New Mexico, ſituate in the 37 degree of Northern Latitude, and diſtant from Old Mexico five hundred Leagues: the name ſince changed to that of S. Foy, but ſtill the Metropolis of that Province, the Reſidence of the Governour, and a pretty Garriſon conſiſting of 250 Spaniards. Some other Towns he found at his coming hither, viz. 2. Socorro, ſo called by the Spaniards, becauſe of that Succour and Relief they found there for their half-ſtarved Bodies. 3. Seneen, 4. Pilabo, and 5. Seviletta; old Towns, but new Chriſtened by the Spaniards, when the Inhabitants thereof did embrace the Goſpel; each of them beautified with a Church. 6. S. Johns, built afterwards in the year 1599. by John de Onnate, who with an Army of five thouſand followed the ſame way which Eſpeio went, and having got a great deal of Treaſure, laid it up in this place, that it might be no incumbrance to him in his Advance. This is the moſt I dare rely on for this Countrey. And this hath no ſuch Wonders in it, but what an eaſie Faith may give credit to: Though I had rather believe the Frier's whole Relations, then go thither to diſprove any part thereof.

NOVA HISPANIA.

NOVA HISPANIA is bounded on the Eaſt with a fair and large Arm of the Sea, called the Bay of New Spain, and the Gulf of Mexico; on the Weſt, with parts of Nova Gallicia, and Mare del Zur; on the North, with the reſt of New Gallicia, ſome part of Florida, and the Gulf; on the South with Mare del Zur, or the South-ſea only. So called with relation to Spain in Europe, as the chief Province of that Empire in this New World; with reference to which, the Kings of Spain call themſelves Reges Hiſpaniarum, in the plural number.

It extendeth from the 15 degree of Latitude to the 26 excluſively, i.e. meaſuring it on the Eaſt-ſide by the Bay of Mexico, to the North of Panuco; but ſix degrees leſs, meaſuring it on the Weſt ſide to the Port of Natividad, where it joyneth with Gallicia Nova. Or making our account by miles, it is in breadth from Panuco unto Mare del Zur, 200 Spaniſh Leagues, or 600 Italian miles; but hardly half as much on the other ſide. The length hereof, from the Eaſt point of Jucatan, to the borders of Gallicia Nova, 1200 Italian miles, or 400 leagues; which is juſt double to the breadth.

The Air exceeding temperate, though ſituate wholly under the Torrid Zone; the heats thereof much qualified by thoſe cooling Blaſts which fan it from the Sea on three ſides of it; and by thoſe frequent Showrs which fall continually in June, July and Auguſt, the hotteſt ſeaſons of the year. Abundantly enriched with inexhauſtible Mines of Gold and Silver, ſome of Braſs and Iron; plenty of Coco-Nuts, of which we have ſpoke before; great ſtore of Caſſia; ſuch a wonderful encreaſe of Cochineel, that 5670 Arrobas of it (each Arroba containing 25 Buſhels of our Engliſh meaſure) have been ſhipped for Europe in one year. Where by the way, this Cochineel groweth on a ſmall Tree or Shrub, having very thick Leaves, which they call a Tuna; planted and ordered by them as the French do their Vines: out of the Seed whereof ariſeth a ſmall Worm, at firſt no bigger than a Flea, and the greateſt not much bigger than our common Lady-Cows, which they much reſemble; which feeding on the Leaves, and over-ſpreading all the ground in which they are, are gathered by the Natives twice a year, ſtifled with Aſhes, or with Water, (but this laſt the beſt) dried to a powder in the ſhade, and ſo tranſported into Europe. Here is alſo great plenty of Wheat, Barley, Pulſe of all ſorts, and of all ſuch Plants and Roots as we ſet in Gardens for the Kitchin; Pomegranates, Oranges, Limons, Citrons, Malacatons, Figs and Cherries, even to ſuperfluity; Apples and Pears in leſs abundance; few Grapes, and thoſe few they have, not fit for Wine; plenty of Maize, and other plants unknown in Europe; Birds and Beaſts vvild and tame of all ſorts, and of each no ſcarcity. Not thus in all places of it, nor in all alike; but ſome in one, ſome in another, according to the conſtitution of the Soil and Air: vvhich is ſo different in this Countrey, that in ſuch parts hereof as are hot and dry, their Seed-time is in April or May, their Harveſt in October; but in ſuch places of it as are low and moiſt, they ſow their Corn in October, and reap in May: thus having two Harveſts in a year, and yet but one.

The People more ingenious than the reſt of the Savages, ges, exquiſite at ſome Mechanick Arts, eſpecially in the making of their Feather-Pictures; and ſo induſtrious withal, ſo patient both of Thirſt and Hunger, that they will ſit at it an whole day without meat or drink; turning every Feather to the light, upwards and downwards, every way, to ſee in which poſture it will beſt fit the place intended to it. No better Goldſmiths in the World, nor men more expert any where in refining Metals; curious in painting upon Cotton whatſoever was preſented to the Eye. But yet ſo barbarous withall, that they thought the Gods were pleaſed with the blood of men, which ſometimes they ſacrificed unto them. So ignorant, that when they firſt ſaw the Spaniards on Horſe-back, they thought the Horſe and Man to have been one Creature; and would ask what the Horſes ſaid, when they heard them neigh. So careleſs of the worth of Gold, that they would part with great quantities of it for Knives, Glaſs Beads, little Bells, and ſuch petit Trifles. But whatſoever they once were, is not now material: the Spaniards having made ſuch havock of this wretched People, that in 17 years they deſtroyed above ſix millions of them, roaſting ſome, plucking out the Eyes of others, conſuming them in their Mines, and mercileſly caſting them amongſt wild Beaſts, where they were devoured. As for thoſe who do remain, beſides their own natural ingenioſities, they have ſince learned the Civilities and Arts of Europe. What elſe concerns this Soil and People, we ſhall ſhew more particularly, if we find it neceſſary, in their proper places.

Amongſt the Rarities of this Countrey, (though there be many Plants in it of a ſingular nature) I reckon that which they call Magney, or Metl, ſaid to be one of the principal: a Tree which they both plant and dreſs, as we do our Vines. It hath in it 40 kind of Leaves fit for ſeveral uſes. For when they be tender, they make of them Conſerves, Paper, Flax, Mantles, Mats, Shoes, Girdles, and Cordage: upon them there grow certain Prickles, ſo ſtrong and ſharp, that the People uſe them inſtead of Saws. From the top of the Tree cometh a Juice like Syrup; which, if you ſeethe it, will become Honey; if purified, Sugar: they may make alſo Wine and Vinegar of it. The Bark of it roaſted maketh a good Plaiſter for Hurts and Sores; and from the higheſt of the Boughs comes a kind of Gum; which is a ſoveraign Antidote againſt Poyſons.

Nor is it leſs a Rarity, though leſs uſeful to the good of Mankind (except it be to keep them in continual mind of the Fires of Hell) that they have a Mountain in this Countrey called Popocampeche, (ſituate in the Province of Mexico) which vomiteth Flames of Fire like Ætna: and another in the Province of Guaxaca, which ſendeth forth two burning ſtreams, the one of red Pitch, and the other of black; a fit reſemblance of thoſe Fountains of Fire and Brimſtone. Though they have many other Mountains, yet theſe are moſt memorable. And as for Rivers, though very well provided of that watery Commodity; yet here are none remarkable for length or greatneſs, but Panuco onely, of which more preſently. The want thereof ſupplied by ſome famous Lakes, and the neighbourhood of the Gulf of Mexico. Amongſt the Lakes, the principal are thoſe of Mexico, (whereof more anon) and that of Chapala, bordering upon Gallicia Nova; which for its greatneſs hath the name of Mare Chapalicum, out of which there is made yearly great abundance of Salt. But that which is of greateſt beauty is the Gulf of Mexico, the greateſt and goodlieſt of the World: in form completely Circular, in compaſs no leſs then 900 miles; environed with the main Land, the Peninſula's of Florida and Jucutan, and the Iſle of Cuba. Two only paſſages in and out, and both well fortified: the one betwixt the point of Jucutan and the Iſle of Cuba, where the Tide with a violent Current entreth; the other betwixt the ſaid Iſland and the Cape of Florida, where it makes as violent an Exit: the ſea ſo heady in the midſt, and yet ſafe enough, that ſhips are not to ſail in it directly forwards, but muſt bend either towards the North or South, as their Journey lieth. Upon this Gulf the King of Spain hath always ſome Ships in readineſs, by which he more aſſureth his Eſtates in this part of America, than by all his Garriſons.

It comprehendeth the Provinces of 1. Panuco, 2. Mechuacan, 3. Mexicana, 4. Tlaſcala, 5. Guaxaca, 6. Jucutan. Some others of leſs note, but reduced to theſe.

1. PANUCO, the moſt Northern Province of all New Spain, by ſome called Guaſtecan, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Gulf of Mexico; on the Weſt with Uxitipa, a Member of the Province of Zacatecas in New Gallicia; on the North, with Florida and ſome Countreys not yet diſcovered, from which parted by the River of Palms; on the South-weſt, with Mechuacan; and on the South with Mexicana. So called from Panuco the chief River of it, which riſing out of the Hills of Tepecſuan, bordering upon Cinoloa and Couliacan, and dividing New Biſcay from the Province of Zacatecas, paſſeth through the middle of this Countrey, and ſo at laſt into the Gulf.

The length hereof is reckoned to be 50 Leagues, and the breadth as much. Divided into three Provinces. That towards Mexicana, called Aiotuxetlan, of a fruitful Soil, and not without ſome Mines of Gold; once very populous, till in the year 1522. diſpeopled in a manner by Ferdinando Cortez in his War againſt them. The other called Chila, leſs fruitful, but poſſibly for want of people to improve the Land: for being formerly of a ſtout couragious nature, and truſting over-much to their Fens and Faſtneſſes, they put the Spaniards to ſuch trouble when they warred upon them, that the Conquerours, to ſecure themſelves from all future dangers, endeavoured to root them out, and deſtroy them utterly. The third lieth towards the River of Palms, inclined to barrenneſs, and unpleaſant: but the name I find not.

Chief Towns hereof, at the coming of the Spaniards hither, 1. Las Caxas, 2. Ixicuyan, 3. Nachapatan, 4. Taquinite, 5. Tuzeteco, deſolate and laid waſte by the cruel Spaniards. Of moſt note now, 6. Tanchipa, and 7. Tameclipa, two ſmall Burroughs in the Province of the River of Palms, (for ſo I call it) inhabited by the Natives onely. 8. S. Kallap, another ſmall Town, but in the Province of Chila, inhabited by a few Chriſtians, with a Convent of Auguſtinian Friers; ſacked by the Savages in the year 1571. 9. Tampice, or S. Lewis de Tampice, a Colony of the Spaniards ſituate on the North Banks of the River Panuco, and at the very mouth thereof; where it hath a very large Haven, but ſo barred with Sands, that no Ship of great burthen can make uſe of it: the River otherwiſe ſo deep, that Veſſels of 500 Tun might ſail 60 Leagues at leaſt in it againſt the Stream. 10. S. Stevan del Puerto, on the Southern ſide of that River, in the Latitude of 23. about 65 Leagues on the North of Mexico, from the Sea eight Leagues; now the Metropolis, and Town of greateſt Trade in all this Countrey. Built by Ferdinando Cortez in the place where formerly had ſtood Panuco, once the chief City of the Province, but by him deſtroyed. Oppoſite hereunto, on the other ſide of the River lie great ſtore of Salt-pits, out of which the people of this Town raiſe their greateſt profit. 11. S. Jago de los Valles, or S. James in the Vallies, 25 leagues Weſtward (but inclining to the South withal) from S. Stevan del Puerto; ſituate in an open Countrey, and therefore fenced about with a Wall of Earth: To the Inhabitants whereof (all Spaniards, as in that before) the King of Spain hath granted many fair poſſeſſions, to defend those parts (then being the borders of his Estates) against the Savages.

This Countrey first attempted by Francisco Garaio, but the Conquest of it finished by Cortez, as before is said: each striving, as it seemeth, who should most deface it, and be enrolled for the greatest Man-slayer of the two. But having carried on the course of their Victories almost as far as to the River of Palms, they desisted there; either because already glutted with humane Bloud, or that the conquest of those parts would not quit the charge. Insomuch as in all that Countrey, from the River of Palms to the Cape of Florida, though lying all along on the Gulf of Mexico, the Spaniards have not one foot of ground: secure enough, because it lieth all along that Gulf, that no other Nation can possess it.

2 MECHUACHAN hath on the North-East Panuco; on the East, Mexicana; on the South, part of Tlascala; on the West, the main Ocean; and on the North, the Province of Xalisco in New Gallicia. So called from the abundance of Fish, which their Lakes and Rivers did afford them; the word in their own Language signifying Locum Piscosum, or a Country of Fish.

The breadth hereof on the Sea-coasts is 80 Leagues, in the borders towards Mexicana but sixty onely. The length I find not yet agreed on. Blest with an Air so sound and sweet, that sick Folks come hither out of other Countreys to recover their Health. Well stored with Rivers, some Lakes, innumerable Springs of Running Water, and here and there some hot Baths issuing from the Rocks. The Soil so plentifully productive of all sorts of Grain, (even to admiration) that in some parts hereof four measures of Seed have brought forth 600 measures of the same Grain in the following Harvest. Well wooded, and, by reason of its Springs and Rivers, full of excellent Pastures; and yet not yielding unto any part of all America for Medicinal Herbs and Plants, of very soveraign nature for the Good of Mankind. It affordeth also store of Amber, Mulberry-Trees, Silk, Wax, Honey, and such other things as chiefly serve for Pomp and Pleasure.

The People tall of Stature, but strong and active; of a good Wit, and skilled in many excellent Manufactures. They speak four Languages of their own; but that most generally used is by the Spaniards called the Tarascuan Tongue; which though it be an elegant and copious Language, yet most of them speak the Spanish also. More pliant to the Manners and Apparel of that Nation, than the rest of New Spain, (the Mexicans excepted onely;) and so inclinable to the Gospel, that they are almost all gained from their old Idolatries. Insomuch that the whole Countrey being divided into fifty Parishes, every Parish hath its several Priests and inferiour Ministers, who in the Language of the place do instruct the people in which they preach to them, and hear their Confessions: besides many Convents of Dominicans and of Augustine Friers.

It containeth in it upwards of 150 Towns or Burroughs, besides scattering Villages; ninety of which have Free Schools in them, and almost every one a Spittle for relief of the Sick. The Principal thereof, 1 Zinzontza, the Seat of the old Kings of Mechuacan; in the first Times of Christianity in this Countrey made a Bishop's See, till removed to Pascuar. The first Bishop, Vasquez de Quiroga. 2 Pascuar, of no great note at present, but that the Bishop's See was removed thither, because nearer to Mexico; from which distant 47 Leagues. 3 Valladolid, now the chief City of this Province, and the Bishop's See, removed hither from Pascuar, and here finally setled in a Fair Cathedral, Anno 1544. situate near a large Lake, (said to be bigger than that of Mexico) which doth not onely afford the City great store of Fish, but yieldeth them the opportunity of several pleasures which they take in Boats upon the Water. The Lake and City by the Natives called Guayangareo. 4 S. Michael, in the way from Mexico (from which distant about 40 Leagues) to the Silver Mines of Zacatecas. First built by Lewis de Valasco, then Vice-Roy of Mexico, to defend the People of this Province from the Chichimechas, a barbarous, and hitherto an unconquered People, who terribly molest the Nations upon whom they border. 5 S. Philips, built at the same time by the said Velasco. 6 Conception de Saylaa, 17 Leagues from Valladolid, 35 from Mexico; of the foundation of Martin Enriquez the Vice-Roy, Anno 1570. to be a Stage for Travellers in their Journeys Northwards. 7 Guaxanato, bordering on Panuco, and not far from S. Jago de Los Valles, rich in Mines of Silver. Then on the Sea we have, 8 Acatlan, on the borders of New Galicia, two miles from the Ocean; a Town of not above 30 Houses, with a little Church; but neighboured by a large and safe Road for Shipping, (by the Spaniards called Malacca) which makes it seldom without the company of Sailers. 9 Natividad, (or Portus Nativitatis) a noted and convenient Haven, from whence they commonly set sail to the Philippine Islands; pillaged and burnt by Captain Cavendish in his Circumnavigation of the World. 10 S. Jago, (or S. Jago de Buena Speranza) a little on the South of Natividad; the Shores whereof are said to be full of Pearls. 11 Colima, ten leagues from the Sea, but more South than the other; built in the year 1522. by Gonsalvo de Sandovel. 12 Zacatula, by the Spaniards called Conception; situate on the Banks of a large (but nameless) River, which rising about the City of Tlascala, passeth by this Town, and thence with two open mouths runneth into the Sea.

This Province, at the coming of the Spaniards hither, was a distinct Kingdom of it self, not subject nor subordinate to the Kings of Mexico, as were most of the Princes of these parts: the Frontiers of the Kingdom fenced with Stakes of Wood like a Palizado, to hinder any sudden Incursion of the Mexican Forces. The last King, called Tangayvan Bimbicha, submitted of his own accord to Cortez, An. 1522. and willingly offered himself to Baptism. But the Spaniards were not pleased with either, because deprived thereby of the Spoil of the Countrey. But at last, Nonnez de Guzman, then President of the Courts of Justice in Mexico, picked a Quarrel with him, accused him falsly (as is said by the very Spaniards) of some practices against his King, burnt him alive with most barbarous and unheard-of Cruelty, and so confiscated his Estate.

3 MEXICANA is bounded on the East with the Gulf of New Spain; on the West, with Mechuacan; on the North with Panuco, and some part of Nova Gallicia; on the South, with Tlascala, and part of the Southern Sea. So called from Mexico, the chief City, not of this Province only, but of all America.

It is in breadth from North to South, measuring by the Bay of Mexico, 130 Leagues; thence growing narrower, in the midland parts hardly above sixty; and on the Shores of Mare del Zur not above seventeen. The length hereof extendeth from one Sea to the other; that is to say, from the Point of Lobos in the Province of Papantla, on the Gulf of Mexico, to the Haven of Acapulco on the Southern Ocean: but the determinate number of Miles I do no-where find. But measuring it from 17 degrees and an half of Latitude, unto the 22, and allowing something for the slope, we may conclude it to be much of the same length as it is in breadth, that is to say, about one hundred and thirty Leagues.

The

The Countrey is inferiour to Peru in the plenty and purity of Gold and Silver, but far exceeding it both in the Mechanical and Ingenuous Arts which are here profeſſed, and in the abundance of Fruits and Cattel: of which laſt here is ſuch ſtore, that many a private man hath 40000 Kine and Oxen to himſelf. Fiſh is here alſo in great plenty; that onely which is drawn out of the Lake whereon Mexico ſtandeth, being reported worth 20000 Crowns yearly to the Kings Exchequer. The people for the moſt part witty and induſtrious, full of Valour and Courage: good Handicraftsmen, if they ſtoop ſo low as to Trades and Manufactures; rich Merchants, if they give themſelves to more gainful Traffick; and hardy Souldiers, if trained up and employed in ſervice. Their Ancient Arms were Slings and Arrows; ſince the coming of the Spaniards practiſed on the Harquebuſe. In a word, what was ſaid before of New Spain in general, as to the Soil and People of it, is moſt appliable to this.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. Los Topes, which parteth this Province from that of Tlaſcala. 2 Citala, and 3. Mitla, both running Eaſtward towards the Gulf. 4 Papagaio, in the way from Mexico to Acapulco; with a fair Bridge over it. 5. Las Balſas, of a violent courſe, and in bigneſs equal unto Tagus in Spain; paſſable onely by a Bridge made of Rafts and Reeds, not very ſtrongly joyned together. 6. The River of S. Francis, both large and ſwift, but in ſome parts fordable. Mountains of note I find not any which require a more particular conſideration; and ſo paſs them over the more eaſily.

Towns of moſt note in it, 1. Mexico, the Seat of an Archbiſhop, and of the Spaniſh Vice-Roy, who hath the power to make Laws and Ordinances, to give Directions, and determine Controverſies; unleſs it be in ſuch great Cauſes which are thought fit to be referred to the Council of Spain. This City was firſt ſituate in the Lakes and Iſlands, like Venice; every-where interlaced with the pleaſant Currents of freſh and Sea-waters; and carrying a face of more Civil Government then any of America, though nothing, if compared with Europe. But the Town being deſtroyed by Cortez, it was built afterwards on the firm Land on the edge of the Lake, and bordering on a large and ſpacious Plain. The Plain on which it bordereth is ſaid to be 70 Leagues in compaſs, environed with high Hills, on the tops whereof the Snow lieth continually. In the middle of which Plain are two great Lakes, the leaſt of them forty miles in circuit, the one ſalt, and the other freſh: each of them alternately ebbing and flowing up into the other. On the Banks of the ſalt Lake ſtandeth the City of Mexico, with many other goodly Towns and ſtately Houſes: on which Lake alſo 50000 Wherries are continually plying. The Town in compaſs is ſix miles, and containeth 6000 Houſes of Spaniards, and 60000 Indians. It is a By-word, That at Mexico there are four fair things; viz. The Women, the Apparel, the Houſes, and the Streets. Here is alſo a Printing-Houſe, an Univerſity, and a Mint, the Cathedral Church, ten Convents of Nuns, ſeveral Houſes of Jeſuites, Dominicans, Franciſcans, Auguſtinians, and other Religious Orders; ſome Colleges, many Spittles and Hoſpitals, and other publick Buildings of great ſtate and beauty. By the Natives it was anciently called Temiſtitan, the name of Mexico being given on a new occaſion, of which more hereafter. Moſt miſerably endammaged by the breaking in of the Waters, Anno 1629. which ſwelled ſo high, that they not only overwhelmed the meaner Houſes, but the Vice-Roy's Palace; drowned many thouſands of the People, and deſtroyed the Houſhold-ſtuff of the reſt. Occaſioned by the Avarice of the Kings Miniſters, who had inverted the Money to their private uſe, which ſhould have fortified the Banks. But being a rich and wealthy City it ſoon recovered of that Blow, attaining in a ſhort time to ſuch infinite Riches, that generally the Merchants, Trades-men and Artificers, do brave it in a greater State and more ſplendid Equipage than any people under Heaven of the like condition. 2. Tezcuco, ſituate on the ſame Lake, but ſix leagues from Mexico; heretofore twice as big as Sevil; and for the beauty of the Streets, and elegancy of the Houſes, not inferiour to any. Served with freſh Water from the Hills, brought in Pipes and Conduits, though ſeated on the brink of a ſalt Lake. 3. Quitlavaca, built wholly in the Lake, like Venice, and therefore by the Spaniards called Venezuela; a City of 2000 Houſholds: the way unto it over a Cauſey made of Flints, half a League long, and about twenty Spans in breadth. 4. Uztacpalapa, half in the Lake, and half without, with many Ponds of freſh Water, and a beautiful Fountain. A City of 10000 Houſholds, ſix Leagues from Tezcuco, and two from Mexico. 5. Mexicaltzingo, a Burrough of 4000, and 6. Cuyocan, one of 6000 Families; both upon the Lake: beautified in the Times of their Paganiſm with many Temples, ſo gorgeouſly ſet out to the Eye, that afar off they ſeemed of Silver; moſt of them now converted into Monaſteries and Religious Houſes. 7. Chulula, the faireſt of all the Lake, ſcarce excepting Mexico, with which it anciently contended both for ſtate and bigneſs; ſaid to contain 20000 Families, and to be beautified with ſo many Temples, that their Turrets equalled the number of the days of the year. The people ſo addicted unto their Idolatries, and ſo barbarous in their bloudy and beaſtly Sacrifices, that no fewer then 6000 Infants of both Sexes were yearly murthered on their Altars. 8 Meſtitlan, ſeated on an high Hill, begirt about with moſt pleaſant Groves and ſhady Woods. A Town of about 30000 Inhabitants, the Villages about the Hill being reckoned in: ſituate 14 Leagues or two days Journey from Mexico, in the way to the Province of Panuco; the High-way on both ſides ſet with fruitful Trees, to the great comfort and refreſhment of the Way-fayring man. 9. Clantinolleper, twenty Leagues from Meſtitlan, a Mannor to which 40000 of the Natives do owe Suit and Service. 10. Antepeque, on the South of the City of Mexico, at the foot of the Mountain Propopampeche; a Town belonging to the Marqueſs of Valla, and ſeated in the moſt delicious place of all New Spain. 11. Acachicha, on the North-eaſt of Mexico, betwixt it and the Gulf, bordering on the Province of Pepantla. 12. Acapulco, an Haven-Town of the South-ſea, ſituate on a ſafe and capacious Bay, at the entrance of it a league broad, and in the body of it full of convenient Stations and Docks for Shipping: ſo that it is accounted the ſafeſt Haven of all thoſe Seas. At the bottom of it towards the Weſt ſtands the Town and Caſtle; the Caſtle opportunely ſeated on a little Foreland, both to command the Town, and ſecure the Port: well walled, and fortified with four very ſtrong Bulwarks, on which are planted good ſtore of Ordnance; the Garriſon conſiſting ordinarily of 400 Souldiers: ſtrengthened the rather in regard of the uſual intercourſe which is betwixt this Port and the Philippine Iſlands.

The original Inhabitants of this Countrey (as far at leaſt as their Records are able to reach) were the Chichimecas, now the moſt rude and barbarous Savages of all theſe parts, together with the Otomies, ſomewhat more Civil than the reſt, but yet rude enough. By theſe poſſeſſed till about the year 902, as it is conjectured from their Annals, when vanquiſhed and diſſeized by ſome new Comers, whom they called by one Name Nevatlacos: iſſuing, as it is conceived, from thoſe parts of Gallicia Nova, which are now called Nova Mexicana, Anno 720. or thereabouts; but lingring in their March, and waſting all the Countreys as they lay before them. Of theſe there were were seven Tribes in all, i.e. the Sachimilci, the Chalcæ, the Tepanecæ, the Culvæ, the Tlasluici, the Tlascaltecæ; all of them setled in these parts, and the five first about the Lake, before the coming in of the seventh Tribe, which was that of the Mexicans, so called from Mexi, their chief Captain; who much delighted with the situation and conveniences of Temistitan, then a ruined Town, caused it to be re-built and beautified, by the name of Mexico. This Town from that time forwards was reputed the Head City of their Common-wealth; the six Tribes governing in common, or the Chiefs rather of those Tribes in the names of the whole, after an Aristocratical manner. But weary at the last of this equal Power, which the prevalency of some Tribes had made very unequal; the Mexicans, one of the weakest of the Tribes, oppressed by the rest, resolved to separate themselves, and to commit the ordering of their Affairs to a King of their own, at first elected by themselves, but afterwards, when once they had conquered most of the other Tribes, the choice was entrusted unto six, one for every Tribe, (the Tlascaltecæ, which was the seventh of their Tribes, and the Founders of Tlascala, governing themselves long before as a State apart:) who in their choice had an especial eye on those which were strong and active, and fit for Military imployments; the People holding it a commendable meritorious act to kill their Kings, if once they were reputed Cowards. The Polity and Institutes of this Mexican Kingdom I forbear to write of, farther then as they lie before me in the way of their Story, digested by the Government and succession of their several Kings, whose names and actions do occur in the following Catalogue of

The Kings of MEXICO.

A. Ch.

1322 1. Acamapitzli, Nephew to the King of Couliacan, but of the Mexican bloud by the Fathers side, elected for the first King; who joyned Couliacan and Tonganeam unto his Estate, and setled that Kingdom at his death in the way of Election.

1373 2. Vitzovitzli, Son of Acamapitzli, subdued the Tribe of the Suchimilchi, and others of the neighbouring Nations.

1394 3. Huizilihuiel, Son of Vitzovitzli, conquered the Tribes of the Chalcæ and Culvæ, with many other Nations of the old Inhabitants.

1415 4. Chimalpupuca, Son of Huizilihuiel, won the Town of Tequixsuiac, and reduced the rebellious Chalcæ under his Command.

1425 5. Ischoalt, Brother of Huizilihuiel, by the Valour of his Cousin Tlacaellec freed himself from the yoke of the Tepanecæ, to whom the Mexicans had before that been Tributaries, and added their Dominions unto his Estate, conquering all the Nations round about him. After whose death the Electors by a joint consent chose Tlacaellec for their King, as a man of whose Vertue they had formerly made trial. But he very nobly refused it, saying, that it was more convenient for the Commonwealth that another should be King, and that he should execute that which was for the necessity of the State, than to lay the whole burden upon his back: and that without being King, he would not leave to labour for the Publick, as well as if he were. Upon this generous refusal they made choice of Motecuma the first.

1438 6. Motecuma, one of the Brothers of Chimalpupuca, brought in the Custom of using no other Sacrifices at their Coronations, but of such Prisoners as the new King should first take in the Wars. By the Valour and good Fortune of Tlacaellec he subdued so many of the Nations, (whose names I hold unnecessary to be here repeated) that he extended his Estate from one Sea to the other.

1467 7. Axayacaci, the Nephew of Ischoalt by his Son Tecozomoeliqueto, enlarged his Empire by the Conquest of Tetentepeque, 200 miles from Mexico, to fit himself with Sacrifices for his Coronation; and brought the Lord of Tlatelulco, who rebelled against him, to so hard a streight, that he was forced to break his neck from the top of a Temple.

1479 8. Ticoicatzi, the Son of Axayacaci, added twelve Cities with their Territories to the Mexican Empire.

1484 9. Abuczozin, Brother of Ticoicatzi, extended his Borders to Guatimala, repaired or rebuilt a great part of Mexico, and brought thither a Channel of fresh Water.

1502 10. Motecuma II. Son of Axayacaci, before his Coronation conquered 44 Cities. He ordained that no Plebeian should bear any Office in his Court, and in the 18. year of his Reign was subdued by Cortez.

As for this Cortez, to whom the Spaniards stand indebted for the Kingdom of Mexico, he was born in Medeline, a Town of Estremadura, 1485. and in the nineteenth year of his Age imployed himself in the Trade and busines of America, for the improvement of his Fortunes, Anno 1511. he went as Clerk unto the Treasurer for the Isle of Cuba; where he husbanded his Affairs so well, by carrying over Kine, Sheep and Mares, and bringing Gold for them in Exchange, that in short time he was able to put in 2000 Castellins for his stock, as Partner with Andrew de Duero, a wealthy Merchant. Grown richer, he was taken to be Partner with James Velasques, in the Discovery of Tabasco and the parts near Jucutan, Ann. 1518. And now resolved to venture all his stock both of Friends and Money, he furnished himself of eleven Ships, and with 550 Men, set sail from Spain, and arrived at the Island of Acusamil, (now called Sancta Crux) and sailing up the River of Tabasco, sacked the Town of Potonchon, the Inhabitants refusing to sell him Victual. After this by the help of his Horse and Ordnance, he discomfited 40000 of the naked Savages, gathered together to revenge themselves for the sack of that Town; and received the King thereof in Vassallage to the Crown of Spain. Being told that Westward he should meet with some Mines of Gold, he turned his course for the Haven of S. John de Ulloa; where landing he was entertained by Tendilli, Governour of the Town and Country for the King of Mexico: who understanding of his coming, and that he was the Servant of so great an Emperour, (of which Tendilla had informed him by especial Messengers) sent him many rich Presents both of Gold and Silver. Inflamed at the sight hereof, he resolved to go unto the place where such Treasures were, took possession of the Country in the name of Charles the fifth, King of Spain and Emperour, and building there the Town de la Vera Crux, left in it 150 of his men. Attended by no more than 400 Foot, 15 Horse, and six pieces of Ordnance, he pursued his Enterprize; by practice gained unto him those of Zempoallan and Tlascala, whom he understood to be ill-affected to Motecuma: assisted with whose Forces he passed on for Mexico, sacked the Town of Chololla (a Town of 40000 Households) in his march: kindly received into Mexico by the frighted King, whom he he caused to acknowledge himself a Vassal to Spain, and to present him, in the name of a Tribute, with so much Treasure as amounted to 160000 Castellins of Gold. A Quarrel growing not long after, Motecuma, the unhappy King was by one of his own Subjects killed in the Tumult, and the Spaniards driven out of the Town. But aided with the whole Forces of the Tlascalans, and a Recruit of more Spaniards, (sent thither on a Design against him) he made up an Army of 100000 Savages, 900 Spanish Foot, 80 Horse, 17 pieces of Ordnance; and having with great diligence made ready a Navy of 13 Galliots, and 6000 Canoes or Boats, laid siege unto the City both by Sea and Land. After a Siege of three months, the City is taken, sacked and burnt August 13. 1521. But afterwards re-built more beautifully than it was before. Thus fell this mighty Kingdom into the hands of the Spaniards by the valour and good fortune of Cortez, a private Adventurer; endowed for that good service by Charles the fifth with the Town and Territory of Tecoantepeque, in the Province of Guaxaca, and many other fair Estates in the Province of Mexico, and dignified with the Title of Marquess of Valla.

As for the Kings of Mexico, they are said to have worn a Crown resembling that which is now used by the Dukes of Venice. His Coronation was held with great Pomp, but most bloudy Sacrifices. His Revenues thought to be almost infinite, raised out of all Commodities, and paid in kind, whether Natural, or Artificial only: the King participating of the fruits of all mens Labour, and sharing with them in their wealth: some paying in Cups full of powder of Gold, of two handfuls apiece; some Diadems, and Beads of Gold; Plates of Gold of three quarters of a yard long, and four fingers broad; Turquois-stones, Golden Targets, rich Feather-Pictures, &c. not to say any thing of matters of inferiour value. All which in such a wealthy and large Estate, must needs afford him a Revenue equal to the greatest Monarch. And for the encouragement of his Souldiers and Men of War, here were ordained three Orders of Knighthood, (or at least such distinctions of personal merit as had resemblance to such Orders:) the first distinguished by a Red Ribband, the second called the Lion or Tigre Knight, and the third the Grey Knight: all priviledged amongst other things to be cloathed in Cotton, wear Breeches, to adorn themselves with Gold and Silver, and to have Vessels gilt or painted; high points, and not permitted unto any else. But it is time that I proceed to the rest of the Provinces.

4. TLASCALA lieth betwixt Mexicana and Guaxaca, extended from one Sea to the other. The length hereof from Sea to Sea an hundred leagues; the breadth along the Shores of the Gulf reckoned 80 leagues, on the South Sea not above eighteen. So called from the abundance of Maize which they make their Bread of; the word in that Language signifying Locum Panis, or the Place of Bread, the same with Bethlehem in the Hebrew.

The Country is very plentiful both of Corn and Cattle, full of rich Pastures, and wonderfully stored with Maize: Level and plain, except towards the Sea, where occurreth a large Chain of craggy Mountains. The richer in the fruits of Nature for those fair and pleasant Rivers wherewith it is watered. The principal of which, 1. Rio de Grijalva, so called from John de Grijalva, who first discovered it; imployed herein by James Velasques, the advancer of Cortez. 2. Rio de Zempoal, so called from the Town of Zempoallan, about which it riseth. 3. Zahuate, which makes its way through the Chain of Mountains before mentioned, and falleth with the former into the Gulf. 4. Rio de Zacatula, a River of the longest course in all his Province; rising near Tlascala, and falling many leagues off into Mare del Zur. The people much of the same nature with those of Mexico, though upon jealousies of State their most bitter enemies; of which the Spaniards made good use to advance their Conquests on that Kingdom.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Tlascala it-self, which gives name to the Province: in former times governed after the form of a Common-wealth, according to the Democratical Models. Situate on a little Hill betwixt two Rivers, and in the middle of a large, but pleasant Plain, 60 miles in compass. So populous at the coming of the Spaniards hither, that it contained 300000 Inhabitants, now scarce 50000. It had four Streets, (or rather Quarters) each of them governed by a Captain in time of War: and in the midst a Market-place so fair and spacious, that 30000 persons might assemble in it to buy and sell, or for any other business. 2. Puebla de los Angelos, (the City of Angels) but most commonly Angelos: built by Sebastian Ramirez, Anno 1531. in the way from Vera Crux to the City of Mexico, from which last 22 leagues distant. A Bishops See, and thought to contain in it 1500 Families. 3. Zempoallan, on the River so named, the Inhabitants whereof did great service to Ferdinando Cortez in his Conquest of Mexico. 4. Napuluca, of great resort for a Fair of Cattle; and such a kind of Court for ordering the Trade thereof, as we call the Pie-Powders. 5. Guaxocingo, a pleasant and well-peopled Town, situate at the foot of the burning Mountain before mentioned, by the ashes and embers whereof the Fields are many times annoyed. 6. Segura, or Segura de la Frontera, in the Region of Tepeac, built by Cortez the next year after the Conquest of Mexico, with fair Streets and handsome Houses; by whom peopled with Spaniards. 7. Vera Crux, the first Town built in this Country by the said Cortez, now a Bishops See: situate near unto the Gulf, and a great Thorough-fare from thence to the City of Mexico, from which distant about 60 leagues. 8. S. John de Ulloa, the most noted Port of all this Province; fenced with a Peer against the fury both of Winds and Sea; defended naturally by Rocks and Quick-sands lying before it, and by two Bulwarks well fortified and manned on both sides of the entrance. 9. Medellin, built by Cortez, Ann. 1525. and planted with Spaniards: so called in memory of a Town of the same name in Estremadura, in which he was born: situate on the banks of the River Almeria.

The Tlascalans were originally one of the seven Tribes which drave the Chichimeca's out of their possessions: and either finding no room left for them on the Banks of the Lake, or else willing to subsist alone, withdrew themselves from the rest, founded the City of Tlascala, and there erected a Democratical Estate. Stomached for this by the other Tribes, and many times invaded by those of Mexico, after they had subdued the rest, they still maintained themselves against all Attempts; and in the end assisted Cortez in the destruction of that Kingdom they so deadly hated. Priviledged for that reason by the Spaniards, and exempted from all kind of Tribute, (except it be a handful of Wheat for every person) and suffered to live under his Protection in the former Government. The Province given us by this name is said to contain 200 good Towns and Burroughs, 1000 Villages and upwards; and in them 150000 of the Natives, besides Spanish Colonies. Distributed into 36 Classes or Rural Deanries for Ecclesiastical Government, in which are thought to be 30 Convents and Religious Houses.

5. GUAXACA is bounded on the West with Tlascala; on the East with Jucutan and Chiapa, one of the Provinces of Guatimala; on the North, with the Bay of Mexico; and on the South, with Mare del Zur. Extended tended on the South-sea to the length of an hundred miles, but on the Bay to 50 only: in breadth from Sea to Sea, where it bordereth on Tlascala, 120 leagues; not above 60 where it confineth on Chiapa. So called from Guaxaca, once the chief Town of these parts, now named Antequera.

The Air hereof is very sound and sweet, and the Soil as fruitful: plentiful not only of those Commodities which are common with the other Provinces of this Country; but of such quantities of Silks, and store of Mulberries, that if the Natives paid their Tithes as the Spaniards do, that very Revenue, would suffice to endow five Bishopricks, as good as that which they have already. Scarce any River of this Country but hath Sands of Gold: such plenty of Cochintel, (a rich Grain used in dying Scarlets, of which before) as also of Cassia, Gold, Silver, and other Metals; that if the people did but add some industry to to the wealth of the Country, they might be the richest men in all America. But being naturally slothful, and impatient of labour, they lose all opportunities of gathering Riches, and live but from hand to mouth, as we use to say. Docile enough, and so indulgent unto those who take pains to teach them, that here are reckoned 120 Convents of Dominican Friers, besides other Schools: these last conceived the greater number.

It is subdivided into many particular Provinces, (we may call them Wapentakes or Hundreds;) as 1. Misteca, 2. Tutopeque, 3. Zapoteca, 4. Guazacoalco 5. Guextaxatla, and 6. the Vale of Guaxaca this last most memorable, in that it gave the Title of Marquess del Valle to the famous Cortez. Towns of most observation, 1. Tezozopotlan, once the chief Town of Zapoteca, and the Seat of their King. 2. Cuortlavaca, of great note for a Labyrinth not far off, hewn out of the Rock, but by whom none knoweth. 3. Antequera, in the Valley of Guaxaca, a stately City and beautified with a fair Cathedral; as that is with Marble pillars of great height and thickness. 4. S. Illifonso in the Province of Zapoteca. 5. S. Jago, in the Valley of Nexapa, seated upon a lofty Hill. 6. Del Spiritu Santo, distant about three leagues from the shores of the Gulf, in the Province of Guazacoalco; the foundation of Gonsalvo de Sandoval, Anno 1526. 7. Aguatulco, or Guatulco, a noted and convenient Port on the South Sea, much used by those which trade from Peru to Mexico, and from Mexico to any Port of the Southern Seas. By consequence rich, and therefore plundered to the purpose both by Drake and Cavendish, in their Voyages about the World. 8. Tacoantepeque, a Port of the same Sea also, but of far less note. Burroughs and Villages in all 650. inhabited by 150000 of the Natives liable to Tribute, besides Women and persons under Age; not reckoning the Spaniards in the number.

6. JUCUTAN, environed on three parts by the Sea like a Demi-Island, is fastened to the Continent only where it meeteth with Guaxaca, the fartherest point of it opposite to the Isle of Cuba. Discovered first by Fernandes de Cordova, imployed therein by Don Christopher Morante, Anno 1517. and called Jucutan, not as some conceit it, from Joctan the son of Heber, who they think came out of the East, where the Scripture placeth him, (Gen. 10. 30.) to inhabit here; but from Jucutan, which in the Language of the Country signifieth, What say you? For when the Spaniards at their first coming hither asked the name of the place, the Savages, not understanding what they meant, replied, Jucutan, that is, What say you? whereupon the Spaniards always after called it by this name.

The compass of it, taking the Province of Tabasco into the account, is said to be 900 miles, or 300 Leagues. The Air hot, and the Country destitute of Rivers; not otherwise provided of Water but by Pits and Trenches, which abundantly supply that want. Sufficiently barren, the Soil not bearing Wheat, or any European Fruits, nor many of the growth of America in other places. Nor have they Mines of Gold or Silver, or any other Metal, to enrich the people; who must either live by Trades and Labour, or else beg their bread. Nothing remarkable in the Countrey, but that here seemed to be some remnants of Christianity at the Spaniards first coming hither: the people constantly observing a kind of Baptism, which they call in their own Language a second birth, expressing by that word a Regeneration; not suffering any one to marry untill so initiated. And possible enough it is, that this may be the Countrey upon which Madoc ap Owen fell; who though he might by some good fortune be brought back to Wales, yet that he should make any such second Voiage hither as is said in their Chronicles, I by no means grant.

Towns of most observation in it, 1. Merida, almost in the Navel of it, situate in the 20. degree of Latitude, the ordinary Seat of the Governour, and the See of a Bishop: distant from the Sea on each side about twelve Leagues; and called thus from a Town of that name in Spain, with which it is thought to have some resemblance. 2. Valladolid, 30. Leagues from Merida, beautified with a most sumptuous Monastery of Franciscan Friers. 3. Campeche, (or S. Francisco, as the Spaniards call it) situate on the Shore of the Gulf. A Town, when first known to the Spaniards, of 3000 Houses, and beautified with such Monuments of Art and industry, as shewed that there was somewhat in this people which was not barbarous: since that no more observeable then for being suddenly surprized by Parker, an English Captain, An. 1596, who carried away with him the Governour, the wealth of the Town, and many Prisoners; besides a great Ship full of Gold, Silver and other the like precious Commodities, designed for the King of Spain's own use. 4. Tabasco, situate in the best part of this Countrey, so different from all the rest, that it is made by some a distinct Province from it. By the Spaniards called Villa de Nuestra Sennora de la Victorira, most commonly Victoria only; and that in memory of the first fortunate Victory which Cortez had upon this people, arming themselves against him for the Sacking of Pontonchan. 5. Pontonchan, sacked by Cortez for denying to supply him with Victual. 6. Salamanca, so called with reference to a Town of that name in Spain.

Along the Coast of this Countrey lie many Islands, viz. 1. La Zarza, 2. Desconocida, 3. Triangulus, 4. Vermeia, 5. Los Negrillas, 6. Los Alacranes; all within the Gulf. Without it, 7. Zaratan, 8. Pantoia, 9. Lamanay, 10. De Mugheres, or the Isle of Women, 11. Cozamul, by some called Acusamil. This last the biggest, as 15 Leagues long, 5 broad; and the most remarkable, as being the usual way which the Spaniards travelled in their Discoveries of this Countrey from the Isle of Cuba. For here first landed Ferdinando de Corduba, An. 1517, who passing over to Jucutan (but four Leagues distant) brought back nothing but Stripes. Here the next year arrived John de Grijalva, in the same pursuit; who passing by Jucutan to the Province of Guaxata, left his name behind him to a River. And finally here landed the most fortunate Cortez, who, coasting about the Demi-Island, landed near Tabasco, and there first handselled his good fortune with a notable Victory. Yet neither the Island nor Peninsula were discovered perfectly till the year 1527, when both subdued by Francisco de Montejo to the Crown of Spain. The Island is now called Sancta Crux.

OF GUATIMALA.

GUATIMALA is bounded on the North by Jucutan and the Gulf of Honduras; on the South, with Mare del Zur; on the East, (or the South-east rather) with Castella Aurea; on the West, with New Spain. Extended 300 Leagues in length, upon the Coasts of Mare del Zur; but measuring by a strait line, not above 240. the breadth thereof 180 leagues where broadest; in most places narrower. So called from Guatimala the chief Province; as that from the prime City of it, honoured with the Seat of the Governor, and the Courts of Justice.

The nature of the Soil and People (if differing in any material thing from those before) we will consider in the View of those several parts into which this Country is divided. The principal whereof, 1 Chiapa, 2. Verapaz, 3. Guatimala, specially so called, 4. Honduras, 5. Nicaragua, 6. Veragua. The rest of less note easily reduced to these.

1. CHIAP hath on the West New Spain; on the East, Verapaz; on the North, part of Jucutan; and Mare del Zur on the South. Extended 40 leagues in length, not much less in breadth; and anciently inhabited by four Nations, all of several Languages.

The Soil not very natural for Corn or fruits, though Pot-herbs brought from Spain thrive well, as do Beans and Lentils; yet Vines and other richer Fruits seldom come to good. Wood-Vines they have, which yield a very pleasant Pulp; and, if well ordered, might be brought to afford more profit. Their Trees most of them greater then in other places, as Pines, Oaks, Cedars, and the Cypress; whole Woods of Walnuts, but the Nut not so big as those of Europe. Some of their Trees yield Rosin, some such precious Gums as in other places are not usual; and some there are whose leaves being dried into a powder, afford a sovereign Plaister for exulcerate Sores. And they have need too often to make use of these Plaisters, the Country being full of Snakes and other venomous Creatures, (some of the Snakes no less then 20 foot in length) whose poison, being strong and deadly, doth require such helps. Of the people nothing singular that I have met with, but that they are more musical and exact in Painting than the rest of the Natives.

Towns of most note in it, 1 Cividad Real, built by the Spaniards in the Country of the Chiapenses, at the foot of an Hill; situate in a round Plain, encompassed about with Mountains like an Amphitheatre: afterwards made a Bishops See, and priviledged by the Kings of Spain to be governed by such City-Magistrates as they call Alcaides. 2. Chiapa, in a Vale adjoining, before the building of the other, of most note in this Province, yet still before it in regard of its situation, this Valley being better fraught with Pears, Apples, Wheat and Maize, than all the rest of the Countrey. 3. Tecpatlan, once the chief of the Zoaques, possessed of 25 Villages in this Province; now beautified with a Monastery of Dominican Friars. 4. Capanavatzla, the principal Town of twenty five which the Quelenes held in this Tract; remarkable for nothing but a Convent of the same Dominicans. 5. S. Bartholomews, another Town in the Territory of the same Quelenes: near which is said to be a great Pit or opening of the Earth, into which if any man casts a stone, though never so little, there presently followeth a loud and fearful noise like a clap of Thunder. 6. Guevetlan, built by Pedro de Alvaridi when he was Governour of these parts; the chief Town of a little Province called Soconusco. 7. Casapualca, a small Burrough, but memorable for a Well in the Fields adjoining, the Waters whereof are noted to rise and fall as the Ocean doth flow or ebb, and at equal distances of time. Of thirteen Townships which the Zeltales were possessed of, I find no one named; though painted all of them, and set forth to the Eye of the Traveller, with Cochineel, of which their Territory hath good plenty.

And now I am fallen upon these Rarities of Nature; I cannot but take notice (though somewhat out of my Method) of a River by the Spaniards called Rio Blanco, which turns Wood to Stones: of a Spring in the Cantred of Tafixa, which in the Summer is full of water, in the Winter dry: of another in the same Cantred, which for one three years, though it rain never so little, is full of water, and the next three years hath none at all; and so successively by turns: and finally, that the chief River of the Province, having received into it many lesser streams, is swallowed up near a Village of the Chiapenses, called Otztutan, never after seen. None of them famed for Golden Sands, as are those of Guaxaca; though it be thought there be some Veins of Gold and Silver, but hitherto neglected for want of Slaves to work in the Mines.

2. VERAPAZ is bounded on the West with Chiapa; on the East, with Guatimala and Hondura; on the North, with Jucutan; and on the South, with the Territory of Soconusco. In Latine called Provincia Veræ Pacis, by the Spaniards, Verapaz; because not conquered by the Sword, but wone to the obedience of the King of Spain by the preaching of the Dominican Friars.

The Country is 30 leagues in length, and as much in breadth, full of high Hills and deep Valleys, but no fruitful Plains; generally overgrown with Woods, very large and thick, which so hinder the free passage of the Winds, that the Air hereof is very showry: insomuch that for nine moneths in the year they have always rain, not altogether free from it in the other three. By reason of this moisture much anoyed with Mosquits, a kind of Gnats very injurious to their Fruits, with which otherwise (as with Fish and other necessaries) they were well provided. No Mines of Gold or Silver discovered hitherto, though the Spaniards have many times in vain attempted it. In stead whereof some of their Trees drop a kind of Amber, which they call Liquid Amber; some Mastick, and some other Gums: they have also many Medicinal Woods, as Sarzaparilla, that called China-Wood, and many others.

The People tractable and conform to the Spanish Government, except the Lecandones and Pachuteci, some Remainders of the ancient Savages; who, keeping in the Mountains and craggy Rocks of this Country, have hitherto therto retained both their native Freedom and their old Idolatries. No Towns herein poſſeſſed by the Spaniard, and but fourteen Villages in all, in which they live mingled with the old Inhabitants. The principal of theſe S. Auguſtines, not ſo much memorable in it ſelf, as for the neighbourhood of a Cave betwixt two Mountains from which the Rain deſcending turns into Alabaſter, naturally faſhioned into Pillars and other Pourtraitures. Into which alſo many Springs do convey their waters, which there being joyned into a body, make an handſome River, able almoſt at the firſt appearance to bear a Boat. A Port they alſo have at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, called Golfo Dulce: but of ſo little uſe and trading, that I find no name for it, unleſs it ſhould be that Iztapa which Herrera ſpeaks of, by whom it is placed in Guatimala.

3. GUATIMALA ſpecially ſo called, is bounded on the Weſt with Verapaz, from which parted by the River Xicalapa; on the Eaſt, with Nicaragua; on the North, with Honduras; and on the South, with Mare del Zur, or the Pacifick Ocean. Extended 30 leagues from the North to the South, and on the ſhores of Mare del Zur not above ſeventeen. But reckoning in Izalcos, Chalcheca, and S. Saviours, three adjoyning Regions, by ſome made Provinces diſtinct, the dimenſions of it muſt be much greater both for length and breadth.

The Country is Mountainous, but withal very full of Rivers; by conſequence commodious both for Fiſhing and Hunting. Fruitful of Wheat, Maize and other Proviſions, but thoſe Fruits not laſting. Not ſo much ſubject unto Rain as they are in Verapaz, but more troubled with Winds. Full of rich Paſtures, and thoſe Paſtures of great Herds of Cattel: good ſtore of Cotton-wool, ſome Balſamum, and other Medicinal liquors, as alſo of the beſt Sulphur, and many Apothecaries Drugs, which I have no skill of. The People puſillanimous and fearful, greater Proficients in Chriſtianity and Civility than moſt of the Savages; but ſo that it is thought they would relapſe again to their ancient Paganiſm, and revive again their old barbarous Cuſtoms, if not held in by the bridle of Fear and the curb of Power. The men affirmed to be good Archers, and the Women good Spinſters.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. Guacapa, a River of a courſe but of 13 leagues, yet of great depth, and navigable half the way, which falleth into Mare del Zur. 2. Lempas, watering the Burrough of S. Saviours; which hath its riſe from a great Lake, and his fall into the ſame Sea alſo. Here is alſo ſaid to be a Lake near the Village of Iſtepeque, of the Waters whereof are made both Sulphur and Alum. And here is ſaid to be a Volcana, or burning Mountain, which though it hath vomited no Fire of late, the matter of it being ſpent, yet the ſad Monuments of his Furies do remain among them: another not far off which ſtill caſts out ſmoak.

Towns of moſt note, 1. Guatimala, or S. Jago de Guatimala, the chief Town of the Province, ſituate on a little River betwixt both Volcana's, by one of which moſt terribly waſted, Anno 1541. But being re-edified, it hath ſince exceedingly flouriſhed, by reaſon of the Biſhops See, the reſidence of the Governour, and the Courts of Juſtice. 2. S. Salvador, 40 leagues Eaſtward from Guatimala, by the Natives called Guzculan; ſituate on the River Guacapa, ſeven leagues from the Sea, and neighboured by a great Lake of five leagues compaſs. 3. Acaxutla, at the mouth of the ſame River, the Port Town to S. Saviours. 4. S. Trinidad, by the Natives called Samſonate, the moſt noted Empory of this Country; the place of Bartery betwixt the Inhabitants of New Spain and thoſe of Peru. 5. S. Michaels, two leagues from the Bay of Fonſeca, which ſerves unto it for an Haven. 6. Xeres de la Fronterà, the chief Town of the Cantred of Chuluteca, (by which name it was formerly known) ſituate on the Frontiers towards Nicaragua, and to the South-eaſt of the Bay of Fonſeca: that Bay ſo named in honour of Roderico Fonſeca Biſhop of Bruges, and Preſident of the Council for the Indies, Anno 1532. by Giles Gonſales de Avila, who firſt diſcovered it. About and in this Bay are ten little Iſlands, four of them inhabited, and plentifully furniſhed with Wood, Water, and Salt.

4. HONDURA hath on the South Guatimala, ſpecially ſo called; on the Weſt, the Bay, or Arm of the Sea, called Golfo Dulce, by which parted from Verapaz: on the North and Eaſt, the Sea called Mare del Noordt; on the South-eaſt, Nicaragua; on the South, Guatimala ſpecially ſo called. In length from Eaſt to Weſt by the banks of that Sea 150 leagues, and about 80 leagues in breadth from North to South. The name of Honduras, or Fonduras, impoſed upon it from the depth of the Sea about the principal Head-land of it, called the Cape of Honduras.

The whole Countrey is either Hills or Valleys, little Champain in it; fruitful of Maize and Wheat, and of very rich Paſturage; made ſo by the conſtant overflowings of their Rivers about Michaelmas, which do not only ſoil their Grounds, but water their Gardens. The principal of them, 1. Hungara, 2. Chamalucon. 3. Ulna; all neighboured by fertile Fields and pleaſant Meadows. Some Mines of Gold and Silver are conceived to be here, but not yet diſcovered; the people being ſo ſlothful and given to idleneſs, that they rather live on Roots, than take pains in tilling of their Land; and therefore not eaſily entreated to toil for others, but where neceſſity and ſtrong hand do compell them to it.

Towns of moſt note, 1. Valladolid, by the Natives called Commyagna, 40 leagues diſtant from the Sea, ſituate in a pleaſant and fruitful Valley, on the banks of the River Chamalucon; and honoured with a Biſhops See, fixed here about the year 1558. but built near the place where once Franciſco de Montejo, Governour of this Province, had planted a Colony of Spaniards, Anno 1530, by the name of S. Maria de Commyagna. 2. Gracios di Dios, 30 leagues Weſtward of Valladolid, built by Gabriel de Royas, Anno 1530. to be a place of defence for thoſe who worked in the Mines againſt the Savages. But finding himſelf unable to make it good, he defaced and left it. Re-edified again by Gonſalvo de Alvaredo, and ſince well inhabited. 3. S. Peters, eleven leagues diſtant from the Port of Cavallos, but ſeated in a moſt healthy Air; and therefore made the dwelling-place of the Farmers of the Kings Cuſtoms, who have their houſes in this Town, and follow their buſineſs in the other, as occaſion is. 4. Porto de Cavallos, ſo called from ſome Horſes thrown overboard in a violent Tempeſt: the moſt noted Haven of theſe parts, and ſtrong by natural ſituation: but ſo ill guarded and defended, that in the year 1591. it was pillaged by Captain Chriſtopher Newport, and Anno 1596. by Sir Anthony Sherley. Deſerted on theſe ſpoils, and not ſince inhabited. 5. S. Thomas de Caſtile, 18 leagues from Cavallos, naturally ſtrong, and fortified according to the Rules of Art: to which, as to a place of more ſtrength and ſafety, Alphonſo Briado de Caſtilla, Preſident of the Seſſions of Guatimala, removed both the Inhabitants and Trade of Cavallos. 6. Traxillo, ſeated on the riſing of a little Hill betwixt two Rivers, (one of them that which is called Haguara) diſtant from Cavallos 40 leagues to the Eaſt, and 60 leagues to the North of Valladolid; ſurprized and pillaged by the Engliſh, Anno 1576. Not far hence towards the North-eaſt lieth the Cape of Honduras, from whence the ſhore drawing inwards till it join with Jucutan, makes up a large and goodly Bay, called the Gulf of Honduras. 7. S. George de Olancho, ſo named from the Valley Olancho, in which it is ſeated; a Valley noted heretofore for ſome golden Sands, which Guajape, a River of it, was then ſaid to yield.

de

5. NICARAGUA is bounded on the North with Honduras; on the Eaſt, with Mar del Noordt and the Province of Veragua; on the South, with Mar del Zur; on the Weſt, with Guatimala. By Didaco Lopez de Salſedo, who firſt ſubdued it, it was called the New Kingdom of Leon; but the old name by which they found it called at their coming thither would not be ſo loſt.

The Countrey is deſtitute of Rivers, except that part hereof towards Veragua called Coſta Riga, reckoned a Province of it ſelf. The want hereof is ſupplied by a great Lake, or a little Sea, called the Lake of Nicaragua, 120 Leagues in compaſs, ebbing and flowing like the Sea; upon the banks of which ſtand many pleaſant Villages and ſingle Houſes. A Lake well ſtored with Fiſh, but as full of Crocodiles: and having made its way by a mighty Cataract, emptieth it ſelf into the Sea about four Leagues off. Not very rich in Corn, (moſt of which is brought them from Peru) but well ſtored with Cattel: level and plain, and ſhadowed with frequent Trees; one amongſt others of that nature, that a man cannot touch any part of it, but it withereth preſently. Affirmed to be as full of Parrots as England of Crows; ſtored with great plenty of Cotton-wool, and abundance of Sugar-Canes. In a word ſo pleaſing generally to the Eye, that the Spaniards call it by the name of Mahomet's Paradiſe.

The People for the moſt part ſpeak the Spaniſh Tongue, and willingly conform themſelves to the Spaniſh Garb, both of behaviour and apparel: well weaned from their old barbarous Cuſtoms, retained only by ſome Mountainers, whom they call Chontales. All of good Stature, and of colour indifferent white. They had before they received Chriſtianity a ſetled and politick form of Government. Only as Solon appointed, no Law for a man's killing of his Father, ſo had this people none for the killer of a King; both of them conceiting that men were not ſo unnatural as to commit ſuch Crimes. A Thief they judged not to death, but adjudged him to be a Slave to that man whom he had robbed, till by his Service he made ſatisfaction. A courſe more merciful, and not leſs juſt, then the loſs of Life.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Leon, or Leon de Nicaragua, ſituate on the Lake aforeſaid, the Reſidence of the Governour, and the Biſhop's Seg; built in a Sandy Soil, and begirt with Woods. 2. Granada, on the ſame Lake, ſixteen Leagues from Leon; beautified with a fair Church and a ſtrong Caſtle, both founded by Ferdinando de Cordova: the City ſeated in a liberal and wealthy Soil, well furniſhed with Sugar-Canes; for the refineing of which here are many Work-houſes, which they call Ingenio's 3. Segovia, diſtant from the former about 30 Leagues, rich in Veins of Silver. 4. Jaen, (all called according to the names of ſome Towns in Spain) ſituate at the end of the Lake aforeſaid; from whence by a long and narrow Chanel it diſembogueth into the Sea near the Port of S. John. 5. Realio, about a League diſtant from the Port of Poſſeſſion, in the Latitude of 12 degrees and 40 minutes; inhabited for the moſt part by Shipwrights and Mariners. 6. Nicoia, giving name to a little Territory, within the bounds whereof ſtandeth 7. Avarines alſo. 8. Cartago, 40 Leagues from Nicoia, equally diſtant from both Seas, on each of which it hath a convenient Port: this Town is the principal of that part which is called Coſta Rica.

6. VERAGUA hath on the Weſt Coſta Rica; on the Eaſt, bounded with the Diſtrict of Panama; waſhed on both other ſides by the Sea: extended 50 Leagues in length from Weſt to Eaſt; not above 25, where narroweſt, from one Sea to the other. The name given to it from the River Veragua, of greateſt note in it at the firſt Diſcovery.

The Soil hereof is Mountainous and exceeding barren, not fit for Tillage, and leſs uſeful in feeding Cattel; ſufficiently provided of Maize and Pot-herbs, but elſe of little neceſſary for the life of man, unleſs the people could eat Silver, or drink Aurum Potabile. Of both which Metals, but eſpecially of Gold, here are ſuch never-periſhing Mines, that the Spaniards think them able to ſupply all Wants, and cure all Diſeaſes. Once being asked what made them ſo greedy of that Metal, it was anſwered, That they were much troubled with Grief of Heart, for which Gold was a moſt ſovereign Medicine. And as the Countrey, ſuch the People, hardy, couragious, and warlike, and ſuch as bear the Spaniſh Yoke with great impatience: the ſtouteſt and moſt untameable people being bred moſt commonly in mountainous and woody Countreys.

Chief Rivers of this little Province, 1. Veragua, which gives name unto it. 2. Belen, by the old Inhabitants called Tebra; at the mouth of which Columbus purpoſed to have ſettled a Spaniſh Colony, for the better tranſporting of his Gold. But finding that the Chanel, on the ceaſing of ſome Rain which had fallen before, was become ſo ſhallow that no Ship could go in or out, he gave over that purpoſe. 3. La Trinidad, 4. La Conception; all falling into Mare del Noordt. Their chief Towns, 1. Conception, upon the Mouth of that River, the Seat of the Governour. 2. La Trinidad, on the banks of that River, near the Port of Belen, and ſix Leagues Eaſtwards of La Conception. 3. S. Foy, (Oppidum S. Fidei) twelve Leagues from Conception on the South; where the Spaniards melt and caſt their Gold into Bars and Ingots. 4. Carlos, not far from the Shores of Mare del Zur. 5. Philippina, on the Weſt of Carlos. Each ſeated on a large and capacious Bay. Before which Bays lie a Frie of Iſlands, which the Spaniards call Zebaco, from the chief amongſt them. Thirty in all; the principal, Zebaco, Cabaio, S. Marie, S. Martha, inhabited in former times, now not much frequented; the people being dragged into the Continent to work in the Mines.

This Countrey oweth its firſt diſcovery unto divers men according to the ſeveral Members and Diviſions of it. The laſt in order being the firſt that was diſcovered, but the laſt that was conquered had the honour to be viſited by Columbus himſelf. Who driving up and down theſe Coaſts in the year 1502, hit on the entrances of the River which afterwards he cauſed to be called Belen; where, hearing that there was plenty of Gold in the Mines of Hurira not far off, he intended to fortifie. But the River failing him, as was ſaid before, and finding nothing fit to ſuſtain his men; he bent himſelf, though unwillingly, to a farther ſearch. He had before touched upon Honduras alſo, but I find not that he landed on it: the ſettling of theſe Countreys being deſtinated to another hand. Twenty years after this the moſt fortunate Cortez, having fully quieted and compoſed the affairs of Mexico, reſolved to make his Maſter Lord of the reſt of America; and to that end ſent out his Officers and Commanders into ſeveral parts. By Pedro de Alvarado he ſubdued Guatimala; Hondura, by Chriſtopher de Olid; Veragua and Nicaragua, by Gonſalvo de Cordoba. But fearing leſt the conquered Provinces might revolt again, he reſolved to viſit them in perſon. Attended by a choice Band of 150 Horſe, and as many Foot, and 3000 Mexicans, he began his journey in October 1524, and held on his Progreſs as far as to Traxillo; where finding that Gonſales de Cordova had ſo plaid his Game as there was no neceſſity of going farther, he made a ſtand, having marched above 400 leagues with his little Army. Returning back another way, in April 1526. he came home to Mexico: with whoſe return we conclude alſo our Survey of the Northern Peninſula, containing all America Septentrionalis, or Mexicana.

And ſo much for MEXICANA.

PERUANA.

PERUANA, the other of the two great Peninſula's, into which the vaſt Continent of the NEW WORLD doth now ſtand divided, hath the form of a Pyramis reverſed; more anſwerable thereunto than Africk, though that be ſo reſembled. Joined to the other by a ſtreight and narrow Iſthmus, called the Streights of Darien, whereof we ſhall have opportunity to ſpeak more anon: which looks but like a Stone miſlaid in ſo great a Building; or the firſt ſtep by which we are to climb the top, as in other Pyramids.

The name is derived from Peru, the chief Province of it: the Circumnavigation ſaid to be 1700 miles. Nothing elſe to be ſaid in the general, but what will ſerve more fitly for particular places; except it be the deſcription of ſome prime Mountains and principal Rivers, which being of too long a courſe to be reckoned unto any one particular Province, may more properly deſerve place here. Of theſe the chief are, 1. Orellana, or the River of Amazons: called by the firſt name from Franciſco de Orellana, a Spaniard, who firſt diſcovered it; by the ſecond, from the Amazons, a kind of ſtout and warlike Women, who are ſaid to have inhabited on the Banks thereof. The Fountain of it in Peru, the Fall in the North Sea, or Mare del Noordt. A River of ſo long a courſe, that the ſaid Orellana is reported to have ſailed in it 5000 miles, the ſeveral windings and turnings of it being reckoned in: and of ſo violent a Current, that it is ſaid to keep its natural taſte and colour above 30 miles after it falleth into the Sea; the Channel of it of that breadth, where it leaveth the Land, that it is accounted 60 leagues from one point to the other. 2. Orenoque, navigable 1000 miles by Ships of burthen, and 2000 miles by Boats and Pinnaces. Having received into it an hundred Rivers, it openeth into the ſame Sea with 16 mouths, which part the Earth into many Iſlands, (ſome equal to the Iſle of Wight:) the moſt remote of thoſe Channels 300 miles diſtant from one another. By ſome it is called Raliana, from Sir Walter Raleigh, who took great pains in the Diſcovery and Deſcription of it; or rather in diſcovering it ſo far, as to be able to deſcribe it. 3. Maragnon, of a longer courſe than any of the other, affirmed to meaſure at the leaſt 6000 miles from his firſt riſing to his fall; and at his fall into the Sea to be no leſs than 70 leagues from one ſide to the other. More properly to be called a Sea, than many of thoſe great Lakes, or largeſt Bays, which uſually enjoy that name. 4. Rio de la Plata, a River of a leſs courſe than the other, but equal unto moſt in the World beſides: in length from its firſt Fountain 2000 miles, in breadth at his fall into the Sea, about 60 leagues; and of ſo violent a Stream, that the Sea for many leagues together altereth not the taſte of it. All theſe, as they do end their race in the Atlantick, ſo they begin it from the main body of the Andes, or at leaſt ſome ſpur or branch of that great body.

But before we venture farther on more particulars, we are to tell you of theſe Andes, that they are the greateſt and moſt noted Mountains of all America; beginning at Timana, a Town of Popayan, in the new Realm of Granada, and thence extended Southwards to the Streights of Magellan, for the ſpace of 1000 leagues and upwards. In breadth about 20 leagues, where they are at the narroweſt; and of ſo vaſt an height withal, that they are ſaid to be higher than the Alps, or the head of Caucaſus, or any of the moſt noted Mountains in other parts of the World. Not eaſie of aſcent, but in certain Paths, by reaſon of the thick and unpaſſable Woods, with which covered in all parts thereof which lie towards Peru (for how it is on the other ſide, or by what People it is neighboured, is not yet diſcovered:) barren and craggy too withal, but ſo full of venomous Beaſts and poiſonous Serpents, that they are ſaid to have deſtroyed a whole Army of one of the Kings of Peru, in his march that way. Inhabited by a People as rude and ſavage as the place, and as little hoſpitable. The moſt noted Mountain of America, as before was ſaid, and indeed the greateſt of the World. Of fame ſufficient of themſelves, not to be greatned by the addition of impoſſible Figments, or improbable Fictions. Amongſt which laſt I reckon that of Abraham Ortelius, a right learned man, who will have theſe Mountains to be that which the Scripture calleth by the name of Sephar, Gen. 10. 30. and there affirmed to be the utmoſt Eaſtern limit of the Sons of Joktan: the vanity and inconſequences of which ſtrange conceit we have already noted, when we were in India.

Proceed we now unto the particular Deſcriptions of this great Peninſula, comprehending thoſe large and wealthy Countries which are known to us by the names of, 1. Caſtella Aurea, 2. The new Realm of Granada. 3. Peru. 4. Chile. 5. Paraguay. 6. Braſil. 7. Guiana, and 8. Paria, with their ſeveral Iſlands. Such other Iſles as fall not properly and naturally under ſome of theſe, muſt be referred unto the general Head of the American Iſlands, in the cloſe of all.

OF CASTELLA del ORO.

CASTELLA del ORO, Golden Caſtile, (Aurea Caſtella, as the Latines) is bounded on the East and North with Mare del Noordt; on the West, with Mare del Zur, and ſome part of Veragua; on the South, with the new Realm of Granada. Called by the name of Caſtile, with reference to Caſtile in Spain, under the favour and good fortune of the Kings whereof it was firſt diſcovered: Aurea was added to it, partly for diſtinction ſake, and partly in regard of that plenty of Gold which the firſt Diſcoverers found in it. It is alſo called Terra Firma, becauſe one of the firſt parts of Firm Land which the Spaniards touched at, having before diſcovered nothing but ſome Iſlands only.

The Soil and People being of ſuch ſeveral tempers, as not to be included in one common Character, we will conſider both apart in the ſeveral Provinces of, 1. Panama. 2. Darien. 3. Nova Andaluzia. 4. S. Martha, and 5. the little Province De la Hacha.

1. PANAMA, or the Diſtrict of Panama, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Gulf of Uraba, by which parted from the main Land of this large Peninſula; on the Weſt, with Veragua, one of the Provinces of Guatimala in Mexicana; waſhed on both the other ſides with the Sea. So called of Panama, the Town of moſt eſteem herein, and the Juridical reſort of Caſtella Aurea.

It taketh up the narroweſt part of the Streight or Iſthmus, which joyns both Peninſula's together: not above 7 or 8 leagues over in the narroweſt place, betwixt Panama and Porto Bello, if meaſured by a ſtraight line from one Town to the other; though 18 leagues according to the courſe of the Road betwixt them, which by reaſon of the Hills and Rivers is full of turnings. Of ſome attempts to dig a Channel through this Iſthmus, to let one Sea into the other, and of the memorable expedition of John Oxenham over it by Land, we have ſpoken already.

The Air hereof is foggy, but exceeding hot, and conſequently very unhealthy, chiefly from May unto November: the Soil either Mountainous and barren, or low and miry; naturally ſo unfit for Grain, that it yieldeth nothing but Maize, and that but ſparingly; better for Paſturage, in regard of its Plenty of Graſs, and the goodneſs of it: ſo full of Swine at the Spaniards firſt coming hither, that they thought they never ſhould deſtroy them; now they complain as much of their want, or paucity. As for the Inhabitants, whatſoever they were formerly is not now material; moſt of the old ſtock rooted out by the Spaniards, and no new ones planted in their room; ſo that the Country in all parts, except towards the Sea, is almoſt deſolated, or forſaken.

The Countrey, as before was ſaid, of little breadth, and yet full of Rivers: the principal whereof, 1. Chagre, by the Spaniards called Rio de Lagartos, or the River of Crocodiles, (many of which are harboured in it) which falleth into Mare del Noordt betwixt Nombre de Dios and Porto Beleno. 2. Sardinilla, 3. Sardina, 4. Rio de Colubros, or the River of Snakes, and 5. Rio de Comagre; all falling into the ſame Sea. Then on the other ſide, 6. Chepo, whoſe Sands in former times yielded plenty of Gold. 7. Rio de las Balſas, on the banks whereof groweth great ſtore of Timber for the building of Ships. 8. De Congos, emptying it ſelf into the Bay of S. Michaels.

Towns of moſt note, 1. S. Philip, ſeated on a ſafe and ſtrong Haven, called Porto Belo: built in this place by the appointment of King Philip the ſecond, but by the Counſel of John Baptiſta Antonelli, to be the Staple of the Trade betwixt Spain and Panama; partly, in regard of the unhealthineſs of Nombre de Dios, where it was before; but chiefly, becauſe that Town was found to have lien too open to the Invaſions of the Engliſh. Fortified with two ſtrong Caſtles, (on each ſide of the Haven one;) but for all that ſurprized and pillaged by the Engliſh under Captain Parker, in the year 1601. 2. Nombre de Dios, conveniently ſeated in the upper Sea for a Town of Trade; and for that reaſon made the Staple of ſuch Commodities as were trucked betwixt Peru and Spain: which brought from Spain, and landed here, were from hence conveyed over the Land to Panama, and there ſhipped for Peru; or brought from Peru, and landed at Panama, were by Land brought unto this place, and here ſhipped for Spain. It took this name by Didaco Niqueſa, a Spaniſh Adventurer, who having been diſtreſſed by Tempeſts was driven in here, and bid his men go on ſhore en Nombre de Dios, in the name of God. In reference hereunto by the Latines, borrowing a Greek word, it is called Theonyma. Of great Trade once, on the occaſion before mentioned: but in the year 1584. the Trade was removed unto Porto Belo, by the counſel of Antonelli before named; and ſome years after that, the Inhabitants alſo. To haſten which, the taking of this Town by Sir Francis Drake ſerved exceeding fitly. 3. Acla, on the Coaſt of the ſame Sea alſo, but on the South-eaſt of Nombre de Dios. 4. Nata, or S. Jago de Nata, ſituate on the lower Sea on the Borders of Veragua, about 30 leagues on the Weſt of Panama. 5. Panama, the chief City of Caſtella Aurea, the Reſidence of the Governour and the Courts of Juſtice, honoured with a Biſhops See, a Suffragan to the Archbiſhop of Lima, and beautified with three fair Monaſteries, and a Colledge of Jeſuites. Seated in the 9. degree of Northern Latitude; and ſo near the Sea that the waves come cloſe unto the Wall. A Town through which the Wealth of Spain and Peru paſſeth every year; yet not containing above 350 Houſes: the number of the Souldiers greater than that of the Citizens. 6. S. Crux la Real, a League from Panama, inhabited totally by Negroes, brought out of Guinea.

This Province was the firſt of thoſe on the Firm Land which were diſcovered by Columbus. But I find not that he left any name unto it, or to any River or Promontory of it, but only to a little Iſland lying on the Shore near Porto Belo, which he cauſed to be called Los Baſtimentos; becauſe being caſt hereon by chance, he found good ſtore of Maize and other Proviſions, called Baſtimentos by the Spaniard. But the chief Iſlands of this Province are thoſe which Columbus never ſaw, called the Iſlands of Pearls, ſituate in the Southern Sea, oppoſite to Panama, from which diſtant 17 leagues, or thereabouts. In number above twenty, but two only inhabited, the one called led Tarorequi, the other Del Rio; the reſt of them rather Rocks then Iſlands. Much famed not only for the abundance, but the excellency, of the Pearls there found; fairer then thoſe of Margarita and Cubagua, ſo much commended. Once very profitable to the Spaniards, till by their cruelty and covetouſneſs they unpeopled the Iſlands, and deſtroyed the Pearls. Inhabited now only by a few Negroes, and ſome Slaves of Nicaragua, who live here to attend the grazing of their Maſters Cattel in the Fields and Paſtures.

2. DARIEN hath on the North the Diſtrict of Panama; on the South, New Granada; on the Eaſt, the River of Darien, whence it hath its name, and the Gulf of Uraba; and on the Weſt, the main Southern Ocean.

The Country is of a temperate Air, and a fruitful Soil: ſo happy in the production of Melons and ſuch other Fruits, that within twenty days after they are ſown they are fully ripe. With like felicity it bringeth forth Grapes and other Fruits; either natural hereunto, or brought hither from Europe. A Tree here is called Hovo, not elſewhere known; the Shade of which is conceived to be ſo wholeſom, that the Spaniards ſeek them out to ſleep under them. Out of the Bloſſoms of it they diſtil a perfumed Water; of the Bark a Bath or Lavatory, good for the opening of the Pores, and redreſs of Wearineſs; and from the Roots they draw a Liquor which they uſe to drink of. Of Beaſts and Fowl great plenty, whether wild or tame; and ſome of them not heard of in other places.

Principal Rivers hereof, 1. Darien, whence it hath the name. A clear Water, and much drank of, but of a ſlow courſe and a narrow Chanel; able to bear no bigger Veſſels then thoſe of one piece of Wood, uſed among the Savages; we may call them Troughs. But with this ſlow courſe it falleth at laſt into the Gulf of Uraba, a large Arm of the Sea, which pierceth far into the Land, and at the mouth is ſaid to be eight Leagues over. 2. Rio de las Redas, and 3. De la Trepadera; both emptying themſelves into the Gulf of Uraba. 4. Corobaci, on the ſame ſide of the Country alſo. 5. Bern, a River of the South-Sea, not much obſervable, but that ſome have laboured to derive the Etymology of Peru from thence.

Towns of moſt note, though few of any, 1. Darien, on the Bank of the Gulf of Uraba; oftentimes ſo unhealthy by the Miſts which do thence ariſe, that the Inhabitants uſe to ſend their ſick people to the freſh Air of Corobary. to revive their ſpirits. By the Spaniards it was called S. Maria Antiqua, afterwards the Antique of Darien, being new built by one Enciſus a Spaniſh Adventurer, Anno 1510. and grew ſo ſuddenly into Wealth and Reputation, that within four years it was made an Epiſcopal See. But being built too near the Banks of the Darien, in a mooriſh and unhealthy place, both the Epiſcopal See and the chief Inhabitants were removed to Panama. Some other Colonies of the Spaniards have been planted here; but either forſaken by themſelves, or deſtroyed by the Savages; ſo that now from Acla to the bottom of the Gulf of Uraba, the Spaniards have not in their own hands either Town or Village. Nothing but ſome few ſcattered Houſes in all that Tract, for the uſe of the Natives; who formerly made their Neſts like Birds, on the tops of Trees. 2. Bizu. 3. Los Angadeſos; two ſmall Villages on the other ſide of the Country, poſſeſſed by the Savages. Beſides theſe, and ſome ſorry Sheds here and there diſperſed, all the reſt is a Deſart. So that not being able to maintain the Reputation of a diſtinct Province, the Government hereof hath of late been devolved on the Prefect of Panama.

3. NOVA ANDALUZIA hath on the Weſt the River Darien, and the Gulf of Uraba; on the Eaſt, the Province of S. Martha; on the North, the main Ocean; and on the South, the New Realm of Granada. So called with reference to Andaluzia, a Province of Spain. Called alſo by ſome Writers Carthagena, from Carthagena now the chief City of it.

It is in length, from the Gulf of Uraba to the River of Magdalen, 80 Leagues, and near upon as much in breadth. Mountainous, and very full of Woods; but in thoſe Woods great ſtore of Roſin, Gums, and ſome kinds of Balſams. Here is alſo ſaid to be a Tree, which whoſoever toucheth, is in danger of poiſoning. The Soil, by reaſon of the abundance of Rain which falls upon it, very moiſt and ſpewy; inſomuch that few of our European Fruits have proſpered in it. Few Veins of Gold in all the Country, except only in that part hereof which is called Zena; where the Spaniards, at their firſt coming, found great ſtore of Treaſure. But it was taken out of the Graves and Monuments of the dead, not found in Mines, or digged for, as in other places: ſuch being the Reputation of that Territory in former times, that the Nations far and near did carry the bodies of their Dead, to be buried in it, with great quantity of Gold, Jewels, and other Riches. The Natives very fierce and ſtout, whilſt they were a People: But giving the Spaniards many overthrows before fully conquered, they have been ſo conſumed and waſted by little and little, that there are not many of them left.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. Rio de los Redos, and 2. Rio de los Anades, both falling into the Bay of Uraba. 3. Zenu, which paſſing through the Province above-mentioned, to which it gives name, falleth into the Ocean over againſt the Iſland Fuerte. 4. S. Martha, of long courſe and much eſtimation. For riſing in the moſt Southern parts of the New Realm of Granada, near the Æquinoctial, it paſſeth through the whole length of that Kingdom, and at the laſt mingleth its ſtream with that of the River Magdalen, not far from Mopox. By the Natives it is called Cauca. And as for Mountains, thoſe of moſt note are a continual ridge of Hills, by the Spaniards called Cordillera, by the Natives Abibe; craggy and difficult of aſcent; in breadth affirmed to be 20 Leagues, but the length uncertain, the fartheſt ends of them towards the South not diſcovered hitherto.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Carthagena, ſituate in a ſandy Peninſula, ten degrees diſtant from the Æquator: well built, and for the bigneſs of it of great Wealth and State; conſiſting of 500 Houſes, or thereabout, but thoſe neat and handſom. Beautified with a Cathedral Church, three Monaſteries, and one of the beſt Havens of all America. Well fortified on both ſides, ſince the taking of it by Sir Francis Drake, who in the year 1585. took it by Aſſault, and carried thence, beſides ineſtimable ſums of mony, 240 Braſs pieces of Ordnance. 2. Tolu, by the Spaniards called S. Jago, twelve miles from Carthagena, memorable for the moſt ſoveraign Balſam of all theſe parts, called the Balſam of Tolu; little inferiour, if at all to the Balſam of Egypt. 3. Mopox, or Santa Cruz de Mopox, near the Confluences of the Rivers of Martha and Magdalena. 4. Baranca de Malambo, on the Banks of the River Magdalen, ſix Leagues from the Ocean, where ſuch Commodities as are brought by Sea for the New Realm of Granada uſe to be unſhipped, and carried by Lighters or ſmall Boats up the River. 5. Sebaſtian de Buena viſta, built by Alfonſo de Oieda, Anno 1508. in the firſt Attempt upon this Country; ſituate on a riſing ground, near the mouth of the Bay of Uraba, a League and a half from the Sea. 6. Villa de Maria, 30 Leagues South of Carthagena, but of no great note.

4. S. MARTHA hath on the Weſt Nova Andaluzia; on the Eaſt, Rio de la Hacha; on the North, the main Ocean; on the South, the New Realm of Granada: about 70 Leagues in length, and as much in breadth. So called from S. Martha the chief City of it.

The Country is mountainous and barren, not fit for Pasturage or Tillage; productive notwithstanding of Limons, Oranges, Pomegranates, and such other Fruits as are brought hither out of Spain. The Air on the Sea-coasts very hot and scalding, and in the mid-land parts as cold, because of the neighbourhood of some Mountains always covered with Snow. The principal of those Mountains, a long ridge of Hills, by the Spaniards called Las Sierras Nievadas, or the Snowy Mountains; discernable by the Mariners 30 Leagues at Sea, by whom called the Mountains of Tairona, from a Valley of that name beneath them, the Inhabitants whereof, by the advantage of those Hills, have hitherto preserved their liberty against the Spaniards. The rest, though subject to the Spaniards, have their several Kings, affirmed to be an arrogant and ill-natur'd People; made worse perhaps then indeed they are, by reason of their hate to the Spaniards, whose Government they live under with great unwillingness.

Chief Rivers of this Province, are, 1. Rio Grando de la Magdalena; which hath its Fountain in the Hills of the New Realm of Granada, not far from the Æquator, but its fall into the Ocean betwixt Carthagena and S. Martha, in the Latitude of 12 degrees; where dividing it self, it maketh an Island of five Leagues long, and after openeth into the Sea with two wide mouths; discernable for ten Leagues space from the rest of the Main by the taste and colour of the Water. 2. Rio de Cazaze, which falleth into the Magdalen; as doth also 3. Cæsar by the Natives called Pompatan: which having its Fountain near the City of Kings in the Vale of Upar, passeth directly towards the South, till it meet with 4. Ayumas, another River of this Tract; accompanied with whom he runneth Westward for the space of 70 Leagues, and endeth in the great River of Magdalen, as before is said, near the Forest of Alpuerte. 5. Bubia. 6. Piras. 7. Don Diego. 8. Palamini. 9. Gayza, falling into the Ocean.

Towns of most observation, 1. S. Martha, situate on the Shores of the Ocean, in the Latitude of ten degrees and 30 minutes; neighboured by a safe and convenient Haven, defended from the Winds by an high Mountain near unto it, and honoured with an Episcopal See. Small, and ill-built when it was at the best; nor well recovered of the Spoil it suffered by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1595. and by Sir Anthony Shirly, the next year after. 2. Tenariffe, on the Banks of the Magdalen, 40 Leagues from S. Martha. 3. Tanalameque, by the Spaniards called Villas de las Palmas, 20 Leagues to the South of Tenariffe. 4. Cividad de los Reyes, or the City of the Kings, situate in the Vale of Upar on the Banks of a deep and violent River, called Guatapori, which not far off falleth into the Cæsar: ill neighboured by the Inhabitants of the Vale of Tairona, not hitherto reduced under the command of the Kings of Spain. 5. Ramada, by the Spaniards called New Salamanca, in the same Valley of Upar; as liberally furnished with Veins of Brass, as it is with Stones. 6. Ocanna, on the Western Reach of the River Cæsar, equally distant from its Confluence with Aymas, and its fall into Magdalen.

5. RIO DE LA HACHA is the name of a little Province lying on the North-east of S. Martha, environed on two sides with the main Ocean, and on the third (which is that of the East) with a large and spacious arm of the Sea called Golfo de Venezuela, the extremities here of North-west, called Cabo la Vela; on the North-east, Cabo di Coqui boccoa.

It took this name from the Town and River of La Hacha, a small Town, consisting of no more then an hundred Houses, but big enough to give name to so small a Province; built on a little Hill about a mile from the Sea: the Haven inconvenient and exposed to the Northern Winds, but the Soil about very rich, fruitful of all such Plants as are brought from Spain, well stored with Veins of Gold, excellent Salt-wiches, and some Gems of great worth and virtue. Distant eight Leagues from New Salamanca, and 18 Leagues from the Cape la Vela: surprized and sacked by Sir Francis Drake Anno 1595. 2. Rancheria, six Leagues on the East of De la Hacha, inhabited for the most part by such as get their living by Pearl-fishing. 3. Topia, five Leagues from La Hacha, and almost as much from the Sea: the Fields whereof lying betwixt the Town and New Salamanca were terribly wasted by the English in the year aforesaid, because the Governour of New Salamanca, with whom they had contracted for 4000 Ducats not to burn that Town, would not stand to his Bargain.

These Countries, discovered by Columbus, and by him called Terra Firma, as before was said, were afterwards brought under the power of Spain, by two several men, employed in the subduing of their several parts, Anno 1508. To Didaco Niquesa was allotted the Government and Conquest of those parts hereof which lie on the West of the Bay of the Uraba, containing the Prefectures of Darien and Panama, by the name of Castella del Oro; And to Alfonso Oieda, all that lay on the East of that Gulf, by the name of Nova Andaluzia. But these two finished not the work, though they first began it: Encisus discovering farther on the River of Darien then Niquesa had done before him; and Balboa finding out the way to the South-Sea, where Panama and the best of their Trading lieth, which neither of the other had thought upon. Both afterwards joyned into one Province, the Prefectures of S. Martha, and Rio de la Hacha (when conquered and subdued by the Spaniard) being added to it. One of their last Kings which held out against the Spaniards was called Abibeia, who had his Palace on the top of a Tree, (as most of his Subjects had their Houses;) from which when Francisco de Vasquez, a Spanish Captain could by no other Rhetorick win him to descend, he laid his Axe to the Root, and began to fell it: which seen, the poor Prince was fain to come down, and compound both for his Life and Palace at the will of his Enemies.

OF NOVA GRANADA.

NOVA GRANADA, or the New Realm of Granada, is bounded on the North with Castella Aurea; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the East, with Venezuela. The Countries lying on the South, are not yet discovered, shut up with vast Hills and impassable Mountains, except only in those parts which lie near the Sea, where the way lieth open to Peru. Thus called by Gonsalvo Ximinez, the first Discoverer; who, being a Native of Granada in Spain, gave this name unto it.

It is in length 130 Leagues, and as much in breadth; reckoning Popayana for a part of it, though by some made a distinct Government. So that we may divide the whole into these two parts, 1. Granada specially so called, lying on the West, and 2. Popayana lying towards Mare del Zur.

1. GRANADA specially so called hath an Air for the most part well tempered betwixt heat and cold; with little difference (if any) betwixt Summer and Winter, and not much in the length and shortness of days. The Country is full of Woods, but of great fertility, well stored with Corn and Pasturage, many Herds of Cattel, some Veins of Gold and other Metals, and in that part hereof which is called Tunia, great plenty of Emeralds: and amongst their Woods, that called Guaiacum, Medicinable for the French Disease, grows in great abundance. The People are tall and strong of Body, not very industrious, the greatest part of their time being spent in Songs and Dances. The Women of a White and more clear Complexion then any of their Neighbours, and more handsomely habited, apparelled in black or parti-coloured Mantles girt about their middles; their Hair tied up, and covered most an end with Chaplets intermixt with Flowers, and artificially composed.

Rivers of note I find not any, but those of S. Martha and S. Magdalen, described before: nor any distinction of it into several Provinces, but by the names of Tunia, Bagota, Panches, Colymæ, and Musi, by which the Savages were distinguished when first known to the Spaniards; with reference to which the Principal of their Towns are by some described.

Towns then of greatest note, 1. S. Foy de Bagota, but commonly S. Foy, the Metropolis of this new Realm, the See of an Archbishop, and the Seat of the Governour. Built by Gonsalvo Ximinez de Quesada, at the foot of the Mountains, not far from the Lake of Guatavita, on the banks of which they used to sacrifice to their Idols. The Town inhabited by 600 Families of Spaniards, besides those of the Natives; and situate in the fourth degree of Northern Latitude. 2. S. Michael, 12 Leagues on the North of S. Foy, a well traded Market. 3. Toycama, in the Territory of the Panches, a barbarous and man-eating people, till reclaimed by the Spaniards; and Masters of the richest part of all the Country. The Town is about 15 Leagues from S. Foy, toward the North-east; and seated on the banks of Pati, a little River, which not far off is swallowed up in the body of Magdalen. 4. Tudela in the Country of the Musi and Colymæ, two warlike Nations; situate on the banks of the River Zarbi, and made a Colony of the Spaniards at their first coming hither; but deserted by them not long after, for fear of the Savages, though the want of Provisions was pretended. 5. Trinidado, on the same River, but somewhat lower, and more remote from the Savages, by them notwithstanding much annoyed: the Fields thereof full of Veins of Crystal, Emeralds, Adamants, and Chalcedonians. 6. La Palma, built by the Spaniards in the same Territory of the Musi and Colymæ, Anno 1572. 7. Tunia, so called according to the name of the Tribe or Province in which it is situate; built on the top of an high Hill, that it might serve for a Retreat and Fortress against the Savages; now a well-traded Empory, and very wealthy, the Inhabitants being able to impress 280 Horse for present service. 8. Pampelona, 60 Leagues from S. Foy toward the North-east, rich in Mines of Gold, and Herds of Cattel. 9. Merida, on the North of Pompiana, the fartherest Town of all this Province on the North-east towards Venezuela: as 10. S. John de los Planos, or S. John upon the Plains, is in the South-east, 50 Leagues from S. Foy, and seated in a corner full of Veins of Gold.

2. POPAYANA lieth on the West of New Granada strictly and specially so called; from which parted by the River Martha, which hath its original in this Country: on the North bounded with Nova Andaluzia, or Carthagena; and with Mare del Zur upon the West. Extended in length from North to South 130 Leagues at the least; and from the River to the Sea, betwixt 30 and 40.

The Country, over-cloy'd with Rain, breeds but little Maize, less Wheat, and almost no Cattel; though in some places richer then it is in others. The People anciently Man-eaters, and as rude as any; now more industrious and affable then the other Americans, especially about Popayan, where the Soil is also better tempered then in other places. The Rivers of most note, beside that of S. Martha, which we have spoken of already, and some lesser streams which fall into it, are 1. Rio de S. Juan. 2. Rio de Cedros. 3. Rio de S. Jago; all falling into Mare del Zur.

Cities and Towns of greatest note, 1. Popayan, called by the name of the King hereof, when first known to the Spaniards; situate on a nameless, but pleasant, River, in the midst of a Plain, of great Wealth, and healthy Air, in two Degrees and 30 Minutes of Northern Latitude; the ordinary Residence of the Governour, and the See of a Bishop. The Building fair unto the Eye, but slight; excepting the Cathedral, and a Monastery of the Friers called De Mercede, which are strong and lasting. 2. Antiochia, (or Sancta Fides de Antiochia) on the borders of Nova Andaluzia, 100 Leagues distant from Popayan. Seated upon a little River which falls into the Martha, from which twelve Leagues distant. 3. Caramanta, on the Martha it self. 4. Pasia, in a pleasant Valley, on the banks of a small River, but of excellent Water. 5. S. Anne, in the Cantred of Anzerman, by which name it is some times called: built on a little Hill betwixt two sweet Rivers, and compassed round about with a Grove of most pleasant Fruits. 6. S. Jago de Arma, the chief Town of the Cantred of Arma; situate in a Territory very rich in Gold, but otherwise unprovided of all manner of necessaries; fifty Leagues to the North-east of Popayan. 7. Carthage, in the Province of Quimbaia, 22 Leagues from S. Jago de Arma; seated in a Plain betwixt two Torrents, seven Leagues from the River of S. Martha. 8. Cali, a League from that River, but on the Banks of another, in the Latitude of four degrees: neighboured by a vast and mighty Mountain, at whose foot it standeth; there built by Sebastian de Betalcazar, the first Discoverer of this Country. 9. Bonaventure, on a Bay so called in the Southern Ocean; a small Town, but of great use for the ready conveyance of the Commodities of New Spain unto Popayan, and to other Towns of this Province. 10. Timana, 80 Leagues from Popayan towards the East, at the foot of that vast ridge of Mountains called the Andes; which hereabouts taking their beginning, extend as far Southwards as to the Streights of Magellan. 11. S. Juan de Pasto, situate in a pleasant Valley, but one degree from the Æquator. 12. Sebastian de la Plata, so called from its Silver Mines in the South-east confines of the Province. 13. Almagra, on the sides of a plain, but barren Mountain. 14. Madrigal, by the Natives called Chapan Chicu; in a barren Soil, were not Gold a Supplement of all wants, which is there found in some abundance.

To this Province belong also some Islands in the Southern Ocean: that is to say, 1. The Isle of Palmes, South of the Cape of Corientes, so called from the abundance of Palms which are growing in it. 2. Gorgona, opposite to the mouth or Outlet of Rio de S. Juan, an Island of three Leagues in compass; the Hills so high, the Valleys so extreamly low, the Sun so little seen amongst them, and the Woods so dark, that some have likened it to Hell. Not much observable, but that it did afford a lurking-place unto Francis Pizarro in his attempts upon Peru, when repulsed from landing on that Coast. 3. Del Gallo, a small Island, not a League in Circuit, on the South of Gorgona.

This whole Country, thus divided into two Prefectures, but both subordinate to the Juridical Resort in the City of S. Foy de Bagota, is indebted for its first Discovery to two several Persons. Granada specially so called was first discovered by Gonsalvo Ximinez de Quesada, employed therein by Ferdinando de Lugo, Admiral of the Canary Islands, Anno 1536. who passing up the River of Magdalen without molestation (more then the difficulties of the ways through Fens and Forests) as far as the Cantred of Bagota, was there encountred by that King, whom he easily vanquished, and wasting all his Territories, carried with him thence great quantity of Gold, Emeralds, and other Treasure. The residue of those Petit Princes, which then governed in their several Tribes, either submitted to him without opposition, or else were vanquished at the first rising. Having discovered and subdued every several Province, and miserably murthered Sangipa the last King of Bagota, of whom he had made use in subduing the Panches, he caused it to be called the New Realm of Granada, for the reason formerly laid down: and summing up the Spoils he had gotten in this easie War, he found them to amount to 1800 Emralds, 191294 Pezoes of the finest Gold, 35000 of a courser and inferiour Allay. In his return he heard the news of Sebastian de Betalcazar's marching on the other side of the River of S. Martha; who having at the same time discovered and subdued the Province of Popayan, was beating out his way towards the North-Sea, and from thence to Spain. This Betalcazar, being by Francisco Pezarro, the Conquerour of Peru, made Governour of the Town and Province of Quito, and having secured all the Country to the very Sea, resolved to open a way homewards through those Regions, which lay betwixt his own Province and Mare del Noordt. And this he did resolve the rather, in regard that he had been informed, that a rich Country, full of Gold, was in that Tract possessed by Popayan and Columbaz, two petit Princes, but yet the greatest in those parts. Encountred in his march by the Royelets of Patia and Pasto, he soon made them weary, and retire themselves into the Woods and impassable Mountains; and passing slowly on, came at last to Popayan. Where, though the Savages entertained him with some frequent Skirmishes, yet they grew quieter by degrees; giving the Spaniards leave to possess themselves of their best Towns, and to build others in such places as they thought convenient. But this was after the first Conquest, according to the coming over of succeeding Colonies. The first Conquest being finished Anno 1536. when the New Realm of Granada was subdued by Ximinez.

OF PERU.

PERU is bounded on the East with that vast ridge of Mountains which they call the Andes; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the North, with Popayan, an Appendix of the New Realm of Granada; on the South, with Chile. So called from the River Peru, which being one of the first of note which the Spaniards met with in this Country, occasioned them to give that name to the whole.

It is in length from North to South 700 leagues, but the breadth not equal. In some places 100 Leagues broad, in others 60, in the rest but 40; more or less, according to the windings of the Seas and Mountains. Divided commonly into three parts, all of so different a nature from one another, as if they were far distant both in Site and Soil. These parts are, the Plains, the Hill-Countries, and the Andes: the Plains extend on the Sea-shore, in all places level without Hills; the Andes, a continual ridge of Mountains without any Valleys; the Sierra, or Hill-Countries, composed of both. Each part stretcheth out from North to South, the whole length of the Country: the Plains from the Sea-shore to the Hill Countries, for the most part ten Leagues broad, in some places more; the Hill-Countries 20 Leagues in breadth, where where narroweſt, and as much the Andes. In the Plains it never raineth, on the Andes continually in a manner; in the Hill Countries it raineth from September to April, being after that fair Weather. In the Hill-Country the Summer beginneth in April, and endeth in September; in the Plains their Summer beginneth in October, and endeth in April. So that a man may travel from Summer to Winter in one day; be frozen in the morning at his ſetting forth, and ſcorched with heat before he come to his journeys end. Some other differences there are; as that the Andes are covered with Woods and Foreſts, whereas the Hill-Countries are bare and naked; the Plains, where there are ſtore of Rivers, and the benefit of the Sea beſides, ſandy and dry, and in moſt places deſtitute both of Fruits and Corn: in ſome parts of the Hill-Countries, where there are no Rivers, and Rain but ſeldom, plenty of Roots, Maize, Fruits, and all other neceſſaries. In the Plains there never bloweth any but the Southerly Wind, though it bring no Rain with it; and in the Hills, Winds from every Coaſt, and of every nature; ſome bringing Rain, ſome Snow, ſome claps of Thunder, and others fair Weather at the heels of them. Inſomuch that it is obſerved, that ſuch of the Inhabitants of the Plains as go up to the Sierra, or Mountains, do find ſuch pains in the Head and Stomach, as freſh-water Souldiers when firſt Sea-ſick.

Not to purſue theſe differences any farther in the ſeveral parts, we will look upon the whole in groſs; which we ſhall find but meanly furniſhed for the bigneſs with thoſe Commodities which ſo large a Country might afford: inſomuch as many of the people live moſt on Roots, here being little Wheat, and not ſuch quantities of Maize (the ordinary Bread-grain of the Americans) as to ſerve their multitude. Nor find I that the Cattel of Europe have been either brought hither in any great numbers, or are grown to any great increaſe. Inſtead of which they have in their Woods and Paſtures infinite numbers of Beaſts ſomewhat like wild Goats (which they call Vicagues) and great ſtore of a kind of Sheep, by them called Pacos, profitable both for Fleece and Burthen; as big as a ſmall breed of Horſes, but in taſte as pleaſing as our Mutton, and no leſs nouriſhing, A Creature ſo well acquainted with its own abilities, that when he findeth himſelf over-loaded, no blows or violence ſhall make him move a foot forwards, till his load be leſſened; and of ſo cheap a Diet, that he is content with very little, and ſometimes paſſeth three whole days without any water. The Camels of theſe parts are not much unlike them.

This, as it is by ſome accounted for a Creature proper to this Country only, (though in that miſtaken) ſo may it paſs amongſt the Rarities hereof: many of which it hath both in Beaſts and Plants, and in inanimate Bodies alſo. Amongſt their Plants they have a Fig-tree, the North-part whereof, looking towards the Mountains bringeth forth its Fruits in the Summer only; the Southern part, looking to the Sea, fruitful only in Winter. Some as deſervedly do count the Coca for a Wonder, the Leaves whereof being dried, and formed into Lozenges, (or little Pellets) are exceeding uſeful in a Journey. For melting in the mouth, they ſatisfie both hunger and thirſt, and preſerve a man in ſtrength, and his Spirits in vigour; and generally are eſteemed of ſuch Soverain uſe, that it is thought that 100000 Baskets full of the leaves of this Tree are ſold yearly at the Mines of Potoſi only, each of which at the Markets of Cuſco would yield 12 pence or 18 pence a piece. Another Plant they tell us of, but I find no name for it, which if put into the hands of a ſick perſon, will inſtantly diſcover whether he be like to live or die. For if on the preſſing it in his hand he look merry and chearful, it is an aſſured ſign of his Recovery: as on the other ſide, of Death, if ſad and troubled. Amongſt their Beaſts, beſides thoſe ſpoken of before, they reckon that which they call the Huanacu: of which it is obſerved that the Males ſtand Sentinel on the Mountains, while the Females are feeding in the Valleys; and if they ſee any men coming towards them, they ſet out their throats, to give their Females notice of ſome danger near; whom, when they come up to them, they put in the front of the Retreat, interpoſing their own bodies betwixt them and their Enemy. Nor want they Rarities of Nature even in things inanimate: here being ſaid to be a round Lake near the Mines of Potoſi, whoſe water is ſo hot, though the Country it ſelf be exceeding cold, that they who bathe themſelves are not able to endure the heats thereof, if they go but a little from the Banks; there being in the midſt thereof a boiling of above twenty foot ſquare. A Lake which never doth decreaſe, though they have drawn a great Stream from it to ſerve their Metal-Mills.

More profitable, though leſs rare, are thoſe Metals which thoſe Mills are made for; and not leſs profitable, one of thoſe Vulgar Plants, I mean Tobacco, growing more abundantly here then in other Countries of America: for which cauſe, and the reſemblance which it hath to Henbane, in form and quality, it is called the Henbane of Peru by Gerrard, and ſome other of our Modern Herbaliſts. A Plant; which (though in ſome reſpect, being moderately taken, it may be ſerviceable for Phyſick, yet) beſides the conſumption of the purſe, & impairing of our inwardparts, the immoderate, vain and phantaſtical abuſe of this ſtinking Weed, corrupteth the natural ſweetneſs of the breath, ſtupifieth the Brain; and indeed is ſo prejudicial to the general eſteem of our Country-men, that one ſaith of them, Anglorum corpora, qui hnic plantæ tantopere indulgent, in Barbarorum naturam degenerasſe videntur. The two chief Virtues aſcribed unto it (pardon me I beſeech you this ſhort Digreſſion) are, that it voideth Rheume, and is found to be a ſoverain Antidote againſt Lues Venerea, that loathſome Diſeaſe of the French Pox. For this laſt like enough it is that ſo unclean a Diſeaſe may be helped with ſuch an unſavory Medicine. But for the firſt, it may perhaps conſiſt more in Opinion then truth or reality; the Rheume, which it is ſaid to void, being no more then what it breedeth at the preſent. We may as well conclude, that Bottled Ale is good for the breaking of Wind, (which effect we find commonly to follow on the drinking of it) though indeed it be only the ſame Wind which it ſelf conveyed into the Stomach. But Tobacco is by few now taken as Medicinal; it is of late times grown a good fellow, and fallen from a Phyſician to a Complement. An Humour which had never ſpread ſo far amongſt us, if the ſame means of prevention had been uſed by the Chriſtian Magiſtrates, as was by Morat Baſſa among the Turks; who commanded a Pipe to be thruſt through the noſe of a Turk whom he found taking Tobacco, and him to be carried in deriſion all about Conſtantinople. It is obſerved that the taking of Tobacco was firſt brought into England by the Mariners of Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1585. And that it hapned not unfitly in the way of an Antidote to that immoderate uſe of Drinking, which our Low-Country Souldiers had brought out of the Netherlands much about that time, An. 1582. Before which time, the Engliſh of all Northern people were deemed to be moſt free from that Swiniſh Vice, wherein it is to be feared that they have much out-gone their Teachers, the Dutch. Certain it is, that it is taken ſo exceſſively by both theſe Nations, that I may juſtly ſay with a learned Fleming, Herbæ ejus, non dicam uſus, ſed abuſus, non modo in Anglia, ſed in Belgio, & alibi, inſanum in modum jam adolevit.

But the greateſt Riches of this Country is moſt out of ſight, ſight, hid in the Bowels of the Earth, but found in thoſe never-decaying Mines of Gold and Silver, more eminently abounding in this one Province then in all America. For inſtance whereof we may take the Silver Mines of Potoſi, diſcovered in the year 1545, the fifth of which, payable into the King's Exchequer, amounted in forty years to 111 millions of Pezoes, every Pezo being valued at ſix ſhillings and ſix pence; and yet a third part of the whole was diſcharged of that payment. By this one we may gueſs ſomewhat of the reſt, as by the proportion of one member the Dimenſions of the whole Body may be probably aimed at: unleſs the riches of theſe Mines be beyond conjecture; of which it is affirmed by ſome knowing men, that they yield in many places more Gold then Earth. Upon which ground it is conceived by Arius Montanus, and ſome other very learned men, that this Peru is that Land of Ophir to which Solomon's Navy went for Gold; induced thereunto by that Text of the Chronicles, lib. 2. cap. 3. ver. 6. That the Gold was the Gold of Parvaim. A fancy not of ſo ſandy a Foundation as many others of that kind, if Peru had been the old name of this Country, and not newly given it by the Spaniards. By means whereof, not only Spain, but all Europe alſo is better furniſhed with Gold and Silver then ever formerly. For in the firſt Ages of the World our Anceſtours, the Britains (I muſt digreſs here once again) had no other money then Iron-rings and Braſs-rings, which they uſed for Inſtruments of Exchange; and in the Roman Provinces, we read that the moſt uſual materials of their Coin was moſt times Braſs, and ſometimes Leather. Corium formâ publicâ percuſſum, as it is in Seneca. Of which laſt ſort we find that Frederick the Emperour made uſe at the Siege of Millain, and the Engliſh in the time of the Barons Wars. And why not ſo? conſidering that no longer ſince then in the year 1574, the Hollanders being then reduced to ſome Extremities made mony of Paſte-board. But this happeneth only in caſes of Neceſſity, the two Metals of Gold and Silver having for many hundred years (though not in ſuch abundance as in later times) been the chief Inſtruments of Exchange and Bartery betwixt man and man, and queſtionleſs will ſo continue to the end of the World. I know Sir Thomas More in the ſecond Book of his Utopia, preferreth Iron before Gold, becauſe more neceſſary for all uſes; Ut ſine quo non magis quàm ſine igne atque aqua vivere Mortales queant: and that he giveth us there a Plot to bring Gold and Silver into contempt; telling us how the Utopians uſe to employ thoſe Metals in making Chamber-pots and Veſſels of more unclean neceſſities, eating and drinking for the moſt part in Glaſs or Earth. He telleth us alſo how they make Chains and Fetters of Gold to hold in their rebellious Slaves and Malefactors; how they puniſh infamous Perſons by putting Gold-Rings upon their Fingers, Jewels of Gold in their Ears, and Chains of Gold about their Necks: how they adorn their little Children with precious Jewels, which Gayeties, when they come to Age, and ſee them worn by none but ſuch little Children, they uſe to caſt away of their own accord; as with us our elder Boys leave off, without conſtraint, their Babies, Cob-nuts, and other Crepundia. He farther telleth us, how the Ambaſſadours of the Anemolii, (a confederate State of the Utopians) coming amongſt them richly and gloriouſly attired, were took for Slaves, by reaſon of their Golden Chains, and the meaneſt of their Followers thought to be the Ambaſſadours: how the elder Boys derided the Strangers for wearing Jewels, as if they had been Children ſtill: and how the people laught at their Chains of Gold, as being too weak to ſhackle ſuch ſturdy Fellows. Now though it pleaſed that wiſe State to have any Gold or Silver at all amongſt them, it was not (as he telleth us) out of any eſteem which themſelves had of it; but therewith to provide themſelves of Forein Aids, and pay their Armies, when the neceſſities of their Affairs or other reaſon of State did require the ſame. How this Device would ſort with the humours of thoſe People whom Lucian anciently did Fable, and ſome of later times more really do fanſie, to have their dwelling in the Moon, I am not able to ſay, as having hitherto had no Commerce nor correſpondence with the Inhabitants thereof: though poſſibly I may endeavour it in the end of this Book, and find it to ſort well enough with their Condition. Certain I am, this ſublunary World of ours will never brook it. And ſo I leave it, and look back again on the Mines of Peru: the extraordinary plenty of Gold and Silver, which thoſe and the reſt of the New World have furniſhed the Old World withal, being conceived by many knowing and judicious men to be the cauſe of the dearneſs of all Commodities at the preſent times, compared unto the cheapneſs of the times foregoing. For where much is, there greater prices will be given then in other places. And yet there want not ſome that add alſo other cauſes of the high prices of our days, viz. Monopolies, Combinations of Merchants and Crafts-men, Tranſportation of Grain, pleaſure of great Perſonages, the exceſs of private men, and the like: but theſe laſt I rather take to be Con-cauſes, the firſt being indeed the principal. For (as that excellent Sir Henry Savil hath it in the end of his Notes on Tacitus) the exceſſive abundance of τὰ νόμῳ μόνον ὄντα, things which conſiſt meerly on the Conſtitution of men, draweth neceſſarily τὰ φύσει ὄντα, thoſe things which Nature requireth, to an higher Rate in the Market. Captâ ab Auguſto Alexandriâ, (ſaith Oroſius) Roma in tantum opibus ejus crevit, ut dupla majora quàm antehac rerum venalium pretia ſtatuerentur. As for that Queſtion, whether of the two Kingdoms be happier, that which ſupplieth it ſelf with money by Traffick and the works of Art, or that which is ſupplied by Mines growing as the gift of Nature; I find it by this Tale in part reſolved. Two Merchants, departing from Spain to get Gold, touched upon part of Barbary, where the one buyeth Moors to dig and delve with, the other fraughteth his Veſſel with Sheep; and being come to the Indies, the one finding Mines ſet his Slaves to work; and the other happening in graſſie Ground, put his Sheep to grazing. The Slaves, grown cold and hungry, call for Food and Cloathing; which the Sheep-maſter by the increaſe of his ſtock had in great abundance: ſo that what the one got in Gold with toil, charges, and hazard both of life and health, he gladly gave unto the other in Exchange or Bartery, for the continual ſupply of Victuals, Clothes, and other Neceſſaries for himſelf and his Servants. In the end the Mines being exhauſted, and all the mony thence ariſing exchanged with the Shepherd for ſuch Neceſſaries as his Wants required; home comes the Shepherd in great Triumph, with abundance of Wealth, his Companion bringing nothing with him but the Tale of his Travels. But I dare not take upon me to determine this point. Only I add, that the Engliſh and Hollanders, by the benefit of their Manufactures and continual Traffick, did in concluſion weary the late King of Spain, King Philip the ſecond, and out-vied him (as it were) in Wealth and Treaſure; notwithſtanding his many Mines of Gold and Silver in Barbary, India, Mexicana, Guinea, ſome in Spain and Italy, and theſe of Peruana which now we handle, and which have given occaſion unto this Diſcourſe, or Digreſſion rather.

It is now time to take a view of the People alſo, affirmed to be (for the moſt part) of great ſimplicity; yet ſome of them (thoſe ſpecially which lie near the Æquator)

tor) to be great diſſemblers, and never to diſcover their Conceptions freely. Ignorant of Letters, but of good courage in Wars, well skilled in managing ſuch Weapons as they had been uſed to, and fearleſs of Death: the rather prompted to this laſt by an old opinion held amongſt them, that in the other world they ſhall eat, and drink, and make love to Women. And therefore commonly at the Funeral of any great Perſon who was attended on in his life, they uſe to kill and bury with him one or more of his Servants, to wait upon him after death. In the manner of their living much like the Jews; but not in Habit: conform therein to the other Savages, but that thoſe cover their upper parts with ſome decent Garment, and leave the other members bare. But this is only near the Æquator; both Sexes elſewhere wearing Mantles to their very Heels. Habited in one faſhion over all the Country, except the dreſſing of their Heads, wherein ſcarce any one doth agree with another, but hath his faſhion to himſelf. The Women leſs eſteemed here then in other places, treated as Slaves, and ſometimes cruelly beaten upon ſlight occaſions: the Men (as S. Paul ſaith of the ancient Gentiles) leaving the natural uſe of the Woman, and burning in their luſt towards one another. For which, if God delivered them into the hands of the Spaniards, they received that recompence which was meet.

Rivers of moſt note, 1. S. Jago, on the borders towards Popayana; a River of a violent courſe, and ſo great a depth, that it is 180 Fathoms deep at the influx of it. 2. Tombez, opening into a fair and capacious Bay, over againſt the Iſle of Puna, on the farther ſide of the Æquator; an Iſland of 12 Leagues in compaſs, and exceeding fruitful. 3. Guagaquil, of a longer courſe then any of the other two, and falling into Mare del Zur on the South of Tombez, over againſt the Iſle of Lobos. No Iſland after this of note upon all this Coaſt. If any come in our way which runneth towards the Eaſt, we ſhall meet with them in the view of the ſeveral Provinces; and ſo we ſhall with the Hills or Mountains which are moſt conſiderable; the Andes having been already touched on. Take we now notice of the great Lake of Titicaca, in which twelve Rivers are reported to loſe themſelves; in compaſs 80 Leagues, and uſually Navigable with Ships and Barks. The Waters of it not ſo ſalt as thoſe of the Sea, but ſo thick that no body can drink them; yet on the banks of it many Habitations, as good as any in Peru. By a fair Water-courſe or River it paſſeth into a leſs Lake, which they call Aulaga; and thence moſt probably findeth a way into the Sea, or elſe is ſwallowed in the Bowels of that thirſty Earth: but the firſt more likely.

It is divided commonly into three Juridical Reſorts; viz. of 1. Quito. 2. Lima: and 3. Charcos; each having under it many ſeveral and ſubordinate Provinces, too many and of too ſmall note to be here conſidered. We will therefore look upon the chief, and of greateſt reckoning: 1. Quito. 2. Los Quixos. 3. Lima. 4. Cuſco. 5. Charcos: and 6. Collao; three on the Sea, and the other three in the mid-lands; to which the Iſlands of it ſhall be joyned in the cloſe of all.

1. QUITO is bounded on the North with Popayana; on the Weſt, with Mare del Zur; on the South, with the Province of Lima; and on the Eaſt, with that of Los Quixos. So named from Quito the chief Town and Province of the firſt Diviſion.

The Soil is as fertile and as fit for the Fruits of Europe as any other in Peru: well ſtored with Cattel, eſpecially the Paco's or Peruvian Sheep; and plentifully furniſhed both with Fiſh and Fowl. In many parts great ſtore of Nitre, of which they make moſt approved good Gunpowder; and in ſome Rivers, eſpecially that of S. Barbary, many veins of Gold. The People generally induſtrious, eſpecially in making of Cloth of Cotton, equal almoſt to Silks for fineneſs: of Conſtitution ſtrong and healthy, but given to lying, drinking, and ſuch other Vices; with which they are ſo much in love; that though they are conceived to be apt of Learning, yet not without great difficulty brought to the Chriſtian Faith, nor willingly reclaimed from their ancient Barbariſm. Extreamly puniſhed with the Pox, an hereditary Diſeaſe amongſt them; the very Girls and untouched Virgins ſo infected with it, that neither Tobacco, Guaiacum, nor Sarſaparilla, all which this Country doth afford in a great abundance, is able to preſerve them from it.

Towns of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Carangues, a large and ſumptuous Palace of the ancient Kings; ſo named, becauſe ſituate in the Territory of the Carangues, a barbarous, bloody, and man-eating People; ſubdued by Guayanacapa, one of the mightieſt of the Kings of Peru; from whom revolting, and withal killing many of his Miniſters and Garriſon Souldiers, they were upon a ſecond Conqueſt brought to the banks of a great Lake, into which 20000 of them being killed, were thrown. The Lake from thenceforth called Taguarcocha, or the lake of blood. 2. Otavallu, another Palace of the Kings, but far inferiour to the other; yet giving name unto the Cantred in which it ſtandeth. 3. Quito, the chief of this Reſort, and once the Regal Seat of its proper Kings, (till made ſubject by Guayanacapa before mentioned) the Ruines of whoſe Palace are now remaining. By the Spaniards it is called S. Franciſco: built on the declivity of an Hill, not above 30 minutes from the Æquinoctial; well fortified, and as well furniſhed with Ammunition: inhabited by about 500 Spaniards, beſides the Natives. The Streets thereof ſtraight and broad; the Buildings decent: the principal of which, the Cathedral Church, the Courts of Juſtice, and two Convents of Dominican and Franciſcan Friers. The Town and Territory much annoyed by a Flaming Mountain, or Volcano; which in the year 1560 caſt out ſuch abundance of Cinders, that, if a Rain had not hapned beyond expectation, had made great ſpoil upon the place. 4. Tacunga, fifteen Leagues from Quito; and 5. Rhiobamba in the Territory of the Purvaſii, 40 Leagues from that: each of them honoured with another of thoſe ancient Palaces. 6. Thomebamba, neighboured by another of the King's Palaces, but more magnificent then the former; ſituate in the Country of the Canares, amongſt whom anciently the Women tilled the Land, and did all without doors, whilſt the Men ſtaid at home and ſpun, and attended Houſewifry. 7. Cuenca, 64 Leagues from Quito, on another Road, ſituate in a Country full of Gold, Silver, Braſs, Iron, and Veins of Sulphur. 8. Loxa, ſixteen Leagues Southward of Cuenca, ſituate in the fifth degree of Southern Latitude, and in a ſweet and pleaſant Valley called Guxibamba, between two fine Rivers. The Citizens well furniſhed with Horſe and Armour, but not otherwiſe wealthy. 9. Zamora, twenty Leagues on on the Eaſt of Loxa; and 10. Jaen, 35 from that: both ſituate in the Province of Quaichimayo, and both ſo called in reference to two Cities of thoſe names in Spain. Then on the Sea-coaſts there are, 11. Portus Vetus, (Puerto Veio, as the Spaniards call it) not far from the Sea-ſide, but in ſo ill an Air, that it is not very much frequented. Said to be one of the firſt Towns of this Country poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, who digged up hereabouts the bones of a monſtrous Giant, whoſe Cheek-teeth were four fingers broad. 12. Mantu, the Port-Town to Porto Veio, from whence the Trade is driven betwixt Panama and Peru; the Town it ſelf ſituate in a rich Vein of Emeralds. 13. Guayaquil, or S. Jago de Guayaquil, called alſo Gulata; ſeated at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, near the Influx of the River Guayaquil: a noted and much frequented ted Empory. 14. Caſtro, a Colony of Spaniards planted Anno 1568, in that part of this Country which they call Provincia de los Eſmeraldos, bordering on Popayana. 15. S. Michael, by the old Natives called Piura, the firſt Colony which the Spaniards planted in Peru, but otherwiſe of no eſtimation. 16. Payta, a ſmall Town, but neighboured by the ſafeſt and moſt frequented Haven of all this Country, as guarded from the Wind by the Cape of S. Helens on the North, and Panta Piurina on the South; two eminent Promontories. The Town burnt, Anno 1587. by Captain Cavendiſh; who at the ſame time alſo pillaged the Iſle of Puna, the moſt noted Iſland of this Tract, ſituate in the Bay of Tombez, as was ſaid before. Fruitful of all things neceſſary to the life of man; Parots for pleaſure, Sarſaparilla for his health. The people in preceding times ſo ſtout and warlike, that they maintained a long War with thoſe of Tombez, till in the end compoſed by the mediation of the King of Peru, to whom the King hereof (for a King it had) became an Homager, as ſince their embracing of the Goſpel, to the Kings of Spain.

2. LOS QUIXOS lieth on the Eaſt of Quito and the Weſt of El Dorado, (one of the Cantreds of Guiana, ſo called from its abundance of Gold:) little different in the nature of the Soil and People from the Province of Quito; but that this is ſomewhat the more barren, and leſs ſtored with thoſe rich Metals which the Spaniards come for. The People have alſo a diſtinct Tongue of their own, though they both underſtand and ſpeak the Peruvian Language.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Baeza, built in the year 1559. (which was within two years of the firſt Diſcovery of this Region) by Giles Ramirez de Avila; 18 Leagues from Quito towards the Eaſt: now the Seat of the Governour. 2. Archidona, 20 Leagues on the South-eaſt of Baeza. 3. Avila, on the North of Archidona; ſo called with reference to Ramirez de Avila before-mentioned, or to a Town of that name in Spain. 4. Sevilla del Oro, a Colony of Spaniards, as the others are.

On the Eaſt of this Province lieth the Cantred of Canelam, inhabited by a blockiſh and ignorant people, and deſtitute of all things neceſſary for the comforts of Life. Moſt mercileſly tormented, and caſt to Dogs to be devoured, by Pizarro, becauſe they could not ſhew him the readieſt way to ſome richer Country then their own; this being the moſt barren Region of that part of Peru which they call La Sierra, or the Hill-Countries. More Eaſtward yet, in that part which they call the Andes, lie the Cantreds of the Bracemori, commonly called Judan de Salinis, by the name of the firſt Diſcoverer of it. A Country not inferiour unto many for the quantity of Gold; ſuperiour to any for the pureneſs of it. Chief Towns of which, 1. Valladolid. 2. Loiola, by the Natives called Cumbinama. 3. S. Jago de las Montanas, (or S. James of the Mountains:) all Spaniſh Colonies; and all of the foundation of John de Salinis à Loiola, once the Pro-Prefect of the Province, by whom firſt throughly ſubdued to the Crown of Spain.

3. LIMA, called alſo LOS REYES, is bounded on the North with Quito; on the South, with Charcas, on the Weſt, with Mare del Zur; on the Eaſt, with Colloa and the Province of Cuſco. So named from Lima, or Los Reyes, the chief City of it. Extended from the ſixth to the ſixteenth Degree of Southern Latitude: or, meaſuring it from the Promontory del Aguja North, to Arequipa on the South, it reacheth to 250 Leagues. The Soil is of the ſame nature with that of Quito, but more diſtributed into Valleys, and better peopled.

Places of moſt obſervation, 1. Miraflores, in the Valley of Zanu, 110 Leagues on the North of Lima, and about 5 Leagues diſtant from the Sea; on which it hath an Haven belonging to it called Chencepen. The Town is well ſeated, and inhabited by a wealthy People, made ſuch by the abundance of Sugar-canes in the neighbouring Valley. 2. Truxillo in the rich and flouriſhing Valley of Chimo, on the Banks of a ſmall, but pleaſant River, and about two Leagues from the Sea, where it hath a large, but unſafe, Haven, which they call El Azzecife de Trigillo. The Town it ſelf ſituate in the ſeventh Degree and 30 minutes of Southern Latitude; well built, and rich, one of the principal of Peru; inhabited by 1500 Spaniards, beſides the Natives, and beautified with four Convents of ſeveral Orders. 3. La Parilla, in the Valley of the Santa, in which it ſtandeth, and by which it is furniſhed with a ſafe and convenient Road for Shipping: 20 Leagues Southwards of Truxillo, and neighboured by rich Mines of Silver, not long ſince diſcovered. 4. Arnedo, ſeated amongſt Vineyards in the Valley of Chancay, ten Leagues North of Lima. 5. Lima, by the Spaniards called Ciudad de los Reyes, or the City of Kings, ſituate in the Valley of Lima, the moſt fruitful part of all Peru, in the Latitude of twelve Degrees and an half. Built with much Art, for all the chief Streets anſwer to the Market-place; ſcarce any private Houſe which hath not Water conveyed into it from the River, environed round about with ſweet Fields, and moſt pleaſant Gardens. The Founder of it Franciſco Pizarro, who laid the firſt Stone on Twelf-day, (which the Spaniards call the Feaſt of Kings) whence it had the name, Anno 1553. A Town of greater Wealth then bigneſs, the Riches of Peru paſſing yearly through it; well Houſed, whether we reſpect the private or publick Edifices: the Cathedral Church made after the model of that of Sevil; the Convents of Religious Orders, the Courts of Juſtice, and the Palaces of the Archbiſhop and Vice-Roy, being all fair and goodly Buildings; the Cathedral Church ſo well endowed, that the Revenues of the Archbiſhop do amount yearly to 30000 Ducats, beſides what belongeth to the Canons and other Miniſters. 6. Callao, the Haven-town to Lima, from which two Leagues diſtant; a Town of 600 Families, for the moſt port Seamen: every Houſe having ſome Cellar in it for the ſtowage of Wine, Tobacco, Cables, Pitch, &c. for the uſe of Mariners; beſides thoſe publick Ware-houſes for the ſeveral Commodities which paſs from Lima hither, or from hence to Lima. Unfortified till the year 1579, when ſacked and ſpoiled of infinite Treaſures by Sir Francis Drake; ſince that time ſtrengthened by two Bulwarks and a Wall of Earth, with 30 pieces of Braſs Ordnance planted on the Works. 7. Pachacama, in the Valley ſo called, but four Leagues on the South of Lima: memorable for a Temple, in which Pizarro found above 900000 Ducats of Gold and Silver, not reckoning in thoſe infinite Treaſures which the Souldiers had laid hands on before his coming. 8. Guarco, a Colony of 300 Spaniards, ſixteen Leagues on the South of Pachacama; environed with the beſt Fields for Wheat in all Peru. 9. Valverde in a Valley of the ſame name, ſo called from the perpetual Greenneſs of it; beſt furniſhed with Vines, and thoſe affording the beſt Wines of all this Country. A large Town, conſiſting of 500 Spaniards, beſides Women ond Children, and other Inhabitants of the Country, well Traded, conſidering its diſtance from the Sea, (Puerto Quemado, the Haven to it, being ſix Leagues off) and beautified with a fair Church, an Hoſpital, three Frieries, and the handſomeſt Women of theſe parts. Diſtant from Lima 35 Leagues. 10. Caſtro Verreyna, in the Valley of Chocolococha, 60 Leagues from Lima, enriched with Mines of the pureſt Silver, digged out of a dry and barren Hill always covered with Snow; and ſtanding in ſo ſharp an Air, that the Spaniſh Women will not be delivered vered in it, but are carryed farther off to be brought to bed. From hence, as I conjecture, comes that vein of Tobacco, which our Good fellows celebrate by the name of the right Verreinas. 11. Arequipa, in the Valley of Quilca, 120 Leagues from Lima, a pleasing and delightful Town; which, situate at the foot of a flaming Mountain, (from which in the year 1600 it received much harm) enjoyeth a fresh and temperate Air, and a Soil always flourishing. The Silver of Plata and Potosi passeth through this Town, and is shipped for Panama, at an Haven belonging to it situate at the mouth of the River Chile, (upon which Arequipa standeth) but distant from the Town about 14 Leagues. 12. Caxamalca, more within the Land, but more towards the North, heretofore beautified with a Royal Palace of the Kings of Peru; memorable for the imprisonment and murther of Atabilaba, or Athualpa, the last King of this Countrey, vanquished not far off by Francisco Pizarro. 13. Cachapoyaro, in the Cantred so called; the best inhabited of any one Cantred of those parts, supposed to contain in it 20000 of the natural Inhabitants, which pay Duties to the King of Spain; and so esteemed for beautiful Women, that from hence the Kings were anciently furnished with their Concubines. 14. Leon de Guanaco, (the addition given it, from the Province in which it standeth) a Colony of Spaniards, rich, sweet and very pleasantly seated: beautified heretofore with a most magnificent Palace of the Kings; as now with some Religious Houses, a Colledge of Jesuites, and the dwellings of many of the Nobility. Many other midland Towns there are, but of no great note, and therefore purposely passed over.

4. CUSCO comprehendeth, as the chief, all those several Provinces of the Hill-Countreys, and the Andes which lie Southwards of the Province or Cantred of Guanaco. Blest with a sweet and temperate Air, not overscalded with the Sun, nor dulled with the distempers of the Evening mists: the Countrey full of fresh Rivers, notable good Pasturage, and great Herds of Cattel; well stored with Coco, which is gathered here in some abundance, and most excellent Venison.

Places of most repute in it, 1. Bombon, in the same Latitude with Lima, neighboured by a Lake called Laguna de Chincha cocha ten Leagues in compass, begirt about with pleasant Hills, and built upon with many rich and as pleasant Villages: out of which runneth the River Marannon, one of the greatest of these parts, supposed by the Inhabitants to end his course in Mare del Noordt. 2. Parcos, once beautified with a regal Palace, seated on the top of a little Hill, and begert about with craggy Mountains. 3. Guamanga, by the Spaniards called S. Juan de la Vittoria, situate under the 13. degree of Southern Latitude, on the Banks of a fresh and pleasing Stream; well built the Houses being all of Stone, and tiled or slated; three Churches, one of them a Cathedral, besides divers Convents. 4. Bicar, supposed to be built in the very Centre of Peru; where still remain the Ruines of a sumptuous Palace. 5. Guancabelica, a new Town, or but newly raised into esteem, supposed to contain at the present 2000 Spaniards, and double that number of the Natives. Increased, since the year 1566, from a beggarly Village to this greatness, by the Mines of Quick-silver then discovered: Mines of such Riches, that the King's part out of them amounteth yearly to above 40000 Pezoes, which is about 130000 l. of our English money. And yet this is not all the benefit he receives from them neither; that Mineral being found so necessary for the purifying and speedy extraction of their Gold, that it is not said without cause by the Chimists, that Quick-silver gives the matter to Gold, and Sulphur the form. 6. Cusco, in the Latitude of 13 Degrees and 30 minutes, about 130 Leagues on the East of Lima, and situate in a rugged and unequal Soil, begirt with Mountains, but on both sides of a pleasant and commodious River. Once the Seat-Royal of the Ingas or Peruvian Kings; who the more to beautifie this City, commanded every one of the Nobility to build here a palace for their continual abode. Still of most credit in this Countrey, both for beauty and bigness, and the multitudes of Inhabitants; here being thought to dwell 3000 Spaniads. and 10000 of the Natives, besides Women and Children. The Palace of the King, advanced on a lofty Mountain, was held to be a work of so great magnificence, built of such huge and massie Stones, that the Spaniards thought it to have been the work rather of Divels then of men. Now miserably defaced, most of the Stones being tumbled down to build private Houses in the City: some of the Churches raised also by the Ruines of it; and amongst them perhaps both the Bishop's Palace and Cathedral, whose annual Rents are estimated at 20000 Ducats. Yet did not this vast Building yield more luster to the City of Cusco, then a spacious Market-place, the Centre in which those Highways did meet together which the Ingas had caused to be made cross the Kingdom, both for length and bredth, with most incredible charge and pains for the use of their Subjects. Of which more hereafter. 7. S. Francisco de la Vittoria, at the foot of the Andes, a Spanish Colony, and about 20 Leagues from Cusco. 8. S. Juan del Oro, in the Valley of Caravayan, neighboured with rich Mines of the purest Gold, whence it had the name; a Colony of Spaniards also. Beyond the Andes lie some Countreys much famed for Wealth; the Discovery whereof hath often been attempted by the Spaniards, sometimes with loss, not seldom with some hopes of a better fortune, but hitherto without success.

5. COLLAO lieth on the South of those Provinces which we have comprehended under the name of Cusco; having on the West the rest of Lima: on the South, Los Charcos; on the East, those unknown Countreys beyond the Andes. Shut up on the East and West by two mountainous Ridges, which keeping in one main body till they come beyond the City of Cusco, do there divide themselves, and grow wider and wider, not to meet again.

The Countrey is plain and full of Rivers, well stored with rich Pastures, and those Pastures with great Herds of Cattel, barren of Corn, and not well furnished with Maize; in stead whereof they make their Bread of a Root called Popa, dried in the Sun and bruised to powder: of which the Spaniards make great gain at the Mines of Potosi. Yet notwithstanding this great want, it is thought to be the most populous part of all Peru: the soundness and temperature of the Air (which is here very much commended) as much conducing to the populosity of a Countrey, as the richness and plenties of the Soil. The People are also of a clearer and more solld Judgment then the rest of Peru; and so well skilled in the observation of the Course of the Moon, that the Spaniards at their coming hither, found the Year distinguished into Moneths, Weeks, Days, for each of which they had a proper and significant name. The famous Lake of Titicaca is within this Province.

Places of greatest note in it, 1. Chuquinga, naturally strong and almost inaccessible, environed either with unfordable Waters, or impassable Mountains; one Causey only leading to it, which for the space of three Leagues is said to be capable but of one at once. 2 Ayavire, ennobled with many fair and costly Buildings; especially with Monuments of the dead, which exceed the rest both in cost and number: for that cause by the Spaniards called Las Sepulturas. The Inhabitants of this Tract were much wasted by the Civil Wars which the Spaniards had among themselves. 3. Hatuncolla, the Metropolis or chief Town of this Province, as the name doth signifie: not far from which the famous River Caravaya, famous for the abundance of Gold in the Sands thereof, hath its first original. 4. Chiquita, a Colony of the Spaniards, on the banks of the Lake of Titicaca: a Town of so great Trade and Riches, that the Governour hereof is named immediately by the King; his place being estimated at the worth of 50000 Ducats yearly. 5. Tiaguanaco, at the mouth or out-let of that Lake; supposed to be the most ancient Burrough of Peru: now most remarkable for the Ruines of certain great and stupendious Buildings, some of the Stones whereof are said to be 30 foot long, fifteen foot in breadth, and six in thickness; not to be brought thither without the help of Iron Engines: (which this people had not till of late) but by some strange Arts. 6. De la Paz, or Nuestra Sennora de la Paz, by the Spaniards called also Pueblo Nuevo, and by the Natives Chiquiabo, according to the name of the Cantred in which it standeth, is situate at the foot of a little Mountain, by which defended from the injuries of Wind and Weather, but over-looking a large Plain of great fertility: well watered, and well wooded both for Fruits and Fewel. 7. Chilane, 8. Acos, 9. Pomata, 10 Cepita: and some others of as little note.

6. LOS CHARCAS on the North is bounded with Lima and Collao; on the South, with Chile; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the East, with some Countreys not well discovered, interposed betwixt it and the Province of Rio de la Plata. This is also called by the name of Plata, according to the name of the chief City of it.

The Countrey extendeth in lenght from North to South but 300 Leagues, but measuring by the Sea-shores, above 400, Not very rich in Corn or Cattel, though in many places furnished with good Pasture-grounds; but for the inexhaustible Mines of Gold and Silver, not to be equalled in Peru. Of these the principal are those of Porco and Potosi, but these last the chief: out of which comes that Mass of Silver which yieldeth the King so much profit yearly, as before was mentioned. The Mine 200 Fathoms deep, to which they do descend, by Ladders made of raw Hides, 800 steps: some of the Workmen see not the Sun for many moneths together; many fall down with their loads of Silver on their backs, pulling others after them; and many die in the Works for want of Air. For the refineing of this Silver there are 52 Engines, or Silver Mills, upon a River near unto it; 22 more in the Valley of Tarapia not far off, besides many which they turn with Horses. The Poet's words never more literally verified then in these deep Mines, where speaking of the Iron Age, he describes it thus:

Nec tantum segetes alimentaque debita dives
Poscebatur humus, sedi tum est in viscera terræ;
Quasque recondiderat Stygiisque admoverat Umbris,
Effodiuntur opes, irritamenta malorum.

Which I find thus rendred by George Sandys:

Nor with rich Earth s just nourishments content,
For Treasures they her secret Entrails rent.
That powerful evil, which all Power invades,
By her well hid and wrapt in Stygian Shades.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Plata, so called from the rich Mines of Silver found in Mount Porco near adjoyning; well emptied by the ancient Ingas, but searched into again by Francisco Pizarro, who (it is thought) might have raised hence 200000 Ducats of yearly Income, if hopes of greater at Potosi had not took him off. The Town is commodiously seated in a fruitful Soil, in the 19. degree of Latitude, and 180 Leagues distant from the City of Cusco; honoured with the seat of the Governour and the Courts of Justice, and beautified (besides many Religious Houses) with a fair Cathedral, the See of the best endowed Bishoprick in all Peru; his Revenews being estimated at 8000 Ducats of yearly Rents. By the Natives it is called Chuquisaca. 2. Oropesa, twenty Leagues from Plata, built by Don Francis de Toledo, when Viceroy here, in the rich and pleasant Valley called Cochabamba, Anno 1565. 3. Potosi, neighboured by those wealthy Mines already mentioned. Discovered first in the year 1545, before which time this Town was but a sorry Village; now the best peopled and frequented in all the Province: said to be constantly inhabited by four or five thousand Spaniards, many more of the Natives: not so few as 30000 Workmen appertaining to it, but lodged in the Villages adjoyning: besides the infinite resort of Merchants in pursuit of profit, and idle Gallants, who come hither for their lusts and pleasures. Situate in the 21. Degree and 40 Minutes of Southern Latitude, in a cold and very barren Soil; yet plentifully furnished with all Commodities both for Necessity and Delight. For as the Money is, so is the Market always. 4. Misque, a small Town, but one which furnisheth Potosi with good plenty of Wine: as 5. Lagunilla, and 6. Tarixa, do with Wheat, Maize, Sugar, and choice of Fruits. 7. Arica, the most noted Haven of this Countrey, in the Latitude of 19 Degrees and 80 Leagues or thereabouts from the Mines of Potosi; the wealth whereof, brought hither on the backs of their Sheep, is here shipped for Lima. The truth hereof was experienced by Sir Fr. Drake, who seized here on three Spanish Ships, in one of which was 57 Bars of Silver, each of them twenty pound weight apiece. Few other Towns, if any, upon all this Coast, which is altogether Rocky, barren, and unfit for Habitation; accordingly but little peopled, or not at all.

Come we now to the Peruvian Story, which we shall sum up with as much brevity as we can. The People are generally governed by the chief of their Tribes, as in all Countreys else, where neither the Arms of Foreiners nor the Ambition of some few of the Natives had diminished any thing of those natural Rights. Not subject to any one supreme till these later times; the Ingas or Monarchs of Peru growing unto their greatness but a little before their fall. Their Territory at the first so small, that it was not above five or six Leagues in compass, situate in that part of the Countrey where the City of Cusco now standeth. Opposed at their first Encroachments by the Cannares, a valiant Nation, and likely to have had the better, if the Ingas had not helped themselves by a piece of Wit; giving it out, that their Family had not only been the Seminary from which Mankind came, but the Authors of that Religion also which was then in use; particularly that the whole World had been destroyed by a Floud, except onely seven, (so far they hit upon the Truth) which seven had hid themselves in a Cave, called Paticambo, where having lived in safety till the fury of the Waters had been asswaged, they came abroad at last and re-peopled the Countrey; that Viracocha, the Creatour and great God of Nature, had appeared to one of them, and taught him how and with what Rites he would be worshiped, which Rites were afterwards received over all Peru; and finally, that the same Viracocha had appeared lately to the chief of their Family, assuring him that he would aid him with invisible Forces against all their Enemies. This Tale soon gained belief amongst those Barbarians, and that belief drew many to take part with the Ingas, by that Aid victorious. This is supposed to have hapned 400 years before the Spaniards put an an end to this flouriſhing Kingdom, which was in the year 1533. Within which time they had brought all this Countrey which we now call Peru, and many of the adjoining Provinces, under their Dominion. Their Kings were called Ingas, as the Ægyptians Pharaoh, the Tartars Cham; the word Inga ſignifiing an Emperour, as Capa Ingas (by which they ſometimes called them) the only Emperours. Much reverenced by their Subjects, and ſo faithfully ſerved, that never any of their Subjects were found guilty of Treaſon: Nor wanted they good Arts whereby to indear their Subjects, and keep them out of leiſure to foment new Factions. The way of indearment, by the fair and ſatisfactory diſtribution of the Spoils gotten in the Wars, whether Lands or Goods; all which they divided into three parts: alloting the firſt unto the ſervice of the Gods; the ſecond, for the maintenance of the King, his Court, and Nobles; the third, to the relief of the common people. A Diſtribution far more equal than that of Lycurgus, or the Lex Agraria of the Romans. But when there was no cauſe of Wars, they kept the People buſied in the works of Magnificence; as building Palaces in every one of the conquered Provinces, which ſerved not only as Forts to aſſure the Conqueſt, but were employed as Store-houſes to lay up Proviſions, diſtributed amongſt the people in times of dearth. But that which was the work as of greater trouble, ſo of chiefeſt uſe, was the Croſs-ways they made over all the Countrey, the one upon the Mountains, and the other on the Plains, extending 500 Leagues in length: a work to be preferred before any both of Rome and Ægypt. For they were forced to raiſe the ground in many places to the height of the Mountains, and lay the Mountains level with the flatteſt Plains; to cut through ſome Rocks, and underprop others that were ruinous; to make even ſuch ways as were uneaſie, and ſupport the Precipices; and in the Plains to vanquiſh ſo many difficulties as the uncertain foundation of a Sandy Countrey muſt needs carry with it. Kept to theſe Tasks, the people had no leiſure to think of Practices; yet well content to undergo them, in regard they ſaw it tended to the publick benefit. And for the Caciques, (ſo they call the Nobility) the Inga did not only command them to reſide in Cuſco, to be aſſured of their perſons; but cauſed them to ſend their Children to be brought up there, that they might ſerve as Hoſtages for the Fathers Loyalty. They ordered alſo, that all ſuch as repaired to Cuſco, the Imperial City, ſhould be attired according to his own Countrey faſhion; ſo to prevent thoſe Leagues and Aſſociations which otherwiſe, without any note or obſervation, might be made amongſt them. Many ſuch Politick Inſtitutions were by them deviſed, which had little of the Barbarous in them; and clearly ſhewed that there were other Nations which had Eyes in their Heads beſides thoſe of China. What elſe concerns the Story of them, offereth it ſelf in the following Catalogue of

The Kings of PERU.

1. Mango-Capac, deſcended of the chief of the firſt ſeven Families, the firſt who laid the foundation of this puiſſant Monarchy: he ſubdued the Cannares, and built the City of Cuſco.

2. Sinchi-Rocha, eldeſt Son of Mango, ſubdued a great part of Collao, as far as Chancara,

3. Lonque-Yupanqui, the Son of Sinchi, conquered Chiquito, Ayavire, the Canus, and the Inhabitants about Titicaca: the firſt Advancer of the Service of Viracocha, from whom he did pretend to have many Viſits.

4. Mayta-Capac, the Son of Yupanqui, ſubdued all the reſt of Collao, the Provinces of Chuquiapa, and a great part of the Charcos.

5. Capac-Yupanqui, or Yupanqui II. the Son of Mayta, enlarged his Kingdom Weſtward unto Mare del Zur.

6. Rocha II. or Ynca-Rocha, eldeſt Son of Yupanqui the ſecond, enlarged his Kingdom towards the North, by the Conqueſt of the great Province of Antahuyallam, and many others.

7. Jahuar-Huacac, Son of Rocha the ſecond, added to his Eſtates (by the Valour of his Brother Mayta) all the Southern parts from Arequipa to Tacaman. Depoſed by the practice of his Son.

8. Viracocha, the Son of Huacac, having ſetled and enlarged his Empire, raiſed many great and ſtately Works, and amongſt others many Aquæducts of great uſe, but charge. For fear of him, Hancohuala, King of the Chuncas, with many thouſands of his People, forſook their Countrey.

9. Pachacutec-Ynca, Son of Viracocha, improved his Kingdom by the Conqueſt of many Provinces lying towards the Andes and South-ſea; with that of Caxamalca Northwards.

10. Yupanqui III. or Ynca-Yupanchi, Son of Pachacutec, ſubdued the Conches and Moxes, with ſome part of Chile.

11. Yupanqui IV. or Tapac Ynca Yupanchi, Son of Yupanqui the third, extended his Dominions as far as Quito

12. Huayna-Capac, or Guaynacapac, Son of Yupanqui the fourth, the moſt mighty Monarch of Peru, conquered the whole Province of Quito; and is ſuppoſed to be the Founder of thoſe two great Roads ſpoken of before.

13. Huaſcar, or Guaſchar-Ynca, the eldeſt Son of Guaynacapac, after a Reign of five years depoſed and ſlain by his Brother.

14. Atbualpa, or Atubaliba, the third Son of Guaynacapa, by the Daughter and Heir of the King of Quito; into which Kingdom he ſucceeded by the Will of his Father. Commanded by his Brother to doe Homage for the Kingdom of Quito, he came upon him with ſuch Power, that he overcame him, and ſo gained the Kingdom. Vanquiſhed afterwards by Pizarro at the battel of Caxamalca, he was taken Priſoner. And though he gave him ranſom for his Life and Liberty an Houſe piled up on all ſides with Gold and Silver, valued (as ſome ſay) at ten Millions of Crowns; yet they perfidiouſly ſlew him.

15. Mango-Capac II. the ſecond Son of Guaynacapac, ſubſtituted by Pizarro in his Brother's Throne, after many viciſſitudes of Fortune, was at laſt ſlain in the City of Cuſco; and ſo the Kingdom of the Ingas began and ended in a Prince of the ſame name, as it hapened formerly to ſome other Eſtates.

Let us next look upon the birth and fortune of that Pizarro, who ſubdued this moſt potent and flouriſhing Kingdom, and made it a Member of the Spaniſh Empire. And we ſhall find that he was born at Truſiglio, a Village of Navar; and by the poor Whore his Mother laid in the Church-porch, and ſo left to God's Providence: by whoſe direction (there being none found that would give him the Breaſt) he was nouriſhed for certain days by ſucking a Sow. At laſt one Gonſales, a Souldier, acknowledged him for his Son, put him to Nurſe, and, when he was ſomewhat grown, ſet him to keep his Swine: ſome of which being ſtrayed, the Boy durſt not for fear return home, but betook himſelf to his heels, ran unto Sevil, and there ſhipped himſelf for America; where he attended Alphonſo de Oieda in the diſcovery of the Countreys beyond the Gulf of Uraba; Balboa in his Voyage to the South-ſea; and Pedro de Avila in the Conqueſt of Panama, nima. Grown rich by these Adventures, he associated himself with Diego de Almagro, and Fernando Loques a rich Priest; who betwixt them raised 220 Souldiers, and in the year 1525 went to seek their Fortunes on those Southern Seas which Balboa had before discovered. After divers Repulses at his landing, and some hardship which he had endured, Pizarro at the length took some of the Inhabitants of Peru, of whom he learnt the Wealth of the Countrey; and returning thereupon to Spain, obtained the King's Commission for the Conquest of it; excluding his Companions out of the Patent, but taking in Almagro of his own accord. Thus furnished and landed in Peru again, at such time as the Wars grew hot betwixt the two Brethren for the Kingdom, and taking part with the Faction of Guascar, marched against Atuhaliba; whom he met with in the plains of Caxamalca, but rather prepared for a Parley, then to fight a Battel. Pizarro taking this Advantage, picked a Quarrel with him, and suddenly charged upon him with his Horse and Ordnance, slaying his Guard without resistence; and coming near the King's Person, (who was then carryed on mens Shoulders) pulled him down by the Cloaths, and took him Prisoner. With him they took as much Gold as amounted to 80000 Castellans, and as much Silver as amounted to 7000 Marks, (every Mark weighing eight ounces) of his Houshold Plate; and in the spoil of Caxamalca, almost infinite Riches. This, with the King's Ransom, came to so great a sum, that besides the fifth part which Pizarro, sent to the Emperour, and that which Pizarro and his Brethren kept unto themselves, every Footman had 7200 Ducats, and every Horseman twice as much, for their part of the Spoil; besides what they had gotten in the way of plunder. How they dealt afterwards with the miserable King, their prisoner, hath been shewn already. Upon which Act though they put many fair pretences, Yet God declared that he was not pleased with their proceedings; few of the greatest Undertakers going to the Grave in peace. For though Pizarro, in reward of so great a Service, was made the first Vice-Roy of Peru, and created Marques of Anatilla: yet having put to death Almagro, his chief Companion, who had raised a strong Faction in that State, he was after slain at Lima by some of that Faction, in revenge of the death of their Commander. The like unfortunate end befel all the rest: his Brother John slain by the Peruvians: Martin in Lima with himself; Ferdinando secretly made away in Prison; and finally, Gonsales the fourth Brother, with the Son of Almagro, severally executed for their Treasons and Insurrections, which they had acted in this Countrey against their King. So little Joy doth Wealth ill gotten bring along with it to the owners thereof. And here I am to leave Pizarro; whose strange both fortunes and misfortunes in the course of his Life are to be parrallel'd only with the like of Sinan, a great Bassa in the Court of Selimus the first; who being born of base Parentage, as he (being a Child) was sleeping in the Shade, had his Genitals bitten off by a Sow. The Turkish Officers which usually provided young Boys for the service of the Grand Seigniour, being in Epirus, (for that was Sinan's Countrey) and hearing of this so extraordinary an Eunuch, took him among others along with them to the Court: where under Mahomet the Great, Bajazet the second, and his Son Selimus, he so exceedingly thrived, that he was made the chief Bassa of the Court; and so well deserved it, that he was accounted Selimus's right hand; and was indeed the man to whose Valour especially the Turks owe their Kingdom of Ægypt: in which Kingdom then not fully settled he was also slain.

But to return to Peru. No question but the Forces and Revenues of it were exceeding great. For, though we find no particular musters which they made of their men, or what great Armies they drew with them into the Field; yet by their great Successes, and many Victories, we may conclude them to be Masters of great Bands of men, and skilful in the Arts of Conduct. Nor can we otherwise conjecture at the greatness of their yearly Income, but by the greatness of their Treasure; so infinite and almost incredible, that all the Vessels of the King's House, his Table and Kitchin, were of Gold and Silver: Statues of Giants in his Wardrope, together with the resemblances in proportion and bigness of all the Beasts, Birds, Trees, Plants and Fishes, which were found in that Kingdom, of the purest Gold: Ropes, Budgets, Troughs, Chests, all of Gold or Silver: Billets of Gold piled up together, as if they had been Billets of Wood cut out for the fire; three Houses full of pieces of Gold, and five full of Silver. All which, besides infinite other Treasures, fell into the hands of a few poor Spaniards: who grew so wanton hereupon, that they would give 1500 Crowns for an Horse, 60 Crowns for a small Vessel of Wine, and 40 for a pair of Shoes; consuming all upon their lusts, and sacrificing their Gods of Gold to their God the Belly.

OF CHILE.

CHILE is bounded on the North with the Desart of Alacama, 90 Leagues in length, interposed betwixt it and Peru; on the West, with Mar del Zur; on the South, with the Streights of Magellan; and on the East, as far as to Rio de la Plata, with the main Atlantick; the Countreys lying on the East betwixt it and Paraguay not well discovered.

This Countrey lieth wholy beyond the Tropick of Capricorn, by consequence in the temperate Zone, extended in length, from the borders of Peru to the mouth of the Streights, 500 Leagues; but the breadth variable and uncertain. Called Chile, from the word Chil, (which in more Tongues then ours doth signifie as much as Cold) from the extream coldness of the Air and Clime; so vehement here in our Summer Solstice, that many times both the Horses and the Riders are frozen to death, and hardned like a piece of Marble.

The Soil hereof in the midland parts Mountainous and unfruitful; towards the Seaside level, fertile, and watered tered with divers Rivers flowing from the Mountains: productive of Maize, Wheat, and most excellent Pasturage; plenty of Gold and Silver, abundance of Honey, store of Cattel and Wine enough for the use of the People; the Vines brought hither out of Spain prospering here exceedingly, as do also all the Fruits and Plants, which are sent from thence into this Countrey. The People very tall and warlike, some of them of a Gigantick Stature, affirmed (but I believe it not) to be eleven foot high; yet well conditioned with this greatness, where not much provoked. Their Garments of the Skins of Beasts, their Arms Bow and Arrows: white of Complexion, but as hirsute and shaggy-haired as the rest of the Savages.

Rivers of note there are not any but what will fall within the view of its several Provinces. Divided commonly into 1. Chile specially so called, and 2. Magellanica.

1. CHILE specially so called is bounded on the North with the Desart of Atacama; on the South, with Magellanica; on the West, with Mare del Zur; and on the East, with some unknown Countreys, lying betwixt it and Paraguay, or the province of Rio de la Plata: not above 20 Leagues in breadth, but in length 300. The reason of the name, together with the nature of the Soil and People, we have seen before.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1. Rio de Copayapo, giving name unto a Promontory near the Influx of it, in the Northern borders of this Province. 2. Rio de Coquimbo, 3. La Ligua, 4. Topocalma, 5. Cacapool, 6. Cauten: all falling into Mare del Zur. And besides these, a nameless, but more famous, River, which in the day-time runneth with a violent Current, and in the night hath no Water at all. The reason of it is, because this River, having no constant Fountain, is both begun and continued by the Snow falling from the Mountains, which in the heat of the day melted into Water is precipitately carryed into the Sea: but congealed in the coldness of the night yields no Water at all, whereby the Chanel becometh empty.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Copayapo, giving name to a fertile Valley in the most Northern Tract hereof; and neighboured by a small, but commodious, Haven. 2. Serena, a Colony of the Spaniards, on the Sea-side; not far from the Influx of Rio de Coquimbo, on whose banks it is seated, there built by Baldivia, the Conquerour and first Governour of this Province, Anno 1544. The Territory round about it is rich in Mines of Gold: the Town it self of 200 Houses, but so well peopled, that at the landing of some of the English under Captain Drake, they presently sent out 300 Horse and 200 Foot to compell them back unto their Ships, which they did accordingly. 3. S. Jago, the chief of all this Province, (though not above 80 Houses in it) because the Residence of the Governour and the Courts of Justice; adorned with a Cathedral Church, and some Convents of Dominican and Franciscan Friers; situate in the 34. Degree of Southern Latitude on the Banks of the River Topacalma, at the mouth whereof is the Haven of Val Paraiso, the best and most noted of this Countrey; out of which the English under Drake took a Spanish Ship, and therein 25000 Pezoes of the purest Gold, besides other Commodities. 4. Conception, 70 Leagues on the South of S. Jago, situate on the Shores of a large and capacious Bay, (by the Natives called Penco) by it and the Mountains on all sides so strongly fenced, that the Governour, when distressed by the Savages, (as sometimes they are) retireth hither for safety. Well fortified in such places as are accessible, and garrisoned with 500 Souldiers, besides the Townsmen. Opposite hereunto lieth the Isle of S. Mary, so near the Shore, that it seems to have been rent from it by the force of the Sea: fruitful and very well provided of Swine and Poultrey; but the people so in fear of the Spaniards dwelling in Conception, that they dare not kill or eat either, but by leave from them. 5. Auraccoa, (so I think they call it) a strong Fortress in the Countrey of the Auracans, the most potent Nation of these parts; who, weary of the Spanish Yoke, revolted against Baldivia, overcame him in a set fight, and at last killed him: this piece being thereupon forsaken, and of no more use. 6. De los Confines, built by Baldivia in the borders of the Countrey of those Auracans, to serve for a defence to the Mines of Ongol near adjoyning: distant from the Sea-shores about 18 Leagues, enlarged by Garcias de Mendoza, and by him called Villa Nueva de los Infantes. 7. Imperiale, in the 38. Degree and 40 Minutes of Southern Latitude, situate on the banks of the River Cauten; an Episcopal See, and the best Fortress of the Spaniards in all this Province. Fortified and made a Colony of Spaniards in the year 1551, and by Baldivia called Al Imperiale, because they found an Eagle with two heads made in Wood on the doors of their Houses; a Monument perhaps of some Germans who had here been shipwreckt. A Town of so great Wealth and Power, before known to the Spaniards, that in a War betwixt them and the Auracans, spoken of before, they are said to have brought into the Field 300000 men. 8. Villa Rica, another Colony of Spaniards, 16 Leagues on the South-East of Imperiale, and 25 Leagues from the Shores of Mare del Zur. 9. Baldivia, the most noted Town of all these parts, situate in the Valley of Guadallanguen, in the Latitude of 40 Degrees, or thereabouts: adorned with a safe and capacious Haven, and neighboured by Mines of Gold of such infinite Riches, that Baldivia (by whom built for defence of those Mines) received thence daily by the labour of each single Workman 25000 Crowns a man, and sometimes more. Sacked by the Savages Anno 1599; since repaired by the Spaniards. 10. Osorno, on the Banks of the Bay of Chilve, (or Ancud, as the Savages call it;) situate in a barren Soil, but well stored with Gold, and thought to be more populous then Baldivia it self. 11. Castro, the most Southern Town of all this Province, in the Latitude of 44: built in a large and fruitful Island of the Bay of Ancud, said to be 50 Leagues in length, but the breadth unequal: in some parts nine, in others not above two Leagues. 12 S. Juan de la Frontera, on the farther side of the Andes towards Paraguay, or Rio de la Plata.

To this Province there belong also certain Islands lying on the Coasts and shores hereof, 1. S. Maries, spoken of before. 2. Mocha, upon the South of that, five Leagues from the Continent, fruitful of Grain, and very good Pasturage, sufficient to maintain the Inhabitants of it, who being the descendents of those Americans who fled hither to avoid the tyranny of the Spaniards, hitherto have made good their Liberty against that Nation: of which they are so jealous, that they would not suffer the English under Drake and Cavendish to land amongst them, for fear they had been Spaniards, or some Friends of theirs. 3. Castro, which we have spoken of already.

2. MAGELLANICA is bounded on the North with Chile, and the Province of Rio de la Plata: on the South, with Fretum Magellanicum, or the Streights of Magellan, on the West, with Mare del Zur: on the East, with Mare del Noordt, or the main Atlantick. So called from Magellanus, by whom first discovered: of whom we shall speak more hereafter.

It is in length from the borders of Chile to the mouth of the Streights 300 Leagues in breadth: from one Sea to the other, where broadest, above 400 Leagues, in some some but 90 only, and in others less, according as it draweth towards the point of the Pyramis. The Inland parts of the Countrey not yet discovered: those on the Sea side observed to be rocky and unfruitful, exposed for the most part of the year to such bitter Colds, that the Snow lyeth always on the Mountains. The People said to be tall of Stature, and some of them of a Gigantick bigness, reported to be ten or eleven foot high: and by the Spaniards for that reason are called Patagous. Both great and less sufficiently rude and barbarous, quite naked, and unfurnished of any Houses, notwithstanding the rigour of the Cold.

No Houses doth imply no Towns; and therefore we must look for none in so rude a Countrey, as hath not hitherto conversed with more civil Nations. So that the most that we can doe is to coast the Shores, and see what names of Ports or Promontories we can find therein. And first upon the Sea-coasts towards Mare del Zur they place (beginning at the North, and so descending) 1. the Promontory called Cabo de las Islas. 2. The port or Haven of S. Stephen. 3. The Valley of Nuestra Sennora, or our Ladies Valley. 4. The Promontory called Punta Delgado. 5. Porto de los Reyes. 6. Anchon Sinsalida, on the banks of a semi-circular Bay, the receptacle of many Rivers, and not a few Islands. 7. Cabo de la Victoria, or the Cape of Victory, situate betwixt that Bay and the mouth of the Streights; so called from the name of the Ship, in which some of Magellan's Souldiers did first compass the World. For Ferdinand Magellan, a noble Portugal, and well skilled in Navigation, at the persuasion or command of Charles the fifth, to whom (upon some discontents received in the Court of Emanuel King of Portugal) he had made offer of his Service, undertook the finding out (if possible) a shorter cut to the Molucca's then discovered formerly. In the year 1520 he began his Voiage, his Fleet consisting but of five Ships, whereof that called S. Anthonio forsook him in some great displeasure, and returned to Spain; another of them being lost not long after in a storm. Keeping along the Coast to the South of Rio de la Plata, about the end of October he fell upon the Cape of Virgins, at the very entrance of this Streight, which on the doubling of this Cape he was fallen upon; and by the end of November (not before) was fully clear of these Narrow Seas, since called Fretum Magellanicum, and entered into Mare del Zur. Having refreshed himself in a little Island called Juvaganava, he passed unto that also, but not far from the Philippines: the Prince whereof, called Hamabar, he persuaded to become a Christian, baptizing him by the name of Charles: and finally engaging in a Quarrel of his against the King of Mautan, or Mattan, an adjoyning Island, he was there unfortunately slain, Anno 1521. After his death Serran chief Pilot of the Navy, together with 70 of his men, being treacherously slain by Hamabar, the other three Ships departed with no more then 115 men aboard them; which put them to a necessity of burning one of their Ships, that they might have men enough to make good the others. With these two Ships they came at last to the Molucca's, where being kindly entertained by the King of Tidore, they divided themselves: that called the Trinity, under Captain Spinosa, designed for Panama in New Spain, but from thence driven back by contrary Winds to the Isle of Tidore, was seized on and spoiled by Anthonio Brito, a Captain commanding there a small Navy of the King of Portugal. The other Ship, which by a happy Omen was called Victoria, having in her but 47 Spaniards, under the command of Sebastian del Cano, after a very long and dangerous Voiage, wherein it was thought that he had sailed at the least 14000 Leagues, returned to Spain in safety, and brought the welcom news of their good Success.

We use to say that Sir Francis Drake was the first that sailed round about the World; which may be true in a qualified sense; viz. that he was the first Captain or man of note that atchieved this Enterprize, Magellanus perishing in the midst of it: and therefore he is reported to have given for his Device a Globe, with this Motto, Tu primus circumdedisti me. This Navigation was begun Anno 1577, and in two years and a half with great vicissitude of fortune finished. Concerning which his famous Voiage, a Poet then living directed to him this Epigram:

Drake, peregrati novit quem terminus Orbis,
Quemque simul mundi vidit uterque Polus;
Si taceant homines, facient te Sydera notum.
Sol nescit comitis non memor esse sui.
Drake, whom th'encompass'd Earth so fully knew,
And whom at once both Poles of Heaven did view;
Should men forget thee Sol could not forbear
To Chronicle his fellow Traveller.

This Fretum Magellanicum, these Magellan Streights, are in the 52. degree; and are by Mr. John Davis, who professeth to know every Creek in them, thus described. "For 14 Leagues within the Cape of S. Mary lieth the first "Streight, where it ebbeth and floweth with a violent "swiftness: the Streight not being fully half a mile broad, "and the first fall into it very dangerous and doubtful. "Three Leagues this Streight continueth, when it open-"eth into a Sea eight miles long, and as much broad; be-"yond which lieth the second Streight, right West-"South-West from the first, a perillous and unpleasant "passage, three Leagues long, and a mile in breadth. "This Streight openeth it self into another Sea, which "is extended even to the Cape of Victory; where is the "Streight properly called the Streight of Magellan; a "place of that nature, that which way soever a man bend "his course, he shall be sure to have the Wind against "him. The length hereof is 40 Leagues; the breadth "in some places two Leagues over, in others not fully half "a mile. The Chanel in depth 200 Fathoms, so no hope "of Anchorage; the course of the Water full of turnings "and changings, withal so violent, that when a Ship is "once entred, there is no returning. On both sides of it "are high Mountains continually covered with Snow, "from which proceed those Counter-winds which beat "with equal fury on all parts thereof. A place assuredly "not pleasing to view, and very hazardous to pass. So far, and to this purpose Mr. Davis.

But to proceed: the way thus opened was travelled not long after, Anno 1525, by Garcias de Loyasa; next in the year 1534, by Simon de Alcazavo; and four years after by three Ships of the Bishop of Placenza in Spain: but none of them had the hap or courage to adventure through till undertaken and performed by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1577. after which it grew more familiar amongst the Seamen. Howsoever, we are so much Debtors to the Attempts of others, as that we owe to them the most part of the names of those Bays and Promontories which they discovered in the search: though many of them be since new named by the English and Hollanders. Those of most note, proceeding from Cabo de la Victoria, are 1. Cabo de Quade, 2. Cape Gallant, 3. Cordes Bay, 4. Cape Froward, being the very point or Conus of this great Pyramis. 5. Porto Famine, 6. A little Isle called Elizabeths Island, and at the Exit of the Streight in Mare del Noords, the Cape of Virgins. Then bending Northward toward the great River of Plata, we find upon the main Ocean, 1. Rio de la Cruz, neighboured by a Promontory called Cabo de las Barreras, where Magellan staid all September and the greatest part of October, in expectation of an opportunity to discover farther. 2. The Bay of S. Julian, out out of which he ſet ſail for this Adventure about the latter end of Auguſt, leaving there two of his Companions condemned of Mutiny. 3. The Port of Deſire. 4. A large Promontory, called the Cape of S. George. 5. The out-lets of a fair River, named Rio de los Camerones. 6. A goodly Haven, entituled Puerto de los Leones. 7. The Cape called Punta de terra plana. 8. The Bay of Amegada, 9. The Promontory called the Cape of S. Andrews. And 10. the River of S. Anne, beyond which lieth the Province of the River of Plata. This is the moſt that I can ſay touching Magellanica, as to the Havens, Rivers, Points and Promontories; and this is nothing (as we ſee) but a Nomenclator, It muſt be better peopled and more diſcovered before it can afford Diſcourſe of more variety. All we can add is, that the paſſage back again from Mare del Zur to the Atlantick hath not been found ſo ſafe and eaſie, as from the main Atlantick unto Mare del Zur. Attempted firſt by Ladrilliro a Spaniard, at the command of Garcia de Mendoza, Governour of Chile, and attempted only: performed not long after the Voiage of Sir Francis Drake by D. Pedro Sarmiento, employed therein by Francis de Toledo, Viceroy of Peru, with much difficulty, and no leſs danger; ſo much, that few have ſince endeavoured to return that way.

As for the the Fortunes and Affairs of the Province of Chile, to which we have made this an Appendix, we are to underſtand that it was firſt diſcovered by Almagro de Alvarado, one of Pizarro's chief Friends and Aſſociates. But he having other deſigns in his head about Peru, which he intended for himſelf, and to out Pizarro, did diſcover it only; the Conqueſt of it being reſerved for Baldivia, whom Pizarro, on the ſettling of his Affairs by the death of Almagro, had employed in that action. He, going Souldier-like to work, not only did ſubdue the People; but, as he gained ground, built ſome Fortreſs, or planted Colonies of Spaniards, in convenient places. This done, about the year 1544, his ill luck was to meet with a more ſtubborn and untractable People then either Cortez or Pizarro had done before him; who, quickly weary of the Yoke, beſieged one of his Forts, encountred Baldivia himſelf coming with too ſmall a power to relieve his People. vanquiſhed and ſlew him in the Field. Some add, that they poured Gold into his Throat; (as the Parthians are reported to have done to Craſſus) bidding him ſatiate himſelf with that which he ſo much thirſted after. After this blow given, in the year 1551. The Savages recovered the rich Valleys of Auranco, Tucapel, and Purene; which they keep from them till this day. The Towns of Los Confines and Villa Rica, both on the boiders of thoſe Valleys, were deſerted alſo. Nor ſtaid they there, though they took time to breath a little. For in the year 1599, (having provided themſelves of 200 Corſlets and ſeventy Muskets) they break out again, ſurpriſed and ſacked the Town of Baldivia, forced Imperiale, after a whole year's Siege, to ſurrender without any Conditions, and in the year 1604 took Oſorno by Famine. Of thirteen Cities which the Spaniards had poſſeſſed amongſt them they had taken nine; ſome of them ſince recovered, but the moſt demoliſhed. As ill it thrived with them in Magellanica, where Pedro de Sarmiento undertook the planting of two Colonies to command thoſe Streights, Anno 1584. The one he ſetled near the mouth of the Streight, which he called by the name of Nombre de Jeſus, and left therein 150 of his men: the other he intended on the narroweſt place of the Streight, to be called Cividad del Rey Philip, which he reſolved to fortifie and plant with Ordnance. But Winder coming on, he left there others of his men, promiſing to relieve them ſhortly with all things neceſſary. But ſuch was his unhappy fate, that after many Shipwrecks and diſappointments which befel unto him in the purſuit of his Deſign, he was at laſt taken by the Engliſh, under the command of Sir Walter Raleigh, who was there in perſon; and his two Colonies, for want of timely Succours, either ſtarved at home, or eaten by the Savages, as they ranged the Countrey.

PARAGUAY.

PARAGUAY is bounded on the South with Magellanica; on the Eaſt, with the main Atlantick; on the North, with Braſil; on the Weſt, with ſome unkown Countreys betwixt it and Chile. So called from the River Paraguay (one of the greateſt of the World) which runneth through it: the River and the Province both by the Spaniards called Rio de la Plata, from the great ſtore of Silver they expected from it.

The Countrey (for ſo much as hath been diſcovered) is ſaid to be of a fruitful Soil, capable of Wheat and other of the Fruits of Europe, which thrive here exceedinly: nor do the Cattel encreaſe leſs which were brought from Spain, both Kine and Horſes multiplying in a wonderful manner. Well ſtored with Sugar-Canes, and not unfurniſhed of Mines both of Braſs and Iron, ſome Veins of Gold and Silver, and great plenty of Amethiſts. Of Stags great plenty, and of Monkies almoſt infinite numbers; not to ſay any thing of Lions, Tigers and ſuch hurtful Creatures, of which a few would be thought too many. Of the People there is nothing ſaid but what hath been obſerved of the other Savages.

Chief Rivers of it, 1. De la Plata, whoſe courſe we have deſcribed already. 2. Rio de Buenos Ayres, ſo called from the chief Town, by which it runneth. 3 Zarcarana, which riſeth in the Countrey of the Diaguitas, and falling into a Lake at the end of his courſe, doth from thence paſs into the body of De la Plata. 4. Eſtero, which riſing in the Valley of Chalcaqui, and paſſing through two great Lakes, meets with 5. the Bermejo, and both together fall into De la Plata near the Town of S. Foy. 6. Pilcomayo, which hath its Fountain near the Mines of Potoſi, in the Province of Charcos; but his fall in the ſame River with thoſe before. Then on the North-ſide of that River there is, 7. that of S. Saviour, or S. Salvador, as the Spaniards call it. 8. Rio Nigro, or the Black River, of a longer course, but buried in the end, as the other is, in the deeps of La Plata. 9. Tquaan, and 10. several others, whose united Streams make the great River Parana, the second River of esteem in all this Countrey, but swallowed in that of Plata. Besides these, 11. Rio de S. Martin, and 12. Rio Grande, falling into the Ocean.

It comprehendeth the three Provinces of, 1. Rio de la Plata, 2. Tucuman, and 3. S. Crux. de Sierra. The rest not conquered by the Spaniard, or not well discovered cannot be properly reduced under any Method.

1. RIO DE LA PLATA, or the Province of De la Plata, lieth upon both sides of that River, ascending many Leagues up the Water, but not extended much upon either side. The reason of the name, the quality of the Soil and People, we have seen before.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Buenos Ayres, or Nuestra Sennora de Buenos Ayres, by others called Cividad de la Trinidad, seated on the Southern bank of the River of Plata, there built by Pedro de Mendoza, Anno 1535. Deserted by the Inhabitants, and again new-peopled by Cabesa de Vacca Anno 1542. It was afterwards again abandoned; and finally, in the year 1582, re-edified and planted with a new Colony. Situate on the rising of a little Hill, in the 34. degree and 45 minutes of the Southern Latitude, and about 64 Leagues from the mouth of the River. Fortified with a Mud-wall and a little Castle, with some pieces of Ordnance: yet neither large, nor much frequented, containing but 200 Inhabitants. 2. S. Fe, or S. Fides, 50 Leagues up the River from Buenos Ayres, on the same side of the Water, near the confluence of it with the River Estero: of the same bigness as the other, but somewhat richer; the people here being given to Cloathing, which Manufacture they exchange with the Brasilians for Sugar, Rice, and other necessary Commodities. 3. Nuestra Sennora del Assumption, but commonly Assumption only, higher up the River, from the mouth thereof 300 Leagues distant: situate in the Latitude of 25, and almost in the midst betwixt Peru and Brasil; well built, and very well frequented, as the chief of the whole Countrey. Inhabitted by three sorts of men: first, natural Spaniards, of which here are accounted 400 Families; 2. the Mestizo's, begotten by the Spaniards upon the Natives; and 3. Mulato's, born of the Spaniards and Negroes: of which two last here are thought to be many thousands. Not far off is a great Lake called Ytupuam, in the midst whereof is an huge Rock, above 100 Fathom high above the Water. 4. Cividad Real, by the Spaniards called also Ontiveros, by the Natives Guayra, 80 Leagues North from the Town of Assumption, situate on the banks of the River Parana, in a fruitful Soil, but a sickly Air; for which cause, and the frequent Insurrections of the Savages, but meanly peopled. 5. S. Anne, on the banks of the same River Parana. 6. S. Salvador, on a River of the same name. Besides these, there are up the River above Assumption three noted Ports, 7. Puerto de Guaybiamo, 8. Puerto de la Candelaria, and 9. Puerto de los Reyes; but whether Towns, or only Havens on that River for dispersing and bartering their Commodities, I am not able to say. The last save one memorable for the defeat of John de Ayolas, and the death of 80 of his men by the hands of the Savages.

2. TUCUMAN lieth on the West of Rio de la Plata, extending towards the Confines of Chile, through which they make their way unto Mare del Zur, as through the Province of Rio de la Plata unto Mare del Noordt; the exact bounds hereof to the North and South not yet resolved on.

The Countrey, for so much hereof as lieth towards Chile, is well manured and fruitful; that towards Magellanica barren, untilled, and not well discovered. No Veins of Gold or Silver in it, though situate in a temperate and agreeable Air. Watered by the two Rivers of, 1. Salado, so called from the brakishness and saltness of it; and 2. Del Estero, spoken of before, so named, because sometimes it breaketh out of his Banks. The Inhabitants now civilized both in manners and Habit, in both which they conform to the Garb of the Spaniards.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. S. Jago del Estero, on the banks of that River, by the natural Inhabitants called Varco, the principal of that small Province, honoured with a Bishop's See, and the Seat of the Governour; and distant about 180 Leagues from Buenos Ayres. 2. S. Michael de Tucuman, seated at the foot of a Rocky Mountain, but near a very fruitful Soil both for Corn and Pasturage, distant 28 Leagues from S. Jago. 3. Talavera, or Nuestra Sennora de Talavera, but by the Natives called Esteco; situate on the River Salado, before mentioned, in a fruitful Soil, and inhabited by an industrious People, grown wealthy by their Manufactures of Cotton-wools, which grow hereabouts in great abundance, with which they drive a great Trade at the Mines of Potosi, from hence distant but 140 Leagues. 4. Corduba, in a convenient place for Trade, as being equally distant from S. Juan de la Frontera, in the Prefecture of Chile, and S. Foy, in Rio de la Plata, 50 Leagues from each, and seated in a Road from Peru unto Buenos Ayres; much travelled consequently by those who go from Peru to Brasil or Spain. 5. New London, and 6. New Corduba; built at such time as Garcias de Mendoza, Son of the Marques of Cannete, and Vice-roy of Peru, was Governour of this Province: but both abandoned not long after. Besides these, 7. Morata, 8, Chocinoca, 9. Sococha, and 10. Calabinna; Townships belonging to the Natives.

3. S. CRUX DE SIERRA is the name of a little Territory lying towards Peru, on the North of the River Guapay. and in the Countrey of the Chiquitos and Cherigunaes, two Tribes of the Savages. By some accounted to Peru, because under the Juridical Resort of Charcos, but so far distant from the nearest bounds of that Province, (100 Spanish Leagues at least) that I think fitter to account it to the Province of Paraguay, betwixt the banks of which River and that of Guapay it is wholly seated.

The Soil is abundantly productive of Maize and Wines, plenty of most sorts of American Fruits, which I can give no English name to, a kind of Palm; of whose Trunk they make great store of Meal, of good taste and nourishment. But neither Soil nor Air agreeable to the Fruits of Europe, which ripen slowly, and soon die. So destitute of Rivers, that the Inhabitants were fain to make use of Rain-water preserved in pits: the cause of no small Wants, and of many great Murthers; the people either dying for Thirst, or killing one another for some Water to quench it.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Sancta Crux, situate at the foot of a great Mountain, whence the name of the Province; but situate in an open Field, enlarging it self into many Plains and thirsty Valleys: neighboured by a Brook, or Torrent, breaking from the Rocks, which four Leagues from the Town is become a Pond, and plentifully doth supply the Town with fish. 2. Baranca, 60 Leagues from the Mines of Potosi. 3. Tomina, 4. Lagunilla, and 5. Tarixa; three Forts erected for defence of this Province against the Incursions and Alarms of the Cherignanaes. 6. Neyva Rioja, once a Colony of the Spaniards, but sacked and dispeopled by the Cherignanaes, when the Count of Neyva was Vice-roy of Peru: at what time Nuflo de Chaves, who in the year 1548 first discovered those parts, parts, was treacherously slain by one of the Savages.

The principal Nations of this Country, when first known to the Spaniards, were the Querandies, Timbues, and Carcares, the Chanes, Chiminei, Guaranyes, the Guayacurves, Gucovei, Guaxarapi, &c. on both sides of the River of Plata; the Tucumanes, Juries, and Diagnitas, in the Cantred of Tucuman; more Northward, where the Spaniards have as yet no Hold, the Chunesses, Xaquesses, Xacoaes, and the Xarayes, great and powerful Nations, hitherto unconquered. The first Discovery of this Country is ascribed to John Dias de Solis, a Spanish Adventurer; who in the year 1515. passing up the River to the Latitude of 34 Degrees and 40 minutes, and unadvisedly landing with too small a power, was there unfortunately slain. The Design was after prosecuted by Sebastian Cabot, Anno 1526. who sailed against the Stream as high as the River Parana; at the reception of which, the great River, called till then by the name of Paraguay, begins to be called De la Plata. Here built he the Fortress called Fort Cabot, and 30 Leagues more up the River that called S. Anne, (both long since ruined) where Diego Garcias, a Portugal, found him in the year next following. In the year 1535. the business was resumed by Pedro de Mendoza, who built the Town of Buenos Ayres, and sent John de Ayolas to discover Northwards; of whose unhappy end we have heard before. Not fully settled till the year 1540, when Alvares Nonnez, commonly called Cabesa de Vacca, made a more full discovery of it, and planted Colonies of Spaniards in convenient places. Nothing since done for the farther planting of the Country, though some places have been marked out for new Plantations; here being little Gold and Silver, and consequently not much temptation to draw on the Spaniards to the Work.

And so much for PARAGUAY.

OF BRASIL.

BRASIL is bounded on the East with Mare del Noordt, or the main Atlantick; on the West, with some undiscovered Countries lying betwixt it and the Andes; on the North, with Guiana, from which parted by the great River Maragnon; and on the South, with Paraguay, or the Province of Rio de la Plata. The reason of the name I find not, except it came from the abundance of that Wood called Brasil-wood, which was found amongst them; as the famous Isle of Cyprus, from its plenty of Cypresses.

It reacheth from the 29 to the 39 Degree of Southern Latitude; or, measuring it by miles, it is said to be 1500 miles from North to South, and 500 miles in breadth from the Sea to the Andes: which must be understood with reference to the whole extent of it; for otherwise all that which is possessed by the Portugals under the name of Brasil is so short of taking up all the breadth hereof, that they possess nothing but the Sea-coasts, and some few Leagues (comparatively) within the Land; the greatest part of it being so far from being conquered, that it hath not hitherto been discovered.

The Country is full of Mountains, Rivers, and Forests, diversified into Hills and Plains always pleasant and green. The Air for the most part sound and wholesom, by reason of the fresh Winds which do reign amongst them; there being all along the Coasts certain quick Winds rising from the South about 2 hours before Noon, which do much benefit the Inhabitants: yet in regard it is somewhat moist, it is held to be more agreeable to old men then to young. The Soil is in most parts very fruitful, were it not cloyed with too much Rain; but howsoever liberally provided of Sugar-Canes, (no one Country more) for the refining of which they have their Ingenios, (as they call them) or Sugar-houses, in most parts of the Country, in which they entertain many thousand Slaves, brought hither yearly from Guinea and Congo, and other Maritime parts of Africk. A Trade in which the Portugals are much delighted, and I cannot blame them; there being few years, in each of which they bring not out of Brasil to Portugal 150000 Arrobes of Sugar; every Arrobe containing 25 Bushels of our English measure. Here is also infinite quantities of that red Wood used in dying Cloath, which we commonly call Brasil-wood; (but whether the Wood took that name from the Country, or the Country rather from the Wood, I determine not:) the Trees whereof are of that incredible greatness, that whole Families live on an Arm of one of them, every Tree being as populous as the most of our Villages. In other Commodities, common to them with the other Americans, we need not give particular instance.

Amongst the Rarities hereof are reckoned, 1. the Plant called Copiba, the Bark of which being cut doth send out a Balm, the soverain virtue whereof is so well known to the very Beasts, that being bit by venemous Serpents, they resort unto it for their Cure. 2. The Herb called Sentida, or Viva, which roughly touched will close the Leaves, and not open them again till the man that had offended it be gone out of sight. 3. A kind of Wheat in the Valley near unto S. Sebastian, which is continually growing, and always ripe; or never wholly ripe, because always growing: for when one Ear doth grain, another doth Bloom; when one is ripe and yellow, another is green. 4. The Oxe-fish, with Eyes and Eye-lids, two Arms a Cubit long, and at each an Hand with five Fingers and Nails, as in a Man; under the Arms two Teats, Inwards like a Cow, in every Female. 5. A Creature found of late about the Bay of All-Saints, which had the Face of an Ape, the Foot of a Lion, and all the rest of a Man; of such a terrible Aspect, that the Souldier who shot him fell down dead. But this I rather look on as an Aberration of Nature, then a Rarity in her. 6. Beasts of such strange shapes, and such several kinds, that it may be said of Brasil, as once of Africk, Semper aliquid apportat novi, every day some new object of Admiration.

The People here are endowed with a pretty understanding; as may seem by him who tartly blamed the Covetousness of the Spanish, for coming from the other end of the World to dig for Gold; and holding up a Wedge of Gold, cried out, Behold the God of the Christians! But in most places they are barbarous, the Men and Women go stark naked, and on high Festival days hang Jewels in their Lips. These Festival days are when a company of good Neighbours come together to be merry over the roasted body of a fat Man, whom they cut in Collops, called Boucon, and eat with great greedines and much delectation. They have two vile qualities; as being mindful of Injuries, and forgetful of Benefits. The Men Cruel without measure, and the Women infinitely lascivious. They cannot pronounce the Letters L. F. R. The reason of which, one being demanded, made answer, because they had amongst them neither Law, Faith, nor Rulers. They are able Swimmers, as well Women as Men; and will stay under Water an hour together. Women in Travel are here delivered without any great pain, and presently go about their business belonging to good Housewives: the good man (according to the fashion of our kinder sorts of Husbands in England, who are said to breed their Wives Children) being sick in their stead, and keeping their Bed; so far that he hath Broaths made him, is visited by his Gossips, or Neighbours, and hath Junkets sent to comfort him. And amongst these there are some Rarities, if not monstrosities, in nature: it being said of those which live towards the Andes, that they are hairy all over like Beasts, such as Orson is feigned to have been in the old Romance, and probably so ingendred; also that the Guaymares disbowel Women with Child, and roast the Children; and finally, that the Savage Nation of Camucuiara have their Paps almost down unto their Knees, which they tie about their waste when they run, or go faster then ordinary.

Rivers of note I find not any till I come to Maragnon, though that be a Boundary rather betwixt this and Guiana, then proper unto this alone. If any chance to come in our way as we cross the Country, we shall not pass them over without some remembrance. And so proceed we to the Division of the Country, not into Provinces or Nations, as in other places, but into Prefectures, or Captainships, as the Portugals call them. Of which there are 13 in all, which we shall severally touch on as we trace the Coast, from the Province of Rio de la Plata unto that of Guiana; that is to say,

1. The Captainship of S. VINCENT, bordering on Rio de la Plata, inhabited by the most civil People of all Brasil. Chief Towns whereof are, 1. Santos, at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, capable of good Ships of burthen, but distant from the Main three Leagues. A Town of no more then 120 Houses, yet the best of this Prefecture; beautified with a Parish-Church, and two Convents of Friers. Taken and held two months by Sir Tho. Cavendish, Anno 1591; since that environed with a Wall, and fortified with two Castles. 2. S. Vincents, better built, but not so well fitted with an Haven, of about 70 Houses, and 100 Inhabitants. 3. Itange, and 4. Cananea, two open Burroughs, but capable of lesser Vessels. 5. S. Paul, upon a little Mountain, at the foot whereof run two pleasant Rivers, which fall not far off into the River of Iniambis. A Town of about 100 Houses, one Church, two Convents, and a Colledge of Jesuites; neigboured by Mines of Gold found in the Mountains, called Pernabiacaba. 6. S. Philips, a small Town on the banks of Iniambis, which there begins to enlarge it self and passing thence falleth at last into the River Parana, one of the greatest Tributaries to Rio de la Plata.

2. Of RIO DE JANEIRO, or the River of January, so called, because entred into that moneth by John Diaz de Solis, Anno 1515; neglected by the Portugals, it was seized on by the French, under the conduct of Villegagnone, employed herin by Admiral Chastillon, a great Friend of the Hugonots, to whom it was intended for a place of Refuge, (as New-England afterwards for the like;) but within three years after their first coming hither (An. 1558.) regained by the Portugals, and the French put unto the Sword. Places of most consideration in it, 1. Collignia, the Fort and Colony of the French, so named in honour of Gaspar Colligni, (commonly called Chastillon) by whose encouragement it was founded. Situate on the Bay of the River Janeiro, which the French called Ganabara. 2. S. Sebastians, built at the mouth of the same Bay by the Portugals, after they had expelled the French, and fortified with four strong Bulwarks. 3. Angra des Reyes, distant 12 Leagues Westward from the mouth of the Bay; not long since made a Portugal Colony. Besides these, there are two great Burroughs of the natural Brasilians, in which are said to be above 2000 Inhabitants.

3. Of the HOLY GHOST, (del Spiritu Santo) one of the most fertile Provinces of all Brasil; well stored with Cotton-wool, and watered with the River Parayba, large, and full of Fish. The only Town of note in it is Spiritu Santo, inhabited by about 200 Portugals. The chief building of it, a Church Dedicated to S. Francis, a Monastery of Benedictines, and a College of Jesuites: the chief conveniency, a safe and commodious Haven, capable of the greatest Vessels.

4. Of PORTO SEGURO, the secure Haven, so called by Capralis, who first discovered it, when being tossed at Sea by a terrible Tempest, he had here refreshed himself. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Porto Seguro, built on the top of a white Cliff, which commands the Haven; of more Antiquity then Fame, of more fame then bigness, as not containing fully 200 Families. 2. Santa Cruz, three Leagues from the other, a poor Town, with as poor an Harbour: the Patrimony and Inheritance of the Dukes of Aveira in the Realm of Portugal. 3. Santo Amaro, or S. Omers, once of great note for making Sugars, for which use here were five Ingenios, or Sugar Engines: deserted by the Portugals for fear of the Savages, against whom they had not power enough to make good the place, and the Sugars destroyed of purpose, that they might not come into the hands of the barbarous people.

5. Of DES ILHEOS, or of the Isles, so named from certain Islands lying against the Bay on which the principal Town is seated, called also Ilheos, or the Island, (with like Analogy as a Town of good note in Flanders hath the name of Insula or Lisle:) the Town consisting of about 150 or 200 Families, situate on a little River, but neighboured by a great Lake of 12 Leagues in compass, (out of which that River doth arise) full of a great, but wholsome Fish, which they call Monatos, some of which are affirmed to weigh 28 pounds. This Colony was much endangered by the Guaymuri, a Race of Savages more savage then any of their Fellows; who, being driven out of their own Country, fell into this Prefecture, which they had utterly destroyed, if some of S. George's Reliques, as the Jesuites tell us, (but I bind no man to believe it) sent by their General from Rome, Anno 1581. had not stayed their fury, and given the Portugals the better.

6. Of TODOS LOS SANTOS, or All Saints, so called from a large Bay of that name, upon which it lyeth, in breadth two Leagues and an half, 18 Fathoms deep, and full of many little Islands; but flourishing and pleasant, and well stored with Cotton-Wool. A Bay in which are many safe Stations and Roads for Shipping, and therefore of great use and consequence in those furious Seas. Memorable for the hardy Enterprize of Peter Heyns, a Dutch-man, Admiral of the Navy of the United Provinces; who, in the year 1627. seized on a Fleet of Spaniards, consisting of 26 Sail of Ships, (four of them being Men of War) all lying under the Protection of the Forts and Castles, built for the safety of that Bay. For thrusting in amongst them with his own Ship only (the rest not being able to follow, he ſo laid about him, that having ſunk the Vice-Admiral, he took all the reſt, conditioning only for their lives, notwithſtanding all the ſhot which was made againſt him from the Ships and Caſtles and 40 pieces of Ordnance planted on the ſhore. Chief Towns hereof, 1. S. Salvador, built on a little Hill on the North-ſide of the Bay by Thomas de Souſa; adorned with many Churches and Religious Houſes, and fortified (beſides the Wall) with three ſtrong Caſtles; the one called S. Anthony, the other S. Philip, and the third Tapeſipe. Yet not to ſtrong by reaſon of ſome Hills adjoyning which command the Town, but that it was taken by the Hollanders Anno 1624, recovered by the Spaniards the next year after, and ſince loſt again. 2. Paripe, more within the Land, four Leagues from S. Saviours. 3. Seregippe del Rey, a ſmall Town, and ſeated on as ſmall a River, but amongſt many rich Paſtures, and ſome Veins of Silver.

7. Of FERNAMBUCK, one of the richeſt Prefectures for Tobacco, Sugar, and the great quantity of Braſil-wood which is brought hence yearly for the Diers, in all this Country; but deſtitute of Corn and moſt other Neceſſaries, with which ſupplied from the Canaries, and ſometimes from Portugal. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Olinda, the largeſt and beſt peopled of all Braſil, containing above 2000 perſons; not reckoning in the Church-men, nor taking the great number of Slaves which they keep for their Sugar-works into the account: for whoſe uſe they have here eight Parochial Churches, five Religious Houſes, and ſome Hoſpitals. Situate near the Sea-ſide, but on ſo uneven a piece of ground, as makes it not capable of a regular Fortification; the Haven being little, and not very commodious, but defended at the entrance by a well-built Caſtle, and that well planted with Braſs-pieces. Which notwithſtanding, in the year 1595, the Caſtle and the Suburbs along the Port (wherein they uſed to ſtow all their chief Commodities) were taken by Captain James Lancaſter and ſome few of the Engliſh; who having tarried in the Haven above a month, brought home with him eight of his own Ships, four French-men, and three Hollanders which came in by chance, all laden with the choiceſt Merchandiſe of Braſil and India. 2. Amatta de Braſil, ten miles from Olinda, the Inhabitants whereof live by ſelling the Braſil-wood. 3. S. Laurenzo, a well-frequented Village, but as yet unwalled. 4. Poincur, upon a River ſo named. 5. Antonio de Cabo, near the Cape of S. Auguſtines; both of good note for the great quantity of Sugars which are made in each. 6. Garaſu, about five Leagues from Olinda, inhabited for the moſt part by poor and Mechanical perſons, till the year 1632, when taken by the Hollander, and planted with a people of higher quality. This Prefecture, belonging formerly to the Earls of Albuquerque, (a great Houſe in Spain) is now wholly in the hands of the States of the Provinces united: the Town of Olinda being taken by them in the year 1629, the Port and all the Avenues unto it ſo ſtrongly fortified, that they have hitherto enjoyed it.

8. Of TAMARACA, ſo called from an Iſland of that name, diſtant about five miles from Olinda, of no great note but for the Haven, and an impregnable Caſtle on the top of an Hill for defence thereof. Which when the Hollanders could not take, they built a ſtrong Bulwark at the mouth of the Port, and ſo blocked it up, that it hath ſince been of no uſe to the Spaniard. This is the leaſt Prefecture in Braſil, but withal the ancienteſt; extended three Leagues only in length, and but two in breadth: the Patrimony of the Earls of Monſanto in Portugal, who received hence yearly, when entire, thirty thouſand Ducats. But his Rents are much diminiſhed, if not quite inverted, ſince the loſs of the Haven.

9. Of PARAIBA, ſo called from a River of that name (but by the Spaniard called Domingo) of moſt note herein, on the banks whereof ſtandeth Paraiba, the chief Town of it, at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, about three Leagues from the Main, but capable of pretty good Ships to the very Town. The Town inhabited not long ſince by 500 Portugals, beſides Slaves and Negroes. Not walled, till they began to ſtand in fear of the Hollanders, on the loſs of Olinda; but more ſecured by a ſtrong Caſtle on the Promontory called Cabo Delo, which the Hollanders have in vain attempted, then by any Works within the Land. A Caſtle which acknowledgeth the French for the Founders of it, who for a while were poſſeſſed of this Tract, and gave name to an adjoyning Haven, called Port Francois; but outed by the Portugal, Anno 1584, who have ſince held their footing in it, but with fear of the Hollanders; eſpecially ſince their taking of a little Iſland lying over againſt them, called the Iſle of Noronha.

10. Of RIO GRANDE, ſo called from the River Poteingi, (as the Natives term it) which the Portugals call Rio Grande, or the great River; not made a Prefecture till of late. For lying open, as it were, to the next Pretender, ſome of the French began to fix here Anno 1597. But the King of Spain, not willing to have any ſuch Neighbour, commanded the Captain of Paraiba to drive them thence; which was done accordingly. But then the Savages beginning to riſe up in Arms, the Captain of Paraiba was fain to ſeek aid from him of Fernambuck; by whoſe help having ſlain five thouſand, and took three thouſand of them, the reſt became Vaſſals to the Portugals, who built here an impregnable Caſtle, (which is all the footing they have in it) well manned, and furniſhed with Ammunition and all other Neceſſaries; very few Portugals, except thoſe of the Garriſon, being yet come over.

11. Of SIARA, a late Prefecture alſo, in which the Portugals have no more then a Caſtle, with a dozen Houſes, or thereabouts, beſides that of the Governour adjoyning to it. So named from an Haven called Siara, but of no great note, and capable but of little Veſſels. Of ſome Trade in regard of the Cryſtal, Cotton-wool, and ſome precious ſtones found in the Country hereabouts: and certainly would be of greater, if once the Portugals would be active and purſue the Conqueſt; here being great plenty of Sugar-canes, but no Works to make it.

12. Of MARAGNON, an Iſland lying in the mouth of the great River ſo called, in the fartheſt parts of Braſil Northwards, and many Leagues diſtant from Siara, the laſt of their Prefectures; the Country intervening not yet diſcovered, or otherwiſe made known unto us, then by the names of the Ports and Promontories found upon the Coaſt. An Iſland of a fruitful Soil, if pains and Huſbandry were not wanting; affording naturally Maize, and a root called Maniot, both which the Savages uſe for Bread; good ſtore of Cotton-wools, Saffron, Braſil-wood, and the beſt Tobacco; and in ſome places Balm and Amber. Watered with many freſh Rivers and pleaſant Springs; well wooded both for Timber and Fewel; and, in a word, bleſſed with ſo temperate an Air, (though ſo near the Æquator) that no place can be more commodious for the Life of Man. The People ſtrong of body, healthy and long-liv'd; without any baldneſs, induſtrious in their Feather-works and Manufactures of Cotton; the Women curious in ordering their Hair, fruitful in Child-bearing, and that till 80 years old, and ſometimes more. Both Sexes naked till their Marriage, and then apparelled only from the Waſte to their Knees.

The Villages hereof poſſeſſed by the Natives conſiſted but of four great Houſes; each of them two or three hundred foot in length, and twenty or thirty foot in breadth ſo placed as they reſembled a quadrangular Cloyſter; and in each Houſe ſo many Houſholds, that commonly each of their Villages, or Taves, (for ſo they called them) contained three hundred perſons, and ſome twice that number. Of theſe were twenty ſeven in all, whoſe names I hold impertinent to be muſtered here: the total eſtimate of the people when the French came thither amounting to 12000 Souls. For the French trading in this Iſland, and carrying themſelves courteouſly amongſt the Natives, found them not unwilling to admit a Colony of that Nation, if ſent over to them, by whoſe Aid they might free themſelves from all other Pretenders, and be inſtructed in the Goſpel. Accordingly a Colony and four Capuchin Friers are ſent over to them Anno 1612, ſome Savages gained unto the Faith, and a ſtrong Caſtle, called S. Lewis, commodiouſly built, and planted with 22 pieces of Ordnance; the effect of that Voyage. But long they had not reſted there when diſſeized by the Portugals, ſent thither under the conduct of Hierome de Albuquerque, Anno 1614. Who to the Caſtle of S. Lewis, which the French had built, added thoſe of S. Mary, and S. Francis, planted two Villages in the Iſland by the names of S. Andrew, and S. Jago, and ever ſince have held it without moleſtation.

13. Of PARA, the moſt Northern Prefecture of Braſil towards Guiana; ſo called from the River of Para, (ſuppoſed to be a branch of the River of Amazons) which runneth through it. The River at the mouth of it is two miles in breadth, and in the middle of the Chanel fifteen Fathoms deep: on the banks whereof (but on an higher ground then the reſt) the Portugals have built the Caſtle of Para, in form quadrangular, and well-walled, except towards the River: the Country thereabouts being inhabited by 300 Portugueze, beſides the Garriſon.

Now for the Fortunes of the whole, it never did acknowledge any one Supreme. Divided into many Tribes, and each Tribe governed by their Chiefs, as in other Countries. Theſe Tribes ſo many, and the Muſter of their names ſo uſeleſs, that I now forbear it. In this eſtate they lived when diſcovered firſt; but by whom firſt diſcovered will not be agreed on. The Spaniards, to get ſome colour of a Title for the Crown of Caſtile, aſcribe it to John Pinſone and Diego de Lope, two of their own Country, who, as they ſay, had landed on it in the year 1500, before the coming of Capralis, though the ſame year alſo. The Portugals attribute the Diſcovery of it to Pedro Alverez de Capralis, ſent by their King Emanuel to the Eaſt-Indies; who being driven over hither from the Coaſt of Guinea, took poſſeſſion of it, and as a Monument thereof, advanced a Croſs, giving the name of Sanctæ Crucis, or the Holy Croſs, to this new Diſcovery. That name changed afterwards to Braſil, from the abundance of that Wood (as it is conceived) which was found amongſt them. Notice hereof being given to the Court of Portugal, Americus Veſpuſius, a noble Florentine, Anno 1501. and after him John de Empoli, another of that Nation, in the year 1503, were by Emanuel employed in a farther Diſcovery, Who ſpeeding fortunately in it, the Portugals did accordingly ſend over ſome Plantations thither. But a great controverſie growing betwixt them and the Spaniard, to whether of the two it of right belonged; the Spaniard was content to yield it to the Crown of Portugal, though by the Bull or Edict of Pope Alexander the ſixth (by whom the whole undiſcovered World was divided betwixt thoſe two Kings) it ſeemed to fall within the Grant made to the Crown of Caſtile. Enjoyed by this Emanuel, and the Kings ſucceeding, till the death of Sebaſtian, (which Sebaſtian the Jeſuites look on as the Founder of all their Colledges in this Country) and by the Spaniards ſince the death of Henry, (whoſe Reign continued but a year) though in the name and right of the Crown of Portugal; that Nation being ſo prudently jealous of their Intereſt in it, that they would not ſuffer any of the Subjects of Spain to grow great amongſt them. By them poſſeſſed entirely without any Rivals, (I mean, for ſo much of the Country as they had ſubdued) till of late years the Hollanders put in for a part, and got the Prefectures of Fernambuck and Todos los Santos (or the Bay) by the right of War. The reſt with all the other Members of the Crown of Portugal, in the late Revolt of that Nation from the King of Spain, ſubmitting unto John the fourth, of the Houſe of Braganza, whom the Portugueze had made their King, Anno 1639.

And ſo much for BRASIL.

OF GUIANA.

GUIANA is bounded on the Eaſt with the main Atlantick; on the Weſt, with the Mountains of Peru, or rather ſome undiſcovered Countries interpoſed betwixt them; on the North, with the River Orenoque, and on the South, with that of the Amazons. The reaſon of the name I find not, unleſs it be ſo called from the River Wia, of which more anon.

It is ſituate on both ſides of the Line, extended from the fourth Degree of Southern to the 8 of Northern Latitude. The Air, notwithſtanding this ſituation under the Æquator, is affirm'd to be temperate, the Eaſtern winds (which they call the Briezes) conſtantly blowing about Noon, and mitigating the extreme heats thereof by their cooler blaſts. The Country towards the Sea-ſide flat and level, the inland parts more mountainous and ſwelled with Hills: in all places ſo adorned with Natures Tapeſtry, the boughs and branches of the Trees never uncloathed or left naked, (Fruit either ripe or green growing ſtill upon them) that no Country in the World could be better qualified. The particular Commodities of it we ſhall ſee anon, when the particular parts hereof come into diſcourſe.

Of the People it is ſaid in general, that they have amongſt them no ſetled Government, and though they acknowledge ſome Superiority in the Chiefs of their Tribes, yet it is only voluntary, as long and as little as they pleaſe. Adultery and Murther, which are only puniſhable, are not otherwiſe expiated but by the death of the Offender. The richer ſort have two or three Wives, and ſometimes more; the poor but one, and hardly able to keep her: they that have more, and they who have but one, alike jealous of them; and if they take them in Adultery, without any farther Ceremony or Formalities of Law they beat out their Brains. Their Wives, eſpecially the elder, they uſe for Servants; and he which hath moſt ſuch is the greateſt man, Without Religion, or any notion of a Godhead; not ſo far onwards on the way to the worſhip of the true God, as to be Idolaters: for though Idolatry be miſtaken in the proper Object, it ſuppoſeth a Deity; and they who have this principle, that there is a God, have learned one, and not the leaſt, of the points of their Catechiſm. Their Accounts amongſt themſelves they keep with a bundle of ſticks, which they diminiſh or encreaſe according to the times of their Contract. Their Funerals they ſolemnize with a Feaſt, but with ſuch diverſity in the deportment of both Sexes, that while the Women houl extreamly, the men perform the Obſequies with ſinging and exceſſive drinking; the one as improper for a Feaſt, as the other for a Funeral.

Rivers of moſt note in it, beſides 1. Orenoque, and 2. The River of Amazons, and thoſe rather Boundaries betwixt this and the neighbouring Provinces, then proper unto this alone. 3. Arrawari. 4. Conawini. 5. Caſpurough, or Caſſipure; all falling into the ſame main Atlantick, betwixt the River of Amazons and Wiapoco: the laſt riſing out of the Lake of the Arachoſi, half a mile broad at the mouth or Influx into the Sea, and but five ſpans deep. 6. Wiapoco, of which more hereafter. 7. Wia. 8. Cajane. 9. Marwine. 10. Eſſequebe, a River of twenty days journey long, betwixt Wiapoco and the River of Orenoque, or Raliana.

The whole divided commonly into theſe four parts: 1. Rio de las Amazones, or the River of Amazons. 2. Wiapoco, or Guiana ſpecially ſo called. 3. Orenoque. And 4. The Iſles of Guiana.

1. RIO DE LAS AMAZONES, or the River of Amazons, containeth that part of this Country which lieth along the Tract of that famous River. The Soil is in ſome places dry and barren, in others fertile and productive of the choiceſt Fruits; full of large Woods, and in thoſe Woods moſt ſort of Trees which are to be found in America: One amongſt others of moſt note, (and perhaps peculiar to Guiana) which they call the Totocke; a Tree of great bulk, and as great a Fruit; this laſt as big as a man's Head, and ſo hard withal, that when the Fruit grows ripe and ready to fall, the people dare not go into the Woods without an Helmet, or ſome ſuch ſhelter over their Heads, for fear of beating out their Brains. The kernels of it, for the moſt part ten or twelve in number, have the taſte of Almonds, and are ſaid to be provocative in point of Venery. Of which the Savages have this By-word, Pigue ſecke in Saccowe pingean Totocke; that is to ſay, Eat Totocke, if thou wouldſt be potent in the acts of Venus. Here are alſo Sugar-canes in ſome places; and the Plant called Pita, the taſte whereof is ſaid to be like Strawberries, Claret Wine, and Sugar.

The principal Inhabitants of this part of the Country, the Taees, Cockettuway, Panteeni, Tockianes, Tomoes, and Wackehanes, dwelling on the Continent; the Maraons and Arowians, poſſeſſed of the Iſlands. Towns of note I have met with none amongſt them; though every houſe (moſt of them 150 foot in length, 20 in breadth, and entertaining at the leaſt an hundred perſons) might paſs ſufficiently for a Village. Yet they are ſafer houſed then ſo, for otherwiſe their Houſes would afford them but little comfort in the overflowings of the River, which drown all the Country: and therefore they betake themſelves to the tops of Trees, and there remain like Birds, with their ſeveral Families, till the Waters be drawn in again, and the Earth become more comfortable for habitation. Yet I find ſome of theſe their dwellings called by proper Names: as 1. Matarem. 2. Roakery. 3. Anarcaprock. 4. Haaman. 5. Womians: and 6. Cogemynne. But I find nothing but their names, and enough of that.

The firſt Diſcoverer of this River and the parts adjoyning was Orellana, the Lieutenant of Gonſales Pizarro, whom his Brother Franciſco Pizarro, then Vice-roy of Peru, had made the Governour of Quito. Moved with the noiſe of ſome rich Countries beyond the Andes, he raiſed ſufficient Forces, and paſſed over thoſe Mountains; where finding want of all things for the life of man, they made a Boat, and ſent this Orellana to bring in Proviſions. But the River which he chanced into was ſo ſwift of courſe, that he was not able to go back; and was therefore of neceſſity to obey his fortune in following the courſe of that ſtrong water. Paſſing along by divers deſolate and unpeopled places, he came at laſt into a Country planted and inhabited; where he firſt heard of the Amazons, (by thoſe Savages called Comapuyaras) of whom he was bidden to beware as a dangerous people. And in the end, having ſpent his time in paſſing down this River from the beginning of January, to the end of Auguſt 1540, he came at laſt into the Sea, and getting into the Iſle of Cubagua, ſailed into Spain. The courſe of his Voyage down the Water he eſtimated at 1800 Leagues, (or 5400 Engliſh miles) but found no Amazons in his paſſage, as himſelf affirmed; only ſome maſculine Women ſhewed themſelves intermixt with the Men, to oppoſe his landing; and in ſome places he found Men with long Hair like Women: either of which might make theſe parts believed to be held by Amazons. But to proceed, arriving at the Court of Spain, he got Commiſſion for the Conqueſt of the Countries by him diſcovered; and in the year 1549 he betook himſelf unto the Service. But though he found the mouth of the River, one of them at leaſt, he could never hit upon the Chanel which brought him down, though he attempted often. Which ill ſucceſs, with the conſideration of his loſs both in Fame and Fortunes, brought him to his Grave; having got nothing but the honour of the firſt Diſcovery, and the leaving of his name to that famous River, ſince called Orellana. The Enterprize was purſued, but with like ſucceſs, by one Pedro de Orſua, Anno 1560, after which the Spaniards gave it over. And though the Engliſh and the Hollanders have endeavoured an exact Diſcovery, and ſeverally begun ſome Plantations in it, yet they proved as unfortunate as the other; their Quarters being beaten up by the neighbouring Portugals, before they were ſufficiently fortified to make any reſiſtance.

2. WIAPOCO, or GUIANA ſpecially ſo called, taketh up the middle of this Country, on both ſides of the River of Wiapoco, whence it hath its name. A River of a long Courſe, but not paſſable up the Stream above 16 miles, by reaſon of a Cataract or great fall from the higher ground: in breadth, betwixt that Cataract and the Æſtuarium, about the tenth part of a mile; at the Æſtuarium, or Influx, a whole mile at leaſt, and there about two Fathoms deep.

The Country on both ſides of this River very rich and fertile; ſo natural for Tobacco, that it groweth to nine handfuls long. Sugar-canes grow here naturally without any planting, and on the Shrubs great ſtore of Cotton, and the Dye by ſome called Orellana. Plenty of Veniſon in their Woods, and of Fiſh in their Rivers: their Fields well ſtored with Beaſts, which themſelves call

Moyres;

Moyres; in shape and use resembling Kine, but without any Horns. The People generally of a modest and ingenuous countenance; naked, but would wear Cloaths if they had them, or knew how to make them. Their Bread is made of a Plant called Cassavi, of which also being dried and chewed, and then strained through a Wicker-Vessel, they make a kind of Drink, in colour like new Ale, but not so well tasted, and of less continuance. The greatest part of their Food is Fish, which they intoxicate with a strong-scented Wood, and so take them up as they lie floating on the top of the Water. Much troubled with a Worm like a Flea, (by the Spaniards called Niguas) which get under the nails of their Toes, and multiply there to infinite numbers, and the no less torture of the Patient, without speedy prevention. No better Remedy found out, then to pour Wax melted hot on the place affected; which being pulled off when 'tis cold, draws the Vermin with it, sometimes 800 at a pull. The Women of such easie Child-birth, that they are delivered without help, and presently bring the Child to his Father, (for they have so much natural modesty as to withdraw from company upon that occasion) who washeth it with water, and painteth it with several colours, and so returneth it to the Mother.

Rivers of note here are very many; no Country under Heaven being better watered, nor fuller of more pleasant and goodly Streams. The names of some of them on both sides of the Wiapoco we have had before: the chief of which I take to be Wia, affirmed to be of a long course, a goodly River all the way, and at the Mouth thereof to be large and broad, which passing through the heart of the Country, in the fourth Degree and 40 Minutes of Northern Latitude, may possibly occasion both the whole and this part more specially to be called Wiana, and by the Dutch, who cannot pronounce the W, Guiana. Certain I am, that by the name of Wiana, I have found it written in approved Authors. But what need farther search be made after lesser Rivers, (which will offer themselves to us of their own accord) when we have a Lake to pass over like a Sea for bigness, (magnum, famosum, & vastum, instar maris, as my Author hath it) by the Yaos or Jaos called Raponowinin, by the Caribes (the old Inhabitants of this Country) Parimen; situate about a days journey from the River Essequebo, and neighboured by the great and famous City Manoa, which the Spaniards call El Dorado, (or the Golden City) from the abundance of Gold, in Coin, Plate, Armour, and other Furniture, which was said to be in it. The greatest City, as some say, not only of America, but of all the World. For Diego de Ordas, one of the Companions of Cortez in his Mexican Wars, and by him condemned for a Mutiny, put into a Boat alone without any Victual, and so cast off to seek his Fortune, affirmed at his return; that being taken by some of the Guianians, and by them carried to their King, then residing at Manoa, he entred the City at high-noon, travelled all the rest of that day, and the next also until night, before he came to the King's Palace; but then he saith that he was led blind-fold all the way: And therefore possibly enough this City might be no such Miracle as the Story makes it; Don Diego being either abused by the Reports of the Savages, or willing to abuse the World with such empty Fictions. For though the Spaniards and the English have severally sought, and that with incredible diligence, to find out this City; yet none of them have hitherto had the fortune to fall upon it. So that I fear it may be said in the Poet's Language.

——Et quod non invenis usquam,
Esse putes nusquam —— —— —— i. e.
That which is no where to be found,
Think not to be above the ground.

Nor is there much more credit to be given unto his Relations of the great Court kept here by one of the Ingas; who being, forsooth, one of the younger Brethren of Atabaliba, the last King of Peru, at the Conquest of that Kingdom, with many thousands of his Followers, came into this Country, and subduing the Caribes, erected here a second Peruvian Monarchy. For, besides that Atabaliba had no Brethren but Guascar and Mango, who both died in Peru, how improbable must it needs appear, that this Guianian King, knowing so well the thirst of the Spaniards after Gold, would either suffer him to return and disclose the Secrets of his State, or send him away loaded with Gold, as 'tis said he did? Who sheweth his Treasure to a Thief, doth deserve to lose it. And therefore letting pass these dreams of an El Dorado, let us descend to places of less Magnificence, but of greater Reality. Amongst which I reckon, 1. Caripo, most memorable for a Colony of English there planted by Captain Robert Harcourt, Anno 1600. situate on the Banks of the Wiapoco, near the Mouth thereof, on the advantage of a Rock, and that Rock so difficult of access, that they feared no danger from an Enemy. The Air so sound and answerable to the constitution of an English body, that of 30, which were left there for three years together, there died but six, and those six rather by misfortune, and some cross accident, then by any Diseases. 2. Gomeribo, on the top of an Hill, near the mouth of the Bay of Wiapoco; possessed a while by some Hollanders, but soon deserted. 3. Moyemon, a Village of the Paragoti, on the banks of the River Marwinen. 4. Crewinay, on the other side of the same River, possessed by the Caribes. The King of the first (for each Tribe had its several Princes) being named Maperitaka, affirmed to be a virtuous man, and kind to Strangers, of the latter, Minapa. 5. Tanparamunen, about an hundred Leagues from the mouth of that River; and 6. Moneshego, four days journey from the other: both possessed by the Caribes. The King or Cacique of those last, at Captain Harcourt's being there, (of which time we speak) was named Areminta; affirmed to have a skin like a piece of Buff.

The principal Families of this part, besides the Yaos or Jaos, and the Maraons, spoken of before, who possess almost all the Sea-Coasts of this Country, are said to be the Arwacca, the Sapayoy, the Mayos, and the Aracouri; of different Languages and Customs, though near neighbours unto one another. Originally Inhabitants of the Island of Trinidado, and the River of Orenoque: whence driven by the Spaniards they came into this Tract, and beating the old Inhabitants, whom they call by the common name of Caribes, higher into the Country, possessed themselves of the Sea-shores and the parts adjoyning: each Tribe or Family being governed by its several Chief, as before was intimated. The Netherlanders for a time had some footing in it, but they quickly left it; endeavouring nothing more in the time of their short stay amongst them, then to make the people disaffected to the English, of whose pretensions to these parts, and designs to plant them, they had good intelligence. And so much was confessed by some of the Natives, when they had found by good experience and acquaintance, how much the English were abused in those Mis-reports. Afterwards in the year 1604, Captain Charles Leigh set sail from Woolwich on the Thames, and in May fell upon the River of Wiapoco, where he was kindly entertained, gratified with an House and Garden, and his Aid craved against the Caribes and their other Enemies. He took possession of the Country in the name of King James, and the Crown of England; and caused the River of Wiapoco to be called (by his own name) Caroleigh: but that name ended with his Life, and that shortly after, he dying in his return on Ship-board. The design went forwards notwithwithſtanding, and in the year 1608. an Engliſh Colony is brought hither by Captain Harcourt, a new poſſeſſion taken in the name of King James, the Colony planted at Carpo before mentioned, the Country farther ſearched into by that noble Gentleman then ever formerly by any or by many ſince. After three years, the Colony, wanting fit ſupply, returned home again; the Plantation never ſince purſued, though by ſome projected. Yet ſo far are theſe Savages beholden to the Engliſh Nation, that as they did defend them at their being there againſt the Caribes, ſo at their going off they taught them the uſe of Arms, and put them into a poſture of defence, enabling them thereby to preſerve themſelves againſt all their Enemies.

3. ORENOQUE, or the Province of the River Orenoque, comprehendeth the North parts of Guiana, lying upon and towards the Banks of that famous River, of which we have already ſpoken. The Country is very rich and pleaſant, conſiſting of large Plains, many miles in compaſs, adorned with the Embroidery of Flowers and unknown Plants, exceeding pleaſant to the Eye; and ſometimes interlaced with Hills, reported to be furniſhed with rich Mines of Gold and Silver. The Rivers liberally ſtored with Fiſh, and the Foreſts both with Beaſts and Fowls. No Country in America, not Peru it ſelf, ſaid to be comparable to it for abundance of Treaſure. Some alſo add a whole Mountain of Cryſtal to be ſeen afar off from Winecaporo; and tell us (but in general terms) of more goodly Cities then elſewhere in all Peruana: but neither the Spaniards nor the Engliſh could ever ſee them, though they diligently ſearched into moſt parts of this Country.

The People, as of ſeveral Nations, ſo of ſeveral Natures. The Capuri and Macureos, for the moſt part Carpenters, live by making Canoas or Boats, which they ſell into Guiana for Gold, and to Trinidado for Tobacco, in the immoderate taking whereof they exceed all Nations. When a Cacique or Commander dieth, they make great lamentation; and after the Fleſh is putrified and fallen from the Bones, they take up the Skeleton, and hang it up in the Houſe where he dwelt, decking his ſkull with Feathers of all colours, and hanging Gold Plates about the bones of his Arms and Thighs. Of the Tivitivas, dwelling upon ſome of the Northern Branches, it is affirmed by Sir Walter Raleigh, that they are a goodly and valiant People, and to have the moſt manly and moſt deliberate ſpeech of any Nation in the World. A People which eat of nothing that is ſet or ſown; the Children of Dame Nature, and therefore will not be beholden for their livelihood unto Art or Induſtry; uſing the tops of the Palmito-Tree for Bread; Fiſh, Deer, and Swines-fleſh for the reſt of their ſuſtenance. The Aſſaway, Saymæ, Wikeri, and Aroras, affirmed to be as black as Negroes, but with ſmoother Hair; and to uſe Arrows dipt in ſo ſtrange a poiſon, as doth not only bring death, but death with moſt unſpeakable torments, eſpecially if the wounded party be permitted to drink. Of the Arwaca of this Tract I find nothing ſingular, but that when any of their Kings or Caciques die, their Wives and neareſt of the Kindred beat their Bones to powder, and mingle it with their drink, like Spice.

Places of moſt importance in it (for to ſpeak any thing particularly of thoſe many Rivers which fall into the Orenoque were an endleſs labour) are, 1. Comolaba, on the South of Orenoque, but ſomewhat diſtant, in which they keep ſome annual Fairs for the ſale of Women. One of our Engliſh-men, left by Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1595, affirmeth that he bought eight of them (the eldeſt not above eighteen) for a half-peny red-hafted Knife, which he brought from England. But withal telleth us, for his credit, that he gave them to ſome Savages of his Acquaintance. 2. Morequito, a known Port upon ſome branch of the Orenoque; of much uſe to the Engliſh in their firſt Diſcovery of theſe parts. 3. Winecaporo, ſo called from another branch of that River bearing this name; from whence was ſhewed an high Hill, ſaid to be of Cryſtal, but ſo far off, that it was thought better to believe then to go and ſee. Others report of this Mountain, that above it there is a mighty River, which, falling down this Cataract on the lower grounds, makes a terrible noiſe, as if a thouſand Bells were knocked one againſt another. And poſſible enough it is, that this great fall of Water diſcerned far off may (with the help of Sun-ſhine) carry ſome reſemblance of a Cryſtalline Mountain. 4. S. Thome, ſituate on the main Chanel of the River Orenoque, a Town of 140 Houſes, ſtretched out in length for half a mile, but ſlightly built; a Pariſh Church in the midſt of it, and at the Weſt end a Convent of Franciſcan Friers. The only Town of all Guiana poſſeſſed by the Spaniards; not fortified till againſt the laſt coming of Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1617. but taken by him at that time, and ſince that by the Hollanders, Anno 1629; though by both quitted not long after, it returned to the Spaniards.

The ſeveral Nations of this Tract have been named before. Diſcovered firſt by Diego de Ordas, Anno 1531, furniſhed with a Patent for the Conqueſt of it by Charles the Fifth. But not hitting on the right Chanel, or otherwiſe not able to overcome the difficulties which lay before him, he returned to Spain, effecting nothing but the opening of the way to others. Followed herein by Hieron de Ortal, Anno 1533, and after by Herrera, who proceeded farther then the others, Anno 1536. and finally by Gonſalvo Ximinez de Queſada and Antonio Berreo, with far better fortune: who beginning their journey from the New Realm of Granada in the ſearch of Guiana, fell caſually into this great River, as Orellana did before into that of the Amazons. But yet not perfectly diſcovered till the year 1595, in which Sir Walter Raleigh having taken Priſoner this Antonio Berreo, and learning of him the ſucceſs of his Expedition, reſolved upon the Undertaking; and ſearched ſo far into the Country by the courſe of this River, that ſome have ſince called it Raliana. The buſineſs was followed the next year (after his return) by Captain Lawrence Keymis, employed by Raleigh in that Service, who at his coming found the Country poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, by whom 20 or 30 of the moveable Houſes of the Savages had been laid together like a Town, and all the Natives, who wiſhed well to the Engliſh, diſperſed and ſcattered. So that without any other effect of his journy, then the finding out the true mouth of the Orenoque (which he firſt diſcovered) he ſet ſail for England. In the mean time it had been moved at the Court, that a Colony of Engliſh ſhould be planted there, and ſome proportionable Force ſent over to make good the Action. But the motion was upon good advice rejected, firſt in regard of the diſtance of it from the main body of our ſtrength; and ſecondly, becauſe the Spaniards, bordering near upon it, might eaſily caſt out ſmall Forces, and make the enterpriſe diſhonourable to the Engliſh Nation, who had then the better of him in the point of honourable Atchievements. It was permitted notwithſtanding unto private Adventurers to try their Fortunes on it, without engaging of the State: whereupon followed the Voyages of Leigh and Harcourt, before ſpoken of. But they, not being able to go through with ſo great a buſineſs, let it fall again. And ſo it reſted till the laſt unfortunate Voyage of Sir Walter Raleigh, licenſed by Commiſſion under the Great Seal to ſearch into ſome Mines of Gold and Silver, which he was credibly informed of when he was in this Country. A deſign followed with great hopes by the Undertakers, moſt of them being perſons of honour, and well attended: but ſo unfortunate in the iſſue, (the Spaniards being being made acquainted with it before his coming) that at the taking of S. Theme he loſt his own Son, and a great part of his Forces, and after his return (not able with the reſidue to make good his ground againſt the Enemy) was executed on a former Attainder in the old Palace of Weſtminſter, Octob. 29. Anno 1618. Of whom I cannot chuſe but note what is ſaid by Camden Clarencieux in his Annals: Vir erat nunquam ſatis laudato ſtudio & Regiones remotas detegendi, & Navalem Angliæ gloriam promovendi. And ſo I leave him to his reſt in the Bed of Peace.

4. The ISLANDS which properly are accounted of as parts of Guiana lie either ſcattered on the Shore, or in the mouths or bodies of the greater Rivers; ſome of them not inhabited, others of no name, and none at all of any reckoning. Only the Iſle of 1. Trinidado, and 2. Tabago, are of ſome eſteem: which though ſomewhat farther off from the Shores of this Country, yet being that of Trinidado lieth in the mouth of the Orenoque, and that both of them with Guiana paſs but for one Prefecture, or Provincial Government, we ſhall deſcribe them in this place.

1. TRINIDADO, or Inſula S. Trinitatis, lieth at the mouth of the River Orenoque, over againſt Paria, from which ſeparated by a Frith, or Streight, by Columbus, who firſt diſcovered it, called Bocca del Drago, or the Dragons mouth, becauſe of the dangerouſneſs of the paſſage. Extended from the ninth to the tenth Degree of Northern Latitude; the moſt Southern Angle of it called Punta del Gallo, as that on the North-eaſt Punta de Galtera. The Frith, or Streight but three miles over, yet made more narrow by the Interpoſition of four or five little Iſlands, which the Sea breaketh through with great violence, leaving only two entrances for Shipping into the Gulf, called the Gulf of Paria. The length hereof 25 Leagues, the breadth 18. Of a cloudy and unhealthy Air, but a fertile Soil, abundantly well ſtored with ſuch Commodities, as are of the natural growth of America, viz. Maize, Sugar-canes, Cotton-wool, and the beſt kind of Tobacco, much celebrated formerly by the name of a Pipe of Trinidado. Here is alſo a ſufficiency of Fruits and Cattel for the uſe of the Natives; and here and there ſome Veins of Gold, and other Metals: ſuch ſtore of Pitch, that innumerable Ships might be laden with it; but that it is conceived to be unfit for the calking of Ships, becauſe it ſoftneth in the Sun. The place in which it groweth is by the Spaniards called Terra de Brea, by the Natives Pichen.

The People of the ſame nature and diſpoſition with the other Americans, diſtinguiſhed into ſeveral Tribes, but moſt of them reduced under the power of two petit Princes. But the greateſt part of the Inhabitants, to avoid the Tyranny of the Spaniards, forſook their Country, and ferried over into Guiana, where before we found them. The chief Town of it called S. Joſephs, ſituate on the South-ſide of the Iſland, on the banks of a little River which the Natives call Carone, the ordinary Reſidence of the Governour, who hath under him beſides this Iſland the Provinces of Guiana and El Dorado, (for ſo goes his Titles) yet a ſmall Town, conſiſting but of 40 Houſes when it was taken, Anno 1595. by Sir Walter Raleigh; Antonio Berreo the Governour of it being then made Priſoner, who furniſhed his taker with many Notions (and ſome meerly fabulous) towards the Diſcovery of Guiana.

This Iſland, firſt diſcovered by Chriſtopher Columbus, in his third Voyage, Anno 1497. was by him called La Trinidad, it may be with ſome reference to the form hereof, ſhooting into the Sea with three points or Promontories. Nothing elſe memorable in the fortunes and Story of it, but what is touched upon before.

2. TABAGO lieth on the North-eaſt of La Trinidad, from which eight miles diſtant: full of ſafe Harbours for the bigneſs, watered with 18 little Rivers, and well ſtored with Woods; amongſt which ſome Palmito Trees, ſome like that of the Braſil-wood, others not elſewhere to be found. Of Fowl and Fiſh ſufficient to maintain it ſelf. Now called New Walcheren, with reference to an Iſland of that name in Zealand, by ſome of the Low-Country-men, who begin to plant there.

And ſo much for GUIANA.

PARIA.

PARIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Guiana, and the Iſlands in the mouth of the Orenoque; on the Weſt, with the Gulf or Bay of Venezuela, and part of the new Realm of Granada; on the North, with the main Atlantick Ocean, or Mare del Noordt; the Countries lying on the South not diſcovered hitherto.

It took this name from a miſtake of the Spaniards, (as Peru and Yucatan on the like) who asking, as all men do, the names of thoſe new Regions which they diſcovered, and pointing to the Hills afar off, were anſwered, Paria, that is to ſay, high Hills or Mountains, (for here begins the Ledge of Mountains which are thence continued for the ſpace of 3600 miles, to the Streights of Magellan:) and ſo hath it ever ſince held the name of Paria. By ſome Writers it is called Nova Andaluzia; but I adhere unto the former.

The nature of the Soil and People being very different, will be more properly conſidered in the ſeveral parts. The whole divided into the Continent and the Iſlands, which, with their Sub-diviſions may be branched into theſe particulars, viz. 1. Cumana. 2. Venezuela. 3. S. Margarita. 4. Cubagua; and 5. the leſſer Iſlands.

1. CUMANA hath on the Eaſt the Gulf of Paria, and the River Orenoque; on the Weſt, Venezuela; on the North and South bounded as before. So called from Cumana, one of the Rivers of it; on the banks whereof ſome Dominican Friers (who firſt ſet footing in this Country) built themſelves a Monaſtery; that name being communicated afterwards unto all the reſt of this Tract.

It is extended Eaſt and Weſt to the breadth of 110 Leagues; the length thereof, from North to South, ſaid to be 400. But there is little of it known, and leſs of it planted by the Europeans; except ſome places near the Sea: there being no part of all America, the deſcription whereof hath come so imperfectly to our hands, as it hath of this. For except it be the names of some Bays or Promontories, and of two or three most noted Rivers, there is not much that doth require our consideration.

on

The Countrey, for so much as hath been discovered, neither rich nor pleasant; and consequently the less looked after: covered with Shrubs, and overgrown with unprofitable Briers and Bushes. Heretofore famed for Pearl-fishing all along the Coast, from the Gulf of Paria to that of Venezuela, called therefore Costa de las Perlas; but that gainful Trade hath long since failed it. Now only of esteem for a Vein of most excellent Salt, found near the Promontory of Araya, and the Bay of Cariaco, gathered and digged up thereabouts in great abundance, and yet never diminishing. The parts adjoyning take from hence the name of Salina; the Promontory bordering on the Frith called Bocca del Drago, the Title or Appellation of Cape Salinas. Of some strange Creatures in this Country, as the Beast called Capa, the soles of whose Feet are like a Shoe, a kind of Hog, which lives altogether upon Ants or Pismires, Parrots and Bats of more than ordinary greatness, I forbear to speak.

Of the People I find nothing singular, except it be, that having plenty of good Fruits as of Fish and Flesh, they use themselves to a far worse Diet, feeding on Horse-leeches, Bats, Spiders, Grashoppers, Worms, Lice, and such other Vermin. In other things they seem to have a mixture of all ill Customs used amongst the Savages of Asia, Africa and America: as, multitudes of Wives; prostituting these Wives for the first Night's Lodging to the Piacos or Priests, and for any after, to their Guests; taking great pains to black their Teeth, and putting strange colours on their Bodies instead of Garments; high-minded, treacherous, and revengeful; accustomed to the use of poysoned Arrows, which they envenom with Snakes Bloud and other mixtures. In one thing onely differing from the rest of their Neighbours, which is, the fencing of their Grounds or Orchards with a Cotton thred, as high as ones Girdle; and an opinion which they have, that whosoever breaketh it, or goes over or under it, shall die immediately. More safe in that perswasion than by brazen Walls.

Rivers of most note, though of little, 1 Rio de Canoas, 2 Rio de Neveri, 3 Cumana de Bardones. The chief Havens or Roads for Shipping, 1 Moxino, 2 S. Foy, and 3 that called Commenagot. The places of most consideration, 1 Cumana, a Colony of Spaniards on the Bank of the River of that name, but distant about two miles from the Sea, on which it hath a safe and convenient Harbour: the Town so hedged about with Woods, that nothing can be seen of it till one come into it, except it be the Governour's House, seated upon the top of a lofty Mountain. 2 S. Jago, a strong Fortress built by the Spaniard for defence of the salt Lake, or Salinas, in the year 1622. on some intelligence that the Hollanders had a purpose to take them from him; fortified by the Rules of Art, and planted with 30 pieces of Ordnance, the one half of Brass. 3 S. Michael de Neveri, on the River so called, a Fort of the Spaniards. 4. Guaniba, a Village of the Natives.

The Country was first discovered in the third Voiage of Christopher Columbus; but the possession of it was first taken by two Dominicans, who out of a Religious zeal to plant the Gospel in these parts, founded themselves a little Cell in the place where the Burrough of Cumana was after built, Anno 1513. and doubtless had sped very well in their holy purpose, if some covetous Spaniards had not treacherously seized upon one of the Chiefs of their Tribes; and carried him with his Wife and Train into Spanish bondage. For this the poor Monks suffered death; I may call it Martyrdom: which was revenged by Alfonso de Oieda, Anno 1520. and he not long after slain by the Savages, who also at the same time destroy'd two Convents of Dominican and Franciscan Friers, which had been founded in the year 1518. A second Force sent hither under Gonsalvo de Ocampo, wasteth a great part of the Countrey, beheads one of their Kings, and hangs some of his People. But that strength being withdrawn or defeated also, Diego de Castellon is sent over by the Council resident in Hispaniola, to secure the possession of the Countrey; by whom the Castle first, and after the Burrough of Cumana was built and planted. Some other attempts there were for a farther Conquest, but they proved nothing but attempts; except the building of the Castle of S. Michael de Neveri, by Hierom of Ortal, and the Discovery of some of the inland Provinces, 150 Leagues from the Sea-side, by Antonio Sedenno, Anno 1537. of which nothing followed, but the Registring of that tedious March.

2. VENEZUELA is bounded on the East with Cumana; on the West, with the Bay of Venezuela, the Lake of Maracaybo, and the new Realm of Granada. So called by Alfonso de Oieda, one of the first Discoverers of it, Anno 1599. because he found a Burrough of some of the Savages situate in the midst of the Waters, to which was no passage but by Boat: the word importing as much as Little Venice.

It is in length from East to West 130 Leagues; in breadth where broadest about 80. The Soil so plentiful of all sorts both of Fruit and Grain, the Countrey so repleniished with all kind of Cattel, and excellent Pastures to maintain them, that the Neighbouring Nations call it by the name of the Granary. Such store there goeth from hence of Wheaten Meal, Bisket, Cheese, Hogs-flesh, Ox-hides, and Cloth of Cotton ready made, as very well deserves that Title. Here is also very great plenty of Fish, wild Beasts for hunting, Mines of Gold and other Metals: besides an infinite deal of Sarsaparilla sent to Europe yearly.

The People are of the same Nature and Disposition with those of Cumana, with whom they do participate in all points of that Character. The Women (which was there omitted) trained up to ride, run, leap, and swim, as well as the men to till the Land; and look to the business of the House, whilst the men hunt or fish to bring in Provision. They count it a great part of Beauty to have very thick Thighs; which they effect by binding their Legs hard below the Knee from their very Childhood. Shameless enough till married, after more reserved; though rather for fear of a Divorce, than for love of Modesty.

Rivers of note I meet with none instead of which are many convenient Harbors and capacious Bays. The chief, that called Golfo triste, from some Shipwrecks, or the like misfortune happening to the Namer of it. 2 The Bay of Coro, or Venezuela, large and spacious, which by the Frith or Streight of half a League over, receiveth the Tribute of 3 The great Lake called the Lake of Maracaybo, by the Spaniards called Lago de Nuestra Sennora, or our Ladie's Lake, in compass about eighty Leagues; on the Banks whereof dwell many Nations of the Savages, and into which there falleth a River from the Realm of Granada, by which the two Provinces maintain Commerce with one another.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Maracapana, the fartheſt Port upon the East, and one of the best on all this Coast; in which the Spaniards of Cubagua had once a Garrison, under colour of defending the Countrey against the Savages, but in plain truth to use it for an opportunity to seize upon their persons, and carry them away for Slaves. Those parts are hereby unpeopled, or but meanly populous. 2. Venezuela, the moſt Weſtern Town of all the Province, commonly called Coro, ſituate in the Latitude of 11 Degrees: built on the Sea, where it hath an Haven on each ſide; the one capacious but not ſafe, the other ſafe enough, but not very capacious. But being built in a ſweet and healthy Air, and neighboured by the richeſt Soil of all the Countrey, it hath been long the ordinary Seat of the Governour, and the See of a Biſhop, (Suffragan to the Archbiſhop of Domingo in Hiſpaniola.) Once ſuddenly ſurprized by the Engliſh, Anno 1595. and burnt to aſhes; but as ſuddenly repaired again. 3. Caravalleda, or Nueſtra Sennora de Caravalleda, 80 Leagues from Coro towards the Eaſt, ſeated upon the Sea near an unſafe Haven, and defended from aſſault by the Caſtle of Caracas; ſo called from the name of the Tribe in which it ſtandeth. Near unto which the Hills ariſe to ſo great an height, that they ſeem to equal the Pike of Tenariffe ſo much talked of. 4. S. Jago de Leon, in the ſame Tribe of Caracas, taken by the Engliſh in the ſame year. 5. Nova Valentia, 25 Leagues from S. Jago de Leon, and from Coro 60. 6. New Xeres lately built, fifteen leagues on the South of New Valentia. 7. Nova Segovia, one league onely from New Xeres; ſituate on the Banks of Baraquicemiti, the moſt noted River of this Tract. 8. Tucayo, in the Valley ſo called; not very large, but plentifully loaded with rich Sugar-canes, for which ſome Sugar-works or Ingenios are here lately built. 9. Truxillo, or Nueſtra Sennora de la Paz, 18 leagues on the South of the great Lake of Maracaybo, on which the Inhabitants hereof have a Village which belongs unto it, where they hold a Factory for the ſale of their Wares. 10. Laguna, on the bottom of the Lake it ſelf; not elſe obſervable but for the multitude of Tigers which do haunt about it.

This Countrey, diſcovered by Columbus, and named by Alfonſo de Oeida, as before is ſaid, was firſt pretended to, for Neighbourhood's ſake, by the Spaniards planted in Cubagna. Afterwards John de Anpuez, by order from the Council reſident at Domingo in Hiſpaniola, was employed in the Diſcovery of it, Anno 1527. But Charles the Fifth, having taken up great ſums of money of the Velſeri, a wealthy Family of Augſburg, pawned this Countrey to them; by whom Ambroſius Alfinger was ſent with 400 Foot, and 80 Horſe to take poſſeſſion. But he and his Succeſſors in that Employment not minding ſo much the Conqueſt as the Spoil of the Countrey, the Council of Domingo undertook the buſineſs once again; and in the year 1545. ſent over one John de Caravayal, who treading in the ſteps of the Germans, or rather out-going them in all ſorts of Rapine, was outed on a ſecond Order by one John Perez de Toloſa, by whom the Province was reduced into ſome good order. In the year 1550. the Negroes, brought hither in great multitudes out of Africk, began to mutiny; but their deſign was diſcovered, and themſelves all ſlain. Peace and contentment following after all theſe Troubles, the Countrey was in little time ſo throughly planted, and the Natives ſo encouraged in their ſeveral Tribes, that notwithſtanding the deſtructions made by the Germans and Spaniards, here were reckoned not long ſince above 100000 of the Savages; not numbring thoſe above fifty, or under 18 years of Age; who, by an Order of the Council of Spain for theſe parts of America, are exempt from Taxes.

3. MARGARITA is an Iſland ſituate over againſt the Salina or Salt-Lake in Cumana, from the main Land whereof, it is diſtant about ſeven Leagues. So called from the abundance of Pearls which the Spaniards found at the firſt Diſcovery, which the Latiniſts call Margaritas, and from them the Spaniards. Which though it ſignifie no other than the vulgar or common Pearl, yet here were alſo ſtore of thoſe of the greater eſtimate, ſuch as the Romans by the figure of Antiphraſis called Uniones, becauſe they always grew in couples. Nulli duo reperiuntur indiſcreti, ſaith Pliny; unde nomen Unionum ſcilicet Romanæ impoſuere delicie.

The Iſle is affirmed to be 16 Leagues in length, and ſix in breadth; ſituate under the 11 Degree of Northern Latitude. Well ſtored with Pearls upon the Shores, when firſt diſcovered; but even then, when moſt plentifully ſtored with that Commodity, ſhe had not Water of her own to quench her thirſt, compelled to fetch it from Cumana. Otherwiſe plentiful enough both of Maize and Fruit. The People obſequiouſly ſervile to their Lords, the Spaniards; ſo long accuſtomed unto Bondage, that it is now grown another nature. Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Monpater, in the Eaſt corner of the Iſland; a Fort of the Spaniards, built for ſecuring their rich Trade of Pearl-fiſhing, and to defend their Ships which lie there at Anchor: within the command whereof is a little Burrough, and the Houſe of the Governour. 2. El valle de Santa Luzia, two leagues from the Sea, a Spaniſh Colony. 3. Makanao, the chief Village of the Natives.

This Iſland, firſt diſcovered in the third Voyage of Columbus, Anno 1498. grew ſuddenly into great eſteem, by reaſon of the rich Pearl-fiſhing which they found on the Shores thereof. And in regard the Natives were ſo ready to betray their Treaſures, (of which themſelves made little reckoning) they found more favour from the Spaniards, and obtained more Liberties from the King, than the reſt of the Savages. Inſomuch that the Spaniards either could not, or would not compel them to dive into the Sea for Pearl; but bought Negroe Slaves from Guinea and the Coaſts of Africk, whom they inforced with great Torments to dive into the bottom of the Sea, many times ſeven or eight Fathom deep, to bring up the Shels in which that Treaſure was included: where many of them were drowned, and ſome maimed with Sharks and other Fiſhes. But that rich Trade is much diminiſhed of late, if it fail not quite. The cauſe thereof to be imputed to the unſatiable Avarice of the Spaniards, ſo greedy upon Pearl, that they deſtroyed the very Seed, and making gain of whatſoever they could meet with, for a little preſent profit, loſt the hopes of the future. The Iſland is ſince leſs famous, and not much frequented. Viſited to its coſt in the year 1601. by the Engliſh under Captain Parker, who received here 500 l. in Pearls for the ranſom of Priſoners; and took a Ship which came from the Coaſt of Angola, laden with 370 Negroes to be ſold for Slaves.

4. CUBAGNA is an Iſland lying betwixt Margarita and the Promontory of Aroya upon the Continent; from the firſt diſtant but one League, from the other ſix; it ſelf in compaſs about three. Rich on the ſhores by the abundance of Pearls which were found about them, but very beggerly on the Land. Deſtitute both of Graſs and Water, by conſequence of Cattel alſo, except onely Conies, and but few of thoſe. So that like many a Gallant, who ſpend all upon the Back, and nothing on the Belly, ſhe had her out-ſide laced with Pearls, but within nothing to be found but want and hunger. Their Bread and Water brought them out of other Countreys, and their Fruits too, if they deſired to have any; here being very few Trees, and thoſe moſt of Guaiacum. But ſo abundant in this Treaſure, that the Kings Fifths for many years amounted to 15000 Ducats yearly out of this poor Iſland.

In this reſpect it was preſently reſorted to and poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, who planted here a Colony, which they called New Cadiz, and grew in ſhort time unto ſo great power, that they made themſelves Maſters of the Port of Maracapana in Venezuela, one of the beſt upon thoſe Seas. But in the year 1521. hearing that the Savages of Cumana had deſtroyed the Convent of Franciſcans cans on the oppoſite ſhore, they cowardly forſook the Iſland, and fled to Hiſpaniola. Sent back again by the Council there, under the Conduct of James de Caſtellon, by whom the Town was made more beautiful and ſtrong then ever formerly. In great eſteem as long as the Pearl-fiſhing did continue; now, with that, decayed. Yet ſtill the Iſland doth deſerve ſome conſideration for a Fountain on the Eaſt part of it near unto the Sea, continuing, though the Pearls be gone; which yieldeth a Bituminous ſubſtance like Oyl, medicinable for Diſeaſes, and is found two or three Leagues off floating on the Sea: more profitable for the good of Mankind, and more eaſily found, than the Pearls, which ſunk unto the bottom, and maintained our Pride.

Four miles from hence, but appendent to it, lieth a little Iſland called Coche, three miles in compaſs, but ſo abundantly ſtored with Pearls, that it hath been worth in that one Commodity, for ſome months together, above a thouſand pounds a moneth of our Engliſh money. Firſt peopled upon that occaſion, Anno 1529. but the occaſion failing, the Plantation ended, the Iſle being now unpeopled, as not worth the looking after.

5. The LESSER ISLANDS of this Prefecture, or Provincial Government, lie all along upon the Coaſt of Venezuela, from Eaſt to Weſt. The principal of which, 1. Tortuga, 12 or 14 miles on the Weſt of Margarita: four miles in length, hardly one in breadth; but yielding ſuch good ſtore of Salt, that three or four Ships are laded with it every year. Well furniſhed with Goats and Guaiacum, but not elſe conſiderable; except for being naturally fenced about with Rocks, and yielding a convenient Harbour for the uſe of Mariners. 2. Catelina, by the Engliſh called The Iſle of Providence, as the former is by the name of Aſſociation; both which, being void of all Inhabitants and tame Beaſts, were poſſeſſed by them about the year 1629. at ſuch time as there was open War between England and Spain. After which, not being claimed by the Spaniards in making up the Peace enſuing, they were granted by King Charles, by his Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England, to certain Noblemen and Gentlemen, and their Succeſſors, who for the ſpace of 20 years, or thereabouts, have enjoyed them quietly; the Iſlands being planted by them with their ſeveral Colonies, and all things neceſſary to maintain and enrich the ſame. 3. Bonaire, oppoſite to the Bay of Golfo triſte, in the Latitude of 12 degrees; well furniſhed with Sheep and Goats, and other Cattel brought out of Spain, and peopled with ſome Savages out of Hiſpaniola, whom the Spaniards Chriſtened and ſent thither: ſome Spaniards with their Governour intermixt amongſt them. The Iſland 16 miles in compaſs; not fruitful naturally, but in Trees, which are great and numerous. 4. Curacaos, nine miles on the Weſt of Bonaire, and as many in compaſs; of a more fertile Soil by far, and of very rich Paſtures. The people are given to Grazing, and make good ſtore of Cheeſe, tranſported thence to other places; the Iſland having toward the North a convenient Harbour. 5. Aruba, on the North-Eaſt of Curacaos, from which nine miles diſtant, in compaſs not above five miles, for the moſt part level. One Hill it hath (amongſt ſome others) faſhioned like a Sugar-loaf. Inhabited by few Savages, and fewer Spaniards.

The other Iſlands on this Coaſt, as, 1. the Toſtigos, lying Eaſtward of Margarita, 2. Blancha, 3. Orchilla, 4. Rocca, and 5. the Iſle of des Aves, or of Birds, interpoſed betwixt Tortuga and Bonaire, ſome of them rather Rocks than Iſlands, few ſtored with any living Creatures for the uſe of men, and none of them at all with men to manure and dreſs them, I paſs over here; and ſo proceed from theſe Iſlands of the Province of Paria, to thoſe which are ſubordinate to the Council of S. Domingo, and make a Province of themſelves. But firſt we muſt go back, and bring up ſome of the Iſlands of Mare del Zur, which could not be reduced to any of the former Provinces.

And ſo much of PERUANA.

Of the American Iſlands:

And firſt of thoſe which are in

MARE del ZUR.

THE AMERICAN ISLANDS ſcattered up and down the Shores of this New World, are commonly divided into thoſe of Mare del Zur, or the Pacifick Ocean, and thoſe of the Atlantick, or Mare del Noordt. The firſt ſo called by Magellanus, the firſt Diſcoverer, who, paſſing through thoſe troubleſom and tempeſtuous Streights which now bear his name, found ſuch a change upon his coming into the Main, that he gave it the name of Mare del Zur, (quod à tranquillitate vocavit Mare del Sur, ſaith the Author of the Atlas Minor) from the calm and peaceable temper of it; by the Latines called Mare Pacificum, in the ſame regard. Called alſo the Southern Ocean, becauſe of its ſituation on the South-ſide of America, in reference to ſome part of the Gulf of Mexico and the Streights of Anian. Not known unto the Spaniards till diſcovered by Nonnius Vaſquez de Balboa, conducted hither by one of the Caciques or petty Kings of the Countrey about Nombre di Dios; who ſeeing the Spaniards ſo greedy after Gold, told them that he would bring them to a place where their thirſt ſhould be ſatisfied. Accordingly he brought them to the oppoſite Shore, this Balboa being the chief man in that Adventure: who diſcovering farther on the Sea, opened the way unto Pizarro, and the reſt that followed, to the golden Treaſures of Peru. He was executed notwithſtanding this good ſervice, by Don Pedro de Avila, within ſhort time after. But the more full diſcovery of it is to be aſcribed unto Magellanus, and ſome later Adventurers, though the Spaniards got nothing by the bargain. For formerly, as long as the Southern Sea was unknown to any but themſelves, they conveyed their Gold and treaſures from one place to another, from Panama to Peru, from Peru to Panama, without loſs or charge, and thought their Ports upon that Shore to be unacceſſible

But after the way unto this Sea was found out by Magellanus; Drake, Cavendiſh, and the reſt of our Engliſh Adventurers did ſo ſcour theſe Coaſts, that they left them neither Port nor Ship which they did not ranſack; as hath been evidenced before in ſome particulars.

As for the Iſlands of this Sea, they lie moſt of them ſo near the Shores, as if placed there by Nature to ſerve as Outworks to defend the Continent. Many in tale, but few of conſideration; and of thoſe few, ſome of the chief have been deſcribed already in their proper places, as parts and members of the Province upon which they lie. The reſidue, which lie too far off to come under ſuch conſideration, muſt be mentioned here; and thoſe reduced to theſe two Heads, 1. Los Ladrones, 2. The Iſlands of John Fernandes.

1. LOS LADRONES are certain Iſlands ſituate betwixt the main Land of America and the Philippine Iſlands, in the Latitude of 185. and the 4. Degree of Northern Latitude. So called by Magellanus, who firſt diſcovered them, becauſe of the Thieviſhneſs of the Inhabitants, (Inſulæ Latronum is their name in Latine) who had ſtoln his Cock-boat, which he was forced by main force to recover from them. And they continue ſtill both their name and nature. Found ſuch by Cavendiſh and Noort in their ſeveral Voyages, to whom they came under colour of buying Iron, (a Commodity which they highly prize) but either cloſely or openly ſtealing whatſoever they met with. The People tall of ſtature, brown of complexion, and inclining to corpulency; extreamly active, and good Divers, continuing a long time under the Water, as if alike fitted to both Elements; inſomuch as the Hollanders then with Noort, to make trial of it, caſt five pieces of Iron into the Sea, all fetched out by one of them. The Women as good at it as the Men. Both Sexes given to filthy and promiſcuous Luſts; for which branded (many of them) with the marks of their Incontinency, the Pox having eaten up both their Lips and their Noſes.

Their Religion is worſhipping the Devil, whoſe Images they have in Wood on the Head of their Boats; the Chappel and the Saints fit for ſuch Devotions. But for the nature of theſe Iſlands, and what Subjection the Inhabitants of it yield to the King of Spain, I am yet to ſeek. But like enough they yield as little as ſome others do, which yet are reckoned by our Authours to be parts of America.

2. The Iſlands of John Fernandes are two in number; ſo called from John Fernandes, the firſt Diſcoverer, Anno 1574: each of them five or ſix miles in compaſs, and about 300 miles diſtant from the Shores of Chile. Situate in the 33 Degree of Southern Latitude; rocky and barren, but well wooded, and thoſe woods repleniſhed with Goats, but their fleſh not ſavoury as in other places. Some ſtore of Sanders there is in them, and of Palms no ſcarcity. Plenty of Fiſh upon the Shores, for which cauſe viſited ſometimes by the Spaniards lying in Peru, and fitted with commodious Harbours and Roads for ſhipping, which makes them not neglected by other Nations as they paſs this way. None elſe of note in all this Sea, but ſuch as lie upon the Shores of their ſeveral Provinces; which we have looked upon already. And therefore paſſing through the Streights, and coming up unto the Iſlands of Paria, where before we left, we will now look on thoſe of Mare del Noords, or that part of the Atlantick which waſheth the Shores of this New World (the reaſon of which Names we have ſeen before) ſubordinate to the Council or Government of S. Domingo; viz. 1. the Caribes, 2. Porto Rico, 3. Hiſpaniola, 4. Cuba, and 5. Jamaica. The reſt are already ſpoken of in their proper places.

1. The CARIBES.

THe CARIBES, or Cannibal Iſlands, are in number many; 27 of them known by their proper names; the reſt of leſs note, (though ſome of theſe of little enough) not yet ſo diſtinguiſhed. Called thus in general, becauſe inhabited by Cannibals, & man-eating people (at their diſcovery) as the word Caribes doth import. They lie extended like a Bow from the coaſt of Paria unto the Iſle of Rico Porto: of different temper, as muſt needs be in ſuch variety; & therefore not within the compaſs of a general Character. Some of the principal we ſhall conſider more diſtinctly; and for the reſt, 'tis enough to name them, or elſe we will paſs them by.

1. GRANADA, the neareſt of this crew to the Main Land of Cumana, is ſituate in the Latit. of 20 Deg. and 15 Min. in form like a Creſcent or half Moon, the two horns not a mile aſunder, the whole length but ſix. Shaded all over with thick Woods, but notwithſtanding of a rich and fruitful Soil. A Haven in it of good uſe, but no Town of note. The people of the ſame ill Condition with the other Savages, but more wit to hide it; moſt miſchievouſly intended when they ſeem moſt kind, & then moſt to be avoided.

2. S. VINCENT, 18 miles on the North of Granada, is of ſo bleſſed a Soil, that it brings forth abundance of Sugar-canes without charge to the Husbandman; watered with many pleaſant Rivers, and full of ſafe and convenient Bays for the uſe of Mariners. In figure Circular: the Diameter being 6 miles over; the Circle by conſequence 18. The people but of mean ſtature, ſlothful, and ſtudious only for the Belly: their love to which, makes them adventure in their ſmall Boats, hewn out of the body of a tree, to paſs into the Continent, and return again without help of the Compaſs; though diſtant from it, at the neareſt, above 30 miles.

3. BARBADOS, on the North-eaſt of S. Vincent, in the Latitude of 13 Deg. and 20 Min. Of an Oval form, 17 or 18 miles in compaſs. The ſoil in ſhew like that of England, but far more fruitful. On the Eaſt-ſide thruſting out it ſelf with Points and Angles, which yield ſome Bays; but full of Quick-ſands, and unſafe for ſhipping: on the South furniſhed with a large and commodious Harbour. Not very well provided of for Fruits or Cattel, till made a Colony of the Engliſh, who brought thither from their own Country Swine and Kine, Oranges and the like from others. The chief Commodity hitherto made of this Plantation comes by the planting of Tobacco, and by a kind of courſe Sugar called Barbados Sugar, which muſt be quickly ſpent, or it will melt to nothing. Were they in ſtock, and not forced to make a quick return of their Commodities, they might make here as good Sugars as in other places. Yet this Plantation is ſaid to be worth all the reſt which are made by the Engliſh, who (as I take it) are the ſole Colony in the Iſland; but at the courteſie of the Spaniard, without whoſe leave and liking not of force to hold it.

4. MANTININO, on the North-weſt of the Barbados, by the Savages called Mandaninam, with little difference. Everywhere ſwelled with hills: of which 3 are moſt eminent for height: one of them, which way ſoever a man looks upon it, carrying the reſemblance of an Hat. Inhabited in the time of Peter Martyr, the Hiſtorian, with none but women; afterwards with a more fierce & barbarous people than the reſt of theſe Iſlands: but neither men or women to be ſeen of late: whether deſtroyed, or removed farther from the ſhores for fear of their deſtruction, is a thing uncertain.

5. DOMINICA, ſeated on the North of Mantinino, nino, twelve leagues in length; exceeding fruitful of Tobacco, which they sell unto the Europæans for Hatchets, Knives, and other Instruments of Iron. Famed for two Fountains of Hot Water, and a commodious Haven at the West-side of it, into which falleth a River 20 paces broad. The People as barbarous as ever, Cannibals or Man-eaters to this very day. At deadly enmity with the Spaniards, and to no man trusty, but where they cannot hurt, or dare not. Both Sexes wear their hair long, and colour their bodies over with Oaker. Yet bloudy and barbarous though they be, they are ruled by a King of their own, distinguished from the rest in his dress or habit, whom they most readily obey.

6. DESEADA, or the Land of Desire, on the North-east of Dominica, discovered by Columbus in his second Voyage, naked of Trees, and at the first sight afar off not unlike a Galley. Of great use to the Spaniards, who always take it in their way from the Canaries to these parts of America, and back again at their return.

The like use do they make of 7. The Isle of GUARDALUPE, parallel to this, but directly Westward: at which the Fleets which come from Spain use to take fresh water, and there disperse themselves to their several Ports. Eight miles in length, and of good Anchorage in most parts of the Sea adjoyning. North-east from hence lieth

8. S. Maria del Antigua, commonly called ANTIGUA only, and by some mistakingly ANTEGO. Seven leagues in length, and as many in breadth; difficult of access, and destitute of fresh water; but well replenished with Woods, and provided of Fens. Of late times made a Colony of the English, who do still possess it.

9. S. CHRISTOPHERS, on the North-west of Guardalupe, in the Lat. of 17 Deg. and 20 Min. The length six miles, the breadth in many places four, and in some but two: much swelled with Hills, and towards the East provided of several Salt wiches. The French and English had sometimes in it several Colonies, by whom the Natives were destroyed, or otherwise compelled to forsake their Dwellings; convict, as was pretended, of some manifest Treacheries. But the two Colonies did not long enjoy the sole possession; ejected by Frederick de Toledo, as he passed this way with his Navy; though suffered to return to their former dwellings, as rather profitable than dangerous to the Crown of Spain. Their chief Employment and Commodity lies in their Tobacco, by some much commended. Joyning hereto, or but a league from it at the most, is

10. The Isle of NEVIS, which is affirmed to be five leagues in compass; well wooded, and as pleasantly watered; insomuch as the Inhabitants of the Isle of Dominica used to come hither for their pleasures, but for Hunting chiefly. Now famed for some Baths or Hot-waters, found out by the English, who, in the year 1528. placed a Colony in it. But whether subsisting of it self, or a part of their Plantation in S. Christophers, I am yet to learn.

11. SANCTA CRUX, by the Inhabitants called Ayay, on the North-west of S. Christophers, and the South-east of Porto Rico, from which last distant 15 Leagues. Woody and Mountainous, not well provided of fresh Waters; but on the west side furnished with a safe and commodious Road, under the covert of the Mountains. Amongst their Fruits are some that resemble a green Apple, which tasted, so inflames the Tongue, that for 24 hours it swelleth in so great extremity, as makes it altogether useless; but after that, by little and little it abates again. The like happeneth also to the Face, if washed before Sun-rising with their Fen-waters, which are very frequent in this Island; after the rising of the Sun, without any harm at all. In this there is a Colony of the English also, but of later standing than those of S. Christophers and Barbados.

Some of the principal of the rest are 1. Anguilla, 2. Barbada, 3. S. Bartholomews, 4. S. Lucies, 5. S. Martins, 6. Monserrat, 7. Rotunda, 8. Saba, 9. Virgogorda, and 10. Sumbrero; of which we have little but the names: the rest, though known by several names, are not worth the naming. Only we are to adde concerning the whole Nation of Caribes, once here inhabiting, that they did usually hunt for Men, as Men for Beasts, roving as far as Porto Rico, to seek after their prey; and what they caught was sure to go to the pot, in the worst sense too. Columbus, when he was at the Isle of Guardalupe, found 30 Captive Children which were reserved to be eaten, and in their Houses divers Vessels filled with Man's flesh, and some upon the Spit ready to be roasted. Not had they laid aside this Diet till after the year 1564. but how long I know not: For at that time a Spanish Ship coming to Water at the Isle of Dominica, they cut her Cables in the night, haled her to the Land, and devoured all that were in her. But the Islands have been of late times well cleared of those Monsters; some of them brought unto better order, but the most destroyed, as the common Enemies of Mankind; the Islands where they dwelt being either totally deserted, or taken up by the Europæans, and their several Colonies.

2. PORTO RICO and MONICO.

PORTO RICO lieth on the North-west of Sancta Crux, from which distant about 15 Leagues, and near upon as many from Hispaniola; 136 Leagues from the main Land of Paria, and not much less from the Cape of Coquibocco in Rio de la Hacha, a Province of Castella Aurea. It took this name from the chief Town and Haven of it; but was called by Columbus at the first Discovery S. Johannis Insula, or the Isle of S. John, by the Natives Boriguen.

It is situate under the 18 and 19 Degrees of Northern Latitude; in form quadrangular, but of a greater length than breadth, such as the Geometricians call oblongam: the length hereof being 30 Leagues, and the breadth but 20. The Air hereof is very pleasant and temperate, not scorched with furious Heats in Summer, nor made offensive by the fall of continual Rains; exposed sometimes (chiefly in August and September) to the troublesomness of sudden tempests, called Hurricanoes. The Soil is indifferently fruitful, though somewhat Mountainous: here being (besides other Hills of inferiour note) a Ridge of high Hills which run cross the Countrey from the one end unto the other. Their chief Commodities are Sugar-canes, Ginger, Cassia, and great store of Hides: the Europæans Cattel having so abundantly increased, that they kill thousands for their Skins, leaving the flesh to be a prey unto Dogs and Birds. Some Mines here were of Gold and Silver, but consumed long since. And so are all the Natives also; of whom, in that respect, it is impertinent to give any Character.

Chief Rivers of the Island, 1. Cairobon, 2. Boyaman; of divers Fountains, and of several and divided Courses. 3. Luysa, and 4. Toa; two Rivers growing out of one. The Spring of that one is in the Mountains of Guayamo, whence running Northwards in one Channel 16 Leagues together, it afterwards divides it self into those two streams. 5. Guiano, 6. Arezibo, 7. Guadiabo, of lesser note; but all of them, as well as all the rest before, concluding in some safe and capacious Haven.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Porto Rico, the chief Town, built in a little Island, on the North-side of the greater greater, but joyned unto it with huge Piles at vast expences, by the command of Philip the First, Anno 1504. Well built, with large Streets and convenient Houses, according to the Model of the Cities of Spain, and beautified with a fair Cathedral; the Bishop one of the Suffragans of the Archbishop of S. Domingo in Hispaniola. The Town unwalled, but fortified with two strong Castles; the one of which secures the Haven, and the other the Town. In vain attempted, and with the loss of 40 or 50 men, by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1595. but taken two years after by George Earl of Cumberland, who had a purpose to have peopled it with an English Colony. Discouraged from it by the death of 400 of his Men, by change of Air, and some intemperance of Diet, he set sail for England, doing no other hurt to the Town or Island, but the disfurnishing it of 70 pieces of Ordnance, and some part of their Treasure, which he brought home with him. 2. S. Germans, in the Western part of the Island, but four Leagues from the Sea; once the chief of the Island, now both unfortified and small. 3. Arezibo, on the River so called. 4. Luysa, the most noted Port of the Eastern parts, situate on the mouth of the River so named.

Eastward hereof, betwixt it and Hispaniola, lies the Island of Mona (might not this, think we, be so called by Madoc ap Owen Gwinedth, of whom before?) three leagues in compass; Rocky, and of a brackish Earth, but fit for the production of Limons, Oranges, and such kind of Fruit, which are here in plenty. Not far off, but more towards the West, Monico, or Monetta, as our English call it; where they found such infinite store of Fowl, that they flew over their heads as thick as Hail, and made them almost deaf with the very noise; their Eggs so thick upon the ground that they loaded two Boats with them in three hours, and could hardly pass forwards without treading on them.

But to return to Porto Rico, or the Island of S. Johns: it was touched upon by Columbus in his second Voyage, Anno 1493. but first inhabited by John Ponce of Leon, Anno 1510. who being courteously entertained by Aiguabana, the chief Prince thereof, planted a Colony of Spaniards in the North part of the Island, which he called Caparra. The Colony ten years after that removed to Guanica, and from thence to S. Germans: carrying with it the repute of the chief Town of all the Island, upon every remove, till the building of Porto Rico, where it since hath fixed. The Island very populous for the bigness of it when the Spaniards came to it: but the Natives were long ago consumed by several Butcheries; and, as some write, not above 1500 Spaniards are in all the Countrey. What else concerns the Story of it, we have seen before.

2. HISPANIOLA.

HISPANIOLA lieth on the West of Porto Rico; the distance we have seen already. By the Inhabitants called Haity, and by some Quisqueia; but by Columbus it was honoured with the name of Hispaniola, or Little Spain; and of late times beginneth to be called S. Domingo, from the chief Town of it.

The form thereof is Triangular, extended in a sharp Angle, called Cabo del Engano, towards Porto Rico; the Western end fashioned like a Bay or Semicircle; the Northern point of which is named S. Nicholas, the Southern, Cabo de Donna Maria. The length affirmed to be 150 Leagues, the breadth in some places 60, in some but 30, thence growing less and less, till it come unto the Eastern Angle; the whole compass estimated at 400. Situate betwixt the 18 and 20 Degrees of Northern Latitude. Of an Air much infested with Morning-heats; but cooler in the Afternoon, by the constant blowing of a Sea-Gale, which they there commonly call Virson.

The Countrey is for the most part beautiful and flourishing; the Trees always in their Summer-livery, and the Meadows green, as if it did enjoy a perpetual Spring. In many places swelled with high craggy Mountains, whence the name of Haity, that word so signifying in the natural Language of the Natives. Of such an excellent Herbage, that the Cattel brought hither out of Spain have increased almost beyond Arithmetick; grown wild for want of proper owners, and hunted unto death like the Stags of the Forrest, though onely to rob them of their Skins. The Soil so fertile, that in the space of 16 days Herbs and Roots will grow ripe, and be fit to be eaten. So plentifully stored with Ginger and Sugar-canes, that in the year 1587. there were shipped hence 27500 pound weight of Ginger, and 900 Chests of refined Sugar: an evident argument of the richness and fertility of it. A farther proof hereof may be, 1. The rich Mines of Gold, in which they used to find Gold without mixture of dross or other Metals. 2. The great increase of Sugar, one Cane here filling twenty, sometimes thirty measures. 3. The wonderful yield of Corn, amounting in some places to an hundred-fold. But the Mines were long ago exhausted, insomuch as the Inhabitants are fain to use brass Money: but instead of those of Gold, they have found out others of Brass and Iron, and some few of Silver; but not much searched into of late, for want of Workmen.

The reason of that Want is to be ascribed unto the Covetousness and Cruelty of the Spanish Nation: who, out of an unsatiable thirst for Gold, consumed the people in their Mines; and out of the like thirst for Bloud, killed so many of them, that in few years they destroyed three Millions of the Natives. And it is probably supposed, that had not Charles the Fifth restrained them by a penal Edict from compelling the Natives against their wills to those works of Servitude, there had not been one Native left in all this Island, nor in any other part of their Plantations. Such as are left are said to be of low stature, of black hair, and a complexion somewhat inclining to that colour: not differing in Manners, Habit, or Religion, from the Spaniards there.

Rivers of most note are, 1. Ozama, on whose Banks stands Domingo, the chief Town of the Island capable of the greatest ships to the very Wharf. 2. Nigua, which passing through the rich Pastures, or making the Pastures rich by its secret vertue, runneth towards the West: as do also, 3. Yaquimo, 4. Nizao, and 5. Neyba, 6. Hayna, of a contrary course to the other three. 7. Yaqui, or Jacho, which falleth into the Northern Seas. 8. Nicayagu, 9. Cocitemico, 10. Xanique. These three last famous heretofore fore their Sands of Gold. Some speak of 30000 Brooks and Rivers which are found in this Countrey; two parts of which vast number had their golden Sands. A thing so far beyond the charity of the strongest Faith, (though reported by a Grave and Reverend Author) that I know not what interpretation to put upon it, except every Water-course, Ditch, and Gutter, may be reckoned in.

The whole divided when the Spaniards first came amongst them, into several Provinces or Kingdoms: as, 1. Higuey, 2. Jacuagua, 3. Samana, in the Eastern parts: 4. Yaquimo, 5. Boaruco, and 6. Xaragua, towards the South; and 7. Guahabu, and 8. Cabaya, in the West; and in the North, 9. Cibao, rich in Mines of Gold, 10. Marien, the Landing-place of Columbus, and 11. Maguana, in the Centre of the Island, the King whereof in the time of Columbus was named Conabo, of greatest power of any of those petit Royelets. Another division of it hath been made by Nature, parting it by four Rivers, all rising from one Mountain in the midst of the Island, into four Divisions:

ons; 1. the River Jacbo, running towards the North, 2. Nubiba, haſtning to the South, 3. Yuna, or Junna, towards the Eaſt, and 4. Hatibonico, to the Weſt. But theſe diviſions being long ſince grown out of uſe, we will ſurvey the chief of the Towns and Cities of it, as they come before us.

And they are, 1. S. Domingo, firſt built by Bartholomew Columbus, Anno 1494, on the Eaſt Bank of the Ozama; and afterwards (in the year 1502) removed by Nicholas de Obando, then Governour of the Iſland, to the oppoſite ſhore. Situate in a pleaſant Country among wealthy Paſtures, and neighboured with a ſafe and capacious Haven: the Houſes elegantly built, moſt of them of ſtone, and the whole well walled; beſide a Caſtle at the Weſt end of the Peer to defend the Haven: enriched by the Reſidence of the Governour, the Courts of Juſtice, the See of an Archbiſhop, and (beſides many Convents and Religious Houſes) an Hoſpital endowed with 20000 Ducats of yearly Rent. Eſteemed of greateſt Trade and Concourſe of Merchants, till the taking of Mexico and the Diſcovery of Peru; ſince that time ſenſibly decaying, and now reduced unto the number of 600 Families of Spaniards; the greateſt part of the City, and all the Suburbs, inhabited by Negroes, Mulattos, and other Strangers. Not yet recovered of the hurt it had by Sir Francis Drake, who in the year 1586 took it by force, and held it for the ſpace of a month, burning the greateſt part of the Houſes, and ſuffering the reſt to be redeemed at a certain price. 2. S. Salvador, 28 Leagues to the Eaſt of Domingo. 3. Jaguana, called alſo Sancta Maria del Porto, from a ſafe and beautiful Haven adjoyning to it; ſituate in the Weſt part of the Iſland: of no great bigneſs, conſiſting of no more then 150 Houſes when it was at the greateſt; but made much leſs by Captain Newport, who, in the year 1591, burnt it to the ground. 4. Cotuy, in the North of the Iſland, oppoſite to Sancta Domingo, from which diſtant almoſt ſixty Leagues: a little Town, but formerly of great eſteem for its Mines of Gold. 5. Conception de la Vega, the foundation of Chriſtopher Columbus, for whoſe ſake afterwards adorned with a See Epiſcopal. 6. Puerto de la Plata, 40 Leagues from Domingo on the Northern ſhore, there built on a commodious Bay by Nicholas de Obando before mentioned, by him alſo fortified: the ſecond Town of Wealth and Trade in all the Iſland. 7. Azua, now called Compoſtella, a noted Haven, and reſorted to for Sugars, which it yields abundantly.

This Iſland was firſt diſcovered by Columbus, (for I believe not that it was any of the Fortunate Iſlands which we read of in the life of Sertorius) in the firſt Voyage which he made, conducted hither by ſome of the Inhabitants of the Iſle of Cuba. Landing, and gaining the good will of the Savages by gentle uſage, he obtained leave of one of their Kings or Caciques to build a Fortreſs in his Country, which he called Navidad, or Natividad, leaving in it 36 Spaniards to keep poſſeſſion: whom he found both maſtered and murthered at his coming back. Being now better furniſhed for a new Plantation, he built the Town called Iſabella, (in honour of Iſabella (Queen of Caſtile) near the Mines of Cibao; which afterwards was deſerted alſo, and the Colony removed unto S. Domingo: the Spaniards ſending one Colony after another, till at laſt their number was increaſed to 14000, beſides Women and Children. But having rooted out the Natives by their infinite Cruelties, and exhauſted the Riches of the Countrey with as infinite Covetouſneſs, they betook themſelves to freſher Quarters, abandoning the Iſland to devour the Continent. Once had the Iſlanders rebelled, and fortified themſelves in the Province of Baoruco, a place ſo naturally ſtrong, that there was little need of the helps of Art. Not brought to leave that Faſtneſs but on ſuch Conditions as made the Spaniard leſs inſolent, and themſelves leſs Slaves.

4. CUBA.

CUBA lieth on the Weſt of Hiſpaniola, from which parted by a Frith, or narrow Channel, interpoſed betwixt the two Capes of S. Nicholas and that of Mexico, backed on the North with a Frie of Iſlands called the Lucaies, and ſome part of the Peninſula of Florida; extended towards the Eaſt to the extream point or Foreland of Jucutan, called Cape de Cotache, from which diſtant about 50 Leagues, and neighboured on the South with the Iſle of Jamaica.

It is in length from Eaſt to Weſt, that is to ſay, from Cape Maxie towards Hiſpaniola to the Cape of S. Anthony, 230 leagues; in breadth where broadeſt hardly 40, but 15 in others. For the fertility of the Soil contending with Hiſpaniola for the pre-eminence, but in the temperature of the Air a great deal before it. Liberally ſtored with Ginger, Caſſia, Maſtick, Aloes, Cinamon, and Sugar, (not reckoning ſuch Commodities as are common unto this with others) beſides great plenty of Fleſh and Fiſh, and of Fowl no ſcarcity. The Gold more droſſie in the Mine than in Hiſpaniola, but the Braſs more perfect. Hilly, and full of lofty Mountains; but thoſe Mountains clad with divers Trees, ſome of which drop the pureſt Roſin, and the Hills ſending to the Valleys many notable Rivers. Peſtered with many ſorts of Serpents, not ſo much out of any ill condition of the Soil and Air, as by an old Superſtition of the Savages, in former times not ſuffered to kill them when they might, (this being a Diſh reſerved for the higher Powers) not able afterwards to deſtroy them, when it would have been ſuffered.

What other ſavage Rites they had, is not now material, the Spaniards having took an Order that they ſhould not trouble us in that particular. Yet thus much we may adde in memory of the firſt Inhabitants, that an old man of 80 years, one of the Caciques of the Iſland, addreſſed himſelf unto Columbus at his firſt coming hither, adviſing him to uſe his Fortune with moderation, and to remember that the Souls of men have two journeys when they leave this World; the one foul and dark, prepared for the injurious and cruel perſon; the other delectable and pleaſant, for the men of Peace. It is ſaid alſo of them, they knew not the uſe of Money, nor underſtood the niceties of Meum and Tuum; Tenants in common to the Bleſſings which the Earth brought forth, and Coheirs of Nature.

Amongſt the Rarities of this Iſland, they mention a Fountain out of which floweth a pitchy ſubſtance, which is found frequently on the Seas into which it falleth, excellent for the calking of Ships. Secondly a navigable River (but the name not told us) the waters of which were ſo hot, that a man could not indure to hold his hand in them. They tell us alſo, thirdly, of a Valley 15 leagues from S. Jago, which produceth ſtones exactly round, as if made for pleaſure; but yet meerly natural. But theſe are no greater Rarities than in other places, nor altogether ſo great as in Hiſpaniola. In which they tell us of a fair River whoſe waters are ſalt, and yet none but freſh ſtreams fall into it. Of another Lake (three leagues in compaſs) on the top of the Mountains, into which many Rivers were known to run without any Exit. Neither of theſe ſo ſtrange or rare as the Cucuyo, a kind of Scarabe or Beetle; the Eyes and Wings whereof, when opened, give ſo great a light in the darkeſt places, that a man may ſee to read and write by it, as well as by a Candle.

Rivers of moſt note, 1. Cante, much annoied with Crocodiles, (a Beaſt not common in theſe Iſlands, nor elſewhere in this) exceeding dangerous to ſuch as repoſe themthemſelves on the Banks of the River. 2. Arimao, which disburtheneth it ſelf near the Port of Xagua. 3. Rio di Porcos, full of Rocks and Quick-ſands at the entrances of it. 4. Rio Eſcondida, paſſing betwixt Habana and the Port of Marcanas. 5 Marien, and 6. Tanne, of leſs note. Beſides theſe there is Xagua, a ſafe Station and Road for Shipping; of a narrow entrance, but large and ſpacious when once entred; above ten Leagues in length, and of breadth proportionable. So fenced on all ſides from the Winds, that Ships lie here in ſafety without any Anchor. Some other Bays there be as uſeful, though not ſo conſiderable.

Towns of moſt conſequence, 1. S. Jago, in the South part of the Iſland, ſituate about two Leagues from the Main, but in the bottom of a large and capacious Gulf, the moſt noted Port of all theſe Seas. Built by Don Diego de Velaſques, Anno 1514; afterwards made a Biſhop's See: beautified with a Cathedral, ſome Religious Houſes: once not inferiour unto any for numbers of People, though now few enough 2. Baracao, 30 Leagues on the Eaſt of S. Jago; the ſame foundation as the other, and neighboured by great quantities of Eben-wood. 3. S. Salvador, by ſome called Baymo, according to the old name of the Province in which it ſtandeth; built by Velaſco in the moſt pleaſant and richeſt part of all the Iſland, but not ſo fitly as the other for Trade and Merchandiſe. 4. Porto del Principe, an Haven-town in the North parts: not far from which is the Fountain of a pitchy or bituminous Liquour, ſpoken of before, which I conceive to be much of the ſame nature with the Fountains of Naphta in the Eaſt. 5. Trinidad, another of Velaſco's foundations, nine or ten Leagues Eaſtward of the Port of Xagua: once well frequented, but now forſaken, and mere nothing. 6. Havana, in the North parts, oppoſite to Florida, a noted and well traded Port; ſo ſtrongly ſituate and fortified both by Nature and Art, that it ſeems impregnable. The Entrances defended with two notable Caſtles; a greater then either oppoſite to the mouth of the Haven; all ſo commodiouſly built and well planted with Ordnance, that they are able to keep out and ſcatter the greateſt Navy. Near one of them ſtandeth an high Tower, from the top whereof notice is given unto the Guards of every Ship that cometh within view of the Watchmen. The beſt aſſurance not only of this Iſland but the Bay of Mexico; and therefore honoured for the moſt part with the Seat of the Governour, and the greateſt Trade of all theſe Seas: the Ships which are bound for Spain from all parts of the Gulf tarrying here for one another till all meet together, and ſetting ſail from hence by the Streights of Bahama, amongſt the Iſles of the Lucaios.

This Iſland was one of the firſt which was diſcovered by Columbus: who having almoſt tired the Spaniards with the expectation, firſt fell upon the Iſland of Guahanani, one of the Lucaios, to which he gave the Name of S. Saviours. From thence he ſailed to Baracoa, on the North of this Iſland, which he cauſed to be called Fernandina, in honour of Ferdinand the Catholick King of Caſtile and Arragon, at whoſe charge, and the encouragement of Iſabella his Heroick Queen, he purſued this Enterpriſe. Landing, he asked the People if they knew Cipango, (by which name Paulus Venetus calls the Iſle of Japan:) and they conceiving that he enquired after Cibao, (of great note for the richeſt Mines in Hiſpaniola) pointed towards Haity; ſome of them going with him to conduct him thither. Cuba was by this means laid aſide, and all the thoughts of Spain upon Hiſpaniola, where they found many golden Provocations to invite their ſtay; till hungring after more Gold, and ſome new Plantations, they paſſed over hither, and in few years, by the prudent conduct of Velaſco, got ſuch footing in it, and made that footing good by ſo many Colonies, that their Title and Poſſeſſion was beyond diſpute, and ſo continues to this day.

5. JAMAICA.

JAMAICA lieth on the South of Cuba, from which diſtant 20 Leagues, and as much, or very little more from Hiſpaniola. Diſcovered in the ſecond Voiage of Columbus, by whom named S. Jago; that name changed afterwards to Jaimaica.

It is in length from Eaſt to weſt about 50 Leagues, and in breadth 20; the whole compaſs eſtimated at 150: the middle of it under the 18. Degree of Northern Latitude. Of a rich Soil, abundantly provided of all things neceſſary; well ſtocked with Cattel, and no leſs plentifully ſtored with moſt ſorts of Fruits, which either induſtry or Nature have ſupplyed it with. Great ſtore of Cotton-wool, and ſuch abundance of Jucca, (a Root whereof the Savages once made their Bread) that it was deemed the Granary of the neighbouring Iſland. And were it not diſfurniſhed of convenient Ports, (which is all the want of it) it would be as much frequented by Sea-fairing men as any other in thoſe parts. Once very populous, now deſtitute of all the natural inhabitants: this Iſland, and that of Porto Rico, loſing in few years 60000 by the Spaniard's Cruelties. Cruelties which not only raged upon the Men, but deſtroyed Poſterity: the Women, here and elſewhere, ſo abominating their ſad condition, that they ſtrangled their Children in the Birth, to the end they might not live to ſerve ſuch a cruel Nation.

Chief Towns hereof, (for though it be well watered it hath no great Rivers,) 1. Sevilla, in the North part of the Iſland, beautified with a goodly Monaſtery; the Abbot whereof hath all Epiſcopal Juriſdiction, and is priviledged to wear a Mitre: in nothing more ennobled, then that Peter Martyr the Hiſtorian (to whoſe Decads all ſucceeding Ages are beholden for the Chorography and Hiſtory of theſe parts of the World) was once Abbot here. 2. Mellilla, a ſmall Town; but memorable for the unfortunate Shipwreck of Columbus on the Shores adjoyning. 3. Oriſtan, on the South of the Iſland, fourteen Leagues from Sevil. 4. De la Vega, now a Ruine only, once a Spaniſh Colony; and of great fame for giving the Tittle of Dukes to Chriſtopher Columbus, and his Brother Bartholomew. Since whoſe time nothing happened prejudicial to the State of this Iſland by the hands of any but the Spaniards; till conquered, but not held by Sir Anthony Sherley, Anno 1596.

Thus having took a ſhort Survey of the ſeveral parts of this great Body; we now briefly take a view of the Government and Forces of it. The Government is committed chiefly to two great Vice-Roys; the one of Nova Hiſpania, who reſides at Mexico; the other of Peru, who abideth at Lima, the principal Cities of thoſe Kingdoms. The firſt hath Juriſdiction over all the Provinces of Nova Gallicia, Nova Hiſpania, Guatimala, Caſtella Aurea, and the Provinces of the Mexican Iſlands; the other over thoſe of Peru, Chile, Rio de la Plata, and the New Realm of Granada. Such ſcattered pieces as they hold in Guiana, Paria and the Caribes, with their Forts in Florida, being reduced to ſome of theſe. Of theſe the Vice-Roy of Peru is of greateſt power, becauſe he hath the nomination of all the Commanders and Officers within his Government; which in the other are reſerved to the King himſelf. But that of new Spain is counted for the better Preferment, becauſe of its nearneſs unto Spain, (in reſpect of the other) the Beauties of the City of Mexico, and the Civilities of the People. For the adminiſtration of Juſtice, and ordering the Affairs of the ſeveral Provinces, there are ten chief Courts, from which there lieth

no appeal: that is to say, 1. Guadalaiara, for Gallicia Nova; 2. Mexico, for New Spain; 3. S. Domingo, for the Province of the Islands; 4. Guatimala, for the Division so named; 5. Panama, for Castella Aurea. Then for the other Government, 6. Quitos, 7. Lima, and 8. Charcas, in the Realm of Peru; 9. Imperiale, for Chile; 10. S. Foy, for the New Realm of Granada. From these though no Appeal do lie in matter of Justice; yet both from them and the two Vice-Roys an Appeal may lie in affairs of State, or point of Grievance. And to this end there is a standing Council in the Court of Spain, which is called the Council of the Indies, consisting of a President eight Counsellours, two Proctors Fiscal (which we call the Sollicitors general) and two Secretaries, besides other Officers; to whom it appertaineth to take care of all matters which concern the Government of these Countreys, to appoint the Vice-Roys, to dispose of all the great Offices (except those of the Government of Peru) and spiritual Dignities, to appoint Visiters to go into those Provinces for the examining the actions of all Officers hearing the Grievances of the People, and to displace or punish as they find occasion, but with the King's privity and consent.

As for the Estates of private men, they which hold Lands or Royalties from the Crown of Spain hold them but for life, (except it be the Marques of Valla in New Spain, of the race of Cortez) after their deaths returning to the King again; who gives them commonly to the eldest Son, or the next of bloud; but so, that they receive it as a mark of his favour, and not for any right of theirs. And though they have many times attempted to make these Commanderies and Estates hereditary, and offered great sums of money for it, both to Charles the fifth and Philip the second, yet they could never get it done; the Kings most prudently considering, that these great Lords having the command of the Estates and Persons of their several Vassals, would either grind them to powder without any remedy, or upon any Inquisition into their proceedings take an occasion to revolt. Both dangers of no small importance; both by this uncertainty of their present Tenure exceeding happily avoided.

The Revenue which the King receiveth hence is said to be three Millions of Ducats yearly: most of it rising out of the Fifths of the Mines of Gold and Silver; the rest by Customs upon Manufactures and all sorts of Merchandise, and the Acknowledgments reserved upon Lands and Royalties. But out of this there go great Exits: that is to say, to the two Vice-Roys 12000 Ducats; to the President and Officers of the Council of the Indies in Spain 20000 Ducats; to the Judges and Officers of the several Courts of Judicature very liberal Pensions; to every Archbishop and Bishop, of which there are 29 in all, 2000 Ducats at the least, and to some much more, to mend their Benefices. Then reckoning in the infinite charges in maintaining Garrisons, and entertaining standing Bands both of Horse and Foot, in several parts of this Estate, and the continual keeping of a strong Armada to conduct his Plate-Fleets to Spain; there must be made a great abatement, and the sum will bear it. For howsoever at the first his Revenue came from thence without any great charge, more than the keeping of a few Souldiers to awe the Savages; yet after he fell foul with England, and startled the Hollanders to Rebellion, he was compelled to fortifie all his Havens, and secure his Ports, and to maintain a strong Armada at the Sea, to convoy his Treasures. Before which time the English (as is instanced in several places) did so share in his Harvest, that they left him scarce enough to pay his Workmen; which if they should attempt again upon any Breach, they would find it very difficult, if not impossible, to effect any thing upon the Coasts as in former times; or indeed any other way, but by making themselves too strong for him at Sea, and thereby either intercept his Fleets, or hinder them from coming to him to supply his needs.

And so much for the AMERICAN Islands.

Having thus travelled over (with Gods Blessing) the Known Parts of the World, and sailed through the most difficult Seas which embrace the same; we should now man our Barque again, and try what Discovery we can make of the Parts Unknown, or not so fully known to us as the others are.

Quo properas, mea cymba? redi, satis ardua Ponti
Navimus; ecce Auster pluvias jam cogere nubes
Incipit, hic tutum non est (mihi crede) morari.
Dum licet, in Portum tendamus; nubila clarum
Reddiderint ubi pulsa diem, revocabit ab alto
Nos Triton Scopulo, atque iterum tentabimus Æquor.

That is to say,

But whether goes my Bark? Return: for we Have slic'd the Capering Brine enough: see, see,
The South-wind 'gins to gather Clouds apace;
'Tis no safe tarrying in so fierce a place.
Whilst thou hast time, retire, thou wearied Bark,
Into safe Harbour; when the Clouds which dark
The World's Bright Eye shall be dispell'd away,
And shining Phœbus make a lightsome day.
Triton's shrill Trump shall thee recall again,
From the safe Harbour to the foaming Main;
And we with all our Powers will boldly try
What of this UNKNOWN WORLD we can descry.

AN APPENDIX TO THE FORMER WORK,

Endeavouring a Diſcovery of the

AND here we are upon a new and ſtrange Adventure, which no Knight Errant ever undertook before. Of things unknown, as there is commonly no deſire, ſo leſs Diſcourſe can probably be made upon them. By unknown therefore we muſt underſtand leſs known, or not well diſcovered; and in that ſenſe we may as well endeavour to ſay ſomewhat of them, as others with more pains and hazard to attempt the Diſcovery. And to ſay truth, even in the known parts of the World there is much unknown; as in the beſt and moſt flouriſhing Kingdoms of the Earth there is ſome waſte ground, either not cultivated at all; or not ſo well inhabited as the reſt of the Countrey. For beſides many vaſt Tracts of ground in the North and North-weſt parts of Tartary, and ſuch parts of India as lie Northwards towards Delanguer, Naugracot; the Eaſt parts of Caucaſus, and the Realms of Cathay it is conceived that the greateſt part of the Midlands of Affrick are undiſcovered to this day, or the knowledge of them ſo imperfect as comes near a Neſcience; and for America, not reckoning in the Northern Borders, (which are in part to be the Subject of this Enquiry) it is affirmed of the Midlands by John de Laet, (who hath made the moſt exact deſcription of it that ever was extant) minima ſui parte perluſtratum eſſe, that the leaſt part of them hath been diſcovered hitherto to any purpoſe. Leaving theſe therefore as before without farther ſearch, we will divide the UNKNOWN WORLD into theſe two parts: 1. Terra Incognita Borealis, and 2. Terra Incognita Auſtralis; which with their Subdiviſions we will now purſue.

TERRA INCOGNITA BOREALIS.

TERRA INCOGNITA BOREALIS is that part of the Unknown World which lieth towards the North; and is to be conſidered in theſe three Notions. 1. As directly under the Pole, which for diſtinction ſake we will call Orbis Arcticus; 2. as lying to the North-eaſt on the back of Europe and Aſia, or 3. on the North-weſt, on the back of America.

1. ORBIS ARCTICUS is that part of Terra Borealis Incognita which lieth under or about the Artick Pole; the Situation and Dimenſions of which being taken with the Aſtrolabe by an Oxford Frier, are by Mercator thus deſcribed out of the Itinerary of Jannes Cnoxe of Bois le duc, or the Boſche, a Town of Brabant.

"Under the Artick Pole (ſaith he) is ſaid to be a "black Rock of wondrous height, about 33 Leagues in "compaſs, the Land adjoyning being torn by the Sea in- "to four great Iſlands. For the Ocean violently break- "ing through it, and diſgorging it ſelf by 19 Chanels, ma- "keth four Euripi or fierce Whirl-pools, by which the "Waters are finally carried towards the North, and there "ſwallowed into the Bowels of the Earth. That Euripus "or Whirl-pool which is made by the Scythick Ocean "hath five Inlets, and by reaſon of his ſtreight paſſage "and violent courſe is never frozen: the other on the back "of Groenland, being 37 Leagues long, hath three In- "lets, and remaineth frozen three moneths yearly. Be- "tween theſe two there lieth an Iſland on the North of "Lappia and Biarmia, inhabited, as they ſay, by Pigmies, the "talleſt of them not above four foot high. A certain Sco- "lar of Oxford reporteth, that theſe four Euripi are car- "ried with ſuch furious violence towards ſome Gulf, in "which they are finally ſwallowed up, that no Ship is able "with never ſo ſtrong a Gale to ſtem the Current, and yet "that there is never ſo ſtrong a Wind as to blow a "Windmil. The like is reported by Giraldus Cambrenſis "in his Book De mirabilibus Hiberniæ. So far and to this purpoſe he. But Blundevil our Countreyman is of another opinion, (as indeed who not?) neither believing that Pliny or any other of the Roman Writers came hither to deſcribe this Promontory; or that the Oxford Frier, without the aſſiſtance of ſome cold Devil of the middle Region of the Air, (and conſequently able to endure all Weathers) could approach ſo near as to meaſure theſe cold Countreys with his Aſtrolabe, or take the height of this black Rock with his Jacob's Staff. Leaving this therefore as more fit for Lucian's Dialogues then any ſerious Diſcourſe, we will proceed to matters of more truth and certainty.

2. The NORTH-WEST parts of Terra Incognita Borealis are thoſe which lie on the back of Eſtotiland, the moſt Northern Province of America; by which it hath been much endeavoured to find out a paſſage to Cathay and China, and not to go ſo far about as either by the Cape of Good Hope, or the Streights of Magellan. Attempted firſt by Sebaſtian Cabot, Anno 1497, at the charge of Henry the 7. of England. But having diſcovered as far as to the 67. Degree of Northern Latitude, by the mutiny of his Mariners he was forced to return; when finding great preparations for a War with Scotland, that buſineſs for the preſent was laid aſide. Reſumed by Gaſpar Corterialis a Portugal, Anno 1500, and after by Stephen Gomez a Spaniard, in the year 1525; but neither of them went ſo far to the North as Cabot. The Spaniards notwithſtanding would not ſo give over, but firſt with five Ships from the Groyn, and afterwards by two from New Spain, ſent out by Cortez, purſued the Enterpriſe: which proving as succesless as the former had been, occasioned Charles the 5. then preparing for Italy, on the payment of 35000 Ducats by King John the third, to suspend the prosecution of it. Followed with greater industry, but as bad succes, by Sir Martin Frobisher, who made three Voiages for these parts, (the first of them in the year 1579,) and brought home some of the Natives, a Sea-Unicorn's Horn, (still kept in the great Wardrobe of Windsor Castle) and a great deal of the Ore of that Countrey, found upon tryal, when in England, not to quit the Cost. A great Promontory which he passed by he called Queen Elizabeth's Foreland, in whose name he took possession of it; and the Sea running not far off he called Frobisher's Streights. The Seas full set with Icy Islands some of them half a mile about, and eighty Fathoms above Water: the People like the Samoeds, the worst kind of Tartars, in their lives and Habit. John Davies followed the Deign Anno 1585, at the encouragement of Sir Francis Walsingham, then principal Secretary of Estate: and having in three Voyages discovered to the Latitude of 73, by reason of the many difficulties which he found in the Enterprise, and the death of Mr. Secretary, he was fain to give over; leaving unto a narrow Sea on the North of Estotiland the name of Fretum Davies, in the Latitude of 65 and 20 Minutes, by which name it is still called. After him followed Weymouth, Hall, Hudson, Button, Baffin, Smith; all English. The result of whose Endeavours was the finding of some cold Isles and points of Land; which they named King James his Cape, Queen Ann's Cape, Prince Henrie's Foreland, Saddle-Island, Barren-Island, Red-goose Island, Digges his Island; all of them betwixt 80 and 81: and the imposing on some passages and parts of the Sea the names of Hacklyt's Headland, Smith's Bay, Hudson's Streights, Maudlins Sound, Fair Haven, and the like marks and monuments of their Undertakings. Nothing atchieved of publick moment, but the Discovery of an Island called Cherry Island in the Latitude of 74, and the Shores of a large piece of the Continent, which they caused to be called King James his New Land, most commonly Greenland; where they found many white Bears, with white, gray and dun Foxes, Partridges, Geese, and some other Provisions. Sea-Unicorns Horns, great store of Morses, (or Sea-Horses) the Oil and Teeth whereof yield no small Commodity. But most considerable for the Trade of Whale-fishing, which our men use yearly upon those Coasts; of whose Oil, Bones and Brain (this last supposed to be the true Sperma Ceti, now used as Medicinal) they raised very great profit.

3. The NORTH-EAST parts of Terra Incognita Borealis are those which lie on the North of Russia and Tartary, by which the like passage towards Cathay and China hath been oft attempted; and hitherto with like succes. Endeavoured first by Sebastian Cabot, the son of John Cabot, so often mentioned before, by him trained up in the Discovery of the North-east parts of America. His Employment failing here in England, he betook himself unto the service of the King of Spain; and coming out of Spain, Anno 1549, was by King Edward the sixth made grand Pilot of England, with an Annual Pension of 166 l. 13 s. 4 d. In the year 1553 he was the chief Dealer and Procurer of the Discovery of Russia and the North-east Voiages, undertaken and performed by Sir Hugh Willoughby, Chancellour, Burrough, Jenkinson; and after prosecuted by Pet and Jackman. Some of which perished in the Action, and were frozen to death; their Ship being found the next year hemmed about with Ice, and a particular account of all things which had hapened to them. Others with better fortunes found the way to Russia, (since that time made a common Voiage without dread or danger) and passing down the Volga to the Caspian Sea, and by that to Persia, were kindly entertained in the Court of the Sophie. The Hollanders in the year 1594, and in some years after, tried their Fortune also, under the Conduct and Direction of one William Barendson their chief Pilot; but went no farther then the English had gone before them; yet gave new names unto all places as they passed, as if they had been the first Discoverers, with Pride and Arrogance enough. Nothing since done of any note or consideration for the opening of this North-east passage, or giving us any better account of the North of Tartary, or any Countreys beyond that, but what we had many Ages since out of Paulus Venetus; so that we are but where we were, in a Terra Incognita. And though I would not willingly discourage any noble Actions, or brave and gallant Undertakings; yet when I look upon the natures of those Shores and Seas, those tedious Winters of ten moneths, with no Summer following, the Winds continually in the North, and the main Ocean paved with Ice so long together; I cannot chuse but rank the hopes of these Northern Passages amongst those Adventures which are only commendable for the Difficulties presented in them.

TERRA AUSTRALIS INCOGNITA.

WIth better hopes we may go forwards on the next Discovery, and try what may be done on Terra Australis, or the Southern Continent, (though hitherto Incognita also, almost as much unknown as the Arctick Islands, which none but my good Frier of Oxon had the hap to meet with. A Continent conceived by our Learned Brerewood to be as large as Europe, Asia and Africa: and that upon such strength of Reasons as cannot be easily overborn by any opposite. His Arguments in brief are these. 1. That as touching Latitude, some parts thereof come very near to the Equator, if they come not also on this side of it: and as for Longitude, it keepeth along, though at several distances, the whole continual course of the other Continents 2. It is clearly known, that in the other two Continents the Land which lieth on the North-side of that Line is four times at the least as large as that which lieth South thereof; and therefore, since the Earth is equally poized on both sides of the Centre, it must needs be that the Earth in answerable measure and proportion must advance it self in some places above the Sea on the South-side of the Line, as it doth in others on the North. By consequence, what is wanting in the South parts of the other two Continents to countervail the North-parts of them, must of necessity be supplied in the Southern Continent.

The Countrey being so large, so free from the Incumbrances of Frosts and Ice and endless Winters, I have oft marvelled with my self that no farther progress hath been made in Discovery of it: considering chiefly by the Site and Position of the Countrey, especially in those parts which lie nearest Asia, that there is nothing to be looked for elsewhere, either of profit or of pleasure, but may there be found. Whether it be that there is some Nil ultra put to humane endeavours; or that this people are not yet made ripe enough to receive the Gospel; or that the great Princes of the Earth think it no good Policy to engage themselves in new Discoveries, till the old be throughly planted and made sure unto them; or that the Merchant, who in matters of this nature hath a powerful influence, thinks his hands full enough already, and being settled in so many and so wealthy Factories, will not adventure upon more: Which of all these, or whether all these together be the cause of this Stop, I am not able to determine. Certain it is, that here is a large Field, enough for Covetousness, Ambition, or desire of Glory, to to spend themselves in; enough to satisfie the greatest and most hungry appetite of Empire, Wealth and worldly pleasure; besides the Gallantry and Merit of so brave an Action. Most which hath hitherto been done in it hath been by the encouragement of the Vice-Roys of New Spain and Peru: by the first of which we came acquainted with the Coasts of Nova Guinea; by the latter, with those Countreys called the Islands of Solomon, but whether Continent or Islands, not yet fully known.

And yet we must not rob Magellanus of his part of the Honour, who, passing through the Streights which now bear his name, discovered those parts of it which, from the Fire thence seen, he called Terra del Fuego, found by the Hollanders of late under James le Maire to be an Island. Nor do the English or the Dutch want their parts herein, though what they did was rather accidental then upon Design. For in the year 1593, Sir Richard Hawkins, being bound for the Streights of Magellan, was by a cross Wind driven on some parts of this Continent, to which he gave the name of Hawkins his Maiden-land; a Promontory of it shooting in to the Sea with three Points he called Point Tremontain; and a pleasant Isle not far off by the name of Fair Island. Sailing along these Coasts in the 50. Degree of Southern Latitude, for the space of sixty miles and upwards, he found the Countrey as he passed to be very pleasant; and by the Fires which he saw in the night, to be well inhabited. By the like accident, Anno 1599, Sibald de Weert, a Hollander, in his return from the Streights of Magellan, fell upon some Islands of this Southern Continent, in the Latitude of fifty Degrees and forty Minutes, which he caused to be called Sibald's Islands. And besides these we owe to the Portugals the Discovery of such parts hereof as they fell on in their way to the Eastern Indies, of which we have little but the names: as 1. Psittacorum Terra, so called from the abundance of Parrots which they saw on the Coasts over against the Cape of good Hope; 2. Beach, a Region yielding Gold, and possessed by Idolaters, with the two Kingdoms of, 3. Lucach, and 4. Maletur; all three against the Isles of Java, from which little distant.

But the greatest light we have to see by into this dark business is by the Voiages and Adventures of the Spaniards, employed by the two Vice-Roys of Peru and Mexico, as before was said. For in the year 1543 the Governour of New Spain, then being, sent Villa Lobos with a Fleet towards the Moluccas, who in that Voiage made a Discovery of a rich and flourishing Countrey, which he named Nova Guinea, by others since his time called Terra de Piccinacoli: and in the year 1563 Castro the Licentiate, then Vice-Roy of Peru, sent a Fleet from Lima, which under the Conduct of Lopez Garcia de Castro discovered the Islands of Solomon. To which if we subjoin the success of the Hollanders in the Discovery of Fretum le Maire, and the Lands adjoyning, the best Description we can make of this Southern Continent must be in the Chorography and History of their Adventures; viz. 1. Terra del Fogo, 2. Insulæ Solomonis. 3. Nova Guinea: beginning first with Terra del Fogo, because nearest to us.

1. TERRA DEL FUEGO lies on the other side of the Streights of Magellan, heretofore thought to be a part of Terra Australis Incognita, or the Southern Continent, but is now discovered to be an Island by one Jacob Maire of Amsterdam, accompanied by Cornelius Schouten of Hoorn, both Hollanders. They began their Voiage on the 15. of June, Anno 1615, and on the 19. of January following they fell even with the Streight of Magellan. On the 24. of the same Moneth they had the sight of another Streight, which seemed to seperate this Terra del Fuego from the rest of the Southern Continent; and on the 25. they entred into it. That part of the Land which (being entred into the Streights) they had on the West, they called Terra Mauritii de Nassau; that on the East, Statenland; the Streight it self, Fretum le Maire. The entrance into the Streight they found to be in 55 Degrees of Southern Latitude and 50 Minutes; the Water runing into the North Sea with so violent an Eddie, ut adversum maris æstum difficulter superare possemus, saith he who in the way of Journal or Ephemerides hath described the whole course of this Voyage. In the whole course thereof nothing so much observable (besides the Discovery) as that they found that at their coming home they had lost a Day, (as must needs happen unto such as in so tedious a Voiage had travelled Westward) that being Saturday to them which was Sunday to the Hollanders and the rest of Europe; though they had calculated the Days since their going out with all exactness. So that if there were any such Morality in the Sabbath as some men pretend, these men must either keep their Sabbath on a different day from the rest of their Countreymen, or otherwise, to comply with them, must be guilty of the breach of the Sabbath all the rest of their Lives. But of this more at large elsewhere. To return therefore to this Streight: it is said to be seven Dutch miles or 28 of ours in length, and of a fair and equal breadth; plentiful of good Fish, especially of Sea-Calves and Whales. About the inserting of which Streight into the third Edition of my Microcosm, I received a Letter at such time as the Parliament was held in Oxon Anno 1625. subscribed G.. B. and a little under that, Sub granda floridus: which whether it were the Gentlemans Motto, or the Anagram of his name, I am not able to say, having never heard more of him from that time forwards, though his desire were satisfied in the next Edition of that Work. For my encouragement wherein he gave me this direction following. "The News (saith he) of this New Streight coming into Spain, it pleased the King, in the year 1618, "to send and search whether the truth were answerable "unto the Report. And finding it to be much broader "then the other, and not above seven Dutch miles long, "he decreed, that being the more easie and compendious "way for Navigators, and less subject to dangers, his "Auxiliary Forces should be sent that way into the East-Indies, to defend the Philippine and Molucca Islands, and "the way by the Cape of good Hope to be left. In regard "that every such Voiage requireth twice as much time; "besides the variety of Winds, and often change of the "Air, not only troublesome, but full of Diseases, consumeth the one half of the men before they return. "Whereas this way gaineth time (and, if need be, they "may dispatch business in the West as they travel into "the East) without any extraordinary danger or loss of "men. So far the very words of my Letter. The Intelligence given me in this Letter I find confirmed in a Relation of the Voiage made by Captain Don Juan de More, Anno 1618, at the command and charge of the King of Spain, who presently arm'd and furnish'd eight tall Ships to send this new way unto his Philippines and Molucca's, under the conduct of Petrus Michaelus de Cordoelen. Since it hath been found by experience that even from our parts to the Molucca's through this Fretum de Maire, is but a passage of eight Moneths, sine ulla insigni navigantium clade, saith the Narratour. But of this Streight enough to satisfie my unknown Well-willer's Request, and inform my Reader: being extreamly sorry that the Gentle man was not pleased to impart his name, that so his memory might have lived in these Papers, if they themselves be destinate to a longer Life.

Now for the nature of the Soil, it is said to be very full of Mountains; but those Hills apparelled with Woods

Woods, intermixt with Valleys; the Valleys for the most part full of little Brooks, which fall down from the Mountains, and afford good Pasturage; the Sea-coasts well provided with Bays and Roads, not unsafe for Shiping: though the Air every-where, but chiefly near the Sea, be much subject to Tempests. As for the People, they are said to be of a white Complexion; but their Faces, Arms and Thighs, coloured with a kind of Oker: of full Stature and well-proportioned, their Hair black, which they wear long, to seem more terrible. The Men most generally naked, the Women only shaded on their secret parts with a piece of Leather.

Towns they have none, nor any Habitations which deserve the name of Houses: so that the most which we can do is to coast the Island. In which we find towards Mare del Noordt, 1. A large Arm of the Sea called Entrado de S. Sebastian. 2. The Cape of S. Ives. 3. Mauritius Land. 4. Promontorio de Buen Suscio, or the Cape of Good Success. Opposite whereunto in another Island is the Cape of S. Bartholomews, and betwixt them the Streight called Fretum le Maire. Then in the New South-sea, as they call it, there are, 5. Barnevelt's Island. 6. The Islands of S. Ildefonso. 7. Cape Horn, on a fair Promontory, in the South-west Ande, which doubled, the Countrey goes along with a straight Shore, on which I find some Bays and Capes, but no names unto them; till we come to the Western entrances of the Streight of Magellan, opposite unto Cape Victoria, so often mentioned.

2. INSULÆ SOLOMONIS, or the Islands of Solomon, are situate on the West of Terra del Fogo, 11 Degrees on the South of the Æquinoctial. Discovered in the year 1567, by Lopez Garcia de Castro, sent by the Vice-Roy of Peru to find out new Countreys. By him thus named, in hope that men would be rather induced to inhabit in them; imagining that Solomon had his Gold from these Lands of Ophir.

In number they are many, but 18 the principal: Some of which 300 miles in compass, others 200, and others of them less, till we come to fifty; and beneath that, none. All liberally furnished with Dogs, Hogs, Hens, Cloves, Ginger, Cinamon, and some Veins of Gold. The chief of these eighteen are, 1. Guadalcanal, supposed to be the greatest of them; upon the Coast whereof the Spaniards sailed 150 Leagues, where they found a Town which they burned and sacked, because the people of it, by a sudden surprize, had killed fourteen of their men. 2. S. Isabella, 150 Leagues in length, and 18 in breadth; the Inhabitants some black, some white, some of brown Complexion. 3. S. Nicholas, 100 Leagues in compass, inhabited by a People which are black of hue, but said to be more witty then the other Savages. All of them situate betwixt the Streights of Magellan and the Islands of Thieves; and yet not well agreed upon amongst our Authors, whether to be accounted Islands, or a part of the Continent; the Spaniards having sailed 700 Leagues on the Coasts hereof, and yet not able to attain unto any certainty. But being they pass generally in account for Islands, and by that name are under the Vice-Roy of Peru, who appoints their Governours, let them pass so still.

3. NOVA GUINEA lieth beyond the Islands of Solomon in respect of us, proceeding, as we have begun, from the Land of Fire. Discovered, as before was said, Anno 1543, by Villa Lobos; (Herrera attributes the Discovery of it to Alvarez de Saavedra, and sets it higher, in the year 1527,) more perfectly made known, if I guess a right, by Ferdinando de Quir, who being sent with two Ships to make a more full Discovery of the Islands of Solomon, and taking his course about the height of the Magellan Streights, discovered a main Land coming up close to the Æquinoctial, on the Coasts whereof he sailed 800 Leagues, till he found himself at last in the Latitude of 15 Degrees, discovering a large Bay into which fell two great Rivers, where he purposed to settle a Plantation, and to that end presented a Petition to the King of Spain. This Countrey I conceive, by the Site and Position of it, to be Nova Guinea, coming up close as that doth to the Æquinoctial; and after turning to the South towards the Tropick of Capricorn, where it joyneth with Malatur. And taking it for granted, as I think I may, I shall afford the Reader this Description of it, out of his memorials, in which it is soberly affirmed to be a Terrestrial Paradise for Wealth and Pleasures. The Countrey is plentiful of Fruits, Coco-nuts, Almonds of four sorts, Pome-citrons, Dates, Sugar-canes and Apples; plenty of Swine, Goats, Hens, Partridges, and other Fowl, with some Kine and Buffals. Nothing inferiour (as it seemeth) to Guinea in the Land of Negroes, and from thence so named. For, as he saith, he saw amongst them Silver and Pearls, and some told him of Gold; the Countreys on the Coast seeming to promise much felicity within the Land. The Air he found to be whole and temperate, the Sea shores to be full of Bays, Havens, and the Exits of Rivers, making shew as of another China. The Inhabitants he affirmeth to be innumerable, some white, some like the Mulattos, others like the Negroes; diversified in Habit as well as Colour. Their Bread made of three sorts of Roots: without Government, but not without Religion; for they had their several Oratories and places of burial, but neither King, nor Laws, nor Arts. Divided by that want, and in dayly Wars with one another: their Arms, Bows, Arrows, and other Weapons, but all made of Wood. Of this Countrey, whatsoever it was (if not Nova Guinea) he took possession in the name of the Catholick King, and set up both a Cross and a Chappel in it; the Chappel dedicated to the Lady of Loretto.

The precise time of this Discovery I have nowhere found, but that the time spent about it is by him affirmed to be 14 years, to the no small endamagement of his Health and Fortunes. Nor do I find that any care was taken of his Petition, or any thing else done by others in pursuance of his Propositions. Whether it were on any of the Reasons before laid down; or that there was no credit given to his affirmations, I determine not. Nor find I that he gave any names to the Bays or Promontories as he passed along; but he either took such names as were given before, or found not any thing worth the naming. And for such names as were given before, (still taking Ferdinando Quir's new Countrey for Nova Guinea) we find a Promontory called Cape Hermoso, in the East parts hereof, near the Islands of Solomon, and not far from the Æquator. 2. Another in the Western part, but as near the Æquinox, called Point Primiro. 3. A third in the first bendings of the Coast towards the South, called Capo de Buena Deseada, or the Cape of good Desire. 4. Rio de Valçanes, 5. Rio de Lorenzo, 6. Rio de S. Angustino, on the East of Cape Formoso towards the Streights. 7. The Rivers of S. Peter, 8. S. Paul, 9. S. Andrew, and 10. S. James, betwixt Cape Formoso and Primiro.

But being there is little certain of these last Discoveries, and the greatest certainty we have of that little is nothing but a list of names without any thing observable in the state and story of the same, they may still retain the old name of Terra Incognita. And therefore I try my fortune, and without troubling the Vice-Roys of Peru and Mexico, or taking out Commission for a new Discovery, will make a search into this Terra Australis for some other Regions, which must be found either here or no-where. The names of which are, 1. Mundus alter & idem, 2. Utopia, 3. New Atlantis, 4. Fairy Land, 5. The

Painter's

Painter's Wives Island. 6. The Lands of Chivalry, and 7. The New World in the Moon.

1. MUNDUS ALTER ET IDEM, Another world, and yet the same, is a witty and ingenious Invention of a Learned Prelate, writ by him in his younger days, (but well enough becoming the austerity of the graveſt Head) in which he diſtinguiſheth the Vices, Paſſions, Humours, and ill Affections moſt commonly incident to mankind, into ſeveral Provinces; gives us the Character of each, as in the deſcription of a Country, People, and chief Cities of it; and ſets them forth to the Eye in ſuch lively Colours, that the Vicious man may ſee therein his own Deformities, and the well-minded man his own Imperfections. The Scene of this Deſign is laid by the Reverend Author in this Terra Auſtralis; the Decorum happily preſerved in the whole Diſcovery; the ſtile acutely clear, the Invention ſingular. Of whom and his New World I ſhall give you that Eulogy which the Hiſtorian doth of Homer, Nec ante illum quem ille imitaretur, neque poſt illum qui eum imitari poſſet, inventus eſt.

2. UTOPIA is a Country firſt diſcovered by Sir Thomas More, after Lord Chancellour of England, and by him made a Scene of a Commonwealth, which neither Solon, nor Lycurgus, nor any of the Legiſlators of former times did ever dream of; nor had been fanſied by Plato, Ariſtotle, Tully, or any who have written the Idea's of a Form of Government, though not reducible to practice. Some of his Plots we have taken notice of already: as viz. his device to bring Gold and Silver into contempt by making of thoſe Metals Chains and Fetters for their Malefactors, Pans of Cloſe-ſtools, Chamber-pots, and Veſſels of ſuch unclean uſe; by impoſing it as a Penalty on infamous perſons, to wear Gold-Rings upon their Fingers, and the like devices: as alſo his device to prevent miſtakes and diſlikes in Marriages, by giving the parties a full view of each other naked. Many more Projects of this nature, ſome of them poſſible enough, but ſo unpracticable, ſo beyond hope of being looked on in the modelling of a Commonwealth, that we may reckon this device amongſt thoſe ſtrange Fancies, quæ nunquam antea ſpe concepta, nedum opere tentata erant. The man indeed (conſidering the times he lived in) was of rare abilities; but this Utopia fitted only to the Meridian of this Southern Continent, this Terra Auſtralis Incognita, in which now we are, and to no place elſe.

3. NEW ATLANTIS is an Iſland of this Southern Continent diſcovered by Sir Francis Bacon, the Learned Viſcount of St. Albans; one of Sir Thomas More's Succeſſours in the place of Lord Chancellour, but far before him in the excellency and fecibility of his Invention. It had this name with reference to Atlantis, an Iſland of the Weſtern or Atlantick Ocean, mentioned in the Works of Plato, both alike inviſible. But for his falling into this Iſland, his Deſcription of it, the City of Benſalem, and the manner of his reception there, ſuch handſome probabilities, and ſo fairly carried, that to one not acquainted with the ſtate of the World it would ſeem a Reality. But above all things, the Inventions and Deſigns of Solomon's Houſe, for perfecting the works of nature, or rather improving Nature to the beſt advantages of Life, and the benefit of mankind, are beyond compariſon. The man I muſt confeſs had his perſonal errors, (I know none without them) of good and bad qualities equally compounded: Mores ejus vigore & levitate mixtiſſimi, as Paterculus once ſaid of Piſo; not one amongſt many thouſand (to purſue that Character) qui aut otium validius diligat, aut facilius ſuſcipiat negotia. A man of a moſt ſtrong Brain, and a Chymical Head, Who, if he had been entertained with ſome liberal Salary, abſtracted from all Affairs both of State and Judicature, and furniſhed with ſufficiency both of means and helps for the going on in his Deſign, would, I am confident, have given us ſuch a Body of Natural Philoſophy; and made it ſo ſubſervient to the publick good, that neither Ariſtotle, nor Theophraſtus amongſt the Ancients, nor Paracelſus, or the reſt of our later Chymiſts would have been conſiderable.

4. FAIRY-LAND is another part of this Terra Incognita, the habitation of the Fairies, a pretty kind of little Fiends or Pigmey-Devils, but more inclined to ſport then miſchief; of which old Women, who remember the times of Popery, tell us many fine Stories. A cleanlier and more innocent Cheat was never put upon poor ignorant People, by the Monks and Friers. Their habitation here or no where; though ſent occaſionally by Oberon and their other Kings, to our parts of the world. For not being reckoned amongſt the good Angels, nor having malice enough to make them Devils, (but ſuch a kind of midling Spirits as the Latines call Lemures or Larvæ) we muſt find out ſome place for them, neither Heaven nor Hell, and moſt likely this. Their Country never more ennobled then by being made the Scene of that excellent Poem called the Fairy Queen. Intended to the honour of Queen Elizabeth, and the greateſt perſons in her Court: but ſhadowed in ſuch lively colours, framed ſo exactly by the Rules of Poeſie, and repreſenting ſuch Idea's of all Moral goodneſs; that as there never was a Poem more artificial, ſo can no Ethical diſcourſe more faſhion and enflame the mind to the love of Virtue. Inviſurum facilius aliquem quàm imitaturum, ſhall be Spencer's Motto; and ſo I leave him to his reſt.

5. The PAINTERS WIVES ISLAND is an Iſland of this Tract, mentioned by Sir Walter Raleigh, in his Hiſtory of the World. Of which he was informed by Don Pedro de Sarmiento, a Spaniſh Gentleman, employed by his King in planting ſome Colonies on the Streights of Magellan, (which we have touched upon before) who being taken Priſoner by Sir Walter in his going home, was asked of him about ſome Iſland which the Maps preſented in thoſe Streights, and might have been of great uſe to him in his Undertaking. To which he merrily replied, that it was to be called the Painter's Wives Iſland, ſaying, that whilſt the Painter drew that Map, his Wife ſitting by, deſired him to put in one Country for her, that ſhe in her Imagination might have an Iſland of her own. His meaning was, that there was no ſuch Iſland as the Maps preſented. And I fear the Painter's Wife hath many Iſlands, and ſome Countries too upon the Continent in our common Maps, which are not really to be found on the ſtricteſt ſearch.

6. The LANDS of CHIVALRY are ſuch Iſlands, Provinces, and Kingdoms, in the Books of Errantry, which have no being in any known part of the World, and therefore muſt be ſought in this. A groſs abſurdity, but frequent in thoſe kind of Writers, who, in deſcribing the Adventures of their Knights, in deſpight of Geography, (with which indeed they had no acquaintance) have not only disjoyned Countries which are near together, and laid together Countries which are far remote; but given us the deſcription of many Iſlands, Provinces, and mighty Kingdoms, which, as the ingenious Author of the Hiſtory of Don Quixot merrily obſerveth, are not to be found in all the Map. Of this ſort is the Iſle of Adamants in Sir Huon of Burdeaux; the Firm Iſland, in the Hiſtory of Amadis de Gaul; the hidden Iſland, and that of the Sage Aliart, in Sir Palmerin of England; the Iſlands of Lindaraza, and the Deviliſh Fauno, with the Kingdom of Lyra, (of which the Amazonian Lady Archiſilora was the rightful Queen) and many others of that kind, in the Mirrour of Knighthood; and divers of like nature in Palmerin de Oliva, Primaleon, and Belianis of Greece, Pariſmus, the Romance mance of Romances, and indeed whom not of all that Rabble? handsomly humoured by Michael de Cervantes in his Island of Barutaria, of which the famous Sancho Panca was sometime Governour, and the Kingdom of Micomicona. And yet I cannot but confess (for I have been a great Student in these Books of Chivalry) that they may be of very good use to Children or young Boys in their Adolescency. For besides that they divert the mind from worse cogitations, they perfect him that takes pleasure in them in the way of Reading, beget in him an habit of speaking, and animate him many times to such high conceptions as really may make him fit for great Undertakings.

7. The NEW WORLD IN THE MOON was first of Lucian's discovering; a man of eminent parts, but as ill a Conscience, apostatizing from the Faith in which he was bred. Aristophanes had before told us in one of his Comedies of a Nephelococcygia, or a City of Cuckoes in the Clouds. But Lucian was the first who found out this New World in the Moon; of which, and of the Inhabitants of it, he affordeth us in one of his Dialogues a conceited Character. But of late times, that World which he there fansied, and proposed but as a Fansie only, is become a matter of a more serious Debate; and some have laboured with great pains to make it probable, that there is another World in the Moon, inhabited as this is by persons of divers Languages, Customs, Polities and Religions: and more then so, some means and ways proposed to consideration for maintaining an entercourse and Commerce betwixt that and this. But being there are like Endeavours to prove that the Earth may be a Planet, why may not this Southern Continent be that Planet, and more particularly that Moon, in which this other World is supposed to be? Certainly there are stronger hopes of finding a New World in this Terra Australis then in the body of that Planet; and such perhaps as might exceed both in profit and pleasure the later Discoveries of America.

But I am no discourager of Industry and Ingenuity, which I love and honour wheresoever I find it. I know great Truths have many times been started upon less presumptions. Nor would I be mistook, as if in my pursuit of this Terra Incognita I put scorn on any of sublimer thoughts; or that I would have any man so much in love with the present World, as not to look for another world in Heaven above. It is reported, that in some Controversie betwixt the Polander and the Duke of Moscovy, the King of Poland sent the Moscovite a curious Globe, representing the whole Heavenly Bodies, with the particular motion of each several Sphere. To which the Moscovite returned this unworthy answer, Tu mihi Cœlum mittis, at redde mihi Terras de quibus contendimus; You send me Heaven, saith he, but that will not satisfie, unless you give me back those Lands Which are now in question. And much I fear there are too many of this mind, who would not lose their part on earth for all Heaven it self: whom I desire, if any such peruse these Papers, to consider, that as much as the most flourishing Country which is here described doth fall short of that Paradise wherein God placed our Father Adam, so much, and infinitely more did that Earthly Paradise fall short of the unspeakable Glories of the Kingdom of Heaven. To the diligent and careful search of which Heavenly Kingdom I heartily commit the Reader: not doubting but the Works of God which are here presented, and that vicissitude of humane Affairs which is herein touched at, may prompt him to some serious thoughts of that mighty God who made all these Works, in whom is no shew nor shadow of change; to whom be given all Glory both in this World, and that to come.

Quicquid enim Lunæ gremio complectitur Orbis,
Permutat variátque vices, trepidóque tumultu
Æstuat, & nunquam sentit pars una Quietem.
Nam ruit in sese, & civili vulner: semper
Aut cadit, aut perimit; alióque renascitur ore,
Rursus ut intereat: sic non est omnibus unum
Partibus Ingenium, non vis nativa. Sed Orbes
Astriferi, & nitidi sublimis Regio Cœli
Immunis sevi, & vultu immutabilis uno,
Perpetuum servant solida & sincera tenorem.

The Verses are G. Buchanan's, in his Book De Sphæra, which I thus Translate, and therewithal conclude this Work.

The World beneath the Moon its shapes doth vary,
And change from this to that; nor can it tarry
Long in one state, but with it self doth jar,
Kills and is kill'd in endless Civil War.
New form'd again, 'tis but to die; The frame
Neither of Bodies nor of Minds the same.
But that above the Spheres, the Heavens on high,
In which GOD reigns in glorious Majesty,
Free from old Age, unchang'd, and of one face,
Always presents it self in equal Grace.

Non nobis, Domine, non nobis, sed Nomini tuo detur Gloria.
